Difficulties Encountered in Compiling the Statute Text. The original design of the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure was to present the criminal laws with such completeness that they could be administered without it being necessary to refer to the civil statutes. In pursuance of this policy, the original constructors of the Codes gathered together and placed in the Codes every constitutional and legislative enactment which had any bearing on the criminal law of the State. To accomplish this result the Code Commissioners were compelled to dismember acts of the Legislature, placing parts of them in the civil statutes and other parts in the criminal statutes. In a great many cases it was found necessary to place the same provisions in both statutes. The Legislature while sanctioning the establishment of this statutory system failed to observe it and carry it into effect in its subsequent legislation. It failed to legislate separately for the two statutes. It probably was not feasible to do so. Acts were amended as acts after they had been dismembered and divided between the civil and criminal statutes. This situation has rendered the work of compiling the text somewhat difficult. The problem of discriminating between the acts which are appropriate for the criminal statutes and those for the civil statutes has not been easy of solution. It has been the aim of the editors to follow the methods employed in the preparation of the Revised Statutes as far as those methods could be determined from an examination of the contents of the revised criminal codes. The editors have been liberal in adding provisions to the compilation and it is their belief that the Codes as compiled contain everything that the practitioner could reasonably expect to find in a criminal statute.

Defects in the Revision of 1911. The Revised Criminal Statutes of 1911 possess so many defects that it is not safe in all cases to rely on them to ascertain the existing law of the State on the subject of crime and criminal procedure. The act adopting the revision contained no clause repealing laws not incorporated therein. In view of the absence of a repealing provision and on account of the serious defects in the work of revision, the courts have deprived the Revised Criminal Statutes of 1911 of much of the usual sanctity accorded to Revised Statutes. Among the decisions bearing on this subject attention is particularly called to Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 626, Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 159 S. W. 505, Robertson v. State, 70 App. 307, 159 S. W. 713, Williams v. State, 71 App. 6, 159 S. W. 732.

The defects in the Revised Criminal Statutes are as follows:

(a) The omission of subsisting laws not repealed or held unconstitutional by the courts. A table has been prepared for each Code showing the laws omitted therefrom and which have been carried into the new compilation. This table appears immediately preceding the Table of Session Laws in each of the Codes. Representative examples of omitted laws appear at articles 220, 664b–664d, 695e, 852a, 1255a and 1521a of the Penal Code, and articles 97a, 109a, 264a, 291a, 632a, 844a, 1105a, 1117h, and 1163a of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(b) The inclusion of laws which had become obsolete or which had been amended, repealed, or superseded by later legislation. There are a great many instances in which the revisers fell into this error. In each case an explanatory note will be found in this compilation following the repealed or superseded provision. Representative examples will be found by referring to the explanatory notes under articles 109, 111, 150–154, 403, 418, 678, 850, 853, 857, 901, 1054, 1263, 1458, 1464, 1488, 1513 and 1531–1534 of the Penal Code, and articles 140, 165, 302, 646, 648, 963, 1010, and 1129 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(c) Failure to observe the changes in the civil statutes involving either the creation of a new offense or repealing or modifying existing provisions of the criminal codes. For representative examples of this defect see the explanatory notes under articles 409, 1278, 1414, 1488, 1491–1503, 1526 and 1531d of the Penal Code, and articles 618, 661a, 889, and 1081 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The editors who prepared this compilation have carefully examined the civil legislation subsequent to the Revised Statutes of 1895, and in many cases have found provisions affecting the criminal branch of the law which were not carried into the Revised Criminal Statutes of 1911. These have been inserted at their appropriate places in the compilation. Examples of this work appear at articles 115a, 115b, 120, 616, 681, 753, 835, 1252, 1487a, 1487b and 1617a of the Penal Code, and articles 845 and 846 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(d) Errors in classification and arrangement of the laws and in the molding of their language in attempting to accommodate them to the revision. This has resulted in many cases in giving a legislative act a wider or a more restricted scope on the face of the revision than was intended by the Legislature when the act was passed. For representative examples see explanatory notes under articles 100, 220, 1256, 1278 and 1284 of the Penal Code, and articles 625, 646, 648, 899, 900, 1117a–1117e, and 1127a of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(e) Lack of uniformity and coherence in the distribution of laws between the subdivisions of the statutes, and the separation of similar or related laws which should have been gathered together. In an unofficial compilation of the laws it is not possible to correct errors of this nature existing in the basic revised statutes. The editors of this compilation, however, have made many cross-references and explanatory notes tending to remove the misleading effect or inconvenience arising from errors of classification of the laws. For examples of this feature of the work see explanatory notes under articles 593, 622, 712, 730, 836, 850 and 1054 of the Penal Code, and articles 899, 900, and 1117a of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(f) Failure to refer to the earlier enactments of the laws, and erroneous references to the Session Laws. This information is essential to a correct understanding of the history of the legislation. Many errors in the references have been corrected in this compilation. Examples of this work may be seen by comparing articles 852 and 869 of this compilation of the Penal Code with the corresponding articles in the Revised Penal Code.
The Annotations. Both the Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure have been carefully and completely annotated. The annotations extend from the earliest decisions up to and including volume 178 of the Southwestern Reporter. The decisions of the federal courts affecting the criminal statutes of Texas have also been carried into the annotations. The work of annotation has been done by the same editorial staff that prepared the annotations for Vernon's Sayles' Civil Statutes for 1914. In annotating the criminal statutes the publishers have availed themselves of the material found in Willson's Texas Criminal Statutes of 1897 and the supplements thereto. Errors of classification found in the Willson books have been corrected and omitted cases have been supplied. The publishers have endeavored to avoid needless duplication of annotations. To effect this purpose it has not followed the practice heretofore prevailing in Texas of placing notes on matters of practice under the statute article defining the crime, as well as under the article defining the particular practice in question. A decision directly involving a matter of practice defined by statute is placed under the procedure statute. Matters of procedure not directly defined by statute are placed under the article relating to the crime on which the prosecution was based. Thus notes on the sufficiency of an indictment in matters not particularly dealt with by a procedure statute are placed under the statute defining the particular crime, while notes on subjects based on the procedure statutes are placed under those statutes. Liberal cross-references have been made between the various articles of the statutes.

The Index. A separate index has been prepared for each Code in accordance with the plan of the Revised Criminal Statutes. The indices in the new compilation are more complete than those of the Revised Statutes. While the index headings used in the Revised Statutes appear in the indices of the present compilation, many new headings have been added and the old ones have been made more complete. Where the annotations cover subjects extending beyond the literal text of the statute, those subjects have been carried into the index, thus making the annotations more readily accessible and giving them the character of an Index Digest.

Tables of Session Laws. Immediately preceding the index in each of the Codes appears a table showing the place in the new compilation where the new laws passed at the regular and called sessions of 1911, 1913 and 1915, are to be found. Preceding each of these tables is an additional table showing subsisting laws enacted during the period between the revision of 1895 and that of 1911, and carried into the new compilation on account of their omission from the Revised Criminal Statutes of 1911. In these tables of omitted laws appear a few acts relating to criminal matters passed prior to the revision of 1895 which were not carried into that revision, but which survive the repealing clause in the act adopting such revision by having been incorporated in the Revised Civil Statutes of 1895 and 1911.

CHAPTER ONE
CONTAINING GENERAL PROVISIONS

Art.
1. Objects of this code.
2. Same subject.
3. Trial by due course of law secured.
4. Rights of accused persons.
5. Protection against searches and seizures.
6. Prisoners entitled to bail, except in certain cases.
7. Writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended.
8. Excessive bail, fines, etc., forbidden.
9. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for same offense.
10. Trial by jury shall remain inviolate.
11. Liberty of speech and of the press.
12. Person shall not be disqualified as a witness for religious opinion or want of religious belief.
13. Outlawry and transportation prohibited.
14. Conviction shall not work corruption of blood, etc.
15. No conviction of treason, except, etc.
17. Privilege of voters.
18. Change of venue.
19. Conservators of the peace—style of process.
20. In what cases accused may be tried, etc., after conviction.
22. Defendant may waive any right, except, etc.
23. Trials shall be public.
24. Defendant shall be confronted by witnesses, except, etc.
25. Construction of this code.
26. When rules of common law shall govern.
28a. Acts by or under military authority exempt from punishment.

Article 1. [1] Objects of this Code.—It is hereby declared that this Code is intended to embrace rules applicable to the prevention and prosecution of offenses against the laws of this state, and to make the rules of proceeding in respect to the prevention and punishment of offenses intelligible to the officers who are to act under them, and to all persons whose rights are to be affected by them. It seeks—
1. To adopt measures for preventing the commission of crime.
2. To exclude the offender from all hope of escape.
3. To insure a trial with as little delay as shall be consistent with the ends of justice.
4. To bring to the investigation of each offense on the trial all the evidence tending to produce conviction or acquittal.

2 Code Cr.Proc.Tex.—1
5. To insure a fair and impartial trial; and
6. The certain execution of the sentence of the law when declared. [O. C. 1; amended by Act Feb. 15, 1858.]
Cited, Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 785; Bullock v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 396.

Construction.—Leeper and Powell v. State, 29 App. 63, 14 S. W. 398.
Evidence.—In view of subdivision 4 of this article, evidence that defendant, according to affidavits, had committed adultery with the wife of deceased, had given her a condono, that they had been taken together flagrante delicto, whereupon defendant offered witness two bits if he would not tell, and that defendant was the reputed father of many children, was admissible as tending to show motive.
Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 275. For relevancy of evidence in general, see notes under art. 785.

Art. 2. [2] Same subject.—In order to collect together for the convenience of officers and all others charged with the enforcement of the laws the material provisions of the constitution of this state respecting the prosecution of offenses, the following provisions of said instrument are here inserted. [O. C. 2.]

Art. 3. [3] Trial by due course of law.—No citizen of this state shall be deprived of life, liberty, property or privileges, outlawed, exiled, or in any manner disfranchised, except by due course of the law of the land. [Bill of Rights, § 19 O. C. 3.]

Explanatory.—The present Constitution reads as follows: “No citizen of this state shall be deprived of life, liberty, property, privileges or immunities, or in any manner disfranchised, except by the due course of the law of the land.”

Due course of law.—For an exhaustive interpretation of the term, see Runge v. Wyatt, 25 Tex. Supp. 292; Allford v. State, 3 App. 545. See, also, Roper & Gilley v. Lumpkins, 163 S. W. 110.

By “the law of the land” is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. It means that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which passes under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land. See the meaning of the term “law of the land” fully discussed. Huntsman v. State, 12 App. 619. The legislature cannot condemn a particular act as an indictable offense, and then empower the courts in the prosecution of such an offense, to substitute in the indictment and proof, an altogether different act, not prohibited. Nor can it dispense with the essential allegations and proofs, even in offenses malia prohibita. Hewitt v. State, 25 Tex. 722; State v. Wilburn, Id. 738; State v. Duke, 42 Tex. 455; Williams v. State, 12 App. 666; Huntsman v. State, Id. 619.
This provision has no application to proceedings after trial and conviction. Loyal v. State, 19 App. 137.
The Court of Criminal Appeals has power to determine whether the Governor has authority to revoke a conditional pardon merely because he deems it ill-advised and not on account of a breach of the conditions. Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 591.

Contempts.—For rules in contempt proceedings, see State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 627; Ex parte Ireland, 38 Tex. 244; Ex parte Kilgore, 3 App. 247; Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 523, 24 S. W. 635; s. c., 35 App. 634, 34 S. W. 862.
“Due course of law” requires that when a person is committed for contempt, the proper order must be entered and writ of commitment issued. Ex parte Kearby & Hawkins, 35 App. 634, 34 S. W. 866; Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 634, 34 S. W. 962.
A vacation proceeding for contempt is void. Ex parte Ellis, 37 App. 539, 40 S. W. 276, 66 Am. St. Rep. 351.
By the act of 1881, any indictment found by a grand jury consisting of fourteen jurors is void where he foresaw the court or component of the court, or that a grand jury or any of the grand jurors can not be raised out of motion to quash indictment. Cubine v. State, 44 App. 596, 73 S. W. 396.

Indictment.—Bill of Rights, sec. 10.
The act of 1881, known as the “common sense indictment act,” insofar as it prescribes forms which do not contain all the elements of the respective offenses,

A legal indictment duly presented by a legal grand jury is an indispensable prerequisite to a prosecution for felony "under the due course of the law of the land." Lott v. State, 18 App. 627; Sרגuove v. State, 48 App. 64, 48 S. W. 290, 48 S. W. 190.

The legislature can not condemn a particular act as an indictable offense, and then empower the courts, in the prosecution of such offense, to substitute in the indictment and proof an altogether different act, not prohibited. Nor can it dispense with the essential allegations and proofs, even in offenses made prohibitory, for the prosecution would not then be "by due course of the law of the land." Hewitt v. State, 25 Tex. 725; State v. Wilburn, 25 Tex. 726. Neither can it authorize the omission of averments in an indictment negative exceptions in an enacting clause, when such exceptions are essential parts of the description of the offense. State v. Duke, 42 Tex. 455.

Petit jury.—It is not competent for the legislature to authorize summary trials before mayors, etc., without a jury, for offenses punishable by fine and imprisonment. Burns v. LüGrange, 17 Tex. 415.

Where the record recites that twelve jurors were sworn but names only eleven, the conviction must be reversed. Hulsman v. State, 3 App. 453.

In misdemeanor cases in a county court or justice's court, the jury must be composed of six men. Stell v. State, 14 App. 59; Marks v. State, 10 App. 334.

Presence of accused.—See art. 646, post.

Presence of Judge.—The court should be present at all times while a case is being tried, and, if it becomes necessary for him to be temporarily absent, he should suspend the proceedings until his return. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 173; White v. State, 61 App. 498, 135 S. W. 562; Dunn v. State, 72 App. 159, 161 S. W. 467.

The temporary absence of the judge from the courtroom during the trial is not ground for reversal unless during his absence something occurs prejudicial to accused. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 173; Massey v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 352.

Trial.—Paris v. State, 35 App. 82, 31 S. W. 855; Rodgers v. State, 47 App. 195, 52 S. W. 1041.

Art. 4. [4] Rights of accused persons.—In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have a speedy public trial by an impartial jury. He shall have the right to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof. He shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself. He shall have the right of being heard by himself, or counsel, or both; shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, and shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. And no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on indictment of a grand jury, except in cases in which the punishment is by fine, or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary, in cases of impeachment, and in cases arising in the army and navy or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger. [Bill of Rights, § 10; O. C. 4.]

INTRODUCTORY

1. In general.—Aston v. State, 27 App. 674, 11 S. W. 637.
A party who has compelled a defendant to go to trial in any case until that case is properly reached on the docket, in the due course of the business of the court. Thomas v. State, 36 Tex. 315.

A preliminary proceeding containing an indictment for a felony is not any part of a "criminal prosecution" within Bill of Rights, § 10, guaranteeing rights to accused in such prosecutions. Kessler v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

Where there was a large crowd of spectators in court at the trial of defendant, a negro, for homicide, who laughed several times at the prosecutor's references to defendant, but whose conduct was nothing unusual, the failure of the court to rebuke the defendant was not error. Burris v. State, 32 App. 240, 140 S. W. 1136.

If citizens of Mexico, in accordance with the laws of that State, were permitted to attend as spectators of a trial, in accordance with the laws of the United States, the trial of defendant was not error. Ex parte Schultz (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 953.

2. Speedy trial.—This article merely imposes upon the judiciary the duty of proceeding with all reasonable dispatch in the trial of criminal accusations. Ex parte Turman, 26 Tex. 708, 84 Am. Dec. 598. And it applies to all grades of criminal offenses. Id.

An accused, who has never demanded, or been refused a trial, can not invoke habeas corpus, a discharge from imprisonment under this provision. Hernandez v. State, 4 App. 425. But if an accused is denied a trial by due course of law, or such a trial is denied him for an unreasonable length of time, he may resort to habeas corpus for relief. Rutherford v. State, 16 App. 649.

Because the State's application for a continuance had been denied, the state dismissed the prosecution over defendant's objection, and thereafter defendant was again indicted for the same offense, the practice was in effect a denial of the right to a speedy trial, but did not bar the subsequent prosecution. Venters v. State, 38 App. 196.

3. Public trial.—See post, art. 23.
By a public trial is not meant that every person who sees fit, shall in all cases be permitted to be present; because there are many cases where, from the character of the evidence and the nature of which by it is to be supported, the motives to attend the trial on the part of portions of the community would be of the worst character, and where a regard to public morals and public decency would require that at least the young be excluded from hearing and witnessing the proceedings of human depravity which the trial must necessarily bring to light. The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused; that the public may see that he is fairly dealt with and not unjustly condemned, and that the presence of interested spectators may keep his trial keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions; and the requirement is fairly observed if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence could be of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether. Publicity does not absolutely forbid all temporary shutting of doors, or render incompetent a witness who can not be heard by the largest audience, or require a court room of dimension adequate to the accommodation of all desirous of attending a notorious trial, or vocal organs in counsel or judge capable of reaching all. See this case, for an instance in which it was held proper, and not in violation of the right of public trial, for the trial court to exclude from the court room a portion of the audience. Grim­m­ert­h­a, 22 App. 26, 2 S. W. 631, 58 Am. St. 1, 466. It was merely a courthouse at the county site of the county. Adams v. State, 19 App. 1. Where the court room was barely sufficient for the witnesses and two venires of jurors on a certain occasion, it was proper to exclude mere spectators. Kug­g­a­t­d v. State, 39 App. 631, 44 S. W. 989.

Where the court house is surrounded by a mob determined to lynch defendant if he is not sentenced to death, he is denied a fair trial by an impartial jury, though the jurors swear they were not influenced thereby. Massey v. State, 31 App. 371, 20 S. W. 755.

5. Indictment.—See post, Title 7, ch. 3.

Art. 482, post, permitting substitution for a lost indictment, does not violate the accused, shall be held to, unless there is a change in this article that accrues an indictment by the grand jury. Schultz v. State, 15 App. 258, 49 Am. Rep. 194. Such substitution may be made before the trial. Withers v. State, 21 App. 210, 17 S. W. 725.

The limitations upon the powers of government imposed by the Constitution of the United States apply as limitations upon the government of the Union only, except when the states are expressly mentioned. The power to prosecute crime by information as well as indictment, was never surrendered by the states to the United States. Ex parte Linford, 22 App. 266, 5 S. W. 219.

Where defendant was arrested under a second indictment procured so as to in-inalude another person in the charge, he is entitled to a copy of it. Stokes v. State, 308 App. 376, 33 S. W. 380.

A motion to quash an indictment for failure to serve a certified copy held properly denied. Luster v. State, 62 App. 541, 141 S. W. 265, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1059.

If, for a felony, there must be upon indictment for the State, charged in a jury, v. 300, himself, he 234, the W. compelled the contempt is be part of the conviction of a felony, the State was compelled to arrest thereon, and the arrest of accused thereunder by a proper officer. Baskins v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 723.

Under Acts 33d Leg. c. 112, and 1st Called Sess. c. 6, § 8 (Vernon's Sayles Ann. Civ. St. 1914, art. 52(6)), a child can be proceeded against as a delinquent without the filing of an indictment against him. Ex parte Bartee (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1051.

6. Amendment.—See post, arts. 598, 599, and notes.

Where accused was compelled to make tracks so that they could be compared with the tracks made by the guilty party, evidence of the comparison of the tracks is admissible. Walker v. State, 7 App. 245, 22 Am. Rep. 595; Pitts v. State, 60 App. 624, 133 S. W. 801; Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

Evidence against the accused in giving evidence against himself whether he be before a grand jury or on the trial of a case. Ex parte Wilson, 39 App. 660, 47 S. W. 986; Ex parte Park, 37 App. 590, 40 S. W. 390, 66 Am. St. Rep. 855.

A joint offender in gaming is not privileged from testifying as to the gaming in which he participated, as he is exempt from punishment for the crime. And it seems a witness is not privileged from answering as to a transaction which, as to him, is barred by the statute of limitations. Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 216.

A witness cannot be compelled to answer a question tending to degrade him, or to publish anything said in confidence, which is privileged personal to the witness, to be claimed by him or not, as he chooses, and not by counsel for either party. But the court should advise the witness that he is not compelled to answer. If the witness chooses to answer, he is bound to answer everything relating to the transaction. If he declines to answer, no inference of the truth of the fact is permitted to be drawn from that fact. And no answer forced from him after he has claimed protection, if he is entitled to protection, can afterward be given in evidence against him. Owen v. State, 7 App. 329; Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 216. And a witness may be asked if he has ever been confined in the penitentiary for crime, and he is not privileged from answering. Lights v. State, 21 App. 305, 17 S. W. 428, overruling State v. Ezell and Ivey, 41 Tex. 35; see also, Perez v. State, 8 App. 510.

Evidence that after defendant was arrested his overshirt was removed and spots were found on his undershirt is admissible. Bryant v. State, 18 App. 107.

A defendant cannot be impeached as a witness by asking if he had previously been convicted of the offense for which he was then on trial. Richardson v. State, 33 App. 518, 27 S. W. 139.

Where defendant as a witness exhibited scars on one leg which he claimed were made by a shot fired by deceased, the state can compel him to exhibit those on the other leg to the jury. Thomas v. State, 33 App. 607, 28 S. W. 531.

The rule applies to the use of books kept by accused. Ex parte Wilson, 39 App. 630, 47 S. W. 396.

A judgment for contempt for failure to produce a bill of sale, when the production of the same would constitute relator, is void. Ex parte Wilson, 39 App. 630, 47 S. W. 396.

Cross-examination of defendant as a witness in his own behalf with respect to his proved handwriting, used as a standard of comparison, is proper. Grooms v. State, 40 App. 219, 50 S. W. 379.

Defendant was arrested on warrant issued under law of 1903 (concerning selling liquors in violation of law), and brought before the justice who issued the warrant, and while so held was summoned as a witness; held that he was not guilty of contempt in refusing to be sworn but was within his constitutional rights. Ex parte Dox, 209, 73 S. W. 1073.

Where witness and his twin brother were both under arrest, charged with an assault on one S., there being only one blow struck, he was not guilty of contemp in refusing to answer questions asked him by the grand jury as to whether he was in the room when S. was assaulted, whether he assaulted S., and also as to where his brother was at the time, though he did not state that his answers would tend to incriminate him. Ex parte Hughes, 57 App. 82, 121 S. W. 1118.

A witness sought to be impeached on the ground that he has committed a crime the refusal to answer questions as to the existence of which a criminal prosecution might lie against him. Pinkard v. State, 62 App. 602, 138 S. W. 601.

Accused was ordered by a police officer to go with him to the office of a justice of the peace, and submit to an examination before a court of inquiry. He was sworn, and, believing himself under arrest, compelled to testify concerning alleged violations of the local option law, and, after the examination, he was handcuffed by the officer and incarcerated. On trial for the same offense investigated stand, and compelled to testify that he testified falsely before the justice at the court of inquiry, and also to give other testimony with reference to the very offense and transaction concerning which he was convicted over his objection and exception. Held, that such proceeding was an act of self-incrimination, the constitutional guarantee conferred by Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 10, providing that a witness shall not be compelled to testify against himself. Butler v. State, 44 App. 482, 142 S. W. 904.

Permitting the defendant to ask defendant's sister, in the presence of the jury on a prosecution for incest with her, whether she had had intercourse with him, and whether she had a child, was not error, especially in the absence of the interposition of specific grounds of objection, though she, while the jury were withdrawn, had, refused to answer because her answer might incriminate her. Harris v. State, 64 App. 504, 144 S. W. 292.

A witness before the grand jury, who had had lottery tickets for sale, was not, though not claiming his privilege, guilty of contempt in refusing to answer questions as to whether the lottery tickets for selling the, who paid him for them, and who procures to answer, that he furnished false before the justice at the court of inquiry, and also to give other testimony with reference to the very offense and transaction concerning which he was convicted over his objection and exception. Held, that such proceeding was an act of self-incrimination. The constitutional guarantee conferred by Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 10, providing that a witness shall not be compelled to testify against himself. Butler v. State, 44 App. 482, 142 S. W. 904.

Where defendant, through her attorney agreed to plead guilty, but afterwards exercised her right not to do so, such agreement was not admissible in evidence. DeBerry v. State, 72 App. 274, 161 S. W. 974.

A person cannot be compelled to testify in a criminal case pending against him, nor give testimony on the trial of another on which a prosecution may or can be founded against him. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

In general, a witness may decline to answer any question which tends either directly to incriminate him, or which may indirectly produce such result. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Bailey (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 683.

A witness in a civil suit desiring to be relieved from answering a question, on the ground that it will tend to incriminate him, cannot sit silently by and refuse to answer without giving a reason for his silence, but must swear that he believes his answer would incriminate him, it being for the court to determine the question of privilege. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Bailey (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 683.

Evidence as to testimony given by accused in another court in which he took the stand and testified voluntarily was not inadmissible, as compelling accused to testify against himself. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 828.

Evidence, for forgery committed, for the forger, who laid accused in the hands of the accused, he cannot be compelled to produce it, or that would be compelling him to give evidence against himself. Meredith v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 1019.

The proceedings were not irregular, where, on a prosecution for receiving from an stolen cattle, E., called by the state, after testifying that he bought the cattle, claimed his privilege, and was excused from further testifying. Stanfield v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 216.

That a person summoned before the grand jury refused to be sworn to testify because she presumed that she would be questioned about alleged incestuous relations between herself and her father did not excuse her for her refusal to be sworn, but after being sworn, she would be justified in refusing to answer questions relating to the subject. Ex parte Barnes (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 728, 61 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155.

8. — Waiver.—After defendant has testified in his own behalf the state may recall him for further examination. Mendez v. State, 29 App. 605, 16 S. W. 766; Flowers v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 925.

When accused after his arrest voluntarily took his place among others to be identified by the prosecuting witness, he could not on the trial object to evidence that he was then identified. Bruce v. State, 31 App. 599, 21 S. W. 681; Land v. State, 34 App. 530, 30 S. W. 788.

Where defendant voluntarily stood up and put on his hat for identification he could not thereafter object that he was compelled to testify against himself. Gallagher v. State, 28 App. 247, 12 S. W. 1057.

The error in requiring a witness to answer questions which she refused to answer on the ground of self-incrimination is harmless, where the witness, on afterwards taking the stand, waived her privilege. Bybee v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 536.

A witness relying on the privilege against self-incrimination must assert his privilege at the earliest opportunity, and he cannot answer questions in part and then refuse to answer other questions legitimate to cross-examination. Ex parte Adams (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1044.

Where a witness appearing before a justice of the peace sitting as a court of inquiry and investigating violations of the local option laws voluntarily and without any objection answered all questions and stated all facts, if any, which would incriminate others could not be justified on the ground that the answers would incriminate him. Ex parte Adams (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1044.

9. Immunity.—An agreement as to immunity can be made only as to the particular case on trial and not to other distinct offenses. Heineman v. State, 24 App. 76, 29 S. W. 156, 483.

Court can promise indicted witness that if he will testify for the State his case will be dismissed. If witness accepts, it exempts him from prosecution. Stanford v. State, 42 App. 343, 69 S. W. 264.

Proceedings to compel a witness to testify on being granted immunity, must be had in the absence of the jury, until it is determined that immunity will be given. Hughes v. State, 62 App. 386, 126 S. W. 1065.

Though the state, if it desired to compel a defendant to testify over her objection, must have agreed in advance to dismissing the indictment against her to prosecute, it was sufficient in case the state did not seek her testimony for it to dismiss the indictment against her to qualify her as a witness for defendant, when, if called, she might claim her privilege against being compelled to disclose incriminating matters. Straight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

A witness before the grand jury may, after having been promised immunity in prosecution, be compelled to answer incriminatory questions. Ex parte Napoleon (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 266.

That a person who declined to testify concerning a homicide on the ground that his testimony would incriminate himself, and who was thereupon tendered immunity, and whereupon immunity by the district and punishment was thereby assumed by the defendant, might testify falsely, and thereby become subject to a prosecution for perjury, did not entitle him to insist upon his right to refrain from testifying, notwithstanding the tendered immunity. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 511, 163 S. W. 29.

Unless a witness is offered complete immunity by the prosecuting officers and the offer is approved by the court, the witness cannot be put in contempt of court for refusing to answer the questions of the grand jury as to a criminal offense in which the witness was probably a participant. Ex parte Higgins, 71 App. 618, 160 S. W. 696.

To compel a witness to give testimony which might incriminate him, the immunity from prosecution given him must be complete and absolute as to the transaction and investigation. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

That immunity does not bar an indictment, but only a conviction, does not justify the refusal of the witness to testify on the ground that his testimony will incriminate himself. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

The district attorney, with the knowledge and consent of the district judge, has power to guarantee a witness immunity from prosecution and punishment for any matter about which he may be called to testify in regard to a homicide; and hence, where immunity was tendered by the district judge, a witness could be improperly testified against. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 543, 163 S. W. 29.

Where the law of a state absolutely protects one from all punishment for the offense about which he is called to testify, he does not give evidence against himself, and this section has no application. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

Where, on the refusal of a witness summoned before the grand jury to be sworn on the ground that she presumed she would be questioned concerning a crime committed by her and another, the district attorney, with the sanction and approval of the district judge, tendered her immunity from prosecution as to any matter about which she might testify, she could be compelled to testify. Ex parte Barnes (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 728, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1156.

10. Persons entitled to claim privilege.—The witness only and not the defendant can avail himself of the right not to answer incriminating questions. Duncan v. State, 49 App. 593, 51 S. W. 372.

The privilege of refusing to answer questions on the ground that it would tend to incriminate the witness cannot be put forward for the purpose of concealing facts in the interest of some third person. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Bailey (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 683.

11. Hearing.—Examining trial, see post, art. 297.

Defendant's rights under this article are not denied by a trial in the absence of his counsel, familiar with, or in attendance with, the court conducting his case for him. Boothe v. State, 4 App. 262; Stockholm v. State, 24 App. 598, 7 S. W. 338; Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 989.

The right to be heard in person and by counsel, given by this section, is limited to the person who does not give accused the right to be brought personally before the court at the hearing on appeal. Tooko v. State, 23 App. 10, 3 S. W. 792.

Where defendant's sole counsel was sick and unable to represent him at the trial, and he could secure no other counsel, he was denied his right to counsel by the failure of the State. Daugherty v. State, 33 App. 173, 26 S. W. 60.

Where it was a regular rule of the court that the time of the session should be governed by the courthouse clock, and accused's counsel was aware of that fact, but failed to appear at the hour set for the recess, the action of the court in permitting witnesses to testify in the absence of accused's counsel was not error. Brown v. State, 62 App. 592, 138 S. W. 604.

12. Limiting time for argument.—See post, art. 724, and notes. Limiting the argument to a time too brief for an adequate discussion of the evidence would be contrary to this article. Walker v. State, 22 App. 176, 22 S. W. 685; McLean v. State, 22 App. 521, 24 S. W. 989.

13. Confrontation of witnesses.—Bill of Rights, sec. 10; post, art. 24. Where the defendant was by mistake taken back to jail before the State's last witness had been examined and his absence not discovered until the cross-examination was begun, but the witness was not re-examined, the conviction cannot stand. Bell v. State, 32 App. 436, 24 S. W. 418.

Where the jury, after having retired, received other evidence against the accused which the court did not authorize it to consider, but will reverse the judgment. McWilliams v. State, 32 App. 269, 22 S. W. 970.

Where defendant did not during the trial request the appointment of an interpreter, as authorized by Code Cr. Proc. art. 815, so that he might understand testimony given in English, not made until after the testimony was all in, on the ground that so far as such evidence was concerned he had not been confronted by his witnesses. Zunago v. State, 63 App. 68, 138 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 666.

There is the act of bringing by which the presence of accused, so that the latter may object to him, and the former may identify accused and maintain the truth in his presence. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

15. — Dying declarations.—The admission in evidence of dying declarations does not infringe the constitutional right of a person accused of crime to be confronted with the witnesses against him. Black v. State, 1 App. 350; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; Lane v. State, 59 App. 595, 129 S. W. 353; Taylor v. State, 33 App. 552, 43 S. W. 1019.

16. — Documentary evidence.—The rule that the accused shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, does not preclude such documentary evidence to establish facts as would be admissible under criminal statute law. May v. State, 15 App. 430; Rogers v. State, 11 App. 608; Patterson v. State, 17 App. 102.

An objection to an affidavit read in evidence pursuant to an agreement in writing signed by defendant, on the ground that defendant had a right to be confronted by the affiant, was not tenable, as he had the personal power to waive this right. Allen v. State, 16 App. 237.

It was error to admit in evidence against defendant telegraphic dispatches purporting to be replies to dispatches sent by defendant. He was entitled to be confronted by the witnesses to it who it was claimed sent such dispatches. Chester v. State, 23 App. 577, 5 S. W. 112.

Written statements of witnesses, not introduced to impeach defendant, but as original evidence, are inadmissible. Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 841.

17. — Testimony at former trial or in other proceeding.—Testimony taken at a former trial, or before a legal examining trial, or at an inquest, defendant being confronted by the witness and afforded the opportunity of cross-examination, so the evidence being reduced to writing and properly authenticated, is, on the death of the witness, his removal beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or where he is prevented from attending, admissible against the defendant on final trial. Dowd v. State, 52 App. 563, 108 S. W. 339; Nixon v. State, 53 App. 325, 109 S. W. 931; Greenwool v. State, 35 Tex. 587; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 530; Black v. State, 1 App. 388; Sullivan v. State, 6 App. 319, 32 Am. Rep. 580; Curry v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122; Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771; Gilbreath v. State, 26 App. 315, 9 S. W. 615; Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 204, 26 S. W. 106; Hobbs v. State, 53 App. 71, 112 S. W. 305; Porch v. State, 51 App. 7, 99 S. W. 1122; Roquemore v. State, 59 App. 568, 129 S. W. 1120; Robertson v. State, 63 App. 216, 142 S. W. 533, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 440; Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722; Grant v. State (Chattanooga) 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 429, 321 S. W. 709, 421 S. W. 191, 138 S. W. 1133. Contra, Cline v. State, 36 App. 320, 36 S. W. 1059, 37 S. W. 723, 61 Am. St. Rep. 850; Cox v. State, 36 App. 435, which expressly overruled the cases above cited which were therefofore decided, but which was in turn overruled by Porch v. State, 51 App. 7, 99 S. W. 1123 and Hobbs v. State, 53 App. 71, 112 S. W. 308, and Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 133 S. W. 1025, which reaffirmed Cline v. State and overruled the intervening cases but was in turn overruled by Robertson v. State, 63 App. 216, 142 S. W. 533, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 440. The right to a writ of habeas corpus is a writ of habeas corpus admissable as a dying declaration, the state, on a subsequent trial after the death of the witness, could prove the testimony of the witness on the former trial, and thus establish a predicate for the admission of the declaration. Boggemore v. State, 59 App. 115; 139 S. W. 1129.

Admission of testimony of a witness on a former trial of a prosecution for murder was error, where the testimony was material, and there is no showing or admission in the record that the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine, or that the jurisdiction, venue, or any evidence by the connivance of the defendant. Betts v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 677.

Proof that a witness had testified at a former trial was without the state living in the jurisdiction, and that a few days before trial she had written the district attorney that she could not attend because she was quarantined, nursing her only daughter who had an infectious disease, was a sufficient predicate for the introduction of the testimony of the witness taken at the former trial. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1068.

This provision does not prevent accused from offering the testimony of an absent witness, given at a former trial, at a subsequent trial. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

Where a witness at a former trial is absent, and his attendance cannot be procured, the stenographic notes of his testimony, proven by a witness present at the former trial, and who heard the absent witness testify, to substantially his testimony, were admissible. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

This is a right given to accused, and he alone can question the admissibility of testimony of an absent witness given at a former trial. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

Before proof of testimony given by witness at a former trial can be made at a subsequent trial, where his attendance cannot be procured, there must be proof that diligence has been used, and that the attendance of the witness cannot be procured. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

In a prosecution for homicide, where a witness, who testified at a former trial, had died, testimony given on such former trial, that would have been admissible if the witness was living, was admissible. Sweat v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 564.

18. Compulsory process.—The accused has the constitutional right to have his witnesses present at the trial, and it is no answer to an application for a continuance based upon the ground that his witnesses are absent, for the prosecution to admit that the witnesses would swear to the facts as stated in the application. De Wever v. State, 29 Tex. 464. It is not within the power of the legislature to deny a defendant the constitutional right of having compulsory process for his witnesses. Homan v. State, 23 App. 212, 4 S. W. 575; Roddy v. State, 16 App. 502. A subsequent compulsory process. Neyland v. State, 13 App. 556; Edmondson v. State, 43 Tex. 236; Parker v. State, 9 App. 72.

When the witness resides in an unorganized county, the writ should name such county as his residence. Parker v. State, 9 App. 72.

Art. 5. [5] Protection against searches and seizures.—The people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions from all unreasonable searches or seizures; and no warrant to search any place or to seize any person or thing shall issue without describing them as near as may be, nor without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation. [Bill of Rights, § 9; O. C. 5.]

Arrest.—Arrest under warrant, see post, arts. 263-289; arrest without warrant, see post, arts. 355-378.

"Probable cause" means "a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged." Landa v. Obert, 46 Tex. 539.

For a discussion of the preceding article with reference to a seizure of the person, see Alford v. State, 8 App. 545. As to arrest without warrant, see Staples v. State, 14 App. 136.

Right to arrest without warrant.—See post, arts. 259-264a, and notes.

A subpoena duces tecum for the production of all telegrams sent from a telegraph office ordering intoxicating liquors without specifying whether the liquors ordered were unlawfully sent for, is unauthorized because too general and because it does not relate to any crime committed nor to any person accused or suspected. Ex parte Gould, 60 App. 442, 132 S. W. 364, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

Acts 31st Leg. (3d S. S.) c. 15 (P. C., art. 696), making it an offense for any express agent to refuse to permit examination of his books showing entries as to intoxicating liquors shipped into dry territory, does not violate Bill of Rights, § 9. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 179.

Art. 6. [6] Prisoners entitled to bail, except in certain cases.—All prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident; but this provision shall not be so construed as to prevent bail after indictment found, upon examination of the evidence in such manner as may be prescribed by law. [Bill of Rights, § 11; O. C. 6.]

Ball pending appeal, see post arts. 901-905, 918-924.

Explanatory.—The present constitution (art. 1, § 11; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv) uses the word "when" instead of "where" following the word "offenses."

Former constitutional provisions.—The constitution of the Republic of Texas provided: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient security, unless for capital crimes, when the proof is evident or presumption strong." Declaration of Rights, section 10. The Constitution of 1845, Bill of Rights, sec. 9, provided: "All prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident, or the presumption great." The same provision was incorporated in the constitution of 1861, Bill of Rights, section 9. The amended Constitution of 1866, Bill of Rights, section 9, provided, as does the preceding article, that: "All prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident." The same language is used in the Constitution of 1869, Bill of Rights, section 9.

Right to, and allowance of, bail.—A capital offense is one for which the highest penalty is death. Pen. Code, art. 31. The following are capital offenses:

Punishment in a capital case when based for conviction and execution. Pen. Code, art. 311.

This provision of the constitution applies only to prisoners before conviction, and a felony after conviction cannot go at large on bail pending appeal. Ex parte Escell, 49 Tex. 461, 19 Am. Rep. 32; Ex parte Sewart, 2 App. 74; Warnock v. State, 6 App. 450.

Capital punishment cannot be inflicted on an offender under seventeen years of age, and in all such cases accused is entitled to bail. Ex parte Walker, 28 App. 246, 13 S. W. 106; Walker v. State, 28 App. 503, 13 S. W. 860; Wilcox v. State, 32 App. 284, 22 S. W. 1109; Ex parte Albiz, 29 App. 128, 15 S. W. 173; Ex parte Rankin, 30 App. 71, 20 S. W. 202.

The right of bail does not extend to extradition cases. Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 283. And see Ex parte Lake, 27 App. 650, 40 S. W. 727, 66 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Defendant indicted for murder and admitted to bail cannot be again placed in custody on a new indictment for the same offense and denied bail. Ex parte Augustine, 33 App. 1, 23 S. W. 689, 47 Am. St. Rep. 17.

A judgment granting bail is final. Ex parte Augustine, 33 App. 1, 23 S. W. 689, 47 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Where indicted party's health is affected by confinement and there is no probability of trial at next term of court on account of absence from State of only witness, bond should be fixed very low until next term of court, and if this is not given and case is not tried, defendant should be released on his own recognizance. Ex parte Tittle, 37 App. 599, 40 S. W. 588.

No order or judgment granting or refusing bail, when applicant is under arrest by complaint only, has any force or effect subsequent to indictment found. Ex parte Kirby, 63 App. 377, 140 S. W. 226.

After a trial for statutory rape on accused's 13 year old daughter, resulting in a jury verdict of not guilty, it was held that offense was murder in the first degree, and defendant's request for bond was denied. Ex parte Soward, 5 App. 722, 22 S. W. 1063.

Where the Court of Criminal Appeals found that the Governor was without authority to revoke a conditional pardon merely because he deemed it had been improvidently granted, and the state moved for a rehearing, the relator should have been admitted to bail during the pendency of that motion. Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 887, 182 S. W. 851.

A finding on hearing on habeas corpus that one accused of murder was entitled to bail is binding on the Court of Criminal Appeals. Ex parte Latham (Cr. App.) 184 S. W. 377.

Proof.—For evidence held sufficient to justify refusal of bail, see Drury v. State, 25 Tex. 45; Moore v. State, 31 Tex. 572; Herrin v. State, 33 Tex. 618; Ex parte Rothschild, 2 App. 560; Ex parte Rucker, 6 App. 81; Ex parte Beacon, 12 App. 518; Ex parte Williams, 18 App. 653; Ex parte Smith, 25 App. 109, 5 S. W. 99; Ex parte Myers, 28 App. 294, 26 S. W. 196; Ex parte Kuhlman, 62 App. 550, 128 S. W. 400.

"Proof evident" defined. Ex parte Foster, 6 App. 625, 22 Am. Rep. 577; Ex parte Becerra, 2 App. 314; Ex parte Colferton, 15 App. 484; Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 109, 5 S. Insanity of accused at time of offense. Zembrod v. State, 25 Tex. 519; Ex parte Miller, 41 Tex. 213; Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 100, 5 S. W. 29.

On appeal from judgment refusing bail, where the evidence is conflicting the court will rarely grant bail. Ex parte Rothschild, 2 App. 560; Drury v. State, 25 Tex. 45; Ex parte Beacon, 12 App. 318.

Accused is not entitled to bail if the evidence is clear and strong, leading a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that the accused is guilty. Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 100, 5 S. W. 99, expressly overruling the holding of Ex parte Foster, 5 App. 625, 32 Am. Rep. 577, that bail should be denied where the evidence fails to support a capital conviction. Ex parte Evers, 29 App. 533, 16 S. W. 343; Ex parte Jones, 31 App. 422, 29 S. W. 983.

Bail may be refused on circumstantial evidence. Ex parte Rothschild, 2 App. 560; McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520.

Accused is not entitled to bail on the ground that there is a disagreement of the jury on the trial of the cause shows that the proof is not evident. Webb v. State, 4 App. 167; Ex parte England, 23 App. 90, 3 S. W. 714.

Under act April 3, 1913 (Pen. Code, art. 1149) abolishing the degrees of murder and murder shall be punished by death or imprisonment for life or for any term of years not less than five, all murder cases are not made nonbailable or capital and bail should be granted a person charged with murder unless the evidence is evident that, if the law is properly administered, the conviction will be of a capital offense. Ex parte Russell, 71 App. 377, 160 S. W. 78; Ex parte Stephens, 71 App. 380, 160 S. W. 77.

If the facts fail to show a sedate mind and deliberate, preconceived purpose at the time of killing, accused is entitled to bail, Ex parte Cooper, 31 Tex. 185; or if the evidence is conflicting as to the state of mind, the proof is not evident. Ex parte Miller, 41 Tex. 213. But if the facts show with reasonable certainty a murder with express malice, bail should be refused. Ex parte Drury, 25 Tex. 45.

The accused that deceased, whose wife accused had told accused to leave as otherwise one of them must die, whereupon accused waylaid and shot deceased, does not reduce the homicide from first degree murder so as to entitled accused to bail. Ex parte Mosby, 31 Tex. 566, 38 Am. Dec. 547.

In proceedings to admit to bail it is proper to hear witnesses who testified before the grand jury. Ex parte Bramer, 37 Tex. 1.

While the applicant is required to take the initiative and introduce evidence from which the court can determine the issue, the law does not exact that the evidence is to be conclusively established. The evidence is to be weighty and convincing, but the entire evidence adduced for and against him, and without regard to the prima facie case made by the indictment. He is entitled to bail, unless the evidence as an entirety satisfies the court that the proof of his guilt is evident. Ex parte Randon, 12 App. 145.

The mere fact that there is conflicting evidence does not entitle accused to bail. Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 100, 5 S. W. 99; Ex parte Jones, 31 App. 422, 29 S. W. 983.

To authorize a granting of bail on an application by habeas corpus, where applicant is charged with murder and the fact of the killing is not controverted, it devolves upon applicant to show: (1) That when the intention to kill was formed, his mind was not calm and sedate and in condition to comprehend the nature of the act and its probable consequences. (2) That it was not in such condition when he killed deceased. Ex parte Jones, 31 App. 422, 29 S. W. 983.

On a hearing on habeas corpus for bail after indictment for murder, where it was insisted that applicant was entitled to bail because of proof of threats by deceased against his life, it was held that threats may create fear, but the doctrine can never be tolerated that under the influence of that fear one may, with legal sanction, become an assassin. Ex parte Taylor, 33 App. 531, 28 S. W. 957.

Proof in abortion failing to show a killing by express malice, bail should have been granted. Ex parte Fotherere, 34 App. 504, 51 S. W. 41.

When a person is charged with robbery by use of firearms, if the proof is evident, he is not entitled to bail. Ex parte Epps, 55 App. 496, 34 S. W. 113.

A party is not entitled to be released on bail in a murder case when the proof is sufficient to turn State's case and if the State's attorney should agree for him to have bail, it would be ultra vires. He is relegated to rights under the statutes regardless of the agreement. Ex parte Greenhaw, 41 App. 278, 53 S. W. 1025.
Where officer's return shows that relator is held by virtue of capias, under indictment and not entitled to discharge or to bail because the State failed to introduce indictment in evidence. Ex parte Gray, 41 App. 439, 53 S. W. 176.

Bail is not available to an accused of a capital offense when the proof is evident. Ex parte King, 56 App. 65, 118 S. W. 1063; Ex parte Carbrera, 55 App. 466, 110 S. W. 898.

Where the evidence is not conclusive as to whether the person indicted for murder killed the decedent, he should be allowed bail. Ex parte Pettis, 60 App. 288, 131 S. W. 1081.

Where, on habeas corpus by one charged with murder to obtain bail, the state only introduced the indictment, warrant of arrest, and sheriff's return, and relator introduced no evidence, bail should have been granted for want of any proof as to the commission of the offense. Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 368, 131 S. W. 1113.

On habeas corpus by one charged with murder to obtain bail, the burden is on the state to make evident proof of the commission of the offense, in order to have bail denied. Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 368, 131 S. W. 1113.

On habeas corpus by one charged with murder in the first degree to obtain bail, the burden is upon the state to show murder in the first degree to prevent the granting of bail. Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 222, 131 S. W. 1110.

Where the proof in a murder case was not evident, the accused was entitled to be admitted to bail. Ex parte Spencer (Cr. App.) 138 S. W. 761.

Where relator went to the place of the homicide to make trouble, and there shot deceased while she was endeavoring to get him to leave the premises, not accidentally, as he claimed, but intentionally, he was not entitled to bail. Ex parte Floy, 70 App. 284, 156 S. W. 636.

Parties charged with an offense that may be punished capitaly are entitled to bail unless the evidence leads a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that an offense has been committed, that the accused is the guilty agent, and that he will be punished capitaly if the law is properly administered. Ex parte Russell, 71 App. 377, 160 S. W. 75.

A penitentiary convict, while being taken on the train to a state farm, jumped through the car window and attempted to escape, whereupon the transfer agent, in taking the prisoners to the farm in the performance of his duty, shot and killed such convict. No ill will between the agent and the convict appeared, and the killing apparently occurred only by reason of the escape. Held that the agent, who was charged with murder, was entitled to bail, especially in view of Pen. Code art. 1094, § 16, providing that a person imprisoned in the penitentiary or attempting to escape therefrom may be killed by the officer having legal custody of him if his escape can in no other manner be prevented. Ex parte Russell, 71 App. 377, 160 S. W. 75.

Evidence on an application for bail by one indicted for murder, held sufficient to raise both the issue of manslaughter and self-defense, and not to amount to evident proof of express malice, and therefore to entitle defendant to bail. Dooley, Ex parte (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 333.

Where the evidence for the state under a complaint charging murder would support a verdict of murder upon express malice, an offense not bailable, but defendant's evidence raises the issues of self-defense and imperfect self-defense, so as to require their submission to the jury, he was entitled to bail. Burton, Ex parte (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 308.

Where the evidence for the state under a complaint charging murder would support murder upon express malice, an offense not bailable, but defendant's evidence raises the issues of self-defense and imperfect self-defense, so as to require their submission to the jury, he was entitled to bail. Burton, Ex parte (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 308.

Where it appeared with reasonable certainty that accused killed deceased, and that the evidence would raise no question of self-defense or of the lesser degrees of homicide, it was proper to refuse accused admission to bail. Ex parte Kellett (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 711.

Where the evidence raises the issue of negligent homicide of the second degree, the defendant is entitled to bail. Ex parte Craig (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 823.

Art. 7. [7] Writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended.—The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of right, and shall never be suspended. [Bill of Rights, § 12; O. C. 7.]

See post, arts. 106-224; Const. U. S. art. 1, sec. 9, subd. 2; Ex parte Angus, 28 App. 230, 12 S. W. 1099; Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 894; Ex parte Mun­eny, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

See State v. Sparks & Magruder, 27 Tex. 705, as to Act of Confederate Congress suspending the writ in certain cases.

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: "The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of right, and shall never be suspended. The legislature shall enact laws to render the remedy speedy and effectual" [Const. art. 1, § 12 (Vernon's Stats' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv)].

Art. 8. [8] Excessive bail, fines, etc., forbidden.—Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel or unusual punishment inflicted. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law. [Bill of Rights, § 13; O. C. 8.]

Excessive bail.—See post, art. 329; Miller v. State, 42 Tex. 390; Miller v. State, 43 Tex. 573; Ex parte Caney, 17 App. 665; Ex parte Wilson, 20 App. 498; Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 376, 13 S. W. 141; Ex parte Tittle, 37 App. 597, 49 S. W. 598; Mcconnell v. State, 13 App. 390; Ruston v. State, 15 App. 254; Ex parte Coldiron, Id. 484; Ex parte Hutchings, 11 App. 28; Ex parte Davis, 48 App. 606, 90 S. W. 15, 91 S. W. 794; Ex parte Goodwin, 58 App. 286, 125 S. W. 583; Ex parte Canna (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 60; Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 193; Ex parte Mitchell (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 194; Ex parte King (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 805; Ex parte Ross, 70 S. W. 493; Ex parte Martin, 71 S. W. 386. 155 part II 1821.

Excessive fines and cruel or unusual punishment.—When the punishment assessed is within the limits prescribed by law, it is not "excessive," and courts not remedy the grievance, even though of opinion that the discretion of the jury was not judiciously exercised. Brown v. State, 16 Tex. 172; March v. State, 26 Tex. 115; Chilea v. State, 2 App. 96; Teague v. State, 4 App. 147; Davis v. State, Id. 456; Johnson v. State, 5 App. 423; Drake v. State, Id. 619; Williams v. State, 6 App. 147; Smith v. State, 7 App. 441. Ten years confinement in the penitentiary being within the limits of the penalty prescribed by law for horse theft, such penalty can not be held to be excessive, even though the same jury, upon the same evidence, awarded only five years to a codefendant who pleaded guilty. Jones v. State, 14 App. 85. Confinement in the penitentiary for the crime of horse theft is neither an excessive, cruel, or unusual punishment, nor does it become so by reason of article 962, post, providing for successive imprisonment upon different convictions. Lillard v. State, 17 App. 114. If a penal statute imposes an unconscionable penalty, it is a matter for redress and correction by the legislature and not the courts. Wallace v. State, 33 Tex. 445. And so it is if the law is unwise and bears with undue severity upon any particular class. Albrecht v. State, 8 App. 216, 34 Am. Rep. 737.

A sentence imposing a fine of $40 and ten days' imprisonment on one convicted of keeping and exhibiting a bank for gaming purposes, held not excessive. Williams v. State, 4 App. 147.

A verdict fixing the punishment for aggravated assault on a woman at a fine of $500 and twelve months imprisonment in the county jail held excessive. Robinson v. State, 26 App. 111, 7 S. W. 531.

A verdict imposing a fine of $500 and fifteen months imprisonment on conviction of an aggravated assault by defendant on his stepdaughter held not excessive. Inglen v. State, 36 App. 472, 37 S. W. 861.

P. C. art. 1400, relating to abandonment, etc., after marriage to avoid a pending prosecution for seduction, and providing a punishment of from two to ten years in the penitentiary does not impose a "cruel or unusual punishment." Thacker v. State, 62 App. 299, 136 S. W. 1095.

Where the defendant was one of a party of men who took a woman from her bed at night, blindfolded and stripped her, carried her to a field, and whipped her mercilessly, 90 days in jail and $50 fine was not an excessive punishment. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 345.

This section is not violated by Pen. Code, art. 1259, providing a minimum punishment for wilfully injuring a railroad, because it does not provide a maximum punishment. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 344.

Where accused severely beat his wife, constituting an aggravated assault, a fine of $500 and two years' imprisonment in the county jail, being less than the maximum penalty fixed by statute for the offense, was not an excessive punishment. Jobe v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1025.

Courts to be open.—Where threats of mob violence in effect deprive defendant of his rights in the courts, a new trial should be granted. Massey v. State, 31 App. 371, 20 S. W. 758.

Legislation in regard to the courts must be so construed as not to violate the provision that every person, for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law. As to courts in newly organized counties, and as to courts for counties not organized. Runge & Co. v. Wyatt, 25 Tex. Supp. 291; O'Shea v. Twohig, 9 Tex. 356; Clark v. Goss, 13 Tex. 255; Ex parte Muncy, 60 Tex. 411, 17 S. W. 729; Nelson v. State, 1 App. 41; Chivarrio v. State, 16 App. 330; Barr v. State, 16 App. 333.

Art. 9. [9] No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.—No person, for the same offense, shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty; nor shall a person be again put upon trial for the same offense, after a verdict of not guilty in a court of competent jurisdiction. [Bill of Rights, § 14; O. C. 9.]

Const. United States, Amend. V.

Acquittal in court without jurisdiction, see post, art. 29.

Burglary and offenses committed after entry, see Pen. Code, arts. 1313, 1317, 1318.

Conviction of lower as acquittal of higher offense, see post, art. 782.

Conviction of acquittal in another state or county, see post, arts. 256, 256.

Discharge by examining court, see post, art. 214.

A verdict of not guilty puts an end to the prosecution. State v. Burris, 3 Tex. 118.

The doctrine has no application to examining courts. Ex parte Porter, 16 App. 321.

The term "former jeopardy" having received a settled judicial construction prior to its use in the constitution of this state, the presumption obtains that the authors of the constitution had that construction in view in using that phrase, and no different meaning of the phrase can be established by legislative enactment. Powell v. State, 17 App. 345.

Failure of the clerk or justice to enter judgment does not deprive accused of the right to plead former conviction. Emmons v. State, 34 App. 115, 29 S. W. 476.

Pen. Code, art. 1618, increasing the punishment for repetition of the same offense, is not unconstitutional as placing a defendant twice in jeopardy for the same offense. Kinney v. State, 45 App. 500, 78 S. W. 226, 79 S. W. 570.

Former conviction cannot be asserted on proof that another than the accused had been convicted of the offense charged. Craig v. State, 49 App. 285, 52 S. W. 418.

A judgment pleaded in bar must be a final judgment, or a judgment of conviction on which an appeal was pending; otherwise it would be entitled to no consideration. Emmons v. State, 34 App. 365, 122 S. W. 872.

P. C. art. 1456, relating to abandonment, etc., after marriage to avoid a pending prosecution for seduction, does not put one twice in jeopardy for the same offense. Thacker v. State, 61 App. 294, 136 S. W. 1995.

2. Pendency of other prosecution for same offense.—The pendency of one indictment is a bar to another for the same offense. Pearce v. State, 50 App. 597,
In a prosecution for assault, that a prosecution is also pending against the same defendant for an assault on another person, committed at the same time, is no ground for excluding evidence in the pending case; it in no way appearing that accused has been tried and either acquitted or convicted in the other prosecution, even if such conviction or acquittal would be any defense in the pending prosecution. Perkins v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 241.

Acquited may be prosecuted in the county court for a misdemeanor, though a complaint had been filed against him in a justice court for the same offense, where he had not been tried thereon. January v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 555.

A contention that accused pending appeal had been again tried could not avail him on appeal from a conviction on the first trial; the plea of former jeopardy not applying in such case. Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 578.

Where accused pleads a former conviction, from which an appeal is pending, he must move for a continuance of the second prosecution until the appeal is determined, if he would take advantage of his plea. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1004.

An appeal is pending from conviction claimed to be former jeopardy in a second prosecution, on appeal from a conviction in the second prosecution, defendant cannot for the first time show the result of the former trial. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1004.

Where the former indictment had been lost and there is no proof it was valid, the plea of former jeopardy cannot be sustained. O’Connor v. State, 28 App. 288, 13 S. W. 14.

A dismissa by the prosecuting attorney after both sides had announced ready or after the jury was sworn, because he then discovered the indictment to be defective, is not former jeopardy. Jackson v. State, 27 App. 123, 38 S. W. 1002; Yerger v. State (Cr. App.) 41 S. W. 621.

Conviction for manslaughter under a defective indictment for murder is acquittal of latter offense if had in court of competent jurisdiction. Mixon v. State, 36 App. 458, 24 S. W. 260, and cases cited.

A plea of former conviction under a city ordinance states no defense where the affidavit on which the former conviction was based was insufficient. Davis v. State, 37 App. 259, 38 S. W. 616, 39 S. W. 937.

Where, in a prosecution for assault, accused had been previously acquitted because of a variance in the name of the person accused, such acquittal did not constitute jeopardy, preventing a subsequent conviction for the same offense. Reynolds v. State, 58 App. 273, 124 S. W. 921.

An acquittal will bar any subsequent prosecution for the same offense, if the trial occurs in a court having jurisdiction, whether the indictment is a valid one or not. Shoemaker v. State, 58 App. 515, 126 S. W. 887.

Quashal of former indictment, as barred by limitations, cannot be set up as plea of former acquittal. Swancourt v. State, 4 App. 165.

Where the State’s motion for continuance was overruled and the prosecuting attorney thereupon dismissed the case and had the defendant again indicted, the former proceedings did not bar a conviction on the subsequent indictment. Venter v. State, 18 App. 198.

Dismissal of information after one witness was examined because defendant had entered no plea could not be pleaded in bar to new information as former acquittal. Mays v. State, 31 App. 12, 101 S. W. 232.

On the trial of an indictment containing two counts, one for rape by force and the other rape on a girl under the age of 15, the first count was dismissed for failure of proof. It was then discovered that the indictment was fatally defective because it omitted to state that the prosecutrix was not then and there the wife of accused. The jury were then discharged, the case dismissed and accused was held to wait the action of another grand jury, and was again indicted for rape on a girl under 15 years. Held, that though the dismissal of the count for rape by force was not a second prosecution, accused was not put in jeopardy by the discharge of the jury and dismissal of the case as to the other count, since jeopardy does not attach to an indictment that is invalid. Shoemaker v. State, 58 App. 515, 126 S. W. 887.

INTRODUCTORY

A judgment quashing an indictment on motion of accused cannot be pleaded as bar to a subsequent indictment charging the same offense. McCaskey v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 328.

6. Withdrawn counts or issues.—Where, on a trial under an indictment charging murder in one count and in another count a conspiracy to kill decedent, the case was submitted on the count charging murder and a verdict responsive thereto, there was no effect on acquittal of the charge of conspiracy, and on a reversal of the conviction accused can only be tried for murder. Betts v. State, 69 App. 621, 133 S. W. 251.

Where defendant had pleaded not guilty to all nine counts of an indictment, but only one count was submitted to the jury, while such action did not amount to an acquittal on the other eight counts, it did constitute former jeopardy as to those counts if the defendant did not consent to their being withdrawn from the jury. Heaps v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 40.

A bill of exceptions, which shows that the defendant was indicted on two counts, one charging him as an accessory and the other as an accomplice, that at a former trial defendant was convicted on the second count, which conviction was reversed on appeal, whereasupon defendant pleaded a plea of former jeopardy to the first count, which was overruled, presents no reversible error, where he was again convicted as accomplice and no testimony was admitted which was not admissible under the second count. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 198 S. W. 898.

This constitutional bulwark of liberty does not rest merely within the discretion of a trial judge, but the exercise of his discretion in discharging a jury impaired by the introduction of an accusation of a criminal cause, before verdict, is reassignable on appeal. Art. 17 App. 345, overruling Moseley v. State, 33 Tex. 671, and Taylor v. State, 33 Tex. 97. But such discretion will not be revised on appeal, unless it is made clearly to appear that it has been abused to the prejudice of the accused. Schindler v. State, 17 App. 107; Bruty v. State, 21 App. 629, 1 S. W. 462; see Pizano v. State, 20 App. 159, 54 Am. Rep. 511.

Where the jury was discharged on the state's motion for postponement because it had announced ready under a misapprehension that the witnesses were present, there could be no further prosecution. Pizano v. State, 20 App. 159, 54 Am. Rep. 611.

The jury failing to agree, the accused consented to their discharge on condition that the case be continued until next term. Held, that jeopardy did not attach. Arlca v. State, 28 App. 198, 12 S. W. 599.

The jury failing to agree were discharged in the absence of the accused. Held, that such action was illegal, and jeopardy was a good plea at the second trial. Ruddner v. State, 29 App. 262, 15 S. W. 717.

But where the only objection counsel for defendant, being tried for misdemeanor, made to the discharge of the jury for failing to agree was that defendant was not present, the discharge of the jury did not bar a subsequent prosecution. Selman v. State, 33 App. 631, 28 S. W. 641.

In declaring a mistrial the court must exercise a sound discretion. He cannot do it capriciously. If the facts which he finds and announces in his judgment show a legal necessity for a mistrial, a reviewing court will affirm his judgment: if not, his judgment will be reversed. Woodward v. State, 45 App. 188, 55 S. W. 141.

It is error for a court from merely looking at a juror to decide that he is sick, and discharge the jury. He should suspend the trial temporarily and have a physician to decide if he is continuance, and if necessity is apparent, discharge the jury. Bland v. State, 42 App. 288, 59 S. W. 1120.

Defendant, who had been before a jury on the same charge, and who agreed that the court should discharge a juror whose child was sick, and to a trial before the remaining five jurors, and who objected to the court's discharge of the jury, was in jeopardy, and on a subsequent trial her plea of former jeopardy should have been sustained. Schuller v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 245.

A former conviction which was set aside is not pleaded as former jeopardy. Lewis v. State, 1 App. 222; Dubose v. State, 15 App. 185; Robinson v. State, 33 App. 318, 4 S. W. 904; Foster v. State, 26 App. 545, 8 S. W. 694.

Plea of former conviction or acquittal in a city court under an invalid ordinance is not good. McLain v. State, 31 App. 655, 21 S. W. 356, and cases cited. McNiel v. State, 29 App. 48, 14 S. W. 393. And see Leach v. State, 36 App. 248, 36 S. W. 471, and cases cited.

Otherwise, however, when the ordinance is valid. Davis v. State, 37 App. 359, 38 S. W. 616, 39 S. W. 937.

Where it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in discharging a jury for disagreement, it is proper to instruct the jury to find the plea of former jeopardy untrue. Varnes v. State, 20 App. 107.

Where there is no evidence to support a plea of former jeopardy, the failure of the jury to pass on it could not prejudice him. Robinson v. State, 23 App. 315, 4 S. W. 264.

Where the plea of former jeopardy showed on its face that the former indictment was fatally defective, it is proper to exclude evidence to support the plea and to refuse to submit it to the jury. Williams v. State, 34 App. 433, 50 S. W. 1063.

A previous conviction for driving from the range with a pecuniary fine, which conviction was set aside and a new trial awarded, will not preclude subsequent conviction for felonious theft. Campbell v. State, 22 App. 262, 2 S. W. 525, overruling Sisk's Case, 9 App. 80.

It is a settled rule that, "if a defendant moves in arrest of judgment, or applies to a court to vacate a judgment already rendered, for any cause, and his motion is overruled, it will be presumed to be without merit put a second time in jeopardy, and so may ordinarily be tried anew." Sterling v. State, 25 App. 716, 9 S. W. 45, 8 Am. St. Rep. 452.

Where a defendant, after the reversal of a conviction in the district court, voluntarily appeared in the county court with counsel and waived a jury trial, and was adjudged guilty of a lesser crime on an agreed statement of facts, he cannot, on the case in the district court being called, plead former jeopardy, although the county attorney filed the information in the county court; such being a fraud on the jurisdiction of the district court. Taff v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 214.

One who obtains on habeas corpus his discharge under a judgment and sentence adjudged absolutely void cannot, on a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, rely on the judgment and sentence in support of a plea of former jeopardy, whether he has undergone any part of the punishment imposed or not. Marshall v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 722, L. R. A. 1915A, 420.

A motion for conviction, rendered in the absence of the county judge, furnishes no basis for a plea of former jeopardy against a prosecution for seduction arising out of the same acts; it not appearing that the court was in session, or that any one authorized received accused's plea of guilty. Staples v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1066.

The rule is controlled by the well established doctrine of entailment, and, if, as matter of fact, the transactions be the same, the plea of former conviction will be good, though the offenses be of different names. Hirschfield v. State, 11 App. 297, and cases cited; Quitzow v. State, 1 App. 47, 28 Am. Rep. 396; Simco v. State, App. 588; Grisham v. State, 19 App. 594.

The usual test for determining whether a former conviction or acquitted was of the same offense is whether the same evidence which is necessary to support the second prosecution would have supported the first. Lowe v. State, 4 App. 34; Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 26.

It is not essential that the proofs be identical. Williams v. State, 58 App. 193, 125 S. W. 42.

The two offenses must, in truth, be the same, though the indictments may differ in material particulars. Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 36.

When one offense is a necessary element in, and constitutes an essential part of, another offense, and both are, in fact, but one transaction, a conviction or acquittal on one is bars prosecution for the other, except in burglary and theft. Herera v. State, 35 App. 607, 34 S. W. 943.

A plea of former conviction under a city ordinance stands no defense, where, under the ordinance, the act constituted a different offense. Davis v. State, 37 App. 255, 38 S. W. 616, 39 S. W. 927.

On the doctrine of entailment, as applied to special pleas, see Sudberry v. State, 39 App. 466, 46 S. W. 639, and cases cited.

The mere fact that two offenses of identical character were committed contemporaneously does not make them any the less distinct offenses. Dunn v. State, 43 App. 106, 63 S. W. 571.

The state can bar but once on a single trial, and, pleading former conviction, a defendant is entitled to his chance to prove it. Taylor v. State, 50 App. 283, 98 S. W. 329; Paschal v. State, 49 App. 111, 90 S. W. 785.

10. Degrees of offenses.—Conviction of lower as acquittal of higher degrees, see post, art. 732.

Higher grade of offense not within jurisdiction, see post, art. 691.

Conviction for the greater offense bars prosecution for the lesser. Givens v. State 6 Tex. 344.

An acquittal for the murder of one of two parties is not bars prosecution for the murder of the other, unless shown that both were killed by the same shot. Augustine v. State, 41 App. 59, 52 S. W. 77, 96 Am. St. Rep. 765.

There were accused was acquitted of murder in the first degree, on express malice, and convicted in the second degree, on implied malice, which conviction was reversed and thereupon the Legislature changed the law, consolidating the crimes of murder in the first and second degree, defining the elements of both degrees, constituting one offense, and accused, on a plea trial, elected to be tried under the old law, the reversal of the conviction for murder in the second degree would not preclude a conviction of murder on implied malice. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 574.

13. Murder and carrying pistol.—As one could not under an indictment for murder be tried for unlawfully carrying a pistol, an acquittal under an indictment might not avail to him, as foeculently indicted for unlawfully carrying the pistol, with which, and when, he did the killing. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1107.

14. Assault with intent to murder.—On a trial for assault with intent to murder, defendant pleaded former jeopardy, in that he had already been tried and convicted for an assault with intent to murder another party, and that his previous conviction grew out of and was a part of the same transaction. Held, that the court properly declined to consider and refused to submit the plea of former jeopardy to the jury, the evidence showing separate and distinct offenses. Ashton v. State, 31 App. 482, 21 S. W. 48.

Defendant cut prosecutor in an altercation, and was charged with aggravated assault. By arrangement with the county attorney, accused pleaded guilty and a fine was paid, and the judgment satisfied. He denied the allegations for assault to commit murder, and in support of a plea of former jeopardy it was shown that the acts complained of constituted the identical assault for which he had previously pleaded guilty. Held, that the plea was sustained, and that accused was entitled to a discharge. Corbett v. State, 63 App. 478, 149 S. W. 342.

16. Assault with intent to murder and threats to kill.—A conviction of assault with intent to murder will not bar a prosecution for threats to kill, though both prosecutions are founded on incidents of the same difficulty. Lewis v. State, 1 App. 321.

17. Assault with intent to murder and carrying pistol.—Conviction for unlawfully carrying a pistol will not bar prosecution for assault to murder, though involving the same act. Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 36.

On a trial for carrying a pistol a plea that he had been tried for an assault with intent to murder in which he used the pistol is no bar. The causes of action are not the same. Ford v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 918.

19. Assault.—Where a party fires on four people and wounds them all it is but one offense and a conviction for wounding one is a bar to further prosecution. Suddberry v. State, 39 App. 467, 46 S. W. 639.

If a person shoots at one person and strikes another, and is prosecuted for assaulting the person struck, he cannot be afterwards prosecuted for assaulting the one he intended to strike. Vining v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 909.

20. Robbery.—An acquittal for robbing prosecutor of one 10-cent piece, as charged in the indictment, cannot be pleaded as former jeopardy to a subsequent indictment charging accused with robbing prosecutor of two 5-cent pieces; the two indictments being based on the same act. McCusker v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 333.

21. Robbery and assault with intent to murder.—Where on trial for assault with intent to murder, it appeared that defendant had been previously convicted of robbery from the same person and by the use of the same violence upon whom and by which the assault was alleged, his plea of former conviction should have been sustained. Moore v. State, 33 App. 166, 25 S. W. 1120.

22. Assault with intent to murder and robbery.—A former conviction for assault with intent to murder bars a subsequent prosecution for robbery committed at the same time and by means of the same assault. Moore v. State, 33 App. 166, 25 S. W. 1120; Herera v. State, 35 App. 607, 34 S. W. 943.

23. Affray and aggravated assault.—A conviction for engaging in an "affray" does not bar a prosecution for "aggravated assault" under a plea of former jeopardy, nor does the doctrine of carving apply. McCraw v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 967; Decker v. State, 58 App. 159, 124 S. W. 912.

24. Rape.—In a prosecution for statutory rape, where accused had been acquitted in a former prosecution when the state relied on a different act, evidence in the former trial tending to show guilt of the act charged in the second prosecution, was admissible. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 536.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, where accused claimed that his acquittal in a prior prosecution under an indictment for a different act was a bar, it was proper for the state to introduce evidence that the act relied on in the second prosecution was not part of the same transaction as the act for which he was acquitted. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 536.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, where accused, on a previous trial had been acquitted under an indictment for a different act, and on the present trial he offered no evidence to show that the act upon which the state relied was the same one, his plea of former acquittal was properly denied. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 185 S. W. 536.

25. — Attempt to rape and attempt at burglary to commit rape.—Acquittal of attempt to commit rape will not bar prosecution for attempt at burglary to commit rape. Byus v. State, 41 App. 51, 51 S. W. 353, 96 Am. St. Rep. 752.

27. — Incest.—Where accused in four indictments was charged with incest was tried on different dates, and on one of the indictments it was asked as to intercourse with accused on the dates covered by the other indictments but on denying such intercourse, no other proof thereof was offered, and no conviction asked for any act except that charged in the indictment on trial, his acquittal did not prevent the trial of the other indictments, or entitle him to release on habeas corpus. Ex parte Burford, 70 App. 281, 156 S. W. 656.

28. — Adultery.—In Alonzo v. State, 15 App. 378, 49 Am. Rep. 207, it is held that in a prosecution for adultery, the acquittal of one of the parties to the offense will not bar a prosecution against the other. The reasoning and doctrine of that decision seem applicable also to the offenses of bigamy.

29. — Bigamy and adultery.—Bigamy and adultery are different offenses and are not maintainable by the same evidence; and, therefore, a former acquittal of bigamy will not bar a prosecution for adultery. Swancoat v. State, 4 App. 195; Hildreth v. State, 10 App. 185.

30. — Fornication and seduction.—The offense of "seduction" under promise of marriage being based on the first act whereby a virgin is led astray, a conviction of fornication for subsequent acts of intercourse with the procuratrix is no bar to conviction for seduction. Staples v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1006.

31. — Displaying pistol and carrying or firing same.—On a trial for unlawfully carrying a pistol, a plea of former conviction for rudely displaying a pistol is not available. Nichols v. State, 37 App. 616, 40 S. W. 502.

32. — Keeping disorderly house.—Keeping a disorderly house is a continuous offense, and a conviction bars further prosecution up to the time of the conviction, unless the indictment or information is confined thereto. Novy v. State, 42 App. 492, 135 S. W. 139; Huffman v. State, 23 App. 451, 5 S. W. 134; Fleming v. State, 25 App. 234, 12 S. W. 605.

An indictment charged the keeping of a disorderly house on May 15, 1883, and was filed May 25, 1883. Defendant pleaded former acquittal before a mayor's court on a complaint charging the same offense to have been committed June 13, 1883. On the trial before the mayor the same proof was adduced as on the trial under the indictment covering the same period of time. Held that the plea should have been sustained. Handler v. State, 18 App. 444.

Where an information charging the offense of keeping a disorderly house was intended to charge only one offense as having been committed in two different ways, payment is authorized; but, if each, and was intended to, and did charge a separate and distinct offense, a conviction might be had under all and punishment assessed for each count. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 209, 156 S. W. 927.

33. — Vagrancy and keeping disorderly house.—Former acquittal on trial for vagrancy not available as plea in bar of prosecution for keeping a disorderly house. Wilson v. State, 16 App. 497.

34. — Vagrancy and keeping gaming place.—As the Legislature, by passing the vagrancy act (Pen. Code, art. 634 et seq.), did not intend to repeal Pen. Code, art. 559, making it a felony for a person to keep a place for the purpose of being used as a place to gamble with cards, the vagrancy act (section 1, subd. k), if it does not create a new and distinct offense from that denounced in the Penal Code, is unconstitutional, being in violation of Const. art. 1, § 14, prohibiting double jeopardy. Purshall v. State, 42 App. 177, 138 S. W. 759.

35. — Gaming.—A conviction for betting with dice is no bar to a prosecution for keeping a gaming table. Tutt v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 268.

Where accused and others shot craps for a couple of hours, during which time there were 26 bets made by each of the parties, and each bet was the same and separate offense, so that a former conviction for betting during the same game would not preclude a second prosecution for betting thereon. Parks v. State, 57 App. 569, 123 S. W. 1109.

38. — Attempt to pass forged instrument.—See Pen. Code, art. 946. Conviction for one of different attempts to pass the same forged instrument will not bar prosecution for the other attempt. Burks v. State, 24 App. 526, 8 S. W. 503; Lewis v. State, 1 App. 425.

39. — Cursing.—Cursing in a manner calculated to provoke disturbance of the peace, and cursing near a private residence in a manner calculated to disturb inhabitants thereof, are distinct offenses, and conviction or acquittal of one will not bar prosecution of the other. Kellett v. State, 51 App. 611, 103 S. W. 882.
Art. 9

40. Drunkenness and disturbing peace.—Conviction for drunkenness in a public place cannot be sustained as a bar to prosecution for disturbing the peace at the same time. Mitchell v. State, 48 App. 633, 89 S. W. 615.

41. False swearing and illegal voting.—False swearing and illegal voting are distinct offenses, and conviction for one cannot be pleaded against the other. Arrington v. State, 48 App. 641, 89 S. W. 643.

42. Burglary.—An acquittal, under an indictment charging that accused broke into a house occupied by T. C. with intent to steal property belonging to him, was no answer to an indictment for breaking the same house, alleged to be in the control of A. C., with intent to steal property belonging to the latter. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 782.

The statute makes burglary of a private residence at night a distinct offense from ordinary burglary, hence the fact that accused had been previously indicted and placed on trial under an indictment charging him with ordinary burglary does not preclude a subsequent prosecution for burglary of a private residence at night, the court upon proof of those facts having withdrawn the first case from the jury. Curtis v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 555.

43. Burglary and conspiracy to commit.—Burglary and conspiracy to commit burglary are distinct offenses, and conviction of one will not bar prosecution for the other. Whitford v. State, 24 App. 499, 6 S. W. 527, 5 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Where the evidence showed that the theft of cattle belonging to two different owners was the same act, it was held, that a conviction of the theft of the cattle of one of said owners would bar a prosecution for the theft of the cattle of the other owner. But, the indictment only charging the theft of the cattle belonging to one of said owners, an acquittal upon said charge would not bar a prosecution for the theft of the cattle belonging to the other owner, notwithstanding the transaction be the same, and the evidence identical. Wright v. State, 17 App. 152; Alexander v. State, 21 App. 406, 17 S. W. 123, 57 Am. Rep. 617; Sims v. State, 9 App. 338. Where the first indictment charged a theft from H. Franks, and the second one charged it from H. Frank, it was held, that the former could not be pleaded in bar of the latter. Parchman v. State, 2 App. 253, 25 Am. Rep. 435; Branch v. State, 20 App. 599. Where, under an indictment charging the theft of cattle, the defendant was convicted of the offense defined by P. C. art. 1256, but was granted a new trial, it was held, that he might properly be convicted on the second trial of theft as denounced by P. C. art. 1254. Campbell v. State, 22 App. 130, 6 S. W. 556; Seaver v. State, 9 App. 39.

The proof on the trial showed that the defendants had been separately convicted for the theft of a cow, the property of one W. The animal involved in this prosecution was alleged to be the property of one C., and was found in the possession of defendants at the same time and place, and under circumstances as the W. cow. It was shown, also, that when last seen, before being found in the defendants' possession, the W. cow was on her range a mile and a half west of the town of A., and that the C. cow when last seen before she was found in possession of the defendants, was on her range several miles southwest from the said town of A. Under this proof the defendants pleaded in bar to this prosecution their former conviction for the theft of W.'s cow, alleging the taking of the two cows to be but one transaction. The jury found against the truth of the special plea. Held, that the finding of the jury was supported by the proof, and was correct. Willis v. State, 24 App. 560, 6 S. W. 857. See also, Cooper v. State, 25 App. 530, 8 S. W. 654; Henkel v. State, 27 App. 519, 11 S. W. 671; Rust v. State, 31 App. 75, 19 S. W. 763.

An acquittal under an indictment for theft which alleges the owner unknown is a bar to a prosecution for the same offense under an indictment alleging the true owner. Fenton v. State, 33 App. 633, 25 S. W. 537.

The proof showing that the different cattle were stolen at different times and places, conviction for the theft of one cannot be pleaded as bar to prosecution for theft of the others. Davidson v. State, 40 App. 285, 49 S. W. 373, 50 S. W. 365.

There is a distinction between former acquittal and former conviction growing out of the same transaction; the principle of carving applies with more force to former conviction than to an acquittal; as, where there are distinct indictments for thefts of cattle from various owners, an acquittal as to one does not bar conviction for theft from another owner, but a conviction will when the thefts are committed at same time and place. Taylor v. State, 41 App. 564, 55 S. W. 962.

Indictment may include counts for theft and theft from the person, and conviction under the first count operates as acquittal of the second count. Hooten v. State, 53 App. 6, 108 S. W. 551; Flynn v. State, 47 App. 26, 83 S. W. 296.

And where two cows belonging to a killed t owner as part of one transaction, the state, after securing a conviction for taking one of the cows, could not claim a conviction for taking the other. La Flour v. State, 59 App. 445, 129 S. W. 351.

45. Theft and receiving stolen property.—Where the indictment charges in separate counts theft and receiving stolen property, a conviction for receiving stolen property is in effect an acquittal of larceny. Davis v. State, 61 App. 611, 136 S. W. 45.

The conspiracy to steal is complete at the time it is entered into, without any reference to subsequent theft, and a conviction of the theft is not a bar to prosecution for the conspiracy. Bailey v. State, 42 App. 289, 59 S. W. 901.

47. Theft and driving stock from range.—It is no obstruction to a plea of former jeopardy interposed in a prosecution under P. C. art. 1356 for driving stock from accustomed range, that the indictment under which the former trial was had charged the theft of the stock, as under said indictment the defendant might have been convicted of this offense. McEldrury v. State, 21 App. 691, 2 S. W. 892, but the holding of this case and of Counts v. State, 37 Tex. 593; Campbell v. State, 42 Tex. 591; Marshall v. State, 4 App. 549; Powell v. State, 7 App. 467; Turner v. State, 7 App. 556; Foster v. State, 21 App. 80, 17 S. W. 548; Smith v. State, 21 App. 133, 17 S. W. 558, and Guest v. State, 24 App. 520, 7 S. W. 242, that an indictment for theft of stock includes a charge of driving from the range, was overruled by Long v. State, 39 App. 461, 46 S. W. 821, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921.

48. Defacing mark and theft.—Where one indictment is for defacing mark and another is for theft of same animal, the latter includes the former and trial of latter should have been postponed until jury returned verdict in former, because such verdict would have been a bar to indictment for theft. Powell v. State, 42 App. 12, 57 S. W. 55.

49. Illegal marking of cattle.—Where several animals are marked or branded at the same time and place, the transaction is the same, although the animals belong to different owners, nor is such marking or branding one of the animals will bar a prosecution for the same offense with reference to the other. Adams v. State, 16 App. 163; House v. State, 15 App. 622.

50. Killing animals.—An acquittal of "wilfully and wantonly killing" an animal is not a bar to "wilfully killing" the same animal "with intent to injure the owner." Irwin v. State, 7 App. 78.

Where accused shot and killed two cows belonging to the same owner as part of one transaction, the state, after securing a conviction for taking one of the cows, could not claim a conviction for taking the other. La Flour v. State, 55 App. 668, 129 S. W. 361.

51. Violation of liquor laws.—An acquittal for sale of intoxicating liquor made on 24 Feb. is no bar to a prosecution for a sale made on August 10, unless the evidence shows that the two charges refer to the same act. Fehr v. State, 36 App. 55, 85 S. W. 383, 650.

A conviction for violation of the local option law will not be disturbed by the evidence does not show a previous conviction for the sale involved in the second prosecution. Bruce v. State, 39 App. 26, 44 S. W. 852.

A previous conviction for violating the local option laws by sale is a bar to prosecution for selling to a minor, where the charges involving the same identical transaction, the local option law superseding all other laws involving the sale of intoxicating liquors and including sales to minors. Tompkins v. State, 49 App. 154, 90 S. W. 1019.

Conviction under art. 604 of the Pen. Code for permitting one to drink on the premises will not bar prosecution for permitting another person to drink on the premises at the same time. Teague v. State, 51 App. 523, 102 S. W. 1142.

Where, on a trial for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor on or about a specified date, the state proved three sales by accused to the same person, and the court authorized a conviction on any sale proved, accused's plea of former conviction on a subsequent trial on another information charging the same sales, and where the evidence was the same, must be sustained, though he committed a separate offense each time he made a sale. Pifer v. State, 53 App. 550, 118 S. W. 809; Alexander v. State, 53 App. 553, 111 S. W. 918; Fears v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 519.

The dates of sale being the same, but the sales to the same party being different, they constituted separate offenses, and plea of former conviction was not available. Robinson v. State, 53 App. 565, 110 S. W. 908.

A plea of former acquittal in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, alleging that the offense for which accused was being prosecuted was the same offense as that for which he had been acquitted, but positively averring only that the affidavits and informations in the two causes were identical in every particular, and averring the conclusion that by the former verdict accused had been acquitted of the same charge, is insufficient as to the same state, having authority to prosecute for any period of time within the statute of limitations, there could have been many complaints filed against accused for sale to the same man, representing different transactions, and all averring the same date. Jerue v. State, 57 App. 213, 123 S. W. 414.

Evidence held to show that the informations in two prosecutions for selling intoxicating liquor, in violation of the local option law were for different and distinct offenses, not growing out of the same transaction. Jerue v. State, 57 App. 213, 123 S. W. 414.
On trial for keeping a disorderly house, described as a certain house where liquors were sold without a license, conviction for selling whisky on the same dates could not support a plea of former conviction. Todd v. State, 60 App., 131 S. W. 696.

One committing an act which he is enjoined from committing, and which is a violation of a penal law, may be punished for contempt for violating the injunction, and punished for a violation of the criminal law, and the act of 1907, authorizing injunctions restraining the sale of liquor within counties wherein the sale of liquor has been prohibited, is not invaded by imposing an additional punishment for a violation of the local option law. Ex parte Looper, 61 App., 134 S. W. 334.

One who has been convicted of selling liquor in violation of the local option law and of an injunction restraining him from selling intoxicating liquors may not, when charged with contempt of violating the injunction, plead his conviction in bar of the contempt proceedings. Ex parte Looper, 61 App., 134 S. W. 345, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 32.

On a trial for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in a prohibition county, evidence of sales of liquor, for which accused had already been convicted, was admissible, since the offense of making a single sale and that of pursuing the business of selling are distinct; and hence this did not constitute a second prosecution for the same offense. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 240.

A conviction in the county court for illegally selling intoxicants in a dry county would not bar a subsequent prosecution and conviction for unlawfully pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.), 154 S. W. 571.

A plea of former jeopardy in a prosecution for carrying on the business of selling intoxicating liquor, contrary to law, based upon a former conviction for keeping a disorderly house in which the defendant sold liquor without a license, is bad where, in the second indictment, the defendant was charged with the sale and the evidence was confined to transactions subsequent to the former conviction. Creech v. State, 70 App., 158 S. W. 277.

In a prosecution, under Pen. Code, art. 593, for giving or delivering intoxicating liquor to a minor without the written consent of his parents or guardian, an acquittal on the charge of making a sale to such minor was not sufficient as a plea of former jeopardy, since the offenses were entirely separate and distinct, requiring different proof to convict. Dickerson v. State, 72 App., 162 S. W. 571.

A former trial for making particular sales of intoxicants in prohibition territory was not a former jeopardy, so as to bar a subsequent prosecution for pursuing the business or occupation of selling intoxicants. Hightower v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 194.

52. — Perjury. — Acquittal of an offense is bar to a trial and conviction for perjury committed on the trial of such offense. Miles v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 567; Murff v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 238.

54. Waiver of defense. — To the defendant's satisfaction the plea of former jeopardy the state interposed a demurrer, but the record fails to show in any manner that either the plea or the demurrer was acted upon by the court. Held, that under our practice, the plea of former jeopardy must be treated as waived. Johnson v. State, 25 App., 631, 10 S. W. 235.

55. Plea. — Habeas corpus cannot be resorted to to secure the discharge of a prisoner on a plea of former jeopardy. Durrn v. Westerlage, 44 Tex. 385; Ex parte Schwartz, 2 App., 74; Griffin v. State, 5 App., 457; Ex parte Crockett, 39 App., 647, 47 S. W. 533.

The plea is not available on habeas corpus. Pitner v. State, 44 Tex. 578, and cases cited.

It is not necessary in a plea of former jeopardy, where the plea refers to same case as that in which this is made, to set up the indictment, verdict and judgment in full, as the court must take judicial knowledge of the orders and decrees entered in its own court; especially is this true when the orders and decrees are made in the case then on trial. Woodward v. State, 42 App., 188, 58 S. W. 138; Foster v. State, 25 App., 543, 8 S. W. 664.

Defense of former jeopardy is not available under plea of not guilty but must be specially pleaded. Swanceat v. State, 4 App., 105.

Former jeopardy is a constitutional and not a statutory defense, and although the plea of former jeopardy is not one known to the statutory law of this state, and has no place assigned in the regular order of pleadings, it is, nevertheless, a plea may be interposed even after the jury has been impanelled and the plea of not guilty entered. Nor is it essential to the validity of such plea that a record of the proceedings of the former trial was perpetuated by a bill of exceptions. Pizzano v. State, 20 App., 138, 54 Am. Rep. 511. See, also, as to the right to plead former jeopardy, Blanford v. State, 10 App., 627. For pleas of former jeopardy held to be good, see Powell v. State, 17 App., 245; Brink v. State, 15 App., 344, 51 Am. Rep. 317; Pizzano v. State, 20 App., 138, 54 Am. Rep. 611; McElmurray v. State, 21 App., 691, 2 S. W. 832; Branch v. State, 29 App., 599; Alexander v. State, 21 App., 496, 17 S. W. 128, 57 Am. Rep. 617.

A plea of former jeopardy based on the admission of a former prosecution over defendant's objection should contain the motion to dismiss and the judgment thereon. Jackson v. State, 37 App., 128, 38 S. W. 1092.

56. Burden of proof. — On the pleas of former jeopardy or former conviction or acquittal, the burden of proof is on the accused. O'Connor v. State, 28 App., 288, 13 S. W. 14.
Art. 10. [10] Trial by jury shall remain inviolate.—The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. [Bill of Rights, § 15; O. C. 10.]

See post, art. 644 et seq.
See, also, Const. U. S., Amendment 6.

Explanatory.—In addition to the above, section 15, art. 1, of the present constitution, provides that "The legislature shall pass such laws as may be needed to regulate the same, and to maintain its purity and efficiency." (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv.)
In general.—English v. State, 28 App. 500, 13 S. W. 775; McCampbell v. State, 37 App. 607, 40 S. W. 496.

The preceding article applies to a trial in a forfeited ball case after judgment nisi has been rendered, and in such case the rules applicable in civil cases apply. In criminal cases, save such as are specially excepted, the only mode of trying an issue of fact is by a jury. Short v. State, 16 App. 44.
Art. 608, subd. 6, post, does not, by giving the court discretion to deny a continuance on account of the absence of witnesses, deprive accused of his right to a trial by jury. Lillard v. State, 17 App. 114.
The statute providing that the payment of the United States special tax as a seller of intoxicating liquors shall be prima facie evidence that the person paying the tax is engaged in selling such liquors does not infringe the constitutional right to a trial by jury. Floeck v. State, 34 App. 314, 30 S. W. 794.
Former constitution.—Under the Constitution of 1845 (art. 4, sec. 19) it was not competent for the legislature to authorize summary trials before mayors, etc., without a trial by jury or offenses involving fine and imprisonment. Burns v. Lagrange, 17 Tex. 415; Smith v. San Antonio, 17 Tex. 463.
Number of jurors.—See post, arts. 645, 764-766.
Misdemeanor cases. Stell v. State, 14 App. 59; Marks v. State, 10 App. 334.
Proceedings against delinquent children.—The act of 1905 for proceedings against delinquent children, in place of the ordinary common-law criminal procedure, is not unconstitutional as depriving the infants of trial by jury; the proceeding not being criminal in its nature. Ex parte Bartee (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1051.
Injunction against sale of liquors.—The act of 1907, authorizing injunctions restrain ing persons from selling intoxicating liquors within any county wherein the sale of intoxicating liquor has been prohibited by law, is not invalid as denying the right of trial by jury, because the matter inquired into in proceedings for contempt for violating an injunction relates merely to a violation of the injunction, and not to a violation of the local option law. Ex parte Hoper, 61 App. 28, 134 S. W. 334.
Punishment.—This provision does not preclude the Legislature from providing that the jury shall only pass on the question of guilt or innocence and that the punishment shall be assessed by the court. Ex parte Marshall, 72 App. 65, 161 S. W. 112.
Waiver.—See post, arts. 22, 582, 982.

Art. 11. [11] Liberty of speech and of the press.—Every person shall be at liberty to speak, write or publish his opinion on any subject, being liable for the abuse of that privilege; and no law shall ever be passed curtailing the liberty of speech or of the press. In prosecutions for the publication of papers investigating the conduct of officers or men in public capacity, or when the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence. And, in all indictments for libels, the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases. [Bill of Rights, § 8; O. C. 11.]
For statutory provisions arising under this section of the Bill of Rights, see Pen. Code, arts. 1151 to 1199 inclusive, and notes.
Explanatory.—The present constitution is identical with the above provision except that it employs the word "responsible" instead of the word "liable" following the word "being." (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv.)
Liberty of speech and of the press.—Extent to which the freedom of the press may be restrained to protect private character from falsehood and slander, and prevent the publication of testimony, libelous in its nature, required by the policy of the law to be kept absolutely secret. Belo v. Wren, 68 Tex. 686; Express Co. v. Copeland, 64 Tex. 364; and others.
The law defining and punishing libelous publications does not infringe the rights secured by this article. Morton v. State, 3 App. 519.
A city ordinance declaring a named newspaper to be a public nuisance and forbidding the city to do in the case is contrary to this article and void. Ex parte Neill, 32 App. 275, 22 S. W. 323, 40 Am. St. Rep. 776.

Art. 12. [12] Person shall not be disqualified as a witness for religious opinion or want of religious belief.—No person shall be disqualified to give evidence in any of the courts of this state on account of his religious opinions, or for the want of any religious belief; but all oaths or affirmations shall be administered in the mode most binding upon the conscience, and shall be taken subject to the pains and penalties of perjury. [Bill of Rights, § 5.]

See post, art. 796 and notes.

Religious belief.—Religious belief is not a prerequisite to one’s competency as a witness. It is sufficient if he understands the obligation to speak the truth, and penalty for testifying falsely. Colter v. State, 37 App. 284, 39 S. W. 576.

Oath.—A witness must testify under oath, and counsel for defendant can not waive the sanction of an oath. Hill v. State, 2 App. 216, 28 Am. Rep. 429. A witness may be sworn upon the cross, or in any other manner most binding upon his conscience. Ake v. State, 6 App. 399, 32 Am. Rep. 556; Gonzalez v. State, 31 Tex. 495; Const., art. I, sec. 5. A witness, to be competent, must understand the obligation of an oath. Art. 788, subd. 2.

Art. 13. [13] Outlawry and transportation prohibited.—No citizen shall be outlawed, nor shall any person be transported out of the state for any offense committed within the same. [Bill of Rights, § 20.]

Art. 14. [14] Conviction shall not work corruption of blood, etc.—No conviction shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate. [Bill of Rights, § 21.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 61, 62, and notes.

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: “No conviction shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture of estate; and the estates of those who destroy their own lives shall descend or vest as in case of natural death.” [Const. art. 10; Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxv.]

Art. 15. [15] No conviction of treason, except, etc.—No person shall be convicted of treason, except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court. [Bill of Rights, § 22.]

Pen. Code, arts. 93-95; post, arts. 503-504.

Explanatory.—The full text of sec. 22 of the Bill of Rights in the present constitution is as follows: “Treason against the state shall consist only in levying war against it, or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort; and no person shall be convicted of treason except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.” [Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxv.]

Art. 16. [16] Privilege of senators and representatives.—Senators and representatives shall, except in cases of treason, felony or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during the session of the legislature, and in going to and returning from the same, allowing one day for every twenty miles such member may reside from the place at which the legislature is convened. [Const., art. 3, § 14; O. C. 12.]

Art. 17. [17] Privilege of voters.—Voters shall, in all cases, except treason, felony or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at elections, and in going to and returning therefrom. [Const., art. 6, § 5; O. C. 11.]

See Pen. Code, art. 270.

Art. 18. [18] Change of venue.—The power to change the venue in civil and criminal cases shall be vested in the courts, to be exercised in such manner as shall be provided by law. [Const., art. 3, § 45.]

Post, arts. 626-641, and notes.

Art. 629, post, authorizing the court to order a change of venue on his own motion is constitutional. Cox v. State, § App. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 746.

Art. 19. [19] Conservators of the peace; style of process.—All judges of the supreme court, courts of appeals and district courts, shall, by virtue of their offices, be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all writs and process shall be "The State of Texas." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of "The State of Texas," and conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the state." [Const., art. 5, § 12; O. C. 15.]

Commencement and conclusion of indictments and informations, see post, arts. 451, 478.

Explanatory.—The provision referred to, of the present constitution, reads as follows: "All judges of courts of this state, by virtue of their office, shall be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all writs and process shall be, The State of Texas. All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by authority of the State of Texas, and shall conclude: Against the peace and dignity of the state." [Secs. 11 and 12, art. 6, adopted election August 11, 1891; proclamation September 22, 1891. (Vernon's Sedges' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xiii.)]

All writs and process, including those of city or municipal courts, must conform to this article. Leach v. State, 36 App. 248, 36 S. W. 471; Ex parte Fagg, 38 App. 573, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 212.

Quo warranto.—Quo warranto proceedings are covered by this article. Wright v. Allen, 2 Tex. 158; Banton v. Wilson, 4 Tex. 489.

Art. 20. [20] In what cases accused may be tried, etc., after conviction.—By the provisions of the constitution, an acquittal of the defendant exempts him from a second trial or a second prosecution for the same offense, however irregular the proceedings may have been; but, if the defendant shall have been acquitted upon trial in a court having no jurisdiction of the offense, he may, nevertheless, be prosecuted again in a court having jurisdiction. [O.C. 20.]

Burglary and felony committed after entry, see Pen. Code, 1213, 1217, 1218.

Conviction of lower as acquittal of higher grade of offense, see post, art. 782.

Forgery and passing or possession with intent to pass forged instrument, see Pen. Code, art. 946.

Former jeopardy in general, see ante, art. 9.

Higher grade of offense not within jurisdiction of court, see post, art. 601.

Plea, see post, arts. 572-574.

Former law.—Old article 20 was as follows: "By the provisions of the constitution no person shall be exempt from second trial for the same offense who has been convicted upon an illegal indictment or information, and the judgment thereupon arrested; nor where a new trial has been granted to the defendant, nor where a jury has been discharged without rendering a verdict, nor for any cause other than that of a legal conviction." This article was held unconstitutional in Powell v. State, 17 App. 345.

Conviction in a city court under an invalid city ordinance is not a bar to prosecution in a state court. McLain v. State, 31 App. 658, 21 S. W. 365.

Conviction in a city court for an "affray," though a statutory offense, is a bar to prosecution in a state court. Ex parte Freeland, 38 App. 321, 42 S. W. 298.

Art. 21. [21] No conviction of felony except by verdict of jury.—No person can be convicted of a felony except upon the verdict of a jury duly rendered and recorded. [O. C. 22.]

Verdicts, see post, art. 763 et seq.

Judgment of not guilty where the trial is by the judge without a jury.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1904.

Art. 22. [22] Defendant may waive any right, except, etc.—The defendant in a criminal prosecution for any offense may waive any right secured to him by law, except the right of trial by jury in a felony case. [O. C. 26.]
1. Authority of attorney in general. — There is really, no manner in which an attorney can absolutely bind his defendant client to his prejudice and against the general principles of law. Bell v. State, 2 App. 215, 28 Am. Rep. 429; McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58.

2. Indictment or information. — One prosecuted in county court for a misdemeanor cannot waive the filing of an information. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 786.

    One prosecuted for a misdemeanor in the county court cannot waive failure to file an information, that being a jurisdictional matter. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 784. There can be no material alteration of indictment by agreement between the prosecuting attorney and counsel for the defendant. Calvin v. State, 25 Tex. 789.

3. Copy of indictment or list of jurors. — The copy of the jury list may be waived. Swafford v. State, 3 App. 76; Houillon v. State, 3 App. 837.

    Attorney cannot waive right to copy of indictment in felony cases. McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58.

    It is too late after verdict to complain that defendant has not been served with copy of indictment or special venire. Roberts v. State, 5 App. 141; Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 821.

    Where a defendant charged with misdemeanor was compelled to file her written objections before the expiration of two days after the expiration of the information over her protest and demand for the full statutory time, there was no waiver of her right to the time. Reed v. State, 31 App. 55, 19 S. W. 678.

4. Right to trial by jury. — Post, art. 582.

    Before justice, see article 882, post.

    In a misdemeanor case defendant may waive a trial by jury or by a legal jury. Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664; Johnson v. State, 39 App. 425, 48 S. W. 70; Ex parte Jones, 46 App. 433, 80 S. W. 995; Otto v. State (Cr. App.) 87 S. W. 659; Muckey v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 992; Scholman v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1105.

    A criminal appeal must show that a legal jury was waived where it shows a jury trial by less than the legal number. Stell v. State, 14 App. 59.

    A jury trial cannot be waived in a criminal case. Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 141 S. W. 264.

    Where defendant in a misdemeanor case waives a jury, the findings of fact by the trial court are as conclusive on the Court of Criminal Appeals as the verdict of a jury. Sulmav v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 998.

    Waiver by counsel of the mode of impaneling a jury held binding. Grant v. State, 3 App. 1.

    After a juror has been sworn and impaneled in a felony case, the court has no authority to excuse or discharge him without the consent of the defendant. Schiff v. State, 10 App. 128.

    Defendant and attorney acting together may waive special venire and accept the week's regular panel from which to select trial jury. Collins v. State, 47 App. 303, 83 S. W. 508.

    Where in a murder case after trial had proceeded for a time and one juror was excused and verdict was rendered by eleven jurors, the conviction was illegal. Jones v. State, 52 App. 303, 166 S. W. 347, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1097.

    Where facts, tending to show that one of the jurors had formed and expressed an opinion prior to the time he was accepted on the jury, were known to defendant's counsel before his acceptance, it was too late to object to such juror on motion for a new trial. Powers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1520.

    An objection that the officer instructed by the court to summon talesmen was not sworn as required by statute, not made was too late. James v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 727.

    But such agreement is valid if made by accused. Allen v. State, 16 App. 237.

    Defendant could consent to his counsel's testifying as to statements by him concerning the presence of a third person who was not present at trial to testify as to such statements. Walker v. State, 19 App. 176.

8. Presence of accused.—Only the defendant can waive his right of personal presence at the trial. Shipp v. State, 11 App. 40; Granger v. State, Id. 454; Mapes v. State, 13 App. 85; Smith v. State, 61 App. 328, 135 S. W. 154. Counsel's waiver of right of defendant to be present on motion for new trial will be presumed to be authorized. Escareno v. State, 16 App. 83.

When a trial has proceeded in the absence of defendant, will not authorize judgment against the sureties on the bond. Huffman v. State, 23 App. 491, 5 S. W. 134.

9. Appeal.—The submission of an appeal on agreement in writing, signed by the counsel of each party, expressly waiving all but certain questions is binding. Downes v. State, 22 App. 393, 3 S. W. 342.

When the records fail to show that the challenge to the array was made to the attention of the trial court it will be presumed that it was waived. Castanedo v. State, 7 App. 582.

11. Former Jeopardy.—See ante, art. 9.

Art. 23. [23] Trial shall be public.—The proceedings and trials in all courts shall be public. [O. C. 23.]

See ante, art. 4.

Art. 24. [24] Defendant shall be confronted by witnesses, except.—The defendant, upon a trial, shall be confronted with the witnesses, except in certain cases provided for in this Code where depositions have been taken. [O. C. 24.]

See Const. art. 1, § 10; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv; ante, art. 4.

As to depositions, see, post, arts. 817-834.

Art. 25. [25] Construction of this Code.—The provisions of this Code shall be liberally construed, so as to attain the objects intended by the legislature: The prevention, suppression and punishment of crime. [O. C. 25.]

Rules of construction.—See Pen. Code, arts. 3-20, and notes; Ex parte Nitsche (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1101.

This article construed with Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5502, subd. 6, Pen. Code, arts. 9 and 10, abrogate the common-law rule that penal statutes are to be construed strictly, and require the court to construe all penal enactments liberally. Olvera v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 694; Brodie v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 124.

At common law, highly penal statutes were construed with great strictness. Estes v. State, 10 Tex. 200.

This Code lays down its own rules of interpretation, and courts must be governed by those rules, so far as applicable. Speer v. State, 2 App. 245. Such construction should be given to the different articles of the Code as accords with its general objects and purpose, and which will give full effect to all its provisions, general as well as special, so that they may stand and operate in harmony, though a statute may thereby be partially controlled, where otherwise a general one could have no effect. Cockrum v. State, 24 Tex. 399. See, also, Ex parte Porter, 16 App. 321; Bautsch v. City of Galveston, 27 App. 412, 11 S. W. 414; Childers v. State, 30 App. 180, 181, 36 S. W. 903, 28 Am. St. Rep. 889.

Common-law rules.—The common law, in its application to juries and evidence, is followed except when it has been changed by the Code. Matthews v. State, 32 Tex. 117.

The common law rule that an indictment for perjury must allege correctly the day on which the perjury was committed, and that a variance between the time alleged and that proved is fatal, has been changed by statute. Lucas v. State, 27 App. 325, 11 S. W. 443.

Arrest of escaped convict without warrant. Ex parte Sherwood, 29 App. 334, 15 S. W. 812.

Art. 26a. Acts by or under military authority exempt from punishment.—No action or proceeding shall be prosecuted or maintained against a member of the military forces of this state, or officer or person acting under its authority or reviewing its proceedings, on account of the approval or imposition or execution of any sentence, or the imposition or collection of any fine or penalty, or the execution of any warrant, writ, execution, process, or mandate of a military court. [Act 1905, p. 204, ch. 104, § 132.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised Pen. Code, and as it affects the enforcement of the criminal laws of the state, and in view of the decision in Berry v. State, it is inserted in this compilation.

Killing citizen in time of peace.—See notes under art. 5880, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914.

Since in time of peace a militiaman has only the rights of a peace officer, if in the fulfillment of his duty his life becomes in danger, or it appears to him under all the facts and circumstances in evidence that some person is about to assault him with the intention of killing him, or doing him some bodily injury, he may kill such other in self-defense, but he has no other authority to take human life. Mackey v. State, 62 App. 392, 157 S. W. 1137.

In a prosecution of a militiaman for killing a citizen while doing guard duty in time of peace, evidence that the state militia was a part of the United States soldiers, and concerning the instructions given to the soldiers as a body, and to defendant individually by his superior officers, was immaterial. Id.

That a militiaman doing guard duty in time of peace was directed by his superior officer to keep the people out of a certain inclosure at all hazards did not authorize him to kill a citizen attempting to break into the inclosure after being warned, but only authorized him to use such means as were necessary to perform his order without taking life or committing an assault. Id.

In a prosecution of a militiaman for killing a citizen while doing guard duty in a city during a presidential visit at a point where a part of the city street had been closed to travel, accused having had no control over the closing of the street, and having no authority to question his orders with reference thereto, the court should have charged that the inclosure wired off and guarded was not to be taken as a circumstance against accused, nor the fact that he was there as a soldier and had a gun with a bayonet thereon, but that the jury should assume that he was properly at the place in question with the right to carry the gun and bayonet. 40a. County attorney of Jefferson county. [40a]

3. MAGISTRATES

41. Who are magistrates. [41]
42. Duty of magistrates. [42]

4. PEACE OFFICERS

43. Who are peace officers. [43]

1. THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Article 27. [27] Attorney general shall represent the state.—It is the duty of the attorney general to represent the state in all criminal cases in the courts of appeals, except in cases where he may have been employed adversely to the state, previously to his election; and he shall not appear as counsel against the state in any court. [O. C. 28.]

Art. 28. [28] Shall report to governor biennially.—He shall report to the governor biennially on the first Monday in December next preceding the expiration of his official term, and at such other times as the governor may require, the number of indictments which have been found by grand juries in this state for the two preceding years; the number of informations filed in this state during the same period; the offenses charged in such indictments or informations; the number of trials, convictions and acquittals for each offense; the number of indictments and informations which have been disposed of without the intervention of a petit jury, with the cause and manner of such disposition; and also a summary of the judgments rendered on conviction, specifying the offense, the nature and amount of penalties imposed, and the amount of fines collected. This report shall also give a general summary of all the business, civil and criminal, disposed of by the supreme court and courts of appeals, so far as the state of Texas may be a party to such litigation, and of all civil causes to which the state is a party prosecuted or defended by him in any other courts, state or federal. [Act May 11, 1846, p. 206, amended by Act March 28, 1885, pp. 61-62.]

Art. 29. [29] May require certain officers to report to him.—He may require the several district and county attorneys, clerks of the district and county courts in the state, to communicate to him at such times as he may designate, and in such form as he may prescribe, all the information necessary for his compliance with the requirements of the preceding article. And whenever the clerk of the district court of any county neglects or fails, within thirty days after the adjournment of a term of his court, to report to the attorney general the proceedings thereof, the comptroller shall there- after, if notified of such failure, audit no more claims in favor of such clerk, until receipt of such report by the attorney general. [O. C. 944, amended by Act March 28, 1885, p. 62.]

2. DISTRICT AND COUNTY ATTORNEYS

Art. 30. [30] Duties of district attorneys.—It is the duty of each district attorney to represent the state in all criminal cases in the district courts of his district, except in cases where he has been, before his election, employed adversely; and he shall not appear as counsel against the state in any court; and he shall not, after the expiration of his term of office, appear as counsel against the state in any case in which he may have appeared for the state. [O. C. 30.]

Disqualification as judge, see post, art. 617.
McDonough v. State, 19 Tex. 293.

Rule of court.—A rule of court makes it the duty of district and county attorneys to see that the judgments in criminal cases are properly entered by the clerks, and when practicable they should be present when the minutes are read. Rule 119, for district court (142 S. W. xxvi).

Disqualification of judge.—Const. art. 5, § 11, providing that no Judge shall sit in any case where he shall have been of counsel, when construed with this article and art. 49, post, does not disqualify one who was district attorney and judge-elect at the time the offense was committed, but who did not appear against the accused, from conducting the trial after his term as judge began. Utzman v. State, 32 App. 436, 24 S. W. 412.

Art. 31. [31] Same subject.—When any criminal proceeding is had before an examining court in his district, or before a judge upon habeas corpus, and he is notified of the same, and is at the time within the county where such proceeding is had, he shall represent the state therein, unless prevented by other official duties. [O. C. 31.]

Art. 32. [32] Duties of county attorneys.—It shall be the duty of the county attorney to attend the terms of the county and inferior courts of his county, and to represent the state in all criminal cases under examination or prosecution in said courts. He shall attend all criminal prosecutions before justices of the peace in his county when notified of the pendency of such prosecutions and when not prevented by other official duties. He shall conduct all prosecutions for crimes and offenses cognizable in such county and inferior courts of his county, and shall prosecute and defend all other actions in such courts in which the state or the county is interested. He shall also attend the terms of the district court in his county; and, if there be a district attorney of the district including such county, and such district attorney be in attendance upon such court, the county attorney shall aid him when so requested; and when there is no such district attorney, or when he is absent, the county attorney shall represent the state in such court and perform the duties required by law of district attorneys.

Convict bonds.—A county attorney has no authority to accept a county convict's bond and his acceptance does not validate the bond. Ex parte Price, 37 App. 275, 39 S. W. 369.

Mandamus.—The Court of Criminal Appeals is without jurisdiction, on appeal, to direct mandamus to the county attorney to institute a misdemeanor prosecution. Murphy v. Sumners, 54 App. 365, 112 S. W. 1070.

Contempt.—A statement by the county attorney in the presence of the court that, inasmuch as the court had permitted a private citizen to appear and defend in a criminal case, he would decline to represent the state and dissolve his con-
Duty to present officer for neglect of duty.—It shall be the duty of the district or county attorney to present to the court having jurisdiction, any officer, by information, for neglect or failure of any duty enjoined upon such officer, when such neglect or failure can be presented by information, whenever it shall come to the knowledge of said attorney that there has been a neglect or failure of duty upon the part of said officer; and it shall be his duty to bring to the notice of the grand jury all acts of violation of law or neglect or failure of duty upon the part of any officer, when such violation, neglect or failure are not presented by information, and whenever the same may come to his knowledge. [Act Aug. 7, 1876, p. 86.]

Form of complaint.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 747.

Shall hear complaints, and what the same shall contain.—Upon complaint being made before a district or county attorney that an offense has been committed in his district or county, he shall reduce the complaint to writing and cause the same to be signed and sworn to by the complainant, and it shall be duly attested by said attorney. Said complaint shall state the name of the accused, if his name is known; and, if his name is not known, it shall describe him as fully as possible; and the offense with which he is charged shall be stated in plain and intelligible words; and it must appear that the offense was committed in the county where the complaint is filed, and within a time not barred by limitation. [Id., p. 87; § 13.]

Authority to take complaint.—Where deputy county attorney has been appointed and all requirements of law complied with, except obtaining approval of commissioners’ court, he is a de facto officer and can take affidavits. Dane v. State, 26 App. 86, 35 S. W. 661.

Complaint may be made before assistant county attorney, presumption being that he was regularly appointed. Kelly v. State, 36 App. 481, 35 S. W. 39; Moore v. State, 36 App. 574, 33 S. Affidavit to complaint charging misdemeanor can be taken by county attorney. Rambo v. State, 43 App. 371, 64 S. W. 1039.

A city attorney has no authority to administer an oath, except to complaints filed in a corporation court. Johnson v. State, 47 App. 580, 85 S. W. 274.

This article does not authorize the county attorney to swear a witness in an investigation under art. 976, post. Williams v. State, 60 App. 265, 96 S. W. 47, overruling Bailey v. State, 41 App. 158, 53 S. W. 117.

Requisites of complaint.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 747.

Art. 34

INTRODUCTORY

See ante, arts. 34, 35; post, art. 478, and notes.

Art. 37. [37] Shall not dismiss case, unless.—The district or county attorney shall not dismiss a case unless he shall file a written statement with the papers in the case, setting out his reasons for such dismissal, which reasons shall be incorporated in the judgment of dismissal; and no case shall be dismissed without the permission of the presiding judge, who shall be satisfied that the reasons so stated are good and sufficient to authorize such dismissal. [Id., p. 88, § 20.]
One of several joint defendants being on trial, the court permitted the prosecution attorney to call up the case of a co-defendant and dismiss it in order to make him a witness. Held, that there was no error. Johnson v. State, 33 Tex. 570.

Where there is a severance, and one defendant is placed on trial, the trial may be suspended to allow the state's attorney to dismiss the prosecution as to the defendant not on trial, for the purpose of using him as a witness. Johnson v. State, 33 Tex. 570.

Prosecution being dismissed, there is no legal authority to hold the defendant in custody without complaint or otherwise. Velters v. State, 18 App. 198.

Defendant could not complain that the entry of non. pros. as to co-defendants left them without guaranty of immunity from further prosecution so that he was deprived of the benefit of their untrammeled testimony where such co-defendants were not called as witnesses. Hobbs v. State, 53 App. 71, 112 S. W. 308.

Where an indictment was dismissed against the persons other than accused on motion of the district attorney, the motion stating that in the opinion of the district attorney the persons other than accused were accessories to accused in the homicide, it was error to admit the motion in evidence, as it contained the opinion of the district attorney as to the guilt of accused. Figarao v. State, 58 App. 611, 127 S. W. 193.

The failure to indict for murder a member of a conspiracy to rob, in the attempted perpetration of which the murder was committed, does not prejudice the rights of the state to secure a conviction of the other members of the conspiracy, and one member that was not indicted did not, by submitting the case as justified by the evidence with reference to a conspiracy to which he was a party. Bass v. State, 59 App. 186, 127 S. W. 1030.

In the absence of a showing that the reasons for dismissal of a former prosecution against accused as filed by the district attorney, and what such reasons were, one other than the prosecuting attorney, who must have received his information from such attorney, since deceased, cannot testify as to why such dismissal had been entered. Disser v. State, 59 App. 148, 127 S. W. 1038.

The issue was whether on a trial for crime, the issue of brother committed the offense, and the testimony on the identity of accused was meager, the action of the district attorney in attempting, in the presence of the jury, to procure the testimony of the brother after the brother had refused to grant him immunity, on a conditional agreement offered by the district attorney, was reversible error. Hughes v. State, 62 App. 288, 136 S. W. 1065.

An agreement by the county attorney and county judge, with the consent of the district attorney, that accused would not be further prosecuted for unlawfully selling intoxicants if he permitted a conviction in three cases against him, would not be binding upon the state without the approval of the district judge. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 517.

The action of the district attorney in stating, in the presence of the jury when calling as a witness one of the defendants on the trial of the co-defendant that he would dismiss the case as against the defendant because he was satisfied that he was not guilty, was improper, and the dismissal should have been made by the court in the absence of the jury if the court approved the action of the district attorney. Sasser v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1160.

Where two defendants were indicted for the same offense, the action of the district attorney, in the presence of the jury when calling as a witness one of the defendants on the trial of the co-defendant that he would dismiss the case as against the defendant because he was satisfied that he was not guilty, was improper, and the dismissal should have been made by the court without the knowledge of the jury if the court approved the action of the district attorney. Sasser v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1160.

A district attorney has no power or authority to make an agreement not to prosecute a witness before the grand jury for perjury committed before such body; the agreement being contrary to public policy and void. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1071.

Agreement to turn state's evidence.—Compelling testimony on granting immunity, see ante, art. 4.

A plea setting up an agreement whereby defendant was to be granted immunity if he turned state's evidence against a co-defendant, and that he was ready and willing to do so is a good plea in bar. Camron v. State, 32 App. 180, 22 S. W. 642, 49 Am. St. Rep. 763 (disapproving the contrary dictum in Holm's case, 29 App. 503); Hardin v. State, 12 App. 158; Bowden v. State, 1 App. 137; Nicks v. State, 40 App. 1, 48 S. W. 186; Neeley v. State, 27 App. 324, 11 S. W. 376; Ex parte Carter, 62 App. 113, 136 S. W. 778.

Where this article is not complied with the state is not bound by county attorney's agreement to dismiss. Fleming v. State, 28 App. 224, 12 S. W. 606; Kelly v. State, 36 App. 480, 38 S. W. 29; Disser v. State, 59 App. 149, 127 S. W. 1038. If a party does not in good faith keep his agreement with the State to testify, he is not to be permitted to have his case dismissed. Nicks v. State, 40 App. 4, 48 S. W. 136; Goodwin v. State, 70 App. 600, 158 S. W. 274.

Agreement between State counsel and defendant must be approved by the court before it is binding on the State. Vincent v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 820; Ex parte Gibson, 42 App. 665, 62 S. W. 765.
The statutes under which the district attorney and district judge may grant immunity to matters in respect to which he may testily do not give the courts power to suspend a law of the state. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29; nor violate the constitutional provision conferring upon the Governor the sole power of granting pardons. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

A special plea of immunity from prosecution on an agreement to testify for State should be tried by the court and not submitted to the jury. The burden is on defendant to establish same by preponderance of evidence. Turney v. State, 49 App. 558, 51 S. W. 248.

The immunity involved in such dismissal pertains only to that particular case and not to any other distinct offense. Moseley v. State, 35 App. 211, 32 S. W. 1042, and cases cited.

One indicted for receiving stolen horses can not plead promise of immunity because of information given in regard to stolen horses generally. Moseley v. State, 35 App. 210, 32 S. W. 1042.

Where a clerk was jointly indicted with others in several cases for selling lottery tickets, he could refuse to testify after the dismissal of the pending case since that would give him immunity only as to that case. Ex parte Park, 37 App. 590, 40 S. W. 360, 66 Am. St. Rep. 835.

The State may dismiss the prosecution for incest against the defendant's paramour who turns State's evidence, and it was not improper for the court to make the suggestion. Stanford v. State, 42 App. 243, 66 S. W. 253.

An offer of immunity to a witness, concerning a homicide, from prosecution for that crime not given in evidence. Moseley v. State, 35 App. 211, 32 S. W. 1042.

Dismissal of appeal.—A dismissal in the district court of an appeal from a conviction in a recorder's court for non-appearance of the defendant is a dismissal of the action and defendant cannot thereafter be arrested on the recorder's judgment. Ex parte McNamara, 32 App. 363, 26 S. W. 506.

Prosecution for lower grade of offense.—Under an indictment for murder in the first degree, the county attorney can dismiss the charge as homicide in the first degree, and try the defendant for murder in the second degree. Gentry v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 635; Clay v. State, 70 App. 451, 157 S. W. 164.

Forms on motion to dismiss.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 862-864.

Art. 38 [38] Attorney pro tem. may be appointed.—Whenever any district or county attorney shall fail to attend any term of the district, county or justice's court, the judge of said court or such justice may appoint some competent attorney to perform the duties of such district or county attorney, who shall be allowed the same compensation for his services as are allowed the district or county attorney. Said appointment shall not extend beyond the term of the court at which it is made, and shall be vacated upon the appearance of the district or county attorney. [Id., p. 87, § 12.]

In habeas corpus case, see post, art. 190.

Appointment.—The district court has the power to require an attorney at the bar to prepare such indictments as the grand jury may require, except in such cases wherein he may have been previously retained in defense. Bennett v. State, 27 Tex. 701; State v. Johnson, 12 Tex. 291.

In the absence of contrary showing, the presumption obtains that the person who acted and was recognized by the trial court in prosecuting the case, was duly authorized and qualified. Eppes v. State, 10 Tex. 474.

The appointment does not extend beyond the term of the court. State v. Manlove, 33 Tex. 798.

A city recorder, exercising the powers of a justice of the peace, can appoint a prosecuting attorney only when the district attorney or county attorney is not present, and the appointment must be made in each case, a charter provision authorizing the city attorney to represent the state being unconstitutional. Harris County v. Stewart, 51 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.

Where an attorney was appointed to represent the state in a case, and qualified under said appointment, it was held not error of which the defendant could complain, that said attorney, at a subsequent term of the court, prosecuted the case under said appointment, without being reappointed. Marnoch v. State, 7 App. 289.

Under this article a county attorney pro tem. may be appointed. Daniels v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 215.

The county judge cannot appoint a county attorney pro tem. in a county in which there was no resident district attorney or county attorney, and an information filed by such is void. Moore v. State, 56 App. 300, 119 S. W. 553.

Where all the papers in a prosecution had been filed by the county attorney, but the case was called to the bar without the attorney being present, it was held the defendant did not have the right to appoint an attorney to prosecute. Younger v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1039.

Authority and powers.—Attorneys appointed under this article are qualified to draft and present indictments to the grand jury. State v. Johnson, 12 Tex. 291; State v. Gonzales, 26 Tex. 197.

Status of the person acting as district attorney cannot be questioned by motion to quash indictment. State v. Gonzales, 26 Tex. 197. See Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.
An attorney pro tem. appointed by the court has all the powers and duties of the regular prosecuting attorney. State v. Lackey, 35 Tex. 257.

Assistant district attorneys.—See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 342-344, 347.

A judge cannot appoint an assistant district attorney, and if he undertakes to do so the person so appointed is without official character as a prosecutor. Locklin v. State (Cr. App.) 73 S. W. 309.

—District and county attorneys shall, when required by the attorney general, report to him at such time, and in accordance with such forms, as he may direct, such information as he may desire in relation to criminal matters and the interests of the state, in their districts and counties.

Art. 40. [40] Shall not be of counsel adverse to the state.—District and county attorneys shall not be of counsel adversely to the state in any case, in any court, nor shall they, after they cease to be such officers, be of counsel adversely to the state in any case in which they have been of counsel for the state. [O. C. 30.]

Utsman v. State, 32 App. 426, 24 S. W. 412.

Art. 40a. County Attorney of Jefferson County.—The County Attorney of Jefferson County shall represent the State in all prosecutions pending in said County Court of Jefferson County at Law, and shall be entitled to the same fees as now prescribed by law for such prosecutions. [Act 1915, p. 52, ch. 29, § 6.]

3. MAGISTRATES

Art. 41. [41] Who are magistrates.—Either of the following officers is a "magistrate" within the meaning of this Code: The judges of the supreme court, the judges of the courts of appeals, the judges of the district court, the county judges of the county, the county commissioners, the justices of the peace, the mayor or recorder of an incorporated city or town. [O. C. 52.]

Justices of the Peace.—When a justice holds an examining trial, he sits as a magistrate and not as a justice of the peace, and his powers and jurisdiction are those of a magistrate and not those of a justice of the peace. Brown v. State, 55 App. 772, 118 S. W. 142; Hart v. State, 15 App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188.

Art. 42. [42] Duty of magistrates.—It is the duty of every magistrate to preserve the peace within his jurisdiction by the use of all lawful means; to issue all process intended to aid in preventing and suppressing crime; to cause the arrest of offenders, by the use of lawful means, in order that they may be brought to punishment. [O. C., 32.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 42, 297, 351, 432, 992, 1093 and 1094, and post, art. 61, and title 3, chapters 2, 3 and 4.

Duties and powers.—This article means that the magistrate is authorized and enjoined to use all lawful means to enforce the criminal laws, and that he shall diligently employ and adopt the methods which the law gives to accomplish the result named in the article. Ex parte Muckenfuss, 52 App. 467, 107 S. W. 1132.

4. PEACE OFFICERS

Art. 43. [43] Who are peace officers.—The following are "peace officers": The sheriff and his deputies, constable, the marshal, constable or policeman of an incorporated town or city, and any private person specially appointed to execute criminal process. [O. C. 53.]

Post, arts. 137, 278, 279; Pen. Code, art. 478, and notes.

Who are peace officers.—A private person who undertakes to execute process. Post, arts. 278, 279.

A special constable. Post, art. 146.

Art. 43

INTRODUCTORY

Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286; Ex parte Preston, 72 App. 77, 161 S. W. 115.

A de facto officer is one who has the reputation of being the officer, and yet is not held in point of law; in other words, the officer to whom the facts under color of a known and valid appointment, but has failed to conform to some precedent requirement, as to take the oath, give a bond, or the like. Weatherford v. State, 51 App. 530, 21 S. W. 261, 37 Am. St. Rep. 828.

A municipal officer, known to be such, has authority to prevent violations of law committed in his presence, and it is his duty to arrest parties guilty of such violations. He has authority, and it is his duty if necessary, to summon others to aid and assist him in arresting the offender. And a party thus summoned to aid and assist the officer is justifiable in doing so, and cannot be held to act at his own peril because of the defective or nonrecord of the officer's right or title to his office. Weatherford v. State, 51 App. 530, 21 S. W. 261, 37 Am. St. Rep. 828.

One who has received an appointment to an office, but has not taken the oath nor filed his appointment for record, is a de facto officer. Brown v. State, 42 App. 417, 60 S. W. 549, 96 Am. St. Rep. 896.

Who are not—Deputy marshal of incorporated city or town, unless made so by the charter. Alford v. State, 8 App. 545.

A quorum sufficient of the grand jury. Alford v. State, 8 App. 545.

Art. 44. [44] Duties and powers of peace officers.—It is the duty of every peace officer to preserve and maintain his jurisdiction. To effect this purpose, he shall use all lawful means. He shall, in every case where he is authorized by the provisions of this Code, interfere without warrant to prevent or suppress crime. He shall execute all lawful process issued to him by any magistrate or court. He shall give notice to some magistrate of all offenses committed within his jurisdiction, where he has good reason to believe there has been a violation of the penal law. He shall arrest offenders without warrant in every case where he is authorized by law, in order that they may be taken before the proper magistrate or court and be brought to punishment. [O. C. 34.]

As to special duties imposed by statutes, see Pen. Code, arts. 463, 473, and 584, and post, arts. 117-118, 278, 578.

A peace officer arresting under a warrant cannot take bail but must take the prisoner before the magistrate named in the warrant. Short v. State, 16 App. 44.

A recognized de facto officer has authority, and it is his duty to prevent violations of law in his presence. Weatherford v. State, 51 App. 530, 21 S. W. 251, 37 Am. St. Rep. 828.

It is the purpose of the law that peace officers especially shall do everything necessary to prevent, suppress, and punish crime. Ex parte Preston, 72 App. 77, 161 S. W. 115.

Where a company of conspirators organized in Texas to invade Mexico, the sheriff of the county in which the camp was located was justified in investigating the organization, though no complaints had been filed nor warrants of arrest issued. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

Art. 45. [45] May summon aid when resisted.—Whenever a peace officer meets with resistance in discharging any duty imposed upon him by law, he shall summon a sufficient number of citizens of his county to overcome the resistance; and all persons summoned are bound to obey; and, if they refuse, are guilty of the offense prescribed in article 229 of the Penal Code. [O. C. 44.]

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7135; Pen. Code, art. 351; post, arts. 139–144.

Authority of officer.—One acting as possse comitatus, summoned by a de facto officer, does not do so at his own peril because of any irregularity in the officer's status as such. Weatherford v. State, 31 App. 530, 21 S. W. 251, 37 Am. St. Rep. 823.

One who participates in making an arrest in good faith and merely in response to the command of an officer is not liable in damages therefor, although it may ultimately appear that the officer had no right to make the arrest. Presley v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 145 S. W. 669.

Art. 46. [46] Person refusing to obey liable to prosecution.—The peace officer who has summoned any person to assist him in performing any duty shall report such person, if he refuse to obey, to the district or county attorney of the proper district or county, in order that he may be prosecuted for the offense. [O. C. 45.]

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7135; Pen. Code, art. 351.

Art. 47. [47] Officer neglecting to execute process may be fined for contempt.—If any sheriff or other officer shall wilfully refuse or fail from neglect to execute any summons, subpœna or attachment for a witness, or any other legal process which it is made his duty by law to execute, he shall be liable to a fine for contempt not less than ten nor more than two hundred dollars, at the discretion of the court having cognizance of the same; and the payment of said fine shall be enforced in the same manner as fines for contempt in civil cases. [Act Feb. 11, 1860.]

Contempt.—See notes to art. 3, ante.

Proceedings under this article are in the nature of contempt proceedings. Crow v. State, 24 Tex. 12.

Art. 47a. Texas Rangers clothed with powers of peace officers.—The officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of this force [Ranger force. See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. arts. 6754–6766] shall be clothed with all the powers of peace officers, and shall aid the regular civil authorities in the execution of the laws. They shall have authority to make arrests, and to execute process in criminal cases, and in such cases they shall be governed by law regulating and defining the powers and duties of sheriffs when in discharge of similar duties; except that they shall have the power, and shall be authorized to make arrests and to execute all process in criminal cases in any county in the state. They shall, before entering on the discharge of these duties, take an oath before some authority legally authorized to administer the same, that each of them will faithfully perform his duties in accordance with law. In order to arrest and bring to justice men who have banded together for the purpose of committing robbery, or other felonies, and to prevent the execution of the laws, the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of said force may accept the services of such citizens as shall volunteer to aid them; but while so engaged such citizens shall not receive pay from the state for such services. [Act 1901, p. 41, § 11.]

Explanatory.—The above article and art. 47b were omitted from the revised Pen. Code. As they relate directly to the administration of the criminal laws, and, in view of the decision in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 626, they are included in this compilation.

Art. 47b. In case of arrest to convey prisoner to county jail.—When said force, or any member or members thereof, shall arrest any person charged with the commission of a criminal offense, they shall forthwith convey said person to the county where he or they stand charged with the commission of an offense, and shall deliver him or them to the proper officer, taking his receipt therefor, and all necessary expenses thus incurred will be paid by the state. [Id. sec. 12.]

See note under art. 47a.

5. Sheriffs

Art. 48. [48] Shall be conservator of the peace and arrest offenders.—Each sheriff shall be a conservator of the peace in his county, and shall arrest all offenders against the laws of the state, in his view or hearing; and take them before the proper court for examination or trial. He shall quell and suppress all assaults and batteries, affrays, insurrections and unlawful assemblies. He shall apprehend and commit to jail all felons and other offenders, until an examination or trial can be had. [Act May 12, 1846, p. 265; P. D. 5115.]

Art. 49. [49] Keeper of jail.—Each sheriff is the keeper of the jail of his county, and responsible for the safe keeping of all prisoners committed to his custody. [O. C. 37.]

See post, art. 313; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, title 74; Gordon v. State, 2 App. 154.

Art. 50. [50] Shall place in jail every person committed by lawful authority.—When a prisoner is committed to jail by lawful warrant from a magistrate or court, he shall be placed in jail by the sheriff; and it is a violation of duty on the part of any sheriff to permit a defendant so committed to remain out of jail, except that he may, when a defendant is committed for want of bail, or when he arrests after indictment or information in a bailable case, give the person arrested a reasonable time to procure bail; but, in the meanwhile he shall so guard the accused as to prevent escape. [O. C. 38.]

Escape.—See Pen. Code, arts. 320-351; post, art. 909.

One committed to jail till the fine and costs are paid, must be confined within the jail walls and the sheriff is liable for an escape if he permits the prisoner to go at large. Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400.

Where one is committed to the custody of the sheriff under a judgment imposing imprisonment in jail, and the sheriff allows the prisoner to go at large under an agreement to serve out his imprisonment as soon as he got well, the sheriff could rearrest the prisoner, and confine him in jail for the term of his sentence, though the time for which he should have been imprisoned had already elapsed; since, the agreement with the sheriff being void, he would be treated for such time as a prisoner at large without authority. Ex parte Wyatt, 29 App. 398, 16 S. W. 301.

Art. 51. [51] Shall notify district and county attorneys of prisoners, etc.—The sheriff shall, at each term of the district or county court, give notice to the district or county attorney as to all prisoners in his custody, and of the authority under which he detains them. [O. C. 39.]

Art. 52. [52] May appoint a jailer, who shall be responsible.—The sheriff may appoint a jailer to take charge of the jail, and supply the wants of those therein confined; and the person so appointed is responsible for the safety of the prisoners, and liable to punishment as provided by law for negligently or willfully permitting a rescue or escape. But the sheriff shall, in all cases, exercise a supervision and control over the jail. [O. C. 40.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 320-351 and notes.

Art. 53. [53] May rent room and employ guard, when.—When there is no jail in a county, the sheriff may rent a suitable house and employ guards, all of which expenses shall be paid by the proper county. [O. C. 43.]

See post, art. 313; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7127; McDade v. Waller County, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. §§ 110, 111.

Art. 54. [54] Deputy may perform duties of sheriff.—Whenever a duty is imposed by this Code upon the sheriff, the same duty may lawfully be performed by his deputy; and when there is no sheriff in a county, the duties of that office, as to all proceedings under the criminal law, devolve upon the officer who, under the law, is empowered to discharge the duties of sheriff, in case of vacancy in the office. [O. C. 46.]

Appointment.—A deputy sheriff, who was appointed by the sheriff in November, 1908, but was not reappointed upon the re-election of the sheriff in November, 1908, could not lawfully act as deputy sheriff after the expiration of the earlier term of the sheriff. Trinkle v. State, 59 App. 257, 127 S. W. 1060.

Authority and powers.—A deputy can make the affidavit provided for in acts 1891, pp. 135, 136, authorizing the sheriff to receive costs for conveying attached witnesses from one county to another. Shely v. State, 55 App. 190, 32 S. W. 901.

Liability for acts of deputy.—See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7126, and notes.

6. CLERKS OF THE DISTRICT AND COUNTY COURTS

Art. 55. [55] Shall file all papers, issue process, etc.—It is the duty of every clerk of the district or county court to receive and file all papers in respect to criminal proceedings, to issue all process in such cases, and to perform all other duties imposed upon them by this Code or the penal laws of this state, and a willful failure to perform any such duties renders them liable to prosecution for an offense, in accordance with the provisions of the Penal Code. [O. C. 47.]

Pen. Code, arts. 430 and 432.

Art. 56. [56] Power of deputy clerks.—Whenever a duty is imposed upon the clerk of the district or county court the same may be lawfully performed by his deputy. [O. C. 48.]

Ante, art. 29.

Art. 57. [57] Shall report to attorney general.—The clerks of the district and county courts shall, when required by the attorney general, report to him at such times, and in accordance with such forms as he may direct, such information in relation to criminal matters as may be shown by the records in their respective offices.

CHAPTER THREE CONTAINING DEFINITIONS

Art. 58. Words and phrases—how understood. [58] All words and phrases used in this Code are to be taken and understood in their usual acceptation in common language, except where their meaning is particularly defined by law. [O. C. 49.]

Art. 59. Same subject. The words and terms made use of in this Code, unless herein specially excepted, have the meaning which is given to them in the Penal Code, and are to be construed and interpreted as therein declared. [O. C. 50.]

Art. 60. [60] Criminal action, how prosecuted.—A criminal action is prosecuted in the name of the state of Texas against the person accused, and is conducted by some officer or person acting under the authority of the state, in accordance with its laws. [O. C. 51.]

Art. 61. [61] "Officers" includes what.—The general term "officers" includes both magistrates and peace officers. [O. C. 54.]

See ante, arts. 41-47.

It includes all persons legally authorized to perform public duties. Sauner v. State, 2 App. 458.

Art. 62. [62] "Examining court" defined.—When the magistrate sits for the purpose of inquiring into a criminal accusation against any person, this is called an "examining court." [O. C. 55.]

Jurisdiction.—When a justice of the peace sits as an examining court he has jurisdiction coextensive with his county. Hart v. State, 15 App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188.

TITLE 2

OF THE JURISDICTION OF COURTS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Chap. 1. What courts have criminal jurisdiction.
1. Of the court of criminal appeals (and the supreme court.)
2. Of the district courts.

Chap. 3. Criminal district courts.
3a. Dallas county.
3b. Harris county.
3c. Travis and Williamson counties.
4. Of county courts.
5. Of justices' and other inferior courts.

CHAPTER ONE

WHAT COURTS HAVE CRIMINAL JURISDICTION

Article 63. [63] What courts have criminal jurisdiction.—The following courts have jurisdiction in criminal actions: (1) The court of criminal appeals. (2) The district courts, and the criminal district courts of Galveston and Harris and Dallas counties. (3) The county courts. (4) The justice courts and the mayor's and other courts of incorporated cities and towns; provided, that when two or more courts have concurrent jurisdiction of any offense against the penal laws of this state, the court in which an indictment or a complaint shall first be filed shall retain jurisdiction of said offense to the exclusion of all other courts. [Const., art. 5, § 6; O. C. 57; amended Act 1903, p. 194.]

Explanatory.—The part of this article enumerating the courts possessing criminal jurisdiction has been superseded by later acts creating special courts. See art. 97a, post, et seq. See, also, Const. art. 5, § 1.

Necessity of jurisdiction.—In order to sustain a conviction, the court must have jurisdiction of the person of accused, of the subject-matter, and also jurisdiction to render the particular Judgment. Emsery v. State, 57 App. 422, 123 S. W. 133, 136 Am. St. Rep. 288.

Concurrent jurisdiction.—Under this article as amended the authorities of one county cannot validly agree to relieve from prosecution one giving testimony before a grand jury concerning an offense for which he has been indicted in another county. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 380.

Under this article, jurisdiction attaches in the county in which prosecution is first begun and the defendant is arrested, and hence a record failing to show that the county court had ever obtained jurisdiction of defendant by arrest or otherwise does not sustain a plea of prior jurisdiction, exclusive of that of the district court. Pittcock v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 971.

A defendant in the district court, in order to raise the question of the county court's prior jurisdiction, should do so by plea to the jurisdiction or by setting up the fact that he had been previously charged with the offense in another court having jurisdiction. Pittcock v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 971.

Corporation courts.—See art. 109b, and notes.

Crimes by militiamen.—Where a member of the National Guard, while on duty in time of peace, committed a capital offense by killing a citizen who insisted on passing a military line, the courts of the state had jurisdiction to try the soldier therefor, both under authority conferred by Acts 29th Leg. c. 104, § 103, art. 39 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5889), and independent thereof; the state courts having first obtained jurisdiction before a military investigation was begun. Manley v. State, 62 App. 392, 137 S. W. 1137; 1d. (Cr. App.) 194 S. W. 1908.

Court of criminal appeals.—The effect of the act of the twenty-second legislature, special session (chapter 16), is to repeal subdivision 1 of article 61, designating the appellate criminal court as the “court of appeals,” and to substitute for that designation the “court of criminal appeals.” Cummings v. State, 31 App. 406, 20 S. W. 766; Neubauer v. State, 31 App. 613, 21 S. W. 365.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has only such powers as are conferred on it by the Constitution and statutes. Ex parte Firmin, 69 App. 222, 132 S. W. 1116.

Particular courts.—As to the criminal district court of Galveston and Harris counties, see Constitution, art. 5, sec. 1, and post, art. 91. As to the criminal district court of Dallas county, see Acts of 1895, page 118, and post, art. 91.

The Act of 34th Leg. c. 11, p. 18, creating the “Texarkana Civil and Criminal Court” was unconstitutional. Whitener v. W. B. Belknap & Co., 89 Tex. 273, 34 S. W. 594.

CHAPTER TWO

OF THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS [AND THE SUPREME COURT]

Art. 64. Court to consist of three judges; their qualifications and salaries.

Art. 65. Election of judges; term of office.

Art. 66. Classification of judges.

Art. 67. Vacancies, how filled.

Art. 68. Appellate jurisdiction described.

Art. 69. Power to issue writs.

Art. 70. Power to ascertain matters of fact.

Art. 71. Presiding judge, how chosen; process, etc.

Art. 72. When judge is disqualified.

Art. 73. Terms of court, where held.

Art. 74. Appeals returnable.

Art. 75. Clerks to be appointed.

Art. 76. Oath and bond of clerks.

Art. 77. Duties of clerks.

Art. 78. Deputy clerks.

Art. 79. Seal of the court.

Art. 80. Court reporter; salary, etc.

Art. 81. Reporter to return opinions to the clerk.

Art. 82. Transferring cases.

Art. 83. Mandate of court; how directed.

Art. 84. Writ of habeas corpus, when to issue.

Art. 85. Supreme court or any one of the justices may issue writ.

Art. 86. Appellate jurisdiction prescribed.

Art. 87. Preceding article construed.

Article 64. [64] Court to consist of three judges, their qualifications, salaries.—The court of criminal appeals shall consist of three judges, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of two judges shall be necessary to a decision of said court. Said judges shall have the same qualifications and receive the same salaries as judges of the supreme court. [Act 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16.]

Quorum.—The question of the number of judges necessary to authorize the transaction of business by a court is a general rule to be determined from the Constitution or statutory provisions creating and regulating courts, and as a general rule a majority of the members of a court is a “quorum” for the transaction of business and the decision of cases. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

In the absence of a quorum, or the number required by law to hold court, a judgment rendered by the remaining judges is a nullity. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

— Disqualification of judge affecting.—As a rule, the death or disqualification or absence of a judge does not deprive the remaining judges of authority to hold court and transact its business, provided the remaining number is not reduced below that legally required for the transaction of legal business. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

Under Const. art. 5, § 11, providing that when the Supreme Court, Court of Criminal Appeals, Court of Civil Appeals, or any member of either, shall be disqualified to hear any case, the same shall be certified to the Governor, who shall commission the requisite number of persons for the determination of the case, etc., the disqualification of one of the judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals does not require the appointment of a special judge; but the remaining judges who are qualified, being a quorum, may determine the case. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

Art. 65. [65] Election of judges; term of office.—The judges of said court shall be elected by the qualified voters of the state at a general election, and shall hold their offices for a term of six years. [Id.]

Art. 66. [66] Classification of judges.—At the first session of said court after the first election of the judges thereof under this act, the terms of office of said judges shall be divided into three classes, and the justices thereof shall draw for the different classes. The judge who shall draw class number one shall hold his office two years from the date of his election and until the election and qualification of his successor; the judge drawing class number two shall hold his office for four years from the date of his election and until the election and qualification of his successor; and the judge who may draw class number three shall hold his office six years from the date of his election and until the election and qualification of his successor; and thereafter each of the judges of said court shall hold his office for six years, as provided in the constitution of this state. [Id.]
Art. 67. [67] Vacancies, how filled.—In a case of a vacancy in the office of a judge of said court, the governor shall fill the vacancy by appointment for the unexpired term. The judges of the court of appeals who may be in office at the time when this law takes effect shall continue in office as judges of the court of criminal appeals until the expiration of their term of office. [Id.]

Art. 68. [68] Appellate jurisdiction.—Said court shall have appellate jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of the state in all criminal cases of whatever grade, with such exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. [Id.]

Procedure on appeals.—See post, title 18, arts. 882-889, notes.

Section 2.—Where right of possession of a child is in issue in habeas corpus proceedings the case is a civil and not a criminal case, and the criminal court of appeals has no jurisdiction. Ex parte Calvin, 49 App. 54, 48 S. W. 513; Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 243, 28 S. W. 251; Telschek v. Fritsch, 38 App. 44, 40 S. W. 585; Ex parte Reed, 34 App. 9, 28 S. W. 639; Ex parte Berry, 34 App. 36, 28 S. W. 806.

When the constitution grants jurisdiction, “with such exceptions and under such regulations as the legislature may prescribe,” affirmative legislation must be construed as a regulation prohibiting the exercise of powers other than those described. State v. Daugherty, 5 Tex. 1.

Though scire facias proceedings are criminal in their nature so as to give the Court of Criminal Appeals jurisdiction over them, they may be brought to that court by writ of error. Hart v. State, 13 App. 665; Houston v. State, 13 App. 538.

A record consisting of an agreed statement of certain facts certified to the Court of Criminal Appeals for an opinion on a certain question thereby raised, confers no jurisdiction on that court. Ex parte Jones, 34 App. 314, 30 S. W. 366.

Writs of criminal appeals, having no appellate jurisdiction save in criminal causes (Const. art. 5, § 5), has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment rendered on a motion by a district attorney, against a sheriff and the sureties on his bond, to require the payment to a certain county of money collected by the sheriff for the collection to satisfy a forfeited recognizance, and paid by him to another county. Russell v. State, 37 App. 503, 36 S. W. 1070.

The court of criminal appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from denial of mandamus to compel a county attorney to institute a prosecution. Murphy v. Summers, 54 App. 609, 112 S. W. 1070.

An appeal in a scire facias case allowed to the court of Civil Appeals is insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Criminal Appeals. Thomas v. State, 56 App. 246, 119 S. W. 846.

The Court of Criminal Appeals is a court of final jurisdiction in matters in which it has any jurisdiction, and from its action no appeal will lie. Ex parte Mussett, 72 App. 467, 162 S. W. 846.

An appeal from a judgment forfeiting a bail bond, an appeal bond which recited that notice of appeal was given to the “Supreme Criminal Court of Appeals,” and was conditioned for the payment of costs in the “Supreme Criminal Court of the State of Texas,” was insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Criminal Appeals, and the appeal will be dismissed. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1164.

Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 1625, provides that the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person is restrained by virtue of any order or commitment of a court or judge, on account of the violation of any order, judgment, or decree theretofore made in any civil cause, and shall have power, pending the hearing of the application, to admit to bail any person to whom the writ may be granted. Held, that where a relator was committed by a notary public for refusal to answer interrogatories pursuant to a commission to perpetuate testimony in a civil case, and a writ of habeas corpus was dismissed by the district judge, and the relator remanded, an appeal from such order lay to the Supreme Court, and not to the Court of Criminal Appeals. Cummings, Ex parte (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 153.

Jurisdiction of lower court.—If the lower court had no jurisdiction of the case, the appellate court can acquire none by appeal, and will dismiss appeal. Lasher v. State, 39 App. 387, 17 S. W. 1064, 28 Am. St. Rep. 922.

Final judgment.—See notes under art. 852, post.

Necessity of sentence.—See notes under art. 856, post.

Necessity of notice of appeal.—See notes under art. 915, post.

State decree.—The decision of the court of criminal appeals that a city cannot enact a valid ordinance punishing offense punishable under a general law will be followed by the Court of Civil Appeals. Robinson v. City of Galveston, 51 Civ. App. 293, 111 S. W. 1072.

Where the court of criminal appeals declared the local option election in certain districts void and the state and county accepted the decision and issued licenses, the decision is conclusive on the civil courts. State v. Schwarz, 103 Tex. 119, 124 S. W. 429.
JURISDICTION OF COURTS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS (Title 2)

Where an appellate court has held for a number of years to a given construction of a statute, it will follow such construction, and any change must be made by the legislature. State v. Purvis, 82 S. W. 488, 489. The Supreme Court will generally follow the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeals upon questions involving penal laws. State v. Savage, 105 Tex. 467, 151 S. W. 530.

While the construction of the civil statutes by the Supreme Court is final and will be followed by the Court of Criminal Appeals, that court, in construing the criminal statutes and enforcing the criminal laws, must follow its own judgment, though contrary to the decisions of the Supreme Court. Barnes v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 548, L. R. A. 1915 C. 101.

Art. 69. Power to issue writs.—Said court and the judges thereof shall have the power to issue the writ of habeas corpus, and, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, issue such writs as may be necessary to enforce its own jurisdiction. [Id.]

Power to issue writ of habeas corpus, see art. 54, post.

3. — Necessity of application to lower court. 7. Appeal.

1. Habeas Corpus—Power in general.—The court of criminal appeals has ample authority to issue the writ of habeas corpus in almost any conceivable case. Ex parte Degener, 20 App. 662; 17 S. W. 1111; Ex parte Keen, 35 App. 631, 34 S. W. 625; Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 634, 34 S. W. 962.

While clothed with the power, this court will not, except in extraordinary cases, grant a writ of habeas corpus. Ex parte Lambert, 34 App. 435, 36 S. W. 81.

Court of criminal appeals can issue an original writ of habeas corpus but will only do so in extraordinary cases, as where the proceeding is void and an appeal will not be an adequate remedy. Ex parte Patterson, 42 App. 256, 58 S. W. 1912, 51 L. R. A. 664. See Ex parte Japan, 38 App. 483, 33 S. W. 43.

The court of criminal appeals has jurisdiction to grant writs of habeas corpus when one is held without lawful authority. Ex parte Gould, 60 App. 443, 132 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831.

2. — Grounds for writ and allowance thereof.—See notes under arts. 160–224, post.

3. — Necessity of application to lower court.—When no valid reason is shown for failing to apply to the proper local court the writ will be refused. Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 129; Ex parte Gregory, 20 App. 210, 54 Am. Rep. 516.

4. — Custody of infants.—Appellate jurisdiction. See notes under article 68, ante.

The court of criminal appeals has no jurisdiction of a writ of habeas corpus to recover possession of relator’s minor child. Ex parte Reed, 34 App. 9, 28 S. W. 830; Ex parte Berry, 34 App. 36, 28 S. W. 806.

5. Delinquent children.—Proceedings for the commitment of one charged as a juvenile delinquent, under Acts 33d Leg. c. 112, amending article 1205, are “criminal” in their nature, so that the court of Criminal Appeals held jurisdiction of an application by the alleged delinquent for habeas corpus. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 219.

6. — Contempt proceedings.—Court of criminal appeals has jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus in contempt proceedings in district court in civil cases. Ex parte Warfield, 40 App. 489, 50 S. W. 933, 76 Am. St. Rep. 724.

Under the constitutional provision giving the Court of Criminal Appeals jurisdiction only in criminal cases, it has no jurisdiction of an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person committed to jail for violating a temporary injunction, in an action brought by the county attorney to enjoin him and other proprietors of theaters and moving picture shows from giving shows therein on Sunday, and charging a fee for admission thereto, though the act sought to be enjoined is a violation of Penal Code 1911, art. 302, since the action was a civil case, especially in view of Vernon’s Statutes Civ. St. 1914, art. 1539, authorizing the Supreme Court, or any justice thereof to issue writs of habeas corpus where any person is restrained in his liberty by virtue of any order, process, or commitment issued by any court or judge on account of the violation of any order, judgment, or decree made in any civil cause. Ex parte Zuccaro, 72 App. 214, 102 S. W. 844.

Court, art. 6, §§ 5, 6, as amended in 1911, authorized the Supreme Court to issue writs of habeas corpus, which authority therefore had been in this court, and took away the civil jurisdiction of this court, and Vernon’s Statutes Civ. St. 1914, art. 1529, gave the Supreme Court power to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person is restrained of his liberty by virtue of any process, etc., issued by any court on account of any order or decree in any “civil suit.” Relator applied originally to this court for habeas corpus to obtain discharge on final hearing upon an injunction against the opening of a theater or moving picture show on Sunday, after order not to be held in contempt of court for violation of the injunction. Held, that after such amendments it was not contemplated that this court should entertain jurisdiction in any civil suit that such suit brought in a “civil suit,” and that, in view of the Supreme Court’s jurisdiction, which would be more extensive than that of this court and final, the application would be refused. Ex parte Mussett, 72 App. 457, 162 S. W. 845.
7. — Appeal.—See notes under art. 950.

8. Mandamus.—The court of criminal appeals can issue mandamus only to enforce its own jurisdiction, it cannot issue it to compel the district court to try the question of insufficiency after conviction. Ex parte Quesada, 34 App. 116, 29 S. W. 473.

Under Const. art. 5, § 6, giving the Court of Criminal Appeals appellate jurisdiction in all criminal cases, except as otherwise provided, and giving it power to issue such writs as may be necessary to enforce its own jurisdiction, that court has no power to issue writs of mandamus to compel district judges to do or not to do any particular act with reference to cases appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeals. Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 225, 131 S. W. 1186.

9. Prohibition.—It is only in cases in which the court has no jurisdiction, or is exceeding its jurisdiction, that the writ of prohibition will lie, and it will not lie where the inferior court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the defendant is duly served with process or voluntarily appears. State ex rel. Bergeron v. Travis County Court (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 365.

Where defendant, prosecuted in the corporation court, did not there contend that the article under which he was prosecuted had been repealed so as to give to that court, having jurisdiction, opportunity to rule thereon, and after sentence and appeal to the county court did not make such contention therein, but made it for the first time by petition to the Court of Criminal Appeals for prohibition against the county court, the writ would not issue, defendant not having objected to the jurisdiction of the court at the outset. State ex rel. Bergeron v. Travis County Court (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 365.

10. Certiorari.—A writ of certiorari cannot be granted at all in vacation, nor in term time except upon order of the court or by a majority of the members there-at. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 959.

At common law, in the absence of a right of appeal, defendant on conviction might present to the appellate court a petition pointing out specifically the matters in which he erred to his prejudice. If this court is to be a court of review, it must surrender power of this court saw error or probable injury to accused or that an improper verdict had been rendered, it might grant a writ of certiorari commanding that the entire record be sent up for review; but this method of review was not granted as a matter of right. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Under Const. art. 5, § 5, the Court of Criminal Appeals has power only to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and no other writ, in cases where the court has not obtained jurisdiction, and hence where it has no such jurisdiction of the case by reason of a failure to give notice of appeal, it has no power to review a case under the common-law writ of certiorari. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Art. 70. [70] Power to ascertain facts.—Said court shall have power, upon affidavit or otherwise, to ascertain such matters of fact as may be necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction. [Id.]

Practice in general.—See Vance v. State, 34 App. 295, 30 S. W. 792, in extenso to the effect that the court of criminal appeals is authorized to resort to such methods it may deem necessary, independent of the record on appeal, to ascertain such matters of fact as may be necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction. And see Ex parte Cole, 14 App. 378; Craddock v. State, 15 App. 641.

Amount in controversy.—The issue made by the state by its motion for rehearing and certiorari, which alleges that the prosecution was begun in justice's court wherein a conviction was had, and that thereafter the case was appealed to the county court, where accused was again convicted, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $5, is jurisdictional, and the court has power to ascertain and determine the facts. May v. State, 59 App. 141, 137 S. W. 832.

Habeas corpus.—In determining, in original proceedings in habeas corpus in the Court of Criminal Appeals, the power of a court to fine for contempt, the court may go behind the judgment and ascertain the facts. Ex parte Coffee, 72 App. 209, 181 S. W. 975.

Art. 71. [71] Presiding judge; process, how tested.—The judges of said court shall choose a presiding judge for said court from their number at such times as they shall think proper, and all writs and process issuing from said court shall bear test in the name of said presiding judge and the seal of the court. [Id.]

Art. 72. [72] When judge is disqualified.—When said court or any member thereof shall be disqualified, under the constitution and laws of this state, to hear and determine any case or cases in said court, the same shall be certified to the governor of the state, who shall immediately commission the requisite number of persons learned in the law for the trial and determination of such cause or causes. [Id.]

Art. 73. [73] Term of court.—Said court shall hold one term each year at the city of Austin, commencing on the first Monday in October of each year, and shall continue until the last Saturday in June next succeeding; and all cases pending shall be returnable to said court at Austin; and appeals in criminal cases shall be filed with the clerk of said court at Austin upon the same conditions and same rules as now obtain. [Id., amended Act 1909, p. 51.]

Art. 74. [74] Appeals.—Appeals from the several counties shall be returnable to said court, and shall be determined by said court, under the rules thereof. [Act 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16.]

Art. 75. [75] Clerk to be appointed.—Said court shall appoint a clerk, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the court for good cause entered of record in the minutes of said court.

Art. 76. [76] Oath and bond of clerk.—Said clerk shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed by the constitution, and shall give the same bond, to be approved by the court of criminal appeals, as is now or may be hereafter required of the clerk of the supreme court. [Id.]

Art. 77. [77] Duties of clerk.—Said clerk shall perform as clerk of the court of criminal appeals the like duties as are now or may hereafter be required by law of the clerk of the supreme court, and shall be subject to the same liabilities as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for the clerk of the supreme court. [Id.]

Art. 78. [78] Deputy clerk.—Said clerk may appoint a deputy, who shall perform all the duties of said clerk, and who shall be responsible to said clerk for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. [Id.]

Art. 79. [79] Seal of court.—It shall be the duty of the court of criminal appeals to procure a seal for said court; said seal to have a star with five points, with the words “Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas” engraved on it. [Id.]

Art. 80. [80] Court reporter and reports.—Said court is hereby authorized and required to appoint a reporter of its decisions as may be required by law to be published; said reporter may be removed by the court for inefficiency or neglect of duty; said reporter shall receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars, payable monthly, upon the certificate of the presiding judge of said court. The volumes of the decisions of said court shall be styled “Texas Criminal Reports,” and shall be numbered in continuation of the present number of the court of appeals reports. Said volume shall be printed and disposed of as is now or may hereafter be provided by law for the printing and distribution of the reports of the supreme court. [Id.]

Art. 81. [81] Reporter to return opinions.—As soon as the opinions are recorded, the originals, together with the records and papers in each case to be reported, shall be delivered to the reporter by the clerk of said court, who shall take the reporter's receipt for the same; but the reporter shall return to said clerk the said opinions, records and papers when he shall have finished using them. [Id.]

Art. 82. [82] Transfer of cases.—All criminal cases pending on appeal when this act takes effect shall be transferred to the court of criminal appeals, to be determined by said court as provided by law. [Id.]

Art. 83. [83] Mandate.—When the court from which an appeal has been, or may hereafter be, taken, has been or shall be deprived of jurisdiction over any case pending such appeal; and when such case shall have been, or may hereafter be, determined by the court of criminal appeals, the mandate of said court of criminal appeals shall be directed to the court to which jurisdiction has been, or may hereafter be, given over such case. [Id.]

In general.—See Miller v. State, 34 App. 392, 30 S. W. 809.

Art. 84. [84] Writ of habeas corpus.—The court of criminal appeals, or either of the judges thereof, shall have original jurisdiction to inquire into the cause of the detention of persons imprisoned or detained in custody, and for this purpose may issue the writ of habeas corpus, and upon the return thereof may remand such person to custody, admit to bail or discharge the person imprisoned or detained, as the law and the nature of the case may require. [Id.]

See art. 69, ante.

Art. 85. Supreme court or any one of the justices may issue writ.—The supreme court of Texas, or any one of the justices thereof, shall have power, either in term time or vacation, to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person is restrained in his liberty by virtue of any order, process or commitment, issued by any court or judge, on account of the violation of any order, judgment or decree, theretofore made, rendered or entered by such court or judge in any civil cause; and said supreme court, or any one of the justices thereof, shall have power, either in term time or vacation, pending the hearing of the application for such writ, to admit to bail any person to whom the writ of habeas corpus may be so granted. [Act 1905, p. 20.]

Art. 86. [85] Appellate jurisdiction.—The court of criminal appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of the state in all criminal cases of whatever grade. [Act 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16.]

See art. 68, ante.

Jurisdiction in general.—See notes under art. 65, ante.

Amount in controversy.—See notes under art. 87, post.

Art. 87. [86] Article 86 construed.—The preceding section shall not be so construed as to embrace cases which have been appealed from justices', mayors' or other inferior courts, to the county court, and in which the judgment rendered or fine imposed by the county court shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of cost. In such cases, the judgment of the county court shall be final. [Id.]

See Const., art. 5, sec. 6; post, title 10, Appeals.

Trial de novo.—Where a criminal prosecution has been appealed from an inferior court to the county court and there dismissed, the appellant may procure a further appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeals in conformity with the law; such cases not being within the statute prohibiting an appeal where the fine assessed in the county court on appeal from an inferior court is less than $100. Matula v. State, 72 App. 183, 161 S. W. 965; Pevito v. Rodgers, 82 Tex. 681; Taylor v. State, 14 App. 514.

Where accused on appeal to the county court from a conviction in the corporation court is deprived of the right to a trial de novo to which he is entitled, he may enforce such right by a further appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeals. Matula v. State, 72 App. 183, 161 S. W. 965.
CHAPTER THREE OF THE DISTRICT COURTS

Art. 88. [87] Have exclusive jurisdiction of felonies.—The district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in criminal cases of the grade of felony. [Const., art. 5, § 8.]

1. Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: “The district court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all criminal cases of the grade of felony.” [Const. art. 5, § 8 (Vernon’s Sibley’s Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. 307).]

2. Jurisdiction in general.—The validity of an appointment as district clerk can not be raised in a criminal cause against a third person, tried in the court of which he is clerk. Lopez v. State, 42 Tex. 298.

The district courts of this state alone have jurisdiction to convict of felonies, and their jurisdiction of such cases is dependent upon indictments presented by grand juries. An indictment presented by a body composed of fewer or more than twelve men is not legally presented and does not confer jurisdiction. Lott v. State, 18 App. 637.

3. Jurisdiction dependent on valid indictment.—Ante, arts. 3, 4 and notes; post, Tit. 7, c. 3 and notes.

5. Indictment charging felony and misdemeanor.—Where an indictment filed in the district court charged a felony committed in violation of Pen. Code, art. 325, relating to payment of poll taxes, it is improper to transfer it to the county court, though it also charged a misdemeanor committed in violation of article 229. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 490.

7. Extradition.—The courts of the state must take cognizance of the treaties made by the Federal government with other nations, and they cannot try one extradited from a foreign country for an offense other than the one for which he was extradited. Blanford v. State, 10 App. 627. And see Kelly v. State, 13 App. 558; Cordway v. State, 38 App. 466, 3 S. W. 675. Compare with Underwood v. State, 38 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618.

8. Forgery by nonresidents.—Title deeds affecting lands in Texas, see Pen. Code, art. 990 and notes. Where a conspiracy to forge a deed affecting title to lands within the state, was formed within the state and most of the acts in furtherance of the conspiracy were committed there, but the actual forgery was committed in another state, the state courts have jurisdiction of the offense independent of the provisions of Pen. Code, art. 990. Ex parte Rogers, 10 App. 655, 28 Am. Rep. 564; Rogers v. State, 11 App. 608.

9. Sale of liquors.—A transfer of a prosecution under an indictment returned in the district court for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory to the county court is properly denied. Lyd v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1004.

11. Injunction.—The district court has jurisdiction to issue an injunction to restrain a druggist, licensed to sell liquor on prescription, from selling liquor in violation of law. Ex parte Roper, 61 App. 68, 154 S. W. 334.

12. Venue.—See notes under arts. 234, et seq., post.

13. Change of venue.—See notes under arts. 629-628, post.

14. Transfer of causes.—See notes under art. 453, post.
15. Federal reservations.—The courts of this state have no jurisdiction over offenses committed within limits of property (territory) ceded by the provisions of title 16, of the Revised Statutes, to the United States government for forts, arsenals, etc. And moreover, our courts will take judicial cognizance of the fact of cession of such territory. Lasher v. State, 30 App. 387, 17 S. W. 1064, 28 Am. St. Rep. 922.

16. Losing control of court.—The bill of exceptions shows that the judge lost control of the trial, constituting reversible error in felony cases, it showing that during the prosecuting attorney’s opening address, in which he used fervent and violent language, the judge was in another room, talking, and could not hear what was taking place in the courtroom, and that defendant’s counsel, desiring to take an exception, had to go out for the judge, and also reciting that the judge lost control of the trial. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506. See, also, Scott v. State, 17 App. 568, 85 S. W. 1060, 123 Am. St. Rep. 717; White v. State, 61 App. 498, 135 S. W. 562.

Art. 89. [88] Shall determine grades of offenses.—Upon the trial of a felony case, whether the proof develop a felony or a misdemeanor, the court shall hear and determine the case as to any degree of offense included in the charge. [Act June 16, 1876, p. 18, § 3.]

This article is constitutional. Nance v. State, 21 App. 457, 1 S. W. 448, and cases cited. Robles v. State, 38 App. 81, 41 S. W. 620.

It is the averments of the felony alone which confer the jurisdiction. Robles v. State, 38 App. 81, 41 S. W. 620.

But when the indictment charges a felony and a separate misdemeanor in separate counts, the acquittal of the felony ends the jurisdiction of the district court. Robles v. State, 38 App. 81, 41 S. W. 620.

The indictment in one count charged burglary, and in another theft of property of the value of four dollars. Defendant was convicted under the latter count; held, the court had no jurisdiction of the offense charged in such count. Robles v. State, 38 App. 81, 41 S. W. 620.

Retrial of prosecution.—The Constitution gives the district court exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal cases of the grade of a felony, and this art. and arts. 771, 845, respectively, provide that upon the trial of a felony case, whether the proof develop a felony or misdemeanor, the court shall determine the case as to any offense included in the charge; that, where a prosecution is for an offense consisting of several degrees, the jury may find the defendant guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment; and that the effect of a new trial is to place the cause in the same position as it was before any trial was had. Held that, where accused was indicted for assault with intent to murder, the reversal on appeal of a conviction of an aggravated assault will not, in view of Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 846, providing that, where the Court of Criminal Appeals awards a new trial, the cause shall stand as it would have stood if a new trial had been granted by the court below, deprive the district court of jurisdiction to hear the case upon retrial, though the county court has original jurisdiction of misdemeanors. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 382 S. W. 912.

Conviction of offense included in charge.—See notes under art. 771, post.

Art. 90. [89] Misdemeanors involving official misconduct.—
The district court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor involving official misconduct. [Const., art. 5, § 8.]

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: “The district court shall have original jurisdiction * * * of all misdemeanors involving official misconduct” [Const. art. 5, § 8 (Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xii)].

Official misconduct.—The district court has no jurisdiction to try any indictment for misdemeanor, except one involving “official misconduct.” Cassedy v. State, 4 App. 96. Negligently permitting the escape of a prisoner in the custody of the accused as an officer, is an offense which comes within the definition of official misconduct, and is triable in the district court. Hatch v. State, 16 App. 515, overruling Watson v. State, 9 App. 212. Intentionally managing a prosecution for vagrancy so as to procure an acquittal, knowing the defendant to be guilty, constitutes official misconduct on the part of a county attorney. But it is not official misconduct for a county attorney to procure the acquittal of one accused of vagrancy, for the purpose of using him as a witness. Trigg v. State, 49 Tex. 646. See Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 6038, 6029.

“Official misconduct” which gives the district court jurisdiction is a wilful or corrupt failure or neglect to perform an official duty and does not include drunkenness in office. Craig v. State, 31 App. 29, 19 S. W. 504.

The failure of the tax assessor of a county to make a report of the fees collected by him, as required by law, is “official misconduct.” Bolton v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1197.

Transfer of causes.—See notes under art. 483, post.

Art. 91  JURISDICTION OF COURTS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS  (Title 2)

Art. 91. [Superseded. See art. 97a et seq., post.]

The act of 1870 creating the criminal district court for Galveston and Harris counties superseded the district court and deprived the district court of all criminal jurisdiction. Stubbs v. State, 39 Tex. 564; Long v. State, 1 App. 709; March v. State, 44 Tex. 64.

An appeal lies to the criminal district court in Galveston county from a conviction in a city recorder's court, though the city charter makes no provision for such appeal. Bautsch v. State, 27 App. 342, 11 S. W. 414.

The proper designation of the court is not the "criminal district court of Galveston and Harris counties" but when sitting in Galveston county it should be designated as the criminal district court of that county. Giebel v. State, 28 App. 151, 12 S. W. 591. And see Watson v. State, 5 App. 11.

An indictment for keeping a disorderly house, under Pen. Code, arts. 496, 500, is over which a justice had jurisdiction, was not a case of which the criminal district court of Galveston and Harris counties had original jurisdiction. Ex parte Smith (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 1000; Davis v. State, 52 App. 382, 23 S. W. 892.

Under that clause of the governor's proclamation convening the legislature in special session to "enact adequate laws simplifying procedure in both civil and criminal courts of the state, and amending and changing the existing laws governing court procedure," the legislature, in special session, had the power to re-arrange the terms of the criminal district court of Harris and Galveston counties. Long v. State, 58 App. 209, 127 S. W. 268, 21 Ann. Cas. 406.

Art. 92. [90] Power to issue writs of habeas corpus.—The district courts and the judges thereof shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus in felony cases, and upon the return thereof, may remand to custody, admit to bail, or discharge the person imprisoned or detained, as the law and nature of the case may require. [Const., art. 5, § 8.]

See, post, ch. 8, title 3, as to Habeas Corpus.

Explanatory.—The present constitution, in respect to the writ of habeas corpus, reads as follows: "Said court, and the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, and certiorari, and all writs necessary to enforce their jurisdiction" [Const. art. 5, § 8 (Vernon's Statutes' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xii)].

Jurisdiction.—The district court has jurisdiction to issue the writ in a felony case to any officer in any county in the state and can, in chambers, try the case in any county unless prohibited by law. Ex parte Angus, 28 App. 298, 12 S. W. 1099.

District judge.—A district judge may grant and hear a writ of habeas corpus though an indictment for the offense is pending in the county court. Ex parte Strong, 24 App. 309, 20 S. W. 666.

Custody of children.—The district court may issue the writ on the application of parents to determine the right to custody of their child. Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 245, 28 S. W. 281.

Grounds for writ and allowance thereof.—See post, artide 160, et seq.

Art. 93. Special terms of district court may be held.—Where it may become advisable, in the opinion of the judge of the district in which any county in the state of Texas may be situated, to hold a special term or terms of the district courts therein, such special term or terms may be held. [Act 1905, p. 116.]

Validity of act.—This act is a valid exercise of legislative power under Const. art. 5, § 7, which declares that the Legislature shall have power to authorize the holding of special terms of court, or the holding of more than two terms in any county for the dispatch of business. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 559.

Special term in general.—A district judge being authorized by law in case of emergency or necessity to at any time call a special term, one may not complain that he is indicted and tried at a special term, to hold which the judge recessed the regular term of the court in another county in the district. Elliott v. State, 58 App. 209, 128 S. W. 668.

After the adjournment of the regular January term of the district court which by law might have continued for eight weeks, the district judge made an order that the court convene in special session at the courthouse on a day named, which was within the eight weeks, to resume business under the regular January term for the purpose of disposing of two pending cases. At such term the court made orders changing the venue of such cases designated as having been made at the January term. The defendants in such cases filed pleas to the jurisdiction based upon such term as a special term and took a bill of exceptions restating the objections on the same grounds. Held, that the term was a "special term," and hence the orders changing the venue were not invalid on the ground that the regular term could not be reopened in that manner. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 121.
Such special term was not illegal, nor its orders invalid, because held during the time within which the regular term of the same court might have continued. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Notice.—Whatever doubt there may have been on this point previous thereto, under Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, article 1730 of which provides that a district judge may convene a special term of the district court at any time fixed by him, and section 4 of the final title of which provides that all civil statutes of a general nature in force when that revision takes effect and which are not included therein, or thereby expressly continued in force, are thereby repealed, and which nowhere requires previous notice of the time of such special terms or publication thereof, nor continues in force statutes relative to such notice or publication, such notice and publication are not required. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Validity of orders at special term.—The district judge may make any order at a special term of the district court that he can make at a regular term, and hence orders changing the venue in two cases were not invalid because made at a term called specially for such purpose, and at which no other business was transacted. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

New cases.—The district judge may call a special term for the trial of new cases. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 859.

Murder case.—The district court, complying with Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1718-1726, has authority to call a special term for the trial of a murder case. Chant v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 513.

Art. 94. How and when special terms may be convened.—The judge of the district in which a county may be situated, in which it is deemed advisable by such judge that a special term of the courts should be held, may convene such special term of the courts at any time which may be fixed by him. The said judge may appoint jury commissioners, who may select and draw grand and petit jurors in accordance with the law; said jurors may be summoned to appear before said courts at such time as may be designated by the judge thereof; provided, that, in the discretion of the judge, a grand jury need not be drawn or impaneled. [Id., p. 116.]

See notes under art. 93, ante.

Art. 95. Grand jury when selected shall discharge its duties as at a regular meeting.—The grand jury selected, as provided for in the preceding section, shall be duly impaneled and proceed to the discharge of its duties as at a regular term of the court. [Id., p. 116.]

Art. 96. Person indicted by such grand jury may be placed on trial.—Any person indicted by the grand jury impaneled at a special term of the courts may be placed upon trial at said special term. [Id., p. 116.]

Art. 97. Not to repeal provision of Revised Civil Statutes.—Nothing herein contained shall be held to repeal any part of the provisions of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas as to the terms of the district court, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the provisions of this law. [Id., p. 116.]

Terms of court.—In case of the nonappearance of the judge on the day fixed by law for the opening of the court, and in case no special judge is elected, the law commands the sheriff, or, upon his default, any constable of the county, to open and adjourn the court from day to day for three days, and at noon of the fourth day to adjourn it until its next regular term. After the court has been thus adjourned until the next term, it is not competent for the judge to re-open and hold the term which has lapsed. Garza v. State, 12 App. 261. As to terms of the district courts, see Sayles’ Civ. Stat., ch. 4, title 28. As to term in newly organized county, see Ex parte Mato, 19 App. 112.

The act of April 2, 1889, changing time of holding district court in Karnes county, notwithstanding the emergency clause, was as to the term beginning April 8, 1889, constitutional. Ex parte Murphy, 27 App. 493, 11 S. W. 487.

DALLAS COUNTY

Article 97a. Dallas criminal district court created; jurisdiction. — There is hereby created and established at the city of Dallas a criminal district court, which shall have and exercise all the criminal jurisdiction heretofore vested in and exercised by the district courts of Dallas county. All appeals from the judgments of said court shall be to the court of criminal appeals, under the same regulations as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for appeals in criminal cases from district courts. [Acts 1893, p. 118.]

See arts. 97b, 97c, conferring concurrent criminal jurisdiction on criminal district court No. 2 of Dallas county.
Explanatory.—The act, embraced in this article, and arts. 97b-97g, post. was not included in the revised Pen. Code of 1911, except in a meagre manner (arts. 63 and 91). The importance of the permanent special criminal district courts would seem to require that the acts relating to them should appear in the criminal statutes. Other acts creating special criminal district courts for a limited period have been omitted as temporary. These omitted acts are as follows: Act 1913, ch. 181 creating a special district court for the ninth judicial district, to continue in existence until Dec. 31, 1914; Act 1913, ch. 182 creating a similar court for Grayson County, to expire Dec. 1, 1914; Act 1913, S. S., ch. 25, creating such a court for El Paso County to endure until Dec. 31, 1914; and Acts 1913, S. S., ch. 34 creating a court for the fifth judicial district, which ceased to exist Jan. 1, 1915.

Constitutionality.—The provision of the act creating criminal district court No. 2 for Dallas county (Acts 32d Leg. 1st Called Sess. c. 19), authorizing transfer of causes to such court from court No. 1, is, as required by Const. art. 5, § 31, within the title, "An act to create an additional criminal district court for Dallas county:" and to "prescribe the jurisdiction": "Jurisdiction" meaning the authority of which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide cases, the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in any given case. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Authority to define jurisdiction.—The Governor's authorization to the Legislature to create an additional criminal district court for Dallas county authorized it to define the court's jurisdiction. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Art. 97b. Dallas county district courts to have no criminal jurisdiction.—The district courts of Dallas county shall not have nor exercise any criminal jurisdiction. [Id.]

Art. 97c. Judge; qualifications, election, etc.—The judge of said criminal district court shall be elected by the qualified voters of Dallas county for a term of four years, and shall hold his office until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. He shall possess the same qualifications as are required of a judge of the district court, and shall receive the same salary as is now, or may hereafter, be paid to the district judges, to be paid in like manner. He shall have and exercise all the powers and duties now or hereafter to be vested in and exercised by district judges in criminal cases. The judge of said court may exchange with any district judge, as provided by law in cases of district judges, and in case of disqualification or absence of the judge, a special judge may be selected, elected, or appointed, as provided by law in cases of district judges. [Id.]

Art. 97d. Seal of the court and its use.—Said court shall have a seal of like design as the seal now provided by law for district courts, except that the words "Criminal District Court of Dallas County" shall be engraved around the margin thereof, which seal shall be used for all the purposes for which the seals of the district courts are required to be used; and certified copies of the orders, proceedings, judgments, and other official acts of said court, under the hand of the clerk and attested by the seal of said court, shall be admissible in evidence in all the courts of this state in like manner as similar certified copies from courts of record are now or may hereafter be admissible. [Id.]

Art. 97dd. Sheriff, clerk and county attorney to serve, etc.—The sheriff, the county attorney, and the clerk of the district court of Dallas county, as heretofore provided for by law, shall be the sheriff, county attorney, and clerk, respectively, of said criminal district court, under the same rules and regulations as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for the government of sheriffs, county attorneys, and clerks in the district courts of the state; and said sheriff, county attorney, and clerk shall respectively receive such fees as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law for such officers in the district courts of the state, to be paid in the same manner. [Id.]

Amount of sheriff's fees.—The county is liable to the sheriff for only $2.00 for each day that he or his deputy may attend upon the criminal district court, though two deputies are necessary and required by the judge. Ledbetter v. Dallas County, 51 Civ. App. 110, 111 S. W. 194.
Art. 97e. Terms of the court and grand juries.—Said court shall hold four terms each year for the trial of causes and the disposition of business coming before it, one term beginning the first Monday of January, one term beginning the first Monday of April, one term beginning the first Monday of July, and one term beginning the first Monday of October. A grand jury shall be impaneled in said court for each term thereof; and jury commissioners shall be appointed for drawing jurors for said court, as is now or may hereafter be required by law in district courts, and under like rules and regulations. [Id.]

Art. 97ee. Practice in.—The trials and proceedings in said court shall be conducted according to the laws governing the pleadings, practice, and proceedings in criminal cases in the district courts. [Id.]

Art. 97f. Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County created.—That there is hereby created and established at the city of Dallas a criminal district court to be known as the "Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County," which court shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the criminal district court of Dallas county, Texas, as now given and exercised by the said criminal district court of Dallas county under the Constitution and laws of the State of Texas. [Act 1911, 1st S. S., p. 106, ch. 19, § 1.]

Art. 97ff. Same; concurrent jurisdiction with criminal district court of Dallas county; transfer of causes.—From and after the time this law shall take effect the criminal district court of Dallas county, and the criminal district court No. 2 of Dallas county shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction with each other in all felony causes and in all matters and proceedings of which the said criminal district court of Dallas county now has jurisdiction; and either of the judges of said criminal district court may in their discretion transfer any cause or causes that may at any time be pending in his court to the other criminal district court by an order or orders entered upon the minutes of his court; and where such transfer or transfers are made the clerk of such district court shall enter such cause or causes upon the docket to which such transfer or transfers are made, and, when so entered upon the docket, the judge shall try and dispose of said causes in the same manner as if such causes were originally instituted in said court. [Id., § 2.]

When court came into existence.—The court came into existence and had legal authority to acquire jurisdiction, so far as filing papers was concerned, by the 30th day of November, 1911; and hence an order made December 21, 1911, transferring an indictment and papers to that court, conferred jurisdiction, though it could not try the case until the succeeding January term. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 849.

Art. 97g. Judge, how elected; term; qualifications; powers and duties; exchange; special judge; etc.—The judge of said criminal district court No. 2 of Dallas county shall be elected by the qualified voters of Dallas county for a term of four years, and shall hold his office until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. He shall possess the same qualifications as are required of the judge of a district court, and shall receive the same salary as is now or may hereafter be paid to the district judges, to be paid in like manner. He shall have and exercise all the powers and duties now or hereafter to be vested in and exercised by district judges of the criminal district court of Dallas county. The judge of said court may exchange with any district judge, as provided by law in cases of district judges, and, in case of disqualification or absence of a judge, a special judge may be selected, elected or appointed as provided by law in cases of district judges; provided, that the Governor, by and with the consent of the Senate, if in session, shall appoint a judge of said court, who shall hold the office until the next general election, after the passage of this law, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 97gg. Seal of court, etc.—Said court shall have a seal of like design as the seal now provided by law for district courts, except that the words “Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County” shall be engraved around the margin thereof, which seal shall be used for all the purposes for which the seals of the district courts are required to be used; and certified copies of the orders, proceedings, judgments and other official acts of said court, under the hand of the clerk and attested by the seal of said court, shall be admissible in evidence in all the courts of this State in like manner as similar certified copies from courts of record are now or may hereafter be admissible. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 97h. Sheriff, county attorney, and clerk of Dallas county to act, etc.; fees.—The sheriff, county attorney and the clerk of the district court of Dallas county, as heretofore provided for by law, shall be the sheriff, county attorney and clerk, respectively, of said criminal district court under the same rules and regulations as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law for the government of sheriffs, county attorneys and clerks of the district courts of the State; and said sheriff, county attorney and clerk shall respectively receive such fees as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law for such officers in the district courts of the State to be paid in the same manner. [Id., § 5.]

Art. 97hh. Terms of court; grand jury; drawing jurors; pleading, practice, and procedure.—Said court shall hold four terms each year for the trial of causes and the disposition of business coming before it, one term beginning the first Monday of April, one term beginning the first Monday of July, one term beginning the first Monday of October, and one term beginning the first Monday of January. The grand jury shall be impaneled in said court for each term thereof unless otherwise directed by the judge of said court, and the procedure for drawing jurors for said court shall be the same as is now or may hereafter be required by law in district courts, and under the same rules and regulations. The trials and proceedings in said court shall be conducted according to the laws governing the pleadings, practice and proceedings in criminal cases in the district courts. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 97i. Apportionment.—Dallas county shall constitute the Forty-fourth Judicial District and the Sixty-eighth Judicial District, and Dallas county and Rockwall county shall constitute the Fourteenth Judicial District. The said district courts herein named shall not have nor exercise any criminal jurisdiction in Dallas county, such criminal jurisdiction having been by law exclusively vested in the Criminal District Courts for said county. But all of said three courts shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of Dallas county in all civil cases, proceedings and matters of which district courts are given jurisdiction by the Constitution and laws of the State. The said Fourteenth Judicial District Court shall have jurisdiction in Rockwall county, Texas, in all civil and criminal cases which under the Constitution and laws of this State are cognizable by district courts, and in which the jurisdiction is in Rockwall county, Texas; and all appeals in criminal cases shall be to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas under the same regulations as are now or may hereafter be provided by the laws for appeals in criminal cases in the district court. [Act 1913, p. 171, ch. 89, § 1.]
Art. 97ii. Concurrent jurisdiction of criminal district courts with county court at law; transfer of causes.—The Criminal District Court and Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County shall have and exercise original concurrent jurisdiction with each other and with the County Court of Dallas County at Law in all matters and proceedings relative to misdemeanor causes of which the County Court of Dallas County at Law now has jurisdiction and either of the judges of said Criminal District Courts and the judge of said County Court of Dallas County at Law may, in his discretion, or upon the motion of the county attorney of Dallas county, transfer by written order or orders, entered upon the minutes of said court, any misdemeanor cause or misdemeanor causes that may at any time be pending in either of said courts to either of the other of said courts, as should, in his discretion, be transferred or as may be prayed for in the motion of the county attorney. [Act 1915, p. 74, ch. 37, § 1.]

Art. 97j. Duty of county clerk on transfer of cause; costs and fees; duty of clerk of district court.—Upon the transfer of any such cause or causes from said County Court of Dallas County at Law to either of said Criminal District Courts it shall be the duty of the county clerk of Dallas County to prepare and forward with the papers in said cause or causes so transferred a bill of the cost then accrued which said cost shall follow said cause or causes, and be taxed in said cause or causes with any other cost that may accrue in said cause or causes in either of said Criminal District Courts to which said cause or causes may be transferred; provided that the county clerk of Dallas County making such a bill of cost shall receive the sum of 50 cents for the preparation and forwarding of said bill of cost, in each cause so transferred, which said sum and cost shall be taxed in said cause and collected as other cost in the manner now provided by law; and the clerk of the District Court of Dallas County shall likewise, upon the transfer of any such cause from either of said Criminal District Courts to the County Court of Dallas County at Law, prepare such bill of cost and forward same as provided therein, and shall receive the same compensation as herein provided for the county clerk of Dallas County in such cases. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 97jj. Misdemeanor dockets for transferred cases.—The clerk of the District Court of Dallas County shall keep for each of said Criminal District Courts a misdemeanor docket and a misdemeanor motion docket in like manner as is now provided for by law for the County Court of Dallas County at Law, and upon any such cause or causes being transferred from the County Court of Dallas County at Law or from one of said Criminal District Courts to the other, said cause or causes shall be docketed as now provided by law for the County Court of Dallas County at Law. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 97jjj. Practice in transferred causes.—In trial of causes transferred to either of the Criminal District Courts of Dallas County from the County Court of Dallas County at Law, the trials, pleadings and practice shall be the same as in trial of other causes over which the Criminal District Courts of Dallas County now have jurisdiction. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 97k. Fees of officers in misdemeanor causes.—The county attorney of Dallas county and all other officers shall receive the same fees in misdemeanor causes in said Criminal District Courts as are now provided by law in the County Court of Dallas County at Law and in all other matters of cost tax in said causes in said Criminal District Courts, the item shall in no event be greater than that provided by law for such items in the County Court of Dallas County at Law, and all such cost in such causes shall be paid to the officers of the court in which same is accrued. [Id., § 5.]

Art. 97kk. Filing misdemeanor causes in either court.—All misdemeanor causes of which the County Court of Dallas County now has jurisdiction may be filed originally with the clerk of the district [court] of Dallas county, in either the Criminal District Court of Dallas County or the Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County, in the same manner as is now provided by law for the filing of such causes with the county clerk of Dallas county in the County Court of Dallas County at Law. [Id., § 7.]

Art. 97l. Jurisdiction of proceeding on bail bonds and recognizances given in transferred causes.—Said Criminal District Courts shall have jurisdiction on all bail bonds and recognizances taken in proceedings had before such courts; in all causes transferred to said courts from either of them or that may be transferred to said courts from the County Court of Dallas County at Law; and may enter forfeitures thereof; and final judgment and enforce the collection of same by proper process in the manner as provided by law in said bail bond proceedings; and all bail bonds, recognizances or other obligations taken for the appearance of defendants, parties and witnesses, in either the County Court of Dallas County at Law or Criminal District Court of Dallas County, or Criminal District Court No. 2 of Dallas County, shall be binding on all such defendants, parties and witnesses and their sureties for appearance in either of said courts in which said cause may be pending or to which same may be transferred. [Id., § 7a.]

Art. 97ll. Judges of criminal district courts may sit in either court.—From and after the time this law shall take effect the Criminal District Court of Dallas County, Texas, and the Criminal District Court Number Two of Dallas County, Texas, and the respective judges thereof, shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction with each other in all felony cases, and in all misdemeanor cases in which said courts have, or may hereafter have, concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court of Dallas County at Law, and in all matters and proceedings of which either of said criminal district courts of Dallas County, Texas, now have jurisdiction; and either of the judges of said criminal district courts may, in his discretion, in the absence of the judge of the other criminal district court from his courtroom, or from the County of Dallas, Texas, try and dispose of any cause or causes that may be pending in such criminal district court as fully as could such absent judge were he personally present and presiding. And either of said judges may receive in open court from the foreman of the grand jury any bill or bills of indictment in the court to which such bill or bills of indictment may be returnable, entering the presentment of such bill or bills of indictment in the minutes of the proceedings of such court, and may hear and receive from any impaneled petit jury any report, information or verdict, and make and cause to be entered any order or orders in reference thereto, or with reference to the continuation of the deliberation of such petit jury or their final discharge, as fully and completely as such absent district judge could do if personally present and presiding over such court; and may make any other order or orders in such courts respecting the causes therein pending or the procedure pertaining thereto, as the regular judge of said criminal district court could make if personally present and presiding. [Act 1915, p. 138, ch. 86, § 1.]

HARRIS COUNTY

Art. 97m. Galveston and Harris counties criminal judicial district changed to include only Harris county; criminal district court of Harris county created; original jurisdiction.—That the territorial limits of the Criminal Judicial District composed of the counties of Galveston and Harris is hereby changed so as to hereafter include Harris county alone, and there is hereby created and established in the city of Houston, in the county of Harris, a Criminal District Court, which shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all criminal cases, both felony and misdemeanor, in the county of Harris, of which district and county courts under the Constitution and laws of this State, have original and exclusive jurisdiction, and shall be known as “The Criminal District Court of Harris County.” [Act 1911, p. 111, ch. 67, § 1.]

Construction of former act.—The judge of a district court can sit as a judge of the criminal court of Galveston and Harris counties and try cases. Hull v. State, 50 App. 607, 100 S. W. 404.

Art. 97mm. Appellate jurisdiction.—The said court shall have exclusive appellate jurisdiction over all criminal cases tried and determined by justices of the peace, mayors and recorders in said county of Harris, under the same rules and regulations as are provided by law for appeals from justices of the peace, mayors and recorders to the county courts in criminal cases. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 97n. May grant habeas corpus, etc.—The judge of said court hereinafter provided for shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus, mandamus and all writs necessary to enforce the jurisdiction of his court, under the same rules and regulations which govern district judges. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 97nn. Jurisdiction over bail bonds, etc.—Said court shall have jurisdiction over all bail bonds and recognizances taken in proceedings had before said court, or that may be returned to said court from other courts, and may enter forfeitures thereof, and final judgments, and enforce the collection of the same by proper process in the same manner as is provided by law in district courts. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 97nnn. Jurisdiction over cases transferred.—Said court shall have jurisdiction over all criminal cases heretofore transferred from other courts to the Criminal District Court of Harris County as heretofore established, and over such criminal cases as may hereafter be transferred to the court created by this Act, as fully in all respects as if said cases had originated in said court. [Id., § 5.]

Art. 97o. Seal of court.—The said Criminal District Court of Harris County shall have a seal similar to the seal of the district court, with the words “Criminal District Court of Harris County” engraved thereon, an impression of which seal shall be attached to all writs and other process, except subpœnas issuing from said court, and shall be used in the authentication of all official acts of the clerk of the said court. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 97oo. Rules of practice; pleading and evidence.—The practice in said court shall be conducted according to the laws governing the practice in the district court, and the rules of pleading and evidence in the district court shall govern in so far as the same may be applicable. [Id., § 7.]

Art. 97p. Selection, etc., of juries.—All laws regulating the selection, summoning, and impaneling of grand and petit jurors in the district court shall govern and apply in the criminal district court in so far as the same may be applicable; provided, that the clerk of the district court of Harris county shall assist in drawing the names of the jurors for said criminal court as is now provided by law. [Id., § 8.]

Art. 97pp. Procedure.—All rules of the criminal procedure governing the district and county courts shall apply to and govern said criminal district court. [Id., § 9.]

Art. 97ppp. Terms of court.—Said court shall hold four terms each year for the trial of causes and the disposition of business coming before it, one term beginning the first Monday in May, one term beginning the first Monday in August, one term beginning on the first Monday in November and one term beginning on the first Monday in February of each year. Each term shall continue until the business is disposed of. [Act 1903, ch. 18; Act 1911, p. 112, ch. 67, § 11.]

Validity of former act.—A governor’s proclamation convening a special legislative session provided that it was to enact adequate laws simplifying the procedure in both civil and criminal courts of the state, and amending and changing the existing laws governing “court procedure.” Held, that the words “court procedure” should be held to apply generally to all laws governing the operation of courts, including those regulating the times within which sessions of courts may be held, and hence this article changing, extending, and rearranging the terms of the criminal district court for Harris and Galveston counties, was within such proclamation. Long v. State, 58 App. 209, 127 S. W. 268, 21 Ann. Cas. 405.

Art. 97q. Extension of term.—Whenever the Criminal District Court of Harris County shall be engaged in the trial of any cause when the time for the expiration of the term of said court as fixed by law shall arrive, the judge presiding shall have the power and may, if he deems it expedient, continue the term of said court until the conclusion of such pending trial; in such case the extension of such term shall be shown on the minutes of the court before they are signed. [Act 1911, p. 112, ch. 67, § 12.]

Art. 97qq. Sheriff of Harris county shall attend, etc.—The sheriff of Harris county and his deputies shall attend upon said court and execute all the process issuing therefrom and perform all duties required by said court or the judge thereof, and shall perform all such services for said court as sheriffs and constables are authorized or required to perform in and for other district courts of this State and he shall receive the same fees for his services as are provided by law for the same services in the district court. [Id., § 13.]

Art. 97r. Same powers as district court.—In all matters over which said criminal district court has jurisdiction, it shall have the same power within said district as is conferred by law upon the district court, and shall be governed by the same rules in the exercise of such power. [Id., § 14.]

Art. 97rr. Appeals and writs of error.—Appeals and writs of error may be prosecuted from the said criminal district court to the court of criminal appeals, in the same manner and form as from district courts in like cases. [Id. sec. 15, superseding article 2228, Rev. Civ. St. 1911.]

Art. 97rrr. Harris county separate criminal judicial district judge, clerk, and district attorney, how elected; duties and powers. —The county of Harris is hereby created a separate criminal judicial district and at the next general election after this Act shall take effect, there shall be elected in and for said district a criminal district judge, a criminal district clerk and a district attorney, each of whom shall have and exercise, respectively, the same duties, powers and authority within said county as are now possessed and exercised by the judge of the criminal district court, the clerk of the criminal district court, and the district attorney for the criminal district composed of Galveston and Harris Counties, and such other duties as are prescribed herein. [Act 1911, p. 113, ch. 67, § 16.]
Art. 97s. Abolished as to Galveston county; transfer of cases; jurisdiction of district and county courts, etc.; compensation of district clerk; special deputy clerks; duty of county attorney, etc.—From and after the taking effect of this Act, the criminal district now composed of Galveston and Harris counties shall cease to exist so far as it embraces Galveston county, and all cases of felony that are then pending on the docket of the Criminal District Court of Galveston County shall be at once transferred to the district courts in said county of the Tenth and Fifty-sixth Judicial Districts, the felony cases on said docket of even numbers shall be transferred to the district court for the Tenth Judicial District and the felony cases on said docket of odd numbers shall be transferred to the district court for the Fifty-sixth Judicial District, and the said district court for the Tenth Judicial District and the said court for the Fifty-sixth Judicial District are hereby vested with concurrent exclusive jurisdiction of all felony cases arising in the county of Galveston, and the judges of said courts are hereby vested with all powers, privileges, and authority given by the Constitution and laws of this State in criminal matters, to the district courts of this State; and the judge of the district court for the Tenth Judicial District and the judge of the district court for the Fifty-sixth Judicial District shall alternately impanel grand juries in said county of Galveston in the same manner provided therefor by the judges of the district courts of this State; and from and after taking effect of this Act, all cases of misdemeanor pending on the docket of the Criminal District Court of Galveston County shall be transferred to the County Court of Galveston County, Texas, unless there be a county court at law of said county, in which event they shall be transferred to the latter court; and said county court and the judge thereof is hereby vested with all the powers, privileges and authority in criminal cases that are conferred by the laws of this State on the county court; and the clerk of the District Court of Galveston County is hereby vested with the powers, duties and authority in criminal matters in cases of felony that are now conferred by law on clerks of the district court in this State, and shall be the custodian of the records in felony cases transferred from said Criminal District Court and hereafter arising in the county of Galveston; and the clerk of the County Court of Galveston County is hereby vested with the powers, duties and authority in criminal matters in cases of misdemeanor as are now conferred by law on the clerks of the county courts of this State, and such clerk shall be the custodian of the papers and records of misdemeanor cases arising in such county after such transfer, and the clerk of the Criminal District Court of Galveston County shall at once make the transfer of cases herein provided and turn over the papers and records of his office to the clerk of the district court and the clerk of the County Court of Galveston County as herein provided. The clerk of the district court shall file and docket the even numbered felony cases in the court of the Tenth Judicial District and the odd numbered felony cases in the court of the Fifty-sixth Judicial District, but any case pending in either of said courts may, in the discretion of the judge thereof, be transferred by one of said district courts to the other, and in case of the disqualification of the judge of either of said courts in any case, such case on his suggestion of disqualification shall stand transferred to the other of said courts and docketed by the clerk accordingly. All writs and process heretofore, or that may hereafter be issued, up to the time this Act shall take effect, which are made returnable to the Criminal District Court of Galveston and Harris Counties, shall be returnable to the court to which the cause has been or may be transferred.
in like manner as if originally made returnable to said court and all writs and process are hereby validated.

The district clerk of Galveston county shall receive the sum of $600.00 per annum, to be paid by the county of Galveston for ex officio services, and receive the same fees in criminal cases as fixed by law in felony cases, and the county clerk shall receive the sum of $600.00 per annum for ex officio services and be entitled to such fees as are provided by law in misdemeanor cases.

The county commissioners court shall have authority to pay for the services of a special deputy district or county clerk, or both, if in their judgment such shall be required; such assistant to be appointed by the clerk of the court in which his services are needed. The county attorney and his assistant shall conduct all prosecutions in said district and county courts and county court at law and said county attorneys and the clerks of said court shall receive such fees as are now or may hereafter be provided for by law. [Id., § 17.]

Art. 97ss. Continuation in matters of jurisdiction, records and procedure of former court.—The Criminal District Court of Harris County herein provided for shall, from and after the time when this Act takes effect, be taken and deemed to be, in respect to all matters of jurisdiction, records and procedure a continuation of the Criminal District Court of Galveston and Harris Counties as now organized for Harris county, it being the intention of this Act to reduce the territorial limits of the Criminal Judicial District of Galveston and Harris Counties to Harris county alone. [Id., § 17a.]

Art. 97ss. Judge, how elected; term; qualifications; salary; powers and duties.—The judge of the Criminal District Court of Harris County shall be elected by the qualified voters of said county for a term of four years and shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall possess the same qualifications as are required of the judges of the district court and shall receive the salary and compensation as is now, or may hereafter be provided for district judges of this State, to be paid in the same manner as the salary and compensation of other district judges is paid. Said judge of said criminal district court shall have and exercise all the powers and duties which are now, or hereafter may be by law vested in and exercised by district judges of this State in criminal cases. The judge of said court may exchange with other district judges, as provided by law, and the said judge shall have all the power within said criminal district which is by the Constitution and laws of this State vested in district judges of their respective judicial districts, except that the jurisdiction and authority of said criminal district judge shall be limited to criminal cases, and to the exercise of such powers and the granting of such writs and process as may be necessary or incidental to the exercise of such criminal jurisdiction. [Id., § 18.]

Art. 97t. Criminal district attorney of Harris county; powers and duties.—There shall be elected by the qualified electors of the criminal district of Harris county, Texas, an attorney for said court who shall be styled "The Criminal District Attorney of Harris County," and who shall hold his office for a period of two years and until his successor is elected and qualified. The said criminal district attorney shall possess all of the qualifications and take the oath and give the bond required by the Constitution and laws of this State, of other district attorneys. It shall be the duty of said criminal district attorney, or of his assistants, as hereinafter provided, to be in attendance upon each term of said Criminal District Court of Harris County and to represent the State in all matters pending before said court. And he shall have exclusive control of all criminal cases wherever pending, or in whatever court in Harris county that now has jurisdiction of criminal cases, as well as any or all courts that may be hereafter created and given jurisdiction of any criminal cases, and he shall collect the fees therefor provided by law. He shall also have control of any and all cases heard on habeas corpus before any civil district court of Harris county, as well as before the criminal court of said county. The criminal district attorney of Harris county shall have and exercise, in addition to the specific powers given and duties imposed upon him by this Act, all such powers, duties and privileges within said criminal district of Harris county as are by law now conferred or which may hereafter be conferred upon district and county attorneys in the various counties and judicial districts of this State. It is further provided that he and his assistants shall have the exclusive right, and it shall be their sole duty to perform the duties provided for in this Act, except in cases of the absence from the county of the criminal district attorney and his assistants, or their inability or refusal to act; and no other person shall have the power to perform the duties provided in this Act, or to represent the State in any case in Harris county, except in case of the absence from Harris county, or the disability or refusal to act, of the criminal district attorney and his assistants. [Id., § 19.]

Art. 97tt. Same: appointment and compensation.—The said criminal district attorney of Harris county shall be commissioned by the Governor and shall receive a salary of five hundred dollars per annum, to be paid by the State, and in addition thereto shall receive the following fees in felony cases, to be paid by the State: For each conviction of felonious homicide, where the defendant does not appeal or dies, or escapes after appeal and before final judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals, or where, upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of forty dollars. For all other convictions in felony cases, where the defendant does not appeal, or dies, or escapes, after appeal, and before final judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals, or where, upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of thirty dollars; provided, that in all convictions of felony, in which punishment is fixed by the verdict and judgment by confinement in the House of Correction and Reformatory, his fee shall be fifteen dollars. For representing the State in each case of habeas corpus where the defendant is charged with a felony, the sum of twenty dollars. For representing the State in examining trials, in felony cases, where indictment is returned, in each case, the sum of five dollars. The criminal district attorney shall also receive such fees in misdemeanor cases, to be paid by the defendant and by the county, as is now provided by law for district and county attorneys, and he shall also receive such compensation for other services rendered by him as is now, or may hereafter be, authorized by law to be paid to other district and county attorneys in this State. [Id., § 20.]

Art. 97ttt. Same; accounting for fees in excess of specified amount.—The criminal district attorney of Harris county shall retain out of the fees earned by him in the Criminal District Court of Harris County the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, and in addition thereto, one-fourth of the gross excess of all fees in excess of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, the three-fourths of the excess over and above twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, remaining, to be paid by him into the treasury of Harris county. It is provided that in arriving at the amount collected by him, he shall include the fees arising from all classes of criminal cases of which the Criminal District Court of Harris County has original and exclusive jurisdiction, whether felony, misdemeanor, habeas corpus hearings, or commission on fines and forfeitures collected in said court, it being the intention of this Act that the criminal district attorney of Harris county shall include all fees of every kind and class earned by him in said criminal district court in arriving at the amount collected by him; it being further provided that at the end of each year he shall make a full and complete report and accounting to the county judge of Harris county of the amount of such fees collected by him. [Id., § 21.]

Art. 97u. Same; assistants and stenographer; duties and compensation of assistants; fees.—The criminal district attorney of Harris County shall appoint two assistant criminal district attorneys, who shall each receive a salary of eighteen hundred dollars per annum, payable monthly. He shall also appoint a stenographer, who shall receive a salary of not more than twelve hundred dollars per annum, payable monthly. In addition to the assistant criminal district attorneys and stenographers, above provided for, the county judge of Harris county may, with the approval of the commissioners’ court, appoint as many additional assistants as may be necessary to properly administer the affairs of the office of criminal district attorney and enforce the law, upon the criminal district attorney making application under oath, addressed to the county judge of Harris County, setting out the need therefor, provided the county judge, with the approval of the commissioners’ court may discontinue the services of any one or more of the assistant criminal district attorneys provided for in this Act, when in his judgment and the judgment of the commissioners’ court, they are not necessary; provided that the additional assistant appointed by the county judge as herein provided for shall receive not more than $1800.00 per year, payable monthly. The salaries of all assistants shall be paid by Harris County. The assistant criminal district attorneys above provided for, when so appointed, shall take the oath of office and be authorized to represent the State before said criminal district court, and in all other courts in Harris county in which the criminal district attorney of Harris county is authorized by this Act to represent the State, such authority to be exercised under the direction of the said criminal district attorney, and which assistants shall be subject to removal at the will of the said criminal district attorney. Each of said assistant criminal district attorneys shall be authorized to file informations, examine witnesses before the grand jury and generally to perform any duty devolving upon the criminal district attorney of Harris county and to exercise any power conferred by law upon the said criminal district attorney, when by him so authorized. The criminal district attorney of Harris county shall be paid the same fees for services rendered by his assistants as he would be entitled to receive if the services should have been rendered by himself. [Act 1911, ch. 67, § 22, amended; Act 1915, p. 23, ch. 14, § 1.]

Art. 97uu. Clerk, how elected; term; fee; salary; powers and duties; deputies.—The clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County shall be elected by the qualified voters of Harris county, and shall hold his office for a term of two years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. Said clerk shall receive such fees as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law to be paid to the clerk of the district courts of this State, and to be paid and collected in the same manner; and in addition thereto, he shall receive an annual salary of one thousand dollars, to be paid out of the treasury of Harris county monthly. Said clerk shall have the same power and authority, and shall perform the same duties with respect to said Criminal District Court of Harris County as are by law conferred upon the clerks of other district courts in criminal cases, and shall have authority to appoint one or more deputies as needed, whose salary shall be paid by said clerk. Said deputies shall take the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution of this State, and said deputies are authorized to perform such services as may be authorized by said criminal district clerk, and shall be removable at the will of the clerk. [Act 1911, p. 117, ch. 67, § 23.]

Art. 97v. Judge, attorney and clerk to continue in office until, etc.; clerk to be appointed.—The criminal district judge and the criminal district attorney of the criminal judicial district composed of Galveston and Harris counties, who shall be in office at the time when this Act goes into effect, shall continue in office, respectively, as the judge and the district attorney of the Criminal District Court of Harris County until the next general election, or until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

The clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County who shall be in office at the time when this Act goes into effect shall continue in office as clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County until January 1, A. D. 1912, and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

The Governor shall, on January 1, 1912, or thereafter, appoint a clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County, who shall hold his office from January 1, A. D. 1912, until the next general election, or until his successor is elected and qualified. [Id., § 24.]

TRAVIS AND WILLIAMSON COUNTIES

Art. 97vv. Court created; jurisdiction; appeals.—That there is hereby created and established for the Counties of Travis and Williamson a Criminal District Court, which shall have and exercise all of the criminal jurisdiction now vested in and exercised by the District Court of Travis and Williamson Counties, and said Criminal District Court shall try and determine all causes for divorce between husband and wife and adjudicate property rights in connection therewith in said two counties. All appeals from the judgments of said court shall be to the Court of Criminal Appeals, except appeals in divorce cases, under the same rules and regulations as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for appeals in criminal cases from district courts. [Act 1915, p. 30, ch. 17, § 4.]

Art. 97w. Other courts not to have criminal jurisdiction; pending causes; election of judge; qualifications and salary of judge; special and substitute judges; appointment of first incumbent.—From and after the time when this Act shall take effect the Twenty-sixth District Court of Travis and Williamson Counties, and the Fifty-third District Court of Travis County shall cease to have and exercise any criminal jurisdiction in either of said counties; provided, however, that if there shall be any criminal case upon trial in either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Courts when this Act shall go into effect, such District Court shall retain jurisdiction of such case until such trial shall be concluded, and until appeal therein shall be perfected, if an appeal shall be made therein; and provided further, that nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction of either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Courts to pronounce sentence in any criminal case tried in such courts before this Act takes effect, or which shall be on trial when this Act goes into effect. The judge of said Criminal District Court for the Counties of Travis and Williamson shall be elected by the qualified voters of Travis and Williamson Counties for a term of four years, and shall hold his office until his successor shall have been duly elected. and qualified. He shall possess the same qualifications as are required of a judge of the District Court, and shall receive the same salary as is now or may hereafter be paid to district judges, to be paid in like manner. He shall have and exercise all the powers and duties now or hereafter to be vested in and exercised by district judges in criminal cases. The judge of said court may exchange with any district judge, as provided by law in cases of district judges; and in case of disqualification or absence of the judge a special judge may be selected, elected or appointed as provided by law in cases of district judges; provided that the Governor, by and with the consent of the Senate, shall immediately upon this Act taking effect appoint a judge of said court, who shall hold the office until the next general election after the passage of this Act and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. [Id.]

Art. 97ww. Seal.—Said Criminal District Court shall have a seal in like design as the seal now provided by law for District Courts, except for Travis County the words "Criminal District Court of Travis County, Texas," shall be engraved around the margin thereof; and for Williamson County the words, "Criminal District Court of Williamson County, Texas," shall be engraved around the margin thereof. [Id.]

Art. 97x. Terms.—The terms of said Criminal District Court shall be held each year as follows: in the County of Williamson on the first Monday in January, May and September, and continue in session for four weeks, unless continued longer by the judge thereof by an order duly entered; in Travis County on the first Monday in February, and may continue in session to and including the last Saturday before the first Monday in April; on the first Monday in June, and may continue to and including the first Saturday after the third Monday in July; and on the first Monday in October, and may continue in session to and including the last Saturday before the twenty-fifth of December, unless continued longer by the judge of said court by an order duly entered. [Id.]

Art. 97xx. Procedure.—The trials and proceedings in said Criminal District Court shall be conducted in criminal cases according to the laws governing pleadings, practice and proceedings in criminal cases in the district courts. [Id.]

Art. 97y. Grand and petit jurors.—A grand jury shall be drawn and selected for each term of said court held in Travis County and for each term of said court held in Williamson County in the manner now provided by law, and all grand and petit juries for criminal cases drawn and selected for the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third District Courts under existing laws at the time this Act takes effect shall be as valid as if no change had been made, and the persons constituting such juries shall be required to appear and serve at the next ensuing term of this court as fixed by this Act, and their acts shall be as valid as if they had served as jurors in the court for which they were originally drawn, and all laws regulating the selection, summoning and impaneling of grand and petit juries in the District Court shall govern said Criminal District Court, and jury commissioners shall be appointed for drawing juries for said court as is now or may hereafter be required by law in district courts, and under like rules and regulations. [Id.]

Art. 97yy. Transfer of causes.—Immediately upon the taking effect of this Act the criminal cases and divorce cases now pending in the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third District Courts in the respective counties of Travis and Williamson, together with all records and papers relating thereto, shall be transferred to said Criminal

District Court in each respective county, except as otherwise provided in the foregoing paragraph "a" of Section 4 [art. 97w]. [Id.]

Art. 97z. Pending proceedings.—All process and writs hereinafter issued or served in criminal cases pending in the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third District Courts in either Travis or Williamson Counties, returnable to either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Court, and all process and writs in criminal cases pending in either of said District Courts, hereinafter issued or served, returnable to either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Court, shall be considered returnable to the Criminal District Court herein created, at the time as hereinafter prescribed, and all such process and writs are hereby returnable to said Criminal District Court of Travis and Williamson Counties hereby created and at the time herein prescribed. And all bail bonds, bonds, and recognizances in criminal cases pending in said Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third District Courts when this Act takes effect, binding any person or persons to appear in either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Court shall have the effect to require such person or persons to appear at the first term of said Criminal District Court held in Travis County where said bail bond, bond, or recognizance has been given and taken in either the Twenty-sixth or Fifty-third District Court in Travis County; and at the first term of said Criminal District Court held in Williamson County where said bail bond, bond, or recognizance has been given and taken in the Twenty-sixth District Court in Williamson County, after the taking effect of this Act, and there to remain in said court in said respective county, from day to day and from term to term until finally discharged under the same penalties provided by law in such cases, and to the same effect as if the case or matter was still pending in the District Court in which said bail bond, bond, or recognizance was originally given and taken, and all said bail bonds, bonds, and recognizances shall have the same validity and be as valid and binding as if this Act had not been passed. [Id.]

Art. 97zz. Clerk.—The clerk of the District Courts of Travis County as heretofore constituted, and his successors in office, shall be the clerk of the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third District Courts, and also the clerk of the Criminal District Court in Travis County hereinafter created, and shall perform all the duties pertaining to all of said courts; and the clerk of the District Court of Williamson County, as heretofore constituted, and his successors in office, shall be the clerk of the Twenty-sixth District Court in Williamson County, and also the clerk of the Criminal District Court in Williamson County, Texas, hereinafter created, and shall perform all duties pertaining to both of said courts. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 97zzz. Sheriff and clerk.—The sheriff and clerk of the District Court of Travis County, as now provided for by law, shall be the sheriff and clerk, respectively, of said Criminal District Court in Travis County, and the sheriff and clerk of the District Court of Williamson County, now provided for by law, shall be the sheriff and clerk, respectively, of said Criminal District Court in Williamson County; and the district attorney of the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third Judicial Districts elected and now acting for said districts, shall be district attorney for said Criminal District Court in both Travis and Williamson Counties, and hold his office until the time for which he has been elected district attorney for the Twenty-sixth and Fifty-third Judicial Districts shall expire; and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and there shall be elected for two years beginning with the next general election after this Act takes effect, a district attorney for said Criminal District Court, whose powers and duties shall be the same as other district attorneys; and said clerk, sheriff and district attorney shall, respectively, receive such fees and salary as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law for such offices in the District Courts of the State of Texas, to be paid in the same manner. [Id., § 4.]

CHAPTER FOUR
OF COUNTY COURTS

Art. 98. [91] Have exclusive jurisdiction of misdemeanors, except, etc.—The county courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all misdemeanors, except misdemeanors involving official misconduct, and except cases in which the highest penalty or fine that may be imposed under the law may not exceed two hundred dollars, and except in counties where there is established a criminal district court. [Const., art. 5, § 16; Act June 16, 1870, p. 13, § 3.]

Art. 104p. Same; vacancy in office of judge; appointment of first incumbent.

1. Explanatory.
2. Jurisdiction in general.
3. Concurrent jurisdiction.
4. Conviction of offense within jurisdiction.
5. Punishment as affecting jurisdiction.
6. Indictment alleging felony and misdemeanor.
7. Title to land.
11. Transfer of causes.
jurisdiction is not given to the justice's court as the same is now or may hereafter be by law, and when the two hundred dollars. "*

The county court shall not have criminal jurisdiction in any county where there is a criminal district court, unless expressly conferred by law." [Const. art. 5, § 16 (1 Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, p. xilii)].

For the commencement of a prosecution in the county court both a complaint and an information are indispensable. Deon v. State, 3 App. 435; Collins v. State, 5 App. 37; Hefner v. State, 16 App. 573.

The constitutional jurisdiction of the county court over crimes can be divested only by Const. art. 5, § 57. Chapman v. State, 16 App. 573.

The act of March 24, 1885, restored to the county courts named therein all the criminal jurisdiction they possessed under the constitution and general laws prior to the act of 1881, which took away such jurisdiction. Galloway v. State, 23 App. 338, 5 S. W. 246.

An indictment, alleging that accused committed perjury by giving false testimony in the county court on a trial on a complaint charging a violation of the gaming laws, is sufficient for the filing of a complaint in the county court; and arrest thereunder, plea of not guilty, and trial confer jurisdiction on the county court. Etheridge v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 702.

3. Concurrent jurisdiction.—When the jurisdiction is concurrent, the court which first takes jurisdiction acquires control to the exclusion of the other, and is entitled to proceed to judgment. Burdett v. State, 2 Tex. 442. But since the adoption of art. 572, post, limiting the special pleas which may be filed by the defendant, a plea in abatement that there was a prior indictment, information or complaint pending in another court, is not a good plea. Splt. Williams v. State, 12 App. 394; Williams v. State, 32 App. 407, 24 S. W. 25. But when a defendant is convicted in a court of concurrent jurisdiction, such conviction is a bar to a prosecution for the same offense in another court of concurrent jurisdiction, although the latter prosecution had been initiated before the former, and was pending at the conviction. Kain v. State, 16 App. 252. The conferring upon an inferior court jurisdiction of a case of which a superior court has jurisdiction, renders their jurisdiction concurrent, but not inconsistent. Johnson v. Hapell, 4 Tex. 96. Under the charter of the city of Dallas the mayor's court has concurrent jurisdiction with the county court of the offense of keeping a disorderly house. Handle v. State, 16 App. 444; Ex parte Wilson, 14 App. 352.

Concurrent jurisdiction with justices' courts of misdemeanors cognizable in justices' courts. Woodward v. State, 5 App. 290; Solon v. State, Id. 301; Jennings v. State, Id. 288; Leatherwood v. State, 6 App. 241; Chaplin v. State, 7 App. 87. But they have no jurisdiction to finally try a felony case. Davis v. State, 188. But the county judge may sit as a county jury in felony cases, in which case the clerk of the county court may swear the witnesses, Sullivan v. State, 6 App. 319, 32 Am. Dec. 550.

The jurisdiction of the county court is concurrent with that of the justices' courts over misdemeanors cognizable in justices' courts, and the offense of permitting a house to be used for gaming defined by article 572 of the Penal Code comes within this category. Bullew v. State, 26 App. 483, 9 S. W. 765.

The legislature cannot delegate to a city authority to make an offense against the city and give the city court jurisdiction over an act which, under the state law, is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, over which the county court has exclusive jurisdiction. Ex parte Fagg, 38 App. 573, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 232.

4. Conviction of offense within jurisdiction.—Upon a trial for an aggravated assault in the county court, the defendant may be convicted of a simple assault, and the county court has jurisdiction in such case to adjudge and enforce the conviction. Crutchfield v. State, 1 App. 446.

5. Punishment as affecting jurisdiction.—County courts have jurisdiction of misdemeanors where a part of the punishment prescribed is imprisonment in the county jail. Reddick v. State, 4 App. 32.

6. Indictment alleging felony and misdemeanor.—Where an indictment filed in the district court charged a felony committed in violation of Pen. Code, art. 233, relating to payment of poll taxes, it was improper to transfer it to the county court, though it also charged a misdemeanor committed in violation of Pen. Code, article 229. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 490.

7. Title to land.—In a prosecution for unlawfully pulling down a fence located on property on which another had possession, the fact that defendant claimed to own the same, was the question of title to be involved, so as to deprive the county court of jurisdiction. Johns v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 619.

Where an indictment for swindling alleged that defendant acquired certain money from prosecutor by false representations as to defendant's ownership of certain land, and his right to convey the same by deed, when, in fact, he had no title to or right to convey the land, the title to the land was not "involved" in the trial of such case so as to deprive the county court of jurisdiction to try the same within the constitutional provision giving to the district court exclusive jurisdiction to try land. Yoakum v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 210.

8. Official misconduct.—See notes under art. 88, ante.

9. Hog theft.—Where the value of the animals alleged to be stolen is alleged to be less than twenty dollars, the charge is a misdemeanor, and within the jurisdiction of the county court. Whitsett v. State, 9 App. 198 (In this case the offense for robbery was committed, but by law operative before the trial, theft of hogs of less value than $20 was made a misdemeanor).

County courts have no jurisdiction over theft of hogs worth twenty dollars or more. Blunt v. State, 9 App. 234.

Act March 20, 1911 (Acts 32d Leg. c. 93), restoring the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the county court of Castro county, repeals Act April 25, 1893 (Acts 24d Leg.) of the same title, which created such court upon the district court of the county. Turnbow v. J. E. Bryant Co. (Civ. App.) 159 S. W. 605.

See list of special acts, following art. 106, post.

11. Transfer of causes.—See notes under art. 483, et seq.

Art. 99. [92] Power to forfeit bail bonds.—County courts shall have jurisdiction in the forfeiture and final judgment of all bonds and recognizances taken in criminal cases, of which criminal cases said courts have jurisdiction. [Act June 16, 1876, p. 18, § 3.]

Jurisdiction of offenses.—To be authorized to forfeit a bail bond the court a quo must have had jurisdiction of the principal and the offense. McGee v. State, 11 App. 520.

Under this article the county court had jurisdiction of the forfeiture of a bail bond in a criminal case pending therein; such forfeiture proceeding being a mere incident of the criminal case, and Const. art. 5, § 8, which gives the district court jurisdiction of all suits in behalf of the state to recover penalties, forfeitures, and escheats, applying exclusively to civil and not to criminal cases. Willis v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 304.

Forfeiture.—See Title 7, ch. 4, post.

Art. 100. [93] Power to issue writs of habeas corpus.—The county courts, or judges thereof, shall have the power to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the constitution has not conferred the power on the district courts or judges thereof; and, upon the return of such writ, may remand to custody, admit to bail or discharge the person imprisoned or detained, as the law and nature of the case may require. [Const., art. 5, § 16; Act June 16, 1876, p. 19, § 5.]

See post, ch. 8, title 3, Habeas Corpus; ante, art. 92.

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: “The county court, or judge thereof, shall have power to issue * * * writs of habeas corpus in cases where the offense charged is within the jurisdiction of the county court, or any other court or tribunal inferior to said court” [Const. art. 5, § 16 (1 Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, p. xiv.).]

Person charged with capital offense.—A county judge has no power to discharge from custody on habeas corpus, a person charged with a capital felony and committed to the sheriff’s custody by the examining court, since that court has no jurisdiction to try felonies. Letcher v. Crandell, 18 Civ. App. 62, 44 S. W. 197.

Concurrent jurisdiction.—Where the county court has jurisdiction to issue habeas corpus an application should ordinarily be made to it before being made to the court of criminal appeals, though the latter also has jurisdiction. Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 120; Ex parte Japan, 36 App. 482, 38 S. W. 43; Ex parte Lambert, 37 App. 435, 38 S. W. 81.

Art. 101. [94] Appellate jurisdiction.—The county courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases of which justices of the peace and other inferior tribunals have original jurisdiction. [Const., art. 5, § 16; Act June 16, 1876, p. 18, § 3.]

Explanatory.—The present constitution, in respect to county courts, reads as follows: “They shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases, civil and criminal, of which justices’ courts have original jurisdiction.” [Const. art. 5, § 16 (1 Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, p. xiii.).]

See post, title 10, Appeals. This appellate jurisdiction does not exist in the county courts of Galveston and Harris counties. Art. 897, post.

Jurisdiction of trial court.—Where the justice had no jurisdiction to try the case the county court acquires none by appeal, though the case was within its original jurisdiction. Billingsly v. State, 3 App. 686; Uecker v. State, 4 App. 234.

Art. 101a. Creation of county court of Dallas county, at law. — There is hereby created a court to be held in Dallas county, to be called the “County Court of Dallas County, at Law.” [Acts 1907, p. 115, sec. 1.]

Explanatory.—The above article, and articles 103a–104d, 104a–104c, post, were omitted from the revised Penal Code, and are included in this compilation for convenience, and to present a complete exposition of the laws relating to the special county courts.

Art. 102. County court of Dallas county at law, jurisdiction of defined.—The county court of Dallas county at law shall have jurisdiction in all matters and causes, civil and criminal, original and appellate, over which, by the general laws of the state, the county court of said county would have jurisdiction, except as provided in article 102 [103]; and all cases other than probate matters, and such as are provided in article 102 [103], be, and the same are hereby transferred to the county court of Dallas county at law; and all writs and process, civil and criminal, heretofore issued by or out of said county court, other than pertaining to matters over which, by article 102 [103], jurisdiction remains in the county court of Dallas county, be and the same are hereby made returnable to the county court of Dallas county at law. The jurisdiction of the county court of Dallas county at law, and of the judge thereof, shall extend to all matters of eminent domain, of which jurisdiction has been heretofore vested in the county court or in the county judge; but this provision shall not affect the jurisdiction of the commissioners' court, or of the county judge of Dallas county as the presiding officer of such commissioners' court, as to roads, bridges and public highways, and matters of eminent domain which are now within the jurisdiction of the commissioners' court or the judge thereof.  [Act 1907, p. 115.]

Explanatory.—The bracketed numbers were inserted by the compilers to indicate the correct reference according to the original text of the law.

Art. 103. Jurisdiction retained by the county court of Dallas county.—The county court of Dallas county shall retain, as heretofore, the general jurisdiction of a probate court; it shall probate wills, appoint guardians of minors, idiots, lunatics, person non compos mentis, and common drunkards, grant letters testamentary and of administration, settle accounts of executors, administrators and guardians, transact all business appertaining to deceased persons, minors, idiots, lunatics, persons non compos mentis, and common drunkards, including the settlement, partition and distribution of estates of deceased persons, and to apprentice minors as provided by law; and the said court, or the judge thereof, shall have the power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, and all writs necessary to the enforcement of the jurisdiction of said court; and also to punish contempts under such provisions as are or may be provided by general law governing county courts throughout the state; but said county court of Dallas county shall have no other jurisdiction, civil or criminal. The county judge of Dallas county shall be the judge of the county court of Dallas county. All ex officio duties of the county judge shall be exercised by the said judge of the county court of Dallas county, except in so far as the same shall, by this act, be committed to the judge of the county court of Dallas county at law.  [Id., p. 115.]

Constitutionality of former act.—Where there is a criminal district court in a county, and also a county court, the legislature has the power under the constitution to confer by express provision of the law jurisdiction of appeals from the justice court, in the county court. In Dallas county appeals in criminal cases in justices' courts may be taken to the county court. Kruegel v. State (Cr. App.) 84 S. W. 1904.

Art. 103a. Terms of county court of Dallas county, at law; practice, etc.—The terms of the county court of Dallas county, at law, and the practice therein, and appeals and writs of error therefrom, shall be as prescribed by laws relating to county courts. The terms of the county court of Dallas county, at law, shall be held as now established for the terms of the county court of Dallas county, until the same may be changed in accordance with the law.  [Acts 1907, p. 115, § 4.]

See note under art. 102a.

Art. 103b. Judge to be elected when, etc.; qualifications; term. —There shall be elected in said county, by the qualified voters thereof, at each general election, a judge of the county court of Dallas county, at law, who shall be well informed in the laws of the state, who shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall have duly qualified. [Id. sec. 5.]

Art. 103c. Bond and oath of judge.—The judge of the county court of Dallas county, at law, shall execute a bond and take the oath of office, as required by the law relating to county judges. [Id. sec. 6.]

Art. 103d. Special judge elected or appointed, how.—A special judge of the county court of Dallas county, at law, may be appointed or elected as provided by laws relating to county courts and to the judges thereof. [Id. sec. 7.]

Art. 104. Power of the county court of Dallas county at law, of the judge thereof.—The county court of Dallas county at law, or the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, sequestration, attachment, garnishment, certiorari and supersedeas, and all writs necessary to the enforcement of the jurisdiction of said court, and to issue writs of habeas corpus in cases where the offense charged is within the jurisdiction of said court, or of any other court or tribunal inferior to said court. [Act 1907, p. 115.]

Delinquent children.—A proceeding wherein petitioner was charged with being a delinquent child in that he stole an automobile is not criminal in its nature, and the county court can take jurisdiction, notwithstanding jurisdiction of criminal causes had been transferred to the county court at law. Ex parte Bartee (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1621.

Art. 104a. Clerk of; seal; sheriff to attend when, etc.—The county clerk of Dallas county shall be the clerk of the county court of Dallas county, at law. The seal of the said court shall be the same as that provided by law for county courts, except that the seal shall contain the words, "County Court of Dallas County, at Law;" the sheriff of Dallas county shall, in person or by deputy, attend the said court when required by the judge thereof. [Id. sec. 9.]

See note under art. 102a.

Art. 104b. Appointment of jury commissioners; selection, etc., of juries.—The jurisdiction and authority now vested by law in the county court for the appointment of jury commissioners and the selection and service of jurors shall be exercised by the county court of Dallas county, at law. [Id. sec. 10.]

Art. 104c. Vacancy in office of judge, how filled.—Any vacancy in the office of the judge of the county court of Dallas county, at law, may be filled by the commissioners' court of Dallas county until the next general election. [Id. sec. 11.]

Art. 104d. Fees and salary of judge.—The judge of the county court of Dallas county, at law, shall collect the same fees as are now established by law relating to county judges, all of which shall be by him paid monthly into the county treasury; and he shall receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars per annum, payable monthly, to be paid out of the county treasury by the commissioners' court. [Id. sec. 12.]

Art. 104e. Salary of county judge of Dallas county.—The county judge of Dallas county shall hereafter receive from the county treasury, in addition to the fees allowed him by law, such a salary, for the ex officio duties of his office, as may be allowed him by the commissioners' court, not less than twelve hundred dollars per year. [Id. sec. 13.]
Art. 104f. County court of Bexar county for criminal cases created.—That there is hereby created a court to be held in Bexar County, Texas, to be called the "County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases." [Act 1915, p. 78, ch. 39, § 1.]

Art. 104g. Same; jurisdiction.—The County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal matters and causes, original and appellate, over which, by the General Laws of the State of Texas, the County Court of said county would have jurisdiction, and the same are hereby transferred to the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases; and all criminal writs and processes heretofore issued by or out of said County Court, be, and the same are hereby made returnable to the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 104h. Same; jurisdiction retained by other courts.—The jurisdiction hereby transferred to the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases shall include all criminal cases and matters, the forfeiture of bonds in criminal cases, all proceedings in relation thereto; but the County Court of Bexar County shall retain, as heretofore, the jurisdiction of all cases of eminent domain; the general jurisdiction of a probate court; it shall probate wills, appoint guardians of minors, idiots, lunatics, persons non compos mentis, and common drunkards, grant letters testamentary and of administration, settle accounts of administrators, executors and guardians; transact all business pertaining to deceased persons, minors, idiots, lunatics, persons non compos mentis, and common drunkards, including the settlement, partition and distribution of estates of deceased persons, and to apprentice minors, as provided by law. The county judge of Bexar county shall be the judge of the County Court of Bexar County, and all ex-officio duties of the county judge shall be exercised by the said judge of the County Court of Bexar County, except in so far as the same shall, by this Act and by Act of the Thirty-second Legislature, General Laws pages 15-17, House Bill No. 111, Chapter 10, be committed to the judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Civil Cases [Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, Title 36, ch. 4]. The county judge of Bexar County shall retain authority to determine all matters relating to or arising out of or connected with the granting or revoking of liquor licenses, and all matters appertaining thereto, try all applications for liquor licenses and shall approve all liquor bonds as may be provided by law. He shall also retain jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 104i. Same; power to issue writs.—The said County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases, and the judge thereof shall have the power to issue writs of injunction, certiorari, supersedeas, mandamus, and all other writs necessary to the enforcement of the jurisdiction of said court; and also power to punish for contempt under such provisions as are or may be provided by the General Laws governing County Courts throughout the State; and to issue writs of habeas corpus in cases within the jurisdiction of said court. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 104j. Same; terms.—The County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases shall hold at least four terms for criminal business annually as may be provided by the Commissioners Court of Bexar County under authority of law, and such other terms each year as may be fixed by the Commissioners Court of Bexar County; provided the Commissioners Court having fixed the terms of said court, shall not change the same until the expiration of one year. [Id., § 5.]
Art. 104k. Same; election of judge; qualifications and tenure. — There shall be elected in said county by the qualified voters thereof, at each general election, a judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases, who shall be learned in the laws of the State, who shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall have been duly qualified. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 104l. Same; judge's bond. — The judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases shall execute a bond in the sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars and take the oath of office as required by the law relating to county judges. [Id., § 7.]

Art. 104m. Same; special judge. — Special judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases may be appointed or elected as provided by laws relating to County Courts, and to the judges thereof, and shall receive salary and compensations similar to the judge of the court hereby created, but which shall be prorated and paid to him only for the actual number of days he actually serves. [Id., § 8.]

Art. 104n. Same; clerk and sheriff. — The county clerk of Bexar County shall be the clerk of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases. The seal of said court shall be the same as that provided for County Courts, except that the seal shall contain the words “County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases.” The sheriff of Bexar County shall in person or by deputy attend the court when required by the judge thereof. [Id., § 9.]

Art. 104o. Same; jurors. — The jurisdiction and authority now vested by law in the County Court of Bexar County, and the County Court of Bexar County for Civil Cases, for the selection and service of jurors shall be exercised by each of the three courts within their jurisdiction. [Id., § 10.]

Art. 104p. Same; vacancy in office of judge; appointment of first incumbent. — Any vacancy in the office of the judge of the court created by this Act may be filled by the Commissioners Court of Bexar County until the next general election. The Commissioners Court of the county shall, as soon as may be, after this Act shall take effect, appoint a judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases, who shall serve until the next general election, and until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified. [Id., § 11.]

Art. 104q. Same; removal of judge. — The judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases may be removed from office in the same manner and for the same causes as any other county judge may be removed under the laws of this State. [Id., § 13.]

Art. 104r. Same; purpose of act. — The provisions of this law are not intended to in any manner affect the jurisdiction of the County Court of Bexar County for Civil Cases, and this law is intended to create another court somewhat similar to said County Court of Bexar County for Civil Cases, but the court hereby created to have jurisdiction of criminal matters only. [Id., § 14.]

Art. 104s. County court at law of Harris county, Texas, created. — The County Court of Harris County for Civil Cases shall hereafter be known as the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas, and the seal of said court shall hereafter be the same as that provided by law for county courts, except that the seal shall contain the words: “County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas.” [Act 1913, p. 10, ch. 8, § 1.]
Art. 104ss. Same; effect of change of name of former court.—
The change in the name of said court shall in no way or manner, other than is provided in this Act, affect the officers or judge of said court, their compensation or tenure of office, and shall, in no way or manner, affect the process of said court already issued. The judge and officers now serving said County Court of Harris County for Civil Cases, shall continue to serve said court under its changed name to the same effect to all things as if the name had not been changed. All process heretofore issued out of said County Court for Civil Cases and all returns thereon shall in all things be treated and considered as if the name of said court had not been changed. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 104sss. Same; jurisdiction.—The said court to be hereafter known as the County Court at Law for Harris County shall have all the jurisdiction heretofore conferred upon it under the name of the County Court of Harris County for Civil Cases, and its judge shall have all the powers heretofore conferred upon the judge of the County Court of Harris County for Civil Cases; and in addition to the said jurisdiction the said County Court at Law of Harris County shall have all of the, and the same jurisdiction over criminal matters that is now vested in the county courts having jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases under the Constitution and laws of Texas, and all appeals from justices, mayors, recorders, or other inferior courts within Harris county, shall hereafter lie to said County Court at Law of Harris County instead of as heretofore, to the Criminal District Court of Harris County, and the judge of said court shall have, in addition to the powers now conferred upon him, the same powers, rights and privileges, as to criminal matters as are now vested in and enjoyed by the judges of county courts having criminal jurisdiction; provided, however, that said court shall have no jurisdiction over any of those matters the jurisdiction over which is now in the county court of Harris county or the judge thereof. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 104ssss. Same; clerk; fees.—The county clerk of Harris county shall have no authority in criminal matters pending in said County Court at Law for Harris County. The clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County shall act as the clerk of the said County Court of Law for Harris County in all criminal matters, but only in criminal matters, and he shall sign all papers emanating from said court, including the minutes of said court in criminal matters, whenever its clerk's signature is necessary, as ex officio clerk of said County Court at Law for Harris County, using the seal of said court. The fees of said clerk as to those criminal matters, the jurisdiction over which is hereby vested in said County Court at Law, shall be the same in all respects, including amount, manner of payment and collection, as if the Criminal District Court of Harris County had retained jurisdiction over said matters. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 104t. Same; transfer of misdemeanor cases.—All misdemeanor criminal cases now pending in the Criminal District Court of Harris County, as well as all criminal cases on appeal to the said district court from the various subordinate courts of Harris county shall, immediately upon the taking effect of this Act, be transferred to the County Court at Law of Harris County, and the same are hereby so transferred, and upon said County Court at Law is hereby conferred jurisdiction of such cases. [Id., § 5.]

Art. 104tt. Same; fees of judge.—In addition to the compensation now provided by law, the judge of said County Court at Law of Harris County, shall tax up, receive and collect in each case, the same fees and costs in criminal cases over which said county court has jurisdiction, as are now provided by the General Laws of the State, for judges of county courts having criminal jurisdiction, such fees to be retained by him as compensation for the additional jurisdiction conferred upon his court. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 104ttt. Same; terms.—Said court shall hold six terms a year, beginning respectively on the first Monday in January, in March, in May, in July, in September, and in November of each year, and each term shall continue until the business is disposed of. [Id., § 7.]

Art. 104u. County court at law No. 2 of Harris County.—There is hereby created a court to be held in Harris County, Texas, to be called the “County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas.” [Act 1915, 1st S. S., p. 18, ch. 8, § 1.]

Art. 104uu. Same; jurisdiction.—Said County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, shall have, and it is hereby granted original and appellate jurisdiction, in all matters and causes of a civil and criminal nature, concurrent with and in all things equal to that heretofore conferred upon the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 104uuu. Same; judge; concurrent jurisdiction with county court at law; proviso.—The judge of said County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, shall have and exercise all the powers and shall be subject to all the limitations and obligations heretofore or hereafter conferred or imposed upon the judge of the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas. Said County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court at Law of Harris County over criminal matters, and shall have the same jurisdiction over criminal matters, that is now vested in county courts having jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases under the Constitution and laws of Texas. And said County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the County Court at Law of Harris County in all appeals from justices, mayors, recorders or other inferior courts within Harris County; and the judge of said court shall have the same powers, rights and privileges as to criminal matters as are now vested in and enjoyed by the judges of county courts having criminal jurisdiction; provided, however, that said court shall have no jurisdiction over any of those matters the jurisdiction over which is now vested in the County Court of Harris County, or the judge thereof. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 104uuuu. Same; qualifications of judge; compensation; fees.—The judge of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, shall be well informed in the law; he shall have been a duly licensed and practicing member of the bar of this State for not less than two years; he shall be appointed by the Governor of the State of Texas as soon as may be after this Act takes effect; he shall take the oath of office and execute an official bond as now required by the law relating to county judges, and he shall collect the same fees in civil cases as are now provided by law in case of county judges, all of which he shall pay monthly into the county treasury, and in lieu of such fees he shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum to be paid out of the county treasury by the Commissioners Court of Harris County in monthly installments of two hundred and fifty dollars each. In addition to the compensation hereinbefore provided the judge of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County shall tax up, receive and collect in each criminal case the same fees and costs as are now provided by the General Laws of the State for the judges of county courts having criminal jurisdiction, such fees to be retained by him as compensation for the exercise of the criminal jurisdiction herein conferred upon his court. [Id., § 4.]

Art. 104v. Same; clerk; fees.—The county clerk of Harris County shall be the clerk of said County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County in civil matters and causes; and shall receive and collect the same fees which he now receives and collects as clerk of the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas. The clerk of the Criminal District Court of Harris County, Texas, shall be clerk of said County Court at Law No. 2 in all criminal matters and causes, and shall receive and collect such fees as he now receives and collects in criminal matters as clerk of the County Court at Law of Harris County. [Id., § 5.]

Art. 104vv. Same; seal.—The seal of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, shall be the same as that provided by law for county courts, except that such seal shall contain the words "County Court at Law Number Two of Harris County, Texas," and said seal shall be judicially noticed. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 104vvv. Same; sheriff; fees.—The sheriff of Harris County, either in person or by deputy, shall attend said court when required by the judge thereof; and the various sheriffs and constables of this State executing process issued out of said court shall receive the fees now or hereafter fixed by law for executing process issued out of county courts. [Id., § 7.]

Art. 104yyyy. Same; special judge.—A special judge of said court may be appointed or elected in the manner and instances now or hereafter provided by the law relating to county courts and the judges thereof. [Id., § 8.]

Art. 104w. Same; power to issue writs.—Said court shall have power to issue writs of injunction, mandamus, sequestration, attachment, garnishment, certiorari, supersedeas, habeas corpus in criminal misdemeanor cases, and all writs necessary to the enforcement of its jurisdiction; and, within the limitations placed upon county courts, to punish contempts thereof. Writs of injunction granted in civil cases by the judge of said County Court at Law No. 2 and by the judge of said County Court at Law shall be made returnable to the court in which the petition for injunction shall be filed, as hereinafter provided. [Id., § 9.]

Art. 104ww. Same; jurisdiction of county court at law not impaired.—The jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas, shall not in anywise be impaired or affected by this Act. [Id., § 10.]

Art. 104www. Same; terms of court.—The terms of the court hereby created shall begin on the first Monday of the months of June, August, October, December, February and April of each year. The sessions of said court shall be held in such place as may be provided therefor by the Commissioners Court of Harris County. [Id., § 11.]

Art. 104x. Same; transfer of pending causes.—As soon as may be, after this Act takes effect, the clerk of the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas, shall transfer to the docket of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas, one-half of the civil cases then pending in said County Court at Law. In making such transfer, said Clerk shall first transfer to said County Court at Law No. 2 the case having the smallest file number on the docket of said County Court at Law. The case having the next highest file number shall remain on the docket of said County Court at Law. The case having the third smallest file number shall be transferred. In like manner said clerk shall go through the docket of said County Court at Law, transferring to the docket of said County Court at Law No. 2 every second civil case thereafter. The clerk shall note such transfer, when made, on the minutes of the Court at Law of Harris County, Texas. New civil and new criminal cases filed with said clerk after such transfer has been made, irrespective of the court or judge to which the petitions in such civil cases shall be addressed, shall, in like manner, be filed by the said clerk, one civil and one criminal case in said County Court at Law No. 2, and one civil and one criminal case in said County Court at Law. The first new civil case and the first new criminal case, filed with said clerk after such transfer has been made, shall both be filed in said County Court at Law No. 2. [Id., § 12.]

Art. 104xx. Same; transfer of causes.—The judges of said County Court at Law and of said County Court at Law No. 2, in their discretion, either in term time or in vacation, by an order entered upon the minutes of their respective courts, may transfer to the court of the other any case or cases then pending in their respective courts. And when such case or case shall be so transferred the court to which such transfer shall be made shall have the same right and authority to try and finally dispose of the same as the court making such transfer. [Id., § 13.]

Art. 104xxx. Same; procedure.—The practice in said County Court at Law No. 2, and in cases of appeal and writs of error therefrom and thereto, shall be the same as is now, or may hereafter be prescribed for county courts. [Id., § 14.]

Art. 104y. Same; return of process in transferred causes.—All process issued out of the County Court at Law of Harris County, Texas, prior to the time when the clerk thereof shall transfer cases from the docket of said courts, as provided in Section 12 of this Act [art. 104x], in cases transferred as therein provided, shall be returned to and filed in the court hereby created, and shall be equally as valid and binding upon parties to such transferred cases as though such process had been issued out of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, Texas. Likewise, in cases transferred by the judges of either of said courts, as provided in Section 13 of this Act [art. 104xx], all process extant at the time of such transfer shall be returned to and filed in the court to which such transfer is made, and shall be as valid and binding as though originally issued out of the court to which such transfer may be made. [Id., § 15.]

Art. 104yy. Same; appointment of judge in first instance; election.—As soon as this Act shall take effect the Governor of the State shall appoint a judge of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, who shall serve until the next general election and until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified. And any vacancy thereafter occurring in the office of the judge of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, created by this Act, shall be filled by the Commissioners Court of Harris County, the appointee thereof to hold office until the next succeeding general election, and until his successor shall have qualified. There shall be elected by the qualified voters of Harris County at each general election hereafter, a judge of the County Court at Law No. 2 of Harris County, who shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall be duly qualified. [Id., § 16.]

Art. 104yyy. County court of Jefferson county at law created.—There is hereby created a court to be held in Beaumont, Jefferson
Art. 104z. Same; jurisdiction.—The County Court of Jefferson County at Law shall have jurisdiction in all matters and cases, civil and criminal, original and appellate, over which by the general laws of the State the County Court of said county would have jurisdiction, except as hereinafter provided in Section 3 of this Act [art. 104zz], and all cases pending in the County Court of said county other than probate matters such as are provided in Section 3 of this Act, shall be and the same are hereby transferred to the County Court of Jefferson County at Law, and all writs and process, civil and criminal, heretofore issued by or out of said County Court, other than those pertaining to matters which are hereby exempt from this bill that are to remain in the County Court of Jefferson County, shall be and the same are hereby made returnable to the County Court of Jefferson County at Law. The jurisdiction of the County Court of Jefferson County at Law, and to the Judge thereof, shall extend to all matters of eminent domain of which jurisdiction as heretofore vested in the County Court or in the County Judge; but this provision shall not affect the jurisdiction of the Commissioners Court or the County Judge of Jefferson County as the presiding officer of said Commissioners Court as to roads, bridges and public highways, or matters of eminent domain which are now in the jurisdiction of the Commissioners Court or the Judge thereof. [Id., § 2.]

Art. 104zz. Same; jurisdiction of other courts.—The County Court of Jefferson County shall retain, as heretofore, the general jurisdiction of the Probate Court and all jurisdiction conferred by law now over probate matters; and the court herein created shall have no other jurisdiction than that named in this bill, and the County Court of Jefferson County as now and heretofore existing shall have all jurisdiction which it now has, save and except that which is given the County Court of Jefferson County at Law in this bill, but the County Court as now existing shall have no other jurisdiction, civil or criminal. The County Judge of Jefferson County shall be the Judge of the County Court of said county, and all ex-officio duties of the County Judge shall be exercised by said Judge of the County Court of Jefferson County, except in so far as the same shall by this bill be committed to the County Court of Jefferson County at Law. [Id., § 3.]

Art. 104zzz. Same; clerk; seal; sheriff and deputy.—The County Clerk of Jefferson County, Texas, shall be the clerk of the County Court of Jefferson County at Law, and the seal of said court shall be the same as that provided by law for County Courts, except the seal shall contain the words “County Court of Jefferson County at Law,” and the Sheriff of Jefferson County shall in person or by deputy attend said court when required by the Judge thereof, and the County Clerk of Jefferson County, Texas, is hereby authorized, if it becomes necessary, in his judgment, to appoint a deputy to specially attend to the matters pertaining to the County Court of Jefferson County at Law, and said deputy shall be allowed a salary of one hundred dollars per month. [Id., § 10.]

Art. 105. [95] Appeal, etc., to district court, when.—In all counties in which the civil and criminal jurisdiction, or either, of county courts has been transferred to the district courts, appeals and writs of certiorari may be prosecuted to remove a case tried before a justice of the peace to the district court in the same manner and under the same circumstances under which appeals and writs of certiorari are allowed by general law to remove causes to the county court. [Act April 21, 1879, p. 125.]

See post, title 10, Appeal.

Transfer of jurisdiction to district court.—See ante, art. 38 and notes.

Transfer of jurisdiction to criminal courts.—See ante, art. 91 and notes.

LIST OF SPECIAL ACTS AFFECTING THE CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OF THE REGULAR COUNTY COURTS EXISTING UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

The acts are arranged in chronological order, so that the last act under any county will show the present condition with respect to criminal jurisdiction. The statement that jurisdiction is diminished means that jurisdiction in criminal cases is transferred to the district court. The word “restored” means that criminal jurisdiction is again conferred. When it is said that an act relating to a county is the same as another, it is not intended that they are literally the same in all cases, but only substantially—in purport and effect. When the jurisdiction is diminished, the act is usually drawn on the plan of those under Angelina, Bexar and Chambers counties; when the jurisdiction is restored, it is done by an act similar to that under Atascosa county—the purport of the act seems to be to restore to the court the jurisdiction of a county court under the constitution and general laws.

The legislature has power, by local or general law, to increase, diminish or change the civil and criminal jurisdiction of county courts; and in cases of any such change of jurisdiction the legislature must also conform the jurisdiction of the other courts to such change. Const., art. 5, § 22.

If an act be regarded as an attempt to change the jurisdiction of a county court, it will be held inoperative if it fails to conform the jurisdiction of the other courts to such a change. Muench v. Openheimer, 86 Tex. 568, 26 S. W. 466. Where the jurisdiction is diminished—“The district court of said county shall have and exercise jurisdiction in all matters and causes, civil and criminal, over which by the general laws of the state, the county court of said county would have jurisdiction, except as provided in this act.” Acts 1897, p. 103, § 6.

Where the jurisdiction is restored—“The district court of ______ county shall no longer have jurisdiction in cases in which the county court of said county by the provisions of this act has exclusive original or appellate jurisdiction.” Acts 1897, p. 103, § 6.

In some cases, after defining the jurisdiction of the county court, the only provision is as follows: “All causes now pending in the district court of ______ county, of which the county court of said county has jurisdiction under the provisions of this act, and all laws giving jurisdiction to the county court, shall be transferred to the county court of said county.” Acts 1889, p. 52 (Sayles’ Civ. St. Supp. 1894, art. 1172b, § 2); Acts 1893, p. 19 (Sayles’ Civ. St. Supp. 1894, p. 916); Acts 1893, p. 15 (Sayles’ Civ. St. Supp. 1894, p. 916).

CHAPTER FIVE

OF JUSTICES’ AND OTHER INFERIOR COURTS

May sit at any time to try causes. 109.

Clerk of corporation court elected by council, when; provided; terms; duties. 109e.

Corporation court created. 109a.

Seal of corporation court. 109f.

Jurisdiction. 109g.

Until organization of corporation courts municipal court as now established has jurisdiction, but thereafter abolished.

Restored: Act March 28, 1885, p. 60 (Sayles' Civ. St. 1889, art. 1172u; Sayles' Civ. St. 1897, p. 1097).

Established has jurisdiction, but thereafter abolished.

Art. 106. [96] Original concurrent jurisdiction.—Justices of the peace shall have and exercise original concurrent jurisdiction with other courts in all cases arising under the criminal laws of this state in which the punishment is by fine only, and where the maximum of such fine may not exceed two hundred dollars, except in cases involving official misconduct. [Const., art. 5, § 19; Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 155, § 3.]
5. Increase or diminution of jurisdiction.  11. Killing animals.

1. Original concurrent jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction of justices in criminal cases is concurrent with that of the district court. After an indictment has been found in the district court a justice has no jurisdiction to try a defendant for the same offense since the court first acquiring jurisdiction is entitled to retain it. Burdett v. State, 9 Tex. 43. And see Clepper v. State, 4 Tex. 342.

The justice has no jurisdiction to try and finally adjudge a case on the voluntary appearance and confession of the defendant. Wilson v. State, 16 Tex. 246. This article did not deprive district courts of their jurisdiction to convict for assault and battery under an indictment charging assault with intent to murder. Johnson v. State, 17 Tex. 516.

The term "original concurrent jurisdiction" means that the territorial jurisdiction of the justice of the peace in criminal matters is co-extensive with the limits of the county. Ex parte Brown, 42 App. 46, 64 S. W. 250.

Const. art. 5, § 16, provides that the county court shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases, civil and criminal, of which justice courts have original jurisdiction. Const. art. 52, provides that the Legislature can increase, diminish or change the civil and criminal jurisdiction of county courts. Vernon’s Slayes’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 903-922, relating to cities and towns, establishes recorders’ courts, and article 364 gives such courts jurisdiction over all cases arising under the ordinances of the city and also concurrent with the justices of the peace. Vernon’s Slayes’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 921, declares that appeals from judgments rendered by such corporation courts shall be heard by the county court. Held, under this section that an appeal would not lie from the recorder’s court in a case arising under the ordinances of the city, but would only lie in those cases wherein it had jurisdiction concurrently with a justice of the peace, since the statutes establishing the recorder’s court did not have the effect of enlarging the jurisdiction of the county court, as originally defined by the Constitution. Jarvis v. Taylor County ( Civ. App.) 192 S. W. 384.

2. Territorial jurisdiction.—A justice has jurisdiction as an examining magistrate over one arrested for a felony committed in another county on a warrant issued by the justice but made returnable before the county judge of the county where the offense was committed. Arrington v. State, 19 App. 561.

The usual jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is circumscribed by the limits of his own precinct; but when a justice of the peace holds an examining court, to inquire into the commission of an offense, his judicial authority is coextensive with his county. Hart v. State, 18 App. 292, 49 Am. Rep. 183; Kerr v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

A justice’s warrant which is not directed to some officer of his county is void. Toliver v. State, 32 App. 444, 24 S. W. 286.

Where a transcript of the record from a justice of the peace, which is sought to be introduced in evidence in a prosecution for bribing a witness the jurisdiction of the peace, shows that the justice was holding court in a precinct other than his own, proof should be made that the facts authorized the holding of court by the peace. Peacock v. State, 37 App. 418, 38 S. W. 964.

When a justice in one precinct holds court in another precinct, before introducing his acts in so holding court, it is necessary to show his authority. Peacock v. State, 37 App. 418, 38 S. W. 964.

3. Punishment as affecting jurisdiction.—Justices’ courts have no jurisdiction to finally determine any criminal action when the punishment prescribed by law may be by a fine exceeding two hundred dollars, or may be imprisoned for any length of time. Tuttle v. State, 1 App. 364; Billingsly v. State, 3 App. 656; Uecker v. State, 4 App. 294; Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 439, 34 S. W. 130; Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 472; State v. Newhouse, 41 Tex. 188; Ex parte Phillips, 33 App. 150, 26 S. W. 629.

But justice’s courts can imprison for nonpayment of fine and costs, or to enforce their attachment. Tuttle v. State, 1 App. 364.

4. Decisions under former laws.—Under Hart Dig., arts. 554, 1712, justices had no jurisdiction where a deadly weapon was used or the assault was aggravated, Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 387; nor over sales of liquor without license in 1862, Ex parte Valasques, 56 Tex. 178; nor over aggravated assaults in 1874 (overruling Owens v. State, 35 Tex. 555), Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 472; Neil v. State, 49 Tex. 91.

5. Increase or diminution of jurisdiction.—Section 23 of article 5 of the state constitution empowers the legislature by local or general law to increase, diminish or change the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the county courts, and requires the legislature, in the case of such change, to conform the jurisdiction of the other courts to the same.

Section 16 of the same article of the constitution provides that “in all appeals from county courts there shall be a trial de novo in the county court, and when the judgment rendered or final imposed by the county court does not exceed one hundred dollars, such trial shall be final,” etc.

By section 6 of the same article of the constitution it is provided that the court of jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of the state in all criminal cases of whatever grade. This provision is re-enacted by article

58 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which, however, is controlled by article 57 of the said Code, which expressly declares that article 58 shall not be so construed as to embrace cases which have been appealed from justices', mayors', or other inferior courts to the county court, and in which the judgment or fine in the county court shall not exceed one hundred dollars, exclusive of costs.

Article 105 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that "in all counties in which the civil and criminal jurisdiction, or either, of county courts has been transferred to the district courts, appeals and writs of certiorari may be prosecuted to remove a case tried before a justice of the peace in the same manner and under the same circumstances under which appeals and writs of certiorari are allowed by general law to remove cases to the county court."

Under the above constitutional and statutory provisions, the legislature, by act of March 27, 1879, directed the county court of San Augustin county of all jurisdiction in misdemeanor cases, and conferred the same upon the district court of said county. This case originated in the justice's court, where a fine of $5 was imposed upon the accused. He appealed to the district court, wherein, upon a trial de novo, a fine of $5 was again assessed against him, and this proceeding is an attempted appeal to this court from the latter judgment. Held, that no appeal to this court lies from said judgment of the district court, and the cause is dismissed for want of jurisdiction by this court. Johnson v. State, 26 App. 395, 9 S. W. 611.

6. Divesting court of jurisdiction.—Constitutionality of statutes giving mayors' and recorders' courts either concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction over violations of the Penal Code of which justices have jurisdiction, see post, art. 963 and notes.

7. Official misconduct.—See notes under article 97.

8. Bawdy and disorderly houses.—Justice courts have jurisdiction of the offense as prescribed in P. C. arts. 496-510, relating to bawdy and disorderly houses. Davis v. State, 32 App. 381, 23 S. W. 832.

9. Carrying weapons.—Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of the offense of unlawfully carrying weapons as defined by Penal Code, art. 478, since both fine and imprisonment are imposed. Tuttle v. State, 1 App. 364.

As punishment for carrying weapons in church under Penal Code, art. 477, may exceed two hundred dollars, justices of the peace have no jurisdiction. Anderson v. State, 18 App. 17.

12. Transfer of cause.—When an affidavit is filed before a justice of the peace, charging an offense over which he has jurisdiction, it is the justice's duty to try the case, and he cannot transfer it to the county court that an information may be filed there. Ex parte Holcomb (Cr. App.) 131 S. W. 604.

An affidavit was filed before a justice of the peace charging defendant with sending a certain anonymous letter, and publishing certain obscene composition. The justice had jurisdiction over the second charge, but not the first. After examination, he bound defendant over to the county court, where defendant was found guilty of the second charge. Held, that this action was proper on the part of the justice, and the county court acquired jurisdiction. Ex parte Holcomb (Cr. App.) 131 S. W. 604.

Art. 107. [97] Power to forfeit bail bonds.—They shall also have the power to take forfeitures of all bail bonds given for the appearance of any parties at their courts, regardless of the amount, where the conditions of said bonds have not been complied with. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 155, § 3.]

This power existed in justices of the peace before the enactment of the above articles. Garner v. Smith, 40 Tex. 505; see, post, art. 483, et seq.

Art. 108. [98] Mayors' and other inferior courts.—Mayors and recorders of incorporated cities or towns shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace within the limits of their respective corporations, and the provisions of this Code governing justices' courts shall apply to mayors' and recorders' courts. [O. C. 65.]

See art. 806, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914.

Constitutionality and repeal.—See notes under art. 963, post.

Procedure.—See art. 964, post, and notes.

Art. 109. [99] May sit at any time to try causes.—Justices of the peace, mayors and recorders may sit at any time to try criminal causes over which they have jurisdiction. [O. C. 65.]

See, post, art. 961.
Art. 109a. Corporation court created.—There is hereby created and established in each of the cities, towns and villages of this state, now or hereafter incorporated, whether by general or special act, a court to be known as the corporation court in such city, town or village, which court shall have jurisdiction and organization hereinafter prescribed. [Acts of 1899, p. 40, sec. 1.]

Explanatory.—In Blessing v. City of Galveston (1875), 42 Tex. 641, it was held that under the constitution, the legislature had power to create municipal judicial tribunals to enforce the police powers delegated to the municipal body. In 1877, the Supreme Court, in Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 433, held that the jurisdiction of the various courts named in the constitution was fixed by that document, and the legislature had no power to alter that jurisdiction by the creation of a special tribunal, the powers of which would intrude on the jurisdiction of one of the regularly created courts. The Towles decision was followed in 1884 by the decision in Gibson v. Templeton, 62 Tex. 555. In Ex parte Ginnochi (1891) 30 App. 584, 18 S. W. 82, the Court of Appeals held that a special statute creating a court with exclusive jurisdiction over violations of the Sunday Laws in the City of Ft. Worth was unconstitutional in so far as it excluded the jurisdiction of justices of the peace over the same subject. In Leach v. State (1896) 36 App. 248, 36 S. W. 471, the Court of Criminal Appeals held that the legislature is without power to create a court with jurisdiction concurrent with the constitutional state courts over violations of state laws. The decision in the Leach case, supra, was overruled by the Supreme Court in Harris County v. Stewart (1897) 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 857, and it was held that, under the power conferred by Const. art. 5, § 11, to “establish such other courts as it (the legislature) may deem necessary” and to “prescribe the jurisdiction and organization thereof,” the legislature was authorized to confer on a city recorder’s court jurisdiction to try offenses against the laws of the state. In the following year, the Court of Criminal Appeals in Ex parte Coombs, 38 App. 614, 44 S. W. 854, adhered to its decision in the Leach case, supra, and held that the legislature was without constitutional authority to create a corporation court with jurisdiction exclusive of or concurrent with the regular state courts to try violations of the penal laws. But in 1900 the Court of Criminal Appeals overruled its decisions in the Leach and Coombs Cases, and in Ex parte Wilbarger, 41 App. 514, 55 S. W. 988, held that the act of the 26th Legislature creating the Corporation Court, was not violative of Const. art. 5, § 1, in that it infringed the jurisdiction of the state courts, or of Const. art. 5, § 18, limiting the number of justices in each county, and that such act was not invalid, as conferring both state and municipal jurisdiction on the same court. In Ex parte Hart, 41 App. 561, 55 S. W. 341; Ex parte Freedman, 47 App. 487, 53 S. W. 1185; Ex parte Abrams, 53 App. 465, 120 S. W. 883; 18 Ann. Cas. 45; Ex parte Hubbard, 63 App. 516, 140 S. W. 451, the Court of Criminal Appeals followed its decision in the Wilbarger case, and in State ex rel. Bergeon v. Travis County Court, 174 S. W. 365, it held that articles 983, 984 and 985 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1911, were valid enactments. There seems no good reason why the Corporation Court Act should not be incorporated into the Criminal statutes, the jurisdiction of the court being entirely criminal, and the act creating being a qualifications of, or co-ordinate provision with, articles 109a, 920a, Code Cr. Proc. In view of the situation the act is inserted in this compilation as arts. 109a-109g, 920a, 9680-9685, 1177a.

Art. 109b. Jurisdiction.—Said court shall have jurisdiction within the territorial limits of said city, town or village, within which it is established, in all criminal cases arising under the ordinances of the said city, town or village, now in force, or hereafter to be passed, and shall also have jurisdiction concurrently with any justice of the peace in any precinct in which said city, town or village is situated, in all criminal cases arising under the criminal laws of this state, in which the punishment is by fine only, and where the maximum of such fine may not exceed two hundred dollars and arising within the territorial limits of such city, town or village. [Id. sec. 2.]

Constitutionality.—See note under art. 109a.

Jurisdiction—Criminal.—City recorder’s court held vested with authority to try such offenses against the penal laws of the state as justices of the peace might try. Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.

The city court of the city of Dallas has no jurisdiction to try violations of the Penal Code. Crowley v. City of Dallas (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 865.

Though a provision in a city charter to constitute a corporation court a state court was futile and without effect, it had jurisdiction to punish one on conviction of a municipal offense provided for by city ordinance. Ex parte Levine (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 1326.

This section limits the jurisdiction of corporation courts in criminal cases to those arising within the territorial limits of the city wherein the court exists. An indictment alleging that the offense was committed in the county and does not allege that it was committed in the city is not good. Moss v. State, 47 App. 469, 83 S. W. 830, 11 Ann. Cas. 710.

Corporation courts, organized pursuant to Acts 28th Leg. c. 33, have jurisdiction to try all criminal offenses arising under the ordinances of the city. Ex parte Hubbard, 62 App. 616, 140 S. W. 421.
Art. 109c. Judge or recorder elected or appointed, how; term, mayor ex officio recorder, when.—Such court shall be presided over by a judge to be known as the recorder of such court, in such city, town or village, who, in cities, towns or villages incorporated under special charter or charters, shall be elected or appointed in the manner and under the respective provisions of the charter now in force concerning the election or appointment of the magistrate to preside over the municipal court in such city, town or village, and all such provisions are hereby made applicable to the recorder herein provided for; and in cities, towns and villages not incorporated under special charter, such recorder shall be elected by the qualified voters of such city, town or village, in the same manner as the mayor of such city, town or village, and whose term of office shall be the same as such mayor; provided, in such cities, towns and villages not incorporated and acting under special charter, the mayor of such city, town or village shall be ex officio recorder of such court, and shall act as such, unless the city council or board of aldermen of such city, town or village shall, by ordinance, authorize the election of a recorder. [Id. sec. 3.]

Art. 109d. Recorder elected or appointed, when and how; discretion in council; term of office, etc.; vacancy; council may make mayor ex officio recorder, when.—Every two years there shall be elected or appointed in each city, town or village within this state, now or hereafter incorporated, a recorder, who shall preside over the corporation court hereby created, and established, and who shall be elected or appointed as provided in article 905; provided, however, that whenever by the provisions of the charter under which such city, town or village is now incorporated, it is provided that the magistrate now presiding over the municipal court therein is to be elected by the people, then in such case the city council of any such city, town or village may order an election for the recorder, or, in its discretion, may appoint the recorder, who shall hold his office until the next general election for city officers; provided, further, that wherever in any such city, town or village, the office of the presiding magistrate of the municipal court therein shall not have expired when the recorder is elected or appointed therein, the said recorder, first elected or appointed, shall hold his term of office corresponding to the unexpired term of the said magistrate; and every two years thereafter such recorder shall be elected or appointed for a term of two years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. In case of vacancy in the office of recorder or clerk of the court in any city, town or village, such vacancy shall be filled by the council or board of aldermen for the unexpired term only; provided, further, that the board of aldermen may provide by ordinance for the mayor to act as ex officio recorder in all cities and towns not operating under special charter. [Id. sec. 4.]

Art. 109e. Clerk of corporation court elected by council, when; provided; terms; duties.—There shall be a clerk of said corporation court elected by the council or board of aldermen of each such city, town or village, at the same time at which the recorder is elected; but, in such city, town or village, it may be provided by ordinance that the city secretary shall be ex officio clerk of the said court, and may be authorized to appoint a deputy, who shall have the same powers as the said secretary. The clerk of said court shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. In case of an ex officio clerk as aforesaid, he shall hold his office during his term as city secretary. It shall be the duty of said clerk to keep a minute of the proceedings of the said court; to issue all process, and generally to do and perform all of the duties of a clerk of a court as prescribed by law for the clerk of the county court, in so far as the said provisions may be applicable. [Id. sec. 5.]

Art. 109f. Seal of corporation court.—The said corporation court shall have a seal, having engraved thereon a star of five points in the center, and words, "Corporation Court in ———, Texas," the impress of which shall be attached to all proceedings, except subpoenas, issued out of said court, and shall be used to authenticate the official acts of the clerk and of the recorder, where he is authorized or required to use the seal of office. [Id. sec. 7.]

Art. 109g. Until organization of corporation courts municipal court as now established has jurisdiction, but thereafter abolished. —Until the due and legal organization of the said court in any city, town or village, as herein provided for, the municipal court in said city, town or village, as now established, shall continue to exercise its powers and jurisdiction. After the due and legal organization of the said corporation court, the said municipal court and the office of the judge and recorder and clerk thereof shall be abolished, and the said municipal court in each city, town or village shall be entirely superseded by the corporation court and such officers herein created and established, as the same shall be and become duly and legally organized. [Id. sec. 17.]

Texarkana Civil and Criminal Court.—This court was created by Laws 1895, ch. 11 with jurisdiction in criminal cases concurrent with the district court within a restricted territory.
TITLE 3
OF THE PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES, AND THE WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS

Chapter 1
OF PREVENTING OFFENSES BY THE ACT OF A PRIVATE PERSON

Article 110. [100] May be prevented, how.—The commission of offenses may be prevented, either—

1. By lawful resistance; or,

2. By the intervention of the officers of the law.

Resistance to the offender may be made as hereinafter pointed out, either by the person about to be injured, or by the person in his behalf. [O. C. 66.]

Article 111. [101] Rules as to prevention of by resistance.—Resistance by the party about to be injured may be used to prevent the commission of any offense which, in the Penal Code, is classed as an "offense against the person." [O. C. 67.]

Self-defense.—See Penal Code, arts. 1014, subd. 6, 1105-1109, and notes.

One illegally arrested or detained may, to regain his liberty, repel force by force, but he must not use more force than is necessary. Miller v. State, 31 App. 609, 31 S. W. 925, 37 Am. St. Rep. 303; Stockton v. State, 25 Tex. 772; Mundine v. State, 37 App. 5, 38 S. W. 619. And further this subject, see Pen. Code, tit. 15, ch. 12.

Defense of another.—See Penal Code, arts. 1014, subd. 6, and notes, 1105, subd. 4, and notes, 1107.

Justification for detention of person.—See Pen. Code, art. 1042, and notes.

Article 112. [102] Same subject.—Resistance may also in like manner be made by the person about to be injured, to prevent any illegal attempt by force to take or injure property in his lawful possession. [O. C. 68.]

Defense of property.—Penal Code, arts. 1014, subd. 4, 1110, and notes.

Arrest without warrant.—See arts. 253-263, post, and notes.

Article 113. [103] Resistance may be in proportion to, etc.—The resistance which the person about to be injured may make to prevent the commission of the offense must be proportioned to the injury about to be inflicted. It must be only such as is necessary to repel the aggression. [O. C. 69.]

Degree of force permissible.—See Pen. Code, arts. 1015, 1087-1110, and notes.

Officer's right to overcome resistance.—See Pen. Code, arts. 1014, subd. 5, 1094, subd. 9, and notes.

Article 114. [104] Same subject.—If the person about to be injured, in respect either to his person or property, uses a greater... amount of force to resist such injury than is necessary to repel the aggressor and protect his own person or property, he is himself guilty of an illegal act, according to the nature and degree of the force which he has used. [O. C. 70.]

Art. 115. [105] When other person, etc., may prevent. — Any person other than the party about to be injured may also, by the use of necessary means, prevent the commission of the offense. [O. C. 71.]

Art. 116. [106] Same rules shall govern in such case, as, etc. — The same rules which regulate the conduct of the person about to be injured, in repelling the aggression, are also applicable to the conduct of him who interferes in behalf of such person. He may use a degree of force proportioned to the injury about to be inflicted, and no greater. [O. C. 72.]

Defense of another. — See notes under Pen. Code, arts. 1014, subd. 6, 1105, 1107-1110.

CHAPTER TWO OF PREVENTING OFFENSES BY THE ACT OF MAGISTRATES AND OTHER OFFICERS

Art. 117. Duty of magistrate to prevent. — It is the duty of every magistrate, when he may have heard, in any manner, that a threat has been made by one person to do some injury to the person or property of another, immediately to give notice to some peace officer, in order that such peace officer may use lawful means to prevent the injury. [O. C. 73.]

Magistrates and peace officers defined. — As to who are magistrates, see art. 41, ante. As to who are peace officers, see art. 43, ante.

Duty in case of riot, etc. — See arts. 139-147, post.

Art. 118. [108] Same subject. — Whenever, in the presence or within the observation of a magistrate, an attempt is made by one person to inflict an injury upon the person or property of another, it is his duty to use all lawful means to prevent the injury. This may be done, either by verbal order to a peace officer to interfere and prevent the injury, or by the issuance of an order of arrest against the offender, or by arresting the offender; for which purpose he may call upon all persons present to assist in making the arrest. [O. C. 74.]

Arrest. — Arrest under warrant, post, arts. 257-262; arrest without warrant, post, arts. 263-269.

Art. 119. [109] Same subject. — If, within the hearing of a magistrate, one person shall threaten to take the life of another, he shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the person making the threat, or, in case of emergency, he may himself immediately arrest such person. [O. C. 75.]

Arrest. — See post, arts. 259-264, 266-267.

Form of warrant. — Willson's Cr. Forms, 1059.

Art. 120. [110] May compel offender to give security. — When the person making such threat is brought before a magistrate, he may compel him to give security to keep the peace, or commit him to custody in the manner hereinafter provided. [O. C. 76.]

Procedure. — See post, ch. 3, of this title.
Art. 121. [111] Duty of peace officer to prevent.—It is the duty of every peace officer, when he may have been informed in any manner that a threat has been made by one person to do some injury to the person or property of another, to prevent the threatened injury, if within his power; and, in order to do this, he may call in aid any number of citizens in his county. He may take such measures as the person about to be injured might for the prevention of the offense. [O. C. 77.]

Peace officers defined.—See art. 43, ante, and notes.
Authority and duty of peace officers.—See arts. 44, 45, ante, and 136, post.
See, post, ch. 4, of this title, as to duty, etc., in case of riots, etc.

A peace officer is not a magistrate, and he can only take such measures (under article 121) for the prevention of an execution of a threat against the person of another as the person about to be injured might take himself. Allen v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 673.

This article does not authorize a peace officer to seek out a citizen whom he has understood has made a threat against his life or some one else’s life and arrest him. It merely contemplates the prevention of crime and does not contemplate an arrest without warrant, or when he contemplates at some future time consummating the serious threat to take life. Allen v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 674.

If the intent of defendant, being one of the constable’s posse, was only to make an illegal and unwarranted arrest, and in endeavoring to do so he was forced to take the life of the party whom he was seeking to arrest, and offense which he was about to commit being false imprisonment, which under our law is only a misdemeanor, such offense would be considered in estimating the degree of his crime in committing the homicide, and it would be manslaughter, not murder. Carter v. State, 20 App. 531, 17 S. W. 1182, 16 Am. St. Rep. 944.

Art. 122. [112] Same subject.—Whenever, in the presence of a peace officer, or within his view, one person is about to commit an offense against the person or property of another, it is his duty to prevent it; and, for this purpose, he may summon any number of the citizens of his county to his aid. He must use the amount of force necessary to prevent the commission of the offense, and no greater. [O. C. 92.]
See art. 121, ante.

Art. 123. [113] Conduct of, etc., how regulated.—The conduct of peace officers, in preventing offenses about to be committed in their presence, or within their view, is to be regulated by the same rules as are prescribed to the action of the person about to be injured. They may use all force necessary to repel the aggression. [O. C. 79.]

Homicide.—See Penal Code, arts. 1092-1101, 1107, 1130, and notes.

CHAPTER THREE

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES FOR THE PURPOSE OF PREVENTING OFFENSES

Art. 124. Magistrate shall issue warrant to prevent, when.
Art. 125. Proceedings when accused is brought before magistrate.
Art. 126. What shall be a sufficient peace bond.
Art. 127. Oath required of surety and bond to be filed, etc.
Art. 128. Amount of bail, how fixed.
Art. 129. How surety may exonerate himself.
Art. 130. Defendant failing or refusing to give bond shall be committed.
Art. 131. Defendant shall be discharged, when.
Art. 132. May discharge defendant, when.
Art. 133. May require bond of person charged with libel.
Art. 134. Where defendant has committed a crime.
Art. 135. Accused shall pay costs, when.
Art. 136. May direct that person or property threatened shall be protected.

Article 124. [114] Magistrate shall issue warrant to prevent, when.—Whenever a magistrate is informed upon oath that an offense is about to be committed against the person or property of the informant, or of another, or that any person has threatened to commit an offense, it is his duty immediately to issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused, that he may be brought before such magistrate, or before some other named in the warrant. [O. C. 80.]

"Offense" defined.—The word "offense" as used in the clause "or that any person has threatened to commit an offense" has the same meaning and is used in the same sense as the word "offense" appearing in the preceding part of the article, and is limited to offense against person or property. Ex parte Muckenfuss, 52 App. 467, 177 S. W. 1132.

Forms of oath and warrant of arrest.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1058. 1059.

Art. 125. [115] Proceedings when accused is brought before a magistrate.—When the person accused has been brought before the magistrate, he shall hear proof as to the accusation, and, if he be satisfied that there is just reason to apprehend that the offense was intended to be committed, or that the threat was seriously made, he shall make an order that the accused enter into bond in such sum as he may in his discretion require, conditioned that he will not commit such offense, and that he will keep the peace toward the person threatened or about to be injured, and toward all others for one year from the date of such bond. [O. C. 81.]

Form of order requiring bond.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1060.

Art. 126. [116] What shall be a sufficient peace bond.—The bond provided for in the preceding article shall be sufficient if it be payable to the state of Texas, recite plainly the nature of the accusation against the defendant, be for some certain sum, and be signed by the defendant and his surety, and dated. No error of form shall vitiate such bond, and no error in the proceedings prior to the execution of the bond shall be available as a defense in an action thereupon. [O. C. 84.]

Form of bond.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1062.

A condition to appear and answer the charge may be inserted in the peace bond. Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 272. This decision, however, was made under a different law from the present one.

For bond held valid, see Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 272.
The bond must be held valid unless it contains some error of substance. State v. San Miguel, 4 Civ. App. 182, 23 S. W. 380.

Art. 127. [117] Oath required of surety, and bond to be filed. —The officer taking such bond shall require the sureties of the defendant to make oath as to the value of their property in the manner pointed out with regard to recognizances and bail bonds; and such officer shall forthwith deposit such bond and oaths in the office of the clerk of the county court of the county where such bond is taken, to be filed and safely kept by said clerk in his office. [O. C. 90.]

Oath.—See, as to requisites of sureties' oath, post, art. 327; Willson's Cr. Forms, 1065.

Art. 128. [118] Amount of bail, how fixed.—Magistrates, in fixing the amount of such bonds, shall be governed by the pecuniary circumstances of the accused and the nature of the offense threatened or about to be committed. [O. C. 90.]

Rules for fixing amount.—See post, art. 329.
Form of order.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1060.

Art. 129. [119] How surety may exonerate himself.—A surety upon any such bond may, at any time before a breach thereof, exonerate himself from the obligations of the same by delivering to any magistrate of the county where such bond was taken the person of the defendant; and such magistrate shall in that case again require of the defendant bond, with other security in the same amount as the first bond; and the same proceeding shall be had as in the first instance, but the one year's time shall commence to run from the date of the first order. [O. C. 89.]

Form of order.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1067.

Art. 130. [120] Defendant failing or refusing to give bond shall be committed.—If the defendant fail or refuse to give bond, he shall be committed to the jail of the county, or if there be no jail, to the custody of the sheriff, for the period of one year from the date of the first order requiring such bond. [O. C. 82.]

Form of order requiring peace bond.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1069.

Art. 131. [121] Defendant shall be discharged, when.—If the defendant has been committed for failing or refusing to give bond, he shall be discharged by the officer having him in custody, upon giving the required bond, or at the expiration of the time for which he has been committed. [O. C. 86.]

Art. 132. [122] May discharge defendant, when.—If the magistrate be of opinion from the evidence that there is no good reason to apprehend that the offense was intended or will be committed, or that no serious threat was made by the defendant, he shall discharge the person so accused, and may, in his discretion, tax the cost of the proceeding against the party making the complaint. [O. C. 85.]

Form of order.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1061.

—If any person shall make oath, and shall convince the magistrate that he has good reason to believe that another is about to publish, sell or circulate, or is continuing to sell, publish or circulate any libel against him, or any such publication as is made an offense by the penal law of the state, the person accused of such intended publication may be required to enter into bond with security not to sell, publish or circulate such libelous publication, and the same proceedings be had as in the cases before enumerated in this chapter. [O. C. 95.]

Libel.—As to offense of libel, see P. C., arts. 21 et seq.; see, also, post, art. 159.

Forms.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1063, 1064, 1066.

Art. 134. [124] When defendant has committed a crime.—When, from the evidence before the magistrate, it appears that the defendant has committed an offense against the penal law, the same proceedings shall be had as in other cases where parties are charged with crime. [O. C. 91.]

Form of order.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1062.

Art. 135. [125] Accused shall pay costs, when.—In cases where accused parties are found subject to the charge, and required to give bond, the costs of the proceeding shall be adjudged against them. [O. C. 95.]

Collection of costs.—A magistrate can not, under this article, imprison a party to enforce collection of costs adjudged against him. Landa v. State (Cr. App.) 48 S. W. 712.

Form of order.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1060.

Art. 136. [126] May direct that person or property threatened shall be protected.—When, from the nature of the case and the proof offered to the magistrate, it may appear necessary and proper, he shall have a right to order any peace officer to protect the person or property of any individual threatened; and such peace officer shall have the right to summon aid by requiring any number of citizens of his county to assist in giving the protection. [O. C. 92.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1068; see, ante, art. 121.

Art. 137. [127] Suit on bond.—If the condition of a bond, such as is provided for in this chapter, be forfeited, it shall be sued upon in the name of "The State of Texas," in the court having jurisdiction of the amount thereof, and in the county where such bond was taken. The suit shall be instituted and prosecuted by the district or county attorney, and the full amount of such bond may be recovered against the principal and sureties. [O. C. 87.]

Procedure.—As to procedure, see, also, Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 372. District court has jurisdiction of all suits on such bonds. State v. San Miguel, 4 Civ. App. 152, 23 S. W. 399.

Art. 138. [128] Same subject.—Suits upon such bonds shall be commenced within two years from the breach of the same, and not thereafter, and shall be governed by the rules applicable to civil actions, except that the sureties may be sued without joining the principal. It shall only be necessary in order to entitle the state to recover to prove that the defendant did commit the offense which he bound himself not to commit or failed to keep the peace according to his undertaking. [O. C. 88.]

Article 139. [129] Officer may require aid of citizens and military when he apprehends resistance.—When any officer authorized to execute process is resisted, or when he has sufficient reason to believe that he will meet with resistance in executing the same, he may command as many of the citizens of his county as he may think proper; and the sheriff may call any military company in the county to aid him in overcoming the resistance, and, if necessary, in seizing and arresting the persons engaged in such resistance, so that they may be brought to trial. [O. C. 95.]

Officer's authority.—See ante, arts. 45, 46.

A posse comitatus summoned by a de facto officer does not act upon his own peril in making an arrest because of the defective or the non-record of the officer's right to his office. Weatherford v. State, 51 App. 550, 21 S. W. 351, 57 Am. St. Rep. 828.

Homicide in arrests.—See Pen. Code, arts. 1092–1100, 1107, 1130.

A killing by a posse comitatus in a bona fide attempt to make an illegal arrest may be a homicide of no higher degree than manslaughter. Carter v. State, 29 App. 551, 17 S. W. 1102, 29 Am. St. Rep. 544.

Art. 140. [130] Governor may order military to aid in executing process.—If it be represented to the governor in such manner as to satisfy him that the power of the county is not sufficient to enable the sheriff to execute process, he may, on application, order any military company of volunteers or militia company from another county to aid in overcoming such resistance. [O. C. 98.]

See Const., art. 1, sec. 24.

Explanatory.—It would seem that this article, and the following article, at the time they were carried into the revised Code of Criminal Procedure, had been superseded by the militia act of 1906 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 5776, 5831–5835, 5860).

Art. 141. [131] Conduct of military in suppressing riots.—Whenever, for the purpose of suppressing riots or unlawful assemblies, the aid of military or militia companies is called, they shall obey the orders of the civil officer who is engaged in suppressing the same. [O. C. 104.]

See note under art. 140.
Art. 142. [132] Duty of magistrates and peace officers to suppress, etc.—Whenever a number of persons are assembled together in such a manner as to constitute a riot, according to the penal law of the state, it is the duty of every magistrate or peace officer to cause such persons to disperse. This may either be done by commanding them to disperse or by arresting the persons engaged, if necessary, either with or without warrant. [O. C. 99.]

Art. 143. [133] Officer may call to his aid the power of the county.—In order to enable the officer to disperse a riot, he may call to his aid the power of the county in the same manner as is provided where it is necessary for the execution of process. [O. C. 100.]

Art. 144. [134] What means may be adopted to suppress.—The officer engaged in suppressing a riot, and those who aid him, are authorized and justified in adopting such measures as are necessary to suppress the riot, but are not authorized to use any greater degree of force than is requisite to accomplish that object. [O. C. 102.]

See ante, articles 122, 123, and 139.

Art. 145. [135] Unlawful assembly.—All the articles of this chapter relating to the suppression of riots apply equally to an unlawful assembly and other unlawful disturbances, as defined by the Penal Code. [O. C. 103.]

Unlawful assembly defined.—See Pen. Code, chap. 1, title 9; also, Pen. Code, art. 296.

Art. 146. [136] Suppression of riot, unlawful assembly, etc., at election.—For the purpose of suppressing riots, unlawful assemblies and other disturbances at elections, any magistrate may appoint a sufficient number of special constables. Such appointments shall be made to each special constable, shall be in writing, dated and signed by the magistrate, and shall recite the purposes for which such appointment is made, and the length of time it is to continue: and, before the same is delivered to such special constable, he shall take an oath before the magistrate to suppress, by lawful means, all riots, unlawful assemblies and breaches of the peace of which he may receive information, and to act impartially between all parties and persons interested in the result of the election. [O. C. 106.]

Appointment of special constables.—A county commissioner who by article 41, ante, is a magistrate, has the right to appoint in writing special constables to preserve the peace. Gonzales v. State, 53 App. 430, 110 S. W. 740.

Art. 147. [137] Power of special constable in such cases.—Special constables so appointed shall, during the time for which they are appointed, exercise the powers and perform the duties properly belonging to peace officers. [O. C. 117.]

Powers of officer.—As to powers and duties of peace officers, see ante, arts. 44, 45, 121, 122 and 123.

A special constable duly appointed has all the powers of a peace officer. Gonzales v. State, 53 App. 430, 110 S. W. 740.

 CHAPTER FIVE

OF SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES INJURIOUS TO PUBLIC HEALTH

Art. 148. Court may restrain a person from carrying on a trade, etc., injurious to public health.

Art. 149. Proceeding when party refuses to give bond.

Art. 150. Requisites of bond.

Art. 151. Suit on bond.

Art. 152. Same subject.

Art. 153. Unwholesome food, etc., may be seized and destroyed.
Article 148. [138] Court may restrain a person from carrying on a trade, etc.—After an indictment or information has been presented against any person for carrying on a trade, business or occupation injurious to the health of those in the neighborhood, the court shall have power, on the application of any one interested, and after hearing proof both for and against the accused, to restrain the defendant, in such penalty as may be deemed proper, from carrying on such trade, business or occupation, or may make such order respecting the manner and place of carrying on the same as may be deemed advisable: and, if, upon trial, the defendant be convicted, the restraint shall be made perpetual, and the party shall be required to enter into bond, with security, not to continue such trade, business or occupation to the detriment of the health of such neighborhood, or of any other neighborhood within the county. [O. C. 108.]

Forms.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1069, 1071, 1073.

Art. 149. [139] Proceeding when party refuses to give bond.—If the party refuses to give bond when required under the provisions of the preceding article, the court may either commit him to jail, or make an order requiring the sheriff to seize upon the implements of such trade, business or occupation, or the goods and property used in conducting such trade, business or occupation, and destroy the same. [O. C. 108.]

Form of Judgment.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1073.

Art. 150. [140] Requisites of bond.—Such bond shall be payable to the state of Texas, in a reasonable amount to fixed by the court, conditioned that the defendant will not carry on such trade, business or occupation, naming the place, or at any other place in the county, to the detriment of the health of the neighborhood. Said bond shall be signed by the defendant and his sureties and dated, and shall be approved by the court taking the same, and filed in such court. [O. C. 109.]

Form of bond.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1074.

Art. 151. [141] Suit upon bond.—Any such bond, upon the breach thereof, may be sued upon by the district or county attorney, in the name of the state of Texas, in any court having jurisdiction of the amount thereof, within two years after such breach, and not afterwards; and such suits shall be governed by the same rules as civil actions. [O. C. 109.]

Art. 152. [142] Same subject.—It shall be sufficient proof of the breach of any such bond to show that the party continued, after executing the same, to carry on the trade, business or occupation which he bound himself to discontinue; and the full amount of such bond may be recovered of the defendant and his sureties. [O. C. 110.]

Art. 153. [143] Unwholesome food, etc., may be seized and destroyed.—After conviction for selling unwholesome food or liquor, or adulterated medicine, the court shall enter and issue an order to the sheriff, or other proper officer, to seize and destroy such as remains in the hands of the defendant, which order shall forthwith be executed. [O. C. 108.]

Offenses defined.—See Pen. Code, ch. 2, title 12.

Form of order.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1075.
CHAPTER SIX OF THE SUPPRESSION OF OBSTRUCTIONS OF PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

Art. 154. [144] Public highway shall not be obstructed, except, etc.—Whenever any road, bridge, or the crossing of any stream is made, by the proper authority, a public highway, no person shall place an obstruction across such highway, or in any manner prevent the free use of the same by the public, except when expressly authorized by law. [O. C. 112.]

Validity of law.—The second count in the information charges that defendant "did unlawfully and wilfully prevent the free use or said public road, said prevention not being expressly authorized by law." Held, that the said count charges no offense against the laws of this state. Article 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is inoperative, because no penalty has been provided for its violation. Rankin v. State, 25 App. 694, 8 S. W. 582.

Art. 155. [145] Order to remove obstructions, etc.—After indictment or information presented against any person for violating the preceding article, any one, in behalf of the public, may apply to the county judge of the county in which such highway is situated; and, upon hearing proof, such judge, either in term time or in vacation, may issue his written order to the sheriff or other proper officer of the county, directing him to remove the obstruction; but, before the issuance of such order, the applicant therefor shall give bond with security in an amount to be fixed by the judge, to indemnify the accused, in case of his acquittal, for the loss he sustains. Such bond shall be approved by the county judge and filed among the papers in the cause. [O. C. 113.]

Suit upon bond of applicant.—If the defendant in such indictment or information be acquitted after a trial upon the merits of the case, he may maintain a civil action against the applicant and his sureties upon such bond, and may recover the full amount of the bond, or such damages, less than the full amount thereof, as may be assessed by a jury; provided, he shows on the trial that the place was not in fact, at the time he placed the obstruction or impediment thereupon, a public highway established by proper authority, but was in fact his own property or in his lawful possession. [O. C. 114.]

No defect of form, etc.—No mere defect of form shall vitiate any order or proceeding of the commissioners’ court in establishing a highway. [O. C. 115.]

Existence of highway.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 812.

When defendant is convicted, obstructions shall be removed at his costs.—Upon the conviction of a defendant for obstructing the free use of any public highway, if such obstruction still exists, the court shall order the sheriff or other proper officer to forthwith remove the same at the costs of the defendant, which costs shall be taxed and collected as other costs in the case.

Form of order.—Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1078.

OF THE SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES AFFECTING REPUTATION

Article 159. [149] On conviction for libel, court may order copies destroyed.—On conviction for making, writing, printing, publishing, selling or circulating a libel, the court may, if it be shown that there are in the hands of defendant, or other person, copies of such libel intended for publication, sale or distribution, order all such copies to be seized by the sheriff, or other proper officer, and destroyed. [O. C. 116.]

Offense defined.—See Penal Code, arts. 1151, et seq., and notes.

Form of order.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1680.

211. Court may grant all reasonable orders, etc.
212. Meaning of "return."
Art. 160  PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES  (Title 3)

4. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Art. 216. Person discharged before indictment not to be again imprisoned, unless.

Art. 217. A person once discharged or admitted to bail may be committed, when.

Art. 218. A person committed for a capital offense shall not be entitled to the writ, unless, etc.

Art. 219. A party may obtain the writ a second time, when.

Article 160. [150] Writ of habeas corpus.—The writ of habeas corpus is the remedy to be used when any person is restrained of his liberty. [O. C. 117.]

Cited, Ex parte Lewis (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1095.

1. Nature and scope of remedy in general.—The object of the writ is to relieve from illegal restraint, and not to afford redress. Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 386; Ex parte Trader, 34 App. 383, 6 S. W. 523.

2. Habeas corpus as civil or criminal proceeding.

3. Substitution for other remedy.

4. Enforcement of right to bail or reduction thereof.

5. Bail in capital cases after continuance.

7. Invalidity or irregularity of proceedings in general.

8. Want or excess of jurisdiction.

10. Invalidity or insufficiency of indictment, information, or complaint.

11. Former jeopardy.

12. Unconstitutionality of laws.

13. Invalidity of local option elections and laws.

15. Testing right to office.

17. Commitment for contempt.

18. Extradition.

20. Appeal in habeas corpus.

The writ cannot be used to relieve one from a valid judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. Ex parte Branch, 37 App. 318, 38 S. W. 502.

The application will be dismissed where the relator has been released from custody on a convict bond. Ex parte Chestnutt, 39 App. 624, 47 S. W. 645.

A district judge has no authority to award the writ of habeas corpus as long as the case is pending before a magistrate as an examining court. Ex parte Corkle, 29 App. 20, 13 S. W. 991.

Where relator appealed from conviction in mayor's court, but failed to prosecute his appeal, the appeal was dismissed and he was arrested on warrant from the mayor's court. Held, the warrant was void and he was entitled to his release. Ex parte McNamara, 33 App. 383, 65 S. W. 636.

One who has appealed from a conviction has no right to the writ where all the questions can be decided on his appeal. Ex parte Earfield (Cr. App.) 23 S. W. 1095.

When there is a tribunal created by law to pass on any given state of facts, the findings or conclusions of such tribunal cannot be questioned collaterally by habeas corpus. Ex parte Koen, 68 App. 379, 155 S. W. 491.

On petition for writ of habeas corpus to the Court of Criminal Appeals in a prosecution for a statutory offense, it may be determined whether the alleged offense was within the statute, since he could not be punished unless his offense was clearly defined by the statute. Ex parte Roquemore, 60 App. 252, 121 S. W. 1191, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158.

One who is properly charged with an offense under a valid statute cannot by habeas corpus avoid a regular trial by showing a defense, but the defense must be proved on the trial, and one properly charged with pursuing an occupation without a license cannot on habeas corpus show a receipt for the license tax. Ex parte Jennings (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 1143.

2. Habeas corpus as civil or criminal proceeding.—A proceeding by habeas corpus not used to relieve against restraint under a criminal charge cannot be regarded as a civil suit. McFarland v. Johnson, 27 Tex. 105.

Habeas corpus to determine a parent's right to custody of a minor child is a civil and not a criminal proceeding, and pertains to the civil courts. Ex parte Reger, 72 S. W. 459; Ex parte Berry, 34 App. 26, 28 S. W. 36; Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 248, 28 S. W. 231; Telsche v. Frisch, 33 App. 43, 40 S. W. 958.
3. Substitution for other remedy.—A writ of habeas corpus cannot serve the office of an appeal, writ of error, certiorari, quo warranto, or supersedeas, nor deal with errors or irregularities which render proceedings voidable merely, but lies to secure a release where the proceedings are absolutely void. Ex parte Mar-tines (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 599; Holman v. Mayor, 54 Tex. 668; Perry v. State,

The legality of the corporate existence of a city and the election and incumbency of its officers, including respondent, restraining relator under a capias, may only be attacked in quo warranto, and may not be inquired into by habeas corpus for the release of one from arrest on an ordinance of the city and commitment

By where law a county judge is authorized to pass on the qualifications of petitioners for ordering an election to determine whether a town shall be incorporated, he does so pass on their qualifications, and the town is incorporated in habeas corpus proceedings to secure the release of a resident of the incorporated town from arrest for the violation of an order requiring the resident to work the roads outside the city limits, the qualifications of the petitioners cannot be collated as to rendering the incorporation invalid and then held that the investligation since it is only by direct proceedings, such as quo warranto, that the corporation could be attacked. Ex parte Koen, 58 App. 279, 125 S. W. 401.

Where a person, desiring to appeal from a conviction in the corporation or may prevent a sufficient bond to perfect his appeal, which the mayor refuses to approve, his remedy is by mandamus to force the mayor or other officer to follow the law, and not by habeas corpus to procure his discharge. Ex parte Hunt, 73 App. 124, 161 S. W. 48.

Pending an appeal from a judgment of conviction, the defendant was not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus, as the jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal Appeals had attached, and the questions raised could be heard and determined on the appeal. Ex parte Barnett (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 845.

Ordinarily the court will not inquire on habeas corpus into facts on which the court sets aside a suspension of sentence during good behavior, but it is in where the right of appeal is denied, and the judgment recites facts showing its action was unauthorized. Ex parte Lawson (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 618.

5. Bail in capital cases after continuance.—See note to art. 615, post.

6. Enforcement of speedy trial.—It cannot be invoked to enforce a "speedy

The writ may be availed of when a defendant's constitutional right of trial by due course of law is denied him for an unreasonable length of time. Sutherland
v. State, 16 App. 649.

A party cannot be discharged on habeas corpus pending preliminary examination in justice court unless there is shown unreasonable delay by the justice in giving a preliminary hearing. Ex parte Krug (Cr. App.) 62 S. W. 668.

Where relator was arrested on a complaint for a misdemeanor after limitations had run, he was entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Hoard, 53
App. 519, 140 S. W. 449.

A homicide was committed on July 22d, and relator was accused, and on July 24th the district judge convened a special term in the district court in accordance with the necessary requirements of Acts 26th Leg. c. 82. Relator was indicted for murder by a duly organized grand jury, served with a copy of the indictment, and his trial set for July 28th, at which time neither the counsel employed for him nor counsel appointed for him by the court questioned the legality of any of the proceedings to the denial of a continuance nor to the impaneling of the jury.
He was found guilty of murder in the first degree, sentenced to death, and his motion for new trial was overruled, and his counsel stated in open court that no appeal was to be taken. Held that, as the proceedings were in all respects regular, no relief could be granted to accused under his writ of habeas corpus, and that he would be remanded to custody. Ex parte Martinez (Cr.
App.) 145 S. W. 599.

8. Want or excess of jurisdiction.—The writ may be used to relieve from restraints or judgment of a court rendered without, in absence of, a decision, or a judgment or order which for any reason is a nullity. Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex.
472; Darrah v. Westerlage, 44 Tex. 388; Holman v. Mayor, 24 Tex. 668; Ex parte

Art. 160  PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES

The only ground on which any court, without some special statute authorizing it, will give relief on habeas corpus to a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, is the want of jurisdiction in such court over the person or the cause of the other matter, rendering its proceeding void. Ex parte Degen, 30 App. 556, 17 S. W. 1111. See also, Ex parte Rosson, 24 App. 226, 5 S. W. 666; Ex parte Angus, 28 App. 293, 12 S. W. 1099; Ex parte Juneman, 28 App. 488, 13 S. W. 783; Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076.

Jurisdiction in Art. 36.—1. The power to hear and determine the particular matter: 2. The power to render the particular judgment which was rendered. If either of these two essential elements is lacking, the judgment is fatally defective. Ex parte Degen, 30 App. 556, 17 S. W. 1111.

The writ can be resorted to after judgment only when the judgment is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction in the court. Ex parte Branch, 36 App. 348, 37 S. W. 421.

In habeas corpus to review a conviction in the county court, it appeared that the county commissioners had power to fix the time when the court should sit and the length of the term, and that relator was tried within the time fixed by the commissioners for a specified term; that a special judge, chosen according to law within the time required by statute, opened the term, and no order of adjournment was shown prior to the date of trial. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the court was in session when relator was tried. Ex parte Cooks, 61 App. 449, 135 S. W. 139.

9. Vold and voidable judgments.—See preceding note, also note, ante, as to "Substitution for other remedy" and note, post, as to "Commitment for Contempt." The writ does not reach such errors or irregularities as would render a judgment void only, but only such illegalities as render it void; that is, radical defect; that contrary to the principles of law, as distinguished from defects of procedure; that which constitutes a complete defect in the proceedings, and not a mere irregularity in the proceedings. If the judgment in void will be the writ may be resorted to. Ex parte McCall, 6 App. 498; Ex parte Schwartz, 2 App. 75; Holman v. Ex parte Kilgore, 2 App. 247; Ex parte Gibson, 9 App. 381; Ex parte Boland, 11 App. 159; Martin v. State, 16 App. 285; Ex parte June man, 28 App. 486, 13 S. W. 783; Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076; Ex parte Degen, 39 App. 556, 17 S. W. 1111; Ex parte Reynolds, 34 App. 557, 17 S. W. 244; Ex parte Tinsley, 27 App. 617; Ex parte Grace, 9 App. 368; Ex parte Crawford, 36 App. 138, 36 S. W. 92; Ex parte White, 52 App. 541, 107 S. W. 899; Ex parte Branch, 32 App. 481, 38 S. W. 43; Ex parte Lawson, 21 App. 322, 12 S. W. 1101; Ex parte Taylor, 63 App. 571, 140 S. W. 774; Ex parte Cowden (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 539; Ex parte Lawson (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 698.

The writ can not be invoked for the purpose of impeaching the validity of a misdemeanor judgment upon the ground that the judgment is void because it fails to order the issuance of execution. Such judgments are not void. Ex parte Dickerson, 39 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076.

The writ attacking the validity of the judgment, the appellate court, notwithstanding the recitals of the judgment, may go behind it to ascertain whether the judgment is void, and whether or not it was rendered in term time. Ex parte Parker, 35 App. 12, 29 S. W. 489, 790; Ex parte Juneman, 25 App. 486, 15 S. W. 783.

In an application for a new trial before a minor, the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of accused, its decision as to whether the local option law superseded the law authorizing the prosecution would be, at most, erroneous, and habeas corpus could not be invoked to review it. Ex parte Cassens, 67 App. 377, 125 S. W. 886. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and person, error in a finding or conclusion of law as to one of the allegations of the information makes the judgment void only, at most, merely erroneous, so that it is not subject to attack in a collateral proceeding such as on habeas corpus. Ex parte Best, 60 App. 485, 122 S. W. 333.

That the county court, in a trial of a misdemeanor case in which the assessment of a jail penalty was compulsory, charged the jury in the absence of the defendant, was not such an irregularity as to render the judgment void, and did not entitle defendant to relief by habeas corpus. Ex parte Taylor, 63 App. 571, 140 S. W. 774. The county court being a court of general jurisdiction in misdemeanor cases, in which it is compulsory upon the court to assess a jail penalty, its judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by habeas corpus. Ex parte Taylor, 63 App. 571, 140 S. W. 774.

Where the court ordered a child committed for two years as a delinquent, under this article as amended, and subsequently made an order releasing the child, it was entitled to release on habeas corpus; the second order being valid if the first was valid, and the detention being unauthorized if the first order was invalid. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 213.

On application for habeas corpus by one who had been committed as a juvenile delinquent, and later ordered released by the same court, the judgments of such court are presumed to be correct. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 213.

10. Invalidity or insufficiency of indictment, information, or complaint.—In extra­ordinary proceedings, see notes to art. 177, post.

The sufficiency of a complaint can not be determined on application for habeas corpus. Ex parte Beverly, 34 App. 544, 31 S. W. 645; Ex parte Cain, 56 App. 588, 120 S. W. 999; Ex parte Cox, 63 App. 240, 109 S. W. 369; Ex parte Walsh, 59 App. 400, 139 S. W. 118.
The writ is available to one convicted on a void indictment. Ex parte Reynolds, 35 St. Rep. 54, and cases cited, and App. in Pet.-lier's case, 19 App. 241; Ex parte Ezell, 40 Tex. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 32; Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 476; Darragh v. Westerlage, 44 Tex. 385.

The writ may be used when the indictment under which the applicant is held was brought in a grand jury, and there has been no trial and conviction upon such indictment. Ex parte Swain, 19 App. 323.

The writ is not available to test the validity of an indictment, unless the same is void. Ex parte Wolf, 55 App. 231, 156 S. W. 1193.

The writ is not available to test the sufficiency of an indictment. Ex parte Knapp, 57 App. 411, 123 S. W. 597.

Habeas corpus, though unavailable to test the sufficiency of the complaint, is available to test the validity of the charge of the indictment, which is void and insufficient to confer jurisdiction, as where it is based on a special law not in force in the territory alleged. Ex parte Stein, 61 App. 320, 136 S. W. 136.

Where judgment is rendered in the county court, on appeal from a justice's court assessing a fine at less than $100, it cannot be attacked collaterally by habeas corpus before the Court of Criminal Appeals, on the ground that the complaint or information is defective. Ex parte Hendrix, 64 App. 452, 142 S. W. 576.

12. Unconstitutionality of laws.—The writ is available to test the constitutionality of a statute wherein the applicant is restrained of the liberty. Ex parte Mato, 19 App. 312 (overruling Parker v. State, 5 App. 579); Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 386; Ex parte Rodriguez, 39 Tex. 765; Miliken v. City Council, 54 Tex. 388, 427; Ex parte Mabry, 5 App. 192; Ex parte R. W. v. W. 197; Ex parte Murphy, 27 App. 492, 11 S. W. 487; Ex parte Tipton, 28 App. 448, 73 S. W. 610, 8 L. R. A. 326; Ex parte Williams, 31 App. 262, 29 S. W. 569, 21 L. R. A. 783; Ex parte Holman, 36 App. 256, 38 S. W. 441; Ex parte Brown, 38 App. 256; Ex parte W. v. W. 50, 39 Am. St. Rep. 748; Ex parte Jones, 38 App. 482, 42 S. W. 513. A lunacy proceeding is civil, and not quasi criminal, and hence a person found to be insane is not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus to determine the constitutionality of the statute under which the proceedings were instituted. Ex parte Singleton, 72 App. 122, 161 S. W. 135.

13. Invalidity of local option elections and laws.—The writ may be used to test the validity of a “local option” election. Ex parte Kramer, 19 App. 123; Ex parte Kennedy, 23 App. 77, 3 S. W. 114; Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 293; Ex parte Schilling, 28 App. 287, 42 S. W. 553; Ex parte Williams, 35 App. 75, 51 S. W. 683.

14. Invalidity of ordinances.—The writ may be used to test the validity of an ordinance of an incorporated town or city. Ex parte Gregory, 20 App. 210, 54 Am. Rep. 516; Ex parte Gregory, 1 App. 753; Ex parte Slaren, 3 App. 662; Ex parte Grace, 9 App. 351; Ex parte Boland, 11 App. 159; Miliken v. City Council, 54 Tex. 388, 427; Ex parte Pugh, 33 App. 575, 44 S. W. 294, 49 L. R. A. 213; Ex parte Smith, 51 App. 466, 102 S. W. 1124; Ex parte Robinson, 30 App. 493, 17 S. W. 1657; Ex parte Ginnochio, 30 App. 584, 18 S. W. 82.

Where for more than 30 years a city continuously used a certain name as that of the officers in all official acts, though occasionally with the latter word “Texas,” the name was that of the city in fact, and the arrest and detention of one for violating an ordinance adopted by the city under such name was under color of authority, and he could not obtain his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Keeling, 54 App. 218, 49 S. W. 606, 139 Am. St. Rep. 684.

15. Testing right to office.—The writ is not available to test the right to an office, that the writ cannot be used to attack a judgment collaterally upon the ground that the judge or justice rendering such judgment was not such officer legally. Ex parte Call, 2 App. 497.

The writ should be granted where a justice of the peace required applicant to give a $500 bond for making vague and ambiguous threats and to pay costs of the examining trial and sent him to jail in default thereof. Ex parte Blankenship (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 677.

17. Commitment for contempt.—Punishment for refusal to obey writ of habeas corpus, see art. 194, post.

The writ may be resorted to in a case of commitment for contempt, but the court cannot examine only two questions: 1, as to the jurisdiction; 2, as to the form of the commitment. When the jurisdiction is undoubted and the commitment is in form and contains all that the statute requires, the prisoner must be remanded and the writ discharged. Ex parte Degener, 30 App. 566, 17 S. W. 1111; Holman v. Mayor, 34 Tex. 668; Yarborough v. State, 2 Tex. 519; Ex parte Kilgore, 3 App. 247; Ex parte Dickerson, 36 App. 448, 17 S. If the contempt consists in a witness refusing to answer a question in an inferior tribunal, when such tribunal had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the judgment is a nullity, and may be thus relieved against on habeas corpus. Holman v. Clerk, etc., 24 Tex. 668. See, also, Ex parte Park, 37 App. 599, 40 S. W. 306, 66 Am. St. Rep. 815; Ex parte Kilgore, 3 App. 247.

The former rule was that a writ of habeas corpus does not lie to revise the action of the lower court in punishing for contempt. Jordan v. State, 14 Tex. 456.

If the contempt is committed in the presence of the court, it may summarily punish the offender; but if a person be only prima facie in contempt, judgment nisi should be entered, and scire facias issue, answer to which should be made under oath. In deciding on the answer, the court is not restricted thereto, but may hear the evidence, and remit in whole or in part, and with or without costs, and without a jury. Crow v. State, 24 Tex. 12.

For proper procedure in cases of contempt, see, also. State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 627, 665; Ex parte Ireland, 38 Tex. 24; Ex parte Kilgore, 3 App. 247, and notes to Vernon’s Sakes’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 1708.

Imprisonment for fine imposed for contempt is not imprisonment for debt. Ex parte Robertson, 27 App. 628, 11 S. W. 695, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207; Dixon v. State, 2 Tex. 481.

One being adjudged in contempt, can not be imprisoned until judgment finding the contumacy of the contumacious has been entered, and a commitment issued. Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 551, 24 S. W. 235; Ex parte Robertson, 27 App. 628, 11 S. W. 695, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207.

Courts have inherent power to enforce their orders, and may require what is within their jurisdiction, and not beyond the power of the adjudged to perform. Ex parte Tinsley, 37 App. 517. 40 S. W. 396, 66 Am. St. Rep. 518.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will not, on habeas corpus, to secure relief from a punishment assessed for contempt by the district court, review the district court’s findings of fact, where such court had jurisdiction, and the act of which the relator was adjudged guilty was contumacious. Ex parte Shepherd (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 628.

1. DEFINITION AND OBJECT OF THE WRIT

Art. 161. [151] What a writ of habeas corpus is, etc.—A writ of habeas corpus is an order issued by a court or judge of competent jurisdiction, directed to any one having a person in his custody, or under his restraint, commanding him to produce such person, at a time and place named in the writ, and show why he is held in custody or under restraint. [O. C. 118.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1057.

Art. 162. [152] To whom directed, etc.—The writ, as all other process, runs in the name of “The State of Texas.” It is to be addressed to a person having another under restraint, or in his custody, describing, as near as may be, the name of the office, if any, of the person to whom it is directed, and the name of the person said to be detained. It shall fix the time and place of return, and be signed by the judge or by the clerk, with his seal, where issued by a court. [O. C. 119.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1057.

Art. 163. [153] Not invalid for want of form.—The writ of habeas corpus is not invalid, nor shall it be disobeyed for any want of form, if it substantially appear that it is issued by competent authority, and the writ sufficiently show the object and design of its issuance. [O. C. 120.]

Art. 164. [154] Provisions relating to, how construed.—Every provision relating to the writ of habeas corpus shall be most favorably construed in order to give effect to the remedy, and protect the rights of the person seeking relief under it. [O. C. 121.]

See Ex parte Degener, 30 App. 556, 17 S. W. 1111; Ex parte Trader, 21 App. 293, 6 S. W. 553; Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 331, 34 S. W. 653; Id., 35 App. 624, 34 S. W. 962.

2. BY WHOM AND WHEN GRANTED

Art. 165. [155] By whom writ may be granted.—The court of appeals or either of the judges, the district courts or any judge thereof, the county courts or any judge thereof, have power to issue the writ of habeas corpus; and it is their duty, upon proper application, to grant the writ under the rules herein prescribed. [O. C. 122.]

Explanatory.—The above provision is obviously antiquated. It has passed through the revisions of 1935 and 1931 in its anachronistic state. The index to this code will show the legislation on the subject of the power to issue the writ of habeas corpus enacted before and since the above article was constructed in the ancient days.

Hearing and determination.—See notes under article 294, post.

The writ should be denied when it is apparent that relator is not entitled to relief. Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 751; Ex parte Branch, 31 App. 319, 39 S. W. 922.

The denial of the writ by one judge does not conclude the relator, and he may apply to another. Ex parte Strong, 34 App. 399, 50 S. W. 660, citing Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 751.

Appeal from judgment.—See art. 956, et seq., and notes.

Art. 166. [156] Before indictment, writ returnable, where, etc.—Before indictment found, the writ may be made returnable to any county in the state. [O. C. 123.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1087.

Art. 167. [157] After indictment, returnable, where, etc.—After indictment found, the writ must be made returnable in the county where the offense has been committed, on account of which the applicant stands indicted. [O. C. 124.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1087.

Where writ returnable.—Where the venue of the cause has been changed to another district than that in which the indictment was found, in a capital case, the judge of the district in which the cause is pending may hear an application for bail based upon the ground prescribed by art. 615, post. Ex parte Walker, 3 App. 666. For case distinguished, see Ex parte Springfield, 24 App. 27, 11 S. W. 667, holding statute to be imperative.

After indictment, the writ must be made returnable in the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed. Ex parte Trader, 24 App. 383, 6 S. W. 535; Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 731. And see Ex parte Springfield, 28 App. 27, 11 S. W. 667.

This article does not apply, when, by consent of relator, for the purpose of hearing the application for bail, the judges of the two district courts of the county exchanged. Ex parte Angus, 23 App. 293, 12 S. W. 1959.

After indictment found the writ of habeas corpus on application for bail is returnable in the county where the offense was committed. This is true even in a case where venue has been changed of the case in which application is made for bail. Ex parte Graham (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 932.

While the writ may be granted by any district judge, the hearing thereunder must be in the county where the indictment was found. Ex parte Overcash, 61 App. 124, 124 S. W. 700.

Petitioner having been indicted for murder in Ft. Bend county, the venue was changed to Harris county. He applied to the district judge of Ft. Bend county for a writ of habeas corpus sur sur, but the judge refused to grant the writ because of alleged disqualification, whereupon petitioner applied to the district judge of Fayette county, who granted the writ and made it returnable in Fayette county. Held that, under the rule that a writ of habeas corpus may be granted by any district judge, but must be heard in the county where the indictment was found, the judge granting the writ had no jurisdiction to hear it in Fayette county. Ex parte Andrews (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 621.

Art. 168. [158] When the applicant is charged with felony.—In all cases where a person is confined on a charge of felony, and indictment has been found against him, he may apply to the judge of the district court for the district in which he is indicted; or, if there be no judge within the district, then to the judge of any district whose residence is nearest to the court house of the county in which the applicant is held in custody. [O. C. 125.]

See notes under the following article.

Jurisdiction.—After indictment found for felony, the application for the writ of habeas corpus must be made to the judge of the district in which the indictment was found. Ex parte Ainsworth, 11 Tex. 751.

This article is merely directory. Ex parte Angus, 24 App. 399, 50 S. W. 660.

The writ can be awarded by the judge of another district, but must be made
Art. 168. PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES (Title 3)

returnable for hearing in the county of the offense. Ex parte Trader, 24 App. 393, 6 S. W. 533; Ex parte Springfield, 28 App. 177, 11 S. W. 677.

The county judge has no power to discharge one charged with a capital felony. Letcher v. Crandell, 18 Civ. App. 62, 44 S. W. 197.

Art. 169. [159] When the applicant is charged with misdemeanor.—In all cases where a person is confined on a charge of misdemeanor, he may apply to the county judge of the county in which the misdemeanor is charged to have been committed, or, if there be no county judge in said county, then to the county judge whose residence is nearest to the court house of the county in which the applicant is held in custody.

This and the preceding article, while not mandatory in their language, clearly indicate that, before a person detained upon a charge of misdemeanor can properly resort to the court of appeals for a writ of habeas corpus, he should apply for the writ to the county judge of the county in which the offense was committed, or if there be no county judge in such county, then to the nearest judge or court competent to grant the same. It is not a sufficient excuse for not making application to the local judge, that he is prejudiced against the applicant or his case, and would not administer the law impartially. If the judge refuses the writ, the applicant is not without his remedy. Another judge or court competent to grant it can be applied to. If the judge grants the writ, but upon a hearing thereof refuses to grant the relief to which the applicant may be entitled, he then has his remedy by appeal. Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 120; Ex parte Gregory, 20 App. 219, 64 Am. Rep. 516.

This and the preceding article, while not mandatory, clearly indicate that the application for the writ should primarily be made to the local judge or court competent to grant the same, if there be such, and if none such, then to the nearest court or judge competent to grant the same. Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 129.

— Court of appeals.—See arts. 69, 84, ante, and notes.

Art. 170. [160] Proceedings under the writ.—When application has been made to a judge under the circumstances set forth in the two preceding articles, it shall be his duty to appoint a time when he will examine the cause of the applicant, and issue the writ returnable at that time, in the county where the offense is charged in the indictment or information to have been committed. He shall also specify some place in the county where he will hear the application. [O. C. 129.]

See arts. 169 and 167, and notes.

Art. 171. [161] The time appointed for hearing.—The time so appointed shall be the earliest day which the judge can devote to hearing the cause of the applicant, consistently with other duties. [O. C. 127.]

Art. 172. [162] Who may present petition for relief.—Either the party for whose relief the writ is intended, or any person for him, may present a petition to the proper authority for the purpose of obtaining relief. [O. C. 128.]

Art. 173. [163] The word “applicant” refers to.—The word “applicant,” as used in this chapter, refers to the person for whose relief the writ is asked, though, as above provided, the petition may be signed and presented by any other person. [O. C. 129.]

Art. 174. [164] Requisites of petition.—The petition must state substantially—

1. That the person for whose benefit the application is made is illegally restrained in his liberty, and by whom—naming both parties, if their names are known, or, if unknown, designating and describing them.

2. When the party is confined or restrained by virtue of any writ, order or process, or under color of either, a copy shall be annexed to the petition, or it shall be stated that a copy can not be obtained.

3. When the confinement or restraint is not by virtue of any writ, order or process, the petition may state only that the party is illegally confined or restrained of his liberty.

4. There must be a prayer in the petition for the writ of habeas corpus.

5. Oath must be made that the allegations of the petition are true, according to the belief of the petitioner. [O. C. 130.]

Cited, Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 265, 131 S. W. 1113.

Requisites of petition.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1081-1083.

If the application be under article 165, after conviction it must show expressly that any species of confinement will endanger the life of the applicant. Thomas v. State, 46 Tex. 6.

If the detention is to be by virtue of a commitment issued by order of a court, a copy must be annexed, and a statement that such copy "can not be obtained without delay" will not be ex. Thomas v. State, 46 Tex. 6.

Petition as pleading and not evidence.—The application or petition is a mere pleading, and is not evidence of the facts therein stated. Ex parte Welburn, 79 App. 464, 157 S. W. 154; Ex parte Robertson, 63 App. 250, 149 S. W. 93; Ex parte Thomas (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 601; Ex parte Barnes (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 728, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1156.

Time for application.—A writ of habeas corpus applied for on the morning of the day on which the case was set for trial held properly denied; no sufficient reason being shown why relator did not sooner apply therefor. Muldrew v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 166.

Application to obtain bail.—See notes to art. 184, post.

Art. 175. [165] The writ shall be granted without delay, unless, etc.—The writ of habeas corpus shall be granted without delay by the judge or court receiving the petition, unless it be manifest by the statements of the petition itself, or some documents annexed to it, that the party is entitled to no relief whatever. [O. C. 131.]

Grant or refusal of writ.—See ante, art. 165, and notes.

Under former laws (Hart. Dig., art. 1576), it seems the writ was not a matter of right, but the judge must have "probable cause to believe" that the applicant was detained without lawful authority. Jordan v. State, 14 Tex. 436. But under the law as it now is, the writ is one of right, yet if the petition or documents annexed show that the applicant is entitled to no relief, the writ may and should be refused. But the writ should not be refused, except it clearly appears that the applicant is not entitled to relief. Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 731.

And generally as to when writ will lie, see Ex parte Degener, 30 App. 566, 17 S. W. 1111, and notes to art. 160, ante.

Appeal from judgment.—See art. 959, et seq., and notes.

Art. 176. [166] Writ may be issued without application.—A judge of the district or county court who has knowledge that any person is illegally confined or restrained in his liberty within his district or county may, if the case be one within his jurisdiction, issue the writ of habeas corpus, without any application being made for the same. [O. C. 132.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1087.

Art. 177. [167] Judge may issue a warrant of arrest, when.—Whenever it shall be made to appear, by satisfactory evidence, to a judge of the court of appeals, or a judge of the district or county court, that any one is held in illegal confinement or custody, and there is good reason to believe that he will be carried out of the state, or suffer some irreparable injury before he can obtain relief in the usual course of law, or whenever the writ of habeas corpus has been issued and disregarded, the said judges, or either of them, if the case be one in which they have power to grant the writ of habeas corpus, may issue a warrant to any peace officer, or to any person specially named by said judge, directing him to take and bring such person before such judge, to be dealt with according to law. [O. C. 133.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1088.

Extradition.—See arts. 1088-1105, post.

The warrant of arrest in this state should show on its face that it was issued on the requisition of the governor of the demanding state. And, quere, whether the warrant should not set out the information or indictment? Ex parte Thornton, 9 Tex. 560.

A requisition from the governor of another state for the arrest of a fugitive from justice to this state is sufficient to authorize the governor of Texas to issue order of arrest, and, in such case, habeas corpus only is available to the prisoner to show that the presumption upon which the governor of Texas acted was unfounded in fact. Hibler v. State, 43 Tex. 197.
Art. 177  PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENSES

Rule where fugitive escapes and returns after having been once arrested, see Ex parte Hobbs, 32 App. 312, 22 S. W. 1055, 49 Am. St. Rep. 782.

When the applicant is arrested under executive warrant upon an interstate requisition for extradition, the validity of the indictment cannot be inquired into on habeas corpus trial. Ex parte Pearse, 32 App. 361, 23 S. W. 15.

Complaint on information and belief and not on personal knowledge is wholly insufficient to support a warrant of extradition, and relator should be discharged. Ex parte Rowland, 35 App. 108, 31 S. W. 651.

A fugitive from the justice of a sister state, was illegally brought into Texas by citizens of Mexico. The officers of Texas were not parties to the illegal conduct, and in fact arrested the fugitive on their attention being called to his presence in the state. Subsequently the Governor of Texas honored a requisition of the Governor of the sister state. Held, that the fugitive was not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Wilson, 68 App. 281, 140 S. W. 98, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

Where extradition papers are regular on their face, and no error in arresting the relator for extradition is alleged in the record, the judgment remanding him to custody after the denial of habeas corpus will be affirmed on appeal. Ex parte Iles, 72 App. 530, 162 S. W. 1150.

The court, on habeas corpus by one in custody under a requisition warrant for his arrest as a fugitive from the justice of another state, will not go into the facts of his guilt or innocence of the offense charged by the demanding state. Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

An extradition warrant for the arrest of a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state makes a prima facie case on habeas corpus for the discharge of accused, and the burden is on him to show that the warrant was not legally issued. Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

An extradition warrant, which recites that the demand was accompanied by a "copy of an affidavit duly certified as authentic by the Governor of the demanding state," is sufficient on habeas corpus. Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

An extradition warrant, which recites that accused stands charged by complaint before the proper authorities of the demanding state and that the demand is accompanied by a copy of a complaint sworn to before a justice of the peace, duly certified as authentic by the Governor of the demanding state, presents a prima facie case of the authority of a justice of the peace to act as magistrate, and accused has the burden of showing the contrary to obtain his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

Where accused detained under an extradition warrant sought his discharge on habeas corpus and showed that two indictments found in the state were pending against him, the court must order the detention of accused until the indictments are disposed of, with direction for his delivery under the extradition warrant. Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

See generally, Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 288; Ex parte Lake, 37 App. 656, 40 S. W. 727, 66 Am. St. Rep. 848; Ex parte White, 39 App. 497, 46 S. W. 639.

Art. 178.  [168] The person having custody of the prisoner may be arrested, when.—Where it appears by the proof offered, under circumstances mentioned in the preceding article, that the person charged with having illegal custody of the prisoner is, by such act, guilty of an offense against the law, the judge may, in the warrant, order that he be arrested and brought before him; and, upon examination, he may be committed, discharged, or held to bail, as the law and the nature of the case may require.  [O. C. 134.]

Art. 179.  [169] Proceedings under the warrant.—The officer charged with the execution of the warrant shall bring the persons therein mentioned before the judge or court issuing the same, who shall inquire into the cause of the imprisonment or restraint, and make an order thereon, as in cases of habeas corpus, according to the rules laid down in this chapter, either remanding into custody, discharging or admitting to bail the party so imprisoned or restrained.  [O. C. 135.]

Return.—In answer to the writ, the respondent must actually produce the body of the alleged restrained person, if in his custody or under his control, the only exception being that prescribed by post, art. 191, of disqualifying sickness, in which case, the verity of such return will be critically inquired into. Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 286.

Art. 180.  [170] Officer executing warrant may exercise same power, etc.—The same power may be exercised by the officer executing the warrant (and in like manner) in cases arising under the foregoing articles as is exercised in the execution of warrants of arrest according to the provisions of this Code. [O. C. 136.]

Execution of warrants of arrest.—Post, arts. 265, et seq., and notes.

Art. 181. [171] The words "confined," "imprisoned," etc., refer to, etc.—The words, "confined," "imprisoned," "in custody," "confinement," "imprisonment," refer, not only to the actual, corporeal and forcible detention of a person, but likewise to any and all coercive measures by threats, menaces or the fear of injury, whereby one person exercises a control over the person of another, and detains him within certain limits. [O. C. 137.]

Imprisonment, etc.—Imprisonment to enforce punishment by fine means actual imprisonment within the jail. Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400. See also, Ex parte Wyatt, 29 App. 298, 18 S. W. 301.

One does not serve out the term of his imprisonment by not enlargement on bond pending habeas corpus proceedings. Ex parte Branch, 37 App. 315, 39 S. W. 932.

Restrain precluding absolute freedom of action is sufficient. Ex parte Snodgrass, 43 App. 359, 65 S. W. 1061; Ex parte Foster, 44 App. 423, 71 S. W. 593, 60 L. R. A. 631, 100 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Custody of minor.—See notes to art. 160, ante.

Art. 182. [172] By restraint, is meant, etc.—By "restraint," is meant the kind of control which one person exercises over another, not to confine him within certain limits, but to subject him to the general authority and power of the person claiming such right. [O. C. 138.]

Restraint.—Any character or kind of restraint that precludes an absolute and perfect freedom of action on the part of a person authorizes him to make application to court of criminal appeals for release from said restraint. Art. 183. [173] The writ of habeas corpus is intended to be applicable, when.—The writ of habeas corpus is intended to be applicable to all such cases of confinement and restraint, where there is no lawful right in the person exercising the power, or where, though the power in fact exists, it is exercised in a manner or degree not sanctioned by law. [O. C. 139.]

Cases in which remedy may be invoked.—See art. 160 and notes; art. 224 and notes.

The right to the writ does not depend upon the legality or illegality of the original citation, but of the present detention. The purpose of the writ is not to punish the respondent, or to afford redress for the illegal detention, but only to relieve from illegal restraint. Hernandez v. State, 4 App. 425.  And as to excessive bail, see Ex parte Wilson, 20 App. 498; Ex parte Tittle, 37 App. 597, 40 S. W. 598.

Art. 185.  [175] Person afflicted with disease may be removed, when.—When a judge or court authorized to grant writs of habeas corpus shall be satisfied, upon investigation, that a person in legal custody is afflicted with a disease which will render a removal necessary for the preservation of life, an order may be made for the removal of the prisoner to some other place where his health will not be likely to suffer; or he may be admitted to bail, when it appears that any species of confinement will endanger his life.  [O. C. 141.]

Forms.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1094, 1102.

Danger to life or health as cause for removal or bail.—If the application for the writ be after conviction, it must expressly show that any species of confinement will endanger the life of the applicant.  Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 6.  And see Ex parte Tittle, 37 App. 597, 40 S. W. 598.

A party who is in legal custody, and is afflicted with disease rendering his removal necessary, is entitled to the writ, and for this ground he is entitled to the writ, although he has previously resorted to the writ upon other grounds.  Ex parte Wilson, 20 App. 498.

"Legal custody" referred to in this article does not contemplate release after conviction of a felony; but article 901 controls this matter, and in a felony case when defendant is convicted he must stay in jail until his case is decided by court of criminal appeals.  Ex parte Smith (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 1052.

That one confined in jail on a murder charge is suffering from melancholia caused by his confinement, together with the charge against him, is not ground for his release on bail under this article.  Ex parte Johnson, 60 App. 50, 131 S. W. 316, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916.

3.  SERVICE AND RETURN OF THE WRIT, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON

Art. 186.  [176] Who may serve writ.—The service of the writ may be made by any person competent to testify.  [O. C. 143.]

As to persons competent to testify, see post, art. 788.

Art. 187.  [177] How writ may be served and returned.—The writ may be served by delivering a copy of the original to the person who is charged with having the party under restraint or in custody, and exhibiting the original, if demanded; if he refuse to receive it, he shall be informed verbally of the purport of the writ.  If he refuses admittance to the person wishing to make the service, or conceals himself, a copy of the writ may be fixed upon some conspicuous part of the house where such person resides or conceals himself, or of the place where the prisoner is confined; and the person serving the writ of habeas corpus shall, in all cases, state fully, in making the return, the manner and the time of the service of the writ.  [O. C. 144.]

Forms of returns.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1092-1096.

Art. 188.  [178] The return shall be under oath, if made by a person other than an officer.—The return of a writ of habeas corpus, under the provisions of the preceding article, if made by any person other than an officer, shall be under oath.  [O. C. 145.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1096.

Art. 189.  [179] The person on whom the writ is served shall obey same, etc.—The person on whom the writ of habeas corpus is served shall immediately obey the same, and make the return required by law upon the copy of the original writ served on him, and this, whether the writ be directed to him or not.  [O. C. 146.]

Where there is a refusal to obey, see post, arts. 194, 195.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1097.
Art. 190. [180] How the returns shall be made.—The return is made by stating in plain language upon the copy of the writ or some paper connected with it—
1. Whether it is true or not, according to the statement of the petition, that he has in his custody, or under his restraint, the person named or described in such petition.
2. By virtue of what authority, or for what cause, he took and detains such person.
3. If he had such person in his custody, or under restraint at any time before the service of the writ, and has transferred him to the custody of another, he shall state particularly to whom, at what time, for what reason or by what authority he made such transfer.
4. He shall annex to his return the writ or warrant by virtue of which he holds the person in custody, if any writ or warrant there be.
5. The return must be signed and sworn to by the person making it. [O. C. 147, 148.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1097.

Art. 191. [181] The person in custody shall be brought before the judge, etc.—The person on whom the writ is served shall bring also before the judge the person in his custody, or under his restraint, unless it be made to appear that, by reason of sickness, he can not be removed; in which case, another day may be appointed by the judge or court for hearing the cause, and for the production of the person confined; or the application may be heard and decided without the production of the person detained, by the consent of his counsel. [O. C. 149.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1097.
Production of body.—Body of applicant must be produced, or good reason shown why it is not. Ex parte Coupland, 36 Tex. 386.

Art. 192. [182] Custody of prisoner pending examination on habeas corpus.—When the return of the writ has been made, and the applicant brought before the court, he is no longer detained on the original warrant or process, but under the authority of the habeas corpus; and the safe keeping of the prisoner, pending the examination or hearing, is entirely under the direction and authority of the judge or court issuing the writ, or to which the return is made. He may be bailed from day to day, or be remanded to the same jail whence he came, or to any other place of safe keeping under the control of the judge or court, till the case is finally determined.
See Cr. Proc., § 2.
Jurisdiction and control over prisoner.—The person of the relator being produced by the respondent, the court acquires absolute jurisdiction of the applicant; and the original cause of commitment is suspended until the case is disposed of. State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 106. The jurisdiction of the court granting the writ cannot be superseded by curing defects in a void judgment or order by entry thereof. Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 531, 34 S. W. 605; Id., 35 App. 624, 34 S. W. 962.
The control of the court over the prisoner ceases when it has made its final order, and the applicant cannot be admitted to bail pending an appeal. Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 288.
Custody pending appeal.—See notes to art. 950, post.

Art. 193. [183] The court shall allow reasonable time.—The court or judge granting the writ of habeas corpus shall allow reasonable time for the production of the person detained in custody. [O. C. 150.]

Art. 194. [184] Person having the illegal custody of another who refuses to obey the writ, etc., shall be punished, how.—When service has been made upon a person charged with the illegal custody of another, if he refuses to obey the writ and make the return required by law, or, if he refuses to receive the writ, or conceals himself, the court or judge issuing the writ shall issue a warrant directed to any officer or other suitable person willing to execute the same, commanding him to arrest the person charged with the illegal custody or detention of another, and bring him before such court or judge; and, when such person shall have been arrested and brought before the court or judge, if he still refuses to return the writ, or do not produce the person in his custody, he shall be committed to prison, and remain there until he is willing to obey the writ of habeas corpus, and until he pays all the costs of the proceeding. [O. C. 151.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1089, 1103.

Contempt in disobeying writ.—Interference with the officer charged with the execution of the order is an offense, irrespective of the intention of the party committing it, and a plea of ignorance is not admissible. In all cases it is the duty of the party to whom the writ is directed to answer it. State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 705. And further on what constitutes contempt in disobeying writ, see Ex parte Lake, 37 App. 656, 40 S. W. 727, 66 Am. St. Rep. 848.

Art. 195. [185] Further penalty, etc., for disobeying writ.—Any person disobeying the writ of habeas corpus shall also be liable to a civil action at the suit of the party detained, and shall pay in such suit fifty dollars for each day of illegal detention and restraint, after service of the writ, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction; and it shall be deemed that a person has disobeyed the writ who detains a prisoner a longer time than three days after service thereof, and one additional day for every twenty miles he must necessarily travel in carrying the person held from the place of his detention to the place where the application is to be heard, unless where further time is allowed in the writ for making the return thereto. [O. C. 152.]

See ante, art. 177; post, art. 222.

Art. 196. [186] Applicant for writ may be brought before court.—In case of the disobedience of the writ of habeas corpus, the person for whose relief it is intended may also be brought before the court or judge having competent authority, by an order for that purpose, issued to any peace officer or other proper person specially named. [O. C. 153.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1088.

Art. 197. [187] Death, etc., of applicant sufficient return of writ.—It is a sufficient return of the writ of habeas corpus that the person, once detained, has died or escaped, or that by some superior force he has been taken from the custody of the person making the return; but where any such cause shall be assigned for not producing the applicant, the court or judge shall proceed to hear testimony; and the facts so stated in the return shall be proved by satisfactory evidence. [O. C. 154.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1088.

Art. 198. [188] Proceedings when a prisoner dies.—When a prisoner confined in jail, or who is in legal custody, shall die, the officer having charge of him shall forthwith report the same to a justice of the peace of the county, who shall hold an inquest to ascertain the cause of his death, which may be done by calling any number of physicians and surgeons. All the proceedings had in such cases shall be reduced to writing, certified and returned as in other cases of inquest: a certified copy of which proceedings shall be sufficient proof of the death of the prisoner at the hearing of an application under habeas corpus. [O. C. 158.]

See Inquests, post, ch. 1, title, 13.

Art. 199. [189] Who shall represent the state in habeas corpus cases.—In felony cases, it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the district where the case is pending, if there be one and he be present, to represent the state in the proceeding by habeas corpus. If no district attorney be present, the county attorney, if present, shall represent the state; if neither of said officers be present, the court or judge may appoint some well qualified practicing attorney to represent the state, who shall be paid the same fee as is allowed district attorneys for like services. [O. C. 156.]

Art. 200. [190] Prisoner shall be discharged, when.—The judge or court before whom a person is brought by writ of habeas corpus shall examine the writ and the papers attached to it: and, if no legal cause be shown for the imprisonment or restraint, or, if it appear that the imprisonment or restraint, though at first legal, can not for any cause be lawfully prolonged, the applicant shall be discharged. [O. C. 157.]

Discharge in extradition cases.—See notes to art. 177, ante.

Procedure.—The return disclosing that a magistrate in assuming to finally try the relator had exceeded his jurisdiction the court will examine witnesses concerning the accusation. Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 472.

Art. 201. [191] Where party is indicted for capital offense.—If it appear by the return and papers attached that the party stands indicted for a capital offense, the judge or court having jurisdiction of the case shall, nevertheless, proceed to hear such testimony as may be offered on the part, both of the applicant and the state, and may either remand the defendant or admit him to bail, as the law and the facts of the case may justify. [O. C. 158.]

Right to bail.—See notes under article 6, ante.

For rule to determine relator's right to bail, see Ex parte Evers, 29 App. 539, 16 S. W. 243. And see Ex parte Miller, 41 Tex. 243.

Burden of proof.—See notes to art. 6, ante.

Admissibility of testimony on final trial.—See notes to art. 4, ante, and art. 834, post.

Art. 202. [192] When court has no jurisdiction.—If it appear by the return and papers attached that the case is one over which the judge or court has no jurisdiction, such court or judge shall at once remand the applicant to the person from whose custody he has been taken.

Ante, art. 160 and notes.

Jurisdiction to issue writ.—See arts. 69, 84, 85, 92, 100, 165, ante, and notes.

Art. 203. [193] Where no indictment has been found, etc.—In all cases where no indictment has been found, it shall not be deemed that any presumption of guilt has arisen from the mere fact that a criminal accusation has been made before a competent authority. [O. C. 159.]

Art. 204. [194] Action of court upon examination.—The judge or court, after having examined the return and all documents attached, and heard the testimony offered on both sides, shall, according to the facts and circumstances of the case, proceed either to remand the party into custody, admit him to bail or discharge him; provided, that no defendant shall be discharged after indictment without bail. [O. C. 160.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1099-1101.

Determination of case.—If the party has been released from custody previous to the service of the writ, its object has been accomplished and the court will make no order on the subject. Ex parte Coupland, 28 Tex. 286.

The questions both of law and fact are for the determination of the judge. McFarland v. Johnson, 27 Tex. 365; Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 378, 13 S. W. 141.
The return disclosing that a magistrate, in assuming to finally try the relator, had exceeded his jurisdiction, the court will examine witnesses concerning the accusation. Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 472.

This statute is mandatory and the court cannot discharge an applicant in habeas corpus proceeding when the facts show that he has been indicted by a legally constituted or authorized court and that the court can do no more than to hold if proper showing is made that it is excessive. Ex parte Bishop (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 608 following Hernandez v. State, 4 App. 425; Parker v. State, 5 App. 579, as to bail.

Where one is under indictment for an offense under an original application for habeas corpus to the court of criminal appeals, the court will not inquire into the case further than to ascertain and fix the amount of bail. The court will not constitute itself a trial court. Wright v. State (Cr. App.) 90 S. W. 24.

An order of a district judge on habeas corpus, whether with or without evidence, discharging a person held to answer before the grand jury, on the grand jury adjourning without indicting him for lack of time, was of binding force and effect on all the parties concerned. Ex parte Haubelt, 57 App. 512, 123 S. W. 607.

The court, on habeas corpus for the discharge of one convicted at a term of court not authorized by law, cannot assume that the indictment against him was returned at a term not authorized by law, and the court will remand him to the custody of the proper officer, for further proceedings in accordance with law. Hardin v. State, 57 App. 401, 123 S. W. 613.

Appeal from decision.—See art. 950 post, and notes.

Art. 205. [195] If the commitment be informal or void, etc.—If it shall appear that the applicant is detained or held under a warrant of commitment which is informal, or void; yet, if from the document on which the warrant was based, or from the proof on the hearing of the habeas corpus, it appears that there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed by the prisoner, he shall not be discharged, but shall be committed or held to bail by the court or judge trying the application under habeas corpus. [O. C. 161.]

Defective complaint.—See notes under article 160, ante.

See a case where a prisoner was discharged, because of uncertainty in the description of the offense attempted to be charged against him. Republic v. Bynum, Dallam, 376.

Merely that the complaint on which he was arrested was defective, will not entitle a relator to discharge. Ex parte Beverly, 24 App. 464, 52 S. W. 465. But compare Ex parte Rowland, 35 App. 108, 31 S. W. 651.

Invalidity of extradition complaint or warrant.—See notes to art. 177, ante.

Art. 206. [196] If there be probable cause to believe an offense has been committed.—Where, upon an examination under habeas corpus, it shall appear to the court or judge that there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed by the prisoner, he shall not be discharged, but shall be committed or admitted to bail, according to the facts and circumstances of the case. [O. C. 162.]

Ex parte Haubelt, 57 App. 512, 123 S. W. 607.

Evidence to hold prisoner.—Though the indictment be invalid, if the facts established sustain the charge, the court will not discharge the relator, but will hold him to the next term of the district court to answer any indictment that may be returned against him. Ex parte Swain, 19 App. 322; Ex parte Walc, 25 App. 185, 7 S. W. 665.

For evidence to hold one on a charge of theft, see Ex parte Walc, 25 App. 185, 7 S. W. 665.

Even if the evidence disclosed in the record on a habeas corpus makes it doubtful whether a conviction can be had, yet it may be sufficient to hold the accused for the action of a grand jury. Ex parte Oakley, 54 App. 608, 114 S. W. 131.

Under this article, the court may consider evidence which would not be admissible at trial, where the deficiencies in the evidence could be cured and competent evidence of the same facts secured. Ex parte Lambert (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 733.

Art. 207. [197] The court may summon the magistrate who issued the warrant.—For the purpose of ascertaining the grounds on which an informal or void warrant has been issued, the judge or court may cause to be summoned the magistrate who issued the warrant, and may, by an order, require him to bring with him all the papers and proceedings touching the matter. The attendance of such magistrate and the production of such papers may be enforced by warrant of arrest, if necessary. [O. C. 163.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1090, 1091.

Art. 208. [198] A written issue in case under habeas corpus not necessary.—It shall not be necessary, on the trial of any cause arising under habeas corpus, to make up a written issue, though it may be done by the applicant for the writ. He may except to the sufficiency of, or controvert the return of any part thereof, or allege any new matter in avoidance. If written denial on his part be not made, it shall be considered, for the purpose of investigation, that the statements of said return are contested by a denial of the same; and the proof shall be heard accordingly, both for and against the applicant for relief. [O. C. 164.]

Art. 209. [199] The applicant shall open and conclude the argument.—The applicant shall have the right to open and conclude, by himself or counsel, the argument upon the trial under habeas corpus. [O. C. 165.]

Burden of proof.—See ante, arts. 6, 201 and notes.

Burden of proof is on the state, and this rule is not affected by the fact that the relator has the opening and conclusion of argument. Ex parte Newman, 38 App. 164, 41 S. W. 623, 50 Am. St. Rep. 749, overruling on this point Smith v. State, 25 App. 100, 5 S. W. 99. And see Ex parte Arthur (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 365.

Art. 210. [200] Costs of the proceedings, how disposed of.—The court or judge trying the cause under habeas corpus may make such order as is deemed advisable or right concerning the cost of bringing the defendant before him, and all other costs of the proceeding, awarding the same either against the person to whom the writ was directed, the person seeking relief, or may award no costs at all. [O. C. 166.]

Art. 211. [201] If the court be in session, the clerk shall record the proceedings.—If a writ of habeas corpus be made returnable before a court in session, all the proceedings had shall be entered of record by the clerk thereof, as would be done in any other case pending in such court; and, when the application is heard out of the county where the offense was committed, or in the court of appeals, the clerk shall transmit a certified copy of all the proceedings upon the application to the clerk of the court which has jurisdiction of the offense. [O. C. 167.]

Statement of facts on appeal.—See notes under article 950, post.

The preceding article does not affect at all the mode of making up and authenticating a statement of facts on appeal. The statement of facts must be made up and certified or approved by the judge as in other criminal cases. Ex parte Cole, 14 App. 579; Ex parte Barber, 16 App. 368; Ex parte Barrier, 17 App. 555. Ex parte Malone, 35 App. 297, 31 S. W. 665, 33 S. W. 360. And see also Ex parte Overstreet, 39 App. 468, 46 S. W. 929; Ex parte Williams, 39 App. 524, 47 S. W. 365, 1118; Ex parte Calvin, 40 App. 84, 48 S. W. 515.

Art. 212. [202] If the proceedings be had before a judge in vacation, etc.—If the return is made and the proceedings had before a judge of a court in vacation, he shall cause all of the proceedings to be written, shall certify to the same, and cause them to be filed with the clerk of the court which has jurisdiction of the offense, whose duty it shall be to keep them safely. [O. C. 168.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1104, p. 638.

Statement of facts.—Evidence received on a trial before a judge in vacation is no part of the proceeding mentioned in this article, and though such proceedings, properly certified by the judge, may contain all the evidence adduced at the hearing, yet such evidence cannot be considered on appeal as a statement of facts, but such statement must be made and authenticated as in other cases, independently of the judge's certificate to the proceedings. Ex parte Malone, 35 App. 297, 31 S. W. 665, 33 S. W. 360. And see Ex parte Barrier, 17 App. 555; Ex parte Wickson (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 365 and note to preceding article.
Art. 213. [203] Provisions of the two preceding articles refer to, etc.—The provisions of the two preceding articles refer only to cases where an applicant is held under accusation for some offense; in all other cases the proceedings had before the judge shall be filed and kept by the clerk of the court hearing the case. [O. C. 169.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1104.

Art. 214. [204] Court may grant all necessary orders, etc.—The court or judge granting a writ of habeas corpus may grant all necessary orders to bring before him the testimony taken before the examining court, and may issue all process for enforcing the attendance of witnesses which is allowed in any other proceedings in a criminal action. [O. C. 171.]

Diligence.—When an applicant for habeas corpus shows that he is under arrest and dealing with prejudiced sources, the use of strict diligence in procuring testimony should not be required of him. Ambrose v. State, 32 App. 468, 24 S. W. 291.

Art. 215. [205] Meaning of "return."—The word "return," as used in this chapter, refers to and means the report made by the officer or person charged with serving the writ of habeas corpus, and also the answer made by the person served with such writ.

4. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Art. 216. [206] A person discharged before the indictment shall not be again imprisoned, unless, etc.—Where a person, before indictment found against him, has been discharged or held to bail on habeas corpus by order of a court or judge of competent jurisdiction, he shall not be again imprisoned or detained in custody on an accusation for the same offense, until after he shall have been indicted, unless delivered up by his bail in order to release themselves from their liability. [O. C. 172.]

See Ex parte Porter, 16 App. 321.

Rearrest as contempt.—Re-arrest of one discharged by the district judge under habeas corpus because of non-indictment by grand jury to which he was held, constitutes contempt. Ex parte Haulbelt, 67 App. 512, 123 S. W. 607.

Art. 217. [207] A person once discharged, or admitted to bail, may be committed, when.—Where a person once discharged or admitted to bail is afterward indicted for the same offense for which he has been once arrested, he may be committed on the indictment, but shall be again entitled to the writ of habeas corpus, and may, notwithstanding the indictment, be admitted to bail, if the facts of the case render it proper; but in cases where, after indictment is found, the cause of the defendant has been investigated on habeas corpus, and an order made, either remanding him to custody, or admitting him to bail, he shall neither be subject to be again placed in custody, unless when surrendered by his bail, or when the trial of his cause commences before a petit jury, nor shall he be again entitled to the writ of habeas corpus, except in the special cases mentioned in articles 185 and 219. [O. C. 173.]

Right to second writ.—An accused, who, prior to indictment, has had a hearing under the writ of habeas corpus, is after indictment entitled to a second writ, and notwithstanding the indictment, and previous hearing upon the first writ, is entitled to bail, if the facts warrant bail. But after indictment found a second writ is not allowable, except in the special cases arising under art. 185, ante, and 219, post; Wilson v. State, 20 App. 498.

Where relator was remanded after a hearing upon a writ of habeas corpus sued out before a district court, he should have either appealed from the judgment of the district court, or, upon settling out an original application before the court of criminal appeals, should have informed that court that the writ was a second application, and stated his reason for not appealing from the judgment of the district court, as well as legal ground to sustain the second application. Ex parte Hubbard, 63 App. 516, 140 S. W. 451.

A father brought habeas corpus for his minor daughter, held by defendants, on the ground that he was the sole surviving parent, and that she was unlawfully restrained by defendants. Judgment was given against him, and he petitioned for a rehearing and for a new trial and the setting aside of the former judgment.
Chap. 8] PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF OFFENDERS Art. 220

Held, that the former judgment did not prevent him from urging in the subsequently, that his child was a Jew; that he was a Jew; that there was tuberculosis in the family of defendants; and that he feared child would contract the disease if she remained with defendants; and the judgment in the first proceeding is not res adjudicata. Patton v. Shapiro (Civ. App.) 154 S. W. 887.

Bail.—When an applicant appeals from a judgment refusing bail, and the judgment is affirmed, he is not entitled to a second writ. Miller v. State, 43 Tex. 579.

Though the action of the court is final and conclusive when rendered on appeal under habeas corpus, it will not preclude the district court having jurisdiction from afterwards entertaining a motion to reduce the amount of bail. Miller v. State, 43 Tex. 579.

The dismissal of the indictment under which bail was awarded entities the ac-

Reversal of conviction on appeal entities the accused to go at large on his original bail bond. Ex parte Guffee, 8 App. 499.

No order or judgment granting or refusing bail, while applicant is under arrest by complaint only, has any force or effect subsequent to indictment found. Ex parte Kirby, 63 App. 377, 140 S. W. 226.

Art. 218. [208] A person committed for a capital offense shall not be entitled to the writ, unless, etc.—If the accusation against the defendant for a capital offense has been heard on habeas corpus before indictment found, and he shall have been committed after such examination, he shall not be entitled to the writ, unless in the special cases mentioned in articles 185 and 219. [O. C. 174.]

Right to second writ.—The dismissal of an appeal from a judgment denying accused's application on an indictment being found for the offense charged did not affect his right to a second writ under this article. Ex parte Forney, 45 App. 254, 76 S. W. 440.

Art. 219. [209] A party may obtain the writ a second time, when, etc.—A party may obtain the writ of habeas corpus a second time by stating in application therefor that, since the hearing of his first application, important testimony has been obtained which it was not in his power to produce at the former hearing. He shall also set forth the testimony so newly discovered; and, if it be that of a witness, the affidavit of the witness shall also accompany such second application. [O. C. 175.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1686.

Second application.—See notes under articles 185, 217, and 218, ante.

See notes under article 165, ante.

An application for a second writ of habeas corpus under this article must show that since the hearing of the first application important evidence not obtainable then has been obtained, which evidence should be set out, and be substantiated by the affidavit of the witness. The application must also show diligence, and why the testimony was not available on the first hearing, and conforms substantially to the regulations of motion for a new trial. The statute confers the right of obtaining a second writ where important testimony has been obtained, which, though not newly discovered, or which, though known to the applicant, it was not in his power to produce at the former hearing. Ex parte Foster, 5 App. 625, 32 Am. Rep. 577; Ex parte Rosson, 24 App. 226, 5 S. W. 666.

If an original application is made to the court of appeals, and after the issuance of the writ the cause is abandoned, and the applicant remanded to custody, such judgment is in legal contemplation a judgment upon a hearing, and a subsequent application is a "second application." Ex parte Hilebr, 43 Tex. 197.

The statute does not apply when there has been an appeal from the first application. Miller v. State, 43 Tex. 599.

After indictment, a party is entitled to the writ, although he has before indictment, had the benefit of the writ. Ex parte Wilson, 20 App. 498.

As to where writ is returnable, see Ex parte Springfield, 23 App. 27, 11 S. W. 677, and notes to art. 187, ante.

Art. 220. [210] Officer refusing to execute writ, etc., shall be punished, etc.—Any officer to whom a writ of habeas corpus, or other writ, warrant or process authorized by this chapter shall be directed, delivered or tendered, who shall refuse to execute the same according to his directions, or who shall wantonly delay the service or execution of the same, is guilty of an offense, and shall be punished according to the provisions of the Penal Code; he shall also be liable to fine as for contempt of court. [O. C. 178.]

See Penal Code, art. 388.
Art. 221. [211] Any one having the custody of another who refuses to obey the writ, etc., shall be punished, how.—Any one having another in his custody, or under his power, control or restraint who refuses to obey a writ of habeas corpus, or who evades the service of the same, or places the person illegally detained under the control of another, removes him, or in any other manner attempts to evade the operation of the writ, is guilty of a penal offense, and shall be punished as provided in the Penal Code, and shall also be dealt with as provided in article 193 of this Code. [O. C. 178.]

Ante, arts. 194 and 195, and notes.

Explanatory.—See ante, Penal Code, arts. 872, 888. The offense mentioned in the above article does not appear to have been specifically denounced by the Penal Code.

Art. 222. [212] Any jailer, etc., who refuses to furnish a copy of process under, etc.—Any jailer, sheriff or other officer who has a prisoner in his custody and refuses, upon demand, to furnish a copy of the process under which he holds the person, is guilty of an offense. [O. C. 179.]

See ante, Penal Code, art. 294, and notes.

Art. 223. [213] Persons shall not be discharged under writ of habeas corpus, when.—No person shall be discharged under the writ of habeas corpus who is in custody by virtue of a commitment for any offense exclusively cognizable by the courts of the United States, or by order or process issuing out of such courts in cases where they have jurisdiction, or who is held by virtue of any legal engagement or enlistment in the army, or who, being rightfully subject to the rules and articles of war, is confined by any one legally acting under the authority thereof, or who is held as a prisoner of war under the authority of the United States. [O. C. 180.]

Conscript laws of confederate states.—For decisions under the conscript laws of the Confederate States, see State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 765; Ex parte Blumer, Id. 734; Ex parte Mayer, Id. 715; Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 886; Ex parte Turman, 26 Tex. 708, 84 Am. Dec. 598.

Art. 224. [214] This chapter applies to what cases.—This chapter applies to all cases of habeas corpus for the enlargement of persons illegally held in custody, or in any manner restrained of their personal liberty, for the admission of prisoners to bail, and for the discharge of prisoners before indictment, upon a hearing of the testimony. Instead of the writ of habeas corpus in other cases where heretofore used, a simple order shall be substituted. [O. C. 181.]

Ante, art. 160 and notes. For other decisions pertinent to habeas corpus, see ante, art. 6 and notes.

Habeas corpus as civil or criminal proceeding.—A proceeding by habeas corpus when not used to relieve against restraint under a criminal charge, cannot in the proper sense of the term, be regarded as a civil suit; it should rather, it seems, be held the exercise of a special jurisdiction conferred by the constitution and laws upon either the courts or judges for the prompt relief of the citizen against any improper interference with his personal liberty. McFarland v. Johnson, 27 Tex. 105.

Habeas corpus to determine a parent's right to a minor child is a civil and not a criminal proceeding. Legate v. Legate, 57 Tex. 248; 28 S. W. 281; Telschek v. Fritsch, 33 App. 45; 40 S. W. 593; Ex parte Reed, 34 App. 9, 28 S. W. 695; Ex parte Berry, 34 App. 36, 28 S. W. 806.

Appeal in habeas corpus.—See post, arts. 950-959, inclusive.

Article 225. [215] For treason and forgery.—An indictment for treason may be presented within twenty years, and for forgery, or the uttering, using or passing of forged instruments, within ten years from the time of the commission of the offense, and not afterward. [O. C. 182.]

Historical.—The original article read, for "murder or forgery," but was amended as above in revising in 1879.

Statutes of limitations in general.—A conviction will be set aside when the evidence shows, though inadvertently, that the indictment was not found within the time limited for prosecution. Bingham v. State, 2 App. 21.

Statutes of limitation are to be construed liberally in favor of accused. White v. State, 4 App. 488.

Acts of limitations, being acts affecting the remedy only, are peculiarly within the scope of legislative action and control, and are regulated by no inflexible rules as to the time prescribed within which they are to operate. They may be changed or may be fixed, arbitrarily at any time, so as they are not made to apply to rights already vested. Moore v. State, 20 App. 275.

Failure to prove the time of commission of the offense is fatal to a conviction. Stichtd v. State, 26 App. 420, 8 S. W. 477, 8 Am. St. Rep. 444.

Instructions.—While it is incumbent on the state to prove an offense not barred by limitation, but when nothing in the evidence raises a doubt whether the prosecution was barred, there is no occasion for instructions to the jury on the subject. Vincent v. State, 10 App. 339; Cohen v. State, 20 App. 224; Hoy v. State, 11 App. 32. But see a state of facts which demand such a charge, and wherein an insufficient charge was given. Wimberly v. State, 22 App. 506, 3 S. W. 717.

Article 226. [216] For rape, one year.—An indictment for the offense of rape may be presented within one year, and not afterward. [O. C. 184.]

Rape.—A prosecution for rape is barred unless the indictment is presented within one year after the commission of the offense. Anschicks v. State, 6 App. 524; Carr v. State, 56 App. 390, 37 S. W. 426; Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 62 S. W. 1060. After indictment the cause can be continued indefinitely. Carr v. State, 56 App. 391, 37 S. W. 426.

Several acts of intercourse.—Where several acts of intercourse were shown, all of which were barred by limitations except one, alleged in the indictment and relied upon in the trial, a charge that if accused had more than one act of intercourse with prosecutrix, and the first act occurred more than one year before filing the indictment, he should be acquitted, was properly refused. Eckermann v. State, 57 App. 287, 123 S. W. 424.

Assault with intent to rape.—An assault with intent to rape is not barred until the lapse of three years after the commission of the offense. Moore v. State, 20 App. 275.

Article 227. [217] For theft, etc., five years.—An indictment for theft punishable as a felony, arson, burglary, robbery and counterfeiting may be presented within five years, and not afterward. [O. C. 183.]

Showing in indictment.—An indictment for burglary, alleging that the offense was committed on April 13, and that "One Thousand Nine Hundred One dollars," and ante­rior to the presentment of the indictment, which was filed August 30, 1910, shows on its face that the offense was barred by limitations prior to the return of the indictment, and is therefore insufficient. Bradford v. State, 62 App. 424, 138 S. W. 119.

Evidence.—Evidence that a crime was committed in "84", the year 1884 being within the period of limitation, is sufficient proof that the crime was committed within the period. Wolfe v. State, 25 App. 655, 9 S. W. 44.

Art. 228. [218] Other felonies.—An indictment for all other felonies may be presented within three years from the commission of the offense, and not afterward; except murder, for which an indictment may be presented at any time. [O. C. 185.]

Historical.—This article was amended in revising by adding to the original article the words "except murder, for which an indictment may be presented at any time."

Murder.—Though an indictment for murder is never barred yet it should show that death occurred within a year and a day after the injury. Edmonson v. State, 41 Tex. 496; Sutton v. State, 1d. 513; Hardin v. State, 4 App. 553; Strickland v. State, 19 App. 518; Cudd v. State, 28 App. 124, 12 S. W. 1910.

—A prosecution for manslaughter is barred if not presented within three years after the commission of the offense, even though the indictment under which the conviction was had was for murder. White v. State, 4 App. 488; Temple v. State, 15 App. 294, 49 Am. Rep. 200.

Assault with intent to murder.—Assault with intent to murder is barred by this article, and a conviction cannot be had for such offense under an indictment for murder presented after the limitation period has elapsed. Moore v. State, 29 App. 275; Fulcher v. State, 33 App. 22, 24 S. W. 292.

Assault with intent to rape.—See notes to article 226, ante.

Embezzlement.—An indictment for embezzlement may not be presented after three years. Cohen v. State, 29 App. 224.

Prosecutrix delivered to defendant certain money to be invested on October 15, 1902. On December 6th she let him have $60 more for the same purpose. He deposited $50 in the bank, and thereafter at various times withdrew different sums from the bank and appropriated the same, and on December 17, 1902, attempted to conceal such fact from prosecutrix by forging a note which he represented had been received for a loan of the money. When it was later discovered that the note was a forgery, defendant fled the country, and was later returned and prosecuted; the indictment being returned October 28, 1905, and the embezzle­ment fixed as of December 13, 1902, when he claimed he had loaned the money to W. on a note and mortgage. Held that, since such concealment was the first manifestation of defendant’s attempt to embezzle the funds, the offense was not complete until that time, and it was therefore not barred by limitations. Hamer v. State, 69 App. 341, 131 S. W. 813.

Selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory.—In a prosecution for pur­veying intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, the instruc­tions should have been to convict, if defendant pursued the business at any time prior to the indictment and subsequent to the date of the publication of the order following the prohibition election, where that date was within three years before the 18th amendment, and the court should instruct the jury to convict de­fendant if he pursued the business within three years prior to the indictment. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 252.

Art. 229. [219] Misdemeanors, two years.—For all misde­meanors, an indictment or information may be presented within two years from the commission of the offense, and not afterward. [O. C. 186.]

Cited Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 784.

Misdemeanors in general.—One charged with a misdemeanor may, as a general rule, be convicted for any violation occurring within two years prior to the return of the indictment. Matthews v. State, 57 App. 325, 122 S. W. 144. But a complaint for a misdemeanor filed after the period of limitations has expired is without authority of law. Ex parte Hoard, 63 App. 519, 110 S. W. 449.

Negligent homicide.—Negligent homicide is barred after the lapse of two years from its commission. Whitaker v. State, 32 App. 436.

Adultery is barred in two years. Mitten v. State, 24 App. 246, 6 S. W. 196. And the period of limitation runs from the commission of the offense and the filing of the complaint, and not from the subsequent filing of the information. Proctor v. State, 37 App. 366, 35 S. W. 172.

Where defendant’s niece by marriage, with whom he was alleged to have com­mitted adultery, testified that the acts of intercourse had been going on for two years prior to a date within the period of limitations, the admission of the evidence was not error as testimony of acts the prosecution for which was barred by the statute, where the court charged that there could be no conviction for acts com
Art. 233. [233] An information is "presented," when.—An information is to be considered as "presented" when it has been filed by the proper officer in the proper court. [O. C. 189.]

Instructions on question of limitations, see art. 735.

CHAPTER TWO

OF THE COUNTY WITHIN WHICH OFFENSES MAY BE PROSECUTED

Art. 234. For offenses committed wholly or in part without the state.

Art. 235. Forgery and uttering forged papers.

Art. 236. Counterfeiting.

Art. 237. Perjury and false swearing.

Art. 238. Offenses committed on the boundary of two counties.

Art. 239. Person dying out of the state of an injury inflicted in the state.

Art. 240. Person within the state inflicting injury on another out of the state.

Art. 241. Person without the state inflicting an injury on one within the state.

Art. 242. An offense committed on a stream, the boundary of this state.

Art. 243. Person receiving an injury in one county and dying in another, offender, where prosecuted.

Art. 244. An offense committed on a stream, etc., the boundary between two counties, punishable where.

Art. 245. Property stolen in one county and carried to another.

Art. 246. Mortgaged property taken from one county and unlawfully disposed of in another, offender prosecuted where.

Art. 247. Accomplices and accessories.

Art. 248. Receiving, etc., stolen property.

Art. 249. Offenses committed out of the state by commissioner of deeds.

Art. 250. Offenses on vessels within the state.

Art. 251. Offense of embezzlement.

Art. 252. False imprisonment, kidnapping and abduction.

Art. 253. Conspiracy,
Art. 234. [224] For offenses committed wholly or in part without the state.—Prosecutions for offenses committed wholly or in part without, and made punishable by law within, this state, may be commenced and carried on in any county in which the offender is found. [O. C. 190.]

Art. 235. [225] Forgery and uttering forged papers may be prosecuted where.—The offense of forgery may be prosecuted in any county where the written instrument was forged, or where the same was used or passed, or attempted to be used or passed; all forgeries and uttering, using or passing, of forged instruments in writing, which concern or affect the title to land in this state, may also be prosecuted in the county in which the seat of government is located, or in the county in which the land, or a part thereof concerning or affecting the title to which the forgery has been committed, is situated. [O. C. 190a.]

Forgery.—See C. C. P. arts. 950, 955.

Prior to the adoption of the Code, forgery could only be prosecuted in the county where the forged instrument was made. Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 563. But under the Code, the offense of forgery may be prosecuted in any county where the instrument was forged, used, or passed, or attempted to be used or passed. Mason v. State, 22 App. 65, 22 S. W. 144, 408; Hooker v. State, 34 App. 359, 39 S. W. 783, 53 Am. St. Rep. 715; Thulemeyer v. State, 34 App. 619, 31 S. W. 659. One passing a forged check in Texas may be prosecuted there for forgery, though the forgery were committed in another state, where the bank on which it was purported to be drawn is situated. Batte v. State, 57 App. 125, 122 S. W. 561. But accused, who forged an indorsement to a treasury warrant and cashed it, cannot be prosecuted in the county to which the warrant was forwarded for collection. Thulemeyer v. State, 34 App. 619, 31 S. W. 659.

The venue of a prosecution for forgery may be laid in the county wherein accused mailed the forged note to one who discounted it, even though the note was prepared in another county. Meredith v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1016. But see Jessup v. State, 44 App. 53, 65 S. W. 958, holding that the courts of Texas would have no jurisdiction over uttering a forged draft drawn in Texas, but sent by mail and uttered for the first time in Arkansas, since it was still, while in transit, in the possession of the utterer through his innocent agent, the United States mail. An indictment alleged that accused passed a forged instrument to an individual in the office of the bank, with intent to defraud an insurance company having its home office in another county. The instrument was delivered to the individual to deliver to the insurance company as an accommodation to accused. The instrument was delivered to the company at its home office, and the home office was the only office authorized to receive it. Held not to show that the offense was committed in the county. Bagley v. State, 63 App. 606, 141 S. W. 107.

The venue of a prosecution for forging a mortgage note, falsely reciting that it was secured by deed of trust on certain described property in H. county, and which, if valid, would give an innocent holder for value the right to enforce an equitable lien against it, is properly laid in H. county. Pye v. State, 71 App. 94, 154 S. W. 222.

Art. 236. [226] Counterfeiting, where.—The offense of counterfeiting may be prosecuted in any county where the offense was committed, or where the counterfeit coin was passed, or attempted to be passed. [O. C. 207.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 954, et seq.

Counterfeiting.—The Texas state courts have jurisdiction of prosecutions for counterfeiting of the coins and currency of the United States. Martin v. State, 18 App. 224.

The venue lies in any county wherein the coins were passed. Stroube v. State, 40 App. 581, 51 S. W. 357.

Art. 237. [227] Perjury and false swearing, where.—The offense of perjury and false swearing may be prosecuted in the county where committed, or in the county where the false statement is used or attempted to be used. [O. C. 190a.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 294, et seq., as to perjury and arts. 312 et seq., as to false swearing.

Art. 238. [228] Offenses committed on the boundary of two counties.—An offense committed on the boundary of any two counties, or within four hundred yards thereof, may be prosecuted and punished in either county; and the indictment or information may allege the offense to have been committed in the county where it is prosecuted. [O. C. 191.]

See article 244, post; Kugard v. State, 38 App. 681, 44 S. W. 999.

Offenses on boundary lines.—An offense committed within 400 yards of a county boundary line may be alleged and prosecuted in either of the contiguous counties. Willis v. State, 10 App. 495; Cox v. State, 41 Tex. 1; Chivarrío v. State, 15 App. 330; Mendola v. State, 15 App. 492; Abrigo v. State, 29 App. 149, 15 S. W. 468; Hackney v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 555; McElroy v. State, 53 App. 57, 111 S. W. 948; Madrid v. State, 71 App. 426, 161 S. W. 93. Although a river may be the dividing line between the two counties. Hackney v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 555.

This article is controlled by article 245, post. Cameron v. State, 9 App. 333.

Though accused, committing the offense in an unorganized county, is properly prosecuted in the organized county to which the unorganized county is attached for judicial purposes, yet, the state is not absolved from charging that the offense was committed in the unorganized county so attached for judicial purposes. Chivarrío v. State, 15 App. 330.

This article, which was adopted prior to the amendment of the Constitution in 1876 by providing for the adoption of prohibition in counties and subdivisions thereof, must be held to apply only to such laws as are in force in counties in which the offense is alleged to have been committed and the prosecution sought to be maintained, so that, as a retail liquor dealer could not sell liquor to a minor in a county which has adopted prohibition, an indictment drawn in a local option county, charging a violation of Pen. Code, art. 622, which denounces such a sale as a misdemeanor, was improper; the proper proceeding being by an action under article 227 for a violation of the local option law. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 356. And see Hutchins v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 996.

Warrant of arrest.—This article does not authorize a peace officer to execute a warrant of arrest beyond the limits of his own county. Ledbetter v. State, 23 App. 247, 5 S. W. 226; Abrigo v. State, 29 App. 143, 15 S. W. 408.

Art. 239. [229] Person dying out of the state of an injury inflicted in the state, etc.—If any person, being at the time within this state, shall inflict upon another, also within this state, an injury of which such person afterward dies without the limits of this state, the person so offending shall be liable to prosecution in the county where the injury was inflicted. [O. C. 192.]

Art. 240. [230] Person within the state inflicting injury on another out of the state, where prosecuted.—If a person, being at the time within this state, shall inflict upon another out of this state, an injury, by reason of which the injured person dies without the limits of this state, he may be prosecuted in the county where he was when the injury was inflicted. [O. C. 193.]

Art. 241. [231] Persons without the state inflicting an injury on one within the state, where prosecuted.—If a person, being at the time without the limits of this state, shall inflict upon another who is at the time within this state, an injury causing death, he may be prosecuted in the county where the person injured dies. [O. C. 194.]

Art. 242. [232] An offense committed on a stream, the boundary of this state, where prosecuted.—If an offense be committed upon any river or stream, the boundary of this state, it may be prosecuted in the county the boundary of which is upon such stream or river, and the county seat of which is nearest the place where the offense was committed. [O. C. 195.]

Jurisdiction in general.—In the absence of express treaty to the contrary, the jurisdiction of this state extends to the middle of the stream. Spears v. State, 8 App. 467. As to the rules governing when the stream changes its channel, see Collins v. State, 3 App. 323, 39 Am. Rep. 142.

Art. 243. [233] Person receiving an injury in one county and dying in another, offender, where prosecuted.—If a person receive an injury in one county and dies in another by reason of such injury, the offender may be prosecuted in the county where the injury was received, or where the death occurred. [O. C. 196.]

Common law rule.—At common law an offense commenced in one county, but committed in another, could not be prosecuted in either. See v. State, 4 Tex. 450.

Abortion.—Where the means of producing an abortion were applied in one county, but the miscarriage occurred in another, the venue was in the former county. v. , 37 App. 562, 49 S. W. 267.

Murder.—Where an indictment charged commission of murder in a county attached for judicial purposes, to the county wherein the indictment was found, venue was clearly shown. It was also clearly shown where it appeared death occurred in the county where the indictment was found, though the indictment charged commission of the murder in another county in which the fatal blow was struck, as this article provides for prosecution of the offense in either county. v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 105.

— Accomplices.—Where the acts constituting the accused an accomplice were all committed in one county, but the actual crime, murder, was committed by the principal in another county, the latter county had jurisdiction to try the accomplice. v. State, 31 App. 537, 21 S. W. 358.

Art. 244. [234] An offense committed on a stream, etc., the boundary between two counties, punishable, where.—Where a river or other stream or highway is the boundary between two counties, any offense committed on such river, stream or highway at a place where it is such boundary, is punishable in either county; and it may be alleged in the indictment or information that the offense was committed in the county where it is prosecuted. [O. C. 197.]

See articles 238 and 242, ante.

Construction in general.—This article merely regulates the venue where the offense is committed in the river itself. v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 555.

Street on county line.—Where a county line ran through a town, and defendant, indicted for selling liquors in violation of the local option law of W. county, proved that the building in which he sold it was in B. county, he cannot be convicted, though the street on which he sold it had been regarded for election and taxing purposes as in the county of W. v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 996.

Art. 245. [235] Property stolen in one county and carried to another, offender prosecuted where.—Where property is stolen in one county and carried off by the offender to another, he may be prosecuted either in the county where he took the property or in any other county through or into which he may have carried the same. [O. C. 198.]

Property stolen in one county, etc.—The venue lies either in the county of the theft, or in any other county, through or into which the thief may have carried the stolen property. v. State, 2 App. 422; v. State, 9 App. 322; v. State, 10 App. 27; v. State, 15 App. 489; v. State, 20 App. 320; v. State, 21 App. 691, 2 S. W. 982; v. State, 23 App. 615, 5 S. W., 12 S. W., 635; v. State, 23 App. 1, 11 S. W. 635; v. State, 23 App. 355, 13 S. W. 144; v. State, 2 App. 143, 15 S. W. 408; v. State, 23 App. 457, 24 S. W. 257; v. State, 50 App. 507, 98 S. W. 861; v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 516. But this does not mean that one may be indicted in the county in which the property was stolen, and subsequently be indicted for the same offense in the county into which the property was taken. Under such circumstances accused may plead the prior indictment in bar of the other. v. State, 50 App. 907, 98 S. W. 861, overruling the Schindler’s Case, 15 App. 394. Where one is prosecuted in another than the county of the taking, a complete offense must be made out in the county of the prosecution. If the original theft was a felony, but the thief transported only a portion of the stolen property, less in value than to constitute felony, he could be convicted in that county only of misdemeanor. v. State, 10 App. 27; v. State, 23 App. 615, 5 S. W. 178, and cases cited; v. State, 28 App. 1, 11 S. W. 635. That a new theft is committed in the county into which the stolen property is taken, is but a legal fiction to settle the question of venue, and where different animals were stolen in different counties at different times, and all driven together into another county, a conviction in that county for the theft of one cannot be pleaded in bar to prosecution for the theft of the others. v. State, 31 App. 577, 21 S. W. 356. This article applies to all species of theft. v. State, 20 App. 320. Except theft from the person, which can only be prosecuted in the county of the original cap- tion. v. State, 10 App. 27; v. State, 22 App. 123, 2 S. W. 638; v. State, 28 App. 105, 13 S. W. 550. And swindling. v. State, 25 App. 447, 13 S. W. 553. And see v. State, 27 App. 203, 11 S. W. 114. The indictment for theft may allege the venue of the offense to be in the county of the prosecution, and such allegation will be sustained by proof that the property was stolen in any other county in said state, and brought by the thief into the county of the prosecution. v. State, 41 Tex. 1; v. State, 2 App. 126.

Art. 247. [236] Accomplices and accessories may be prosecuted where.—Accomplices and accessories to the crime of theft may be prosecuted in any county where the theft was committed, or in any other county through or into which the property may be carried or in which the person carrying it is found. When mortgaged property is taken from one county and unlawfully disposed of in another county, the offender may be prosecuted, either in the county in which such property was disposed of, or in the county from which it was removed, or in which the lien on it is registered. [Act 1899, p. 8.]

Art. 248. [237] Receiving and concealing stolen property may be prosecuted where.—The offense of receiving and concealing stolen property may by prosecuted in the county where the theft was committed, or in any other county through or into which the property may have been carried by the person stealing the same, or in any county where the same may have been received or concealed by the offender. [Id.]

Receiving and concealing stolen property.—One who receives stolen property in one county and himself transports it into another county cannot be prosecuted in the latter county. Thurman v. State, 37 App. 446, 40 S. W. 795. But see Moseley v. State, 36 App. 578, 37 S. W. 736, 38 S. W. 197; Id., 35 App. 210, 32 S. W. 1042, to the effect that when property is received, the receiver knowing it to have been stolen, in one county, and the receiver carries it into another county, either county would have jurisdiction. See, also, Bonner v. State, 32 S. W. 1042.

The word "conceal" does not mean to hide. It means the handling of property so as to mislead the owners in their search for it. If accused brought or assisted in bringing the stolen property to another county, and there had them shipped, to market under an assumed name, he would be guilty of concealing the property in T. county within this article. Where the indictment charged accused with both receiving and concealing the property, if he received it in F. county and took it to T. county and concealed it there, T. county would have jurisdiction of the prosecution, but if he received it in F. county and brought it into T. county, without there concealing it, that county would not have jurisdiction. Folk v. State, 60 App. 150, 131 S. W. 550.
This article gives the court of the county where a theft occurred jurisdiction of the offense of receiving the stolen goods, though accused lived and received and concealed the goods in another county. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 52.

Art. 249. [238] Offenses committed out of the state by commission of deeds prosecuted where.—Offenses committed out of this state by a commissioner of deeds, or other officer acting under the authority of this state, may be prosecuted in any county of this state. [O. C. 200.]

Indictment.—Wilson's Cr. Forms, 163, 164.

Art. 250. [239] Offenses committed on vessels within the state prosecuted where.—Where an offense is committed on board a vessel which is at the time upon any navigable water within the boundaries of this state, the offense may be prosecuted in any county through which the vessel is navigated in the course of her voyage, or in the county where the voyage commences or terminates. [O. C. 201.]

Gaming on vessel.—In Jenkins v. State, 36 Tex. 346, it was held that, on the trial of an indictment for gaming on a steamboat, the venue must be proved as laid, or, that an instruction to find accused guilty if they found that the boat, or on the trip where the gaming was done, commenced or terminated its voyage in the county where the venue was laid, was error.

Art. 251. [240] Offense of embezzlement prosecuted where.—The offense of embezzlement may be prosecuted in any county in which the offender may have taken or received the property, or through or into which he may have undertaken to transport it. [O. C. 203.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 1416 et seq.

As to venue of offense, see White's Annotated Penal Code, § 1628.

Embezzlement.—This article authorizes a prosecution for embezzlement in the county where the money is received regardless of the county where it may have been embezzled or where defendant waived jury, Schweir v. State, 50 App. 119, 94 S. W. 1059; O'Marrow v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 352; Poteet v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 883. The venue may be in the county in which the offender may have taken or received the property or into or through which he may have undertaken to transport it. Cole v. State, 16 App. 461; Reed v. State, 13 App. 650; Cohen v. State, 20 App. 224; Brown v. State, 23 App. 214, 4 S. W. 588; C. C. P., art. 248. The county in which it first appeared defendant had embezzled the money, the owner on first seeing him there after his return demanding the money, and he failing to return it, has jurisdiction of the offense. Poteet v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 883.

"Money" is property within the meaning of this article. Brown v. State, 23 App. 214, 4 S. W. 588.

Art. 252. [241] False imprisonment, kidnaping and abduction prosecuted where.—The jurisdiction for the trial of the offenses of false imprisonment, kidnaping and abduction, belongs either to the county in which the offense was committed, or to any county through, into or out of which the person falsely imprisoned, kidnaped or taken in such manner as to constitute abduction may have been carried. [O. C. 204.]

Art. 253. [242] Conspiracy, where prosecuted.—The offense of conspiracy may be prosecuted in the county where the conspiracy was entered into, or in the county where the same was agreed to be executed; and, when the conspiracy is entered into in another state, territory or county, to commit an offense in this state, the offense may be prosecuted in the county where such offense was agreed to be committed, or in any county where any one of the conspirators may be found, or in the county where the seat of government is located.

See article 234, ante.

Conspiracy.—See Kutch v. State, 32 App. 184, 22 S. W. 594; Dawson v. State, 38 App. 9, 40 S. W. 791.

Art. 254. Prosecution for rape commenced and carried on where, takes precedence of other cases.—Prosecutions for rape may be commenced and carried on in the county in which the offense is committed, or in any county of the judicial district in which the offense is committed, or in any county of the judicial district the judge of which resides nearest the county seat of the county in which the offense is committed. When the judicial district comprises only one county, prosecutions may be commenced and carried on in that county, if the offense be committed there, or in any adjoining county. When it shall come to the knowledge of any district judge, whose court has jurisdiction under this act, that the offense of rape has probably been committed, it shall be his duty, immediately, if his court be in session, and, if not in session, then, at the first term thereafter in any county of the district, to call the attention of the grand jury thereto; and, if his court be in session, but the grand jury shall have been discharged, he shall immediately recall said grand jury for the consideration of the accusation. Prosecutions for rape shall take precedence of all cases in all courts; and the district courts are hereby authorized and directed to change the venue in such cases whenever it shall be necessary to secure a speedy trial. [Act 1897, 1st S. S., p. 16.]

Constitutionality.—There is no provision in the constitution prohibiting the legislature from authorizing a prosecution for an offense committed in the state in some county other than the county where the offense was committed. Therefore this article is constitutional. It is not violative of the sixth amendment to the constitution of the United States. Nor do article 5, §§ 45, 56, vesting in the courts the power to fix the venue in civil and criminal cases, and prohibiting the legislature from passing any local or special law authorizing such change of venue, prohibit the enactment of this article. Misher v. State, 41 App. 212, 53 S. W. 627, 86 Am. St. Rep. 789; Dies v. State, 56 App. 22, 117 S. W. 979; Eckermmann v. State, 57 App. 257, 125 S. W. 424. It is sufficiently broad to fix the venue, and provide for the trial of a case in such county as may be provided by law, within the requirement of Const. art. 5, § 35. It is complete in itself, and is valid, without reciting or referring to any other act, as required by Const. art. 3, § 36, on revival or amendment of an act. Brown v. State, 57 App. 269, 125 S. W. 565.

Residence nearest county seat.—Where the county seat of the county in which the rape is committed is nearer the residence of the district judge of another district than to the residence of the judge in whose district the county of the crime is embraced, a county of the former’s district has jurisdiction. Cooksey v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 103.

Art. 255. [243] Conviction or acquittal in another state bar to prosecution in this state.—When an act has been committed out of this state by an inhabitant thereof, and such act is an offense by the laws of this state, and is also an offense by the laws of the place where the same was done, a conviction or acquittal of the offender, under the laws of the place where the offense was committed, is a bar to the prosecution in this state. [O. C. 205.]

Former jeopardy.—Generally, see article 9, ante, and article 601, post.

Art. 256. [244] Conviction, etc., in one county, bar to prosecution in another, when.—Where different counties have jurisdiction of the same offense, conviction or acquittal of the offense in one county is a bar to any further prosecution in any other county. [O. C. 206.]

Former jeopardy.—Generally, see article 9, ante, and article 601, post. One who has been acquitted in one county cannot be put upon trial in another county by the same or another offense, and on plea of former acquittal in habeas corpus proceedings in the court of criminal appeals, he would be entitled to discharge. Ex parte Davis, 48 App. 644, 89 S. W. 578, 122 Am. St. Rep. 715, approving Ex parte Moore, 46 App. 417, 80 S. W. 620, and Nixon v. State, 35 App. 468, 34 S. W. 590.

Art. 257. [245] Proof of jurisdiction sufficient to sustain allegation of venue, when.—In all cases mentioned in the foregoing articles of this chapter, the indictment or information, or any proceeding in the case, may allege that the offense was committed in the county where the prosecution is carried on; and, to sustain the allegation of venue, it shall only be necessary to prove that by reason of the facts existing in the case, the county where such prosecution is carried on has jurisdiction. [O. C. 207.]

Allegations of venue in indictment or information.—Article 451 of this Code, subd. 5, post, requires the indictment to show that the place where the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is proved, requires the information 5, post, rev. Art. 478, subd. 7, that the place where the offense is charged to have been committed is within the jurisdiction of the court where the information is filed. Article 455, post, provides that when, by law, the offense may be prosecuted in either of two or more counties, the offense to have been committed in one of these counties is the same is prosecuted, or in any county or place where the offense was actually committed. See these articles for cases dealing with the necessity, requisites and sufficiency of allegations of venue in the indictment or information.

In a prosecution for rape, where the evidence showed intercourse in a county other than that alleged in the indictment, and the charge of the court in each paragraph required the jury to believe beyond reasonable doubt that the crime was committed in the county alleged before they could convict the defendant, it was not error to refuse a specific charge that they must find that the act was committed in the county alleged and not in the other county, since the proof of venue is an essential part of the prosecution, and not an affirmative defense. Melton v. State, 71 App. 130, 158 S. W. 550.

Raising question of venue.—The question of venue cannot be first raised by a motion for new trial nor by a requested charge. Johnson v. State, 72 App. 387, 152 S. W. 612.

Presumptions on appeal.—See article 928, post. Record on appeal.—The record on appeal must show that the venue of the offense was proved on the trial, or the conviction will be set aside. Bell v. State, 1 App. 81; Higbee v. State, 2 App. 497; Huggins v. State, Id. 421; Jack v. State, 2 App. 72; Boston v. State, 5 App. 383, 22 Am. Rep. 575; Pipquin v. State, 9 App. 259; White v. State, Id. 320; Cross v. State, 11 App. 84; Dreyer v. State, Id. 605; Winn v. State, 15 App. 163; Temple v. State, 15 App. 394, 49 Am. Rep. 200; Gonzales v. State, 16 App. 152; Burton v. State, Id. 156; Williams v. State, 17 App. 362; 17 S. W. 624; Wells v. State, 22 App. 18, 2 S. W. 609; Perry v. State, 23 App. 19, 2 S. W. 609; Pelcher v. State, 39 App. 121, 44 S. W. 1169. Where the venue is not proved, the judgment will not be allowed to stand. Belcher v. State, 35 App. 368, 32 S. W. 779. The court can not after the expiration of the term, amend the record to show the venue. Id.

Art. 258. [246] Offenses not enumerated, prosecuted where.—In all cases, except those enumerated in previous articles of this chapter, the proper county for the prosecution of offenses is that in which the offense was committed. [O. C. 208.]

1. Creation of new county.
2. Abortion.
3. — Accomplice.
5. Bringing stolen property into state.
6. Conversion.
7. Conversion by bailee.
8. Driving stock out of county without owner's consent.
11. Renting house to be used for gaming.
12. Sending threatening letters.
13. Shipment of intoxicating liquors.
15. Theft from the person.
16. Unlawfully disposing of estray.

1. Creation of new county.—Where after an indictment was returned a new county was created which included the scene of the crime, the indictment was properly transferred to such new county. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 711.

2. Abortion.—The venue of the offense of abortion is in the county in which the means were used or taken. Moore v. State, 37 App. 243, 4 S. W. 227.

3. — Accomplice.—Where accused was charged as accomplice to the commission of an abortion on his stepdaughter, resulting from an operation on her in P. county, the venue was properly laid in that county, though all of the acts of encouragement, etc., which constituted accused an accomplice, occurred in another county. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 411.

4. Bigamy.—The venue of the offense of bigamy is in the county where the marriage occurs. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 127.

5. Bringing stolen property into state.—For bringing stolen property into this state the prosecution should be commenced in the county in which the accused is found. Gonzalez v. State, 29 App. 663, 25 S. W. 426; 29 S. W. 385; 20 App. 709, 67 S. W. 227.

6. Conversion.—Where defendant hired hack and harness in El Paso county and sold it in Midland county, venue was properly laid in El Paso county. See Lopez v. State, 37 App. 651, 40 S. W. 572; Steadham v. State, 40 App. 44, 48 S. W. 177.
7. Conversion by bailee.—The venue of the offense of conversion by a bailee is in the county in which the conversion was consummated. Lopez v. State, 37 App. 649, 40 S. W. 372. See also, Steadham v. State, 40 App. 43, 48 S. W. 177; Elton v. State, 40 App. 342, 50 S. W. 379, 51 S. W. 245; Cannon v. State, 38 App. 324, 42 S. W. 281.

8. Driving stock out of county without owner’s consent.—The venue of the offense under P. C. art. 1407, of driving stock out of county without the owner’s consent, is either the county from or into which the animal was driven, and the offense is complete in either, the moment the animal is driven across the line of the coterminous counties. Rogers v. State, 9 App. 45, distinguishing Senterfit’s Case, 41 Tex. 186.

9. Fraudulent disposition of mortgaged property.—The venue of the offense of fraudulent disposition of mortgaged property is in the county in which it was fraudulently disposed of. Robberson v. State, 3 App. 592. But see Williams v. State, 37 App. 338, 11 S. W. 114, holding that the venue for fraudulently removing mortgaged property is in the county where the mortgage was executed and the property situated.

10. Purchasing and receiving cattle without bill of sale.—It seems that the offense of driving stock to market without a bill of sale under P. C. art. 1369, must be prosecuted in the county into which the stock is driven, and can not be prosecuted in the county from which the same was driven. Senterfit v. State, 41 Tex. 186. But the court must have overlooked the general statute giving counties jurisdiction when the offense is committed within four hundred yards of the boundary. Rogers v. State, 9 App. 43.

The venue of the offense of purchasing and receiving cattle without a bill of sale is in the county of the purchase. Brockman v. State, 16 App. 54.

11. Renting house to be used for gaming.—The venue of the offense of renting a house to be used for gaming is in the county in which the house is situated. Eyar v. State, 37 App. 257, 49 S. W. 665.

12. Sending threatening letters.—The venue of the offense of sending a threatening letter is in the county from which the letter was sent. Land v. State, 26 App. 589, 10 S. W. 218.

13. Shipments of intoxicating liquors.—Accused delivered a trunk containing intoxicating liquor, unlabeled, to a railroad company at D. for shipment to G. in U. county, knowing that it would be necessary for the carrier to transfer the liquor to a connecting carrier at a junction point in U. county; the initial carrier’s line not running to destination. Held, that accused thereby made the initial carrier his agent to deliver the liquor to the connecting carrier in U. county, which constituted an offense separate from that committed by the original delivery of the liquor to the initial carrier at D., for which accused could be properly prosecuted in U. county. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 353.

14. Swindling.—The venue of the offense of swindling is in the county in which the property was acquired. Sims v. State, 38 App. 447, 13 S. W. 653, and cases cited.

Where a check on which swindling is based is drawn in one county and is paid in another, the venue is in the latter county. Dechard v. State (Cr. App.) 67 S. W. 514.

15. Theft from the person.—The venue of the offense of theft from the person is in the county of the taking. Nichols v. State, 38 App. 168, 12 S. W. 606, and cases cited.

16. Unlawfully disposing of estray.—The venue of the offense of unlawfully disposing of an estray is in the county in which the animal was disposed of. Tharp v. State, 28 Tex. 696. But see Brogden v. State, 44 Tex. 109.
TITLE 5
OF ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL

CHAPTER ONE OF ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT

Article 259. [247] Arrest without warrant, when.—A peace officer or any other person may, without warrant, arrest an offender when the offense is committed in his presence or within his view, if the offense is one classified as a felony, or as an “offense against the public peace.” [O. C. 209.]

See notes under art. 260.

Article 260. [248] Same subject.—A peace officer may arrest, without warrant, when a felony or breach of the peace has been committed in the presence or within the view of a magistrate; and such magistrate shall verbally order the arrest of the offender. [O. C. 210.]

Ante, arts. 43, 44, 121, 122 and 123, 147.

See Penal Code, art. 479.

In general.—Our statutes on the subject of arrest without warrant must be construed in subordination to the constitutional guaranty against searches and seizures. Bill of Rights, sec. 9, article 5, ante; Lacy v. State, 7 App. 466.

Our statutes, articles 259 to 262 enumerate the only conditions on which a peace officer is authorized to arrest without a warrant. Mundine v. State, 37 App. 5, 58 S. W. 619.

A peace officer is empowered to make an arrest without a warrant where a felony or a breach of the peace is committed in his presence or within his view, or when ordered verbally by a magistrate within whose presence or view such offenses are committed, or in certain cases prescribed by municipal authorities, or when there is no time to procure a warrant, and the offender is about to escape, or in the prevention of offenses as prescribed in chapters 2 and 3 of title 3, ante. Johnson v. State, 5 App. 42; Ross v. State, 10 App. 455, 28 Am. Rep. 642; Staples v. State, 14 App. 136; Weaver v. State, 19 App. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 359; Lynch v. State, 41 App. 510, 57 S. W. 1130.

It is no part of the duty of a constable to make an arrest without a warrant on a charge of burglary where the offense was not committed in the view of the officer nor legal complaint made. Kasling v. Morris, 71 Tex. 584, 9 S. W. 733, 10 Am. St. Rep. 737; Morris v. Kasling, 79 Tex. 141, 15 S. W. 226, 11 L. R. A. 398.

The fact that the party arrested or sought to be arrested without warrant may justly have been suspected of felony will not justify a homicide on the part of the officer, unless he bring himself within some of the rules laid down authorizing such arrest without warrant. (Staples v. State, 14 App. 158; Jacobs v. State, 28 App. 79, 12 S. W. 405; Ex parte Sherwood, 29 App. 284, 15 S. W. 812.) Carter v. State, 30 App. 551, 17 S. W. 1102, 28 Am. St. Rep. 944.

Warrant is not required for the arrest of an escaped convict. Ex parte Sherwood, 20 App. 224, 15 S. W. 812.

A de facto officer, known to be such, has the authority of a de jure officer, and may summon the posse comitatus. Weatherford v. State, 31 App. 536, 21 S. W. 251, 27 Am. St. Rep. 429.

Arrest without warrant, for mere injury to property, unless it amounted to a breach of the peace, cannot be made. Mundline v. State, 37 App. 5, 38 S. W. 619.

When parties fire off pistols on a public road at night within two hundred and fifty yards of deputy sheriffs who see the flashes and hear the reports, the officers are authorized to arrest the parties without warrants, and if in attempting to arrest the parties they shoot one who has no pistol and was engaged in the disturbance they are acting officially and the sheriff is liable for damages. King v. Brown, 100 Tex. 105, 34 S. W. 329, 330.

One whose peace is disturbed can cause the arrest of the offender by an officer who was not present at time of disturbance and both the officer and the person disturbed are protected by this article when the officer makes the arrest without a warrant. James v. S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co., 55 Civ. App. 663, 118 S. W. 645.

A violation of Pen. Code, art. 1561, making it a misdemeanor to board a train without any lawful business, with intent to obtain a free ride, would not justify the arrest of the offender without a warrant. Freeman v. Costley (Civ. App.) 134 S. W. 468.

Facts held to require instructions on the issue as to whether the officers had a warrant of arrest. Sanchez v. State, 70 App. 24, 136 S. W. 218.

A white city marshal may enter a negro coach within the corporate limits of the city to investigate a prior disturbance therein, and ascertain whether it is necessary to take steps to prevent its recurrence. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Brown (Civ. App.) 158 S. W. 253.

Where a deputy sheriff was surprised and captured and later killed by a body of men armed and organized in Texas to invade Mexico, it was the duty of the sheriff, on ascertaining such crime, to use all necessary force to pursue and capture the criminals without a warrant. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 112.

By private persons.—A private person cannot arrest another on suspicion that he is a horse thief. Lacy v. State, 7 App. 463.

No person but an officer can make an arrest except for a felony committed in his presence, or within his view, unless specially appointed by a magistrate to execute a particular warrant, or is summoned as a posse comitatus. Allford v. State, 8 App. 346.

A charge held to have correctly submitted the issue of resisting arrest. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1077.

Art. 261. [249] Municipal authorities may authorize arrest without warrant, when.—The municipal authorities of towns and cities may establish rules authorizing the arrest, without warrant, of persons found in suspicious places, and under circumstances which reasonably show that such persons have been guilty of some felony or breach of the peace, or threaten, or are about to commit some offense against the laws. [O. C. 211.]

See notes under article 259, ante.

See, ante, art. 44.

Municipal authority.—See Joske v. Irvine (Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 278; Id., 91 Tex. 574, 73 S. W. 254; Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 139 S. W. 294.

The ordinances of an incorporated town making drunkenness and breaches of the peace offenses, the town marshal or his deputy was authorized to arrest an offender without a warrant. Beville v. State, 16 App. 70.

An ordinance authorized by charter prohibiting backdrivers, etc., from soliciting traffic at a certain place, and authorizing policemen to arrest without warrant for violations committed in their view, is valid. Vann v. State, 45 App. 424, 77 S. W. 518, 108 Am. St. Rep. 961.

A town or city has the authority under the constitution and laws of this state to authorize the arrest of one found drunk in a public place by an officer without warrant. If there is anything in the ordinances authorizing this inconsistent with any state law, the ordinances would be invalid but in no sense can be regarded as inconsistent with the laws of the state. Early v. State, 50 App. 434, 97 S. W. 55.

Where, in an action for damages for an arrest without a warrant in a town, it conclusively appeared that the arrest was justified, if made under an ordinance passed in accordance with this article, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that no such ordinance had been passed. Freesley v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 145 S. W. 669.

The arrest in a town, without a warrant, of one who insisted on riding in a freight car with his shipment, instead of in the caboose, which he belonged, was authorized under this article. Freesley v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 145 S. W. 669.

A policeman could arrest without a warrant one having a reputation of being a common prostitute, who was found in bed with a man in a reputed house of ill fame. Haller v. State, 72 App. 294, 162 S. W. 872.

Art. 262. [250] May arrest without warrant when felony has been committed.—Where it is shown by satisfactory proof to a peace officer, upon the representation of a credible person, that a felony has been committed, and that the offender is about to escape, so that there is no time to procure a warrant, such peace officer may, without warrant, pursue and arrest the person accused.

Art. 264a. Arrest of trespassers; may prohibit sale of liquor, etc.—The commanding officer upon any occasion of duty may place in arrest, during the continuance thereof, any person who shall trespass upon the camp ground, parade ground, armory or other place devoted to such duty, or shall in any way or manner interrupt or molest the orderly discharge of duty by those under arms, or shall disturb or prevent the passage of troops going to and returning from any duty. He may prohibit and prevent the sale or use of all spirituous liquors, wine, ale or beer, the holding of huckster or auction sales, and all gambling within the limit of the post, camp ground, place of encampment, parade or drill under his command, or within limits not exceeding one mile therefrom, as he may prescribe. And he may in his discretion abate as common nuisances all such sales. [Act 1905, p. 183, ch. 104, § 73.]

OF ARREST UNDER WARRANT

Art. 265. Definition of "warrant of arrest."—A "warrant of arrest" is a written order from a magistrate, directed to a peace officer or some other person specially named, commanding him to take the body of the person accused of an offense, to be dealt with according to law. [O. C. 215.]

See post, art. 260; Willson's Cr. Forms, 1029, 1031.

Warrant issued by justice of the peace.—A justice of the peace cannot issue a warrant to be executed in another county. A warrant issued by a justice must be directed to some suitable officer of his county. Tolliver v. State, 32 App. 444, 24 S. W. 266.

Art. 266. Is sufficient if it have, etc.—It issues in the name of "The State of Texas," and shall be deemed sufficient, without regard to form, if it have these substantial requisites:

1. It must specify the name of the person whose arrest is ordered, if it be known; if not known, then some reasonably definite description must be given of him.

2. It must state that the person is accused of some offense against the laws of the state, naming the offense.

3. It must be signed by the magistrate, and his office be named in the body of the warrant, or in connection with his signature. [O. C. 216.]

See post, art. 275; Willson's Cr. Forms, 1029, 1031.

Authority of magistrate.—Not a valid objection that the warrant issued by the county judge, who is a "magistrate," did not show on its face to have been issued by him as a "committing magistrate." Graham v. State, 20 App. 21, 13 S. W. 1012. And see Pierce v. State, 17 App. 322.

Designation or description of accused.—See Newburn v. Durham, 10 Civ. App. 655, 32 S. W. 112.

Warrant of arrest, and also the complaint on which it issues, must specify the accused's name, or, if that is unknown, give a reasonably definite description of him. Alford v. State, 8 App. 545.

A fictitious name cannot be assigned, nor can the officer interpolate into the warrant the true name. Nor will the warrant be violated because the person arrested under it, not described by name or otherwise, proved to be the person against whom the complaint was intended. Alford v. State, 8 App. 545.

Warrant stated only the surname of the accused and that his Christian name was unknown, giving no other description. Held, sufficient, under the peculiar facts of this case. Graham v. State, 20 App. 31, 13 S. W. 1013.

Designation or description of offense.—Gaming on nominee is not an offense, and a warrant of arrest is not legal unless it states an offense. Fulkerson v. State, 43 App. 587, 67 S. W. 562.
Chap. 2) ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL Art. 269

The warrant of arrest issued by the governor in extradition proceedings must name the offense with which accused is charged in the state to which he is sought to be taken. Ex parte Thomas, 53 App. 37, 108 S. W. 664.

A warrant for arrest of a party issued by a justice of the peace sitting simply as a magistrate to examine and inquire as to whether the offense had been committed and whether the accused was guilty of an offense—of unlawfully whipping a child—was sufficient. Owen v. State, 55 App. 261, 125 S. W. 405.

A warrant charging defendant "with the offense of a misdemeanor," instead of stating that he was accused of an offense against the law, naming it, as prescribed by this article and article 975, is insufficient. Sullivan v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1091.

Art. 267. [255] Magistrate may issue warrant of arrest, in what cases.—Magistrates may issue warrants of arrest in the following cases:

1. In all cases in which they are by law authorized to order verbally the arrest of an offender.

2. When any person shall make oath before such magistrate that another has committed some offense against the laws of the state.

3. In all cases named in this Code where they are specially authorized to issue such warrants. [O. C. 217, 218.]

See post, arts. 269, 971, et seq. Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1029, 1031.

Art. 268. [256] "Complaint" is what.—The affidavit made before the magistrate, which charges the commission of an offense, is called a complaint. [O. C. 219.]

Authority of prosecuting attorneys, see ante, art. 34, and notes, and post, art. 479 and notes.

Complaints before magistrates, see post, arts. 972 and 973.

Duty to file information on complaint, see art. 35.

Prerequisites to information, see post, art. 479.

Effect of charge of misdemeanor or felony.—When a complaint charges a misdemeanor or felony it must be filed with the magistrate, who shall proceed in accordance with the law governing examining courts. Kinley v. State, 29 App. 532, 16 S. W. 339.

Art. 269. [257] Requisites of complaint.—The complaint shall be deemed sufficient, without regard to form, if it have these substantial requisites:

1. It must state the name of the accused, if known, and if not known, must give some reasonably definite description of him.

2. It must state that the accused has committed some offense against the laws of the state, naming the offense, or that the affiant has good reason to believe, and does believe, that the accused has committed such offense.

3. It must state the time and place of the commission of the offense, as definitely as can be done by the affiant.

4. It must be in writing, and signed by the affiant, if he is able to write his name; otherwise he must place his mark at the foot of the complaint. [O. C. 220.]

Habeas corpus to determine sufficiency, see notes under article 160.

1. Necessity.—Prerequisite to Information, see post, art. 479.

Before a warrant based upon a complaint made before a magistrate can legally issue, it must appear that the facts exist which would authorize a verbal arrest, or the facts must present a case in which the magistrate is specially authorized to issue the warrant, or there must be made by some person before a magistrate a complaint charging the commission of an offense, said complaint containing the requisites prescribed in the preceding article. Pierce v. State, 17 App. 232.

An officer must make an arrest without warrant when told by a credible person that one is carrying a pistol. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 253.

De facto officers. Dane v. State, 36 App. 86, 35 S. W. 661.

3. Person who may make complaint.—See post, art. 147.

The affiant must be a credible person (post, art. 479), and a credible person is one who, being competent to testify, is worthy of belief. Wilson v. State, 27 App. 47, 10 S. W. 749, 11 Am. St. Rep. 190; Smith v. State, 22 App. 196, 3 S. W. 542; Thomas v. State, 14 App. 76; Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296; Wooten v. State, 57 App. 85, 121 S. W. 763; Jones v. State, 58 App. 312, 125 S. A county attorney cannot make complaint unless he was the only witness to the offense. Daniels v. State, 2 App. 555.

Convicted felon is not competent to make complaint. Perez v. State, 10 App. 327.

Husband not competent to make complaint against wife for adultery. Thomas v. State, 14 App. 70.

4. Form and requisites in general.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 747, 1039.

As to the necessary predicate to the issuance of a warrant based upon a complaint before a magistrate, see Pierce v. State, 17 App. 223.

Where a party is prosecuted on a complaint before a justice of the peace for a misdemeanor, it must be “in the name and by the authority of the State of Texas” or else the complaint will be void. Ex parte Jackson (Cr. App.) 96 S. W. 524.

A complaint charging an offense on a certain day, sworn to and filed on the same day, and not stating that the offense was committed anterior to the time of filing was sufficient. Williams v. State, 17 App. 521. Contra, Martin v. State, 72 App. 454, 162 S. W. 1145.

And the date must not be an impossible one. Hefnor v. State, 16 App. 573; Jennings v. State, 30 App. 428, 18 S. W. 90; Womack v. State, 31 App. 41, 19 S. W. 666. The complaint must allege the venue. Smith v. State, 3 App. 549, and cases cited.

A complaint sworn to at a date prior to the time the offense is alleged to have occurred is insufficient to support a conviction. Watson v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 718.

Complaint charging “Bill” (or W. H.) Gaines, and the information “W. H. Gaines,” the former is not objectionable as being in the alternative. Gaines v. State, 46 App. 212, 78 S. W. 1076.

Defendant's name, if unknown should be so stated and, if not known, some reasonable definite description of him should be given. Mistrust v. State, 72 App. 408, 162 S. W. 825.

8. Description of offense.—Need not observe the same particularity in setting out the offense as required of indictment or information. Bell v. State, 18 App. 53, 51 Am. Rep. 293, and cases cited; Arrington v. State, 18 App. 531.

A complaint charging unlawful riding on a train of the “G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co.” would not support an information that the train was on the track of the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company. Cardenas v. State, 58 App. 109, 124 S. W. 953.

The complaint does not fail to charge an offense because using “wilful” where the statute uses “knowingly”; the words being synonymous and “wilful” being of more extensive meaning (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7463-7481, 7835, 7836; vol. 9, pp. 3397, 3399). Ex parte Cowden (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 52.

A complaint being sworn to by affiant, it is not essential that his name appear in the body of the instrument. Upton v. State, 33 App. 231, 36 S. W. 197; Malz v. State, 36 App. 417, 34 S. W. 267, 37 S. W. 748; Singh v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 891.

The name being signed at the foot of the complaint as required by this article, a wrong name inserted in the body of the instrument by mistake, may be
A warrant issued by magistrates, etc., extends to every part of the state. That a warrant of arrest, issued by any county or district clerk, or by any magistrate (except county commissioners or commissioners' courts, mayors or recorders of an incorporated city or town), shall extend to any part of the state; and any peace officer to whom said warrant is directed, or into whose hands the same has been transferred, shall be authorized to execute the same in any county in this state. [O. C. 221; amended Act 1905, p. 385.]

See post, art. 271.

Where none of the requisites of this article are observed in issuance of warrant of arrest an officer cannot justify for making an illegal arrest. Little v. Rich, 55 Civ. App. 326, 118 S. W. 1077.

Art. 271. [259] Warrant issued by other magistrate does not extend, etc., except, etc.—When a warrant of arrest is issued by any county commissioner or commissioners' court, mayor or recorder of an incorporated city or town, it can not be executed in another county than the one in which it issues, except:

1. It be indorsed by a judge of a court of record, in which case it may be executed anywhere in the state, or

2. If it be indorsed by any magistrate in the county in which the accused is found, it may be executed in such county. The indorsement may be: “Let this warrant be executed in the county of . . . .” Or, if the indorsement is made by a judge of a court of record, then the indorsement may be: “Let this warrant be executed in any county of the state of Texas.” Any other words expressing the same meaning will be sufficient. The indorsement shall be dated, and signed officially by the magistrate making it. [O. C. 222; amended, Act 1905, p. 385.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1932.

Decisions under former law.—This article, prior to the amendment of 1895, prohibited the execution in another county of a warrant issued by a magistrate, other than a Judge of the Supreme Court, Court of Appeals, district court, or county court, unless indorsed by one of such magistrates, or a magistrate in the county where accused was found.

Art. 272. [260] Warrant of arrest may be forwarded by telegraph, etc.—A warrant of arrest may be forwarded by telegraph from any telegraph office to another in this state. If it be issued by any magistrate named in article 270, the peace officer receiving the same shall execute it without delay. If it be issued by any other magistrate than is named in article 270, the peace officer receiving the same shall forthwith proceed with it to the nearest magistrate of his county, who shall indorse thereon, in substance, these words: “Let this warrant be executed in the county of . . . .”, which indorsement shall be dated and signed officially by the magistrate making the same. [Act April 17, 1871, p. 39.]

Art. 273. [261] Complaint by telegraph, and proceedings thereon.—A complaint in writing, in accordance with article 257, may be telegraphed, as provided in the preceding article, to any magistrate in the state; and the magistrate who receives the same shall forthwith issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused; and the accused, when arrested, shall be dealt with as provided in this chapter in similar cases. [Act April 17, 1871, p. 39.]

Art. 274. [262] Certified copy of warrant or complaint to be deposited with telegraph manager, etc.—A certified copy of the original warrant or complaint, certified to by the magistrate issuing or taking the same, shall be deposited with the manager of the telegraph office from which the same is to be forwarded; and it shall be at once forwarded, taking precedence over other business to the place of its destination or to the telegraph office nearest thereto, precisely as it is written, including the certificate of the seal attached. [Id.]

Art. 275. [263] Duty of telegraph manager at the office of delivery.—When a warrant or complaint is received at a telegraph office for delivery, it shall be delivered to the party to whom it is addressed as soon as practicable, written on the proper blanks of the telegraph company, and certified to by the manager of the telegraph office as being a true and correct copy of the warrant or complaint received at his office. [Id.]

For the offense of divulging contents of warrant, etc., see P. C., art. 335.

Art. 276. [264] Warrant or complaint must be under official seal, etc.—No manager of a telegraph office shall receive and forward a warrant or complaint, as herein provided, unless the same shall be certified to under the seal of a court of record or by a justice of the peace, with the certificate under seal of the clerk of the district or county court of his county, that he is a legally qualified justice of the peace of such county; nor shall it be lawful for any magistrate to indorse a warrant received by telegraph, or issue a warrant upon a complaint received by telegraph, unless all the requirements of the law in relation thereto have been fully complied with. [Id.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1033.

Art. 277. [265] Telegram to be prepaid, unless, etc.—The party presenting a warrant or complaint to the manager of a telegraph office, to be forwarded by telegraph, shall pay for the same in advance, unless, by the rules of the company, it may be sent "collect." [Id.]

Art. 278. [266] Warrant may be directed to any suitable person, when.—In cases where it is made known by satisfactory proof to the magistrate that a peace officer can not be procured to execute a warrant of arrest, or that so much delay will be occasioned in procuring the services of a peace officer that a person accused will probably escape, the warrant of arrest may be directed to any suitable person who is willing to execute the same; and, in such case, his name shall be set forth in the warrant. [O. C. 223.]

Authority.—A citizen specially appointed under this and art. 979, post, to execute process, is, so far as the particular case is concerned, clothed with the same authority as a peace officer; but the authority terminates when the purpose of the appointment has been attained. O'Neal v. State, 32 App. 42, 22 S. W. 25.

Carrying weapons.—When one is acting under appointment made under this article, he has the powers and privileges of a peace officer and has a right to carry his pistol. Jenkins v. State, 47 App. 224, 82 S. W. 1056.

Art. 279. [267] Can not be compelled to execute warrant, etc.; has same right as peace officer.—No person other than a peace officer can be compelled to execute a warrant of arrest; but, if any person shall undertake the execution of the warrant, he shall be bound to do so under all the penalties to which a peace officer would be liable. He has the same rights, and is governed by the same rules as are prescribed to peace officers. [O. C. 224.]

Power and liability.—One undertaking to exercise the right of arrest under this article is, for the time being, a de facto officer, and his acts, while he sustains that relation to the defendant, will confer upon him the same rights, and subject him to the same penalties that pertain to an officer de jure. Smith v. State, 13 App. 607.

Art. 280. [268] How warrant is executed, etc.—The officer, or person executing a warrant of arrest, shall take the person whom he is directed to arrest forthwith before the magistrate who issued the warrant, or before the magistrate named in the warrant. [O. C. 225.]

Art. 280  ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL  (Title 5)

Bail.—A peace officer making an arrest for a felony by virtue of the warrant of a magistrate, has no right to take bail, but must take the accused before the proper magistrate named in the writ. Short v. State, 16 App. 44.

Art. 281. [269] Arrest in one county for felony committed in another.—If any person be arrested in one county for felony committed in another, he shall, in all cases, be taken before some magistrate of the county where it was alleged the offense was committed. [O. C. 226.]

See Robertson v. State, 36 Tex. 346; Arrington v. State, 13 App. 551; Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1024.

Art. 282. [270] Arrest in one county for misdemeanor committed in another.—If the arrest be for a misdemeanor, he shall be taken before a magistrate of the county where the arrest takes place, who shall be authorized to take bail, and whose duty it shall be to transmit immediately the bond so taken to the court having jurisdiction of the offense. [O. C. 226.]

See post, arts. 292, 293, 308, 324.

Bail.—One who was arrested for disturbing a religious meeting in a county other than that in which the offense took place was entitled to give proper bond. Buzan v. State, 59 App. 213, 158 S. W. 388.

Art. 283. [271] Proceedings when party arrested for misdemeanor, etc., fails to give bail.—If the accused fails or refuses to give bail, as provided in the preceding article, he shall be committed to the jail of the county where he was arrested; and the magistrate committing him shall forthwith notify the sheriff of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed of the arrest and commitment, which notice may be given by telegraph, by mail or by other written notice.

Art. 284. [272] Duty of sheriff receiving notice, etc.—It shall be the duty of the sheriff receiving the notice provided for in the preceding article, forthwith to go or send for the prisoner, and have him brought before the proper court or magistrate.

Art. 285. [273] Prisoner shall be discharged if not demanded in thirty days.—Should the sheriff or other proper officer of the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed not demand the prisoner and take charge of him within thirty days from the day he is committed, such prisoner shall be discharged from custody.

Art. 286. [274] A person is said to be arrested, when.—A person is said to be arrested when he has been actually placed under restraint or taken into custody by the officer or person executing the warrant of arrest. [O. C. 227.]

Art. 287. [275] An arrest may be made, when.—An arrest may be made on any day, or at any time of the day or night. [O. C. 228.]

Art. 288. [276] What force may be used.—In making an arrest, all reasonable means are permitted to be used to effect it. No greater force, however, shall be resorted to than is necessary to secure the arrest and detention of the accused. [O. C. 229.]

Art. 289. [277] In case of felony, may break door.—In case of felony, the officer may break down the door of any house for the purpose of effecting an arrest, if he be refused admittance, after giving notice of his authority and purpose. [O. C. 230.]

Art. 290. [278] Authority to arrest must be made known.—In executing a warrant of arrest, it shall always be made known to the person accused under what authority the arrest is made; and, if requested, the warrant shall be exhibited to him. [O. C. 231.]

The officer shall have his warrant in possession when attempting arrest, as the party whose arrest is sought has the right to demand its profert. Cabell v. Arnold, 68 Tex. 103, 28 S. W. 645, 22 L. R. A. 87; Montgomery v. State, 45 App. 394, 65 S. W. 539, 55 L. R. A. 710.

Authority of officer to arrest should be declared at the time, though if his purpose and official capacity are known to the party sought to be arrested, resistance thereto cannot be justified. Plasters v. State, 1 App. 673.

A party yielding to illegal arrest without resistance or protest, does not thereby forfeit his right to regain his liberty by all necessary force, nor does his acquiescence convert the illegal arrest into a legal one. Miers v. State, 34 App. 161, 29 S. W. 174, 53 Am. St. Rep. 765.

Art. 291. [279] Prisoner escaping, etc., may be retaken without warrant.—If a person arrested shall escape, or be rescued, he may be retaken without any other warrant; and, for this purpose, all the means may be used which are authorized in making the arrest in the first instance. [O. C. 232.]

Prisoners.—For decision on sheriff's authority to resort to force in preventing escape of prisoner, see James v. State, 44 Tex. 314.

An extradited prisoner making his escape after removal from this state and returning to this state, the governor of this state may issue his second warrant of arrest, without awaiting a second requisition. Ex parte Hobbs, 32 App. 312, 22 S. W. 1635, 49 Am. St. Rep. 783.

Convicts.—The right of an officer, holding a prisoner convicted of felony, to kill to prevent escape does not extend to an officer attempting to recapture an escaped convict. A penitentiary guard, in attempting the recapture of an escaped convict, has only the authority of an ordinary officer in making an arrest. Wright v. State, 44 Tex. 645.

A convict guard may kill to prevent the escape of a convict, if absolutely the only means to that end. Washington v. State, 1 App. 617.

It is not even extenuation of murder that it was committed by an escaped convict resisting re-arrest. Wallace v. State, 20 App. 366, and cases cited. See, also, Walte v. State, 13 App. 163.

Either an officer or private citizen may arrest an escaped convict without warrant. Ex parte Sherwood, 29 Tex. R., 294, 18 S. W. 812.

Art. 291a. Members of militia exempt from arrest, when.—No persons belonging to the active militia of this state shall be arrested on any civil process while going on duty to or returning from any place at which he may be required to attend for military duty, except in cases of treason, felony, or breach of the peace. [Act 1905, p. 183, ch. 104, § 70.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised Code of Criminal Procedure, and is inserted in this compilation in view of the decision in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 626.

CHAPTER THREE OF THE COMMITMENT OR DISCHARGE OF THE ACCUSED

Art. 292. Proceeding when brought before a magistrate.

293. When examination postponed for reasonable time; custody and disposition of the accused during that time.

294. Defendant shall be informed of his right to make statement, etc.

295. Voluntary statement of accused.

296. Witnesses may be placed under the rule.

Art. 297. Right of counsel to examine witnesses.

298. Same rules of evidence govern as on final trial.

299. Witnesses shall be examined in presence of the accused.

300. Testimony shall be reduced to writing, signed and certified.

301. Magistrate may issue attachment for witnesses.

Article 292. [280] Proceeding when brought before a magistrate.—When a person accused of an offense has been brought before a magistrate, that officer shall proceed to examine into the truth of the accusation made, allowing the accused, however, sufficient time to procure the aid of counsel. [O. C. 233.]

Examining court.—Jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, sitting as an examining court, is that of a magistrate, and not a justice of the peace; and, as such magistrate, his jurisdiction and process is co-extensive with his county. [art. 302, 39 Tex. 348; Brez v. State, 32 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588; Powell v. State, 37 Tex. 348; Brez v. State, 39 Tex. 86; Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39; Guy v. State, 9 App. 161; Rice v. State, 22 App. 654, 3 S. W. 791; Jackson v. State, 29 App. 483, 16 S. W. 247; Walker v. State, 28 App. 122, 12 S. W. 503; Tabor v. State, 34 Tex. 662, 53 Am. St. Rep. 726; Kirby v. State, 23 App. 15, 5 S. W. 165; Gentry v. State, 24 App. 80, 5 S. W. 660; Bailey v. State, 25 App. 706, 9 S. W. 270; Salas v. State, 31 App. 455, 21 S. W. 44.]

A magistrate cannot sit as an examining court or conduct an examining trial until he has the party under arrest and before him. [art. 305, 281.]

Discharge shall not prevent, etc. [art. 306, 294.]

Post, art. 305. [art. 293. 281] When examination postponed for reasonable time; custody and disposition of the accused during that time.—The magistrate may, at the request of the prosecutor or person representing the state, or of the defendant, postpone, for a reasonable time, the examination, so as to afford an opportunity to procure testimony; but the accused shall in the meanwhile be detained in the custody of the sheriff or other duly authorized officer, unless he give bail to be present from day to day before the magistrate until the examination is concluded, which he may do in all cases except murder and treason. [O. C. 234.]

Waiver of examination by accused in bailable cases. Post, art. 350; Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1051.

Art. 294. [282] Defendant shall be informed of his right to make statement, etc.—Before the examination of the witnesses, the magistrate shall inform the defendant that it is his right to make a statement relative to the accusation brought against him, but shall, at the same time, also inform him that he can not be compelled to make any statement whatever, and, that if he does make such statement, it may be used in evidence against him. [O. C. 235-241.]

Disposition of statement, see post, arts. 247-249.

Testimony of defendant, see post, art. 790.

Repeal of statute.—This and the following article are not repealed by article 790, post. The articles authorizing a defendant to make a voluntary statement at an examining trial relate to a different subject than the act which authorizes him to testify in his own behalf. Aiken v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 58.

Admissibility of statement in general.—See post, art. 810. A voluntary statement held admissible though made while under arrest and sworn to by defendant charged with crime. Salas v. State, 31 App. 485, 21 S. W. 44.

Informing defendant as to use of statement.—The statute prescribes no form as to how defendant as to his statement and it is sufficient if he is warned that so much of his statement as is inculpatory may be used against him. Kirby v. State, 23 App. 15, 5 S. W. 165.

A statement held admissible where it appeared defendant desired to make it and was warned it could be used against him. Bresee v. State, 37 App. 464, 30 S. W. 281.

It does not vitiate a voluntary statement for the magistrate to inform the defendant that it cannot be used for him. The law is that it can be used against him, but not for him. Aiken v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 57; §5.

Admissibility of testimony when accused does not testify.—Accused's testimony before the examining magistrate is admissible against him on his subsequent trial, though he does not then testify. Pressley v. State, 61 App. 127, 141 S. W. 215.

Art. 295. [283] Voluntary statement of accused.—If the accused shall desire to make a voluntary statement, he may do so before the examination of any of the witnesses, but not afterward. His statement shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or by some one under his direction, or by the accused or his counsel, and shall be signed by the accused, but shall not be sworn to by him. If the accused be unable to write his name, he shall sign the statement by making his mark at the foot of the same; and the magistrate shall, in every case, attest by his own certificate and signature to the execution and signing of the statement. [O. C. 235, 242, 243.]

See notes under preceding article. See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1045.
False swearing.—This statute forbids the defendant from swearing to a voluntary statement, and if he does swear to it he cannot be prosecuted for perjury, although he might be prosecuted for false swearing. Biard v. State, 51 App. 410, 113 S. W. 275.

Art. 296. [284] Witness may be placed under rule.—The magistrate shall, if requested by the accused or his counsel, or by the person prosecuting, have all the witnesses placed in charge of an officer, except the witness who is testifying, so that the testimony given by any one witness shall not be heard by any of the others. [O. C. 235.]

On trial, see post, arts. 719-723, and notes.
Cited, Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

Art. 297. [285] Right of counsel to examine witness.—If any person appear to prosecute as counsel for the state, he shall have the right to put the questions to the witnesses on the direct or cross-examination; and the accused or his counsel has the same right. Should no counsel appear, either for the state or for the defendant, the magistrate may examine the witnesses; and the accused has the same right. [O. C. 236.]

Art. 298. [286] Same rules of evidence govern as on final trial.—The same rules of evidence shall apply to and govern a trial before an examining court that apply to and govern a final trial.

For rules of evidence, see post, arts. 783-834.

Art. 299. [287] Witnesses shall be examined in presence of the accused.—The examination of each witness shall be in the presence of the accused. [O. C. 240.]

Art. 300. [288] Testimony shall be reduced to writing, signed and certified.—The testimony of each witness examined shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or some one under his direction, and shall then be read over to the witness, or he may read it over himself; and such corrections shall be made in the same as the witness may direct; and he shall then sign the same by affixing thereto his name or mark. All the testimony thus taken shall be certified to by the magistrate taking the same. [O. C. 238.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1946.

The certificate need not state that the testimony was read to or by the witnesses, Golden v. State, 22 App. 1, 2 S. W. 831.

The testimony of each witness must be reduced to writing, signed by the witness, and all of it certificed to by the officer taking it. Kirby v. State, 23 App. 13, 5 S. W. 165; O'Connell v. State, 10 App. 667.

The court can proceed with the examination even though the defendant waives his right of trial. Porch v. State, 51 App. 7, 99 S. W. 1124.

It is the practice to give the substance only and not the details of the evidence. Curry v. State, 72 App. 462, 362 S. W. 851.

Art. 301. [289] Magistrate may issue attachment for witnesses.

—The magistrate has the power in all cases, where a witness resides or is in the county where the prosecution is pending, to issue an attachment for the purpose of enforcing the attendance of such witness; this he may do without having previously issued a subpoena for that purpose. [O. C. 244.]

Art. 302. [290] May issue attachment to another county, when.

—The magistrate may issue an attachment for a witness to any county in the state, when affidavit is made by the party applying therefor that the testimony of the witness is material to the prosecution, or the defense, as the case may be; and the affidavit shall further state the facts which it is expected will be proved by the witness; and, if the facts set forth are not considered material by the magistrate, or, if they be admitted to be true by the adverse party, the attachment shall not issue. [O. C. 246.]

Explanatory.—This article and arts. 303 and 304, post seem to be superseded by Act 1897, 1 S. S., p. 58 (arts. 539-545, post).

Art. 303. [291] Witness need not be tendered fees, etc.—It shall not be necessary where a witness is attached to tender his witness fees or expenses to him. [O. C. 246.]

See note under art. 302.

Art. 304. [292] Attachment shall be executed forthwith.—The officer receiving the attachment shall execute it forthwith by bringing before the magistrate the witness named therein, unless such witness shall give bail for his appearance before the magistrate at the time and place required by the writ. [O. C. 245.]

See note under art. 302.

Art. 305. [293] Manner of postponing examination to procure testimony.—After examining the witnesses in attendance, if it satisfactorily appear to the magistrate that there is other important testimony which may be had by a postponement of the examination, he shall, at the request of the prosecutor or of the defendant, postpone the further examination for a reasonable time to enable such testimony to be procured; but in such case the accused shall remain in the custody of the proper officer until the day fixed for such further examination. No postponement shall take place, unless a statement, on oath, be made by the defendant, or the person prosecuting, setting forth the name and residence of the witness, and the facts which it is expected will be proved; or, if it be testimony other than that of a witness, the statement made shall set forth the nature of the evidence. If the magistrate is satisfied that the testimony is not material, or, if the same be admitted to be true by the adverse party, the postponement shall be refused. [O. C. 239.]

Art. 306. [294] Capital offense; who may discharge.—Upon examination of a person accused of a capital offense, no magistrate other than a judge of the supreme court, a judge of a court of appeals, a judge of the district court or a judge of the county court, shall have power to discharge the defendant. Any magistrate may admit to bail, except in capital cases, where the proof is evident. [O. C. 248.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1047.

Proof evident.—See ante, art. 6, and notes.

Art. 307. [295] Proceedings when insufficient bail has been taken.—Where it is made to appear by complaint, on oath, to a judge of the supreme court, court of appeals, district or county court, that the bail taken in any case is insufficient in amount, or that the sureties are not good for the amount, or that the bond is for any reason defective or insufficient, such judge shall issue a warrant of arrest, and require of the defendant sufficient bond and security, according to the nature of the case. [O. C. 249.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1055-1057.

Increase of bail.—This article is applicable alone to examining trials and does not apply after indictment found in district court, and where on habeas corpus or otherwise the bail has been fixed under said indictment. Jenkins v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 224.

Increase of bail cannot be directed by the court without the preliminary filing of the affidavit required by this article. Ex parte Wasson, 50 App. 361, 97 S. W. 103.

Art. 308. [296] When committed, discharged, or admitted to bail.—After the voluntary statement of the accused, if any, and the examination of the witnesses has been fully completed, the magistrate shall proceed to make an order committing the defendant to the jail of the proper county, if there be one, discharging him or admitting him to bail, as the law and facts of the case may require. [O. C. 250.]

Discharge.—A discharge under this statute will constitute such an ending as will be sufficient in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. Rogers v. Mul­lins, 26 Civ. App. 258, 63 S. W. 268.

Bail.—A magistrate can bind the accused to the current term of the district court, if in session, or if not in session, to the next term. But quere, can the magistrate bind to the next term, if the court is then in session? Hays v. State, 43 App. 205, 64 S. W. 1049.

Rehearing.—Rehearing cannot be had from an examining court, and one complaining of injustice from such court must seek relief by habeas corpus. Butler v. State, 36 App. 483, 38 S. W. 46.

Art. 309. [297] When no safe jail, etc.—Where there is no safe jail in the county in which the prosecution is carried on, the magistrate may commit to the nearest safe jail in any other county. [O. C. 251.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1049.

Art. 310. [298] To whom warrant is directed in such case.—The warrant of commitment in the case mentioned in the preceding article shall be directed to the sheriff of the county to which the defendant is sent, but the sheriff of the county from which the defendant is taken shall be required to deliver the prisoner into the hands of the sheriff of the county to which he is sent. [O. C. 252.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1650.

Art. 311. [299] Warrant of commitment; its requisites.—A warrant of commitment is an order signed by the proper magistrate directing a sheriff to receive and place in jail the person so committed. It will be sufficient if it have the following requisites:

1. That it run in the name of “The State of Texas.”
2. That it be addressed to the sheriff of the county to the jail of which the defendant is committed.
3. That it state in plain language the offense for which the defendant is committed, and give his name, if it be known, or, if unknown, contain an accurate description of the defendant.
4. That it state to what court and at what time the defendant is to be held to answer.
5. When the prisoner is sent out of the county where the prosecution arose, the warrant shall state that there is no safe jail in the proper county.

6. If it be a case in which bail has been granted, the amount of bail shall be stated in the warrant. [O. C. 253.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1650.

Commitment.—The order of the court is itself a mittimus. Shrader v. State, 30 Tex. 386.

Bail.—The magistrate having committed the accused to jail in default of bond, it then became the duty of the sheriff to take and approve bond in such amount as prescribed by the magistrate. Shrader v. State, 50 Tex. 386.

A bail bond taken and approved by a deputy sheriff while the examining court was in session, and by order of the magistrate, is as valid as though taken and approved by the magistrate himself. Arrington v. State, 13 App. 651.

Art. 312. [300] When prisoner sent to jail of another county, etc.—In every case where, for want of a safe jail in the proper county, a prisoner is committed to the jail of another county, the last named county shall have the right to recover by civil action, in a court of competent jurisdiction, of the county from which the prisoner was sent, an amount of money not exceeding seventy-five cents per day, on account of the expenses attending the custody and safe keeping of a prisoner. [O. C. 254.]

Post, arts. 1150, 1151.

Art. 313. [301] Duty of sheriff in reference to prisoners.—It is the duty of every sheriff to keep safely a person committed to his custody. He shall use no cruel or unusual means to secure this end, but shall adopt all necessary measures to prevent the escape of a prisoner. He may summon a guard of sufficient number, in case it becomes necessary to prevent an escape from jail, or the rescue of a prisoner. [O. C. 255.]

Ante, arts. 49, 50, 52, 53 and notes.

Art. 314. [302] Discharge shall not prevent, etc.—A discharge by a magistrate, upon an examination of any person accused of an offense, shall not prevent a second arrest of the same person for the same offense. [O. C. 256.]

Effect of discharge.—Res adjudicata, jeopardy or secondary proceedings of any kind do not apply to examining courts. Ex part Porter, 16 App. 321; Butler v. State, 35 App. 483, 38 S. W. 46.

CHAPTER FOUR

OF BAIL

1. GENERAL RULES APPLICABLE TO ALL CASES OF BAIL

Art.

315. Definition of “bail.”
316. Definition of “recognizance.”
317. Definition of “bail bond.”
318. When bail bond is given.
319. What the word “bail” includes.

2. RECOGNIZANCE AND BAIL BOND

320. Requisites of a recognizance.
321. Requisites of a bail bond.
322. Rules laid down in this chapter, applicable to all cases where bail is taken.
323. Bail bond and recognizance—how construed.
324. Minor or married woman cannot be security.
325. In what manner bail shall be taken.
326. Property exempt from sale shall not be liable for, etc.

3. SURRENDER OF THE PRINCIPAL BY HIS BAIL

330. Surety may surrender his principal.
331. When surrender is made during term of court.
332. When court is not in session.
333. Surety may obtain warrant of arrest for principal, when.
334. Proceedings when surrender is in term time and accused fails to give bond.
335. When surrender is made in vacation and accused fails, etc.
336. Sheriff, etc., may take bail bond, when.

4. BAIL BEFORE THE EXAMINING COURT

340. Rules in relation to bail and of a general nature, applicable in this court.
341. Proceedings when bail is granted.
342. Bail, when allowable and when not.
343. Reasonable time given to procure bail.
344. When bail is not given, magistrate shall commit accused, etc.

5. BAIL BY WITNESSES

351. Witnesses required to give bail, when.
352. Of amount of security required of a witness.
353. Force and effect of witnesses' bonds.
354. Witness who fails, etc., to give bond when required may be committed.

1. GENERAL RULES APPLICABLE TO ALL CASES OF BAIL

Article 315. [303] Definition of “bail.”—“Bail” is the security given by a person accused of an offense that he will appear and answer before the proper court the accusation brought against him. This security is given by means of a recognizance or a bail bond. [O. C. 257, 258.]

See, ante, art. 6.

Forfeiture of bail, see post, arts. 488-504.

Construction.—The bail is construed to have the custody of his principal; the surety no control over him. The bailor is the manuaeantor or jailer of the principal, who is constantly in commitment to him, subject to his surrender. Gay v. State, 20 Tex. 504.

Bail bonds and like obligations bind the makers for the principal's appearance not only in the designated court, but in any other court to which his case may be transferred by operation of law. Pearson v. State, 7 App. 279.

Appearance bonds and recognizances are intended to secure the presence and trial of the offender. Jackson v. State, 13 Tex. 218.

Personal appearance.—A bail bond requiring a defendant to make his personal appearance before the court is more onerous than this and article 320, post, required. Williams v. State, 51 App. 262, 103 S. W. 929.

Effect of taking bail.—Bail once granted after indictment, is res adjudicata, and is final as to the State, and even the accused, unless he seeks to reduce the bail by appeal or otherwise. Ex parte Augustine, 33 App. 1, 23 S. W. 680, 47 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Art. 316. [304] Definition of “recognizance.”—A “recognizance” is an undertaking entered into, before a court of record in session, by the defendant in a criminal action, and his sureties, by which they bind themselves, respectively, in a sum fixed by the court, that the defendant will appear for trial before such court upon the accusation preferred against him. The undertaking of the parties in such case is not signed, but is made a matter of record in the court where the same is entered into. [O. C. 259.]

Recognizance on appeal.—See art. 320, post.

See Wright v. State, 22 App. 670, 3 S. W. 346; Grier v. State, 29 Tex. 96.

Defined.—Recognizance is an obligation of record, in which the granting court can make no material alteration without the consent of all the cognizors. Grant v. State, 8 App. 432; Gay v. State, 20 Tex. 504.

A recognizance is a statutory obligation, and its requisites are prescribed by the statute. In order to constitute it a legal obligation, it must be made in conformity with the law authorizing it to be entered into, at least in a substantial manner. Its very basic principle is that there must be at least one defendant, and there may be sureties, and the further plain provision is that this obligation must show the relation of the parties to the obligation they have undertaken, whether principal or surety. It must be stated who is principal and who are sureties. Smith v. State, 35 App. 3, 29 S. W. 158.

Art. 317. [305] Definition of “bail bond.”—A “bail bond” is an undertaking entered into by the defendant and his sureties for the appearance of the principal therein before some court or magistrate to answer a criminal accusation; it is written out and signed by the defendant and his sureties. [O. C. 260.]

Requirements, see post, art. 321, and notes. See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 799.

Undertakings to which statute applies.—The requisites prescribed by the Code of Procedure for bail-bonds and recognizances are applicable to all such undertakings in criminal cases, whether entered into before or after indictment or information. Foard v. State, 3 App. 556.

Execution on Sunday.—That it was executed on Sunday will not invalidate a bail bond. Lindsay v. State, 29 App. 488, 46 S. W. 1045.

Art. 318. [306] When a bail bond is given.—A bail bond is entered into either before a magistrate, upon an examination of a criminal accusation against a defendant, or before a judge upon an application under habeas corpus; or it is taken from the defendant by a peace officer who has a warrant of arrest or commitment, as hereafter provided. [O. C. 261.]

Art. 319. [307] What the word “bail” includes.—Wherever the word “bail” is used with reference to the security given by the defendant, it is intended to apply as well to recognizances as to bail bonds. When a defendant is said to be “on bail,” or to have “given bail,” it is intended to apply as well to recognizances as to bail bonds. [O. C. 262.]

2. RECOGNIZANCE AND BAIL BOND

Art. 320. [308] Requisites of a recognizance.—A recognizance shall be sufficient to bind the principal and sureties if it contain the following requisites:
1. If it be acknowledged that the defendant is indebted to the state of Texas in such sum as is fixed by the court, and the sureties are, in like manner, indebted in such sum as is fixed by the court.
2. If the defendant is charged with an offense that is a felony, that it state that he is charged with a felony. If the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor, that it state that he is charged with a misdemeanor.
3. That the time and place when the defendant is bound to appear be stated, and the court before which he is bound to appear. [O. C. 263; amended, Act 1899, p. 111.]

Recognizance on appeal, post, arts. 983, 919. See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 795, 798.

Nature of liability.—See article 339, and notes.
The liability of sureties is several as well as joint. Mathena v. State, 15 App. 460.
A recognizance is a joint and several undertaking, and if good as to the principal, and any one of the sureties, they are not only bound, but liable, though another surety may not be. Ray v. State, 16 App. 263.

Form and requisites in general.—It must bind the surety, not alone “his heirs and legal representatives.” Grier v. State, 29 Tex. 35.
Recognizance must comply with the law. Nunn v. State, 40 App. 428, 50 S. W. 713.

Indictment found by an illegal grand jury will not support a recognizance. Wells v. State, 21 App. 504, 2 S. W. 306; Harrell v. State, 22 App. 622, 3 S. W. 479, and cases cited.
Need not recite that it was entered into in open court. Pleasants v. State, 29 App. 214, 15 S. W. 43.
Recognition must show who is principal and who sureties, see Smith v. State, 35 App. 9, 29 S. W. 158.

Statement of amount.—It must state the sum in which the principal and the sureties also are bound. Townsend v. State, 7 App. 74. The sum may be stated in figures, with a dollar mark affixed. Roberts v. State, 11 App. 26. It will be presumed that the sum named in the recognizance in which the principal is bound, is the amount of bail fixed by the court, whether such statement is explicitly made in the recognizance or not. Thrash v. State, 18 App. 271.

Designation of offense.—Since the amendment of 1899, it is sufficient for the recognizance to state that the cognizor is “charged with a felony” or a misdemeanor.” as the case may be. Nichols v. State, 47 App. 406, 53 S. W. 1115; Hannan v. State, 48 App. 196, 87 S. W. 152; Davis v. State, 52 App. 154, 119 S. W. 54.
following Horton v. State, 43 App. 460, 68 S. W. 172. And see Davis v. State, 47 App. 468, 92 S. W. 172; Parish v. State, 47 App. 145, 92 S. W. 172.

A recognition that describes the offense as embezzlement over $50, sufficiently shows that defendant is charged with a felony. Nichols v. State, 47 App. 406, 83 S. W. 172.

Former law.—If the offense is specifically defined by the statute, the general name is sufficiently descriptive of it, as murder, theft, rape, robbery, burglary, and the like. Lowrie v. State, 43 Tex. 602; McLoren v. State, 3 App. 658; Morris v. State, 4 App. 554; Massey v. State, Id. 580; O’Rourke v. State, 9 App. 652; McGuinness v. State, 11 App. 323; McClure v. State, 11 App. 551; Kepley v. State, 14 App. 177; Jones v. State, 15 App. 82; Vivian v. State, 16 App. 262; Watkins v. State, Id. 646; Thrash v. State, Id. 271; Craven v. State, 25 App. 84, 5 S. If the offense is not so described by stating its essential elements, so that it will appear that a particular offense against the law is charged against it. In such case a generic or general term will not be sufficient. Lowrie v. State, 43 Tex. 602; Morris v. State, 4 App. 554; Massey v. State, Id. 580; O’Rourke v. State, 9 App. 466; Kramer v. State, 18 App. 13.

A disjunctive statement of the offense, as "selling or giving away whisky on establishment to a party", is insufficient, State v. Ward, 35 Tex. 92. A disjunctive statement which includes both a criminal and a civil action, such as the defendant is accused of two or more distinct offenses is bad for duplicity. Killingsworth v.
State, 7 App. 28; Hutchinson v. State, 4 App. 435; Patton v. State, 35 Tex. 92.
It must recite the offense. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 579.

A recognition, (taken before the adoption of the code,) which requires the de­ defendant to appear at the "next term", and then to answer the charges exhib­ hited against him, and that he will not depart therefrom, without the leave of the court is not more onerous than the law requires. Wilcox v. State, 24 Tex. 344.
A recognition is not defective because it binds the party to appear "from day to day" as well as from term to term. State v. Glaevcke, 33 Tex. 53.
The venue of the offense need not be stated. Cundiff v. State, 32 Tex. 641.
In stating the time it is sufficient to state the term of the court, and in stating the place it is sufficient to specify the name of the court and the county. Teel v.

term of the court can make no material alteration in it without the consent of all the cognizors,

If a recognition be defective, its defects cannot be supplied by parol, but only by such interments as the court can reasonably make by the help of its judicial knowledge of facts. Brita v. State, 24 Tex. 219. Being an obligation of record, the court will make no material alteration in it without the consent of the cognizors.
Grant v. State, 8 App. 432; Gragg v. State, 18 App. 295. But where the recognication omitted the word "dollars," which appeared in the original entry on the docket, it was held that such defect might be amended upon notice to the cognizors.
Blalack v. State, 3 App. 757. But the appellate court will not supply by intenment a necessary word, though its omission be obviously a mere clerical oversight.

it can be forfeited only as an original recognition, and by the same proceeding:

Art. 321. [309] Requisites of a bail bond.—A bail bond shall be sufficient if it contain the following requisites:

1. That it be made payable to the state of Texas,
2. That the obligors thereto bind themselves that the defendant will appear before the proper court or magistrate to answer the accusation against him.

3. If the defendant is charged with an offense that is a felony, that it state that he is charged with a felony. If the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor, that it state that he is charged with a misdemeanor.

4. That the bond be signed by the principal and sureties, or in case all or either of them can not write, then that they affix thereto their marks.

5. That the bond state the time and place, when and where the accused binds himself to appear, and the court or magistrate before whom he is to appear. In stating the time, it is sufficient to specify the term of the court; and in stating the place, it is sufficient to specify the name of the court or magistrate, and of the county. [O. C. 264; amended, Act 1899, p. 111.]

See Willson v. Cr. Forms, 788, 798.

2. Blanks.
3. Date.
4. Approval and filing.
5. Alteration.
6. Form and requisites in general.
7. Time and place of appearance.
8. Designation of offense.
10. Onerous conditions.
11. Defects, objections, and amendments.

1. Execution and delivery.—A bond which does not appear to have been executed by the proper officer, will not support forfeture. Lowe v. State, 15 Tex. 141; Weaver v. State, 13 App. 191, and cases cited. And see Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 8 S. W. 34. See also, Cassady v. State, 4 App. 96; Loving v. State, 9 App. 471.

Must be executed or signed by the principal himself, or for him by some one duly authorized by him. Price v. State, 12 App. 235.

Writing his name in any part of the bond so as to identify the agreement and operate as his signature, binds the surety. Taylor v. State, 15 App. 514, citing Fulshear v. Rendon, 18 Tex. 275, 70 Am. Dec. 281.

A bail bond cannot be delivered as an escrow to the obligee, though it may be delivered as such by the surety to the principal obligor. When delivered to the obligee it is absolute and binding. Brown v. State, 18 App. 325.

Unless the contrary is shown, the bond will be presumed to have been executed on the date of its approval. Mills v. State, 36 App. 71, 35 S. W. 370.

Not avoid liability on the ground that he signed the bond on agreement with the sheriff that he was to be liable only for a certain sum, which sum was less than the face of the bond. Snowden v. State, 53 App. 439, 110 S. W. 442.

2. Blanks.—Bond binding sureties in ............ dollars, is nugatory as to the principal. Townsend v. State, 7 App. 74.

A surety signing a bail bond in blank, knowing its purpose, is bound by the amount afterwards fixed and inserted by the magistrate. Gary v. State, 11 App. 527.

A bond should be dated, but the date of the approval thereof by the officer taking it is a sufficient dating. Carroll v. State, 6 App. 463; Ake v. State, 4 App. 126.

4. Approval and filing.—A bond when taken by proper officer, returned into court and filed, is an obligation of record. Lawson v. State, 6 Tex. 570; Goldthwaite v. State, 32 Tex. 599.

Bond may be filed nunc pro tunc to correspond with the fact of filing. Slocumb v. State, 11 Tex. 15.

If taken by the court in session, approval is not necessary. Arrington v. State, 13 App. 554.

The statutory provisions respecting the approval of bail bonds are merely directory, and a bail bond is not void by reason of noncompliance therewith. Dyche v. State, 24 Tex. 266; Doughty v. State, 33 Tex. 1; Holt v. State, 20 App. 271; Taylor v. State, 16 App. 514. The taking and returning the bond into court is a substantial approval of it, if no formal approval being required. Brown v. State, 49 Tex. 49; Evans v. State, 75 Tex. 50; Dyche v. State, 24 Tex. 266. The omission of the clerk to indorse the file mark upon the bond, does not vitiate the bond. It is sufficient if the bond be in court and on file. Turner v. State, 41 Tex. 549; Cundiff v. State, 35 Tex. 641. It may be filed nunc pro tunc even after judgment nisi has been entered upon it. Haverty v. State, 32 Tex. 602; Slocumb v. State, 11 Tex. 15.

Bail bond is not affected by the failure of the officer taking it to formally ap-

Failure of clerk to file returned bond does not affect its validity. Turner v. State, 41 Tex. 549; Egzenberger v. Brandenberg, 74 Tex. 274, 11 S. W. 1699. If a bond is not approved by the reviewing court, it is not viticated because it is not filed with the clerk until the day of forfeiture. Heiman v. State, 70 App. 480, 138 S. W. 276.

6. Form and requirements in general.—A bail bond must conform in every particu-

The bond taken by the sheriff after the examining trial should conform to the order of the magistrate. Barringer v. State, 27 Tex. 533.

Unless the bond binds the sureties as well as "his heirs and legal representatives," it is of no force. Krier v. State, 29 Tex. 55.

The law does not require as great particularity in a bail bond which is taken before, as after indictment found. In such case, if the bond shows that the principal shall be charged with an offense, and binds him to appear before the proper

When the bond after naming the principal, required the "above bound to appear, etc., the omission of the principal's name after the word "bounden" was held not to vitiate the bond. Gorman v. State, 29 Tex. 612, 19 Am. Rep. 29.

A bond not vitiated by the omission of an essential word if the omitted word be clearly indicated by the context. Roberts v. State, 11 App. 26.

When the offense of which the principal obligor is accused is named or described in the bond, and it appears therefrom that he is accused of an offense contrary to the laws of this state, it is not necessary that the bond shall disclose the mode of the accusation, that is, whether such accusation is made by indictment, information, etc. McGee v. State, 11 App. 520. But when the bond obligates the principal to answer an information filed by a justice of the peace, charging said principal with an aggravated assault and battery, reciting in conclusion that said accusation was preferred in an indictment, it was held void, as it did not show that the principal was legally accused of an offense. Murphy v. State, 17 App. 109. All process and proceedings, including a bail bond, based upon a void indictment, are them-

A bail bond is strictly a statutory bond, and to entitle the state to a forfeiture thereon, it must contain all the requisites prescribed by the statute. The principles of equity as applied to private contracts can not be invoked in the construc-

An appearance bond must name who is principal and who are sureties. Smith et al. v. State, 35 App. 9, 29 S. W. 158.

It was not necessary to recite that the justice before whom the complaint had been filed shall be bound, and that the amount of the bond had been fixed by the justice. Holley v. State, 70 App. 511, 157 S. W. 537.

Time, place and court before which the principal is bound to appear must be stated. "Before" refers to the place of the court and not to the time, and does not require appearance anterior to the time. Willford v. State, 17 Tex. 653.

Bond is void which does not specifically bind the appearance at a particular time and place, and before the particular court. State v. Angell, 37 Tex. 357; Ward v. State, 38 Tex. 302; State v. Phelps, Id., 555.

It must bind the principal to appear before the proper court, failing which condition, the bond is of no force. State v. Phelps, 38 Tex. 555; Couch v. State, 36 Tex. 335; Littlefield v. State, 1 App. 722; Wallen v. State, 18 App. 414; Mackey v. State, 24 App. 49, 35 S. W. 352, and cases cited.

It is void if it names a court not known to law, or an impossible date. Smith v. State, 7 App. 160; Downs v. State, Id., 483; Mackey v. State, 38 App. 24, 40 S. W. 952, and cases cited; Butler v. State, 31 App. 64, 19 S. W. 676, and cases cited.

If it fails to state which of two district courts which of two courts in which the principal was bound, was defective in failing to designate the particular court. Granberry v. State, 55 App. 350, 116 S. W. 594, citing Moseley v. State, 37 App. 18, 35 S. W. 600.

If it binds the recognizor to appear at a term of court not authorized by law, it is void. Wegner v. State, 28 App. 419, 13 S. W. 609.

Bond bond stipulating an impossible date or time long passed is a nullity. Butler v. State, 31 App. 63, 19 S. W. 676.

A bond requiring defendant to appear at a time there was no court is void. Missouri v. State, 37 App. 18, 35 S. W. 590.

Where there are two district courts in a county, if a bail bond does not specify before which court the defendant is to appear, it is not valid. Granberry v. State, 55 App. 350, 116 S. W. 594.

A bail bond given for appearance of accused before the district court of a county is insufficient: the county having two district courts, and the particular one not being designated, though the time and place is stated. Thomas v. State, 59 App. 153, 127 S. W. 1050.

A bail bond bound the defendant to appear at “the next term of court on the 11th day of September, 1911,” and the 11th of September fell during the same term of court in which the bond was issued. Held that, as the bond fixed a definite time for the appearance at a time when the court was not legally in session, the specific time failed, and render the bond certain and sufficient in spite of the inconsistent matter therein. Barrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558.

A bail bond entitled “State of Texas, County of H.” stating that the principal was charged “with the offense of a felony,” and required to give bail to appear at the “district court of said county,” and conditioned on his appearing “before the said district court at its next term, to be begun and held at the courthouse of said county, in the town of C.”, was not invalid as failing to require that the principal make his personal appearance before the district court of H. county, as required by statute, or as failing to state that he was charged with a felony. Stallings v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 132.

8. Designation of offense.—Sufficient now for the bond to state that the principal is charged with a felony” (or “misdemeanor” as the case may be). Nichols v. State, 47 App. 406, 83 S. W. 1113; Hannon v. State, 45 App. 199, 87 S. W. 153; Davis v. State, 56 App. 131, 119 S. W. 95 (following Horton v. State, 43 App. 606, 68 S. W. 172); Barrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558; Holley v. State, 70 App. 511, 127 S. W. 397.

The bond should recite whether the offense named is a felony or misdemeanor. Callaghan v. State, 57 App. 314, 122 S. W. 879.

There was no variance between the bond reciting that defendant was charged “with the offense of a felony” and a judgment reciting that he was “charged with a felony, to wit, burglary.” Barrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558.

Where accused was charged with bigamy, a recital in the bail bond that he was charged with a felony was a sufficient description of the offense. Holley v. State, 79 App. 511, 167 S. W. 597.

The statute does not require that the words “felony” or “misdemeanor” be used in a bond, but merely permits their use as sufficiently specific, and a bond tendered by the United States commissioner sufficiently described the offense where it recited that the principal was charged with the offense of concealing property from his trustee in bankruptcy belonging to creditors, in violation of the Bankruptcy Act of the Revised Statutes of the United States. United States v. Zarafonitis, 150 Fed. 97, 80 C. C. A. 51, 19 Ann. Cas. 290.

9. Former law.—A bail bond which recites the offense as “unlawfully selling mortgaged property” is insufficient. Cravey v. State, 26 App. 84, 9 S. W. 62.

A bail bond executed after the presentation of an indictment must describe the offense named in the indictment. Douglas v. State, 26 App. 248, 9 S. W. 733. The indictment in two separate counts charged forging and the uttering of a forged instrument. The bond set out the essential elements of both offenses. Held, correct. Id. A bail bond recited offense to be “theft of thirty-three sheep.” Held sufficient designation of offense. Lockhart v. State, 32 App. 149, 23 S. W. 413.

A bond which describes the offense as “carrying on or about the person a dirk” is insufficient for being in the disjunctive. Walker v. State, 32 App. 517, 24 S. W. 909 (following Hart v. State, 2 App. 39, and Garza v. State (Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 39).

A mistake in the date of the indictment will not vitiate the bail. Blain v. State, 34 App. 417, 31 S. W. 366.

A bail bond for the appearance of a party charged with offering to bribe a judicial officer should state the intent with which the offer was made. Hardin et al. v. State, 36 App. 460, 37 S. W. 752.

A bond for embezzlement which does not state the amount is insufficient because it does not show whether the offense is a felony or a misdemeanor. Nichols v. State, 47 App. 406, 83 S. W. 1114.

Where one is convicted on an indictment charging seduction, the recognizance is sufficient under this article if it refers to the offense as felony. Wisdom v. State (Cr. App.) 86 S. W. 756.

A bail bond which recites that the principal obligor stands charged “with the offense of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor without license” is insufficient. Martin v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 918.

A bond reciting that defendant was charged “with the offense of keeping premises for the purpose of being used for gaming” was sufficient. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 697.

A condition in a bail bond which is more onerous than is required by the law, which does not support a judgment, fails. Ex parte Turner v. State, 14 App. 163; Johnson v. Erskine, 9 Tex. 1; Barringer v. State, 27 Tex.
Art. 321

ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL

(Title 5)

553; Wooters v. Smith, 58 Tex. 198. A bond which obligates the obligors "jointly and severally" is not more onerous than the law requires. Fulton v. State, 14 App. 32; Mathena v. State, 15 App. 400. A bond which obligates the principal to appear "from day to day and term to term of the court until discharged," is not a condition more onerous than that imposed by law. Pickett v. State, 16 App. 448; Anderson v. State, 19 App. 253. See one instance of a recognizance more onerous than the law required. Wright v. State, 22 App. 670, 3 S. W. 346. A bond is not objectionable because it requires the defendant not to depart from the court without leave. Joint Recognizance, 789; Thompson v. State, 24 App. 125, 29 S. W. 739.

None of the articles of this chapter require the personal appearance of the principal, and such a condition in the bond is more onerous then required. Williams v. State, 51 App. 292, 105 S. W. 929.

11. Defects, objections, and amendments.—As to intrinsic matter, bail bond cannot be amended nunc pro tunc without notice to both principal and sureties. Hand v. State, 28 App. 24, 11 S. W. 679, and cases cited.

Whether or not the information was filed at the proper time is a question of fact, and not a ground, as matter of law, for quashing a bail bond. Coleman v. State, 32 App. 866, 25 S. W. 285.

Art. 321. [310] Rules laid down in this chapter applicable to all cases where bail is taken.—The rules laid down in this chapter respecting recognizances and bail bonds are applicable to all such undertakings when entered into in the course of a criminal action, whether before or after an indictment or information, in every case where authority is given to any court, judge, magistrate or other officer, to require bail of a person accused of an offense, or of a witness in a criminal action. [O. C. 265.]

See arts. 648, 649, 899-908, post.

Bail bond or recognizance on appeal.—Under this article and article 330, post, a surety on a bail bond or recognizance on appeal may be released from his liability by surrendering his principal into custody. Ex parte Cobb (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 997, overruling Talley v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 514.

Effect of second arrest of principal.—See notes under article 500, post.

Art. 322. [311] Bail bond and recognizance.—A recognizance or bail bond, entered into by a defendant, and which binds him to appear at a particular term of the district court, shall be construed to bind him and his sureties for his attendance upon the court from term to term, and from day to day, until discharged from further liability thereon, according to law. [O. C. 267.]

See arts. 648, 649, post; Wilson's Cr. Forms, 798.

Duration of obligation.—It binds the obligors for the appearance of the principal from day to day and term to term, until discharged. Pickett v. State, 16 App. 448; Ex parte Guffee, 8 App. 490.

The obligation of a bail bond subsists until the obligors are discharged from liability thereon, according to law. Ex parte Guffee, 8 App. 490; Wells v. State, 21 App. 594, 2 S. W. 806.

Joint or several liability.—The liability is both joint and several, and this status is not affected by failure to bind the sureties severally in terms. Allee v. State, 29 App. 531, 13 S. W. 991; Riser v. State, 13 App. 291; Mathena v. State, 15 App. 400; Thompson v. State, 24 App. 125, 29 S. W. 739 (overruling Ishmael v. State, 41 Tex. 245); Thomas v. State, 13 App. 496; Fulton v. State, 14 App. 32; Barringer v. State, 27 Tex. 553; Johnson v. State, 32 App. 553, 22 S. W. 406.

Art. 324. [312] Minor or married woman can not be security.

-A minor or married woman can not be surety on a recognizance or bail bond, but, if either of these classes of persons be the accused party, the undertaking shall be binding both upon principal and surety. [O. C. 268.]

Married woman as surety.—A bond, signed by a married woman as surety, is invalid only as to her; not as to the principal and other sureties. Pickett v. State, 16 App. 448.

Art. 325. [313] In what manner bail shall be taken.—It is the duty of every court, judge, magistrate or other officer taking bail, to require evidence of the sufficiency of the security offered; but, in every case, one surety shall be sufficient, if it be made to appear that such surety is worth at least double the amount of the sum for which he is bound, exclusive of all property exempted by law from execution, and of debts or other incumbrances; that he is a resident of this state, and has property therein liable to execution worth the sum for which he is bound. [O. C. 269.]

Bonding companies as sureties.—A bail bond executed by a solvent bonding company should be accepted, either in the form of a bond approved by the sheriff, or in open court as a recognizance. Ex parte Cook, 62 App. 22, 136 S. W. 67.

Evidence that a bonding company was a going concern and subject to execution in the sum of $250,000 was sufficient to show that it was solvent, so as to be a proper surety on a bail bond. Ex parte Cook, 62 App. 22, 136 S. W. 67.

Art. 326. [314] Property exempt from sale shall not be liable for, etc.—The property secured by the constitution and laws from forced sale shall not, in any case, be held liable for the satisfaction of a recognizance or bail bond, either as to the principal or sureties. [O. C. 270.]

Art. 327. [315] How sufficiency of sureties shall be ascertained.—In order to test the sufficiency of the security offered to any recognizance or bail bond, unless the court or officer taking the same is fully satisfied as to the sufficiency of the security, the following oath shall be made in writing and subscribed by the surety:

"I, A B, do swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I am worth, in my own right, at least the sum of [here insert the amount in which the surety is bound], after deducting from my property all that which is exempt by the constitution and laws of the state from forced sale, and after the payment of all my debts of every description, whether individual or security debts, and after satisfying all incumbrances upon my property which are known to me; that I reside in ___________ county, and have property in this state liable to execution worth [amount for which he offers to be bound] or more."

[Dated ___________, and attest by the judge of the court, clerk, magistrate or sheriff.]

Which affidavit shall be filed with the papers of the cause, or criminal proceedings.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 806.

Oath.—Bond executed by a single surety is not invalid because he is not shown to be worth double the amount of the bond. The taking of the bond without the oath is discretionary with the approving officer. Pierce v. State, 39 App. 342, 45 S. W. 1019.

Art. 328. [316] Affidavit not conclusive, but further evidence required, when.—The affidavit provided for in the preceding article shall not be deemed conclusive as to the sufficiency of the security; and, if the court or officer taking the recognizance or bail bond is not fully satisfied as to the sufficiency of the security offered, further evidence shall be required before approving the same.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 806.

Art. 329. [317] Rules for fixing amount of bail.—The amount of bail to be required in any case is to be regulated by the court, judge, magistrate or officer taking the bail; they are to be governed in the exercise of this discretion by the constitution of this state, and by the following rules:

1. The bail shall be sufficiently high to give reasonable assurance that the undertaking will be complied with.

2. The power to require bail is not to be used in such manner as to make it an instrument of oppression.

3. The nature of the offense and the circumstances under which it was committed are to be considered.

4. The pecuniary circumstances of the accused are to be regarded, and proof may be taken upon this point. [O. C. 272.]

See art. 906, post.

Court to fix bail in felony cases, see post, art. 516.

Excessive bail, see ante, art. 8.

Amount of bail.—The assessment of the amount of bail is a matter within the discretion of the court, judge, magistrate, or officer taking the same, and will not be revised on appeal, unless it clearly appears that the discretion has been abused and the constitution violated. Ex parte McConnell v. State, 13 App. 390; Ex parte Goodwin, 8 App. 268, 12 S. W. 882; Ex parte King (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 905.

No one should be admitted to bail merely on his own recognition, unless he was unable to give bond, and the confinement would injure his health. Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192.

Where the trial court will hear evidence to determine the amount of bail, it is improper to appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeals for that tribunal to fix the amount of bail in the first instance. Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192.

Circumstances to be considered.—On appeal the record should always show the pecuniary condition of the accused. Ex parte Hutchings, 11 App. 28; Ex parte Coldiron, 15 Id. 464; Miller v. State, 42 Tex. 309; Ex parte Cutney, 17 App. 322; Ex parte Walker & Black, 3 App. 658; McConnell v. State, 13 App. 390; Ruston v. State, 15 App. 324; Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 376, 13 S. W. 415.

The pecuniary condition of the accused is a matter to be considered. Ex parte Hutchings, 11 App. 28; Ex parte Volz (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 238; Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192. See, also, Ex parte Arthur (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 365.

Fixing the amount of bail, the court should consider, among other things, the nature of the offense and the circumstances under which it was committed. Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 376, 13 S. W. 141; Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192.

--- Excessive bail and reduction thereof.---Excessive bail, see ante, art. 8; Ex parte Wilson, 20 App. 438; Ex parte Tittle, 37 App. 597, 40 S. W. 598; Ex parte Hutchings, 49 App. 252, 101 S. W. 794; Ex parte Finn, 48 App. 606, 90 S. W. 29; Ex parte Walker, 3 App. 688; Ex parte Hutchings, 11 App. 28; McConnell v. State, 13 App. 390; Ruston v. State, 15 App. 324; Ex parte Coldiron, 16 App. 664; Ex parte Cutney, 17 App. 372; Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 376, 13 S. W. 415; Ex parte Campbell, 28 App. 376; Miller v. State, 43 App. 697, 65 S. W. 908; Ex parte King (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 905.

Prima facie, five hundred dollars would not be excessive in a felony case. Ex parte Hutchings, 11 App. 28.

A judgment granting bail is final as to the state and also as to the accused unless he should seek to reduce the amount of bail. Ex parte Augustine, 33 App. 1, 23 S. W. 689, 47 Am. St. Rep. 17.

While the judgment of the court below reconmitting relator till he give a bond will not be disturbed, yet, the evidence of his guilt developed being slight, the amount of bond required will be reduced from $10,000 to $1,500. Ex parte Goodwin, 58 App. 288, 125 S. W. 582.

Where accused, indicted in two cases for homicide, was not connected with the homicide by any direct or positive evidence, and the circumstances were of weak probative force, the bail, fixed at $5,500 in each case, was excessive, and must be reduced to $1,000 in each case. Ex parte Canna (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 60.

Where without means was arrested and accordance with three violations of the prohibition law, the bail should not be fixed for a greater amount than $500 for each case, even though the offense was punishable by one from three years in the penitentiary. Ex parte Creed (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192.

Petitioner, having been charged with robbery by the use of firearms in connection with certain others, denied his guilt and claimed that he was the subject of a conspiracy on the part of others to send him to the penitentiary. One of the cases had been tried, and resulted in a disagreement, and petitioner was admitted to bail in the sum of $20,000, which he was unable to give. Held, that the bail fixed was excessive, and should be reduced to $5,000. Ex parte Ross, 70 App. 480, 157 S. W. 496.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, defendant was entitled to bail, and bail was fixed at $7,500, but it appeared that defendant's father was dead, that he had no relations or property from which to secure a bond, but that some of his friends, who were able, had agreed to sign a bond for an amount not greater than $2,500, the bail would be reduced to that sum. Ex parte Martin, 71 App. 333, 159 S. W. 1182.

Where the evidence showed no justification for the homicide, an order fixing the bond of the relator at $750 was not erroneous as requiring excessive bail, though relator's connection with the evidence was shown only by circumstantial evidence. Ex parte Campbell (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 971.

3. Surrender of the Principal by his Bail

Art. 329. [318] Surety may surrender his principal, when.—Those who have become bail for the accused, or either of them, may at any time relieve themselves of their undertaking by surren-

dering the accused into the custody of the sheriff of the county where he is prosecuted. [O. C. 273.]

Mode of surrender.—There are but two modes in which bail can effect the surrender of their principal: First, by surrendering him into custody of sheriff of county, prosecuted, and, second, by making affidavit of desire to surrender him and thereby obtaining an order for his arrest. Woodrug v. State, 52 App. 17, 108 S. W. 371; Kiser v. State, 15 App. 201; Roberts v. State, 4 App. 129.

If a surety desires to surrender his principal he can do so, if the principal will accompany him to the sheriff willingly. If not he must make the affidavit and secure a warrant of arrest. Adams v. State, 48 App. 7, 85 S. W. 1079.

Effect of surrender.—Surrender relegates him to the custody of the sheriff under the original capias, and a new one is not necessary. Patillo v. State, 9 App. 495; Whitener v. State, 28 App. 146, 41 S. W. 699.

Surrender of principal before forfeiture is a good defense for the sureties. Hughes v. State, 28 App. 499, 13 S. W. 777.

Appeal bond or recognition.—Under this article and article 322, ante, a surety on a bail bond or recognition on appeal may be released from his liability by surrendering his principal into custody. Ex parte Cobb (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 997, overruling Talley v. State, 44 App. 162, 69 S. W. 514.

Art. 331. [319] When surrender is made during term of court.
—Should a surrender of the accused be made during a term of the court to which he has bound himself to appear, the sheriff shall take him before the court; and, if he is willing to give other bail, the court shall forthwith require him to do so, as in other cases. [O. C. 274.]

New bond.—This article relates to surrender during term time, and the bail must be taken in open court. Whitener v. State, 38 App. 146, 41 S. W. 695. And see Roberts v. State, 4 App. 129.

After a magistrate has heard a case as an examining court and fixed the bail, and the bond has been given in the amount required, on the surrender of the accused by his sureties it is the duty of the sheriff to take a new bond with good sureties in the same amount as was fixed by the magistrate. It is not optional with the sheriff to fix the amount of bond. Ex parte Wasson, 50 App. 501, 97 S. W. 102.

Art. 332. [320] When court is not in session.—If the surrender be made while the court is not in session, the sheriff may take himself the necessary bail bond. [O. C. 275.]

New bond.—Prior to this provision the sheriff did not have such authority. State v. Wren, 21 Tex. 379.

This article refers to surrender out of term time, when the sheriff is authorized to take the necessary bail bond. Whitener v. State, 38 App. 146, 41 S. W. 695. And see State v. Russell, 24 Tex. 565.

Art. 333. [321] Surety may obtain a warrant of arrest for principal, when.—Any surety, desiring to surrender his principal, may, upon making a written affidavit of such intention before the court or magistrate before which the prosecution is pending, obtain from such court or magistrate a warrant of arrest for such principal, which shall be executed as in other cases. [O. C. 274.]

Process.—This article is not restricted in its application to the county of prosecution, but authorizes process to any county in the state. Whitener v. State, 38 App. 146, 41 S. W. 695.

Art. 334. [322] Proceedings when surrender is in term time and accused fails to give bond.—If the accused fails or refuses to give bail in case of a surrender during a term of court, the court shall make an order that he be committed to jail until the bail be given; and this shall be a sufficient commitment without any written order or warrant to the sheriff. [O. C. 275.]

Place of surrender.—This article applies to a surrender in the county of the prosecution. Whitener v. State, 38 App. 146, 41 S. W. 595.

Art. 335. [323] When surrender is made in vacation and accused fails, etc.—When the surrender is made at any other time than during the session of the court, and the defendant fails or refuses to give other bail, the sheriff shall take him before the nearest magistrate; and such magistrate shall issue a warrant of commitment, reciting the fact that the accused has been once admitted to bail, has been surrendered, and now fails or refuses to give other bail. [O. C. 276.]
Art. 335  ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL  [Title 5]

Process.—Under this, and art. 332, the affidavit required by art. 321 can be made when the court is not in session, and the writ, whether called a warrant or capias, may issue for the arrest of the principal. Whitener v. State, 38 App. 146, 41 S. W. 305.

New bonds.—In making subsequent bail bonds, the officer is governed by the same rules which governed him in the first instance, and is not bound by the amount of the original bond taken on his own authority. Arrington v. State, 3 App. 457; Neblett v. State, 6 App. 316; Barringer v. State, 27 Tex. 563.

Art. 336.  [324] Sheriff, etc., may take bail bond, when.—The sheriff, or other peace officer, in cases of misdemeanor, has authority at all times, whether during the term of the court or in vacation, where he has a defendant in custody under a warrant of commitment, warrant of arrest, or capias, or where the accused has been surrendered by his bail, to take of the defendant a bail bond. [O. C. 279.]

Authority of officer.—A bail bond taken by a deputy sheriff under the order of an examining court, while said court was in session, and upon which, by order of said court, the accused was released from custody, was held to be valid. Arrington v. State, 13 App. 551. A district clerk has no official power to take a bail bond. Doughty v. State, 33 Tex. 1. When an examining court, in default of bail, has committed an accused to jail, the sheriff is then authorized to take bail in the sum fixed by the order of the magistrate. Shrader v. State, 30 Tex. 386. The sheriff has no authority to take bail of one who, before indictment or accusation, volun­teers himself. He must take such person before the magistrate. State v. Miller, 31 Tex. 564. When the arrest is made under a capias for a defendant, the officer making the arrest may take bail, although the court be in session. Ellis v. State, 10 App. 324. As to contrary rule under former law, see Busby v. State, 33 Tex. 126. Jackson v. State, 15 Tex. 218. Where the county court has criminal jurisdiction, indictments for misdemeanor, except for official misconduct, must be transferred to said courts, or to justices' courts, and process thereon must be issued from those courts, and a bond taken by authority of a capias issued from the district court in such case is without authority of law, and void. Cassaday v. State, 4 App. 96. May take and approve bond in vacation or after adjournment of court for the term. La Rose v. State, 29 App. 215, 18 S. W. 33. An involuntary surrender of an offender before indictment the sheriff can not take his bond but must carry him before a magistrate. State v. Miller, 31 Tex. 564; arresting a party for an offense committed in another county, the sheriff has no authority to take bail. Ante, arts. 281, 282.

Art. 337.  [325] Sheriff, etc., not authorized to take bail in felony case when court is in session.—In cases of felony, when the accused is in custody of the sheriff or other peace officer, and the court before which the prosecution is pending is in session in the county where the accused is in custody, the court shall fix the amount of bail, if it is a bailable case; and the sheriff, or other peace officer, unless it be the police of a city, is authorized to take a bail bond of the accused, if executed with good and sufficient sureties, in the amount as fixed by the court, to be approved by such officer taking the same, and will thereupon discharge the accused from custody; and it shall not be necessary for the defendant or his sureties to appear in court, but such bail bond may be taken as if court was not in session, except for the fixing of the amount of bail as aforesaid. [O. C. 280; amended, Act 1907, p. 148.]

Forms.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 601, 603, 605.

Authority of officer.—The sheriff can take bail of one arrested for felony, only when the court in which the case is pending is not in session. Kiser v. State, 13 App. 261; Gragg v. State, 18 App. 296; La Rose v. State, 29 App. 215, 18 S. W. 38; Patillo v. State, 3 App. 456. When a sheriff or other peace officer arrests a person under a warrant issued by a magistrate, upon a charge of felony, it is the duty of such sheriff or peace officer to take such person forthwith before the magistrate who issued the warrant, or before the magistrate before whom the warrant is made returnable. No authority is given by law to the sheriff or peace officer in such cases to take bail—that authority is vested in the magistrate. Short v. State, 16 App. 44; ante, art. 203. State v. Miller, 31 App. 201; State v. Miller, 31 App. 318. And he may take bail in a felony case, after indictment found, when he makes the arrest by virtue of a capias, and when the court is not in session; but when the court is in session, he can not take bail in a felony case. Kiser v. State, 13 App. 261; Patillo v. State, 9 App. 456; Gragg v. State, 18 App. 265.

The district court being in session, but the proceeding being before an exam-lying court, on charge of felony, which court bailed the accused to the next term of the district court, the sheriff had the right to take bond, the prosecution not then being pending before the district court. Peters v. State, 16 App. 302.

Bond taken by the officer in open court is presumed to have been taken with the knowledge and sanction of the court. Arrington v. State, 13 App. 551, 551.

The sheriff of one county arresting one accused of bailable felony on a capias from another county, the sheriff of the latter county had authority, not only to demand the prisoner from the sheriff of the former county, but to take bail for his appearance to answer the indictment in the county of the prosecution. Hill v. State, 12 App. 530.

That the order of court allowing bail and the bail bond bore the same date is not sufficient proof that the court was in session at the exact time the bond was taken. Presumption would obtain that, being taken on a jurisdictional day, it was taken on that day, after final adjournment for the term. Lindsay v. State, 39 App. 468, 46 S. W. 1045.

Ball bond is not invalidated because taken on Sunday. Lindsey v. State, 39 App. 468, 46 S. W. 1045.

Where a bail bond in a felony case was taken by the sheriff during the term of court, and the record contained no entry of an order of the court fixing the amount of the bail, nor facts showing that it fixed the amount, as required by Acts 30th Leg., c. 75, § 1, but it did not appear that it did not orally fix the amount and instruct the sheriff to take the bail in that amount, and the bond was acted on and accused appeared before the court and was tried, a judgment of forfeiture of the bond would not be set aside on the ground that it was a nullity, because the sheriff acted without authority in taking it. Wiseman v. State, 79 App. 477, 156 S. W. 683.

Art. 338. [326] May take bail in felony cases, when.—In a felony case, if the court before which the same is pending is not in session in the county where the defendant is in custody, the sheriff, or other peace officer having him in custody, may take his bail bond in such amount as may have been fixed by the court or magistrate, or, if no amount has been fixed, then in such amount as such sheriff or other peace officer may consider reasonable. [O. C. 281.]

Art. 339. [327] Sureties are severally bound, etc.—In all recognizances bail bonds or other bonds, taken under the provisions of this Code, the sureties shall be severally bound; and, where a surrender of the principal is made by one or more of them, all the sureties shall be considered discharged, and the principal shall be required to give new bail, as in the first instance. [O. C. 281-283.]

Joint or several liability.—Judgments upon bail bonds when forfeited should be rendered severally. Avant et al. v. State, 33 App. 312, 26 S. W. 411; Kiser v. State, 13 App. 201.

Where a recognizance is good as to the principal and one of the sureties, such surety is liable, though another surety may not be. Ray v. State, 16 App. 268.

4. Bail before the Examining Court

Art. 340. [328] Rules in relation to bail, and of a general nature, applicable in this court.—The rules laid down in the preceding articles of this chapter, relating to the amount of the bail, the number of sureties, the person who may be sure, who is exempt from liability, the form of bail bonds, the responsibility of parties to the same, and all other rules in this chapter of a general nature, are applicable to bail taken before an examining court. [O. C. 284.]

See ante, arts. 325, 327, 337, 338; Willson's Cr. Forms, 800, 1062.

Art. 341. [329] Proceedings when bail is granted.—After a full examination of the testimony, the magistrate shall, if the case be one where bail may properly be granted and ought to be required, proceed to make an order that the accused execute a bail bond with sufficient security, conditioned for his appearance before the proper court. [O. C. 285.]

See ante, arts. 308, 318; Willson's Cr. Forms, 800, 1052.

Former laws.—Under the old law (Hart. Dig., art. 1796) a bail bond so taken need not recite that defendant had been committed to jail by a justice; the recital that he had been tried by a justice and held to bail was sufficient. Hodges v. State, 29 Tex. 493.
Art. 341 ARREST, COMMITMENT AND BAIL

After the taking of a ball bond by a magistrate and the adjournment of his court, he has no power to take another. State v. Russell, 24 Tex. 565.

Nor has he power to take a bail bond after the adjournment of his court. Moore v. State, 37 Tex. 133.

An examining court is authorized to take a bail bond. Thomas v. State, 12 App. 416.

This and other statutes seem to contemplate that the committing magistrate, where he holds a party to bail, should require his appearance at the next ensuing term of the district court if no court be then in session or before the district court then in session if one be in session. Ex parte Haynes, 43 App. 268, 64 S. W. 1049.

Art. 342. [330] When bail can not be allowed, and when it shall be allowed.—In capital cases, where the guilt of the accused is evident, bail can not be allowed. In all other cases, the accused is entitled to bail as a matter of right. [O. C. 286-287.]

Ante, art. 6, and notes; Willson’s Cr. Forms, 800.

Art. 343. [331] Reasonable time given to procure bail.—Reasonable time shall be given the accused to procure security. [O. C. 289.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 800.

Art. 344. [332] When bail is not given, magistrate shall commit accused, etc.—If, after the allowance of a reasonable time, the security be not given, the magistrate shall make an order committing the accused to jail to be kept safely until legally discharged; and he shall issue a warrant of commitment accordingly. [O. C. 290.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 800.

Art. 345. [333] When accused is ready to give bail, a bond shall be prepared, etc.—If the party be ready to give bail, the magistrate shall prepare, or cause to be prepared, a bail bond, which shall be signed by the accused and his surety or sureties, the magistrate first being satisfied as to the sufficiency of the security. [O. C. 291.]

See ante, arts. 327, 328; Arrington v. State, 13 App. 551; Id., 554; Willson’s Cr. Forms, 808, 1652.

Art. 346. [334] Accused shall be liberated upon giving bond.

—in all cases when the accused has given the required bond, either to the magistrate, or the officer having him in custody, he shall at once be set at liberty. [O. C. 293-294.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 800.

Art. 347. [335] Magistrate shall certify proceedings to proper court.—The magistrate, before whom an examination has taken place upon a criminal accusation, shall certify to all the proceedings had before him, and transmit them, sealed up, to the court, before which the defendant is subject to be tried upon indictment or information, writing his name across the seals of the envelope containing the proceedings. The voluntary statement of the defendant, the testimony of the witnesses, bail bonds of the defendant and of witnesses, and all and every other proceeding in the case, shall be thus delivered to the clerk of the proper court, without delay. [O. C. 295.]

See ante, art. 300.

Exhibit bond is one of the papers required to be certified. Kimbrough v. State, 28 App. 367, 13 S. W. 218.

Examining courts are required to certify all proceedings; and omissions from the record can not be supplied by oral testimony. Foat v. State, 28 App. 527, 13 S. W. 867.

Art. 348. [336] Duty of clerks who receive such proceedings.—If the proceedings be delivered to a clerk of the district court, he shall keep the same safely, and deliver the same to the foreman of the next grand jury, as soon as said grand jury is organized. If the proceedings are delivered to a clerk of the county court, he shall keep the same safely, and, without delay, deliver them to the district or county attorney of his county.

Art. 349. [337] Duty of magistrate in all cases to certify and deliver proceedings.—It is the duty of a magistrate, as well where a party has been discharged as where he has been held to bail or committed, to certify and deliver the proceedings in the case, as provided in article 347; and he shall likewise, when a complaint has been made to him of the commission of an offense, and there has been a failure from any cause to arrest the accused, file with the proper clerk the complaint and warrant of arrest, together with a list of the witnesses and their residences, if known. [O. C. 296.]

Art. 350. [338] Accused may waive an examination; proceedings in such case.—In all bailable cases before an examining court, the accused may waive a trial of the accusation, and consent for the magistrate to require bail of him; but, in such case, the prosecutor or magistrate may cause the witnesses for the state to be examined as in other cases; and the magistrate shall transmit, with the other proceedings in the case, to the clerk of the proper court, a list of the witnesses for the state, whether examined or not, and their residence, if known.

Examination.—This statute authorizes the examining court to proceed with the examination even if the defendant waives his right or trial. Porch v. State, 51 App. 7, 99 S. W. 1124.

5. Bail by Witnesses

Art. 351. [339] Witnesses required to give bond, when.—Witnesses on behalf of the state or defendant may be required by the magistrate, upon the examination of any criminal accusation before him, to give bail for their appearance to testify before the proper court; and, if a witness make oath that he is unable to give security or deposit a sufficient amount of money in lieu thereof, then his individual bond shall be taken. [O. C. 297.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 803, 806, 1053, 1054.

Taking after adjournment.—A bail bond of a witness not executed until after the examining court had adjourned, no order requiring such bond having been entered by the magistrate, was a nullity. Foat v. State, 28 App. 527, 13 S. W. 867.

Discharge.—Where C., who was indicted with G. for murder, agreed with the district attorney to testify for the state on the prosecution of G. until G.'s case was finally settled, and upon G.'s first trial a conviction was had, but it was reversed on appeal, and on the second trial G. was again convicted, and appealed, C. is not entitled to discharge or bail pending the appeal, as until the final determination of G.'s case he stands committed under the indictment. Ex parte Carter, 62 App. 113, 126 S. W. 778.

Art. 352. [340] Of amount of security required of a witness.—The amount of security to be required of a witness is to be regulated by his pecuniary condition, and the nature of the offense, with respect to which he is a witness. [O. C. 298.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 803, 1053.

Art. 353. [341] Force and effect of witnesses' bonds.—The bonds given by witnesses for their appearance shall have the same force and effect of bail bonds, and may be forfeited and recovered upon in the same manner. [O. C. 299.]

Execution of bond after adjournment of court and without order therefor.—A bond executed four days after the conclusion of the examining court, and after
Art. 354. [342] Witness who fails, etc., to give bond when required may be committed.—When a witness who has been required to give bail, fails or refuses to do so, and fails or refuses to make the affidavit provided for in article 351, he shall be committed to jail as in other cases of a failure or refusal to give bail when required; but he shall be released from custody, upon giving such bail, or upon making the affidavit provided for in article 351, and giving his individual bond.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1054.
TITLE 6
SEARCH WARRANTS

CHAPTER ONE
GENERAL RULES

Article 355. [343] Definition of "search warrant."—A "search warrant" is a written order, issued by a magistrate, and directed to a peace officer, commanding him to search for personal property, and to seize the same, and bring it before such magistrate; or it is a like written order, commanding a peace officer to search a suspected place where it is alleged stolen property is commonly concealed, or implements kept for the purpose of being used in the commission of any designated offense. [O. C. 300.]

Art. 356. [344] For what purposes it may be issued.—A search warrant may be issued for the following purposes, and no others:
1. To discover property acquired by theft, or in any other manner which makes its acquisition a penal offense.
2. To search suspected places where it is alleged property so illegally acquired is commonly kept or concealed.
3. To search places where it is alleged implements are kept for the purpose of being used in forging or counterfeiting.
4. To search places where it is alleged arms or munitions are kept or prepared for the purpose of insurrection or riot.
5. To seize and bring before a magistrate any such property, implements, arms and munitions.

See post, arts. 368, 375.

6. Any place, room or building in any county, justice precinct, town, city or such subdivision of the county, as may be designated by the commissioners court of said county, in which the sale of intoxicating liquor has been prohibited under the laws of this state, kept, maintained or used for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquor in violation of law, and any intoxicating liquor kept or possessed for such purpose, whether kept or possessed in any such place, room or building or elsewhere, and any signs, screens, bars, bottles, glasses and any other furniture, tools, appliances or other articles or things used as aids in keeping and maintaining any such place, room or building or any such liquor, are each and all hereby declared to be a common nuisance, and subject to search warrant. [O. C. 301; add. S. S. 1910, p. 27.]

Explanatory.—There are special provisions for searches and seizures not embraced in the above enumeration. A complete list of these acts may be obtained by reference to the indices of Vernon's civil and criminal statutes.

For another purpose of a search warrant, see, ante, P. C. art. 601, which authorizes a search warrant for "blind tiger."

Forms.—Willson's Cr. Forms, 1106-1108.

Art. 357. [345] Its object.—A warrant to search for and seize stolen property is designed as a means of obtaining possession of the property for the purpose of restoring it to the true owner, and detecting any person guilty of the theft or concealment of the same. [O. C. 302.]

Art. 358. [346] Definition of word "stolen."—The word "stolen," as used in this title, is intended to embrace also the acquisition of property by any means forbidden and made penal by the law of the state.

Art. 359. [347] When asked for in reference to property not stolen.—When it is alleged that the property, to search for which a warrant is asked, was acquired in any other manner than by theft, the particular manner of its acquisition must be set forth in the complaint and in the warrant. [O. C. 304.]

Art. 360. [348] These rules applicable to all cases.—The mode of proceeding, directed to be pursued in applying for a warrant to search for and seize stolen property, and the rules prescribed for officers in issuing such warrants and executing the same, the disposition of the property seized, and all other rules herein prescribed on the subject, shall apply and be pursued, when the property to be searched for was acquired, in any manner, in violation of the provisions of the Penal Code.

CHAPTER TWO
WHEN AND HOW A SEARCH WARRANT MAY BE ISSUED

Art. 361. Contents of application for a search warrant.—A warrant to search for and seize property alleged to have been stolen and concealed at a particular place may be issued by a magistrate, whenever complaint in writing and on oath is made to such magistrate, setting forth—
1. The name of the person accused of having stolen or concealed the property; or, if his name be unknown, giving a description of the accused, or stating that the person who stole or concealed the property is unknown.
2. The kind of property, and its probable value, alleged to be stolen or concealed.
3. The place where the property is alleged to be concealed.
4. The time, as near as may be, when the property is alleged to have been stolen. [O. C. 307.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1105.

Art. 362. [350] Contents of application for warrant to discover and seize.—A warrant to discover and seize property alleged to have been stolen, or otherwise acquired in violation of the penal law, but not alleged to be concealed at any particular place, may be issued whenever complaint is made in writing and on oath, setting forth—
1. The name of the person suspected of being the thief, or an accurate description of him, if his name be unknown, or that the thief is unknown.
2. An accurate description of the property, and its probable value.
3. The time, as near as may be, when the property is supposed to have been stolen.
4. That the person complaining has good ground to believe that the property was stolen by the person alleged to be the thief. [O.
C. 306.]
See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1106, 1111.

Art. 363. [351] Contents of application for warrant to search suspected place.—A warrant to search any place suspected to be one where stolen goods are commonly concealed or where implements are kept for the purpose of aiding in the commission of offfenses may be issued by a magistrate, when complaint is made in writing and on oath, setting forth—
1. A description of the place suspected.
2. A description of the kind of property alleged to be commonly concealed at such place, or the kind of implements kept.
3. The name, if known, of the person supposed to have charge of such place, when it is alleged that it is under the charge of any one.
4. When it is alleged that implements are kept at a place for the purpose of aiding in the commission of offenses, the particular offense for which such implements are designed must be set forth; and, upon affidavit being made by any credible person of the county where the proceeding is begun, before the county judge or a justice of the peace of said county, describing the place, room or building, as near as may be, where it is believed by the affiant that intoxicating liquor is being sold in violation of law, or is being kept or possessed for the purpose of being sold in violation of law, or shall name or describe, if the name is unknown, any person who has, keeps or possesses any intoxicating liquor for the purpose of sale, in violation of law, or has, keeps or possesses any signs, screens, bars, bottles, glasses, furniture, tools, appliances or other articles or things, describing them, as near as may be, for the purpose of using such articles in the sale, or in any manner, as an aid to the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, then, and, in either event, it shall be the duty of such county judge, or justice of the peace, as the case may be, to issue a warrant, commanding the sheriff, or any constable of the county to immediately search such place, room or building, describing the same, as near as may be, or such person, giving name or description; and it shall be the duty of said officer to whom said warrant is delivered by the county judge, or justice of the peace, to immediately search such place, room or building, or such person;
and, if refused admission into any such place, room or building, then, and in such event, the officer executing such warrant shall be, and is hereby authorized to force an entrance to any such place, room or building, using such force as may be necessary for that purpose; and he shall search for, and seize the intoxicating liquor described in such warrant, which may be found in such place, room or building, or in the possession, or under the control, of such person named or described in said warrant, that is being kept or possessed for the purpose of being sold in violation of law, and shall also seize all signs, screens, bars, bottles, glasses, furniture, tools, appliances or other articles or things which may have been described in said warrant as being used in keeping or maintaining such place, or used in any manner as an aid to the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor; and, after seizure, he shall make an accurate inventory of everything seized, stating therein the reasonable market value of each item, and shall securely keep the same until repleived or otherwise disposed of under the provisions of this law. [O. C. 308; add. S. S. 1910, p. 27.]
See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1107, 1108.

Art. 364. [352] Warrant to arrest may issue with the search warrant in certain cases.—The magistrate, at the time of issuing a search warrant, may also issue a warrant for the arrest of the person accused of having stolen the property, or of having concealed the same, or of having in his possession or charge property concealed at a suspected place, or of having possession of implements designed for use in the commission of the offense of forgery, counterfeiting or burglary, or of having the charge of arms or munitions prepared for the purpose of insurrection, or of having prepared such arms or munitions, or who may be, in any legal manner, accused of being accomplice or accessory to any of the offenses above enumerated. [O. C. 309.]

Art. 365. [353] Search warrant may command officer to bring party accused before the magistrate.—The search warrant may, in addition to commanding the peace officer to seize property, also require him to bring before the magistrate the person accused of having stolen or concealed the property.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1109, 1110.

Art. 366. [354] Requisites of a search warrant.—A search warrant to seize property stolen and concealed shall be deemed sufficient if it contains the following requisites:

1. That it run in the name of "The State of Texas."
2. That it be directed to the sheriff or other peace officer of the proper county.
3. That it describe the property alleged to be stolen or concealed, and the place where it is alleged to be concealed, and order the same to be brought before the magistrate.
4. That it name the person accused of having stolen or concealed the property; or, if his name be unknown, that it describe him with accuracy, and direct the officer to bring such person before the magistrate, or state that the person who stole or concealed the property is unknown.
5. That it be dated and signed by the magistrate. [O. C. 311.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1109, 1111.

Art. 367. [355] Requisites of a warrant to search suspected place.—A warrant to search a suspected place shall be deemed sufficient if it contain the following requisites:

1. That it run in the name of "The State of Texas."
2. That it describe with accuracy the place suspected.
3. That it describe, as near as may be, the property supposed to be commonly concealed in such suspected place, or the implements alleged to be there kept for the purpose of aiding in the commission of offenses, and state the particular offense for which such implements are designed.
4. That it name the person accused of having charge of the suspected place, if there be any such person, or, if his name is unknown, that it describe him with accuracy, and direct him to be brought before the magistrate.
5. That it be dated and signed by the magistrate, and directed to the sheriff or other peace officer of the proper county.
6. The search warrant provided for the search for intoxicating liquors, etc., shall, in substance, conform to the following requisites: It shall run in the name of the state of Texas, and be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county; it shall name the owner of the intoxicating liquor to be seized, if his name shall be known; it shall command him to search the place, room, premises, building, or any part thereof, or the person named in the complaint, and shall specify, as near as may be, the things to be searched for and seized, and the owner thereof, when known, if not, the same shall allege that the owner is unknown, and shall be signed officially by the magistrate issuing the same; provided, an immaterial variance between the complaint and warrant shall not render the latter void. [O. C. 312; add. S. S. 1910, p. 28.]
CHAPTER THREE

OF THE EXECUTION OF A SEARCH WARRANT

Art. 368. Warrant shall be executed without delay, etc.—Any peace officer to whom a search warrant is delivered shall execute the same without delay, and forthwith return the same to the proper magistrate. It must be executed within three days from the time of its issuance, and shall be executed within a shorter period if so directed in the warrant by the magistrate.

The officer executing the search warrant for the search of premises for intoxicating liquors, etc., shall, within fifteen days, make due return thereof, to the county judge or the justice of the peace, issuing the same; and, when a seizure has been made thereunder, he shall, within five days after said seizure, make said return, showing therein a list of the intoxicating liquor and other articles seized, the reasonable market value thereof, as fixed by him, and the replevy bond or bonds, if any given, and if not replevied, the name and residence of owner or owners of any such property seized and not replevied; and if no one is known to be the owner, then the name or names and residence of the person, firm or corporation, in whose possession, or under whose control said liquor or other property was when seized; on return being made to said county judge or justice of the peace, he shall file said cause in the district court of said county.

At any time before the trial of the issues as provided herein, the owner of said property seized, or any part thereof, or the person in whose possession, or under whose control, the same was at the time of seizure, may replevy the same by giving bond with two or more good and sufficient sureties, or a solvent guaranty or surety company, chartered or authorized to do business under the laws of this state, to be approved by the officer making the seizure, or his successor in office, payable to the state of Texas, in an amount equal to the reasonable market value of the property replevied, as fixed on the inventory, conditioned that should said property in said action be condemned as a nuisance, the obligors in such bond will pay to the state of Texas the reasonable cash market value of the property replevied at the time it was seized, and all costs, including fifteen per cent addition on said amount as a fee to the county or district attorney who discharges such duty for the state, and ten per cent on the amount thereof for the sheriff or constable.

The property, when not replevied, shall remain in the custody of the officer seizing, or in that of his successor in office, until final judgment, subject to such orders for the preservation of same as the judge of the district court of said county may make, either in term time or vacation, as shall appear to be to the best interest of all parties concerned; provided, that the defendant in said suit may replevy the property at any time prior to final trial. [O. C. 313, 319; add. S. S. 1910, pp. 28, 29.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1114.
Art. 369. [357] Three and fifteen whole days allowed for warrant to run.—The three, and the fifteen days’ time allowed for the execution of a search warrant shall be three and fifteen whole days, exclusive of the day of its issuance and of the day of its execution.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1111, 1114.

Art. 370. [358] Officer shall give notice of purpose to execute warrant.—The officer shall, upon going to the place ordered to be searched, or before seizing any property for which he is ordered to make search, give notice of his purpose to the person who has charge of, or is an inmate of, the place, or who has possession of the property described in the warrant. [O. C. 315.]

Art. 371. [359] Power of officer executing warrant.—In the execution of a search warrant, the officer may call to his aid any number of citizens in his county, who shall be bound to aid in the execution of the same. If he is resisted in the execution of the warrant, he may use such force as is necessary to overcome the resistance, but no greater. [O. C. 314, 316.]

Art. 372. [360] When an officer may enter house by force.—In the execution of a search warrant, the officer may break down a door or a window of any house which he is ordered to search, if he can not effect an entrance by other less violent means; but, when the warrant issues only for the purpose of discovering property stolen, or otherwise obtained in violation of the penal law, without designating any particular place where it is supposed to be concealed, no such authority is given to the officer executing the same. [O. C. 317.]

See ante, P. C., art. 601.

Art. 373. [361] Shall seize persons accused and property, and take them before magistrate.—When the property, implements, arms or munitions which the officer is directed to search for and seize are found, he shall take possession of the same, and carry them before the magistrate. He shall also arrest any person whom he is directed to arrest by the warrant, and forthwith take such person before the magistrate. [O. C. 318.]

Art. 374. [362] Officer shall receipt for property.—An officer taking any property, implements, arms or munitions, shall receipt therefor to the person from whose possession the same may have been taken. [O. C. 320.]

Art. 375. [363] How return made.—Upon returning the search warrant, the officer shall state on the back of the same, or on some paper attached to it, the manner in which it has been executed, and shall likewise deliver to the magistrate an inventory of the property, implements, arms or munitions taken in his possession under the warrant. [O. C. 321.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1112, 1113.

Art. 376. [364] All persons have the right to prevent the consequences of theft, etc.—All persons have a right to prevent the consequences of theft by seizing any personal property which has been stolen, and bringing it, with the supposed offender, if he can be taken, before a magistrate for examination, or delivering the same to a peace officer for that purpose. To justify such seizure, there must, however, be reasonable ground to suppose the property to be stolen, and the seizure must be openly made and the proceedings had without delay. [O. C. 94.]

Arrest by officer without warrant.—Where property is openly taken under a claim of right an officer cannot arrest the taker of the property without a warrant either on the theory that a theft was committed in his view, or on the theory that stolen property was found in possession of the taker. Martin v. State, 49 App. 526, 56 S. W. 601.

The owner of stolen property has the right to pursue the thief and recapture his property without a warrant. Porez v. State, 29 App. 618, 16 S. W. 750. He also has the right to arrest the thief and take him before a magistrate, or deliver him to a peace officer, but it must be openly done. Id. See, also, Morris v. Kasling, 79 Tex. 141, 15 S. W. 226, 11 L. R. A. 338.

But this right does not authorize the owner to pursue and take the thief, dead or alive, nor is the thief deprived of all right of resistance if attacked under such circumstances. Porez v. State, 29 App. 618, 16 S. W. 750, citing Luera v. State, 12 App. 257.

A private person acting under this article is, for the time being, an officer de facto, with all the privileges, and subject to all the penalties, of an officer de jure. Smith v. State, 15 App. 567.

A homicide, though committed while deceased was committing a theft at night, would not be justified if the killing was done on malice, and not to prevent the theft or consequences thereof. Laws v. State, 26 App. 610, 19 S. W. 290.

Private person’s right to arrest in all cases in which stolen property is found in the possession of the thief, is clearly given by this article. Morris v. Kasling, 79 Tex. 141, 15 S. W. 226, 11 L. R. A. 338.

In an action for false imprisonment, it appeared that plaintiff was arrested while carrying away a box of tools. There was no evidence that the tools in the box had been stolen, and certain tools that had been stolen had been recovered and had been in the possession of defendant’s agents before the arrest was made, and were retained in defendant’s possession and not carried with plaintiff to the magistrate. Held, that there was no evidence to authorize a charge embodying this article. Southwestern Portland Cement Co. v. Reitzer (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 237.

CHAPTER FOUR

PROCEEDINGS ON THE RETURN OF A SEARCH WARRANT

Art. 377. Disposition of stolen property, etc. — When property is taken under the provisions of this title, and delivered to a magistrate, he shall, if it appear that the same was stolen or otherwise acquired in violation of the penal law, dispose of it according to the rules prescribed in this Code with reference to the disposition of stolen property. [O. C. 322.]

See, post, title 11, chap. 2; Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1115.

Art. 378. Officer seizing implements, etc., shall keep same subject, etc., procedure on. — When a warrant has been issued for the purpose of searching a suspected place, and there be found any such implements, arms, munitions or intoxicating liquors, etc., as are alleged to have been there kept or concealed, the same shall be safely kept by the officer seizing the same, subject to the further order of the magistrate.

The clerk of the district court of the county in which the warrant to search for intoxicating liquors, etc., was issued, when said cause is filed, shall docket the same in the name of the state of Texas, as plaintiff, and the principal in the replevy bond, and, if not repleved, the name of the owner or person found in possession as defendant; provided, that when two or more replevy bonds are given, or where there are two or more owners or claimants to the property, or parts thereof, seized, urging distinct and separate claims, then, and, in such event, each case shall be filed and docketed separately in the district court of said county; and, in such event, said county judge or justice of the peace shall make and certify to as many copies of the original papers as there are cases, all of which shall be considered and treated as originals.
The clerk of the district court of said county shall immediately issue notice, which shall be served upon the defendant in the manner required for service of citation in civil suits; provided, the defendant shall be required to answer, if served, ten days before the first day of the return term, excluding the day of service and return; and provided, further, the defendant shall have the right to expedite a trial of the issue by waiving service and time. Said cause, if tried by a jury, shall be submitted on a special issue, which shall be, in substance, whether or not the intoxicating liquors and other property seized constituted a nuisance, within the meaning of this law, when seized. If no jury has been demanded by either side, then said issue shall be determined by the court. Said cause shall have precedence over all other cases, except cases of like kind, or cases to which the state is a party; the same shall be tried and prosecuted under the rules of evidence, practice and procedure, and, in all other respects, as other civil cases; and, in case of appeal, the transcript shall, without delay, be made up and forwarded by the clerk to the proper appellate court; provided, that the state shall not be required to pay or give security for costs, nor bond on appeal, and the same shall be perfected by notice thereof given in open court.

The notice provided for in this law, shall briefly recite the record upon which it is based; provided, that any immaterial variance between the writ and former proceedings will not be fatal thereto. It shall require the defendant to show cause, by a day named, why the liquor and other articles seized should not be declared a nuisance; but the burden of proof shall be upon the state to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the allegations of the complaint are substantially true.

Should the state prevail in the suit, the court shall enter a judgmentcondemning the property seized to be destroyed and against the defendant for all costs, and shall issue a proper writ directing the sheriff, or any constable of the county, to execute the same. The said writ shall conform, in all material respects, to the writ of execution, except that it shall command said officer, in addition to making levy sufficient to collect the amount of costs, to destroy said property in the manner most suited to its nature. If the property, prior to the entry of said judgment, has been repleved, then judgment shall be entered against the principal and the sureties on such bond for an amount equal to the reasonable cash market value of the property at the time the same was seized, including fifteen per cent thereof as attorney's fees and ten per cent fee to the sheriff or constable; and the judgment, when collected, less the costs, shall be paid into the county treasury, and shall become a part of the jury fund of the county. Should the defendant prevail, judgment shall be entered restoring said property seized to the defendant, or discharging the principal and sureties on the replevy bond, as the case may be.

It shall be the duty of the county attorney to represent the state in said cases; and, in all counties where there is a district attorney, he shall assist the county attorney in the prosecution of all such suits. In all cases where the state recovers judgment, there shall be taxed against the defendant, as costs, the usual fees allowed in civil cases, in addition to fifteen per cent of the value of the property for the county or district attorney's fee, and ten per cent of the value thereof for the sheriff and constable; which fees and costs shall not be accounted for by said officers under any provisions of law relating to fees of office; provided, however, that the state shall, in no event, be liable for, or be required to pay, any costs. Where the county attorney represents the state, he shall be entitled to the fee of fifteen per cent above provided; and, where he is assisted in said civil case by the district attorney, said fee shall be equally divided between them. [C. 323; added S. S. 1910, pp. 29, 30.]

Art. 379. [367] Magistrate shall proceed to investigate, etc.—The magistrate, upon the return of a search warrant, shall proceed to try the questions arising upon the same, and shall take testimony as in other examinations before him, and be governed by like rules. [C. 330.]

Art. 380. [368] Shall discharge defendant, when.—If the magistrate be not satisfied, upon investigation, that there was good ground for the issuance of the warrant, he shall discharge the defendant, and order restitution of the property or articles taken from him, except implements which appear to be designed for forging, counterfeiting or burglary; and, in such case, the implements shall be kept by the sheriff, or officer who seized the same, subject to the order of the proper court. [C. 332.]

Art. 381. [369] Sheriff, etc., shall furnish magistrate schedule of property seized.—The sheriff, or other officer who seizes any property under a search warrant, shall furnish the magistrate to whom he returns the warrant with a certified schedule of the articles of property so seized. [C. 324.]

See, ante, art. 378; Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1113.
Explanatory.—Old article 349 of the Code of 1879, following this article, was as follows: “Arms or munitions taken under a warrant in accordance with the provisions of this title shall become forfeited to the state, and shall be so adjudged by the proper court upon the conviction or escape of any person accused of having had possession of or having concealed them.” See P. C., art. 62, note.

Art. 382. [370] Proceedings when magistrate is satisfied that warrant was issued upon good ground.—If the magistrate be satisfied there was good ground for issuing the warrant, he shall proceed to deal with the accused in accordance with the rules prescribed in this Code for other criminal cases before an examining court. [C. 331.]

Art. 383. [371] Magistrate shall certify record, etc., of proceedings to proper court.—The magistrate shall keep a record of all the proceedings had before him in cases of search warrants, and shall certify the same and deliver them to the clerk of the court having jurisdiction of the case, before the next term of said court, and accompany the same with all the original papers relating thereto, including the certified schedule of the property seized, required by article 381. [C. 334.]

which requires the intervention of a jury. [Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 79, § 4.]

See McDonald v. State, 15 App. 493; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, title 75, ch. 10, art. 4.

Prejudice as disqualifying.—That jury commissioners as well as the jurors to try defendant for a violation of a local option law were Prohibitionists held no ground for reversal of a conviction. Lively v. State (Cr. App.) 73 S. W. 1048.

Residents of different portions of county.—There was no error in overruling a motion to quash a venire, because selected by jury commissioners taken from different parts of the county, where there was no proof that the commissioners were not from different portions of the county. Dailey v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 521.

It is no objection to the selection of jury commissioners that they all reside in the county seat of the county, nor is any objection to a special venire, that all the veniremen reside in the county seat of the county. Williams v. State, 45 App. 218, 75 S. W. 861.

So the mere fact that all the jury commissioners reside in the city of Houston, which contains two-thirds of the qualified voters of the county does not disqualify them to act as jury commissioners. Williams v. State, 45 App. 218, 75 S. W. 860.

Interest in pending suits.—A person is not disqualified to serve as a commissioner on the ground that his father is a party to a suit, or that he is transacting business as a merchant with persons parties to pending suits. Veramendi v. Hutchins, 56 Tex. 414.

A motion to quash a venire in a criminal case will not be sustained because one of the commissioners was interested as a party in several suits on the jury docket of that term. Whittle v. State, 43 Cr. App. 468, 66 S. W. 771.

Jurisdiction to direct commissioners.—In view of this article and article 399, post, and of Const. art. 16, § 19, declaring that the Legislature shall prescribe by laws and regulations the qualifications of grand and petit juries: Rev. St. 1915, art. 2145 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5122), providing that the district court of each county, at each term, shall appoint jury commissioners, and article 3146, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5123, declaring that a person shall not act as jury commissioner more than once in the same year. It was held that, where there were six terms of court a year in a judicial district, the judge at the November, 1911, term had no jurisdiction to direct jury commissioners for that term to draw three grand juries for the succeeding January, March, and May, 1912, terms, and an indictment found by a grand jury so drawn was invalid. Woolen v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 1105.

Review of discretion of court.—The discretion of a trial judge in selecting jury commissioners is not subject to review by an appellate court. Columbo v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 310.

Art. 385. [373] Commissioners shall be notified of appointment, etc.—The judge shall cause the persons appointed as jury commissioners to be notified by the sheriff or other proper officer of such appointment, and of the time and place, when and where they are to appear before the judge. [Id.]

Art. 386. [374] Oath of jury commissioners.—When the persons appointed appear before the judge, he shall administer to them the following oath: "You do swear faithfully to discharge the duties required of you as jury commissioners: that you will not knowingly elect any man as juryman whom you believe to be unfit and not qualified; that you will not make known to any one the name of any jurymen selected by you, and reported to the court; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected by you as a jurymen concerning the merits of any case to be tried at the next term of this court, until after said cause may be tried or continued, or the jury discharged. [Id.]

Art. 387. [375] Shall be instructed in their duties, furnished with room, stationery, etc.—The jury commissioners, after they have been organized and sworn, shall be instructed by the judge in their duties and shall then retire, in charge of the sheriff or a deputy sheriff, to a suitable room or apartment, to be secured by the sheriff for that purpose. They shall be furnished by the clerk with the necessary stationery, and with the names of the persons appearing from the records of the court to be exempt or disqualified from serving on the jury at each term; and they shall also be furnished with the last assessment roll of the county. [Id., § 6.]

Art. 388. [376] Shall be kept free from intrusion; shall not separate, etc.—The jury commissioners shall be kept free from the
Art. 389. [377] Shall select grand jurors.—The jury commissioners shall select, from the citizens of the different portions of the county, sixteen persons, to be summoned as grand jurors for the next term of the district court. [Id., p. 83, § 28.]

See notes under article 334, ante.

Constitutional and legal jury.—See notes under article 146, post.

A "grand jury" is composed of twelve men, no more and no less. An indictment presented by a body of more than twelve men is a nullity, and all proceedings had under it are void. O'Bryan v. State, 27 App. 339, 11 S. W. 443; Williams v. State, 19 App. 265; Rainey v. State, 19 Tex. App. 479; Harrell v. State, 22 App. 692, 3 S. W. 479; Trevino v. State, 27 App. 373, 11 S. W. 417; Lott v. State, 18 App. 627; McNeese v. State, 19 App. 48; ante, art. 3, and notes; Ex parte Love, 49 App. 475, 33 S. W. 551, and cases cited: Ex parte Reynolds, 35 App. 437, 34 S. W. 526, 60 Am. St. Rep. 84.

The conviction of a person on an indictment found by a grand jury composed of fourteen men, is without due process of law, and the judgment of conviction is absolutely void. Ex parte Reynolds, 35 App. 437, 34 S. W. 120, 60 Am. St. Rep. 54.

While the twelve is the exact quota of the grand jury, nine of that twelve can return a true bill. Ex parte Love, 49 App. 475, 33 S. W. 551; Watts v. State, 22 App. 572, 3 S. W. 789; Drake v. State, 25 App. 293, 7 S. W. 868.

Selection of jury.—The grand jury is to be selected from the sixteen persons drawn by the jury commissioners. Smith v. State, 19 App. 95; Rainey v. State, Id., 473.

Summoning additional jurors.—The court may direct the sheriff to summon additional jurors, where one of the twelve drawn by the jury commissioners is disqualified. Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 335.

Summoning jurors for succeeding terms.—An order of court directing the summoning of grand jurors for the three succeeding terms of court is without authority of law, and a prosecution commenced under an indictment returned by a grand jury summoned for the second term after the order was made must be dismissed. Mayfield v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 305.

Excusing juror.—Neither the grand jury nor the court can excuse a grand juror after the body has been legally organized, and the district court can only, in discharging, discharge the entire grand jury. Ex parte Love, 49 App. 475, 33 S. W. 551.

Race discrimination.—See notes under following article and article 409.

Indictment found by a grand jury against a negro in a county where there are qualified negroes for jury service where negroes are excluded from service on the grand jury to be quashed therefor. Whitney v. State, 42 App. 283, 59 S. W. 895; Smith v. State, 42 App. 229, 55 S. W. 97.

The fact that the jury commissioners failed to select negroes to serve on the grand jury is no objection to an indictment. Carter v. State, 39 App. 345, 46 S. W. 295, 48 S. W. 508.

While the circumstance that for many years no negro had been selected or impaneled as a grand or petit jury might have weight in a close case, it cannot be considered on a motion to quash an indictment for discrimination as to race in the composition of the grand jury, when it is shown that the law has been in every respect complied with. Pollard v. State, 55 App. 299, 125 S. W. 390.

Evidence, on a motion to quash an indictment, held not to sustain the ground of discrimination as to race in the composition of the grand jury. Pollard v. State, 68 App. 299, 125 S. W. 399.

The Court of Criminal Appeals is bound by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in determining whether a negro was denied any right on account of race, color, etc., by the manner of selecting the grand jury which indicted him. Jackson v. State, 63 App. 351, 139 S. W. 1156.

Art. 390. [378] Qualifications of grand jurors.—No person shall be selected or serve as a grand juror who does not possess the following qualifications:

1. He must be a citizen of the state, and of the county in which he is to serve, and qualified under the constitution and laws to vote in said county; but, whenever it shall be made to appear to the court the requisite number of jurors who have paid their poll taxes cannot be found within the county, the court may dispense with the requirement of the payment of poll taxes as a qualification for service as a juror.

2. He must be a freeholder within the state, or a householder within the county.
3. He must be of sound mind and good moral character.
4. He must be able to read and write.
5. He must not have been convicted of any felony.
6. He must not be under indictment or other legal accusation of theft or of any felony. [Id., p. 78, §§ 1-3; O. C. 389; Const., art. 16, § 19; amended Act 1903, 1st S. S., p. 16.]

Exemption from grand jury service of certain officials is a personal privilege to be claimed or waived by them only. Owens v. State, 25 App. 552, 8 S. W. 658; Edgar v. State, 59 App. 282, 137 S. W. 1083.

Race discrimination.—This article does not discriminate between the races in the selection of a grand jury. Thomas v. State, 49 App. 633, 95 S. W. 1072.

Challenge as mode raising objections to qualifications.—See notes to art. 409, post.

Art. 391. [379] Names of grand jurors shall be returned, how.
—The names of the persons selected as grand jurors by the commissioners shall be written upon a paper; and the fact that they were so selected shall be certified and signed by the jury commissioners, who shall place said paper, so certified and signed, in an envelope, and seal the same, and indorse thereon the words, “The list of grand jurors selected at . . . . . term of the district court,” the blank to be filled by stating the month and year in which the term of the court began its session. The commissioners shall write their names across the seal of said envelope, and direct the same to the district judge, and deliver it to him in open court. [Id., § 28.]

Art. 392. [380] Judge shall deliver list to clerk.—The judge shall deliver the envelope containing the list of grand jurors, as provided for in the preceding article, to the clerk, or one of his deputies, in open court, and without opening the same. [Id., § 8.]

Art. 393. [381] Oath shall be administered to clerk, etc., by judge.—Before the list of grand jurors is delivered to the clerk, as provided in the preceding article, the judge shall administer to the clerk, and each of his deputies, in open court, the following oath: “You do swear that you will not open the jury lists now delivered by you, nor permit them to be opened until the time prescribed by law; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected as a juror concerning any case or proceeding which may come before such juror for trial in this court at its next term.” [Id.]

Art. 394. [382] Deputy clerk shall take same oath.—Should the clerk subsequently appoint a deputy, such clerk shall administer to him the same oath, at the time of such appointment. [Id.]

Art. 395. [383] When clerk shall open lists, etc.—Within thirty days of the next term of the district court, and not before, the clerk, or one of his deputies, shall open the envelope containing the list of grand jurors, and make out a fair copy of the names of the persons selected as grand jurors, and certify to the same under his official seal, and deliver it to the sheriff, or his deputy. [Id., § 9.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 760.

Art. 396. [384] Mode of summoning grand jurors.—It shall be the duty of the sheriff, or his deputy, to summon the persons named in the list, at least three days, exclusive of the day of service, prior to the first day of the term of court at which they are to serve, by giving personal notice to each juror of the time and place, when and where he is to attend as a grand juror, or by leaving at his place of residence, with a member of his family over sixteen years old, a written notice to such juror that he has been selected as a grand juror, and the time and place, when and where he is to attend. [Id.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 761.

Process.—A defendant can not question the process upon which the grand jury were summoned. West v. State, 6 App. 485.

Art. 397. [385] Return of officer.—The sheriff or officer, executing such summons, shall return the list on the first day of the term of court at which such jurors are to serve, with a certificate thereon of the date and manner of service upon each juror; and, if any of said jurors have not been summoned, he shall also state in his certificate the reason why they have not been summoned. [Id.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 761.

Art. 398. [386] Juror may be fined for not attending.—A jury legally summoned, failing to attend without a reasonable excuse, may, by order of the court entered on the record, be fined not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars. [Id., § 10.]

Art. 399. [387] Failure to select, etc., grand jury; duty of court.—If, for any cause, there should be a failure to select and summon a grand jury, as herein directed, or, when none of those summoned shall attend, the district court shall, on the first day of the organization thereof, direct a writ to be issued to the sheriff, commanding him to summon any number of persons, not less than twelve nor more than sixteen persons, to serve as grand jurors. [O. C. 347.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 762, 763.

Explanatory.—The original article read "any number of persons not exceeding twenty."

Summoning additional number.—The court may direct the sheriff to summon additional jurors, where one of the twelve drawn by the jury commissioners is disqualified. Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 920.

Art. 400. [388] When less than twelve attend, court shall order others summoned.—When a number less than twelve of those summoned to serve as grand jurors are found to be in attendance and qualified to serve as grand jurors, the court shall order the sheriff to summon such additional number of persons as may be deemed necessary to constitute a grand jury of twelve men. [O. C. 354.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 763.

Former and present law as to number.—Constitutional and legal jury, see note under article 359, ante.

Under the constitution and law, as at present existing, a grand jury must be composed of twelve men, no more, and no less. Const., art. 5, sec. 13. Lott v. State, 18 App, 627; McNeese v. State, 19 App, 48; Smith v. State, Id. 95; Rainey v. State, Id. 473; Williams v. State, Id. 205.

The original article limited the number to not less than fifteen. Drake v. State, 25 App, 293, 7 S. W. 868.

This article, manifestly, has no application, after a legal grand jury of twelve has been organized. So long thereafter as a quorum of nine are present and sitting, their acts are valid. Drake v. State, 26 App, 293, 7 S. W. 888; Jackson v. State, 25 App, 314, 7 S. W. 872; Smith v. State, 19 App, 95; Watts v. State, 22 App, 572, 3 S. W. 769.

Summoning additional jurors.—The court may direct the sheriff to summon additional jurors, where one of the twelve drawn by the jury commissioners is disqualified. Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 920.

Art. 401. [389] When jurors shall be required to attend forthwith.—The jurors provided for in the two preceding articles shall be summoned to attend before the court forthwith, and shall be summoned in person, but shall not be entitled to service three days before the time they are to attend, as provided in the case of jurors selected by jury commissioners.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 762-764.

Art. 402. [390] Sheriff not to summon disqualified persons.—The court, upon directing the sheriff to summon grand jurors not selected by the jury commissioners, shall instruct him that he must summon no person to serve as a grand juror who does not possess the qualifications prescribed in article 350.
Art. 403. [391] Court shall test qualifications of jurors, when.
—When as many as twelve persons summoned to serve as grand jurors are in attendance upon the court, it shall proceed to test their qualifications as such. [O. C. 345.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, p. 406.

Number constituting legal grand jury.—As to what constitutes a legal grand jury, see notes to arts. 389, 400, ante.

Record on appeal.—When the record on appeal is challenged with regard to the legality of its recitals of the number organized into a grand jury, the appellate court will resort to the records of the original tribunal in order to ascertain the facts. Vance v. State, 24 App. 395, 30 S. W. 792, citing Simmons v. Fisher, 46 Tex. 127.

Art. 404. [392] Shall be interrogated touching qualifications.
—Each person who is presented to serve as a grand juror shall, before being impaneled, be interrogated on oath by the district judge, or under his direction, touching his qualifications. [O. C. 349.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 765.

Art. 405. [393] Mode of testing juror's qualifications.—In trying the qualifications of any person to serve as a grand juror, he shall be asked these questions:
1. Are you a citizen of this state and county, and qualified to vote in this county, under the constitution and laws of this state? But whenever it shall be made to appear to the court that the requisite number of jurors who have paid their poll taxes can not be found within the county, the court may dispense with the requirement of the payment of poll taxes as a qualification for service as a juror.
2. Are you a freeholder in this state, or a householder in this county?
3. Are you able to read and write? [O. C. 350; amended, Act 1903, 1st S. S., p. 16.]

See art. 390.

Art. 406. [394] When juror is qualified, shall be accepted, etc.
—When, by the answer of the person, it appears to the court that he is a qualified juror, he shall be accepted as such, unless it be shown that he is not of sound mind or of good moral character, or unless it be shown that he is in fact not qualified to serve as a grand juror. [O. C. 351; amended, Act 1903, 1st S. S., p. 16.]

Art. 407. [395] When not qualified, shall be excused.—Any person summoned who does not possess the requisite qualifications shall be excused by the court from serving. [O. C. 352.]

Art. 408. [396] Jury shall be impaneled when, unless, etc.—When twelve qualified jurors are found to be present, the court shall proceed to impanel them as a grand jury, unless a challenge is made, which may be to the array or to any particular individual presented to serve as a grand juror. [O. C. 353.]

See art. 403, ante, and Drake v. State, 25 App. 293, 7 S. W. 658.

Jury impaneled on holiday.—See notes to Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 4606.

Art. 409. [397] Any person may challenge, when.—Any person, before the grand jury has been impaneled, may challenge the array of jurors or any person presented as a grand juror; and, in no other way, shall objections to the qualifications and legality of the grand jury be heard. Any person confined in jail in the county shall, upon his request, be brought into court to make such challenge. [O. C. 362.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 766.

Challenge as only method of objecting.—Objections to a grand jury, or to individual grand jurors, can only be made by challenge. State v. Vahl, 29 Tex. 779.
Art. 409  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

A challenge to the array is the only mode by which objections are available against the grand jury as a body, and such challenge can be made for no other causes than those specified in article 412, post. Reed v. State, 1 App. 1; Green v. State, 58; Smith v. State, Id. 104; Kemp v. State, 11 App. 174; Hart v. State, 15 App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188.

Disqualification of grand jurors can not be raised on motion to quash indictment, nor on motion for new trial. Cubine v. State, 44 App. 506, 75 S. W. 396, and cases cited: Matkins v. State, 33 App. 605, 28 S. W. 536.

An objection to the competency of a grand juror is not properly raised by a motion to quash the trial, especially where no evidence in support of the motion is produced. Shoppard v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 314.

On a trial, after the overruling of a motion to quash an indictment, a question asked the foreman of the grand jury, who was a witness for the state, for the purpose of showing that he was not a qualified grand juror, was properly excluded. Shepard v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 314.

A motion to quash the indictment because the grand jurors' names had been published in a newspaper 40 days before the term of court without any challenge of any when impaneled, held properly denied. Merkel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 758.

— Race discrimination.—See notes under articles 389 and 390.

When it appears that in the impaneling of the grand jury the rights of colored citizens are discriminated against, this would be a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, but in this case not being properly presented the question will not be considered. Carter v. State, 28 App. 845, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 505 (reversed by Supreme Court of the United States, 177 U. S. 442, 20 Sup. Ct. 687, 44 L. Ed. 833).

That accused was accorded no opportunity to challenge the grand jury of race discrimination in its organization is a question that can be raised either by plea in abatement or motion to quash the indictment. Smith v. State, 42 App. 226, 58 S. W. 97; Lewis v. State, 42 App. 278, 59 S. W. 1116; Kipper v. State, 42 App. 613, 63 S. W. 420.

The burden is on accused, to establish discrimination against his race in the selection of the grand jury. Whitney v. State, 43 App. 197, 63 S. W. 879.

A motion to quash an indictment because accused was a negro, and negroes were improperly excluded from the grand jury, came too late, where accused was in custody when the jury was impaneled. McClung v. State, 64 App. 19, 141 S. W. 977.

Where accused, a negro, was in jail when a grand jury was impaneled which returned an indictment against him, but made no request to challenge the grand jury, nor any objection thereto until the judgment rendered against him on the first trial had been reversed, it was then too late for him to move to quash the indictment because negroes were discriminated against in the selection of the grand jury. Hemphill v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 154.

Challenge by prisoner in jail.—In order for a party confined in jail to avail himself of the right to challenge the array of the grand jury, he must make a request to be brought from the jail for that purpose. Brown v. State, 32 App. 119, 22 S. W. 586; Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 989.

A prisoner confined in jail should be accorded, on his request, the opportunity to confront and challenge the array of grand jurors at the proper time. Barkman v. State, 41 App. 105, 52 S. W. 73.

A prisoner in jail, as well as every other person, should have the opportunity of challenging, but unless such opportunity is requested by him, he can not be heard to complain. With a view to the prevention of improper prosecutions, the practice of affording prisoners an opportunity to challenge the grand jury is commended. Kemp v. State, 11 App. 174; Reed v. State, 1 App. 1; Smith v. State, Id. 154; Thomas v. State, 2 App. 500; Cordova v. State, 6 App. 207; Hart v. State, 15 App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188. Before the adoption of the Code the practice was different. See Tompkins v. Republic, Dallam, 458; State v. Jacobs, 6 Tex. 39; State v. Foster, 9 Tex. 63; Jackson v. State, 11 Tex. 261; Vanhook v. State, 12 Tex. 253; Barker v. State, Id. 273; Stanley v. State, 16 Tex. 537; State v. White, 17 Tex. 242; Martin v. State, 22 Tex. 214.

Where one is in jail who wishes to challenge grand juror he must apply to the judge, and if he has not access to the sheriff he must apply through the jailer. Barkman v. State (Cr. App.) 52 S. W. 69.

One who was in jail when the grand jury by which he was indicted was impaneled cannot attack the indictment at the trial on the ground that a grand juror was disqualified. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

Time of making challenge.—It is too late after indictment to question the impanelment of the grand jury or a particular member thereof. Carter v. State, 39.
Art. 413

App. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 598 (reversed by United States Supreme Court, 177 U. S. 507) (Cr. App., 44 L. Ed. 590); Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 55.

The proper time to challenge the array is before the jurors have been interrogated as to their qualifications. But a challenge to a particular juror may be made after the qualifications of the jurors have been tested. Reed v. State, 1 App. 1; Grant v. State, 2 App. 164.

The failure of the jury commissioners to sign and certify the list of grand jurors is no ground for complaint after trial. Barber v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 233.

If a right to challenge is not accorded at the time of the jury's organization, it can be raised by him at the time accused is called on to announce ready for trial. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 559.

A person against whom a preliminary complaint has not been filed may challenge the array of the grand jury after the return of an indictment against him, and when called on to announce for trial. Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 930.

Art. 410. [398] Definition of "array."—By the array of grand jurors is meant the whole body of persons summoned to serve as such before they have been impaneled. [O. C. 368.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 766.

Art. 411. [399] Meaning of "impaneled," etc.—A grand juror is said to be "impaneled" after his qualifications have been tried, and he has been sworn. By the word "panel" is meant the whole body of grand jurors. [O. C. 360.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 766.

Art. 412. [400] Causes for challenge to the array.—A challenge to the array shall be made in writing, and for these causes only:

1. That the persons summoned as grand jurors are not, in fact, the persons selected by the jury commissioners.

2. In case of grand jurors summoned by order of the court that the officer who summoned them had acted corruptly in summoning any one or more of them. [O. C. 363.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 766; Ante, art. 409, and notes.

Challenge in writing.—This challenge must be in writing. Kemp v. State, 11 App. 174.

— Race discrimination.—See notes to art. 409, ante.

Time for challenge.—See notes to art. 409, ante.

Art. 413. [401] Causes for challenge to a particular juror.—A challenge to a particular grand juror may be made orally, and for the following causes only:

1. That he is not a qualified grand juror.

An indictment cannot be attacked by motion to quash or plea in abatement because one of the grand jurors was a witness in the case; this not being one of the causes for challenge to a grand juror enumerated. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

Challenge.—See notes to art. 409, ante.

The challenge may be made orally. Kemp v. State, 11 App. 174.

— Time for challenge.—See note to art. 409, ante.

2. That he is the prosecutor upon an accusation against the person making the challenge.

3. That he is related by consanguinity or affinity to some person who has been held to bail, or who is in confinement upon a criminal accusation. [O. C. 364.]

See ante, art. 409, and notes.

Art. 414. [402] Court shall decide challenge summarily.—When a challenge to the array, or to any individual, has been made, the court shall hear proof, and decide in a summary manner whether the challenge be well founded or not. [O. C. 365.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 767, 768.

Art. 415. [403] Court shall order other jurors summoned, when.—If the challenge to the array be sustained, or, if by challenge to any particular individual, the number of grand jurors be reduced below twelve, the court shall order another grand jury to be summoned, or shall order the panel to be completed, as the case may be, as provided in previous articles of this chapter. [O. C. 366, 367.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 767.

Quashal of panel.—Quashal of the panel as a whole would not follow the sustaining of challenge to one or more particular jurors, but the vacancies would be filled by ordering other jurors. State v. Jacobs, 6 Tex. 9.

Art. 416. [404] Oath of grand jurors.—When the grand jury is completed, the court shall appoint one of the number foreman; and the following oath shall be administered by the court, or under its direction, to each of the jurors: "You solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you will diligently inquire into, and true presentment make, of all such matters and things as shall be given you in charge; the state's counsel, your fellows' and your own, you shall keep secret, unless required to disclose the same in the course of a judicial proceeding in which the truth or falsity of evidence given in the grand jury room, in a criminal case, shall be under investigation. You shall present no person from envy, hatred or malice; neither shall you leave any person unrepresented for love, fear, favor, affection or hope of reward; but you shall present things truly as they come to your knowledge, according to the best of your understanding, so help you God." [O. C. 356; amended by Act March 13, 1875, p. 166.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 769, 770.

Record of organization of jury in general.—Entry on court minutes of the organization of the grand jury, while not expressly required by statute, is required by the general provision directing the clerk to keep a fair record of all the proceedings in court. Omission of such entry will not, however, vitiate an indictment.

De Olles v. State, 20 App. 145.

Nunc pro tunc entry of the organization of the grand jury may be made on the minutes. De Olles v. State, 29 App. 145, and cases cited.

While it is proper to prove by the minutes of the court that the grand jury was duly and legally impaneled, other evidence of that fact will not be held error unless objected to at the time it is offered. Foster v. State, 22 App. 39, 22 S. W. 21; Waul v. State, 33 App. 225, 26 S. W. 199.

Oath and record thereof.—Recitals held sufficient to show that the grand jurors were sworn according to law. Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210; State v. Loving, 16 Tex. 556; Thompson v. State, 2 App. 550; Ferguson v. State, 6 App. 504.

One accused of crime can not question the form of the oath. West v. State, 6 App. 485.

Indictment is not assailable on the ground that the minutes of the court do not show that the grand jury was sworn. McDaniel v. State, 21 App. 552, 7 S. W. 249.

Secrecy as to proceedings.—See notes under art. 442, post.

Proceedings before grand jury are secret and exempt from investigation, except as provided for in this and article 570, post.

A violation of this oath is made a misdemeanor by P. C. art. 316.

Courts can not inquire into the evidence, or sufficiency of the evidence, on which the grand jury found the indictment. Jacobs v. State, 33 App. 410, 34 S. W. 116 (following Terry v. State, 15 App. 60); Johnson v. State, 22 App. 206, 2 S. W. 609; Morrison v. State, 41 Tex. 516; Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 567, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132.

Evidence of what transpires in a grand jury room, while the grand jury is in session, is only admissible when, in the judgment of the court, it becomes material to the administration of justice. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593; Clanton v. State, 13 App. 139, the latter case overruling Ruby v. State, 9 App. 333, in so far as it holds that such evidence is not admissible in any case.

The only contingency that authorizes the State to go into the grand jury room and prove what the witness there testified to is marked out in this article. Christian v. State, 40 App. 671, 51 S. W. 900.

Evidence taken before grand jury is admissible solely where the truth or falsity of the witness is in question. Brown v. State, 42 App. 176, 58 S. W. 133.

The testimony of the defendant as witness before the grand jury, with reference to the matter on trial, is admissible against him. Giles v. State, 43 App. 551, 67 S. W. 411, following Wisdom v. State, 42 App. 579, 61 S. W. 926, which in effect overrules Gutzessell v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 1016.

The members of the grand jury which indicted accused and her co-defendant could testify as to what accused testified before the grand jury. Goodwin v. State, 70 App. 600, 158 S. W. 274.

— Impeachment of witnesses.—Contradictory statements made by a witness when testifying before a grand jury may be proved for the purpose of discrediting him, when, in the judgment of the court, such evidence is material to the due administration of justice. Clanton v. State, 52 App. 139 (overruling, upon this point, Ruby v. State, 9 App. 353); Scott v. State, 25 App. 521, 5 S. W. 142; Rippey v. State, 52 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448; Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 292. And see also, Sisk v. State, 28 App. 423, 13 S. W. 447.

State cannot show on cross-examination what witness may have testified to in grand jury room about other matters not inquired about in his examination in chief. Christian v. State, 49 App. 671, 51 S. W. 962.

Construed in connection with Art. 316 of the Penal Code this article limits the testimony to matters transpiring in the grand jury room to such cases only where the same matter is under grand jury and trial court investigation. And this extends to impeaching testimony. Hines v. State, 37 App. 339, 29 S. W. 935. And see Christian v. State, 40 App. 609, 51 S. W. 902.

In a criminal prosecution, where the state put on grand jurors to show that the testimony of a witness for defendant before them differed from her testimony at the trial, the testimony of one grand juror that he translated her testimony, given in German, for the other jurors, was not objectionable because he was not sworn in the grand jury as a witness to make such translation. Merkel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 739.

— Confession before grand jury.—See notes to art. 810, post.

The confession of a defendant before the grand jury is admissible against him if he has been cautioned. Grimsinger v. State, 44 App. 1, 69 S. W. 590.

Art. 417. [405] Court shall instruct grand jury.—After the grand jury has been sworn, the court shall give them instruction as to their duty. [O. C. 357.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 760.

Art. 418. [406] Bailiffs may be appointed; their oath.—One or more bailiffs may be appointed by the court to attend upon the grand jury, and, at the time of appointment, the following oath shall be administered to each of them by the court, or under its direction:

“You solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you will faithfully and impartially perform all the duties of bailiff of the grand jury, and that you will keep secret the proceedings of the grand jury, so help you God.” [O. C. 358.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 771, 772.

Art. 419. [407] Bailiff's duties.—A bailiff is to obey the instructions of the foreman, to summon all witnesses, and, generally, to perform all such duties as are required of him by the foreman. Where two bailiffs are appointed, one of them shall be always with the grand jury. [O. C. 359.]

Art. 420. [408] Bailiff shall take no part in discussions of grand jury; punishment.—A bailiff shall take no part in the discussions or deliberations of the grand jury, and shall not be present when the grand jury is either discussing or voting upon a question; and any violation of duty upon the part of a bailiff shall be reported by the grand jury to the court, and, for such violation of duty, he may be punished by the court as for contempt. [O. C. 361.]

Art. 421. [409] Another foreman appointed, when.—In case of the absence of the foreman of the grand jury from any cause, or of his inability or disqualification to act, the court shall appoint in his place some other member of the body. [O. C. 361.]

Art. 422. [410] Nine members constitute a quorum.—Nine members shall be a quorum for the purpose of discharging any duty or exercising any right properly belonging to the grand jury. [Const., art. 5, § 13; O. C. 370.]

Legal grand jury.—See article 389, ante, and notes thereunder, and also notes under article 409, ante.

A legal grand jury is composed of twelve members. Ex parte Reynolds, 35 App. 453, 24 S. W. 120; 69 Am. St. Rep. 54; Wells v. State, 21 App. 594, 2 S. W. 188
Art. 422. PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

The discharge for the term by the legally organized grand jury of one of its members is a nullity. Watts v. State, 22 App. 572, 3 S. W. 769. And see Drake v. State, 25 App. 293, 7 S. W. 888; Jackson v. State, 25 App. 314, 7 S. W. 572.

Art. 423. [411] May be reassembled after having been discharged for the term.—When a grand jury has been discharged by the court for the term, it may be reassembled by the court at any time during the term; and, in case of failure of one or more of the members to reassemble, the court may complete the panel by impaneling other qualified persons in their stead, in accordance with the rules prescribed in this chapter for completing the grand jury in the first instance.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 782, 783.

Reassembling grand jury.—The practice was the same before the adoption of this article. Wilson v. State, 32 Tex. 112; Newman v. State, 43 Tex. 525; Mitchell v. State, Id. 512; Drake v. State, 26 App. 582, 7 S. W. 893; Trevino v. State, 27 App. 372, 11 S. W. 447.

To reassemble the same grand jury it is only necessary for the court to set aside the order discharging them and order their reassembly. It need not formally re-impanel, re-test or re-swear the original members, though persons summoned to fill out vacancies in the original panel would have to be impaneled, tested and sworn. Gay v. State, 40 App. 242, 49 S. W. 612.

The jurors need not be retested nor resworn. If the reassembled panel is not full, the court can complete the panel according to the rules of law on the subject, or if one of the jurors is disqualified the court can stand him aside and impanel another in his place. Matthews v. State, 42 App. 31, 58 S. W. 86, following Trevino v. State, 27 App. 372, 11 S. W. 447.

Where the grand jury has been discharged it is discretionary with the district judge to reassemble them during the term. If he does not do so he must require a party who is granted bail during the term to appear at the next term of the district court to answer the charge. Ex parte Glasgow (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 1084.

A grand jury properly impaneled and organized adjourned for a week, but on the same day it was reassembled by order of court with 19 members present. Held, that it was a legally constituted grand jury. Lecie v. State, 65 App. 339, 139 S. W. 1147.

Where, after the grand jury had been discharged for the term, the offense with which defendant was charged was committed, and the court reconvened the grand jury, a grand juror, who had witnessed the offense, was not incompetent as a grand juror, though the state wanted him as a witness, and it was not error to refuse to quash the indictment on that ground. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 225.

CHAPTER TWO

OF THE DUTIES, PRIVILEGES AND POWERS OF THE GRAND JURY

Art. 424. Place to be prepared for grand jury.

425. Deliberations shall be secret.

426. Attorney representing the state may go before.

427. Attorney may examine witness, etc.

428. Grand jury may send for attorney representing the state, etc.

429. Grand jury may seek advice from the court.

430. Foreman shall preside over grand jury.

431. Grand jury shall meet and adjourn.

432. Duties of grand jury.

433. Foreman may issue process for witnesses.

434. Attachment for witnesses in another county may be obtained, how.

435. Attachment may be obtained in vacation, etc.

Art. 436. Bailiff, etc., shall execute and return process from grand jury, etc.

437. Evasion of service by witness may be punished by fine.

438. When witness refuses to testify, shall be dealt with, how.

439. Oath to witnesses.

440. How witnesses shall be questioned.

441. When a felony has been committed by unknown person.

442. After the testimony grand jury shall vote.

443. Memorandum shall state what.

444. Indictment shall be prepared by attorney and signed, etc., by foreman.

445. Indictment shall be presented in open court, etc.

446. Presentment to be entered of record, etc.
Article 424. [412] Suitable place to be prepared for grand jury.
—The grand jury, after being organized, shall proceed to the discharge of their duties; and some suitable place shall be prepared by the sheriff for their sessions. [O. C. 371.]

Art. 425. [413] Deliberations shall be secret.—The deliberations of the grand jury shall be secret; and any member of the body or bailiff who divulges anything transpiring before them, in the course of their official duties, shall be liable to a fine, as for contempt of the court, not exceeding one hundred dollars, and to imprisonment not exceeding five days. [O. C. 372.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms. 785; P. C., art. 316.
Secrecy as to proceedings.—See notes to art. 416, ante.
Presence of unauthorized persons as ground for quashing Indictment.—See notes to art. 570, subd. 2, post.

Art. 426. [414] Attorney representing the state may go before, etc.—The attorney representing the state may go before the grand jury at any time, except when they are discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment or voting upon the same. [O. C. 373.]

Presence of attorney.—The county attorney may be present at all times when the grand jury is not deliberating or voting upon a bill of indictment. Haywood v.
State, 61 App. 92, 134 S. W. 218. But his presence when the grand jury is discussing or voting is unauthorized, and will vitiate indictment. Rothschild v. State, 7
App. 628; Stuart v. State, 25 App. 440, 34 S. W. 118. And so will the presence of the assistant county attorney during the grand jury's "investigation and deliberation," though not present at the voting. Stuart v. State, 35 App. 440, 34 S. W.
118. The fact that the assistant district attorney was present and examined witnesses in the grand jury room, and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case of accused, is not equivalent to proof that he was present when the grand jury was deliberating upon the indictment against accused. Moody v. State, 57
App. 76, 131 S. W. 1117.

That an attorney employed by the prosecuting attorney was present for the time being, and examined witnesses, though not expressly authorized by statute, is not prohibited, and will not operate to vitiate an indictment. Wilson v. State,
41 App. 116, 61 S. W. 96.

Art. 427. [415] Attorney may examine witnesses, etc.—The attorney representing the state may examine the witnesses before the grand jury, and may advise as to the proper mode of interrogating them, if desired, or if he thinks it necessary. [O. C. 375.]

Art. 428. [416] Grand jury may send for attorney representing the state, etc.—When any question arises before a grand jury respecting the proper discharge of their duties, or any matter of law about which they may require advice, it is their right to send for the attorney representing the state, and take his advice thereon.
[O. C. 374.]

Art. 429. [417] Grand jury may seek advice from court.—The grand jury may also seek and receive advice from the court touching any matter before them, and, for this purpose, shall go into court in a body; but they shall so guard the manner of propounding their questions as not to divulge the particular accusation that is pending before them; or they may propound their questions in writing, upon which the court may give them the desired information in writing. [O. C. 276.]

Absence of judge.—That the judge, after organizing the grand jury, left it deliberating on the finding of an indictment, and went to another county, is not ground for quashing the indictment, in the absence of a showing of injury. El-

Art. 430. [418] Foreman shall preside over grand jury, etc.—
The foreman shall preside over the sessions of the grand jury, and conduct its business and proceedings in an orderly manner. He may appoint one or more of the members of the body to act as clers for the grand jury.

Art. 431. [419] Grand jury shall meet and adjourn.—The grand jury shall meet and adjourn at times agreed upon by a ma-

Art. 431  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.  (Title 7 for more than three days, unless by consent of the court; but, with the consent of the court, they may adjourn for a longer time, and shall, as near as may be, conform their adjournments to those of the court.  [O. C. 377.]

Art. 432.  [420] Duties of grand jury.—It is the duty of the grand jury to inquire into all offenses liable to indictment of which any of the members may have knowledge, or of which they shall be informed by the attorney representing the state, or any other creditable person.  [O. C. 378.]
Offenses subject to inquiry.—A grand jury is an inquisitorial body pertaining alone to offenses committed within the county or that could be prosecuted in the county and has no power to inquire concerning offenses committed beyond the county's boundaries.  Pigg v. State, 71 App. 600, 160 S. W. 691.
Agreement not to indict.—The grand jury can not bind the state by an agreement with one accused of an offense not to indict him if he would not commit

Art. 433.  [421] Foreman may issue process for witnesses.—
The foreman of the grand jury may issue a summons or attachment for any witness in the county where they are sitting; which summons or attachment may require the witness to appear before them at a time fixed, or forthwith, without stating the matter in respect to which the witness will be called upon to testify.  [O. C. 379; Act
Aug. 15, 1870.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 775, 776.
Service on judge as contempt.—Service in a quiet and respectful manner of a grand jury attachment upon a district judge while sitting on the bench is not contempt.  Ex parte Degener, 30 App. 566, 37 S. W. 1111.

Art. 434.  [422] Attachment for witnesses in another county, obtained how.—The foreman of the grand jury, or the attorney representing the state, may, upon application in writing to the district court, stating the name and residence of the witness, and that his testimony is believed to be material, cause an attachment to be issued to any county in the state for such witness, returnable to the grand jury then in session, or to the next grand jury for the county from whence the same issued, as such foreman or attorney may desire; which attachment shall command the sheriff or any constable of the county where such witness resides to arrest such witness, and have him before the grand jury at the time and place specified in the writ.  [Act Aug. 15, 1870.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 777, 780.

Art. 435.  [423] Attachment may be obtained in vacation, etc.
—The district or county attorney may cause an attachment for a witness to be issued, as provided in the preceding article, either in term time or in vacation.  [1d.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 777.

Art. 436.  [424] Bailiff, etc., shall execute and return process from grand jury, etc.—The bailiff or other officer who receives process to be served from a grand jury shall forthwith execute the same, and return it to the foreman, if the grand jury be in session; and, if the grand jury be not in session, the process shall be returned to the clerk of the district court.  If the process is returned not executed, the return shall state the reason why it was not executed.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 888, 881.

Art. 437.  [425] Evasion of service by witness may be punished by fine.—If it be made to appear satisfactorily to the court that a witness for whom a summons of attachment has been issued to go before the grand jury is in any manner wilfully evading the service of such summons or attachment, the court may fine such witness, as for contempt, not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Art. 438. [426] When witness refuses to testify, dealt with how.—When a witness, brought in any manner before a grand jury, refuses to testify, such facts shall be made known to the attorney representing the state or to the court; and the court may compel the witness to answer the question, if it appear to be a proper one, by imposing a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, and by committing the party to jail until he is willing to testify. [O. C. 381.]

Contempt.—An agent of a telegraph company may be compelled to produce messages before a grand jury. But the court may not punish for contempt for disobeying a subpoena duces tecum unless it is made to appear that the disobedience is in a matter material to the prosecution of some crime or person charged with crime. Ex parte Gould, 69 App. 442, 132 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 835.

One who, when summoned before the grand jury, refuses to be sworn and who, when brought before the district judge, again refuses to be sworn and answer any question, or to affirm in any way, is guilty of contempt of court, authorizing confinement in jail until she will take the oath required by law, in the absence of any proof that her refusal was on account of any religious or other convictions. Ex parte Napoleon (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 269.

Self-incrimination.—See notes under art. 4, ante.

Art. 439. [427] Oaths to witnesses.—The following oath shall be administered by the foreman, or under his direction, to all witnesses before being interrogated: "You solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you will not divulge, either by words or signs, any matter about which you may be interrogated, and that you will keep secret all proceedings of the grand jury which may be had in your presence, and that you will true answers make to such questions as may be propounded to you by the grand jury, or under its direction, so help you God." [O. C. 382; amended by Act March 15, 1875, p. 108.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 772.

Explanatory.—Article 316 of the Penal Code makes it an offense for a witness before the grand jury to in any manner divulge the proceedings in his knowledge. See ante, art. 416, and notes.

Perjury.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 304, et seq.

— Indictment.—See notes to art. 495, post.

The indictment need not state the specific offense which the grand jury was investigating. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 293. And it is sufficient, though not alleging facts showing the foreman's authority. Eoff v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 767.

Punishment for divulging proceedings.—See Pen. Code, art. 316, and notes.

Art. 440. [428] How witnesses shall be questioned.—The grand jury, in propounding questions to witness, shall direct the examination to the person accused or suspected, shall state the offense with which he is charged, the county where the offense is said to have been committed, and, as nearly as may be, the time of the commission of the offense; but should the jury think it necessary, they may ask the witness in general terms whether he has knowledge of the violation of any particular law by any person, and, if so, by what person. [O. C. 383.]

Cited, Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 259.

Scope of inquiry.—In an investigation by the grand jury as to a sale of liquor on Sunday the questions should be confined to sales made on Sunday and by persons mentioned in the statute as inhibited from making such sales. Meeks v. State, 32 App. 428, 24 S. W. 98. That some one other than those enumerated in the statute (art. 302) sold liquor on Sunday can not constitute a material inquiry. Id.

The grand jury must direct its inquiries to the discovery of crime, but cannot inquire into matters not material to the matter under investigation. Ex parte Gould, 69 App. 442, 132 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 835.

Art. 441. [429] When a felony has been committed by unknown person.—When a felony has been committed in any county within the jurisdiction of the grand jury, and the name of the person

Art. 442. [430] After the testimony, grand jury shall vote.—
After all the testimony which is accessible to the grand jury shall have been given in respect to any criminal accusation, the vote shall be taken as to the presentment of a bill of indictment, and, if nine members concur in finding the bill, the foreman shall make a memorandum of the same for the purpose of enabling the attorney who represents the state to write the indictment. [O. C. 385.]

See notes under following article.

Voting.—When it appears that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of true bills the manner of procedure in voting upon the bills is immaterial. Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 410, 34 S. W. 110.

Memorandum.—The statute does not require that all of the testimony or any part thereof, shall be set down by the foreman or secretary of the grand jury. Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 410, 34 S. W. 110.

Witnesses need not be personally before the grand jury as examining trials are had, testimony taken, reduced to writing, and sworn to and transmitted to the grand jury, which is authorized to return an indictment thereon if found sufficient. Zweig v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 747.

Going behind indictment to inquire into evidence.—See notes under article 416, ante.

There is no law which authorizes the courts to go behind an indictment properly returned into court, and inquire into the evidence, or the sufficiency of the evidence, upon which the grand jury found and presented it. The presumption of law is that the indictment returned was found by the grand jury after all the testimony which was accessible to them had been heard by them. Terry v. State, 15 App. 66; Morrison v. State, 41 Tex. 516; Cotton v. State, 43 Tex. 169; Hart v. State, 15 App. 263; 49 Am. Rep. 389; Johnson v. State, 22 App. 296, 2 S. W. 693;

Art. 443. [431] Memorandum shall state what.—The memorandum furnished the attorney shall state: The name of the defendant, if known, and, if unknown, shall describe him; the name of the party injured or attempted to be injured, if any one; the nature of the offense; the time and place of its commission; and the names of the witnesses on whose testimony the accusation is sustained. [O. C. 386.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 774.

Memorandum.—When the grand jury docket shows entries containing memorandum of true bills, the name of defendant and nature of the offense, it is a sufficient record. Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 410, 34 S. W. 110.

Art. 444. [432] Indictment shall be prepared by attorney and signed, etc., by foreman.—The attorney representing the state shall prepare all indictments which have been found by a grand jury with as little delay as possible, and, when so prepared, shall deliver them to the foreman, who shall sign the same officially, and the attorney representing the state indorse theron the names of the witnesses, upon whose testimony the same was found. [O. C. 387.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 8.

Preparation by attorney pro tem.—The court may appoint a district or county attorney pro tem., who will thereby be authorized to prepare indictments. Ante, art. 38, note.

Where the foreman signed the indictment, the fact that his signature was not indorsed or signed on the back thereof below the words "A true bill" did not vitiate the same. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 715.

Indorsement of names of witnesses.—That the names of the state's witnesses, as they appeared on the indictment, were not indorsed on the copy served on the accused, is no ground for a postponement of the trial. Hart v. State, 15 App. 203, 49 Am. Rep. 185; Walker v. State, 19 App. 176. And see Folk v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. W. 967.
The requirement that the witnesses' names shall be indorsed on the indictment is held essential. Steele v. State, 1 Tex. 140; Walker v. State, 19 App. 178. No exception lies because the statute has not been complied with in this respect, nor is it ground for new trial; but upon motion, the court may cause the omission to be supplied. Skipworth v. State, 8 App. 135. Testimony of a witness will not be excluded because his name is not indorsed on the indictment. Kramer v. State, 34 App. 84, 29 S. W. 157.

Indorsement of witnesses on indictment may be compelled by motion. Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 410, 24 S. W. 119.

Witnesses, whose names are not on the back of indictment, may be introduced by the State. Fehr v. State, 36 App. 93, 35 S. W. 381, 650. A witness may testify for the State though his name is not indorsed on the indictment. Villis v. State, 27 App. 147, 38 S. W. 999.

The requirement that the state's attorney shall prepare all indictments, and shall indorse thereon the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony it was found, is directory; and the failure to place the names thereon and furnish the accused with a copy of them is not reversible error. Lucky v. State, 63 App. 541, 141 S. W. 269, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1089.

Where defendant filed no motion to be furnished the names of witnesses not indorsed on his copy of the indictment, but waited until the case was called for trial, he thereby waived his right to object that the names had not been furnished him. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1173.

Where the failure to enter the names of the witnesses on the copy of the indictment served on accused was to avoid trouble, and the omission was ordered by the court without the knowledge or consent of accused or his counsel, the omission did not constitute reversible error. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 423, 157 S. W. 487.

Where accused did not move that the names of the witnesses should be indorsed on the indictment, he could not object to the testimony of a witness whose name was not indorsed. Raleigh v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 1050. Accused, surprised by the testimony of a witness whose name was not indorsed on the indictment, should move to postpone the case. Raleigh v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 1050.

Art. 445. (433) Indictment shall be presented in open court.—When the indictment is ready to be presented, the grand jury shall go in a body into open court, and, through their foreman, deliver the indictment to the judge of the court; and at least nine members of the grand jury must be present on such occasions. [O. C. 383.]

Presence of accused in county.—An indictment is not void because defendant was not present in the county when indicted. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 859.

Record.—See notes under the following article. An objection that nine of the grand jury did not concur in presenting the indictment will not be entertained on appeal dehors the record. Hasley v. State, 14 App. 217.

For typographical error, see Fields v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1051.

Art. 446. (434) Presentment to be entered of record, etc.—The fact of a presentment of indictment in open court by a grand jury shall be entered upon the minutes of the proceedings of the court, noting briefly the style of the criminal action and the file number of the indictment, but omitting the name of the defendant, unless he is in custody or under bond. [Act May 25, p. 8.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 9.

Filing and record in general.—The fact of the presentment must be noted in the minutes. Hardy v. State, 1 App. 556; Walker v. State, 7 App. 55. But it is not essential that the entry should state the offense charged. Hasley v. State, 14 App. 217; Bohannon v. State, Id. 271; Tyson v. State, Id. 388; Spear v. State, 18 App. 93; Steele v. State, 19 App. 425; DeOllis v. State, 20 App. 145; Rowlett v. State, 23 App. 191, 4 S. W. 583; Tellison v. State, 35 App. 388, 33 S. W. 1082; Malloy v. State, 35 App. 399, 33 S. W. 1082. The former law required the offense to be noted. Denton v. State, 2 App. 635. Defendant's name must be omitted from the entry unless he is in custody or under bond. Bohannon v. State, 14 App. 271. And see Hayes v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 16.

For entries held sufficient, see Anderson v. State, 2 App. 288; Houillon v. State, 3 App. 537; Spear v. State, 16 App. 98.

In case of variance as to dates between the clerk's file mark on the indictment and the record of its presentation the latter will control. Kennedy v. State, 9 App. 399.

To state the file number of a cause is a sufficient description and identification of it. Lynn v. State, 28 App. 515, 13 S. W. 887.

When the record shows that the term of court at which an indictment was found and trial had thereunder began on April 1st and adjourned on June 30th, and that the trial and conviction were had on June 20th, and that, on May 22d the grand jury in open court presented the indictment charging the offense on May 4th, the recital that the indictment was filed April 22d was a typographical or other error, and the indictment as a matter of fact was found and presented to the court subsequent to the date of the offense alleged therein, as required by this and the preceding article. (Fields v. State (Cr. App.) 447, 21 S. W. 155.)

Objections and exceptions.—As to exceptions to indictment, see art. 576, post, and notes.
Defects or omissions in the entry as to the presentment can only be availed of when the objection is made in limine.

Where the record of the return of an indictment only showed that, on a specified date, the grand jury appeared in open court and presented the following true bill of indictment, etc., a motion to quash because it did not appear that the indictment was presented by a “quorum of the grand jury” should have been made in the court of original jurisdiction and, being a mere matter of procedure, could not be made in the court to which the venue was changed. Serrato v. State (Cr.
App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

Amendments.—As to amendment of indictment, see art. 599, and notes.

Upon presentation, even at a subsequent term, the record may be amended so as to show presentment. Burnett v. State, 14 Tex. 456. 66 Am. Dec. 131; Rhodes 74; Cox v. State, 7 App. 949; De Olles v. State, 20 App. 145; Serrato v. State (Cr.
App.) 171 S. W. 1133. But such amendment cannot be made after notice of ap­

It is not error to permit the entry to be amended so as to show that the presentment was made in open court. Tyson v. State, 14 App. 688.

Substitution of records.—See notes to art. 462, post.

Where the record of the presentment has been destroyed it cannot be supplied by proof that such record was made. It must be substituted in the manner pre­

Legality of grand jury.—See notes under article 399, ante.

The annotations to this chapter are intended to include decisions of general application or which apply to articles therein relating to particular crimes.]

Article 447. [435] Felonies presented by indictment only.—All felonies shall be presented by indictment only, except in cases specially provided for. [O. C. 390; Const., art. 1, § 10.]

See article 4 and notes thereunder. See Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 11 Sup. Ct. 234, 34 L. Ed. 516, dismissing writ of error to review judgment in s. c. 28 App. 686, 11 S. W. 122.

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: "And no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense, unless on indictment of a grand jury, except in cases in which the punishment is by fine, or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary, in cases of imprisonment, and in cases arising in the army or navy, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger." [Const. art. 1, § 10 (Vernon's Sayles 'Civil St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiv.).]

Necessity of indictment.—A felony can be prosecuted by indictment only. Kinley v. State, 29 App. 552, 16 S. W. 339.

An indictment is not necessary to the commencement of a criminal prosecution which may be initiated by the filing of a complaint with a justice of the peace charging accused with the commission of a felony, the issuance of a warrant of arrest thereon, and the arrest of accused thereunder by a proper officer. Bashkins v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 725.

Principals, accessories and accomplices.—See notes under the following article.
See notes under P. C. arts. 74, 75, 77, 79, 81, 86.

Art. 448. [436] Misdemeanors presented by indictment, or, etc.
—All misdemeanors may be presented by either information or indictment. [O. C. 391.]

Cited, Etheridge v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 702.
Misdemeanors.—A misdemeanor may be prosecuted by information though punishable by imprisonment in the county jail. Reddick v. State, 4 App. 32.

Prosecutions in county courts may be commenced by information. Haines v. State, 7 App. 39.
One prosecuted for a misdemeanor in the county court cannot waive failure to file an information, that being a jurisdictional matter. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 784.

Art. 449. [437] All offenses must be presented by indictment or information.—All offenses, known to the penal law of this state, must be prosecuted, either by indictment or information. This provision does not include fines and penalties for contempt of court, nor special cases in which inferior courts exercise jurisdiction. [O. C. 392.]

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace and other inferior courts, see ante, arts. 106-109, and notes.
See notes to the preceding article and to article 483, post.

Prosecutions in county court for misdemeanors.—Prosecutions in the county court for misdemeanors must be by information. Spoonberg v. State, 60 App. 198, 131 S. W. 541; Garza v. State, 11 App. 410.
One prosecuted in county court for a misdemeanor cannot waive the filing of an information. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 784; id., 172 S. W. 786.
And see Etheridge v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 702.

Presentation of information in vacancation.—An information may be presented in vacation. State v. Corbit, 42 Tex. 88; Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 604.

Essentials of transcript on appeal.—See notes to art. 323, post.

Art. 450. [438] An "indictment" is what.—An indictment is the written statement of a grand jury accusing a person therein named of some act or omission which by law, is declared to be an offense. [O. C. 394.]

"Due course of law."—See ante, art. 3, and notes.

Meaning and requisites of indictment in general.—Following statutory words, see notes to art. 474, post. And see, also, specific offenses in Pen. Code.

At the adoption of our constitution, and for a century previously, both in England and America, the preceding article, expresses what was understood as constituting an indictment. The meaning of the word "indictment" requires a statement of the essential acts or omissions which constitute the offense with which the party is accused. All that is essential to constitute the offense must be explicitly charged and can not be aided by intendment. A statement of a legal result, a conclusion of law, will not be sufficient. The facts constituting the crime must be set forth, that the conclusion of law may be arrived at from the facts so stated. Hewitt v. State, 25 Tex. 722; State v. Wilburn, 25 Tex. 738; State v. Duke, 42 Tex. 455; Williams v. State, 12 App. 325; Rodriguez v. State, 12 App. 552; Brinster v. State, Id. 615; Huntsman v. State, Id. 619; Insall v. State, 14 App. 145; Reed v. State, Id. 662; Allen v. State, 13 App. 28; Gabrielsky v. State, Id. 458; Stringer v. State, Id. 529 (overruling Tompkins v. State, 33 Tex. 228); Parker v. State, 9 App. 357; Pierce v. State, 17 App. 222; Van Vickie v. State, 22 App. 635. 2 S. W. 642; Cothran v. State, 36 App. 196, 36 S. W. 273. A printed form, with the blanks properly filled in writing, is a "written statement." Winn v. State, 5 Tex. 621; Bush v. Republic, 1 Tex. 455; State v. Powell, 28 Tex. 656; White v. State, 3 App. 606; Prophit v. State, 12 App. 233; Young v. State, 12 App. 614; Flores v. State, 13 App. 327; Brown v. State, 13 App. 347; Strickland v. State, 19 App. 518; Jones v. State, 25 App. 621, 8 S. W. 891, 8 Am. St. Rep. 449; Brown v. State, 29 App. 640, 10 S. W. 112.

Joinder of parties.—Several offenders may sometimes be included in the same indictment, for different offenses of the same kind, the word "separately" being inserted, which would make it several as to each: but if any material inconvenience is apprehended by reason thereof, the court may quash on that ground. Lewellen v. State, 18 Tex. 538; Bennett v. State, 26 App. 671, 14 S. W. 396.

Principals, accomplices, and accessories.—See notes to Pen. Code, arts. 74, et seq.

Conspirators.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1437.

Trial of joint defendants.—See arts. 726-720.

Discharge of defendant where court has no jurisdiction or where facts charged do not constitute offense.—See arts. 731-733, post, and notes.

Legality of grand jury.—See articles 359, 403, 445, and 446, and notes thereunder.

Art. 451. [439] Requisites of an indictment.—An indictment shall be deemed sufficient if it has the following requisites:
1. It shall commence, "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas."

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1.

2. It must appear therefrom that the same was presented in the district court of the county where the grand jury is in session.

3. It must appear to be the act of a grand jury of the proper county.

4. It must contain the name of the accused, or state that his name is unknown, and, in case his name is unknown, give a reasonably accurate description of him.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 4.

5. It must show that the place where the offense was committed is within the jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is presented.

6. The time mentioned must be some date anterior to the presentment of the indictment, and not so remote that the prosecution of the offense is barred by limitation.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 6.

7. The offense must be set forth in plain and intelligible words.

8. The indictment must conclude, "Against the peace and dignity of the state."

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 7.
9. It shall be signed officially by the foreman of the grand jury.

[O. C. 395.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1, 4, 6-7a, 815, 817-821.

1. In general. 11. — Proof.
5. __ Suggestion of true name of accused. 15. — Spelling, handwriting and grammar.
6. __ Name of injured party. 16. — Omission of words.
7. Jurisdiction and venue. 17. — Conclusion.
8. __ New county. 18. — Signature.
9. __ Proof of venue.
10. Time and limitations.

1. In general.—An indictment for murder held to be substantially in the form prescribed by law. Zunago v. State, 63 App. 55, 135 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 665. An indictment, and each count thereof, must be tried by itself as a pleading, and can neither be supported nor defeated as such by the evidence at the trial. Rideout v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 727.

The caption need not give the term of the court. Hudson v. State, 40 Tex. 12. The indictment must commence "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas." These words are indispensable. Com. v. Matney, 1 App. 12. "By and with the authority of the state" was held insufficient. Saine v. State, 11 App. 144. A printed card at the head of a blank form of indictment is no part of the indictment, and does not vitiate such indictment. Winn v. State, 5 App. 621; West v. State, 6 App. 515. See, also, Owens v. State, 25 App. 553; 8 S. W. 655. A caption forms no part of and does not vitiate an indictment. English v. State, 4 Tex. 123; Winn v. State, 5 App. 621; Jefferson v. State, 24 App. 535, 7 S. W. 244.

A prosecution in the name of the government, and conducted by the proper law officers, held to be sufficient to establish the fact that it was carried on "in the name and by the authority of the state of Texas." Drummond v. R., 2 Tex. 156. Indictments and informations must commence "in the name and by the authority of the state of Texas." Post, art. 478; Saine v. State, 14 App. 144.

The commencement clause applies to every count in the indictment, and does not have to be repeated seriatim. West v. State, 27 App. 472, 11 S. W. 482; Dancey v. State, 35 App. 615, 34 S. W. 113, 338, and cases cited.

The constitution as published in Revised Statutes of 1895 (art. 5, § 12) showing the requirement as to the beginning of an indictment does not contain the word "the" before "authority," although Sayles' and Axtell's annotations do, to omit the word "the" in the indictment before authority is proper, and in accord with the constitutional requirement. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 564.

Though the Constitution and statutes require every indictment to begin, "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas," the insertion of the word "of" after the word "name" did not invalidate the indictment. Moss v. State, 60 App. 258, 131 S. W. 1088.

3. Presentation and act of grand jury.—An indictment which sets out the state and county in the caption, and then recites that "the grand jurors in and for the county and state aforesaid," etc., is sufficient. English v. State, 4 Tex. 136. So, also, is the recital, "the grand jurors for the state of Texas, duly sworn, etc., to inquire, etc., of all offenses committed within the county of C.," etc. Williams v. State, 30 Tex. 404; Davis v. State, 6 App. 133; Coker v. State, 7 App. 83; Scales v. State, Id. 361. But the following recital was held insufficient: "The grand jurors in and for the County of Freestone and State of Texas, duly elected, etc., in the district court of said Freestone county, Texas, etc., upon their oaths present, etc., because it did not show by direct affirmative allegation that they presented the indictment in the district court of Freestone, etc., or any other county. Thomas v. State, 19 App. 213. When the indictment upon its face shows that it was presented by a grand jury duly organized, and that such presentment was made in the proper court, it must be presumed that the presentment was made by a legal grand jury of the proper county, and this presumption must prevail until it is shown that in fact the indictment was not presented by a legal grand jury. DeOllas v. State, 20 App. 145. The requirement that the indictment must state the court in which it is presented, relates to form and not substance, and is among those cases in which it is held that the requirement is not available except upon exception to the indictment. It is not an objection which can be entertained on a motion in arrest of judgment. Niland v. State, 19 App. 106; Thomas v. State, 19 App. 213; Walker v. State, 7 App. 82; Hausck v. State, App. 257; Long v. State, Id. 468; Meaders v. State, 44 Tex. 576; State v. Hilton, 41 Tex. 555; Bosbhard v. State, 25 Tex. Supp. 207; Van Vickle v. State, 22 App. 625, 2 S. W. 612. But if exception be made to the indictment because of such defect, the exception should be entertained. Mathews v. State, 44 Tex. 376; Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213. For instances of a sufficient compliance with requisites 2 and 3, see Garling v. State, 2 App. 44; Harris v. State, 45 S. W. 485; DeOlles v. State, 4 App. 455. It is essential that the indictment should state that the grand jurors were sworn, or that the presentment was made upon their oaths or affirmations. It is sufficient if it appears from the indictment that it was the act of a grand jury of the proper county, see Obbiavio v. State, 17 App. 398. And that it was a grand jury of such grand jury. Van Vickle v. State, 22 App. 625, 2 S. W. 612. Matters of form in an indictment are amenable before both parties announce ready upon the merits, but not thereafter. Allegations as to the court and term at which the indictment is found and matters of form. Osborne v. State, 23 App. 431, 5 S. W. 251. See Murphey v. State, 29 App. 567, 16 S. W. 417.

Indictment held to show that it was presented in a court having jurisdiction. Hudson v. State, 49 Tex. 12.

Failure of indictment to allege its presentation in open court is a defect which must be availed of in litemine. It is not available in arrest of judgment. Jones v. State, 22 App. 110, 22 S. W. 149, and cases cited.

When a court has two or more district courts, it was not necessary that the indictment should have particularized either. Sargent v. State, 35 App. 325, 33 S. W. 364; Phillips v. State, 35 App. 489, 34 S. W. 272.

It is not necessary that it should state that it was presented at the same term the grand jury was organized. Wright v. State, 25 App. 367, 33 S. W. 973. But it should be so stated. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1105.

When the first count in an indictment alleges that it was presented in the district court it is not necessary to repeat the allegation in subsequent counts. Anson v. State, 39 App. 244, 44 S. W. 974.

Where there is but one count, the indictment need not, as to each and every minor allegation, allege that "the grand jurors do say." Campbell v. State, 43 App. 602, 68 S. W. 513.

An indictment recited that "the grand jurors for the county of Marion, state aforesaid, duly organized as such at the November term, A. D. 1910, of the district court for said county, upon their oaths in said court, presented," etc., when in fact the grand jury was organized and returned the indictment at the October term, 1910, begun October 31, 1910, and adjourned on November 1910. Held, that the indictment complied with these two requisites. Luster v. State, 63 App. 411, 141 S. W. 299, Ann. Cas. 1912 D, 1989.

An indictment alleging that it was found by the grand jury impaneled at the May term, A. D. 1910, instead of the May term, A. D. 1911, is not so defective as to be subject to motion to quash. Fagnani v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 542.

An indictment alleged that the grand jury presenting it was organized at the January term of 1912, and was marked "filed" in the district court, and that the records of the district court showed that it was returned in January, 1913, and that at that term by proper order transferred to the county court. Held, that the statement in the indictment and the file mark might be disregarded as surplusage, and hence, as the defects would have been subject to amendment if raised by motion to quash, a bill of exceptions, reciting an objection to the indictment on the ground that there was nothing to show that it had been found by any legal grand jury or duly transferred to the county court, must be overruled. Matthews v. State, 37 App. 371, 129 S. W. 1115.

4. Name of accused.—See article 456, post, and notes thereunder.

The indictment is not invalid because in one place the wrong surname was used. Smith v. State, 70 App. 68, 156 S. W. 615. The giving of a wrong name or a full name is a matter of form. Where it was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description was not shown to be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person to have committed the offense charged, the judgment was reversed. Cresci v. State (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 556. Christian name being unknown, indictment should so allege, award a fictitious name and reasonably describe the accused. State v. Vandeveer, 21 Tex. 335; Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519; Pancho v. State, 25 App. 492, 8 S. W. 476; but contra, see Wilcox v. State, 35 App. 631, 34 S. W. 656. It is only when the whole name is unknown that the indictment is required to give a reasonably accurate description of the defendant. Wilcox v. State, 35 App. 631, 34 S. W. 955. And further, as to christian name, see Wilcox v. State, 35 App. 631, 34 S. W. 958; Wilcox v. State, 31 Tex. 568. And see Wampler v. State, 28 App. 352, 33 S. W. 141; Alsup v. State, 35 App. 555, 38 S. W. 174; Mayo v. State, 7 App. 342; Spencer v. State, 21 App. 65, 29 S. W. 153. Initials of the christian name or names are sufficient. State v. Black, 31 Tex. 569. And see State v. Cambin, 32 Tex. 697. Middle initial letters are immaterial, and may be transposed or omitted, without affecting the validity of the indictment. State v. Manning, 14 Tex. 492; Delphino v. State, 11 App. 30; Sullivan v. State, 6 App. 318, 32 Am. Rep. 580; Dodd v. State, 2 App. 58; Dixon v. State, Id. 531. It is sufficient to state one of the initials of the christian name and the surname. McAfee v. State, 14 App. 668; Victor v. State, 15 App. 90. When a person is known by two or more names it is sufficient to state either name, and proof of the name stated in the indictment is all that is required. Williams v. State, 2 App. 386, 46 Am. 478. The christian name is first correctly stated, a mistake in repeating it will not vitiate the indictment. Musquez v. State, 41 Tex. 228; Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260; Mayo v. State, 31 App. 343; Oliver v. State, 21 App. 227. But see Kinney v. State, 31 App. 343. The omission of the name in one count cannot be supplied by reference to another count. Powell v. State, 42 App. 11, 57 S. W. 95. Misspelling the name is immaterial if the name be idem monas. Foster v. State, 1 App. 361; Williams v. State, 5 App. 228. When the person is as well known by the name stated in the indictment as by his true name, the variance between the allegation and the proof will not be material. Bird v. State, 18 Tex. 528; Bye v. State, 8 App. 192; Wells v. State, 4 App. 20; Bell v. State, 25 Tex. 574; Hart v. State, 38 Tex. 381; Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260. When the name of the accused is unknown to the grand jury that fact must be stated, and a reasonably accurate description of him must be given. Where the defendant was described as "one Victor, a Mexican, whose other name is to the grand jurors unknown," it was held to be not a compliance with the statute. Victor v. State, 15 App. 90, explaining Harris v. State, 2 App. 192, and State v. Vandeneen, 21 Tex. 235. See also McElroy v. State, 25 App. 402, 8 S. W. 476. Where the indictment described the defendant as "one Ben, whose other name than Ben is to the grand jurors unknown, and who is known and described as negro Ben, and who is a colored man" it was held sufficient. Ben v. State, 9 App. 107. If the defendant was not indicted by his true name, he may, upon suggesting that fact and his true name, have the error corrected, but if he does not make such suggestion, it will be taken that his name is truly set forth in the indictment, and he will not thereafter be allowed to deny the same by way of defense. Post, arts. 550-556; Negro Ben v. State, 9 App. 107; Pancho v. State, 25 App. 403, 8 S. W. 476; Dugger v. State, 27 App. 95, 10 S. W. 765; Miltonree v. State, 30 App. 151, 16 S. W. 764; Young v. State, 30 App. 308, 17 S. W. 413; English v. State, 30 App. 470, 18 S. W. 94; Boren v. State, 32 App. 627, 25 S. W. 776; Bussert v. State, 4 App. 41.

Where the information named accused as "one Bird," a mulatto about six feet high, a conviction of "Byrd Johnson," whose name was not suggested as his real name, was not shown to be the same person. Bird v. State, 63 App. 457, 140 S. W. 337. That an information and complaint designated defendant as "one E., commonly known as Slim E.,” was not ground for quashing under a motion alleging that no diligence was alleged or used to determine defendant’s true name, where the record did not show that he had another name. Edmanson v. State, 61 App. 413, 142 S. W. 585. Where the original indictment had the name wrong, but the copy served on the defendant contained the correction, he could not complain that it was not a true copy. Ford v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 262.

5. Suggestion of true name of accused.—See arts. 559-556, 567, post, and notes.

6. Name of injured party.—See notes to arts. 456, 457, post.

7. Jurisdiction and venue.—See article 455, post.

As to proper venue, see arts. 251-258.

It must appear from the indictment that the place where the offense was committed is within the jurisdiction of the court in which it is presented. Robins v. State, 9 App. 666; Lascher v. State, 17 S. W. 285, 26 App. 923; Collins v. State, 6 App. 647. An omission to lay a venue to the offense is a fatal defect, which may be taken advantage of by motion to quash, or in arrest of judgment. It is a defect of substance which is not amenable. Robins v. State, 9 App. 666; Collins v. State, 6 App. 647; Searcy v. State, 4 App. 647; Stevins v. Warren, 14 Tex. 406. Venue is sufficiently alleged by naming the county in which the offense was committed. State v. Odum, 11 Tex. 12. Without adding "in the State of Texas,” etc. State v. Jordan, 12 Tex. 260; Satterwhite v. State, 6 App. 699.

In alleging locus, indictment may use the word "in" for "at." Blackwell v. State, 30 App. 416, 17 S. W. 1961; Augustine v. State, 20 Tex. 450. But see Pederson v. State, 21 App. 485, 1 S. W. 521. It is sufficient to state the county without identifying the particular locality in the county. State v. Odum, 11 Tex. 12; Corley v. State, 3 App. 412. And see Rarson v. State, 57 App. 10, 121 S. W. 512. Where the indictment improperly alleges the rental of the house in the county of prosecution but fails to allege that the house rented is in said county it is fatally defective in not showing venue. Mohan v. State, 42 App. 416, 60 S. W. 552.

In the indictment alleges that the parties unlawfully assembled in the county with the intent to aid each other in the commission of an offense, it sufficiently alleges the venue. Follis v. State, 37 App. 533, 40 S. W. 277.

If the first count alleges venue, it is good as to all subsequent counts. Morgan v. State, 31 App. 1, 18 S. W. 647.

Where the indictment alleges the date of the offense, and the venue, it is sufficient to refer thereafter to the time and place by using the words “then and there.” De Los Santos v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 919; Fierce v. State, 12 Tex. 249. See also State v. Mandujano (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 313; Jones v. State, 72 App. 496, 162 S. W. 1142. And see Baker v. State, 25 App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427. It is not essential to reiterate “then and there.” Harris v. State, 2 App. 192. The use of “and” instead of “then and there” has been held sufficient. Smith v. State, 36 App. 442, 37 S. W. 745.

8. New county.—See notes to art. 455, post.

9. Proof of venue.—See art. 257, ante, and notes.
10. Time and limitations.—See note under article 465, post. The date of the commission of the offense must be distinctly alleged, and it must be a certain date. State v. Randile, 41 Tex. 291; State v. Shick, 30 Tex. 554; State v. Johnson, 32 Tex. 96; State v. Eubanks, 41 Tex. 291; Thomas v. State, 42 App. 287, 59 S. W. 883, 56 Am. St. Rep. 601; Coleman v. State, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 86 S. W. 507; Meader v. State (Cr. App.) 34 Tex. Civ. App. 767; Meader v. State about a specific date is a sufficient allegation of the time. State v. McMichael, 34 Tex. 676; State v. Elliott, Id. 148; State v. Hill, 35 Tex. 314; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 118; Keith v. State, 38 App. 678, 41 S. W. 947; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1082. And "one day before" the 31st day of July is not fatally defective. Presley v. State, 60 App. 102, 131 S. W. 232. Where the name of the month was so written as to read either "February" or "February" it was held sufficient. Witten v. State, App. 76. This is a case where the two letters of the word "February" were presented to Wharton v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1082. Where the date was alleged as "nineteen hundred and nine seven" instead of ninety-seven it was held defective. Mundellino v. State (Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 235. But where the indictment showed plainly that it was intended to charge that the offense was committed in the year "one thousand nine hundred and ten," it was sufficient, though the word "ten" might also be read "ten." Rogers v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 556. Charging the offense to have been committed on February 29, an impossible date, is a fatal defect. McGilvey v. State, 60 App. 566, 132 S. W. 723. The time alleged was not prior to the presentment of the indictment. Williams v. State, 12 App. 225; Collins v. State, 5 App. 37; Nelson v. State, 1 App. 566; Goddard v. State, 14 App. 566; Clement v. State, 22 App. 25, 2 S. W. 379; Lucas v. State, 27 App. 232, 28 App. 124; 12 S. W. 1082; State v. State, 1 App. 198, 12 S. W. 599; Crass v. State, 30 App. 459, 17 S. W. 1096; York v. State, 2 App. 15; Hite v. State, 3 App. 149. And see Williams v. State, 17 App. 521; Womack v. State, 31 App. 429, 19 S. W. 605. If the time alleged was the same day on which the indictment is presented it must charge that the offense was committed before the indictment was presented. Joel v. State, 28 Tex. 612; Williams v. State, 12 App. 226; Kennedy v. State, 22 App. 287, 3 S. W. 490, and cases cited. Davis v. State, 31, 185, which alleged the offense to have been committed "herefore on the 21st day of August, 1853" was held sufficient, the word "herefore" showing that the offense was committed anterior to the presentment. Wilson v. State, 15 App. 160. If the date of the commission of the offense is alleged, he date subsequent to the presentment of the indictment, it is a fatal defect, although it is apparent that the error is a clerical one. Robles v. State, 5 App. 346; Goddard v. State, 14 App. 566; Donaldson v. State, 15 App. 35; Lee v. State, 22 App. 247, 3 S. W. 83; Hull v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 996. And see App. 117, 38 S. W. 994; Brown v. State, 37 App. 117; But see that accused on or about December 1, 1909, made two different sales of intoxicating liquor to a person named, and on or about said date made other sales of intoxicating liquor to the law to persons unknown, and did in such county, during the month of August, September, October, November, and December, 1909, and January, 1910, anterior to the presentment of the indictment, make more than at least two sales, sufficiently alleged that as many as two sales were made within three years from the date of the indictment, without expressly stating that they were made within some time, Millit v. State, 59 App. 226, 125 S. W. 125. Where it is an offense to do an act between two specified dates, it is sufficient to allege any date between said specified dates. State v. White, 41 Tex. 64. Charging different dates in different chatmandat v. State, 24 App. 69, 25 S. W. 160. And see Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44. The time alleged must not be so remote as to show that the offense is barred by limitation. Collins v. State, 5 App. 37; Brewer v. State, Id. 248; Shoefacter v. State, Id. 149; O'Connell v. State, Id. 149; O'Steen v. State, 41 Tex. 291. And see Mitten v. State, 24 App. 346, 6 S. W. 186; Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967. Where the indictment states the date the offense and the venue in a certain county it is sufficient to refer thereafter in the indictment by using the words "and place where. Davis v. State, 153 S. W. 1853; Santos v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 393. But it is not necessary to reiterate "then and there" to venue of all allegation of time and place. Harris v. State, 2 App. 102. And see Baker v. State, 25 App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427. The use of "and" instead of "then and there" held sufficient. Smith v. State, 56 Tex. 443, 37 S. W. 743. Where an indictment charging misapplication of funds omitted the clause "then and there" and the word "did" but charged "the said A. B. did", the allegation of time and venue was sufficient. Butler v. State, 46 App. 387, 51 S. W. 141. The allegation of the time of the commission of the offense is matter of substance and is not amendable. Drummond v. State, 4 App. 180, overruling State v. Elliott, 54 Tex. 145. Sec, also, Sanders v. State, 36 Tex. 119; State v. 26 Tex. 326; Goddard v. State, 37 App. 291, 4 S. W. 890. An indictment charging the commission of a statutory offense subsequent to the passage of the statute need not contain the allegation that the offense was committed subsequent to the passage of the statute, and the indictment is thereby barred. Byrd v. State, (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1063. An indictment presented on October 10, 1914, averring that the offense was committed herefore on the 30th day of September, 1914, is sufficient. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345. 11. — Proof.—The time when the offense was committed must be proved, but the date need not be the exact date alleged in the indictment. It is required that the time of the commission of the offense be proved, and that the time proved be some date anterior to the presentment of the indictment, and not so remote as to show that a prosecution for the offense was barred by limitation. Tapp v. State, 15 App. 304, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 207; Brewer v. State, 5 App. 248; Stiched v. State, 25 App. 420, 8 S. W. 477, 8 Am. St. Rep. 106
12. Statement of offense.—See notes under article 450, ante, and specific offenses in Pen. Code. Pursuing language of statute, see notes under article 474, post.

It must be alleged in plain and intelligible words that the accused did the things which constitute the offense. Moore v. State, 7 App. 42; State v. Mesohac, 30 Tex. 815; Elion v. State, 32 Tex. 674; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 146; Greenlee v. State, 4 App. 345. That “the offense must be set forth in plain and intelligible words” means more than that the defendant must be charged in general terms with the commission of some crime. The indictment must particularize the act or omission complained of, so that its identity cannot be mistaken. Alexander v. State, 29 Tex. 495. See, also, as to this requisite, State v. Baggy, 21 Tex. 757; Dawson v. State, 33 Tex. 431; Mosely v. State, 15 App. 311; Brown v. State, 26 App. 540, 19 S. 112; Bennett v. State, 26 App. 671, 14 S. W. 276; Williamson v. State, 27 App. 238, 11 S. W. 114; Abrigo v. State, 29 App. 143, 15 S. W. 408; Kinley v. State, 29 App. 532, 16 S. W. 339; Wofford v. State, 29 App. 536, 16 S. W. 555; Bean v. State, 25 App. 348, 8 S. W. 278; Lagrone v. State, 12 App. 426, and cases cited. And see State v. Swartz, 25 Tex. 764; Sharpe v. State, 17 App. 511.

The use of the dollar mark in expressing the value of property is sufficient. Earl v. State, 33 App. 470, 28 S. W. 469.

13. Setting out written instruments.—As a general rule, whenever an instrument in writing enters into an offense as a part or basis thereof, or when its proper construction is material, the instrument should be set out in haec verba in the indictment. White v. State, 3 App. 605; Baker v. State, 14 App. 332; Coulson v. State, 16 App. 159; Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213; Dwyer v. State, 24 App. 202, 5 S. W. 662; Tynes v. State, 17 App. 123.

In words and figures, following, to wit,” or “in tenor as follows, to wit,” indicating that the writing is set out in haec verba, and not merely in substance. Baker v. State, 14 App. 332. An allegation that the writing is “in substance and effect as follows, to wit:” does not imply tenor, but implies merely that the writing is substantially set forth. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213; Coulson v. State, 16 App. 159.

It is not necessary that there be immovable averments to explain a matter that is evidently plain. Routneree v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 106.

14. Duplicity.—See notes to article 481, post.

15. Spelling, handwriting and grammar.—See notes to art. 476, post.

16. Omission of words.—See notes to art. 476, post.

17. Conclusion.—It is indispensable that the indictment conclude “against the peace and dignity of the state.” Const. art. 5, sec. 12; State v. Durst, 7 Tex. 74.; State v. Arndt, 26 Tex. 310, 2 App. 59, 10 S. W. 599, and cases cited; Alviso v. State, 29 App. 142, 15 S. W. 408; Crass v. State, 30 App. 458, 17 S. W. 1096; Stewart v. State, 21 App. 155, 19 S. W. 908; Shumman v. State, 24 App. 68, 29 S. W. 160; Young v. State (Cr. App.) 40 Tex. 767; Moore v. State, 48 App. 394, 8 S. W. 229; Brown v. State (Cr.) 148 S. W. 806; Ibey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 643; Collins v. State (Cr.) 178 S. W. 345. If the proof shows that the offense was committed at a date subsequent to the presentment of the indictment, it is fatal to a conviction. Kincaid v. State, 3 App. 398; McCoy v. State, 43 Tex. 214; Dovalina v. State, 14 App. 324; Clement v. State, 22 App. 23, 2 S. W. 379.

Under a complaint and information filed June 14, 1912, charging the commission of an offense on June 13th, accused could not be convicted for a violation of the local option law committed June 15, 1912. Cowan v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

Under an indictment charging the commission of murder on or about March 30th, proof that the crime was committed on March 29th would present no variance. James v. State, 72 App. 457, 163 S. W. 61.

One charged with committing an offense on or about a date named may be convicted by proving an offense committed at any time within the period of limitations fixed for the crime charged, unless it is claimed that the time fixed by the evidence was so different from that charged as to be a ground of surprise so as to entitle him to a postponement to procure evidence to meet the charge made by the evidence. Lingenfelter v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 891.

A defendant charged with the commission of the offense on or about March 19th, and the evidence showed that the killing took place on March 28th, presented no material variance. Herrera v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 719.
State, 35 App. 615, 34 S. W. 113, 593. If the indictment concludes "against the peace and dignity of the state," no words which do not form a part of it, will vitiate the indictment. Rowlett v. State, 28 App. 191, 4 S. W. 552. The addition of the word "Texas" after the word "state," in the conclusion, was held not to vitiate the indictment. State v. Pratt, 44 Tex. 53. So the words "the true bill" indorsed on the margin of the indictment did not vitiate it. Thomas v. State, 8 App. 344. So the words "a true bill" following the conclusion, but forming no part of it, were held to not vitiate the indictment. Rowlett v. State, 27 App. 191, 14 S. W. 582. But an omission of the word "the" before the word "state" should not be a substantial defect and fatal to the sufficiency of the indictment. Thompson v. State, 15 App. 29, Id., 15 App. 168. Mere misspelling of a word, as "against," will not vitiate. Hudson v. State, 10 App. 215.

But an indictment concluding "a'inst" the peace and dignity of the State is fatally defective. Bird v. State, 37 App. 405, 35 S. W. 352.

The character "&" may be used for "and." Miltón v. State, 29 App. 527, 16 S. W. 423.

18. Signature.—See notes under article 444, ante. This requisite should be complied with, but a failure to do so will not render the indictment invalid. Post, art. 576; Jones v. State, 10 App. 552; Weaver v. State, 31 App. 843; State v. Pinson, 23 Tex. 579; Hannah v. State, 1 App. 578; Campbell v. State, 8 App. 84; State v. Flores, 33 Tex. 444; Basham v. State, 38 Tex. 622; Robinson v. State, 24 App. 2, 5 S. W. 599; State v. Powell, 24 Tex. 135; Witherspoon v. State, 39 App. 65, 44 S. W. 106; Day v. State, 61 App. 114, 134 S. W. 215.

Art. 452. [440] What should be stated in an indictment, etc.—Everything should be stated in an indictment which it is necessary to prove, but that which is not necessary to prove need not be stated. [O. C. 396.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 7a.

Proof.—The averments must be as specific as the language of the statute on which the indictment is founded, and the proof must correspond with the averments. Banks v. State, 24 Tex. 644.

When an offense is charged to have been committed in one way, it is error to authorize, over accused's objection, conviction, if the evidence shows that he violated the statutes in some other way not charged. Novy v. State, 62 App. 492, 138 S. W. 139, and cases cited.

Surplusage and redundancy.—See notes under article 476, post.

Art. 453. [441] The certainty required.—The certainty required in an indictment is such as will enable the accused to plead the judgment that may be given upon it, in bar of any prosecution for the same offense. [O. C. 398.]

4. Assault to commit other offense. 9. Sending anonymous letter.
5. Incest. 10. Violation of liquor law.

It is well settled that if, eliminating surplusage, the constituents of the offense are so averred as to apprise the defendant of the charge against him, and enable 198

The rule as to certainty does not require that the offense shall be set out with such minuteness of detail as to entirely supersede proof of identity on another prosecution for the same offense. Horan v. State, 24 Tex. 161; Phillips v. State, 23 Tex. 226; Alvbeth v. State, 8 App. 312; Cochran v. State, 26 Tex. 678. And see Hamilton v. State, 26 App. 206, 9 S. W. 687.

An indictment is sufficiently certain if all the ingredients of the offense be as amply set out as it is necessary to prove them. Facts and incidents which do not constitute a necessary part of the offense need not be stated for the purpose of distinguishing it, but they may be proved by the defendant, so as to fix its identity, and thereby protect himself from a second prosecution. Horan v. State, 24 Tex. 161.

The common law rule, which requires in indictments "certainty to a certain extent in every particular," does not obtain under our Code. State v. Miller, 34 Tex. 535.

It is not material that an indictment does not conform to precedents, if it is otherwise sufficient. Williams v. State, 2 App. 271; Harris v. State, Id. 162.

An indictment is sufficient as to certainty if it gives the defendant notice as to the particular offense charged against him. Earl and Garrett v. State, 33 App. 570, 28 S. W. 469.

The accused can not complain that the offense is described with unnecessary minuteness. Lockhart v. State, 10 Tex. 275.

It is only a matter which is merely useless never vitiates. State v. Elliott, 14 Tex. 426; Smith v. State, 7 App. 382; Robinson v. State, 60 App. 592, 132 S. W. 944.

Under the rule that a descriptive averment must be proved though unnecessary, an averment that the victim of a swindle was a private corporation duly incorporated under the national banking laws must be proved. Tucker v. State, 59 App. 291, 128 S. W. 617.

Under article 451, subdivision 4, and article 456, requiring indictments to contain accused's name, or state that it is unknown, and give a reasonably accurate description of him, article 523, providing that, unless accused suggests, when arraigned, that he is not indicted by his true name, it shall be taken as truly set forth, articles 560, 561, and 562, providing for the correction of the indictment upon such a suggestion, and that, if accused refuses to say what his real name is, the cause shall proceed, article 469, making indictments sufficient which charge the offense so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant, give accused notice of the particular offense charged, and enable the court to pronounce the proper judgment, article 476, providing that the proceedings shall not be affected by any defect of form in an indictment which does not prejudice accused's substantial rights, and article 453 as to certainty required in an indictment, the giving of a wrong name or the failure to give accused's full name is a matter of form only, and, where he was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description was not shown to be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person alleged to have committed the offense charged, the judgment will not be reversed. Crescencio v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 565.

3. Offense composed of different constituents.—If the offense be composed of different constituents, each constituent being itself an offense, the particular constituents relied on must be specifically and accurately averred. State v. Williams, 14 Tex. 38; State v. Wupperman, 13 Tex. 33; Kennedy v. State, 9 App. 460; Terry v. State, 12 App. 506; State v. Meschac, 40 Tex. 618; Alexander v. State, 29 Tex. 495; Huntsman v. State, 12 App. 619.
4. Assault to commit other offense.—See Pen. Code, art. 1832, and notes.

Under this article, an indictment alleging that accused fraudulently represented that he owned cattle, and thereby fraudulently induced prosecutor to pay him a specified sum for the cattle, when in truth accused did not own the cattle, and did know the cattle were not his, and knew them, and knew he did not own them, is insufficient to charge swindling as against the objection that it does not allege any sale or delivery of the cattle to prosecutor. King v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 543.

7. Embezzlement of public money.—Indictment held sufficient, notwithstanding the use of the word "secret" instead of "secrete." Ferrill v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 901.

8. Perjury.—An indictment for perjury which alleges that it was a material inquiry before a grand jury whether accused unlawfully delivered to an infant intoxicating liquor, that accused did not own the infant, and that he had not signed his name to express books and received a signed consignment to him, and had not delivered the same to the infant, that the grand juryurgering to ascertain whether accused delivered intoxicating liquor to the infant, and that accused did not own the infant, that accused knew that he had not signed his name to express books, and that he had received liquor and had delivered the same to the infant, sufficiently charges the offense. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 866.

9. Sending anonymous letter.—A complaint and information for sending an anonymous letter reflecting upon a person's integrity, chastity, etc., need not contain the letter. Bradfield v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 734.

10. Violation of liquor law.—Under this article an indictment alleging that accused, unlawfully purused the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor, and on a given date made a sale to one man and on a different date a sale to another man, and that during the months of June, July, August, September, October, November, and December, 1910, and January, February, March, and April, 1911, all anterior to the filing of the indictment, made sales to persons to the grand jury unknown, is not defective for not alleging that during all the time accused continued to pursue the business. Byrd v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1968.

Art. 454. [442] Particular intent; intent to defraud.—Where a particular intent is a material fact in the description of the offense, it must be stated in the indictment; but, in any case where an intent to defraud is required to constitute an offense, it shall be sufficient to allege an intent to defraud, without naming therein the particular person intended to be defrauded. [O. C. 399.]

1. Alleging and proving intent in general.
8. Assault. 9. Assault to commit other offense. 10. Assault with intent to maim. 11. Assault with intent to murder. 12. Assault with intent to commit rape. 13. Assault with intent to rob. 14. Testimony as to intent.

1. Alleging and proving intent in general.—Where, to constitute an act a crime, it is essential that an evil intent should accompany it, the intent must be alleged. State v. West, 10 Tex. 553; State v. Johnston, 11 Tex. 22; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 357; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 146; Reeves v. State, 7 App. 276. It is not essential, however, in charging the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor, to allege an intent to injure. P. C. 1908. Nor is an allegation of intent necessary where the act alleged to have been done is in violation of law. State v. West, 19 Tex. 553; State v. Allen, 10 Tex. 59; Milstead v. State, 19 App. 490. But where a particular intent is a material fact in the description of the offense, such particular intent must be specifically alleged. Morris v. State, 13 App. 65; Woolsey v. State, 14 App. 57; Marshal v. State, 31 Tex. 471; Reeves v. State, 7 App. 276; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 146; Bartlett v. State, 21 App. 509, 2 S. W. 532; Black v. State, 18 App. 124.

And the intent must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Reagan v. State, 28 Am. St. Rep. 535. And further burden of proof and reasonable doubt, see notes to art. 785, post.

2. "Malice aforethought."—Statutory terms essential to the definition of the offense, such, for instance, as "malice aforethought," must be used in the indictment. Pen. Code, art. 1110, and notes; Cravely v. State, 36 Am. Rep. 785, 22 S. W. 669, 61 Am. St. Rep. 885, and cases cited.

Indictment for theft must charge intent to deprive owner of the value of the property. Peralto v. State, 17 App. 575. But this and the other elements of theft need not be alleged in an indictment for receiving stolen property. Bishops v. State, 22 App. 447, 2 S. W. 727, and cases cited. See, also, notes to Pen. Code, art. 1349.

8. Assault.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1008.

9. Assault to commit other offense.—See notes to art. 453, ante.

10. Assault with intent to maim.—See note to Pen. Code, art. 1025.

11. Assault with intent to murder.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1026.

12. Assault with intent to commit rape.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1029.

13. Assault with intent to rob.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1030.

14. Testimony as to intent.—See notes under article 783, post.

Art. 455. [443] Allegation of venue, etc.—When, by law, the offense may be prosecuted in either of two or more counties, the indictment may allege the offense to have been committed in the county where the same is prosecuted, or in any county or place where the offense was actually committed. [O. C. 400.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 7a; ante, art. 451, subd. 5, and notes; ante, arts. 234-355, and notes; Harrington v. State, 31 App. 577, 21 S. W. 356; Elyar v. State, 37 App. 257, 39 S. W. 665.

Offense tried in another county but in same district.—An indictment for a crime which is tried in a county other than that in which the offense was committed, but in the same judicial district, as permitted by statute, should charge the commission of the offense in the county where it actually occurred, not in the county where the offender is to be tried. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 706.

Offense in new county before creation thereof.—Where the territory within which the offense was committed has subsequently been created into a new county, the venue should be laid in the old county, although the prosecution is instituted in the new county. Nelson v. State, 1 App. 41. And see Weller v. State, 18 App. 498; Hernandez v. State, 19 App. 408.

Where an offense is committed in an unorganized county, attached to an organized county for judicial purposes, the venue must be laid in the unorganized county, alleging that said county was attached for judicial purposes to the county of the prosecution. Miles v. State, 23 App. 410, 5 S. W. 259; Chivarrio v. State, 15 App. 339.

Playing at game of cards.—See note to Pen. Code, art. 648.

Art. 456. [444] Allegation of name.—In alleging the name of the defendant, or of any other person necessary to be stated in the indictment, it shall be sufficient to state one or more of the initials of the Christian name and the surname. When a person is known by two or more names, it shall be sufficient to state either name. When the name of the person is unknown to the grand jury, that fact shall be stated, and, if it be the person accused of the offense, 201 a reasonably accurate description of him shall be given in the indictment.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 3-5, 7a; ante, art. 451, note to requisite 4.

1. In general.—The true rule is, if the names can be sounded alike, without doing violence to the power of the letters found in the variant orthography, the variance is immaterial. Foster v. State, 1 App. 551; Goode v. State, 2 App. 550; Williams v. State, 5 App. 236; Henry v. State, 7 App. 388; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Milontree v. State, 50 App. 151, 16 S. W. 764, and cases cited. And see, also, Smith v. State, 52 App. 944, 196 S. W. 1161, 16 Ann. Cas. 357.

Where the indictment contains a wrong name but it can be regarded as surplusage, the indictment is not bad on this account. Bolton v. State, 41 App. 642, 67 S. W. 813.

The giving of a wrong name or the failure to give accused's full name is a matter of form only, and, where he was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description was not shown to be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person alleged to have committed the offense charged, the judgment will not be reversed. Cresencio v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 926.

2. Abbreviations and derivations of names.—Where two names have the same derivation or when one is an abbreviation or corruption of the other, but both are commonly used as the same, they will be considered the same. Goode v. State, 2 App. 550. See, also, Alsup v. State, 36 App. 535, 38 S. W. 174; Cerda v. State, 33 App. 458, 26 S. W. 992; Young v. State, 30 App. 598, 17 S. W. 413.

Where a person is known by two or more names it is sufficient to state either in the indictment. Where a wife is sometimes called by her husband's name, she is known by that name and it is not necessary that she be commonly known by that name. Stokes v. State, 46 App. 357, 81 S. W. 1213.

5. When name is unknown.—Burden of proof, see notes under article 755, post. If the name be alleged as unknown, it devolves upon the state to prove the fact, and the grand jury by the use of reasonable diligence and care have ascertained the name. If it could have been ascertained the variance is fatal. Brewer v. State, 18 App. 456; Williamson v. State, 13 App. 514; Jorasco v. State, 6 App. 238; Cock v. State, 8 App. 658; Rothchild v. State, 7 App. 519; Presley v. State, 24 App. 494, 6 S. W. 540; Atkinson v. State, 19 App. 462; Langham v. State, 36 App. 533, 10 S. W. 113; Kimbrough v. State, 28 App. 367, 13 S. W. 218; Sharp v. State, 29 App. 211, 15 S. W. 176; Swink v. State, 22 App. 550, 24 S. W. 893; Logan v. State, 36 App. 1, 34 S. W. 925; Shackley v. State, 38 App. 458, 42 S. W. 972. And see Smith v. State, 26 App. 577, 19 S. W. 218; Alexander v. State, 57 App. 84, 10 S. W. 764; Armstrong v. State, 27 App. 462, 11 S. W. 462; Puryear v. State, 28 App. 73, 11 S. W. 929.

When the name of the injured person is unknown, it is sufficient to aver that fact. State v. Snow, 41 Tex. 596; Ranch v. State, 5 App. 362; State v. Elmore, 44 Tex. 102; Rutherford v. State, 13 App. 92.

"One Chino, whose other name is to the grand jurors unknown," was held to be sufficient as to the name of the deceased. De Ollas v. State, 29 App. 145. But "one Victor, a Mexican whose other name is to grand jurors unknown" held insufficient description of accused. Victor v. State, 15 App. 96.

Where the surname is set out with the statement that the given name is unknown, a description is not required. Wilcox v. State, 55 App. 653, 54 S. W. 955, citing Negro Ben v. State, 9 App. 107.

Nor where one is charged as an accomplice to a murder by unknown persons. Dugger v. State, 27 App. 35, 16 S. W. 763.

One allegation that accused unlawfully killed the infant child of a person named, the name of which child was unknown to the grand jurors, sufficiently alleged the name of the person killed. Gossett v. State, 57 App. 43, 123 S. W. 428. See, also, Puryear v. State, 28 App. 73, 11 S. W. 929.

It is sufficient to indict one by his surname with the allegation that his given name is unknown. Harris v. State, 2 App. 102.
Information, to be sufficient to charge an offense under the laws of this state, must be in the words of the accused, or must state that his name is unknown, and give a reasonably accurate description of him. Another rule is that in "alleging the name of the defendant, or of any other person necessary to be stated in an indictment or information, it shall be sufficient to state one or more of the initials of the name, and the surname." The information in this case pleads "one Pancho," and is insufficient. Pancho v. State, 25 App. 402, § 8, W. 476.

An indictment for homicide must in general state the name of the injured party, if known, and, if not known, must allege the fact, and give as clear a description of the party injured as the facts before the grand jury will permit. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 355, 131 S. W. 1055.

But in a prosecution for violation of the local option law, a complaint which merely charges that accused made sales to an unknown person is not sufficient.

Ex parte Campbell (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 192.

An allegation in a homicide case that defendant was a "certain Mexican man" was held by the Court of Criminal Appeals that "John," after stating that his name was unknown, was immaterial. Bradford v. State, 72 App. 76, 109 S. W. 1185.

6. Names held to be the same or idem sonans.—The following names have been held to be the same: "Kniteal" and "Knittles," the mere misplacement of the accent over the letter "I," in the first not being material; the letters composing the name being plainly and distinctly written. Hennessey v. State, 23 App. 346, § 5, S. W. 215. "Ichman" and "Eichman." Eichman v. State, 22 App. 137, 2 S. W. 583. "J. W. Watts" and "J. H. Watts." Dixon v. State, 2 App. 530.

8. Name of injured person in general.—When name is unknown, see note, ante. The injured party's given name may be stated by initial letters, and a middle letter is immaterial. State v. Black, 31 Tex. 560; Stockton v. State, 25 Tex. 772. Certainty to a common intent, as to the party injured, is all that is required. If he be known by one name as well as another, it may be described by either. Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260; Bell v. State, 25 Tex. 574; Hart v. State, 38 Tex. 332; Wells v. State, 4 App. 20; Bird v. State, 16 App. 528; Rye v. State, 8 App. 163; Rutherford v. State, 13 App. 92; Eleush v. State, 25 App. 399, 34 S. W. 925; Johnson v. State, 60 App. 305, 131 S. W. 1056.

The name alleged should be the name which the injured party was known by at the time of the injury. Rutherford v. State, 13 App. 92; Williams v. State, 13 App. 285, 46 Am. Rep. 237. But proof of surname only is insufficient. Stewart v. State, 31 App. 153, 19 S. W. 995.

9. Corporation.—Article 456 refers to individuals and does not embrace corporations. As to corporations and allegations in reference thereto, our code of procedure is silent, and we must look to the common law under direction of article 36 of this Code. An indictment for theft from a corporation must not only describe the corporation by its correct name, but must also allege that it is a corporation, after which it should allege that the property was taken from the possession of the party, naming him, who was holding the same for the corporation, without his or her holder's consent. White v. State, 24 App. 251, 3 S. W. 857; 3 Am. St. Rep. 875, disapproving Price v. State, 41 Tex. 215; Stallings v. State, 29 App. 220, 15 S. W. 716; Thurmond v. State, 30 App. 539, 17 S. W. 1095; Smith v. State, 34 App. 265, 30 S. W. 226. And see Griffin v. State, 4 App. 390; Faulk v. State, 33 App. 77, 41 S. W. 616; Carder v. State, 34 App. 166, 31 S. W. 618; Millsaps v. State, 38 App. 570, 43 S. W. 1015.

The indictment need not allege the charter or act of incorporation, or the state or foreign power under whose laws the company was incorporated. Smith v. State, 34 App. 265, 30 S. W. 226.

10. Name of married woman.—Married woman being the injured party, she should be described by her Christian name and not as "Mrs." so-and-so. Bell v. State, 25 Tex. 571; Beaumont v. Dallas, 24 App. 68, 29 S. W. 157. Where the injury is the property of the plaintiff to allege. Rutherford v. State, 13 App. 92; Cain v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 147.

Where an indictment alleged that accused forged the name of "Mrs. J. N. Griggs" to a check, and the proof showed that her name was Eliza A. Griggs, but that she was married and generally went by the name of Mrs. J. N. Griggs, there was no fatal variance. Shores v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 776.

11. Assault in general.—When name is unknown, see note, ante. The name of the injured party must be proved as laid; but if there is a seeming variance, his identity should be passed upon by the jury, under appropriate instructions. In such a case the state is not required to prove that he was exclusively or as familiarly known by the name alleged as by any other, but only that he was as certainly known by that name to friends and neighbors. Bell v. State, 25 Tex. 574.

The middle initial name of the assaulted party is immaterial, and in case of a mistake therein, it is only necessary that it be shown that the person named in the indictment, and the person assaulted, are identical. Stockton v. State, 35 Tex. 772.

The name of the assaulted female must be alleged, or it must be alleged that her name is unknown. To describe her as the wife of some named person is not sufficient. Ranch v. State, 6 App. 252.

There was a fatal variance where the indictment charged assault to murder upon Edward Oscar Williams, while the evidence showed that the assault was upon Oscar Williams. Luttrell v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 623. An indictment alleged that defendant did then and there unlawfully commit an aggravated assault and battery in and upon Ed Smith, and did then and there beat, bruise, and wound Ed Smith with some hard instrument, the name of which was to the grand jurors unknown, and did then and there, thereby and therewith, inflict serious bodily injury upon the said Ed Smith, etc. Held, that the indictment was not defective for failure to sufficiently designate the person on whom the offense was committed, in that the word "said" was not contained in the clause alleging that the assault and battery was committed in and upon (said) Ed Smith. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 774.

12. Rape.—Variance between an indictment for rape on a female under the age of consent, alleging that her name was "Velma Coalson," and the evidence that soon after the date of the alleged offense prosecutrix married a brother-in-law of accused, and that her name then became the name of her husband, was not fatal, where the identity of prosecutrix was proved, and where the evidence showed that her name at the time of the alleged offense was "Velma Coalson." Cain v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 147.

14. Homicide.—When name is unknown, see note, ante. Variance between the name of the party killed as stated in the indictment and that proved on the trial is fatal to conviction. Henry v. State, 7 App. 385; Clark v. State, 29 App. 257, 18 S. W. 187; Milontree v. State, 30 App. 151, 16 S. W. 764; Anderman v. State, 69 App. 314, 131 S. W. 1124.

There is no variance if the indictment charges the murder of "Reed," and the proof shows his true name was "Roder," if it further shows he was known 204.
and called by the former name. Hunter v. State, 8 App. 75. See, also, Henry v. State, 7 App. 134.

If nor indictment alleges the Christian name of deceased to be Robert, and the proof shows he was commonly called Bob. Alsup v. State, 36 App. 635, 28 S. W. 174.

As to allegation of the deceased, see Williams v. State, 3 App. 103; Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519; Cook v. State, 8 App. 639. That the name of deceased, as "Smitty—My-Darling," is an unusual one, is important. West v. State, 22 App. 308, 4 S. W. 896. There is not a variance between an indictment giving the name of the murdered person as Rozella Betts, and evidence that her name was Eva Rozella Betts, usually called Eva, but sometimes Rozella. Betts v. State, 57 App. 359, 124 S. W. 424.

The variance between an indictment, charging accused with the killing of "Tom Jones," and the evidence, showing that the name of decedent was "Jim Jones," is fatal, requiring a reversal of the conviction, in the absence of evidence that decedent was as well known by the name of "Jim Jones" as "Tom Jones." Jones v. State, 62 App. 627, 135 S. W. 705.

14. Theft.—See notes under P. C. art. 1329, ante, and art. 457, post. The name of the owner, or of the possessor of the property, should be alleged correctly, as the allegation must be proved as made. The given name may be omitted by its initial. State v. Black, 31 Tex. 566; Collins v. State, 43 Tex. 577; Wells v. State, 4 App. 20; Perry v. State, 1d. 566; Brown v. State, 32 Tex. 155; Spooner v. State, 25 App. 368, 8 S. W. 250.

Variance as to middle initial to the given name as charged and proved, is immaterial (Spencer v. State, 34 App. 65, 29 S. W. 150); but this rule does not extend to the first initial, unless it be shown that such name was as well known by the alleged name as by his true name. Willis v. State, 24 App. 457, 6 S. W. 200; Young v. State, 30 App. 303, 17 S. W. 412.

The indictment alleged the name of the owner of the stolen property to be Burris. The proof showed it to be Burrows. The conviction is assailed upon the ground of variance between the ownership as alleged and proved. But held, that as the owner was commonly known as Burris, the variance is not material. Taylor v. State, 27 App. 44, 31 S. W. 35.

Indictment for theft which alleged the name both of accused and the owner as "Mack Brown" held good. Brown v. State, 25 App. 379, 12 S. W. 150.

Indictment charging theft of a horse belonging to "J. Alford" is supported by proof that the property belonged to "Josianca Aldrete." Franklin v. State, 37 App. 812, 39 S. W. 650.

That the evidence showed that the owner's surname was different from that alleged in the information in a prosecution for theft would be a variance. Johnson v. State, 58 App. 412, 126 S. W. 597.

A count in an indictment for jeryncy was not fatally defective because, after mentioning defendant four times by his name, "F. C. Matthers," it referred to him as "the said F. C. Manners." It appearing that the mistake was merely clerical and could have misled no one. Skinner v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1097.

Where the indictment charged that the property was stolen from one James, but the proof was that his name was Jones, but that he was commonly known as James, there was no variance. Gatlin v. State, 72 App. 516, 163 S. W. 458.

15. Violation of liquor law.—See notes to art. 464, post.

When name is unknown, see note, ante. The indictment charged a sale of liquor to "Hall," proof showed a sale to Wall, variance; held, fatal. Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 618.

An indictment for selling liquors to "Jim W." is not supported by proof of a sale to "Will W.," in the absence of evidence that the buyer is also called or known as "Jim W." Hankins v. State, 57 App. 150, 122 S. W. 21.

When information charged a sale of intoxicating liquor to "Lewis Vanderall," and the evidence showed a sale to Lewis Vanderlee, and there was no evidence as to the pronunciation of the latter name, or that the person was ever known as Vanderall, there was a variance, the names not being idem sonans. Chaney v. State, 59 App. 383, 128 S. W. 614.

An indictment for violating the local option law charged a sale to one "Joy Dunge," and on cross-examination accused testified that his name was George, but stated that he was called "Joy" by three persons. Held, insufficient to show that he was commonly known as Joy, or was as well known by that name as by his real name, and that the indictment did not therefore properly allege his name as a purchaser of the liquor. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 940.

An indictment for forgery setting out a copy of the check forged signed by "Dr. G. A. J.," and alleging that by the name "Dr. G. A. J.," defendant meant "G. U. J.," whose name the defendant intended to sign to the instrument and wrote "Dr. G. A. J.," instead, sufficiently sets out the name of the defendant and the false act of the check purports to be. Reeseman v. State, 59 App. 430, 128 S. W. 1125.

The doctrine of idem sonans has no application to the variance between an indictment charging the forgery of an instrument signed by "Doff G." and the instrument introduced in evidence signed by "Dolph G." Simmons v. State, 61 App. 7, 133 S. W. 687.

Where an indictment charged the passing of a forged instrument on Ellis Carter, and the evidence showed that his name was Richard Ellis Carter, but that he was known by his friends as Ellis Carter, and was generally known in the community by that name, there was no variance. Shores v. State (Cr. App.) 350 S. W. 776.

Under an indictment charging the signing of the name "Reen Perrey" to the alleged forged note, without explanatory averments that the name signed was intended for "Rene Perry," the name of the prosecuting witness, the admission by defendant that he had signed the name of the prosecuting witness to the note, and other testimony showing that her name had been signed to the note, was not a variance, where it appeared that the prosecuting witness was frequently known as "Rene," that many people called her "Ronne" and others "Renee;" such names having the same sound and pronunciation as that used in the indictment. Pye v. State, 71 App. 94, 154 S. W. 222.

17. Pulling down and injuring fence.—An indictment charging the appellant with pulling down and injuring the fence of W. G. Amos without the consent of W. G. Amos is not bad because of the variance in the initials of the alleged owner. Thompson v. State, 64 App. 514, 142 S. W. 908.

18. When objection as to misnomer can be raised.—See arts. 559-563, 567, and notes.

Mismane is an objection that can not be raised after arraignment and entry of plea of not guilty. Wilcox v. State, 21 Tex. 585; Bassett v. State, 4 App. 41; Henry v. V. State, 38 App. 560, 42 S. W. 558; White v. State, 29 App. 559, 25 S. W. 734.

Art. 457. [445] Alligation of ownership.—Where one person owns the property, and another person has the possession, charge, or control of the same, the ownership thereof may be alleged to be in either. Where property is owned in common, or jointly, by two or more persons, the ownership may be alleged to be in all or either of them. When the property belongs to the estate of a deceased person, the ownership may be alleged to be in the executor, administrator or heirs of such deceased person, or in any one of such heirs. Where it is the separate property of a married woman, the ownership may be alleged to be in her, or in her husband. Where the ownership of the property is unknown to the grand jury, it shall be sufficient to allege that fact.

See notes under P. C. arts. 1329, 1333, 1334, 1348, 1349, 1377.

Allegation in separate counts, see notes under article 481, post.

In general.—This article applies in all cases in which it is necessary to allege ownership. Phillips v. State, 17 App. 169, and cases cited.

The allegation of ownership as well as the name of the owner must be proved as alleged. Young v. State, 30 App. 308, 17 S. W. 413.

Such possession need not be lawful. Crockett v. State, 5 App. 526. Thus when stolen property has been sold by the thief, and afterward stolen from the purchaser, the ownership may be alleged to be either in the true owner, or in the purchaser. King v. State, 45 Tex. 351; Moore v. State, 8 App. 466, citing Blackburn v. State, 44 Tex. 457.

Animals on a range are in the possession of the special owner if he has the actual care, control and management, so that ownership may be alleged in him. Littleton v. State, 20 App. 163; Hall v. State, 22 App. 622, 3 S. W. 338; Alexander v. State, 22 App. 136, 3 S. W. 840; Conner v. State, 24 App. 245, 6 S. W. 138; Williams v. State, 20 App. 131, 9 S. W. 357.

One who takes up and legally estrays an animal acquires a special property in it, and ownership may be alleged in him. Swink v. State, 32 App. 228, 25 S. W. 893; Jinks v. State, 5 App. 65; Cox v. State, 43 Tex. 101. And see Blackburn v. State, 44 Tex. 457; Tinney v. State, 24 App. 112, 5 S. W. 831. This rule does not apply upon mere partial compliance with the estray laws, and in such case the inadequate ownership in an unknown person. Lowe v. State, 11 App. 253. But see Tinney v. State, 24 App. 112, 5 S. W. 831. Ownership of a minor's property may be alleged to be in the natural guardian. Trott v. State, 5 App. 485. It is well settled that ownership may be alleged either in the actual or special owner. Littleton v. State, 20 App. 183.
An indictment for theft of jewels given by parent to a child and kept in custody of parent, charged ownership only in the parent; held, sufficient. Wright v. State, 55 App. 470, 34 S. W. 273.

The indictment for burglary of a schoolhouse in the night time properly alleged ownership in the janitor, who had charge of the building from 4 p. m. until 8 a. m. though the property taken was schoolbooks belonging to the pupils. Lamenter v. State, 38 App. 249, 42 S. W. 304.

A bare, temporary possession as that of a servant is not sufficient. Daggett v. State, 29 App. 6, 44 S. W. 148, 842.

Where a person is in general control of a sheep ranch and had control of the herding, and sheep are stolen from a flock in charge of a hired hand, ownership is properly alleged in the one who has control of the ranch and hired hand. McMillen v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 89.

It is proper to allege ownership in the person from whose possession property is taken. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 24.

Ownership can be alleged in the temporary possession of property. Piper v. State, 55 App. 121, 119 S. W. 369.

In a prosecution for theft of cattle, in which the indictment alleged that the cattle were the property of H., and were taken from his possession without his consent, proof that the cattle were under control of H., who lived in another state, but were in the immediate charge of a hired hand in this state, who looked after them and kept up the fences, etc., was a fatal variance. Bonner v. State, 53 App. 195, 125 S. W. 22.

In a prosecution for burglary of a room in a hotel, the ownership, occupancy, and control of the room was properly charged to be in the proprietor, and not in one whose control and possession was that of an employé. Moore v. State, 59 App. 361, 128 S. W. 1118.

Pen. Code, art. 1533, declares that it is not necessary to constitute theft, that possession and ownership of the property be in the same person at the time of the taking. Article 1324 provides that "possession" is constituted by exercise of actual control, care, and management of property. Held, that this article 457 of the Penal Code of 1911, replacing the prior article of criminal procedure, applied to the whole of the property, including the. actual owner thereof, and that the state made out its case when it proved the alleged owner to be a special joint owner with two others, and that, while all three had the care and management of the property, it was unnecessary to prove that one of the owners, though to prove it would not be reversible error, nor prejudicial to accused. Lockett v. State, 59 App. 531, 129 S. W. 627.

Persons in charge of cattle on a range, looking after them for the owner, were properly stated to be the owners thereof in an indictment for theft. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 133 S. W. 615.

Where one person owns the property stolen, and another has the lawful possession and control thereof, the ownership may be alleged in either. Suggs v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 186.

The indictment for receiving stolen property properly alleges its ownership in M., owner and manager of the business, part of the stock of which it was, and not his employé, who, as yardman, had control of the property, in the yard from which it was stolen. Hogg v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 195.

An indictment for swindling may allege ownership in an employé having charge and control of the property fraudulently acquired by accused. Pilgrim v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1170.

Although the keeper of an automobile garage had the care of a machine which was left there when not in use by the owner, his care or custody of the machine did not constitute ownership for the purpose of the allegation of ownership and taking without consent in a prosecution for theft of a part of a machine. Shaha v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 543.

Under the provision that, if one person owns property and another has control thereof, ownership may be alleged in either, where property owned by one person is in the immediate control and management of another, it may be alleged to be the property of the latter, and an information charging willful injury to a freight car could allege that it was the car of the B. railroad, without alleging that it was in the custody, etc., of the railroad having control thereof when it was injured. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 134.

Where the owner of cattle placed them in the pasture of one J., who under Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, § 5644, had a lien thereon for pasturage, J. was the special owner as against the real owner, and an indictment for their theft should have alleged ownership in J. or real ownership in the owner and special ownership in J. McKnight v. State 70 App. 470, 156 S. W. 1188.

An indictment for the theft of property in possession of a renter should allege general possession in the owner's agent and special ownership in the renter, or ownership in the agent, or in the renter. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 5.

Property levied on by an officer being in his exclusive possession, ownership may be alleged in him in an indictment for robbery. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 566.

The carrier had such possession that an indictment for burglary of a car containing potatoes properly alleges ownership of them in it not merely where after arrival at destination the real owner was permitted to show them to prospective purchasers and sold them, but also after they had been surrendered and part of the potatoes checked out by its representative; it still being liable as warehouseman for the remainder. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Joint or common ownership.—Special joint ownership, see the preceding note.

When property is owned in common, or jointly by two or more persons, the ownership may be alleged to be in all or either of them. Henry v. State, 46 Tex. 207.
Art. 457  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.  (Title 7)

Where the indictment alleged the ownership to be in one party, and the proof showed that it belonged to a partnership, held, that there was no variance between allegation and proof, and the court properly charged the jury that the state need not prove want of consent except as to the party in whom ownership was laid Coates v. State, 31 App. 257, 26 S. W. 583.

In case of burglary ownership of community property must be alleged to be in the husband, unless it be a case where the husband may have abandoned the wife, when it may be alleged to be in the wife. Jones v. State, 47 App. 126, 89 S. W. 633. 122 Am. St. Rep. 680.

Where indictment alleges ownership of burglarized property in one person and proof shows the ownership to be in the one alleged and another there is no variance. In such case ownership may be alleged in all or either. Mass v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 46.

Although one of the joint possessors is the actual owner, both can be treated as possessory, and the possession and ownership can be alleged in either. Duncan v. State, 49 App. 150, 91 S. W. 572.

This article does not relate alone to a technical joint ownership, or joint possession but refers as well to a case where the parties exercise a joint or common possession of the property. Bailey v. State, 59 App. 398, 97 S. W. 696.

For theft, when the alleged a joint ownership and alleged ownership of three persons, a copartnership, is not sustained by proof of ownership and possession by two of such persons, and that the third had neither the possession nor a part ownership. Hareman v. State, 59 App. 51, 124 S. W. 632.

And where there was no material variance between an allegation that property stolen belonged to J. and proof that it belonged to J. and E., as partners, Davis v. State, 63 App. 453, 149 S. W. 249.

And where the provision that, where property stolen is owned in common or jointly by two or more, the ownership may be alleged in all or either of them, proof that property stolen belonged to a partnership was sufficient to sustain a conviction, though it be alleged to belong to one of the individual members of the firm, and vice versa. Hatfield v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 226.

Where property is owned in common or jointly by two or more persons, an indictment for burglary may allege ownership to be in either or all of them. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 300.

Where the indictment alleged that the burglarized storehouse was owned and occupied by M. and contained property owned by him, proof that M. and another had possession and control of the burglarized house and property therein did not constitute a variance. Powers v. State, 72 App. 298, 162 S. W. 832.

Under this article ownership was properly alleged in the head of a firm, consisting of himself and his brother, who was in and about the store, and was in possession as one of the joint owners. Lewis v. State, 72 App. 377, 162 S. W. 866.

Separate ownership of married women.—This article applies to a case where the property stolen is the wife's jewelry, and ownership can be alleged to be in the wife or husband, the facts showing it to be the separate property of the wife. Kaufman v. State, 53 App. 206, 190 S. W. 172.

Ownership of married woman's separate property may be alleged to be in her or her husband. Sincler v. State, 24 App. 465, 20 S. W. 19. Hane v. State, 46 App. 562, 81 S. W. 708. But ownership of community property may be alleged to be in her if she has been abandoned. Ware v. State, 2 App. 547; Jones v. State, 47 S. W. 521, 122 Am. St. Rep. 680. And there was no variance between an indictment charging theft of the wife's money and proof that the money was community property in her custody. Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 352 S. W. 597.

Where a wife's property is taken, it is proper to allege ownership and possession and want of consent in the husband and not in the wife. McGee v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 930; Smith v. State, 53 App. 443, 111 S. W. 940. Especially where he had the exclusive management and control. Burt v. State, 7 App. 578. See, also Coombes v. State, 17 App. 253.

Where premises are in fact the separate property of the husband, the ownership should be alleged to be in him. Lucas v. State, 36 App. 397, 37 S. W. 427.

The husband may be convicted of keeping a disorderly house though it is his wife's separate property. Willis v. State, 34 App. 148, 29 S. W. 757.

Estate ownership.—If the property belonged to an estate, it is proper to allege ownership and possession in the person who had the actual and legal control of the same. The son or widow of decedent, having such actual control and management, come within this rule. Dreyer v. State, 11 App. 503; Crockett v. State, 5 App. 356. And see Henry v. State, 45 Tex. 54; McLaurine v. State, 29 App. 530, 13 S. W. 992; Briggs v. State, 20 App. 106.

Where the defendant is a woman and her children it is sufficient to allege the ownership in the mother alone. Kelley v. State, 44 App. 157, 70 S. W. 20.

Where the property stolen belongs to an estate where the wife had qualified as community survivor, the ownership was properly alleged in her. Pate v. State, 54 App. 491, 112 S. W. 758.

Unknown ownership.—See notes under Pen. Code, article 1329.

Where the owner of the property is to the knowledge of the App. jurors unknown is sufficient. Taylor v. State, 5 App. 1; Culberson v. State, 2 App. 324; State v. Miller, 34 Tex. 535; McGee v. State, 43 Tex. 602; Joracso v. State, 6 App. 238; Lowe v. State, 11 App. 253; Williamson v. State, 13 App. 514; Mackey v. State, 20 App. 609; Smith v. State, 39 App. 46; S. W. 74; McVey v. State, 25 App. 46; S. W. 74; McVarty v. State, 36 App. 135, 35 S. W. 994. And in such case the indictment need not allege that the defendant was not the owner of the property. Thompson v. State, 58 App. 221, 22 S. W. 493.

An indictment for theft in one count alleged ownership in a certain person, and in another count alleged ownership in a person to the grand jurors unknown; held, sufficient. McLaughlin v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 260.

If the proof shows that the owner's name could have been ascertained by the use of ordinary diligence the variance is fatal. Swink v. State, 22 App. 530, 24 S. W. 883; Langham v. State, 25 App. 559, 10 S. W. 1113; Nixon v. State, 28 App. 347, 26 S. W. 142; Kimbrough v. State, 28 App. 367, 13 S. W. 215; Sharp v. State, 29 App. 211, 15 S. W. 175; Yantis v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 917.

Where the indictment charges that the owner was unknown, there must be some evidence of such want of knowledge, either by the grand jurors or otherwise, to authorize submission of the question to the jury. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 935.

The statute comprehends the property of all unknown owners, and the unknown ownership must be proved as any other issue in the case. Clements v. State, 43 App. 406, 66 S. W. 392, 303.

Corporation ownership.—See note to art. 456, ante.

Art. 458. [446] Description of property.—When it becomes necessary to describe property of any kind in an indictment, a general description of the same by name, kind, quality, number and ownership, if known, shall be sufficient. If the property be real estate, its general locality in the county, and the name of the owner, occupant or claimant thereof, shall be a sufficient description of the same.

See Wilkson's Cr. Forms, 7a.

It need not be averred, as at common law, that the stolen property is "goods and chattels." State v. Odum, 11 Tex. 12.

A particular description of the property is not necessary—giving it its common name will answer, as a book of a certain value, a title bond, etc. See description v. City of Dallas, 17 Tex. 521, 67 Am. Dec. 577. See, also, Green v. State, 28 App. 495, 13 S. W. 782.

Where the description of stolen property was, "one chest or trunk, containing various articles of clothing, jewelry, etc.," it was held bad for uncertainty. "Trunk" and "chest" are not synonymous, and the articles of clothing, jewelry, etc., should have been more definitely described. Potter v. State, 39 Tex. 328.

For a description of miscellaneous articles of stolen clothing held to be sufficient, see Ware v. State, 2 App. 547.

The property need not be described as "corporeal personal property." It is sufficient to allege that it is "property." Salford v. State, 4 App. 99.

The indictment for robbery should describe the property taken, as theft. See a chest held insufficient. Winston v. State, 9 App. 450. An indictment for fraudulent disposition of mortgage property should describe the property as it is described in the mortgage or otherwise written lien, but it will be sufficient if the description is sufficient to identify the property as that described in the mortgage or other lien. Glass v. State, 23 App. 425, 5 S. W. 131. See, also, Martin v. State, 28 App. 361, 13 S. W. 151.

"One watch and one pocket-knife," is sufficient description of property stolen. Grissom v. State, 40 App. 147, 49 S. W. 58.

An indictment for theft from the person described the property taken as "corporeal personal property. * * * to wit, $4 in money, two knives, and one ring." Held, that the description was sufficient. Campbell v. State, 61 App. 504, 135 S. W. 548.

Where an indictment charged theft from the person and described the property stolen as a pocket book containing one $10 bill and two $5 bills, all of the aggregate value of $20, and lawful and lawful money of the United States the description is sufficient under C. C. P., article 483 and Pen. Code, arts. 1356, 1357, both of which refer to the crime of theft, and, respectively, provide that the property must have some specific value, and that the term "property" as used in relation to theft includes money, bank bills, and goods of every description as well as agricultural products. And other personal property, since any theft from the person is a felony and the grade of the offense does not depend upon the amount stolen, and the property alleged to have been stolen was not money, but a pocket book and its contents, all of which was of the aggregate value of $20. Sims v. State, 64 App. 458, 142 S. W. 372.

An indictment which alleged that accused unlawfully and knowingly entered on a strip of land known as "the Commons," owned by a county named, and under the control of a person named, the mayor of the city named, and removed therefrom and sand without consent, is an against a motion to quash insufficient for failing to describe the Commons. Haworth v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 859.

An indictment, charging the theft or embezzlement of a vendor's lien note, which merely described the instrument as one vendor's lien note for the payment of $8,000, and of the value of $8,000, is sufficient. Pye v. State (Cr. App.) 271 S. W. 741.

An indictment for theft of "one engine lubricator of the value of $12.00, two oil cups of the value of two dollars, three hard oil cups of the value of three and 59/100 of a dollar, one leather belt of the value of one dollar, one condenser leather belt of the value of twelve dollars, one distributor leather belt of the value of thirty dollars, two lead mill leather belts of the value of eleven dollars," suffi­ciently described the property. Schenk v. State (Cr. App.) 137 S. W. 273.

An indictment for theft by a bailee, alleging that the money was delivered to accused for the purpose of buying barroom fixtures and whisky, was not defective for failure to allege the kind, character, quality, name, etc., of the fixtures or the quantity of the whisky. Schenk v. State (Cr. App.) 137 S. W. 274.

Under this article a complaint and information alleging that accused unlawfully took from the possession of prosecutor one suit of clothes of a specified value suffi­ciently described the property stolen. Baldwin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 701.

Money.—See article 468, and notes thereunder.

Misspelling the word moneys, see notes under article 476, post.

When the indictment described the property as "two United States National ten dollar currency bills, of the value, then and there separately, of ten dollars, and each of said bills, then and there, of twenty dollars: one of said bills is described more particularly, as follows, to wit, No. 1375, from the Chattam National Bank of New York," etc., the description was held sufficient. Roth v. State, 10 App. 27.

For other decisions rendered prior to the enactment of article 455, involving descriptions of money, see Davison v. State, 12 App. 214; Boyle v. State, 37 Tex. 351; Martinez v. State, 41 Tex. 164; Ridgeway v. State, Id. 231; Wells v. State, 4 App. 330; Cook v. State, Id. 265; Williams v. State, 5 App. 114; Statum v. State, 9 App. 273; Lavarre v. State, 1 App. 655.

"Money" is property, and in an indictment for theft a general description of it by name, kind, number of pieces, and ownership will be sufficient. Davison v. State, 12 App. 214.

Where the property was described as "one twenty dollar gold piece of the value of twenty dollars, current money of the United States, and one five dollar bill in money of the value of five dollars, and one pocketknife of the value of fifty cents, all being personal property of J. W. McKnight," it was held to be sufficient. Bryant v. State, 16 App. 144.

An indictment which describes the property as "eight dollars, the same being the corporal personal property of John Schell" was held bad, because it did not sufficiently describe the property. Dukes v. State, 22 App. 192, 2 S. W. 596.

The money was described as one dollar in Mexican value of the money of fifty cents; held, there being no statute upon the subject of foreign money it should be described as property; that is by name, kind, quantity and ownership. (Overruling Bravo v. State, 20 App. 177.) Wade v. State, 35 App. 176, 32 S. W. 772, 60 Am. St. Rep. 31.

An indictment for robbery which alleges the taking of a certain number of dol­lars in money sufficiently describes the property taken. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 629; Colter v. State, 37 App. 234, 39 S. W. 576.

An indictment for robbery charging the taking of the money, as "two dollars in silver coin of the United States of the value of two dollars and three copper cents pieces each of the value of one cent" is sufficient. Moore v. State, 36 App. 88, 35 S. W. 684.

An indictment alleging the value of ten dollar bills to be $20 each held bad. Jones v. State, 39 App. 387, 46 S. W. 250.

The allegation in an indictment for robbery charging accused with having taken two $20 bills, five $10 bills, and two $5 bills, of lawful and current money of the United States of America, sufficiently charged the taking of lawful money of the United States. Jackson v. State, 60 App. 273, 131 S. W. 1076.

An information charging the theft of money, describing it as $10 in money, which passed current as money of the United States of America, of the value of $10, sufficiently described the money alleged to have been stolen. Longardy v. State, 60 App. 511, 132 S. W. 766.

In a prosecution for theft, an allegation in the indictment or information that the stolen property was money means lawful money of the United States. Sims v. State, 64 App. 435, 142 S. W. 572.

An indictment for robbery alleging that the property taken was silver coin of the value of $1.50 sufficiently describes it. Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 530.

Where an indictment for the theft of money alleged that the money was 19 $20 bills, 2 $5 bills, 1 $2 bill, and 1 $1 bill, each of United States paper currency money, and 15 cents in silver coin of the United States, and stated the value of each bill and the total amount, such description was sufficient under this and article 468. Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 997.

An indictment charging embezzlement of "one thousand dollars current of the United States  and of the value of $1,000" is not subject to motion to quash as charging no offense, on the ground of not stating whether it was money or merchandise. Poteet v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 863.
Under Pen. Code, art. 1329, defining "theft" as the fraudulent taking of corporeal personal property belonging to another, etc., art. 1327, providing that "property" as used in relation to the crime of theft includes money, etc., Code Cr. Proc. art. 468, providing that in indictments for theft of any coin or paper, current as money, it shall be sufficient to describe the property in the indictment, etc., of or about a certain amount, and this article 468, a complaint and information charging that accused took from the possession of W. certain money of the value exceeding $1, was not insufficient because of the failure to allege that the stolen money was coins of the United States, or current money of the United States. McAdams v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 792.

In view of this article and article 468, providing that, in an indictment for theft of money, it is sufficient to describe it as money, an indictment for robbery, which as $70 in gold, current money of the United States, and $160 in bank notes, current money of the United States, is sufficient, though the prosecutor can give a full description of both the gold and the bank notes by stating the denominations thereof. Terrell v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1088.

Real estate.—Evidence that the land in question was not in certain survey held fatal to conviction though the allegation of the name of the survey was unnecessary. Evans v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 988.

Animals.—It is not sufficient to describe the stolen animal by the generic term "horse," "ass," "mule" or "cattle." But if the descriptive averments unnecessarily include color, brand or sex, such averments must be proved. Hill v. State, 41 Tex. 553; Coleman v. State, 21 App. 520, 2 S. W. 559; Loyd v. State, 22 App. 616, 3 S. W. 670. State v. South, 17 App. 244; Cameron v. State, 9 App. 255; Runkel v. State, 1 App. 461; Allen v. State, 8 App. 360.

Under the statute as it formerly stood relating to theft of "any horse, gelding, mare, colt, ass, or mule" the proof was required to respond to the averment, and proof of theft of a "mare" did not sustain charge of stealing mare. Hanks v. State, 28 Tex. 644. Also within that statute a "gelding" was not a "horse." Jordt v. State, 31 Tex. 571, 28 Am. Dec. 550; Swindel v. State, 32 Tex. 102; Gibbs v. State, 24 Tex. 134; Persons v. State, 3 App. 246; Valesco v. State, 9 App. 76. A "filly" was not a horse. Ford v. State, 1 App. 446; Turpin v. State, 28 Tex. 573. "Riding" is a "horse" and not a "gelding." Brisco v. State, 4 App. 219, 30 Am. Rep. 162.

Sufficient to describe the animal as "one cattle," "one hog," etc. Further descriptions will only necessitate unnecessary proof. State v. Garrett, 34 Tex. 674; Smith v. State, 24 App. 296, 6 S. W. 40.

It is sufficient description of the animals to designate them by their generic name, as a "hog," a "sheep," a "goat." A more particular description is not required and should not be given. Lunn v. State, 44 Tex. 85; Grant v. State, 2 App. 164.

Where the animal was described as a "white, black and speckled blue yearling" and the evidence showed a "three year old of a white and black speckled color" and a "white and red freckly color" the variance was fatal. Courtney v. State, 3 App. 249.

An indictment under P. C. art. 1876, for illegal marking or branding which described the animal as a "calf," was held sufficient. Horse is the generic name of the equine species, cow of the bovine; to name one of the species is sufficient. Pullen v. State, 11 App. 89.

An indictment for theft of a horse need not allege that the horse is the "corporal personal property," etc. Damron v. State, 27 S. W. 7.

The indictment should allege the number of cattle stolen. Matthews v. State, 39 App. 553, 47 S. W. 647, 48 S. W. 159; Id., 41 App. 98, 51 S. W. 915.

The fact that the statutes of Oklahoma classifies animals of the horse species will not invalidate a Texas indictment describing the animal stolen in Oklahoma and brought into this state, by its generic term. Beard v. State, 47 App. 153, 83 S. W. 824.

Description of or setting forth instrument forged.—See notes under art. 924, Penal Code.

Art. 459. [447] "Felonious" and "feloniously" not necessary.

—in an indictment for a felony, it is not necessary to use the words "felonious" or "feloniously."

See Willsen's Cr. Forms, 7a.

Prior law.—This article is only declaratory of the established doctrine at the time of adoption. Calvin v. State, 33 Tex. 478; Posey v. State, 33 Tex. 478; Prim v. State, Id. 157; Robinson v. State, 33 Tex. 341; Jorvasco v. State, 6 App. 211.
Art. 459. PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

258: Sullivan v. State, 13 App. 462; Reed v. State, 14 App. 465. Prior to the adoption of those acts, however, the word "feloniously" was essential in every indictment for a felony. Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 357.

Swindling.—After the adoption of the Code it was held in one case essential in charging the offense of swindling to allege that the offense was "feloniously" committed. State v. Smoll, 31 Tex. 184. But a contrary doctrine was subsequently held in Robinson v. State, 33 Tex. 341.

Art. 460. [448] Certainty; what sufficient.—An indictment for any offense against the penal laws of this state shall be deemed sufficient which charges the commission of the offense in ordinary and concise language in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant, and with that degree of certainty that will give the defendant notice of the particular offense with which he is charged, and enable the court, on conviction, to pronounce the proper judgment; and in no case are the words "force and arms" or "contrary to the form of the statute" necessary. [Act March 26, 1881, ch. 57, p. 60, § 1.]

1. "Common sense Indictment act."—This and following articles down to and including article 476 are commonly known as the "Common Sense Indictment Act." (Act March 26, 1881, 17 Leg. p. 60.) In Mansfield v. State, 17 App. 482, it was stated that said act had been repealed. This was a mistake, doubtless owing to the fact that at the time the opinion was rendered there was pending before the legislature a bill to repeal said act, but the bill never became a law and the act has been embodied in the Code of 1895, except form 4, which in Allen v. State, 13 App. 28, was held to be unconstitutional; form 13, which was held unconstitutional in Gabrielsky v. State, 13 App. 428; and form 21, which in Williams v. State, 12 App. 1006, was held unconstitutional. On the latter form, see also, Brown v. State, 13 App. 347; Hodges v. State, 12 App. 554; Young v. State, 12, 161; Muldrew v. State, 12, 161; Insull v. State, 11 App. 146.

2. Notice of offense charged in general.—The office and purpose of an "indictment" is to notify one of the offense with which he is charged, and the elements thereof, that he may properly prepare his defense, and usually when an offense is charged in the language of the statute, it is sufficient. Zweig v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 747.

3. Description of accused.—Under this article and article 461, subdivision 4, and article 464, requiring indictments to contain accused's name, or state that it is unknown, and give a reasonably accurate description of him, article 559, providing that, unless accused suggests, when arraigned, that he is not indicted by his true name, it shall be taken as truly set forth, articles 560, 561, and 562, providing for the correction of the indictment upon such a suggestion, and that, if accused refuses to say what his real name is, the cause shall proceed, article 453, requiring an indictment to be such as to enable accused to plead the judgment thereon in bar of a subsequent prosecution, and article 476, providing that the proceedings shall not be affected by any defect of form in an indictment which does not prejudice accused's substantial rights, the giving of a wrong name or the failure to give accused's full name is a matter of form only, and, where he was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description may be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person alleged to have committed the offense charged, the judgment will not be reversed. Crescencio v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 596.

4. Violation of liquor law.—Acts 31st Leg. (3d Called Sess.) c. 15 (Pen. Code) § 1614, made it the duty of all persons and companies to enter in and post at each place where intoxicating liquors are to be delivered in prohibition territory, and made it the duty of agents of such companies to open such books at "reasonable" hours for inspection by any officer of the law, or member of the grand jury. Held in view of the act of Procedure and of Crimes, the Code of 1869, that when a statute creating any offense uses special or particular terms, the indentment may use the general term which in common language embraces the special term, and article 474 declaring that words used in a statute to define an offense need not be strictly pursued in the indictment, that an indictment which charged that defendant about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of a certain day, the same being within the office hours of his express company, refused to permit the sheriff to inspect the premises, though it did not allege sufficient, though it was sufficient; especially where that ground was not given for the retrial. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 117.

5. Perjury.—An indictment for perjury which alleges that it was a material issue, in a grand jury, whether accused unlawfully delivered to an infant intoxicating liquor, that accused, as a witness before the grand jury, falsely testified that he had not permitted the infant to order intoxicating liquor in accused's name, and that he had not signed his name on express books and received beer from him, and had not delivered the same to him, the grand jury was investigating to ascertain who delivered intoxicating liquors to infants, that accused well knew that he had permitted the infant to order intoxicating liquor in his name, and that he had signed his name on express books, and had received liquor and had delivered the same to the infant, sufficiently charges the offense under this article 460 and articles 453 and 465. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 493.

6. Robbery.—Pen. Code, art. 1327, defines robbery as an assault, or violence, or putting in fear of life or bodily injury, by which one fraudulently takes from another any property with intent, etc., and permits capital punishment where a firearm or other deadly weapon is used. An indictment thereunder alleged that accused "with force and arms" by unlawfully using a firearm, fraudulently took property without his consent and with intent to appropriate the same to his own use. Held, in view of this article of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that "violence" was a general term including all sorts of forming with physical force, and, as used in a pleading, signifies that an assault: that "violently" meant by or with "force": that "violent" meant impelled with "force": and hence that the term "with force and arms" sufficiently alleged that the robbery was effected by "violence" as used in the statute. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 336.

7. Embezzlement of public money.—Pen. Code, art. 96, punishes any officer who is by law the receiver of the public property, "who shall fraudulently take or misapply, or convert to his own use any part of such public money, or secrete the same with intent to take, misapply, or convert it to his own use." A count of an indictment thereunder alleged that he did "unlawfully and fraudulently secret the same with intent to take, misapply, and convert to his own use." Held that since the two words are substantially equivalent and convey the same idea, the second word, "secret," is superfluous. State v. App. Indict. 16.61, 112 S. W. 224.

8. Forgery.—Under this article and article 453, ante, to use the context and subject-matter shall be considered, and that the certainty required in an indictment is such as will enable accused to plead the judgment upon it in bar, and article 476, post, providing that no indictment shall be held insufficient for any defect not prejudicing the substantial rights of accused, an indictment for forgery under art. 473, which alleges that accused fraudulently and unlawfully, etc., defraud assisted the forging of a signature to a certain deed purporting to title the grantee named therein to certain lands which, if true, would have affected the title and interest in such lands, sufficiently charged the instrument would have affected such title. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 112 S. W. 224.

9. Incest.—Under this article and article 453, ante, an indictment for incest, which alleges that accused "did * * * unlawfully, canally, know, and incestuously have carnal knowledge of," prosecutrix, is not bad; the words "canally" being intended for "carnally." Bailey v. State, 63 App. 584, 141 S. W. 224.

10. Automobiles exceeding speed limit.—Under this article, providing that an indictment, which gives defendant notice of the particular offense charged is sufficient, a complaint alleging that accused operated an automobile at a greater speed than 18 miles an hour on a public road not a highway charges a violation of Acts 30th Leg. c. 96, regulating the speed of automobiles on public highways. Goodwin v. State, 63 App. 140, 133 S. W. 399.

11. Sending anonymous letter.—A complaint and information for sending an anonymous letter reflecting upon a person's integrity, chastity, etc., need not contain the letter, in view of this article and article 453, requiring only such certainty as will enable accused to plead the judgment in bar of another prosecution; and article 474, providing that it is sufficient to use other words conveying the same meaning as the words used in a statute or including the sense of the statutory words. Bradford v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 734.

12. Unlawful practice of medicine.—In view of this and the following article and article 473, providing that the certainty required in such indictment is such as will enable the accused to plead any judgment rendered in bar of any other prosecution for the same offense, and article 474, providing that words used in a statute to define an offense need not be strictly pursued, it was held that an indictment under Code, art. 760, declaring that it shall be unlawful for any one to practice medicine upon human beings who has not registered in the district clerk's office of the county in which he resides, his authority for so practicing is sufficient,
Art. 461. [449] Special and general terms in statute.—When a statute creating or defining any offense uses special or particular terms, an indictment on it may use the general term, which, in common language, embraces the special term. [Id., § 2.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 7a.
See notes under the preceding article.

For specific crimes, see notes to articles in Pen. Code relating thereto.

Art. 462. [450] “Public place;” allegation of.—When, to constitute the offense, an act must be done in a public place, it is sufficient to allege that the act was done in a “public place.” [Id., § 3.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a.

Gaming in public place.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 548, et seq.

Art. 463. [451] Act, with intent to commit an offense.—An indictment for an act done with intent to commit some other offense may charge in general terms the commission of such act with intent to commit such other offense, without stating the facts constituting such other offense. [Id., § 4.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a.

Assault with intent to commit other offense.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1032, and C. C. P., art. 463.

Art. 464. [452] Selling intoxicating liquor; sufficient allegations as to.—In an indictment for selling intoxicating liquors in violation of any law of this state, it shall be sufficient to charge that the defendant sold intoxicating liquors contrary to law, naming the person to whom sold, without stating the quantity sold; and, under such indictment, any act of selling in violation of the law may be proved. [Id., § 5.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a.

See Pen. Code, arts. 589, 602, 597, 600, and notes thereunder.

See White v. State, 11 App. 476; Eppenstein v. State, 1d. 480.

Violations of local option law.—See notes to art. 456, ante.

An indictment must allege the name of the person to whom liquor was sold, or that such name was unknown to the grand jury. Dixon v. State, 21 App. 517, 15 S. W. 488.

An indictment or information must allege the name of the purchaser. Drechsel v. State, 35 App. 680, 34 S. W. 934; Ex parte Campbell (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 193.

An information for violating the local option law, charging that “Reagan Harden did then and there unlawfully sell to Reagan Harden intoxicating liquors,” etc., is bad, since a sale, to be in violation of law, must be to some person other than the seller. Harden v. State, 62 App. 84, 136 S. W. 768.

Acts 1909 (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 15, § 1 (Pen. Code, art. 589) provides that if any person shall engage in or pursue the occupation or business of selling intoxicating liquors, “except as permitted by law,” in any county, justice precinct, city, town, or subdivision of a county in which the sale of intoxicating liquors has been or shall hereafter be prohibited under the laws of the state, he or she shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary not less than two, nor more than five years. Held, that article 464 was the proper exercise of legislative power, and the exceptions referred to in Act July 11, 1909, § 1, not being a constituent element of the offense created by such section, it was not essential to the validity of an indictment thereunder that the exceptions referred to should be pleaded, though the words “except as permitted by law” appear in the body of the act. Slack v. State, 61 App. 572, 136 S. W. 1073, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 112.

A person indicted for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors cannot be convicted for making a single sale in violation of another provision of the prohibition law; the statute not authorizing a conviction for a lesser degree of the same offense, or for any other offense than that charged. Leonard v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 632.

An indictment for selling liquor in local option territory that failed to allege that the sale was not permitted by law was not void, and evidence of the commission of the offense was admissible, since it is matter of defense to be shown that the sale was permitted by law; the burden of proof being on defendant to show that he had the legal right to sell intoxicants under the statute. Mills v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 367.

Keeping open on Sunday.—Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, § 15 (Pen. Code, art. 615), provides that all persons having licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall close their places of business from 12 o'clock midnight Saturday until 5 o'clock...
Art. 465. [453] Perjury: sufficient allegation for.—An indictment for perjury or false swearing need not charge the precise language of the false statement, but may state the substance of the same; and no such indictment shall be held insufficient on account of any variance which does not affect the subject matter or general import of such false statement; and it is not necessary in such indictment to set forth the pleadings, records or proceedings with which the false statement is connected, nor the commission or the authority of the court, or person before whom the perjury was committed; but it is sufficient to state the name of the county or officer by whom the oath was administered, with the allegation of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned. [Id., § 6.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 7a.

An indictment for perjury, predicated on accused's false testimony in the county court on his trial for a violation of Pen. Code, art. 563, punishing any person betting on any banking game wherever played, need not allege that the betting was not at a private residence occupied by a family. Mares v. State, 71 App. 362, 158 S. W. 1130.

The indictment need not allege who dealt or exhibited the game. Mares v. State, 71 App. 303, 158 S. W. 1130.

But when the perjury is alleged to have been committed on a prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 388, which exempts certain games at a private residence, the indictment should negative the exemption. Barton v. State, 50 App. 161, 95 S. W. 110.

An indictment for perjury on a trial for playing cards need not allege the character of the game played where it alleges that it was not played at a private residence. Curtis v. State, 46 App. 480, 81 S. W. 29.

An indictment is bad if any of the material facts set forth in the statute is omitted. State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67.

Indictment held good though it did not allege in hie verba that defendant "committed perjury." Massie v. State, 6 App. 51.

The technical formal averments in an indictment for perjury, customary at common law, are not essential under our Code. It is sufficient if the ingredients of the offense, as prescribed by the Code, are set forth in plain and intelligible words. Brown v. State, 24 App. 119; West v. State, 2 App. 119; Bradberry v. State, 7 App. 375; Watson v. State, 5 App. 11; Allen v. State, 42 Tex. 12.

An indictment which conforms to Willson's Criminal Forms held sufficient to charge the offense of perjury. Smith v. State, 27 App. 50, 10 S. W. 751.

In an indictment for perjury the false statement should be set forth as stated by the witness. If stated disjunctively it should be set forth, but in negating the truth of the statement the negation should be conjunctive. Fry v. State, 34 App. 582, 27 S. W. 741, 38 S. W. 165.

Indictment for making false affidavit to statement of witness fees held insufficient if intended to charge defendant with claiming fees to which he was not entitled. Bridgers v. State, 44 App. 294, 78 S. W. 747.

Where it is made to appear that it was intended to charge defendant with the offense and where the allegations point him out with due certainty as the party committing the offense, it will not vitiate the indictment if the offense was not distinctly charged against such party in the beginning of the indictment. Curtis v. State, 42 App. 257, 59 S. W. 45.

Two or more averments as to false swearing will not necessarily vitiate the indictment.

If what is thought to be contradictory averments are explanatory one of the other, making more fully the description of the matters at issue, this would be no contradiction and would not render the indictment vague or indefinite. Campbell v. State, 43 App. 692, 65 S. W. 515.

An indictment for perjury which alleges that it was a material inquiry before a grand jury whether accused unlawfully delivered to an infant intoxicating liquor, that accused, as a witness before the grand jury, falsely testified that he had not signed the infant's name on express books and received beer consigned to him, and had not delivered the same to the infant, that the grand jury was investigating to ascertain who delivered intoxicating liquors to infants, that accused well knew he had not signed the infant's name on express books, and that he had delivered the same to the infant, sufficiently charges the offense, under this article 465 and articles 463 and 460, prescribing the requisites of indictments generally. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 805.

An indictment for false swearing, charging that defendant had a claim against a railroad and had been paid money thereon, and that the false statement was made deliberately and wilfully delivered falsely and wilfully false, as defendant knew when he made it, is sufficient. Urban v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 614.

See also, requisites and precedents, State v. Lindenburger, 29 Tex. 27; State v. Peters, 45 Tex. 7; Smith v. State, 1 App. 620; Watson v. State, 5 App. 11.

2. Proceedings wherein perjury is assigned in general.—If the indictment assigns perjury upon a criminal trial, it must show affirmatively the presentment of an indictment or information. State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67.

The indictment shows when and where the proceeding was pending, name of the judge, court, or officer, and whether it was an examining trial or upon indictment. State v. Oppenheimer, 41 Tex. 82.

If the indictment shows, by its allegations, that the perjury was committed in a judicial proceeding, describing such proceeding with reasonable certainty, it need only allege in general terms that a certain issue was joined in said proceeding, without specifically alleging what the issue was. Covey v. State, 23 App. 583, 5 S. W. 283.

In an indictment for perjury committed on the trial of a civil suit, it is not necessary to allege the kind of civil action. Garrett v. State, 37 App. 198, 38 S. W. 1017, 39 S. W. 108.

In alleging the case in which perjury is committed, when it is a criminal case the indictment in full need not be copied; it is enough to brieﬂy describe the case. Ross v. State, 40 App. 351, 50 S. W. 316.

An indictment for perjury before a justice of the peace in a proceeding under art. 525, should follow the language of the statute and not merely write that the justice was sitting as a court of inquiry. Morris v. State, 47 App. 420, 83 S. W. 1126.

An indictment for perjury, predicated on accused's false testimony in the county court on trial for banking at a gaming table or bank having or charge that the information in the county court was based on a complaint therein. Mares v. State, 71 App. 563, 158 S. W. 1129.

An indictment, charging that accused committed perjury by giving false testimony on his trial in the county court, where he was charged by complaint with a gaming offense, is sufficient, though not averring that he was charged by information or indictment. Etheridge v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1041.

3. Grand jury proceedings.—See notes under article 430, ante, and notes, post, under this article.

The indictment alleged that it became necessary for the grand jury to know whether the defendant had seen any person let or wager at a gambling table or bank; held, that the rule that an indictment must not charge an offense in the alternative does not apply. Fry v. State, 26 App. 580, 37 S. W. 741, 38 S. W. 168.

An indictment based upon the testimony of a witness before the grand jury in reference to gambling transactions which alleges that the defendant with reference to gambling transactions in the fall of 1896, is too indefinite. McMurtry v. State, 38 App. 521, 43 S. W. 1010.

An indictment based upon testimony given before the grand jury in reference to gambling on outhouse owned and stated, alleging that the grand jury was duly organized. Flournoy v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 903.

In a prosecution for perjury, an indictment charging that the perjury was committed in the grand jury, if the grand jury was not in session, or if the persons unlawfully carried weapons at a certain place was sufficient, as charging that the acts under investigation were in violation of law. Francis v. State, 57 App. 555, 123 S. W. 1114.

An indictment under Pen. Code, art. 316, declaring it to be an offense for any witness sworn before a grand jury to afterwards divulge any matter about which he was interrogated, recited that the defendant was interrogated by the grand jury with reference to "unlawful card playing," and charged that he afterwards disclosed the same to the defendant. Held, that the indictment was good, whether the matter about which defendant was interrogated related to a direct violation of law or not. Missou v. State, 61 App. 241, 135 S. W. 1173.

An indictment for perjury, based on accused giving false testimony before the grand jury, need not allege that he was warned by the grand jury that he was not compelled to inform on himself, and that he could decline to testify against himself. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 893.

Where an indictment, seeking to charge accused with perjury in that he testified that he was not asked certain questions before a grand jury, did not allege that accused was a witness or how he got before the grand jury, and if he was a witness that he was ever sworn by the jury before asking the questions, it was fatally defective. Pigg v. State, 71 App. 600, 169 S. W. 691.

An indictment, charging that defendant committed perjury in his testimony before the grand jury, where it was a material inquiry whether any game of cards had been played "at any place other than his own residence," was not objectionable as showing that the grand jury did not confine its investigation to offenses committed in C. county, but instead attempted to extend it to any and all places outside of such county. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 270.

4. Jurisdiction and authority to administer oath.—The indictment need not show the commission of the justice, or how his jurisdiction attached; if committed in a trial of forcible entry and detain a general allegation that he was a justice, and had jurisdiction, being sufficient. State v. Peters, 49 Tex. 7; Bradberry v. State, 7 App. 375. See, also, Stewart v. State, 6 App. 184.

If perjury was committed before a justice acting as coroner, the indictment should so allege. Stewart v. State, 6 App. 184.

It is not necessary to aver the authority of the officer to administer the oath, it is not necessary to aver the election or qualification of such officer, or to set out his commission. But such authority must be made to appear with certainty, by direct averment. Stewart v. State, 6 App. 184; Bradberry v. State, 7 App. 374; St. Clair v. State, 11 App. 257.

The indictment must directly allege that the court had jurisdiction of the judicial proceeding in which the perjury was committed, or it must allege the facts which clearly show such jurisdiction. Either mode of showing jurisdiction will be sufficient. Anderson v. State, 18 App. 17; Cox v. State, 15 App. 479; State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67; State v. Oppenheimer, Id. 32; Powers v. State, 17 App. 428.

An indictment for perjury in a judicial proceeding must show that the court had jurisdiction. Wilson v. State, 27 App. 47, 10 S. W. 749, 11 Am. St. Rep. 188.

To show that perjury before a justice of the peace sufficiently alleged his official capacity by alleging that he was a justice of the peace. Waters v. State, 30 App. 284, 17 S. W. 411.

An indictment, alleging that accused committed perjury by giving false testimony on a complaint charging violation of gaming laws, is sufficient; for the filing of a complaint in the county court, and arrest thereunder, plea of not guilty, and trial, confer jurisdiction on the county court. Etheridge v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 792.

5. Oath.—Proof and variance, see note, post.

Where the statute has prescribed the form of the oath, and the indictment sets out a different oath, the indictment is bad. State v. Perry, 42 Tex. 238.

If the oath was alleged to be in writing, a failure to set it out, at least substantially, is fatal; and a general averment that the oath was "legally administered by the clerk," is sufficient only when the circumstances under which the oath was required, and the occasion when made, are shown by averment to be such as to make its falsity perjury. State v. Umdenstock, 43 Tex. 554.

It is not necessary that the indictment should set out the oath taken by the defendant in his own words. It is sufficient to allege that the defendant was "duly sworn," without describing the attendant ceremonies. Jackson v. State, 15 App. 579; Massie v. State, 5 App. 81; Beach v. State, 32 App. 240, 22 S. W. 976. See, also, Stewart v. Umdenstock, 42 Tex. 584, which seems to restrict this doctrine.

In an indictment charging a deputy sheriff with making a false affidavit of his expenses in conveying a witness, it is not sufficient to allege that the oath was one required by law. Shely v. State, 30 App. 196, 32 S. W. 901.

It is sufficient for an indictment for perjury on the indictment to allege that the witness was sworn and took his corporeal oath before the court to testify and that the judge duly and legally administered the oath according to law. Lamar v. State, 49 App. 583, 96 S. W. 509.

6. Setting forth testimony or statement in writing in general.—If the alleged false statement in writing, it need not be set out in writing, it need not be sufficient to set it out substantially. Nor is it necessary to set out the whole of what defendant has sworn. Only that portion of the statement which is alleged An indictment for making a false affidavit should set out the words or substance of the affidavit. Shely v. State, 35 App. 190, 32 S. W. 901.

An affidavit for making a false affidavit initiating a criminal prosecution was not made, so it did not set out the affidavit or give the number and style of the case. Simpson v. State, 46 App. 77, 79 S. W. 530.

In an indictment for perjury, committed in testifying before the grand jury, an allegation that defendant stated, "I have never played a game of cards in the last ten years," did not render the indictment defective because the words quoted were not susceptible of the construction placed on them by the defendant, which was that he meant to state that he had not played any game of cards at any place other than a private residence occupied by a family, within the time immediately preceding, in the county where the grand jury was sitting. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 239.

7. Use of the word "voluntarily."—An indictment for false swearing, alleging that the affidavit was unlawfully, deliberately, corruptly, and wilfully made, is not insufficient, even though not using the word "voluntarily"; the other language showing that the affidavit was voluntarily made. Welch v. State, 71 App. 17, 157 S. W. 346.

8. Use of words "deliberately and wilfully."—It must be averred positively that the statement was made by the defendant "deliberately and wilfully." State v. Powell, 28 Tex. 636; Juanaqui v. State, Id. 625; State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67; State v. W., 42 Tex. 7; Allen v. State, Id. 12; State v. Perry, Id. 238; Smith v. State, 1 App. 620; Ferguson v. State, 36 App. 60, 35 S. W. 369.

9. Materiality of testimony or statement.—See P. C. art. 369, and notes.

An indictment for perjury must allege either by direct averment or by such facts as plainly show it, the materiality of the alleged false statement. Martin v. State, 52 App. 317; 25 S. W. 409; Buller v. State, 22 App. 488, 28 S. W. 462; Cravey v. State, 33 App. 557, 28 S. W. 472; Anderson v. State, 56 App. 369, 120 S. W. 462; Jordan v. State, 47 App. 333, 83 S. W. 821; Rosebud v. State, 50 App. 478, 8 W. 388.

The plender in the indictment may set out the facts showing the materiality of the false statement, or he may allege that the false statement was material; either is sufficient. McAvoy v. State, 39 App. 694, 47 S. W. 1099; Sisk v. State, 28 App. 432, 32 S. W. 647; Buller v. State, 33 App. 551, 28 S. W. 465; Cravey v. State, 33 App. 557, 28 S. W. 472; Scott v. State, 35 App. 11, 29 S. W. 274.

Either by direct averment, or from facts alleged, it must plainly appear that the alleged false statement was material to the issue undergoing investigation when the same was made. Anderson v. State, 1 App. 620; Lawrence v. State, 3 App. 476; Martinez v. State, 7 App. 394; Mattingly v. State, 8 App. 345; Donohoe v. State, 14 App. 638; Washington v. State, 22 App. 26, 3 S. W. 228; Partain v. State, Id. 160. This rule applies to each matter embraced in the alleged false statement upon which an assignment of perjury is desired to be made. Donohoe v. State, 14 App. 638; Martin v. State, 33 App. 317, 26 S. W. 400; Buller v. State, 33 App. 551, 28 S. W. 465; Craven v. State, 33 App. 557, 28 S. W. 472; Johnson v. State, 34 App. 553, 31 S. W. 337.

Materiality of the perjury assigned must be made to appear upon the face of the indictment. Brooks v. State, 29 App. 832, 16 S. W. 542; Agar v. State, 29 App. 965, 52 App. 261; Yardley v. State, 55 App. 48, 177 S. W. 479; Quere, whether enough of the proceedings ought not be set out to enable the court to judge of the materiality. Lawrence v. State, 2 App. 479. The materiality must be apparent, or alleged in general terms; and it is sufficient to aver that the accused was duly sworn. Massie v. State, 6 App. 61; Mattingly v. State, 8 App. 345.

Where affidavit for continuance is basis of perjury, indictment must set out that part which is considered material and on which assignment for perjury is proposed to be predicated. Rows v. State, 40 App. 351, 50 S. W. 336.

If it specifically charges the materiality of the matter assigned for perjury, such allegation, in an indictment for perjury, is sufficient in this respect, notwithstanding it does not literally follow the approved form. (See the statement of the case for the charging part of an indictment for perjury which, substantially conforming to Wilson's Criminal Forms, is held sufficient.) Kitchen v. State, 26 App. 365, 9 S. W. 461.

Where the execution of an order was a material inquiry an indictment for testifying falsely as to its execution need not allege the materiality of the order. Rahm v. State, 30 App. 310, 17 S. W. 416, 25 Am. St. Rep. 911.

This statute is not defective because it fails to set out facts showing the materiality of the evidence. Adams v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 270; Scott v. State, 35 App. 11, 29 S. W. 274.

An indictment alleging that defendant on trial for an offense testified that he did not play or throw dice on the trial day and that this testimony was material to the issue being tried sufficiently alleged its materiality. Johnson v. State, 34 App. 555, 31 S. W. 397.

An indictment alleging that it was material whether defendant charged for provisions and medicine to persons suffering was not sufficient without naming such persons or stating the particular times and places. Collins v. State, 51 App. 347, 101 S. W. 992.

An indictment for perjury at the trial of a third person charged with passing a forged instrument, which alleges that accused testified on the trial that he was with the third person in another county on a designated date, and that the state—ment was material and was false, is fatally bad, for failing to affirmatively show the materiality of the testimony, by showing that the testimony was in defense of the claim that the defendant was not in the county on the day on which it was alleged he passed the instrument. Wynne v. State, 60 App. 660, 133 S. W. 682.

Where an indictment for perjury alleged that accused testified that he had not been before a grand jury knowingly before a grand jury, it was held that the indictment did not show that they were material to any examination that the grand jury had jurisdiction to make, and there was no allegation of facts showing that the questions were material nor that they were falsely answered, the indictment was therefore insufficient, Ferguson v. State, 71 App. 600, 160 S. W. 691.

An indictment for perjury, alleging that the false statement was material to the issue on trial, is sufficient without alleging the facts showing the materiality. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 425, 180 S. W. 964.

Under Pen. Code, art. 309, providing that the giving of testimony immaterial to the inquiry is not perjury, an indictment, which failed to state that defendant's testimony was material, was fatally defective, though it stated that it became a material inquiry before the grand jury whether he played or saw others play the games which he testified to not playing or having seen played. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 239.

An indictment charging that it became a material inquiry before the grand jury whether defendant played any game on which money was bet or saw any such game played, and that he testified that he had not played or seen any such game played, and stating in the traverse that he knew that he had played three different games with certain parties named but not shown to have been inquired about, was insufficient for failure, was insufficient for failure, and the testimony given by defendant before the grand jury was material to the inquiry. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 248.

An indictment, alleging that it was a material inquiry on a trial whether T. sold and delivered a pint of whisky to accused, and whether accused paid T. a dollar therefor, that accused was sworn as a witness, and testified that he did not remember whether or not he bought a pint of whisky from T., or whether T. delivered to him a pint of whisky at another time, or whether he paid for that whisky, that such statements were material, whereas in truth accused did remember whether T. sold and delivered such whisky, and that he paid T. a dollar in each instance therefor, was defective, since while such testimony might become material, and the subject of perjury, under appropriate allegations, and if accused knew of the transaction about which he was testifying and refused to state the facts on the ground that he did not remember, in fact he did remember, his testimony might be materially false, but the allegations contained in the indictment, that accused's memory was treacherous, or that he failed to remember the transactions about which inquiry was made. Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 671.

An indictment for perjury must show the materiality of the false testimony, and, where it averred that, in a prosecution for slander in charging a female with having a whore, accused falsely testified that he had sexual intercourse with her, and that in the slander case truth of the charge was one of the issues, it was sufficient. Cox v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1067.

In a prosecution for perjury, not only the indictment must allege that defendant's testimony was on a material point, but proof must be made to that effect. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1071.

An indictment for false swearing need not charge that the matter or thing alleged as the basis of the false swearing was in any respect material to any matter or fact then under investigation, as it is only requisite that it be a false oath as to any past or present. Mann v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 163.

10. Knowledge of falsity.—An averment that defendant "well knew" the facts did not exist, instead of negating the oath, is not bad, and it is sufficient to charge a false oath as to one material fact, and to sufficiently assign perjury as to that. State v. Lindenburg, 16 Tex. 27.

It must be averred positively that the defendant had knowledge of the falsity of the statement at the time he made it. State v. Powell, 28 Tex. 626; Scott v. State, 34 App. 41, 28 S. W. 947.

It is not necessary, that the indictment allege that the party making the false statement knew it was false when he made it—overruling State v. Powell, 28 Tex. 626, on this point. Ferguson v. State, 36 App. 60, 35 S. W. 369.

The indictment must allege that the false statement was deliberately and wilfully made, and it is not necessary that it allege that the person making the statement knew that they were false when he made them. Ferguson v. State, 36 App. 60, 35 S. W. 369.

11. Negating truth or assigning perjury.—The falsity of the statement should appear by direct averment, and the formal conclusion will not supply the defect. Jackson v. State, 30 App. 626; Turner v. State, 36 App. 626; "S. W. 702.

It need not, however, negative that the statement was made "through inadvertence, or under agitation, or by mistake." Brown v. State, 9 App. 171.

The indictment must specifically negative the truth of each alleged false statement, and this should be done by direct averment. Gabrielsky v. State, 13 App. 428; Rohrer v. State, Id. 163; Donohoe v. State, 14 App. 633; Juaraqui v. State, 28 Tex. 629.

Two or more statements may be assigned as perjury in the same count. Moore v. State, 32 App. 405, 24 S. W. 95.

When there are two conflicting statements made by a witness it is error to assign perjury on both, the perjury should be assigned upon the one that is false, White v. State, 27 App. 473, 35 S. W. 525.

An indictment which alleges the falsity of material testimony is not defective.
because it also alleges the falsity of immaterial testimony. Dorrs v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 311.

The indictment in a prosecution for perjury was fatally defective, where, after alleging that a material inquiry in a former suit was whether J. E. D. called M. D., a liar, and raised his hand to strike her at a certain house, it then failed to allege that defendant falsely testified to those facts as happening at that place. Lowe v. State, 59 App. 557, 128 S. W. 842.

Where an indictment for perjury set forth the alleged false testimony, and then charged that such testimony, repeating it, was false and untrue, it sufficiently negatived the truth of the testimony. Barber v. State, 61 App. 96, 112 S. W. 577.

Where an indictment for perjury, based on the testimony of accused on the examining trial of a third person for disposing of mortgaged property, that the third person owed him one for $500 and one for $850, and that he had a mortgage to secure the $650 note, did not negativate the fact that a mortgage had been given, and did not negativate the fact that a third person had disposed of mortgaged property, and did not allege that there was no mortgage to secure the $850 note, which was genuine, it was insufficient to charge perjury. Waddle v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 882.

The defect in the indictment was not cured by evidence authorizing the inference that accused swore falsely as to the amount of his debt, and as to the amount paid him by the third person. Waddle v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 882.

An indictment charging false swearing, in making an affidavit to procure a marriage license, was defective for alleging that the girl mentioned in the affidavit was not then and there 21 years of age, when the affidavit was averred to have merely stated that she was 18 years of age. Knight v. State, 71 App. 56, 158 S. W. 543.

In an indictment for perjury, it is not necessary to traverse and negativate all the facts to which accused is alleged to have testified on the trial, but it is only necessary to negativate such of his testimony as was alleged to be false. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 428, 160 S. W. 964.

While the truth of the alleged false statement must be negativated in an indictment for perjury, no particular language is required; it being sufficient if the language used in the indictment specifically negativates the truth of the false statement. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 162.

The indictment for perjury, committed in a prosecution for theft, alleged that accused did falsely testify that W. was in a certain house from 9 o'clock to 11 o'clock on the night of the theft, and never left the house during that time, which statement was material to the issue, whereas, in truth and in fact, the said W. was, between 9 and 11 o'clock p. m. on that day, on or near the corner and intersection of East Fifth street and R. street, the said W. was then and there committing theft, and further alleged that the statement by accused that W. was in such house from 9 to 11 o'clock on the night of the theft "was false and untrue." Held, that the indictment sufficiently negativated the truth of the alleged false statement by accused. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 162.

An indictment for perjury committed by defendant in testifying falsely before the grand jury, that he had not played any games of cards, was not defective for failure to allege the places and times he had played such games or that he did not know that the players were not in a residence occupied by a family. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 239.

12. Proof and variance.—If the oath and the manner of administering it be set out, it becomes descriptive and must be proved. Massie v. State, 5 App. 81; West v. State, 6 App. 116; Deach v. State, 12 App. 249, 22 S. W. 976.

The statements upon which more than two more statements are made, proof that any one of them is false, will support a conviction. Moore v. State, 32 App. 465, 24 S. W. 95; Urban v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 514.

Where the time of the commission of the offense is proved by matter of record, as in perjury, a variance is fatal. O'Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 343.

If the indictment unnecessarily sets out the oath minutely, it must be proved as alleged, at least substantially. Massie v. State, 5 App. 81; Anderson v. State, 20 App. 312.

In prosecution for making false affidavit to account, variance as to items of account held fatal. Rohrer v. State, 13 App. 163.

It is necessary that every fact which goes to make up any particular assignment of perjury should be proved. Where several assignments are contained in same count it is not enough to disprove part. Brown v. State, 40 App. 50, 43 S. W. 108.

Though one of the assignments of perjury was bad, the court did not err in admitting testimony upon the bad assignment. Foreman v. State, 47 App. 178, 85 S. W. 809.

The precise day alleged in the indictment need not be proved. Lucas v. State, 27 App. 322, 11 S. W. 443.

In an indictment for testifying falsely on a trial for swindling by means of a draft, allegations pertaining to the draft related to a matter of inducement, and any fraud, were immaterial. King v. State, 32 App. 463.

The matter alleged as perjury must be substantially proved, but the exact words need not be. Hutcherson v. State, 33 App. 67, 24 S. W. 908.

Testimony that accused saw a gaming table in a structure attached to a saloon across the street, but not above, would not sustain a conviction under an indictment for perjury in swearing that he did not see such table in a certain "house." Waul v. State, 33 App. 226, 26 S. W. 199.

May charge as many false statements as the pleader may insert, and proof of either will be sufficient. Campbell v. State, 43 App. 602, 68 S. W. 531.

Under an indictment charging that defendant testified that S. did not use violent and abusive language, proof that defendant testified that he did not hear such language constituted a fatal variance. Leverette v. State, 32 App. 471, 21 S. W. 410.

Where the indictment was not predicated on a general assignment that the testimony was material but alleged how it became material the state was bound to prove the allegations as laid. Maroney v. State, 45 App. 159, 101 S. W. 466.

The court is inclined to the view that there was no variance though the false affidavit had a seal and the indictment failed to allege that it contained a seal. Adams v. State, 49 App. 361, 91 S. W. 225.

An alleged variance as to name of a person held not presented in such shape in the record that it could be noticed. Adams v. State, 49 App. 361, 91 S. W. 225.

In a prosecution for perjury, where numerous matters falsely sworn to were separately charged and negatived, proof of any one of them would warrant a conviction. Barber v. State, 94 App. 101, 112 S. W. 577.

Where an indictment for perjury presented separate and distinct allegations of materially false testimony, and distinctly traversed them, the state, to support a conviction, was not to prove the falsity of all the statements charged conjunctively. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 593.

Under an indictment for perjury, based on accused giving false testimony before the grand jury, testimony that when accused appeared before the grand jury he was warned, and did not have to testify to anything that would incriminate him, and that if he did testify anything he said could be used against him on the trial of his case, was admissible, though the indictment did not allege that he was so warned. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 593.

There averred that accused falsely testified on the trial of her husband that he did not strike her with a stick at a time named, evidence that she did so testify is admissible, but not evidence as to other matters occurring in the trial of the husband. Smith v. State, 70 App. 68, 156 S. W. 649.

The indictment for perjury charged that in a certain case the accused testified, "I know Mr. A. when I see him. He shot once with a pistol in the direction of Mr. O., and did not drop his pistol," etc., and further alleged that it was material whether the accused was present at such shooting, and whether A. had a pistol and shot, and that in fact accused was not immediately present at the time, and A. did not have a pistol, and that accused's testimony was wilfully false. Held, that it was not necessary to require the jury to find that the single sentence, "I know Mr. A. when I see him" was false. Young v. State, 70 App. 43-4, 157 S. W. 151.

Although an indictment for perjury charged that a material issue in an action in justice court against accused was whether he was a minor at the time he incurred certain obligations, and that upon that issue accused falsely testified, and the proof showed that upon accused's testimony of his minority plaintiff made a claim of surprise, and the case was continued, there is no fatal variance, a variance being a disagreement between the allegations and proof in some matter which in point of law is essential, and it being immaterial in this prosecution whether the cause in the justice court proceeded to final judgment or was continued. Poole v. State, 70 App. 184, 157 S. W. 168.

The indictment which alleges that accused falsely testified that he was not present at the house where the gaming occurred at the time charged, and that he did not wager at the game, is good if either statement was false and material. Mapes v. State, 71 App. 306, 158 S. W. 1190.

Where an indictment for perjury alleged accused testified that he did not bet at a game played with dice with two persons designated, or any other person at a certain time and place or at any other time, it was necessary, to sustain a charge that accused did bet at a game played with the persons designated at the time and place alleged, and a conviction could not be sustained by proof of other facts and circumstances showing that accused may have committed perjury in some other manner or about some other matter. Portwood v. State, 71 App. 447, 160 S. W. 345.

Art. 466. [454] Bribery; sufficient allegation for.—An indictment, under the laws relating to bribery, shall be sufficient if it charges that the defendant bribed or attempted to bribe any officer or other person named in the Penal Code who may be subject to bribery, with intent to influence the action of such person; or that any such officer or other person accepted, or agreed to accept, a bribe given or promised to influence his action, stating the particular thing or advantage given, promised, accepted, or agreed to be accepted, and the particular act to be influenced thereby. [Id., § 77.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 7A: Penal Code, arts. 174-193, and notes.

In general.—The indictment should charge that the gift preceded the act. Hutchinson v. State, 36 Tex. 293.

It is not essential that indictment should allege the kind or value of the money offered as a bribe. Leeper v. State, 29 App. 154, 15 S. W. 411.

Bribery of elector.—An indictment for offering a bribe at a primary election to name a candidate for Congress should allege that the election was held to elect a member to represent the United States—there being no such office as "Congress." Allen v. State, 45 App. 596, 78 S. W. 1065.
Bribery of witness.—A charge that the defendant, knowing B. to be a witness, offered to pay him $30 for an article of value to the value of $30, to secure the release of a prisoner from the district court at the April term, 1874, and not to be a witness before the grand jury at that term and in all cases, or a witness against the defendant in the district court at said term, is wholly insufficient in an indictment. State v. Hughes, 48 Tex. 518. If the offense be offering a bribe to a witness to disobey a subpoena or other legal process, the indictment must allege the issuance of such subpoena or other legal process; but if it be for offering a witness a bribe to avoid a subpoena or other legal process, it need not allege the issuance of a subpoena or other legal process. Scoggins v. State, 18 App. 298; Brown v. State, 12 App. 358; Jackson v. State, 43 Tex. 421; State v. Hughes, id. 518.

While alleging that, while defendant and M. were under indictments, defendant, to induce M. to disobey a subpoena, appeared and testifies in the case against defendant, agreed with M. to assist him to pay his fine, stating to him, "I would rather pay your fine than mine," does not sufficiently charge bribery. Peacock v. State, 37 App. 413, 35 S. W. 964.

Where the indictment for bribing a witness to avoid process of the court, in a case under consideration by the grand jury, failed to state the character of the process, it was fatally defective. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 552.

Bribery of officer.—Surplusage, see notes under article 476, post.

Where, under an indictment charging that accused bribed a policeman to not arrest, report, and file a complaint against him "and any other person or persons" for keeping certain premises for the purpose of gaming, and to not arrest, report, and file a complaint against him "and any other person or persons" for keeping a place of business where liquor was sold contrary to law, it was held that no surplusage was committed as surplusage and did not submit to the jury the allegations as to the other persons and as to keeping such place as a gaming place, they could not render the indictment defective. Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

Under the above-cited and Pen. Code, art. 174, providing that any person who shall bribe any officer with intent to influence his act on any matter which may be brought before him in his official capacity, or to do or omit to do any other act in violation of his duty, shall be punished as therein provided, article 176, providing that all city, county, and state officials are included within article 174, article 189, providing that any person who shall bribe any peace officer to do any other act contrary to his duty as an officer, or to omit to do any duty incumbent upon him as an officer, shall be punished as therein provided, article 192, defining "bribe" as meaning any gift, emolument, money, or thing of value, testimonial, privilege, appointment, or personal advantage, or the promise of either, bestowed or promised for the purpose of influencing an officer or other person in the performance of his official duty, or to an inducement to such officer, or any one of the same or some other person, and article 194, providing that the bribe need not be direct but may be hidden under the semblance of a sale, wager, etc., Code Cr. Proc. art. 460, providing that an indictment is sufficient if it charges the commission of the offense in ordinary and concise language in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant, and with that degree of certainty that will give the defendant notice of the particular offense with which he is charged, and enable the court to pronounce the proper judgment, and article 455, providing that the certainty required in an indictment is such as will enable the accused to plead the judgment that may be given upon it in bar of any prosecution for the same offense, an indictment alleging that accused unlawfully and corruptly offered to and did bribe a city policeman, and gave and paid to him $5, with the intent to influence him in the performance of his official duty to not arrest, report, and file a complaint against accused for unlawfully, directly or indirectly, keeping and being concerned in keeping a certain house designated for the sale of intoxicating liquor in a locality where local law was not in force, without having obtained a license, substantially followed the statute. Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

An indictment for bribing a policeman not to arrest, report, and file a complaint against accused was not defective for its alleged failure to charge that accused had committed an offense for which he could bribe an officer not to arrest him; since the crime is committed when the briber has corruptly, illegally, and immorally done all that he could to induce the officer not to do his duty, even though he has not received and never will receive the fruits of his crime. Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

An indictment for bribing a policeman with intent to induce him, in violation of his official duty, not to arrest, report, and file a complaint against accused, was not defective because of its failure to allege what the police officer's duties were; being a matter of law. Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

In order to constitute the crime of bribery, the gift, advantage, or emolument must be bestowed for the purpose of inducing the officer to do a particular act, in violation of his duty, or as an inducement to favor, or in some manner to aid, the person offering the same, or some other person, in a manner forbidden by law, and the gift, advantage, or emolument, must precede the act, and this should be charged in the indictment. Hutchinson v. State, 30 Tex. Cr. 391.

Where, for offering to bribe a district attorney to forward to the proper office the cause or proceeding in which it was sought to influence such officer, or give some definite description of it, so that it will appear to be a matter pending in court in which such officer was required or authorized by law to act in his official capacity, Collins v. State, 26 Tex. Supp. 502.

Where the indictment charged with offering to bribe a deputy sheriff, it was held sufficient to prove that said deputy sheriff was such de facto, and the offense did not depend upon whether he was such officer de jure. Flores v. State, 11 App. 192.
The indictment need not allege that accused offered to bribe the officer to do or omit an act in violation of his duty as such officer. The offense is complete when the offer to bribe is made for the purpose and with the intent to influence the officer in his official capacity. Ruth v. State, 35 App. 142, 33 S. W. 229.

An indictment should allege that the offer to bribe was with the intent to influence the officer in his vote or decision, etc. Hardin v. State, 36 App. 460, 37 S. W. 725.

An indictment of a county commissioner held sufficient, though it did not state the specific time when the official act was to be performed by the commissioners’ court. Ruffin v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 565, 38 S. W. 159.

An indictment against a county commissioner for accepting a bribe to vote for a public weigher which was thereafter to be chosen by the commissioners’ court, need not allege the date when the weigher was to have been chosen. Ruffin v. State, 36 App. 565, 38 S. W. 160.

That there was an incumbent of the office to which an appointment was to be made in consideration of the bribe, and that such incumbent was to be removed, need not be alleged. Ruffin v. State, 36 App. 565, 38 S. W. 160.

Where it is the duty of the commissioners’ court to remove the public weigher before appointing a new weigher, the indictment need not allege that the commissioners’ court intended to remove such incumbent. Ruffin v. State, 36 App. 565, 38 S. W. 169.

Indictment held to sufficiently allege how defendant county commissioner was to vote and act in the matter in respect to which he was bribed. Ruffin v. State, 36 App. 565, 38 S. W. 169.

Indictment held to sufficiently allege the date when the official act of defendant as county commissioner was to be performed. Ruffin v. State, 36 App. 565, 38 S. W. 169.

Indictment for attempting to bribe an officer held sufficient. Moore v. State, 44 App. 159, 69 S. W. 521.

For forum of indictment of a justice of the peace for accepting a bribe for failure to cause the arrest of one unlawfully carrying a pistol, see Morawitz v. State, 46 App. 568, 80 S. W. 997; Morawitz v. State, 49 App. 366, 91 S. W. 227.

An indictment alleging that defendant offered to bribe the duly qualified chief of police of a certain city and county, and a peace officer of such city and county, and offered to give as a bribe to the said chief of police, the sum of $5 with the intent to induce the chief of police to unlawfully permit defendant, who was then and there a prisoner in lawful custody, to escape from such custody, sufficiently charges an attempt to bribe a peace officer. Lee v. State, 47 App. 620, 85 S. W. 804.

Where an indictment charged an offer to bribe an assistant county attorney, it was not necessary for it to allege whether he was a state or county officer. Davis v. State, 70 App. 524, 158 S. W. 283.

Bribery of attorney.—An indictment for offering to bribe an attorney need not allege the particular acts to be done by him. Reed v. State, 43 Tex. 319. But if it be a district attorney, the character or the duty in which he was engaged should be alleged, with averments to show that the offer was to bribe him with respect to his official duties. Collins v. State, 25 Tex. Supp. 202.

Art. 467. [455] Misapplication of public money; sufficient charge of.—Under the laws relating to the misapplication of public money, an indictment may charge that the defendant misapplied certain public moneys in his hands by virtue of his trust, stating the amount of such public moneys and the manner in which the same was misapplied. [Id., § 8.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a: Penal Code, arts. 96-109, and notes: post, art. 470. Form 28.

In general.—Indictment held sufficient. Crump v. State, 33 App. 615, 5 S. W. 182.

The omission of the words “then and there” after the word “did” in the charging part of the indictment is sufficiently supplied by the words “did unlawfully, wilfully and fraudulently, take and misapply,” etc. Butler v. State, 46 App. 257, 81 S. W. 743.

A count alleging that accused, a county tax collector, did “unlawfully and fraudulently take, misapply, and convert to his own use” taxes collected, is sufficient. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901.

Repugnancy.—See notes under article 476, post.

Conjunctive allegations.—See notes under article 473, post.

Alleging ownership and conversion.—To properly charge the offense of the misapplication of county or city funds the indictment must allege the ownership of the funds in the county, city, or town; that the funds came into defendant’s possession by virtue of his office and that he converted the money fraudulently to his own use. Crane v. State, 26 App. 452, 9 S. W. 773; Steiner v. State, 33 App. 291, 98 S. W. 214; Hartnett v. State, 56 App. 281, 115 S. W. 855, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 133 Am. St. Rep. 971.

Embezzlement of city warrant.—An indictment against a city officer for embezzlement of a warrant belonging to the city is defective, where the warrant set out in the indictment was not under seal and did not show upon its face that its issuance was directed by the city council, as required by the charter. Dickey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 271.

Variance.—See note under Pen. Code, art. 1351.

Art. 468. [456] Description of money, etc., in theft, etc.—In dictments for theft or embezzlement of any coin or paper current as money, or of any checks, bills of exchange, or other such security, it shall be sufficient to describe the property in general terms; as, “money,” “checks,” “bills of exchange,” or other evidence of debt, or of about a certain amount. [Id., § 9.]

See notes under article 476, post, as to “spelling.”

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 7 a. See article 458 and notes thereunder.

St. Jones v. State, 29 App. 387, 46 W. 259; Butler v. State, 46 App. 287, 81
S. W. 742, 19 W. 308; Bracher v. State, 29 App. 466, 16 W. 302.

Meaning of “money.”—“Money,” under our statute, has a distinctive meaning, significant of value. Speer v. State, 50 App. 273, 97 S. W. 469.

Theft or robbery.—The character of the coin should be stated. Ridgeway v.
State, 41 Tex. 231.

An indictment describing the property as five ten dollar bills of the value of ten dollars each without calling them money is not sufficient. Jackson v. State, 34
App. 90, 29 S. W. 265.

An indictment charging accused with stealing a pocketbook and $30 in money, “paid money being then and there good and lawful money of the United States,” was not sustained by proof of the taking of a $10 bill and two $5 bills, without showing that it was paper money of any character issued under authority of the

The descriptive averments of an indictment must be proved as they are alleged; and in a prosecution for theft, where the property taken was described in the indictment as current money of the United States, it was necessary to prove money of a like kind and of the latter value than that taken, or the testimony of certain coins was insufficient. Rogers v. State, 55 App. 146, 124 S. W. 921.

Where the indictment alleged the larceny of a $5 gold piece of United States money, the state must not only prove that a $5 gold piece was stolen, but must prove that it was United States money. Maxey v. State, 55 App. 118, 124 S. W.
927.

Where the information charged accused with the theft of $1, current money of the United States, of the value of $1, the state must prove that the money taken was current money of the United States; that allegation being descriptive.

An indictment for theft of a pay check which describes the check by giving its number and the name of the person drawing it, the person to whom it is payable, and the amount of the check is sufficient, and it is not necessary to set out the check

An indictment for larceny from the person described the property taken as “corporal personal property, * * * to wit, $4 in money, two knives, and one ring.”
I Held, that the description was sufficient. Campbell v. State, 61 App. 504, 135 S.
W. 548.

Where an indictment for the theft of money alleged that the money was 19 $20 bills, 2 $5 bills, 1 $2 bill, and 1 $1 bill, each of United States paper currency money, and $5 cents in silver coin of the United States, and stated the value of each bill and coin and the total amount, such description was sufficient under the laws. Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 837.

In a prosecution for robbery, it is not necessary that the indictment allege the denomination and kind of money stolen from prosecutor. Bracher v. State, 72
App. 195, 161 S. W. 154.

Under this article and Pen. Code, art. 1329, defining "theft" as the fraudulent taking of corporeal personal property belonging to another, etc., art. 1337, providing that "property" as used in relation to the crime of theft includes money, etc., Code Cr. Proc. art. 458, providing that when it becomes necessary to describe property of any kind in an indictment, a general description thereof by name, kind, quality, number, and ownership, if known, shall be sufficient, a complaint and information charging that accused took from the possession of W. certain money of the value exceeding $1, was not insufficient because of the failure to allege that the stolen money was coins of the United States, or current as money of the Under this article it is sufficient to describe the property in general terms as money, an indictment for theft from the person, which describes the money stolen as "twenty dollars of lawful money of the United States," sufficiently describes

In view of this article and article 458, providing that a general description in an indictment of any property by name, kind, quality, number, and ownership is sufficient, an indictment for robbery, which describes the money stolen as $70 in gold, current money of the United States, and $160 in bank notes, current money of the United States, is sufficient, though the prosecutor can give a full description of both the gold and the bank notes by stating the denominations thereof. Terrell v.
State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1088.

Embezzlement in general.—The indictment need not describe the money, or any part of it, embezzled, State v. Brooks, 42 Tex. 62; but, it seems, it should state with certainty the kind of public moneys. Peacock v. State, 36 Tex. 447.

Misapplication of public funds.—An indictment for misapplication of public funds need not describe the money embezzled, though the better practice is to describe it generally by name, kind and ownership. State v. Brooks, 42 Tex. 63; Leaf v. State, 28 App. 140, 12 S. W. 738.

The phrase "current money of the United States," as used in an indictment for embezzlement by tax collector, charging conversion to his own use of such money, includes gold, silver, copper or other coin, bank bills, government notes, or other circulating medium which is current as money; Pen. Code, art. 1418, providing that the term "money," as used in the chapter on embezzlement, shall include, besides coin, bank bills, government notes, or other circulating medium. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901.

Art. 469. [457] Carrying weapons; indictment for.—An indictment under the laws regulating the carrying of deadly weapons may charge that the defendant carried about his person a pistol, or other deadly weapon, without authority of law, without a further averment of a want of legal excuse or authority on his part. [Id., § 10.]

See notes under article 473, post; Pen. Code, arts. 476-480, and notes.

Art. 470. [458] Certain forms of indictments prescribed.—The following forms of indictments in cases in which they are applicable are sufficient, and analogous forms may be used in other cases:

"Form No. 1—General form: In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas, the grand jury of ---- county present in the district court of said county, that about the ---- day of ----, A. D. ----, in ---- county, Texas [name or description of defendant], did [description of offense] against the peace and dignity of the state.

See Williams's Cr. Forms, 7a.

The preceding form would seem to be sufficient under decisions rendered without reference to it. See art. 451 and notes.

"Form No. 2—Murder: A B did, with malice aforethought, kill C D by shooting him with a gun; or, by striking him with an iron wedge; or, by poisoning him," etc.
See Pen. Code, art. 1141, et seq., and notes.
11 Sup. Ct. 234, 24 L. Ed. 916.

"Form No. 3—Assault to commit felony: A B did assault C D with intent to murder, rob, maim, disfigure or castrate him; or, did assault C D in attempting to commit burglary; or, did assault E F, a female, with intent to rape her," etc.
See Pen. Code, art. 1025, et seq., and notes.
Form 4 held unconstitutional in Allen v. State, 13 App. 28. (Omitted.)

"Form No. 5—Simple assault: A B did assault C D."
See ante, Pen. Code, art. 1098 et seq., and notes.
Need not allege battery, if only assault was committed. State v. Johnston, 11 Tex. 22.
Nor that the assault was unlawfully committed. State v. Lutterloh, 22 Tex. 211; State v. Hartman, 41 Tex. 562.
Indictment must allege the name of the assaulted party or that it was unknown, and it must be proved as alleged. Hardin v. State, 26 Tex. 115; Rape v. State, 21 App. 615, 21 S. W. 652.
Nor "coupled with ability," etc. Forrest v. State, 3 App. 322.
Nor the particular acts of violence. Roberson v. State, 16 App. 317.
An information held sufficient to support a verdict for simple assault. Dunn v. State, 71 App. 89, 158 S. W. 369.

"Form No. 6—Bribery: A B did bribe C D, a sheriff, by paying him ten dollars in money with intent that said C D should permit E F, a prisoner in his custody, to escape."
See ante, art. 466, and notes. Pen. Code, art. 174-173.

"Form No. 7—Gaming: A B and C D did play at a game with cards in a public place (or in a storehouse, etc.); or, A B and C D did bet at a game with dice; or, A B and C D did bet at a game of dominoes, crack-loo and crack-or-loo; or, A B and C D did bet at crack-loo or crack-or-loo. A B did keep a table (bank or alley) for gaming; or, A B did bet at a ten pin alley; or, did permit gaming in his house (or house under his control); or, did rent to C D a room to be used as a place for gaming; or, did bet on the result of an election.

See Pen. Code, arts. 548-574, and notes, and 586, and notes.

"Form No. 8—Rape: A B, an adult male, did rape C D, a female."

See ante, Pen. Code, art. 1063, and notes.

See indictment under Form No. 8, held fatally defective as embodying none of the elements of rape. Brinster v. State, 12 App. 612.

"Form No. 9—Affray: A B and C D did fight together in a public place."

See Pen. Code, art. 469, and notes.

"Form No. 10—Adultery and fornication: A B, a man, and C D, a woman, did have habitual carnal intercourse with each other, the said A B being lawfully married to E F."

See Pen. Code, art. 496, and notes as to adultery, and 1d., art. 494, and notes as to fornication.

"Form No. 11—Unlawful marriage: A B, having a wife then living, did unlawfully marry C D; or, A B, a white person, and C D, a negro, did knowingly intermarry with each other; or, having intermarried, did continue to live together as man and wife."

See Pen. Code, arts. 481 et seq. and notes.

"Form No. 12—Escape: A B, a sheriff, having the legal custody of C D, then accused of a murder in the first degree, did wilfully permit him to escape."

See P. C., art. 520 et seq., and notes. Must charge that the escape was "wilfully" permitted. Barthelow v. State, 26 Tex. 175.

Indictment need not show that the arrest was legal, nor that the officer's custody was legal. State v. Hedrick, 33 Tex. 485.

Form 13 held unconstitutional in Gabrielsky v. State, 13 App. 428. (Omitted.)

"Form No. 14—Keeping disorderly house: A B did keep a disorderly house."

See Pen. Code, art. 496, et seq., and notes.

An indictment for keeping a bawdyhouse, which substantially follows the form for an indictment laid down in White's Penal Code, § 594, is sufficient. Farrell v. State, 64 App. 200, 141 S. W. 535.

"Form No. 15—Lotteries: A B did establish a lottery, or did dispose of certain property by lottery."

See Pen. Code, art. 533, and notes.

"Form No. 16—Unlawful practice of medicine: A B did practice medicine without authority of law."

See Pen. Code, art. 756, et seq. and notes, and notes under article 474, post.

"Form No. 17—False imprisonment: A B did wilfully and without lawful authority detain C D against his consent."

See P. C., art. 1039 et seq. and notes. Indictment must allege the detention as unlawful. Redfield v. State, 24 Tex. 133.

It should allege the mode of detention, as by actual violence, force, threats, etc. Maner v. State, 8 App. 361.

"Form No. 18—Kidnapping: A B did falsely imprison C D for the purpose of removing him from the state."

See Pen. Code, art. 1056 et seq. and notes.

For essential allegations, see Clark v. State, 3 Tex. 282; Mason v. State, 29 App. 24, 14 S. W. 71.

"Form No. 19—Arson: A B did wilfully burn a certain house, the property of C D."

See P. C., art. 1200, et seq. and notes. Form 20 as prescribed by the old Code, declared unconstitutional in Rodriguez v. State, 12 App. 652, and is omitted. Form 21 held unconstitutional in Williams v. State, 12 App. 358; Hodges v. State, Id. 554; Young v. State, Id. 614; and Inshall v. State, 14 App. 145, and omitted.

"Form No. 22—Swindling: A B did falsely represent to C D that he had ten bales of cotton packed and ready for delivery, and by means of such false representation did obtain from C D one hundred dollars in money, with intent to appropriate it to his own use.”

See P. C., art. 1421, et seq. and notes.

“Form No. 23—Fraudulent disposition of mortgaged property: A B, having given to C D a lien in writing on his crop of cotton, did dispose of the same with intent to defraud said C D.”

“Form No. 24—Counterfeiting coin: A B did counterfeit a silver coin of the republic of Mexico, called a dollar, which was at the time current as money in the United States.”

See Pen. Code, art. 954, et seq.

“Form No. 25—Conspiracy: A B and C D did conspire together to murder E F.”

See Pen. Code, art. 1432, et seq., and notes.

“Form No. 26—Robbery: A B did rob C D of twenty dollars in money.”

See Pen. Code, arts. 924, 925, and notes.

“Form No. 28—Misapplication of public money: A B, a collector of taxes, did misapply one thousand dollars public moneys in his hands by virtue of his office, by converting said moneys to his own use.” [Id., § 11.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a. See, ante, art. 467, and notes.

See Pen. Code, art. 96, and notes.

Information need not, under this article 470, aver that the acts complained of were contrary to the statute. Burk v. State, 57 App. 635, 124 S. W. 658.

Art. 471. [459] Proof not dispensed with.—Nothing contained in article 470 shall be construed to dispense with the necessity for proof of all the facts constituting the offense charged in an indictment as the same is defined by law. [Id., § 12.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 7a.

See article 453, ante, and notes thereunder.

Necessity of facts or evidence supporting allegations in general.—The evidence should conform to and support the allegations of the indictment. Knight v. State, 71 App. 38, 168 S. W. 548; Malley v. State, 58 App. 435, 126 S. W. 698.

Intention of “common sense” indictment act.—The “common sense” indictment act was intended to obviate the requirement of circumstantial allegations, and not to affect the evidence necessary to establish the inculpatory facts. White v. State, 11 App. 476. Compare Manfield v. State, 17 App. 468.

Indictment as measured by allegations not by proof.—A pleading is measured by its allegations and not by the proof that may be introduced thereunder, and, in determining whether an indictment discloses a prima facie case, the court will assume that the time of the commission of the act charged is as stated therein. Meier v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 355.

Proof of time of offense.—See notes to art. 451, subd. 6.

Proof of unnecessary descriptive averments.—See notes to art. 453, ante.

Art. 472. [460] Libel; indictment for.—In an indictment for libel, it is not necessary to set forth any intrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application to the libeled party of the defamatory matter on which the indictment is founded; it is sufficient to state generally that the same was published concerning him. [Id., § 13.]

Art. 473. [461] Disjunctive allegations.—When the offense may be committed by different means or with different intents, such means or intents may be alleged in the same count in the alternative. [Id., § 14.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 7a.

In general.—The following decisions conflict with the preceding article, and lay down the following rule: If a statute makes it a crime to do this or that, mentioning several things conjunctively, the indictment may, as a general rule, embrace the whole in a single count; but in doing so it must use the conjunction "and" where "or" is found in the statute, else it will be defective as being uncertain. Hart v. State, 2 App. 49; Tompkins v. State, 4 App. 161; Berliner v. State, 6 App. 151; Coping v. State, 7 App. 41; Shawson v. State, Id. 63; State v. Randle, 41 Tex. 292; Phillips v. State, 29 Tex. 226; Lancaster v. State, 45 Tex. 610; Davis v. State, 201 S. W. 147.

It is is permissible where the statute may be violated in one of several ways, to charge conjunctively that the party violated the statute by all the means set forth in the law; but it is not permissible to charge it in the alternative. Venturio v. State, 37 App. 655, 40 S. W. 753.

Where the gist of an offense is the failure to do something which it is the defendant's duty to do, and the statute is in the alternative, an indictment or information following the language of the statute is sufficient. Byrd v. State, 72 App. 242, 162 S. W. 360.

Where several offenses are embraced in the same general statutory definition, and are punishable in the same manner, they are not distinct offenses, and may be upheld conjunctively in the same count, and a conviction may be had on proving the commission of the offense in any of the ways alleged. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 211.

Description.—An alternative description of property as a "trunk or chest" was held bad. Potter v. State, 39 Tex. 388. And so was "neat cattle or beavers." Costello v. State, 36 Tex. 234.

An alternative designation of an alleged forged instrument as "as a school voucher or check" does not vitiate it. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213.

Forgery.—Indictment for forgery of scholastic census which charges in the alternative that defendant took the census "as census trustee or sub-census trustee" is fatally defective. Munoz v. State, 40 App. 469, 58 S. W. 949.

What though an indictment for forgery charges that the offense was "with intent to injure and defraud," a conviction may be had upon showing that the offense was committed with intent either to injure or defraud. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

Misapplication of public money.—Indictments may charge conjunctively in one count the several ways the offense may be committed. Dill v. State, 35 App. 219, 33 S. W. 126, 60 Am. St. Rep. 37; Howell v. State, 29 App. 592, 16 S. W. 533; Willis v. State, 34 App. 145, 29 S. W. 787; Laroe v. State, 30 App. 574, 17 S. W. 934; Cooper v. State, 26 App. 509, 10 S. W. 196.

Carrying pistol.—An indictment or information alleging that defendant did unlawfully carry a pistol on or about his person is fatally defective in using the disjunctive "or," instead of the conjunctive "and." Harris v. State, 55 App. 533, 130 S. W. 500; Canterbury v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 522; Hunter v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 164.

Violation of liquor law.—Indictment or information for selling or keeping open for traffic on Sunday may charge both modes of violation in the same count. Brown v. State, 38 App. 597, 44 S. W. 176; Hall v. State, 41 App. 423, 55 S. W. 173; Hervy v. State, 41 App. 597, 58 S. W. 59.

A complaint for selling liquor without a license was not fatally defective because it alleged that defendant sold "malt liquor or beer." Figueora v. State, 71 App. 371, 159 S. W. 1188.

An indictment charging conjunctively a violation of the Allison Act, § 4 (art. 606c) making it unlawful, except as otherwise provided, for any person to ship, transport, carry, or deliver intoxicating liquors to any other person in prohibition territory, charges but one offense. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 211.

Unlawfully practicing medicine.—An indictment alleging that accused practicing medicine without a license treated a physical disease in the capacity of a physician or doctor or both is not objectionable because in the disjunctive; the words "physician" and "doctor" being synonymous. Milling v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 434.

A complaint against a physician for violating the physicians' registration law, alleging that accused did unlawfully treat a disease "or" disorder, to wit, did treat one S., a human being, for tuberculosis and constipation, etc., was not objectionable for uncertainty in the use of the disjunctive, since the designation of the same sufficiently showed that they were both diseases and disorders. White v. State, 70 App. 285, 157 S. W. 152.
Art. 474. [462] Statutory words need not be strictly followed.
—Words used in a statute to define an offense need not be strictly pursued in the indictment; it is sufficient to use other words conveying the same meaning, or which include the sense of the statutory words. [Id., § 15.]

See notes under 473, ante.

Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 7a.

Particular crimes, see notes to Pen. Code articles relating thereto.

But if the statutory words be words of technical meaning, they can not be substituted by other words, as “malice aforethought” in murder, or “fraudulently” in theft. Drummond v. State, 2 Tex. 150; McElroy v. State, 11 App. 225; Cravey v. State, 26 App. 30, 36 S. W. 658, 61 Am. St. Rep. 833; Chance v. State, 27 Tex. 411, 11 S. W. 457. And where the statute in describing the offense uses a generic term, it will not be enough to employ that term only, but the species must be stated because the facts in the case. Bush v. R., 1 Tex. 693; State v. West, 10 Tex. 253; Brewer v. State, 5 App. 248; McAfee v. State, 38 App. 124, 41 S. W. 627. But if the statute, in defining the offense, sets out the specific acts constituting it, and not by the use of generic terms, the indictment may follow it literally. McFain v. State, 41 Tex. 355.

It is always safer, in describing the offense, to use the words of the statute, instead of undertaking to substitute them with other words of equivalent or more comprehensive meaning. Burch v. R., 1 Tex. 695; Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 303; State, 21 Tex. 259; Barthelow v. State, 36 Tex. 175; State v. Mooreland, 27 Tex. 726; Juaraqui v. State, 28 Tex. 655; State v. Stalis, 37 Tex. 446; Fowler v. State, 38 Tex. 559; Hart v. State, 2 App. 46; White v. State, 3 App. 605; Jones v. State, 12 App. 424. And see Goldstein v. State, 36 App. 193, 197, 198, 204; Curry v. State, 58 App. 184, 126 S. W. 31.

Notwithstanding the general rule is, that in describing the offense in the indictment it is sufficient to follow the language of the statute, there are instances which form exceptions to this general rule, and in which more certainty is required either from the obvious intention of the legislature, or from the application of known principles of law. State v. West, 10 Tex. 553; State v. Campbell, 29 Tex. 44, 94 Am. Dec. 251; Portwood v. State, 29 Tex. 47, 94 Am. Dec. 258; White v. State, 3 App. 665; Horan v. State, 7 App. 183; Houskey v. State, 9 App. 202; Kerr v. State, 17 App. 172, 50 Am. Rep. 122; Dixon v. State, 21 App. 317, 1 S. W. 448. If extrinsic facts be necessary to bring the act within the statute, they must be averred. Brewer v. State, 5 App. 248; Gray v. State, 7 App. 10; Vaughan v. State, 9 App. 583; Curry v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 123; Longenotti v. State, 23 App. 61, 2 S. W. 628. And see State v. Williams, 14 Tex. 98. But it is sufficient to pursue the words of the statute, if by so doing the act which constitutes the offense is fully, directly, and expressly alleged, without any uncertainty or ambiguity. Bigby v. State, 5 App. 101; Phillips v. State, 29 Tex. 226; McFain v. State, 38 App. 388; Martin v. State, 38 App. 17; Hargis v. State, 53.

Art. 474  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

Negativing exceptions or exemptions.—See particular offenses in Penal Code. If there be exceptions contained in the same act which creates the offense, the indictment must show, negatively, that the defendant, or the subject of the indictment, does not come within the exception. Lewis v. State, 2 App. 26; Colchell v. State, 22 App. 58; S. W. 129; Leatherwood v. State, 6 App. 244; McFain v. State, 11 Tex. 235; State v. Duke, 42 Tex. 455; State v. Clayton, 43 Tex. 410; Educational Bd. v. Steele, 27 App. 243; 38 S. W. 596; McCann v. State, 40 App. 222; 48 S. W. 612; Byrd v. State, 50 App. 512, 129 S. W. 500. When the statute embraces in its body or enacting clause, an exception so that one can not be read without the other, the indictment must negative such exception. Rice v. State, 37 App. 26, 38 S. W. 801, and cases cited: Williams v. State, 37 App. 25; 39 S. W. 664; Williamson v. State, 41 Cr. App. 461, 55 S. W. 570.

But where the words of the statute defining the offense are so entirely separable from the exception that all the ingredients constituting the offense may be clearly and accurately alleged without any reference to the exception, it is not necessary that the exception should be negatived. McFain v. State, 11 Tex. 235; Moseley v. State, 13 App. 311; Blasdell v. State, 5 App. 58; Owens v. State, 3 App. 494; Summerlin v. State, Id. 444; Williams v. State, 27 App. 238, 39 S. W. 604; Brown v. State, 9 App. 171; Williamson v. State, 41 App. 461, 55 S. W. 570. And see Lewis v. State, 7 App. 567; Zallner v. State, 15 App. 23; Antle v. State, 6 App. 292, and cases cited.

An indictment charging accused with operating an automobile on a public road at a speed greater than 16 miles an hour, must negative the matter in the proviso that the race limit shall not apply to race courses or speedways, and must allege that accused did not drive his machine on a race course or speedway. Byrd v. State, 59 App. 513, 129 S. W. 620.

Art. 475. [463] Matters of judicial notice, etc., need not be stated.—Matters of which judicial notice is taken (among which are included the authority and duties of all officers elected or appointed under the general laws of this state), and presumptions of law need not be stated in an indictment. [Id., § 16.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 7a.

Matters of which judicial notice is taken.—See notes under articles 484 and 783, post.

Art. 476. [464] Defects of form do not affect trial, etc.—An indictment shall not be held insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment or other proceedings thereon be affected, by reason of any defect or imperfection of form in such indictment which does not prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant. [Id., § 17.]

1. Explanatory.—The “Common Sense” indictment Act ends with this article.

2. Effect in general.—Where accused was found guilty under the second count of an indictment, charging an offense, it was not prejudicial error to refuse to quash the first count, which was defective, and under which no evidence was admissible that was not admissible under the second count on the first being quashed. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 49.

Appellant was charged by information with disturbance of the "inhabitance" of a building inhabited by the word inhabitant, which was obviously intended, and the two words are idem sonans. Keller v. State, 25 App. 325, 8 S. W. 275. "Israel" and "Israel" were held idem sonans. Boren v. State, 22 App. 637, 25 S. W. 775.

It is not fatal to omit the last "t" from the word "intent." Stinson v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1033. Or the last "t" in "street." Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 583. Or the left "n" in "carnally." Bailey v. State, 98 S. W. 224. Or that the word "capable," is misspelled "capable." Figueroa v. State, 71 App. 371, 139 S. W. 1185. Or that the word "woman" is spelled "wom," where it is alleged in other places that prosecutrix was a female. Qualls v. State, 15 S. W. 496. Or that the word "monet" is used for "money." Wright v. State, 70 App. 73, 158 S. W. 624. Or that the word, "respectfully," is used for "respectively." Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 590.

The word "appropriate" may be used for "appropriate." Hawkins v. State, 64 App. 480, 142 S. W. 717.

The use of the word "possession" instead of "possession" held a fatal defect. Evans v. State, 24 App. 110, 29 S. W. 266. But see State v. Williamson, 43 Tex. 509.

Where a word was misspelled, the district judge had no power to authorize the district attorney to add the omitted letter; and, if the omission invalidated the indictment, the addition did not cure the defect. Stinson v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1049.

Bad handwriting, if legible, will not vitiating. Irvin v. State, 7 App. 199; Hudson v. State, 16 App. 215; Dodd v. State, Id. 370; State v. Morris, 35 Tex. 372; Taylor v. State, 466, 16 S. W. 302; Cheeseborough v. State, 76 S. W. 89.

4. Erasures and Interlineations.—Objections to an indictment because of erasures and interlineations can only be reached by exceptions to the indictment; and not the jury, must decide what are the words of an indictment or other pleading. The burden is upon the defendant to show that the erasures or interlineations were not the act of the grand jury. Dodd v. State, 10 App. 376. See, also, Itum v. State, 30 App. 110, 17 S. W. 416, 28 Am. St. Rep. 177; Perez v. State, 18 App. 327; Huff v. State, 23 App. 291, 4 S. W. 890.

5. Typographical Error.—Typographical error in an indictment which leaves the meaning clear does not vitiating the indictment. Whitley v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 70.

6. Name of Prosecuting Attorney Typewritten.—That the name of the prosecuting attorney was typewritten on the indictment is immaterial. Miller v. State, 36 App. 47, 35 S. W. 391.

7. Omissions.—See notes under article 467, ante.

An omission of a material word will render the indictment invalid—as the omission of the word "did" in charging the defendant with the commission of the offense. State v. Hutchinson, 26 Tex. 111; State v. Daugherty, 30 Tex. 369; Ewing v. State, 1 App. 362; Sparks v. State, 35 Tex. 349; Edmondson v. State, 41 Tex. 466; Walker v. State, 9 App. 42; Walker v. State, 9 App. 133; 39 S. W. 618; Barfield v. State, 39 App. 342, 45 S. W. 1015. The word "at" is sometimes material. State v. Huston, 12 Tex. 245; State v. Daugherty, 30 Tex. 369. Also the word "and" in a joint indictment. State v. Toney, 13 Tex. 74. The charge word "and" without for the time of the incident, but it is better practice to use the word. Brown v. State, 16 App. 245. So the word "to" in one instance was held to be essential. Jones v. State, 21 App. 319, 17 S. W. 424. The omission of the word "of" presents no error, when, by reading the entire indictment, its intent and meaning is clear. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 996. But the omission of the word "of" after the word "possession" in charging theft has been held fatal. Riley v. State, 27 App. 606, 11 S. W. 642.

An indictment for burglary alleged the house was "occupied," instead of occupied by S; held, fatally defective. Scroggins v. State, 36 App. 117, 35 S. W. 998. But the omission of the phrase "then and there" is immaterial. Smith v. State, 36 App. 442, 37 S. W. 743. It is not fatal to an indictment for burglary that it is alleged defendant broke and entered the car with intent to take corporeal personal property, omitting "personal"; it being in the same count alleged he took from it corporeal personal property, with intent to appropriate it to his own use and deprive the owner of its value. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 506.

8. Surplusage or Redundancy.—Unnecessary words do not vitiating. Sadler v. Republic, Dallas, 610. And unnecessary averments may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Moreland, 27 Tex. 726. Recitals which are not repugnant or contradictory to the body of the indictment, and which do not render unintelligible any of the material, traversable matters constituting the charge may be rejected as surplusage. See further, as to surplusage. See further, as to surplusage. 11 Tex. 422. See further, as to surplusage. 40 Tex. 480; Warrington v. State, 1 App. 198; Gordon v. State, 2 App. 154; Burke v. State, 5 App. 74; Hampton v. State, Id. 465; Mayo v. State, 7 App. 342; Smith v. State, 6 App. 150; W. W. v. State, 10 App. 177; Osbourn v. State, 23 App. 396, 59 S. W. 526; McConnell v. State, 22 App. 354, 3 S. W. 599, 59 Am. Rep. 647; Gibson v. State, 17 App. 674; Taylor v. State, 29 App. 466, 16 S. W. 303; Mathews v. State, 39 App. 553, 47 S. W. 647, 48 S. W. 183, and cases cited; Lomax v. State, 38 App. 318, 59 S. W. 52. If one offense is fully charged, and another defectively, the latter may be treated as surplusage. State v. Coffey, 41 Tex. 46; Crow v. State, 41
Tex. 465; Henderson v. State, 2 App. 88; Holden v. State, 18 App. 91. As to Unnecessary allegations do not vitiate the indictment, but merely devolve on the burden of proving them. Redundancy does not render bad an Redundant allegations and allegations not necessary to a description of the offered offense, or if omitted, which can be omitted without it defecting the indictment, are to be rejected as surcharge. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 152

S. W. 893.

Where an indictment filed July 16, 1912, in a prosecution for following the business of selling intoxicating liquor in prohibition territory, averred that while the probatory law was in force during the time between November 16, 1911, and the filing of the indictment and before presentment thereof, accused did unlawfully engage in and pursue the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor, it was held that the specific sales on dates mentioned before filing the indictment, an allegation in the latter part of the indictment charging the offense had been committed after November 16, 1912, will be disregarded as surcharge; the date being obviously a mistake and the allegation being wholly unnecessary. Creed v. State (Cr. App.)
155 S. W. 210.

Unnecessary allegations may be rejected as surcharge, and allegations which are not essential to the offense, and may be omitted without affecting the charge, may be disregarded as surcharge. Goodwin v. State, 70 App. 600, 158 S. W. 274.

An indictment charging an offer to bribe an assistant county attorney was not defective because it recited that he was a judicial officer of the state, even continuing not a judicial officer, since this recital, if true, could be treated as surcharge; the indictment having alleged the office he held.
Davis v. State, 70 App. 524, 158 S. W. 253.

A complaint, charging that accused "did on November 10th, and before the making of complaint, then and there did" assault another is not bad for indefiniteness, for the first "did" may be disregarded as surcharge. Johnson v. State, 71
App. 610, 160 S. W. 702.

The indictment clearly charging an offense under the statute both in getting drunken and being found intoxicated in a public place, unnecessary allegations do not invalidate it but are to be treated as surcharge. Kuykendall v. State, 72 App.
153, 161 S. W. 130.

Where an indictment, charging the defendant with procuring another to burn his insured house, alleged that the other maliciously set fire to the house, and that the defendant paid the other a certain sum of money in another county, the state need not prove the malice, or the payment of the exact sum, or that the payment was made in that county, since allegations were not necessary; all that was necessary, since the rule that, when a person, place, or thing necessary to be alleged in an indictment is particularly described, it must be proved as described does not apply to allegations, which are mere surcharge. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.)
198 S. W. 122.

The validity of a complaint and information, alleging that accused unlawfully pursued the occupation of a pawnbroker without a license, and averring that the taxes due by him to the state for the occupation amounted to $100, and that the taxes due the county on the occupation amounted to $75, and that the taxes due the county had been "therefore" duly levied by the commissioners' court of the county, is unaffected by the inadvertent use of the word "therefore" in place of "theretofore," which must be regarded as surcharge. Schapiro v. State (Cr. App.)
169 S. W. 683.

Where an indictment for wife abandonment after marriage in order to escape pursuit for seduction alleged that a complaint had been filed in a justice court of M. county, the further words, "precinct No. — — of" are surcharge. Baskins
v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 723.

9. Repugnancy.—See note on "Duplicity" under article 481.

Any or uncertain as to time or place is bad. Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 391. The misstatement of a written or printed instrument is immaterial, if the instrument be set out in full. Luckey v. State, 26 Tex. 382. But see Westbrook
v. State, 23 App. 401, 5 S. W. 248 and Roberts v. State, 2 App. 4, which hold that in charging forgery it is not essential that the forged instrument should be set out both by its purport and its tenor, but that if it is so set out, any repugnancy between the two allegations will be fatal to the indictment. Repugnancy, in general, consists of two inconsistent allegations in one pleading; and since both cannot be true, and there is no means of ascertaining which is meant, the whole must be as though neither existed, leaving the indictment inadequate. This doctrine applies to counts only; that is to say, no count should contain repugnant matters, but it does not in the very nature of things, apply to the repugnancy which of necessity must exist in different counts. Counts may be joined containing matter repugnant one to the other. Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463. See an instance of repgunacy in Hardeman v. State, 16 App. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 821. See, also, Waters v. St. England (v) State, 20 App. 747, 26 S. W. 775; State v. 1 App. 528; 15 S. W. 94; Stiles v. State, 34 App. 69, 28 S. W. 160. Where indictment charges in one count the burning of a house belonging to one person and in another the burning of personal property belonging to another it will not support a conviction. Samuels v.
State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 1679.

In charging rape in one count and incest in another, the indictment is not duplicituous nor repugnant, though predicated on the same transaction. Owens v.

Indictment for misapplication of public money charged defendant as an officer and as clerk and employed of an officer, defendant being the assistant financial agent of penitentiaries. Held, that the allegations are not repugnant. Busby v.
State, 21 App. 280, 165 S. W. 638.
PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

Art. 477.

10. Duplicity.—See notes under article 481, post.

11. Giving wrong name or failure to give full name.—The giving of a wrong name, even to a false name, to give an accused's full name is a matter of form only, and, where he was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description was not shown to be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person alleged to have committed the offense charged, the judgment will not be reversed. Crescendo v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 936.

12. Failure to allege date of local option election.—Though an information for violating the local option law is required, by this subdivision 2 of article 478, to allege the date of the local option election by which the law was put in force, such allegation being not part of the offense, failure of an information to include it did not render it fatally defective, under article 476, providing that formal defects in indictments shall be disregarded, which is made applicable to informations by article 48, Mo. v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 943. An objection that an indictment for selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory does not allege the date of the election on prohibition is waived, where made for the first time in the motion for rehearing. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 158.

13. Denial of motion to quash counts not submitted.—Denial of a motion to quash certain counts of an indictment, which the court did not submit to the jury, is harmless. Massie v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 73.

14. Submission of different counts in burglary.—Error in submitting a count charging burglary with intent to rape with a count charging burglary with intent to steal was harmless, where accused was convicted under the latter count. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 634.

15. Theft.—In a prosecution for theft of a pay check, an objection on appeal that there was a variance between the instrument offered in evidence and the one set out in the indictment cannot be sustained where the instrument itself was not offered in evidence, and the only evidence in the record tending to show the alleged variance was a statement in the bill of exceptions that the check had been originally written for a larger amount than that alleged in the indictment, and had been afterwards changed, and a statement by counsel in making his objection pointing out the alleged variance; there being no finding of fact as to what was the face of the check. Fulshear v. State, 59 App. 1234. W. 124.

Under this article and article 453, providing that the context and subject-matter shall be considered, and that the certainty required in an indictment is such as will enable accused to plead the judgment upon it in bar, and article 460, providing that an indictment charging the commission of an offense in ordinary language so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is meant, and to enable the court on conviction to pronounce the proper judgment, shall be sufficient, an indictment for forgery under Pen. Code, art. 947, which alleged that accused unlawfully and with intent to defraud and for the purpose of forgery of a signature to a certain deed purporting to entitle the grantee named therein to certain lands which, if true, would have affected the title and interest in such lands, sufficiently charged that the instrument would have affected the title to lands. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 899.

In a prosecution for forgery, where the second count of the indictment charged the passing of a forged instrument, the impropriety of the court's refusal to sustain a motion to quash was harmless, where that count was not submitted to the jury, and all the evidence introduced was admissible under the first count. Cheesebrough v. State, 76 App. 612, 157 S. W. 762.

20. Assault.—One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the information, attempting to charge an aggravated assault, is defective because it fails to state the manner in which the instrument charged was used. Jaehnig v. State, 57 App. 156, 132 S. W. 267.

21. Charging carrying of pistol and assault.—That an indictment charged accused with unlawfully carrying a pistol as well as with assault could not have injured her where she was only convicted of carrying a pistol, and it did not appear that evidence was admitted on the other count. Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 611.

Art. 477. [465] Definition of an "information."—An "information" is a written statement filed and presented in behalf of the state by the district or county attorney, accusing the defendant therein named of an offense which is by law subject to be prosecuted in that manner. [O. C. 402.]

See note to following article "Requisite 3."

Nature and purpose of information.—The rules applicable to informations apply to informations in determining their sufficiency. State v. Elliott, 41 Tex. 224.
Art. 477

PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC. (Title 7

Art. 478. [466] Requisites of an information.—An information is sufficient if it has the following requisites:

1. It shall commence, "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas." See Willson's Cr. Forms, 745.

2. That it shall appear to have been presented in a court having jurisdiction of the offense set forth. See Willson's Cr. Forms, 815.

3. That it appear to have been presented by the proper officer.

4. That it contains the name of the person accused, or be stated that his name is unknown, and give a reasonably accurate description of him.

5. It must appear that the place where the offense is charged to have been committed is within the jurisdiction of the court where the information is filed.

6. That the time of the commission of the offense be some date anterior to the filing of the information, and that the offense does not appear to be barred by limitation.

7. That the offense be set forth in plain and intelligible words.

8. That the information conclude, "Against the peace and dignity of the state." See Willson's Cr. Forms, 746.

9. It shall be signed by the district or county attorney, officially. [O. C. 403.]

Requisite 1.—See ante, art. 451, and notes. See West v. State, 27 App. 472, 11 S. W. 482.

An information must commence "in the name and by the authority of the state of Texas." Saline v. State, 14 App. 144; Jefferson v. State, 24 App. 555, 7 S. W. 244; Colvert v. State, 15 App. 558; Treadaway v. State, 61 App. 557; 155 S. W. 147. The first count may be looked to to supply allegations as to commencement in subsequent counts. Dancey v. State, 35 App. 615, 34 S. W. 113, 938.

Requisite 2.—See ante, art. 451, and notes.

An information must show that it is presented in a court having jurisdiction of the offense charged. Davis v. State, 2 App. 184, and cases cited; Thornberry v. State, 3 App. 36; Bowen v. State, 28 App. 498, 13 S. W. 787, citing Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213.

An information may be presented in vacation. State v. Corbit, 42 Tex. 88; Rassberry v. State, 1 App. 664.

An information filed in county court, charging that accused sold intoxicating liquors on September 29, 1909, which was after Act April 24, 1909 (Acts 31st Leg. [1st Ex. Sess.] c. 55), went into effect, and that the sale was made after an election had been held in the territory, was insufficient in failing to show that the county court had jurisdiction of the offense, for the county court has jurisdiction only of misdemeanors, and, if the election was held after act of April 24, 1909, went into existence, the sale was a felony. Head v. State, 64 App. 112, 141 S. W. 566.

Though an information for violating the local option law is required, by subdivision 2, to allege the date of the local option election by which the law was put in force, such allegation being no part of the offense, failure of an information to include it did not render it fatally defective, under article 476, providing that formal defects in indictments shall be disregarded, which is made applicable to informations by article 480. Meyer v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 919.

Complaint as prerequisite.—See notes to art. 479, post.

Requisite 3.—See ante, article 477 and notes.

An assistant county attorney, though designated a "deputy county attorney," is a "proper" officer. Wilkins v. State, 33 App. 320, 26 S. W. 409. And see Adams v. State, 47 App. 35, 81 S. W. 363.

An information by a county attorney must allege that he presents to the court that accused has committed the offense charged, and the second count of an information which reads, "and the affiant aforesaid, upon his oath aforesaid, further deposés and says that on said above date and at said time and place, "is objects that affiant charged that affiantcharged that affiantcharged an offense, but not presenting that accused committed the offense charged. Compton
v. State, 71 App. 7, 153 S. W. 515.
An information prepared and presented by an attorney who was not county atttorney and had not previously been appointed to prosecute the case, is not good, and a motion to quash should have been sustained. Sims v. State, 72 App.
533, 162 S. W. 1154.
Where the complaint was valid, but the information was invalid because signed by an attorney not appointed to prosecute, on reversal of the case, the county attorney can file another information and proceed with the prosecution. Sims v.
State, 72 App. 533, 162 S. W. 1154.
Requisite 4.—See ante, article 451, and note.
It is certain that the name of the person accused, etc. Pancho v. State, 55 App.
407, 8 S. W. 476. The information may designate the defendant by name without following the complaint, which designates him, also, with an alias. Harrison v.
State, 6 App. 256. If the name of the accused is stated wrong, it may be corrected on his suggestion, but not on that of the prosecuting officer. Putillo v. State, 3 App. 442; Bassett v. State, 4 App. 41; Wilson v. State, 6 App. 154. A variance between the name of the accused as stated in the complaint and that stated in the information, is fatal. Mc DeVro v. State, 23 App. 425, 5 S. W. 133. See, also, Stein-berger v. State, 35 App. 492, 34 S. W. 617.
— Suggestion of true name, and amendment.—See arts. 550-563, 567, post, and notes.
Requisite 5.—See ante, article 451 and notes, and ante, art. 451, subd. 5 and notes, and ante, subd. 4.
Venue being properly alleged in the complaint will not supply omission in the information, but will serve as basis for new information. Lawson v. State, 13
App. 3; Smith v. State, 25 App. 454, 8 S. W. 616, and cases cited; Orr v. State,
25 App. 453, 8 S. W. 644.
Information is insufficient if it fails to allege the venue of the offense. Orr v.
State, 25 App. 453, 8 S. W. 644; Smith v. State, 25 App. 454, 8 S. W. 645.
An information charging that in a certain town, voting precinct, and county of the offense, which a public election was being held on a certain day, and there unnaturally and wilfully gave to another intoxicating liquor, su-ciently charged, by the use of the words "then and there," that the offense was Requisites of complaint as to venue.—See notes to art. 479, post.
Requisite 6.—Ante, art. 451 and notes.
It must allege the time of the commission of the offense, and the time must be a date prior to the presentment of the information, and not so remote as to show that the offense is barred by limitation. Blake v. State, 3 App. 149; York v. State, Id. 163; Selber v. State, 4 App. 103; Brewer v. State, 5 App. 248; State v. Tandy,

The complaint cannot be resorted to, to supply the allegation of time in the An information that "heretofore on the 1st day of April, etc." and which was filed on April 1st, alleges the date of the offense before the filing of the informa-Under an information, filed November 25th, charging that defendant unlawfully carried knuckles on November 23d, evidence that the state's witness took them from him on November 27th would not sustain a conviction, since an information cannot charge an offense to be committed in the future. Graso v. State (Cr. App.)
155 S. W. 209.
On motion in arrest it was urged that the information did not charge that the crime was committed before presenting the information. The information, as well as the complaint, sworn to on October 2d, charged the offense committed on September 23th. The information bore no file mark, but it was shown to have been in fact filed on the same day as the complaint. Held, that the court properly ordered the information to be filed nunc pro tunc as of October 2d. Hall
v. State, 70 App. 240, 156 S. W. 644.
The date laid in an information is immaterial, and the conviction may be had upon evidence showing the commission of the offense charged at any time within the period of limitations and prior to the filing of the information. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 299, 156 S. W. 927.
A complaint and information sworn to on July 1, 1913, charging the commission of an offense on July 29, 1913, was fatally defective. Warner v. State (Cr. App.)
167 S. W. 1109.
— Variance between information and complaint.—See notes to art. 479, post.
Requisite 7.—Ante, art. 451, subd. 7, and notes.
The averments charging the offense must be direct, positive, and certain, and not by way of argument and inference. Hunt v. State, 9 App. 404; Moore v. State, 7 App. 608; Thomas v. State, 13 App. 227; Prophit v. State, Id. 233; Brown v.
State, 11 App. 451; Woodward v. State, 33 App. 554, 25 S. W. 204.
The rules with respect to the allegations in indictments and the certainty required, are applicable, also, to informations. Post, art. 450. State v. Elliott, 41
Tex. 224; Calendar v. State, 8 App. 538; Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664.
The offense must be set forth in plain and intelligible words. Lasindo v. State, 2 App. 58; Swancoat v. State, 4 App. 105; Walton v. State, 12 App. 117.
— Bad spelling and grammatical errors.—See notes to art. 476, ante.
Requisite 8.—An information must conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state." Calvert v. State, 5 App. 638; Saine v. State, 14 App. 144; Thompson 205

In this case information is insufficient because the concluding clause, "against the peace and dignity of the state," is omitted. But the complaint upon which it is founded being insufficient, the prosecution is not dismissed, but is remanded that new information may be preferred. Wood v. State, 27 App. 528, 11 S. W. 525. Further, on informations, see Robinson v. State, 25 App. 111, 7 S. W. 531; Jones v. State, 30 App. 426, 17 S. W. 1068.

— Process.—Process issued by a city court must conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the state." Leach v. State, 36 App. 248, 54 S. W. 471, and cases cited.

Requisite 9.—It does not invalidate the information that it is not signed officially by the district or county attorney, if it purports to have been presented by him. But the better practice is that the officer presenting it should sign it officially. Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664. See, also, Wilkins v. State, 38 App. 320, 26 S. W. 406.

Official signature of the district or county attorney is essential. But note that art. 556 specifically provides that the omission of such signature will not vitiate an information. Jones v. State, 30 App. 426, 17 S. W. 1068, citing Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664.

The omission of the signature may be cured by amendment. Holcomb v. State, 60 App. 463, 132 S. W. 362.

Variance between information and complaint.—See notes to art. 475, post.

Art. 479. [467] Shall not be presented until oath has been made, etc.—An information shall not be presented by the district or county attorney until oath has been made by some credible person, charging the defendant with an offense. The oath shall be reduced to writing and filed with the information. It may be sworn to before the district or county attorney who, for that purpose, shall have power to administer the oath, or it may be made before any officer authorized by law to administer oaths. [O. C. 404.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 745, 747.

See, also, as to complaints, ante, arts. 34, 35, 36, 268, 269, 273, 274, 275, 276, and notes; post, arts. 972, 973.

1. Presentation in vacation. 2. Necessity of complaint in general. 3. Necessity of information on complaint. 4. Variance between complaint and information. 5. Authority to make complaint. 6. Authority to take complaint. 7. Force and requisites of complaint. 8. Time and place of offense.

1. Presentation in vacation.—An information may be presented in vacation. State v. State, 1 App. 661; Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664.

Information to be sufficient to charge an offense against the laws of this state must be predicated upon an affidavit or complaint which in substance charges the same offense as that charged in the complaint. Robinson v. State, 25 App. 111, 7 S. W. 531.

A complaint is an indispensable prerequisite to an information for disturbing a congregation. McVea v. State, 35 App. 1, 26 S. W. 834, 28 S. W. 469.

It is the duty of an officer to make an arrest, even without a warrant, where he is told by a credible person that one is carrying a pistol. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 253.

It is not a valid objection to an information that it is founded upon a complaint upon which previous information had been based, but had been dismissed. Goode v. State, 2 App. 529; Boyd v. State, 11 App. 80; Johnson v. State, 19 App. 545.

A defective complaint upon which an information has been presented can not be supplied by a new complaint so as to make good the information. A new information should be presented upon the new complaint. Paschal v. State, 9 App. 205.

An information as to all material, substantial matters, must be complete within itself, without reference to the complaint upon which it is based. But, on appeal, where the information is bad, but the complaint is good, the conviction will be set aside, but the prosecution will not be dismissed, as another information may be brought in the complaint in the trial court. Pittman v. State, 54 App. 376.

It is wholly unnecessary for an information to state that it is founded upon a complaint in writing under oath, or to make any mention whatever of the complaint. The law requires no more than that such complaint be filed with the information. Johnson v. State, 17 App. 228.

Motion to quash ball because there is no information filed on the complaint is untenable. Coleman v. State, 32 App. 595, 25 S. W. 286.

The information is not quashable on the ground that the arrest was made on the complaint prior to the filing of the information. Evans v. State, 36 App. 32, 35 S. W. 168.

One prosecuted for a misdemeanor in the county court cannot waive failure to file an information, that being a jurisdictional matter. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 734, 738.

An indictment, alleging that accused committed perjury by giving false testimony in the county court on a trial on a complaint charging a violation of the gaming laws, is sufficient for the filing of a complaint in the county court; and arrest, thereunder, plea of not guilty, and trial, confer jurisdiction on the county court. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 702.

4. Variance between complaint and information.—The material allegations of the information must conform to those of the complaint upon which it is founded, and a want of such conformity will vitiate the information. Davis v. State, 2 App. 184; Stinson v. State, 1 App. 553; Stinson v. State, 1 St. 7; Johnson v. State, 4 App. 594; Ferguson v. State, 1d. 156; Hoerr v. State, 1d. 75; Swink v. State, 7 App. 73; Hawthorne v. State, 6 App. 562; Williamson v. State, 5 App. 843; Collins v. State, 1d. 355; Murphy v. State, 4 App. 558; Cole v. State, 11 App. 87; Landrum v. State, 27 App. 666, 40 S. W. 737; Chaney v. State, 59 App. 283, 124 S. W. 614.

The variance between a complaint, alleging that affiant has good reason to believe, and does believe that accused is guilty of a crime charged, and the information filed by the district attorney, and reciting that it is "founded upon testimony taken in behalf of the state, under oath," does not vitiate the information. Sandolos v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 151.

Where the oath is filed with the information, references in the information to the name of the one signing the complaint may be disregarded as surplusage, and a variance between the two is not fatal. Germany v. State, 65 App. 276, 137 S. W. 139; Ann. Cas. 1910C. 427.

Where the complaint charges an assault with "a knife and with a chair," and the information charges that the assault was made with "sticks and a chair," the variance is excusable. Newton v. State, 57 App. 609, 124 S. W. 665.

A complaint alleged that defendant was concerned in selling intoxicating liquors without a license, while the information charged only a violation of the local option law, without any reference to the law in respect to disorderly houses. Held, that the information was bad for not charging the same offense as that charged by the complaint. Harden v. State, 62 App. 84, 136 S. W. 768.

Where the verdict is general, and the affidavit and information contained two counts, that one count in the information is at variance with the affidavit will not be noticed, where the other count is good. Stuart v. State, 55 App. 582, 124 S. W. 656.

The particularity requisite in an information is not necessary in the complaint on which it is founded, nor are discrepancies between them of any consequence, provided there is accord in substance. They should agree as to time and venue, and the names of the defendant and the injured party, and there should be substantial conformity in their allegations descriptive of the offense. Cole v. State, 11 App. 67.

Where the information in the beginning alleges that it is made by B, county attorney, and the affidavit on which the information is based is made by C, as county attorney, and the information is signed by C, as county attorney, there is such a variance as to require the information to be quashed. The allegation that the information is made by B, when the record shows that C is county attorney, cannot be treated as surplusage. Adams v. State, 47 App. 35, 81 S. W. 962, 964.

A variance between the complaint and information is a fatal variance, to be material, must be such as would mislead a party to his prejudice, and no injury is shown to the defendant by spelling in the complaint "Lawn Gentry" and in the information "Lon Gentry." Gentry v. State, 62 App. 457, 137 S. W. 696. But "Lewin, Vandal," and "Lewis Vandall, Close v. State, 59 App. 283, 128 S. W. 814.

The fact that an information names officers to be elected that are not named in the complaint for keeping open a bar on election day is no variance. Steinbeck v. State, 35 App. 492, 36 S. W. 612, 613 et seq., and "Daniel H. alias Bud H." held no variance. Harrison v. State, 6 App. 236.

An information for aggravated assault, which charged that defendant "did strike," is not fatally variant from the affidavit, which charged "did then and there strike." Stuart v. State, 55 App. 102, 124 S. W. 656.

Where a complaint charged defendant with an aggravated assault on "on M. W.," and the information charged defendant with an aggravated assault on "one M. W.," the second 'on' in the complaint was evidently meant for the word 'one,' but is surplusage, and there is no variance between the complaint and information. Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

A county attorney cannot make a complaint unless he was the only witness to the offense. Daniels v. State, 2 App. 253.

An unpardoned convict is not competent to make a valid complaint. Perez v. State, 10 App. 327.

Husband cannot make complaint against wife for adultery. Thomas v. State, 14 App. 70.

6. Authority to take complaint.—County attorneys. Rambo v. State, 43 App. 271, 64 S. W. 1038; Thomas v. State, 37 App. 142, 38 S. W. 1011; Williams v. State, 50 App. 259, 96 S. W. 47.

The affidavit may be taken before a justice of the peace and delivered to the county attorney. Lindsey v. State, 57 App. 346, 123 S. W. 141; Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

Deputy county attorney. Wilkins v. State, 33 App. 320, 26 S. W. 409; Dane v. State, 36 App. 56, 35 S. W. 661.

The county attorney of one county cannot take a complaint upon which the county attorney of another can proceed on information. Thomas v. State, 37 App. 142, 38 S. W. 1011.

No article of the penal code or code of criminal procedure authorizes city attorneys to administer oaths or affidavits generally. Johnson v. State, 47 App. 580, 85 S. W. 274.

A county judge can administer an oath to one swearing to a complaint charging another with an offense. Stepp v. State, 53 App. 158, 109 S. W. 1055.

Complaint need not, though the information must, commence, "in the name and by the authority of the state." Johnson v. State, 31 App. 464, 20 S. W. 890, citing Jefferison v. State, 21 App. 845, 7 S. W. 244.

But a complaint before a justice of the peace must be "in the name and by the authority of the State of Texas." Ex parte Jackson (Cr. App.) 96 S. W. 924.

A complaint charging the unlawful riding on a train of the "G., H. & S. A. Ry. Co." there being no explanation as to the meaning of the letters, did not support an information charging that the train was on the track of the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company. Cardenas v. State, 55 App. 109, 124 S. W. 956.

In a prosecution for violation of Acts 30th Leg. 1907, pp. 224—228, c. 123, forbidding the practice of medicine without registering and filing for record the certificate required, the complaint and information need not negative the exceptions in the act, where they are not contained in the enacting clause, which defines the offense, since the prosecution is not required to anticipate defenses arising under the act. Newman v. State, 58 App. 223, 124 S. W. 956.

Where an affidavit was made by B, and the jurat shows that it was sworn to and subscribed before "W. A. Daniel, Justice of the Peace, Precinct No. 6, Fannin County, Texas," and was indorsed and filed: "Affidavit, The State of Texas versus Laun Gentley. Filed the 30th day of April, 1910. W. A. Daniel, Justice of the Peace, Precinct No. 6, Fannin County, Texas"—although the precint of which magistrate is justice is left blank, it is sufficient, especially when taken in connection with the file indorsed thereon. Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

A criminal complaint or information is not subject to a motion to quash because of surplusage therein. Figueroa v. State, 71 App. 371, 159 S. W. 1188.

In a prosecution for wife desertion, where the information alleged that the county attorney presented to the court that on a certain date, before the filing of such information, the defendant deserted his wife, etc., not sufficient to sustain the complaint, which alleged that theretofore defendant deserted his wife without justification and refused to provide for her support, and that she was in destitute and necessitous circumstances, such complaint and information sufficiently charged the offense and a general demurrer; it not being necessary that the information should make mention of the complaint. Herrera v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 696.

The complaint upon which the information is founded must allege the venue of the offense. Smith v. State, 3 App. 549, and cases cited; Strickland v. State, 7 App. 34.

A complaint stating an impossible date is wholly invalid. Jennings v. State, 30 App. 428, 18 S. W. 90, and cases cited; Hofner v. State, 16 App. 573.

An affidavit made on a certain day, charging an offense in that date, was defective for not specifically alleging that it was committed before the complaint was made. Martin v. State, 72 App. 464, 162 S. W. 1145. Contra, Williams v. State, 17 App. 521.

When a complaint stated in its caption the proper county and the state, and charged that the defendant did “then and there” commit the offense, it was held sufficient. Strickland v. State, 7 App. 34.

An allegation of venue in a complaint will not supply the want of such allegation in an information. Lawson v. State, 13 App. 83.

The fraudulent alteration of a date in the complaint is the mutilation of both the complaint and information, and the substitution of both is the only remedy. Huff v. State, 351, 4 S. W. 890, and cases cited.

A valid information and complaint filed by B, alleging an offense committed on February 2, 1908, could not add a defective information and complaint filed by S, alleging an offense committed on February 7, 1908, though both were against the same person. Treadway v. State, 51 App. 546, 132 S. W. 147.

Name of the accused must be correctly stated, and this requirement is not met by the omission of the given name. Beaumont v. Dallas, 34 App. 68, 29 S. W. 187, and cases cited.

Complaint charging “Bill” (or W. H.) Gaines is not objectionable as being in the alternative. Gaines v. State, 48 App. 213, 78 S. W. 1076.

Defendant’s name, if unknown should be so stated, and, if not known, some reasonable description of him should be given. Mistrust v. State, 72 App. 408, 162 S. W. 833.

10. Signature.—Where complaint is signed and sworn to, affiant’s name need not appear in the body of the instrument. Upton v. State, 33 App. 231, 26 S. W. 197; Mals v. State, 36 App. 447, 34 S. W. 357, 37 S. W. 748; Singh v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 891.

Complaint properly signed at the end is not vitiated by the inclusion, by mistake, of wrong name in the body, which may be treated as surplusage, or stricken out and the proper name substituted. Mals v. State, 34 App. 447, 34 S. W. 357, 37 S. W. 748.

It will be presumed in the absence of proof that a complaint signed: John X

mark

Steele was signed by complainant. Taylor v. State, 44 App. 437, 72 S. W. 181.

This article does not require that the complaint shall be signed by the affiant. Lewis v. State, 60 App. 351, 97 S. W. 481.

Objection that affiant signed by mark comes too late on motion in arrest. Lewis v. State, 69 App. 351, 97 S. W. 481.

Recitals in jurat control those of the complaint. Lamham v. State, 9 App. 232. A complaint without a jurat will not support an information, and after conviction the jurat can not be added or amended. Scott v. State, 9 App. 431.

In a jurat signed “Wm. Greer, J. P.,” the letters “J. P.” can not be inferred to mean “J. P. Greer.” Neiman v. State, 29 App. 360, 16 S. W. 253.

The information was not sufficient, where, when it was filed, the complaint was not sworn to and the affidavit was not made to it. Sprowles v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 622.

12. Filing.—An information will not be held invalid because the complaint upon which it is apparently based and which is found among the papers in the case, does not have the file mark indorsed upon it. State v. Elliott, 41 Tex. 224.
And where a complaint and information are attached together, a file mark on the information will be considered as relating to both papers. Stinson v. State, 5 App. 31.

A complaint attached to a filed information will be considered filed. Stinson v. State, 5 App. 31.

If the complaint and information are written on the same sheet of paper, one file mark will answer for both. An objection that the complaint was not "filed" must be taken in limine. Schott v. State, 7 App. 616.

One file mark will do for both complaint and information written on the same sheet of paper. Schott v. State, 7 App. 618.

An information may be filed at any time before the offense is barred by limitation, although the complaint may have been filed long before the time of presentation. Robinson v. State, 15 App. 317.

Charging a misdemeanor, the complaint should be filed in the county court; charging felony, it should be filed with a magistrate, who shall proceed as an examining court. Kinley v. State, 29 App. 532, 15 S. W. 333.

Whether the mark on the information was filed at the proper time is a question of fact, and not a ground, as matter of law, for quashing a bail bond. Coleman v. State, 32 App. 956, 25 S. W. 386.

A motion to quash an information because there is no file mark on the complaint must be made before the trial, and not in arrest of judgment. Jessel v. State, 42 App. 72, 57 S. W. 826.

Where the information and affidavit were fastened and folded together, and filed, as shown by an indorsement on the outside of the bundle made by the folding of the two papers, the information was sufficiently filed. Wooten v. State, 57 App. 89, 121 S. W. 793.

Under the provision of this article that an information shall not be presented unless made by some credible person, charging the defendant with an offense, the making of the charging and the filing of the complaint in the county court is the commencement of a criminal action, and hence a prosecution for the bribery of a witness in a pending cause cannot be defeated because the statute requires to show that an information has been filed, when the information has been an affidavit and a subpoena, etc. Smalley v. State, 59 App. 55, 137 S. W. 225.

A motion to quash an information will not lie because the complaint was filed April 30, 1910, and the information not until June 9, 1910. Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

The clerk not having, when the information and complaint were filed, made any indorsement of filing thereon, the court may thereafter permit him to do so as of the date of filing. Brogdon v. State, 63 App. 473, 140 S. W. 352.

The indorsement of the information and complaint to the clerk is a "filing" in law. Brogdon v. State, 63 App. 475, 140 S. W. 352.

The court may permit the clerk to note on the information and complaint the proper file marks; he not having done so when they were filed. Brogdon v. State, 63 App. 473, 140 S. W. 353.

Where the objection was in no way raised in the court below, an accused cannot, on appeal, complain that the conviction cannot be sustained because of the want of a file mark on the complaint. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 24a.

One convicted of a misdemeanor cannot complain that the complaint bore no file mark by the clerk; the error being wholly harmless. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 945.

An information charging accused with the crime of pulling down the fence of another which was filed on December 22d is insufficient though reciting the filing of a complaint on December 28th, where the jury attached to the complaint bore no date and the file mark was the same as that of the information. Bradberry v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 189.

On motion in arrest it was urged that the information did not charge that the crime was committed before presenting the information. The information, as well as the complaint, sworn to on October 2d, charged the offense to have been committed on September 28th. The information bore no file mark, but it was shown to have been in fact filed on the same day as the complaint. Held, that the court properly ordered the information to be filed nunc pro tunc as of October 2d. Hall v. State, 70 App. 240, 156 S. W. 644.

While it would be too late to file the information, after announcement of ready for trial and the parties had gone before the jury, if it had been placed with the papers prior to the calling of the case, and the court's attention had been called thereto, it would be deemed filed as of the date on which it was placed with the clerk. Landreth v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 503.

An objection that the information was not filed by the clerk could not be first raised in the motion for new trial; it being necessary to raise such objection at trial. Landreth v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 503.

Under this article it is held, that an unauthenticated affidavit could have been corrected, after accused had been arrested and placed under bond, by permission of the court. It was improper for the district attorney to attach his jurat thereto at that time without such permission, and an information based on an affidavit so authenticated was invalid. Montgomery v. State, 60 App. 333, 131 S. W. 1057.
If a complaint is attacked as not officially signed by the officer taking it, etc., so as to raise a serious question of its legality, it is the better and safer practice to file a new, unquestioned complaint, or other papers, as the case may be, to prevent incumbering the record with numerous papers, the validity of which is controverted. Graham v. State, 72 App., 160 S. W. 714.

As the preceding article does not require the information to state that it is founded upon a complaint in writing under oath, though this article forbids the county attorney to file an information until a complaint, under oath, has been made, when an information based upon a proper complaint duly filed recited that fact, but did not contain the name of the affiant, the insertion of the name of the affiant was not erroneous, though made without the consent of the court, and during trial. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 1. 14.

Art. 480 [468] Rules as to indictments applicable to informations.—The rules laid down in this chapter with respect to the allegactions in indictments and the certainty required are applicable also to informations. [C. C. 406.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 745; ante, arts. 451 to 460 inclusive and notes.

Art. 481. [469] Indictment, etc., may contain several counts.—An indictment or information may contain as many counts, charging the same offense, as the attorney who prepares it may think necessary to insert; and an indictment or information shall be sufficient if any one of its counts be sufficient.

See notes under article 476, ante.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 2.

General verdict under indictment containing different counts, see notes under article 710.

1. Charging offense in different counts in general.—An indictment may and should comprise as many counts as are necessary to meet the contingencies of the evidence. Dill v. State, 1 App. 278; Weathersby v. State, Id. 428; Waddell v. State, Id. 558; Barnwell v. State, Id. 746; Irving v. State, 3 App. 147; Mathews v. State, 10 App. 578; Gonzales v. parts of two or more separate indictments, for causes apparently distinct, are combinative, and without alleging for each being termed cause.

An indictment in several counts is, therefore, a collection of separate bills against the same defendant, under one caption, and found indorsed collectively as true by the grand jury. The object is what it appears to be, namely, in fact, to join distinct offenses, unless with distinct offenses the court may, as often as it will allow them to be tried together, thus averting from both parties the burden of two or more trials; or, in another class of cases, to vary what is meant to be the one accusation, so as, at the trial, to avoid an acquittal by a lack of harmony between allegations and proofs, or a legal doubt as to what form of charge the court will approve. Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463.

If several offenses are embraced in the same general definition, and are punishable in the same manner, they are not distinct offenses, and may be charged in the same count of the indictment." Hence, an indictment charging that accused unlawfully played a game of cards at a "tavern and inn, and in a room in and attached to said tavern and inn," is sufficient, and not objectionable to the objection that it is uncertain and duplicitous. Comer v. State, 26 App. 569, 19 S. W. 106.

Quashal of one or more counts does not necessarily affect other counts in an indictment. West v. State, 27 App. 472, 11 S. W. 482; Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463.

That the distinct offenses charged in the separate counts are felonies is not a good objection to an indictment, provided they are of the same character, differing only in degree. Mason v. State, 29 App. 24, 14 S. W. 71, and cases cited.

Conviction can be had only on one count. Crawford v. State, 31 App. 51, 19 S. W. 766.

An indictment which in one count charges the keeping and exhibiting of a gaming table and bank, is not duplicitous. Tellison v. State, 35 App. 388, 33 S. W. 1082.

Same transaction may be set up in different counts although the counts seem to describe different transactions. Dawson v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 49.

Defendant engaged in the business on a certain date, and on each succeeding day for one year, is fatally defective because it alleges a number of offenses in one count, because each day constituted an offense. Scales v. State, 29 App. 284, 81 S. W. 548, 66 L. R. A. 770, 108 Am. St. Rep. 1914.

An indictment may contain several counts charging the same offense as the pleader prepares which may think necessary to insert, in order to meet any contingency that may arise under the facts. Johnson v. State, 52 App. 201, 107 S. W. 53.

It is proper pleading to charge as many counts as necessary growing out of a single transaction to meet any probable phase of the testimony that may be developed upon the trial. Hawthorn v. State, 62 App. 114, 136 S. W. 738.

An indictment in the language of the statute, alleging that accused unlawfully established a raffle and disposed of raffle of personal property worth less than $500, does not charge two distinct offenses, but proof of the establishment of a raffle, or of the disposing of property by such means, proves the offense. Hickman v. State, 54 App. 161, 141 S. W. 973.

An indictment for felony may contain separate and distinct counts to meet the proof, but all must relate to the same transaction, while an indictment for misdemeanor may charge separate and distinct offenses if contained in separate and distinct counts. Golden v. State, 72 App. 19, 169 S. W. 957.

2. Former law.—Before the enactment of the preceding article it was permissible to charge two or more offenses in separate counts of the same indictment. Boles v. State, 33 App. 650; Dill v. State, 1 App. 278; Weathersby v. State, Id. 643; Waddell v. State, Id. 729; Barnwell v. State, Id. 740; Dalton v. State, 4 App. 333.

3. Different dates in different counts.—Each day of the keeping of a disorderly house may be charged in different counts as a separate offense. Hall v. State, 24 App. 474, 54 S. W. 407.

Different dates in different counts do not vitiate conviction nor require arrest of judgment. Shuman v. State, 34 App. 69, 29 S. W. 160.

In a prosecution for knowingly permitting a house controlled by accused to be used as a house of prostitution, the state may allege the offense to have been committed on each of several days in different counts, and sustain a conviction on each count, if the evidence justifies the verdict. Clyman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 231.

4. Allegations in count as supplying defects in others.—Each separate count should show that defendant had committed as an offense, because it is upon the proof of joinder of offenses that the joinder of counts is admitted. Therefore, we must look to the allegations of each count to determine its sufficiency, just as though it was the only count in the indictment; and when the count is found sufficient, we need look no farther. But if not sufficient on its face, we may then look to the preceding count or counts, for auxiliary allegations to supply its defects. Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Boles v. State, 33 App. 650.

If the first count alleges venue, it is good as to all subsequent counts. Morgan v. State, 31 App. 1, 18 S. W. 647.

Omission of defendant's name in second of two counts cannot be supplied by reference to first count. Powell v. State, 42 App. 12, 57 S. W. 95.

5. Conclusion and conclusion.—The commencement and conclusion in article 451 applies to every count in the indictment, and does not have to be repeated seriatim. West v. State, 27 App. 472, 11 S. W. 482; Dancey v. State, 35 App. 616, 34 S. W. 113, 558, and cases cited.

It is not necessary that each count shall conclude with the words, "against the peace and dignity of the state," it being sufficient if the instrument as a whole so concludes. Alexander v. State, 27 App. 523, 11 S. W. 626.

6. Numbering counts.—Accused cannot complain because some one marked in pencil, on the margin of the indictment, figures in brackets, numbering the several counts. Webb v. State, 62 App. 207, 140 S. W. 95.

7. Distinct offenses in same transaction.—If the transaction be the same, a count and one for illegally marking and brandishing may properly be inserted in the same bill though the offenses be not the same. Armstrong v. State, 28 App. 526, 13 S. W. 501. See also, as to counts, West v. State, 27 App. 472, 11 S. W. 482; Mason v. State, 29 App. 24, 14 S. W. 71; Wohlwein v. State, 30 App. 625, 18 S. W. 209; McKenzie v. State, 32 App. 560, 25 S. W. 420, 49 Am. St. Rep. 799.

An indictment containing several counts charging offenses growing out of the same transaction is good as against a motion to quash because of the counts. Day v. State, 62 App. 527, 138 S. W. 133.

An indictment charging in one count that defendant did unlawfully injure the fence of a certain person, and in another count that he stole wire from such person, was not invalid as containing counts not arising out of the same transaction. Skinner v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1007.

The fact that the two counts of an indictment were substantially the same would be no ground to quash it. Urben v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 514.

8. — Waiver.—The contention that one count of the indictment undertook to charge two distinct offenses was waived by failure to move to quash before verdict. (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

Information may contain plural counts charging different misdemeanors. Alexander v. State, 27 App. 533, 11 S. W. 658, and cases cited.

An indictment may charge several misdemeanors under one statute in one count. Warner v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 265.

In a statutory misdemeanor case the information may allege the offense to have been committed in all the ways named in the statute, though it may be better to divide the information into separate and distinct counts. Ray v. State, 71 App. 368, 158 S. W. 807.

10. Gaming.—An indictment charging in one count that accused directly and as agent and employee of another kept and exhibited for gaming a gaming table and bank charges only one offense, as committing the offense directly or as agent of another constitute only different ways in which under the Code the same offense may be charged. Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 158 S. W. 505.

11. Disorderly house.—Different dates, see note, ante.

Where an information charging the offense of keeping a disorderly house was intended to charge only one offense as having been committed in two different ways, only one punishment is authorized: but, if each count was intended to and did charge a separate and distinct offense, a conviction might be had under all and punishment assessed for each count. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 296, 156 S. W. 927.

Where an information consisted of two counts, the first charging defendant with keeping a disorderly house in which immoral women were permitted to reside and the second charging the keeping of a disorderly house when intoxicating liquors were sold without a license, and the jury found accused guilty, under each count, assessing a separate punishment, the judgment will be sustained; the information, instructions, and verdict showing that accused was found guilty of two distinct offenses and was not receiving double punishment for the same one. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 296, 156 S. W. 927.

12. Adultery.—Distinct offenses in same transaction, see note, ante.

In a complaint and information for adultery with C., it was proper to charge in one count that accused was married to another person then living, and in another count that C. was married to another person then living. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 568.

13. Assault.—An indictment for assault may charge different grounds of aggravation in different counts, and in such case, the state will not be compelled to separate. Waddle v. State, 3 App. 720.

14. Burglary.—Where indictment charges in one count burglary at night, and in another in the daytime, and the evidence shows breaking, the hour of entry is immaterial. Smith v. State, 34 App. 123, 25 S. W. 775.

Under art. 481, a count for burglary and a conspiracy to commit burglary may be joined in the same indictment. Dill v. State, 35 App. 380, 22 S. W. 126, 60 Am. St. Rep. 37.

15. Theft.—Distinct offenses in same transaction, see note, ante.

If the proof upon which the state depends leaves it in doubt whether the offenses are theft per se or wilfully driving stock from the range, the indictment should charge both in different counts. Smith v. State, 34 Tex. 612.

Theft of several animals belonging to different owners, and taken at the same time, may be prosecuted in one indictment. Long v. State, 43 Tex. 467; Addison v. State, 40; Taylor v. State, 25 App. 86, 7 S. W. 801.

An indictment for theft may allege, in one count, ownership and possession in one person, and in another, ownership in the same person and possession in another for him. Shuman v. State, 34 App. 69, 72 S. W. 160.
Art. 481 PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC. (Title 7

Indictment may include counts for theft and theft from the person, and conviction under the first count operates as acquittal of the second count. Hooton v. State, 63 App. 6, 108 S. W. 651; Flynn v. State, 47 App. 26, 83 S. W. 296.

When the indictment charges in separate counts theft and receiving stolen property, a conviction for receiving stolen property is in effect an acquittal of larceny. Davis v. State, 61 App. 611, 138 S. W. 45.

16. Killing animals.—In all cases of killing animals under P. C. arts. 1331, 1346, the court suggests a count under each article. Cryer v. State, 35 App. 631, 37 S. W. 753, 28 S. W. 293.

Duplicity in an indictment is the imputation of two or more distinct offenses in one count. If several offenses are embraced in the same general definition and are punishable in the same manner, they are not distinct offenses, and may be charged conjunctively in the same count. Nicholas v. State, 28 App. 117, 127 S. W. 220. Laroe v. State, 39 App. 592, 16 S. W. 522; State v. Dorsett, 21 Tex. 654; State v. Bandlo, 41 Tex. 292; State v. Smith, 24 Tex. 285; Weatherly v. State, 1 App. 640. For instances of duplicity, see Heineman v. State, 22 App. 44, 2 S. W. 619; Hickman v. State, 22 App. 441, 2 S. W. 649.

Duplicity is the joinder of two or more distinct offenses in one count, and if it be such as to produce confusion and uncertainty as to what was intended to be charged, it would vitiate the indictment as not conforming to the rule that it must state the offense in plain and intelligible words. State v. Smith, 24 Tex. 285; Frow v. State, 38 App. 592, 16 S. W. 170; Shuman v. State, 34 App. 69, 72 S. W. 106; Oxosheer v. State, 38 App. 499, 43 S. W. 335; State v. Edmondson, 43 Tex. 162; Witherspoon v. State, 59 App. 65, 44 S. W. 184, 4006.

When offenses are several in their nature, and yet, so much a part of one that when complete, necessarily implicates the other, they may be joined in the same count. State v. Edmondson, 43 Tex. 162; Nicholas v. State, 23 App. 317, 5 S. W. 236.

Where there are several ways in which an offense may be committed, and they are embraced in the same general definition and are punishable in the same manner, they are not distinct offenses and may be charged conjunctively in the same count. Willis v. State, 34 App. 118, 29 S. W. 787; Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 150 S. W. 608; Goodwin v. State, 70 App. 600, 155 S. W. 274.

Duplicity, although not specified as a ground of exception, may be included in articles 451, sec. 7, ante, and 576, sec. 2, post; State v. Smith, 24 Tex. 255. But such exception must be made in limine. Coney v. State, 2 App. 62; Berliner v. State, 6 App. 181.

To render an indictment objectionable on the ground of duplicity, the duplicity must be such as to produce confusion and uncertainty as to the offense intended to be charged. Beaumont v. State, 1 App. 533, 23 Am. Rep. 424.

Objection that indictment is duplicitous, too late after verdict. Rumage v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 64.

Two distinct offenses which are different phases of the same transaction, not requisite to each other and punishable in the same manner, may be charged in the same count. Prendergast v. State, 41 App. 255, 57 S. W. 656.

An indictment is not duplicitous that sets out the different ways of committing an offense stated in the statute. If the evidence sustains either, the conviction will stand. Young v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 766.

The indictment was not duplicitous in not showing that the persons who were alleged to have heard the conversations were the same persons; all of the language being charged as being used at the same time, and in the hearing of W. and the same other persons. Curle v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 699.

18. Waiver.—The defect in an indictment, on the ground that it is duplicitous, was waived, where accused did not, in the trial court, move to quash the indictment on that ground, or raise the question in any other proper manner. Cabness v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 934.

Duplicity in an indictment is waived by defendant's failure to move to quash the indictment before verdict. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 593.

19. Misdemeanors in general.—Information is not bad for duplicity because it contains several counts charging different misdemeanors. Alexander v. State, 27 App. 533, 11 S. W. 628.

20. Misdemeanor and felony.—An indictment charging, in a single count, the commission of a misdemeanor, in violation of Pen. Code, art. 229, making it unlawful to knowingly become the agent of another to obtain a poll tax receipt or to procure or借 to him to pay his poll tax, and also the commission of a felony in violation of Pen. Code, article 233, prohibiting the payment or procuring of another to pay poll taxes for a citizen, is duplicitous and should be quashed. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 490.

21. Unfaithful practice of medicine.—A complaint and information, which charge conjunctively the offenses denounced by Pen. Code, art. 535, punishing the practicing of medicine by one publicly professing to be a physician and surgeon or by one offering to treat any disease by any system, do not charge separate and distinct offenses. Herrington v. State (Cr. App.) 186 S. W. 274.

22. Violation of liquor law.—Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, § 15 (Pen. Code, art. 615), provides that all persons having licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall close their places of business from 12 o'clock midnight Saturday until 5 o'clock a.m. the following Monday of each week; and any person who shall open any place of business for the purposes of traffic, or who shall sell or barter any intoxicating liquors, between the hours mentioned shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. An in—dictment charged that accused, a licensed retail malt liquor dealer, did keep open his place for the purpose of traffic, and did sell intoxicating liquors between the hours of 12 o'clock midnight Saturday and 5 o'clock a.m. Monday. Code Cr. Proc., art. 464, provides that in an indictment for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors it shall be sufficient to charge that defendant sold them contrary to law; and to whom sold this case makes at least two offenses, one the keeping open on Sunday of a place of business for the purpose of traffic, and the other the actual sale of liquors, the indictment was sufficient; for both offenses being misdemeanors might be charged in a single count—the indictment being defective only in charging a sale of intoxicating liquor. Warner v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 265.

An indictment, charging that the defendant did sell and give, and cause to be sold, and give to minor liquor to a minor, without the consent of his parent or guardian, was not duplicitious; it being permissible to charge conjunctively in the same count in the indictment the commission of an offense in several ways, where the statute embraces the several ways in the same general definition, and makes them punishable in the same manner, and the ways are of such character that each may be a stage of the same offense. Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 601. An information alleging that accused sold intoxicating malt, spiri-tuous, and vinous liquors, to wit, one bottle of beer, is not duplicitious in charging the sale of different kinds of intoxicating liquors in the same count as it specifically alleges the kind of liquor sold, and the words "spiritsuous and vinous" should be disregarded as surplusage. Leliano v. State, 72 App. 518, 163 S. W. 64.

23. Gaming.—An indictment charging that accused unlawfully kept and exhibited, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank, is not duplicitious as charging the keeping and exhibiting of a gaming table for the purpose of gaming, and also the keeping and exhibiting of a bank for the same purpose. Moreb v. State, 57 App. 122, 121 S. W. 1112.

24. Pandering.—That an indictment for pandering charged that accused committed the offense in more than one of the modes specified in the statute did not render it duplicitious. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

25. Forgery.—An indictment which charges in separate counts forgery, and uttering a forged instrument, is not duplicitious. Chester v. State, 25 App. 517, 5 S. W. 125; Barnwell v. State, 1 App. 745; Waddell v. State, Id. 720.

26. Indictment charging in one part that the entire instrument was forged and in another part that appellant knew that the indorsement was forged held not duplicitious. Strang v. State, 32 App. 219, 22 S. W. 689.

27. Assault.—An indictment for aggravated assault is not duplicitious because it states certain facts which tend to constitute threats to take life. Crow v. State, 41 Tex. 486.

28. Murder.—An indictment is not bad for duplicity which contains a statement of the facts connected with and forming part of the offense, although such facts are complicated and various. Thus an indictment for murder may in the same count charge the various means by which the death may have been produced. Edmondson v. State, 43 Tex. 339. A charge for the murder of two persons by the same act is not duplicitious, and may be made in the same count. Tucker v. State, 7 App. 469.

29. Rape and incest.—In charging rape and incest, in one count and incest in another, the indictment is neither duplicious nor repugnant, though predicated on the same transaction. Owens v. State, 35 App. 348, 33 S. W. 875; Wiggins v. State, 47 App. 558, 84 S. W. 521.

30. Burglary and theft.—The offenses of burglary and theft are excepted from the rule of duplicity, and may be joined in the same count. P. C., art. 1305, et seq., and notes; Williams v. State, 24 App. 69, 5 S. W. 538.

An indictment is neither repugnant nor duplicious because it sets out distinct offenses of horse theft in different counts, the different counts alleging different ownerships. Pisano v. State, 34 App. 69, 29 S. W. 42, citing Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463. And see Shuman v. State, 34 App. 69, 29 S. W. 160.

31. Fraudulent disposition of mortgaged property.—It is made a felony to fraudulently dispose of the whole or a part of mortgaged property, but in each instance there must be a fraudulent disposition. Therefore it follows that each fraudulent disposition is a separate offense, and where the pleader undertakes to allege separate offenses, he must do so in separate counts. He cannot allege two distinct offenses in the same count. Wood v. State, 47 App. 543, 84 S. W. 1058.

32. Accomplices, accessories, and principals.—An indictment is not dupli-cious because charging accused with being an accomplice, an accessory, or a principal, where all the various counts were based on the same transaction. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 346.

33. Election.—When several counts in the same indictment are substantially the same offense, and are introduced for the purpose of meeting the evidence as it may transpire, the state will not be required to elect on which it will rely. Green v. State, 21 App. 64, 17 S. W. 262; Masterson v. State, 29 App. 571; Keeler v. State, 15 App. 111; Gonzales v. State, 5 App. 584; Dalton v. State, 4 App. 333; Dill v. State, 228; Weathers v. State, 16, 720; Barnwell v. State, Id. 745; Irving v. State, 8 App. 46. The rule seems to be that the court should interpose by quashing the indictment, or by compelling the state to elect, where an attempt is made, as manifested by either the indictment or the evidence, to convict the accused of two or more offenses growing out of distinct and separate transactions; but should never interpose in either mode, where the joinder is simply designed and calculated to adapt the pleadings to the different aspects in which the evidence on the trial may present a single transaction. See there the illustration: Keeler v. State, 15 App. 111; and see, also, Simms v. State, 19 App. 131; Fisher v. State, 23 Tex. 792. If the duty to elect be incumbent on the state, the election should be made when the state has proceeded far enough with its testimony to identify the transaction, and before the defendant offers his evidence. Lunn v. State, 44 Tex. 327.

The doctrine of compulsory election by the state between counts explained. Keeler v. State, 15 App. 111.

If the evidence tends to support both of two counts the state cannot be compelled to elect. Armstrong v. State, 38 App. 556, 13 S. W. 664. Also, Milton v. State, 29 App. 557, 16 S. W. 425; Stobbins v. State, 31 App. 294, 20 S. W. 552.

It is only when distinct felonies, not of the same character, are charged in different counts of the same indictment that the state may be required to elect upon which count it will claim a conviction. The indictment in this case charged in the first count that the accused burned his own house, the same being insured; and in the second count that he burned a house and thereby endangered the burning of other houses not belonging to him. The two said counts charge the same felony, and there was no occasion for the election by the state of one count to the exclusion of the other upon which to urge a conviction. But the court of the charge to the jury recites that the state voluntarily abandoned and dismissed the first count, because the punishment for that kind of an assault was less than for the law applicable to the second count. Held error: but not such error as would necessitate reversal in the absence of exception, unless it was calculated to injure the rights of the accused. Baker v. State, 20 App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427.

See Moore v. State, 27 App. 552, 40 S. W. 287, in extenso, and cases cited, for conditions of indictment under which the state cannot be required to elect between counts. Wooten v. State, 35 App. 240, 13 S. W. 556; and Thompson v. State, 33 App. 472, 26 S. W. 987; Welhausen v. State, 39 App. 623, 18 S. W. 300. But compare Moore v. State, 37 App. 552, 40 S. W. 287, with McKenzie v. State, 32 App. 588, 25 S. W. 426, 40 Am. St. Rep. 785, and Masterson v. State, 39 App. 574, to the effect that, if the indictment charges in separate counts, one or more distinct felonies pertaining to the same transaction, and the evidence develops distinct transactions, the state should, at defendant's request, be compelled to elect between the counts.

Where State proved two distinct offenses committed on separate days, it must elect the one for which it claims conviction. Larned v. State, 41 App. 509, 55 S. W. 827.

The question whether the State is compelled to elect between counts cannot be raised after verdict. Matt v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 101.

While two transactions were proved, and each constituted a criminal offense, while the complaint charged but one transaction, accused must require the state to elect. Wooten v. State, 57 App. 85, 121 S. W. 793.

行动 of the court in submitting only the first count of an indictment cured any error it committed in refusing to sustain a motion to require the state to elect which count would be relied on. Bailey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

The rule that, where an indictment charges in separate counts one or more distinct felonies, and the evidence adduced develops distinct transactions, the state can, at the request of accused, be forced to elect on which count or transaction applies where only one of several charges is made, and different counts are contained in the indictment drawn to meet the possible phases that the testimony may assume. Goode v. State, 57 App. 229, 123 S. W. 597.

The state, in answer to a motion to quash an indictment charging two separate and distinct offenses, has the right to elect on which count it will proceed. Betts v. State, 60 App. 621, 133 S. W. 351.

Where an indictment contained several counts charging offenses growing out of the same transaction, the refusal to require the state to elect on which count it would rely for a conviction was proper. Day v. State, 63 App. 537, 133 S. W. 123.

Where an indictment charged assault with intent to rape, burglary with intent to rape, and burglary with intent to steal, and the state elected to abandon the first count, because the punishment for that kind of an assault was less than for burglary, it was improper to submit the second. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 634.

Where an act constitutes different offenses, the state may elect the offense for which the offender will be prosecuted. January v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 555.

Under an information containing a single count if the evidence discloses two or more transactions, any one of which would sustain a conviction, the state must be required to elect, unless the offense charged is a continuous one. Golden v. State, 72 App. 19, 160 S. W. 557.

Where the state actually did elect between the several counts in the indictment, the denial of accused's motion to require election was not error. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

34. What constitutes.—Charge of court submitting but one of plural counts is tantamount to an election by the state on that count. Moore v. State, 37 App. 552, 40 S. W. 287; Smith v. State, 34 App. 123, 29 S. W. 774; Dalton v. State, 4 App. 333; Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 391; Mueller v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1142.

As to election in misdemeanors, see Street v. State, 7 App. 5; Waddell v. State, 1 App. 720.

In a misdemeanor prosecution, the state may introduce evidence under either count: not being required to elect between the counts. Woodward v. State, 58 App. 411, 126 S. W. 371.

Where an indictment charges several misdemeanors under one statute in one count, the state cannot be required to elect upon which charge it will proceed. Warner v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 266.

36. — Unlawfully practicing medicine.—Where an indictment for unlawfully practicing medicine charged in one count that defendant practiced medicine, without authority and without a license, by treating certain named persons, and in another count that he publicly professed to be a physician, and offered to treat diseases without first having registered his license, etc., the state was not required to elect on which of the counts it would rely for a conviction under the rule that election between counts cannot be required in misdemeanor cases. Mueller v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 1142.

37. — Carrying pistol.—All the testimony on a prosecution for carrying a pistol fixing the carrying on the occasion of defendant's going home with C., which was either on March 3d or March 4th, but not on both days, the fact that some of the evidence was that it was on March 4th, and other that it was on March 4th, did not require the state to elect between the two dates; there being two separate and distinct transactions. Brogdon v. State, 65 App. 475, 140 S. W. 352.

38. — Disorderly house.—Where an information for knowingly permitting a house to be kept as a house of prostitution contained only one count, while the evidence showed that eight houses owned by accused were houses of prostitution, and who were running houses of prostitution, the state should have been required to elect upon which offense it would seek a conviction. Golden v. State, 72 App. 29, 160 S. W. 265.

39. — Assault.—Where an indictment for aggravated assault contains two grounds of aggravation in separate counts, it is not error to refuse to require the State to elect upon which ground she relies for a conviction. Timon v. State, 34 App. 363, 30 S. W. 808.

Where the facts showed that accused assaulted prosecutor with intent to murder, by lying in wait, or with intent to rob, the state could elect to prosecute him for assault with intent to murder. Daniels v. State, 72 App. 286, 162 S. W. 500.

40. — Assault to murder, maiming, and robbery.—Where the indictment and evidence would have sustained a conviction of either assault to murder, maiming, or robbery, but the offenses all arose out of one transaction, the state was required to elect the offense for which it would seek a conviction, since, while defendants could be convicted of any one, they could not be convicted of more than one. Madrid v. State, 71 App. 420, 161 S. W. 92.

Where an indictment in separate counts charged assault to murder, maiming by cutting off prosecutor's ears, and robbery, defendants were not prejudiced by the fact that the court only submitted the charge of robbery, since the state was entitled to elect and ask a conviction for the most grave offense, included in the indictment, which the evidence would support. Madrid v. State, 71 App. 420, 161 S. W. 93.

41. — Homicide and conspiracy to kill.—There is no merit in the contention that the court should have required an election between the counts, one of which charged the homicide, the other that he and the accomplice killed deceased: the issue of homicide alone having been submitted to the jury, and their consideration having been restricted to that count. Betts v. State, 57 App. 388, 124 S. W. 494.

An indictment charging in one count that accused and his wife murdered their child, and charging in another count that they conspired together to kill the child, charges two distinct offenses, and the court, on motion, must either quash the indictment or compel the state to elect on which count it will proceed. Betts v. State, 66 App. 631, 133 S. W. 251.

42. — Rape.—Where indictment contained two counts, first, rape by force and fraud, second, rape of a woman so mentally diseased that she had no will to oppose, the state should not be required to elect upon which count a conviction would be had. Thompson v. State, 33 App. 472, 26 S. W. 887.

In a prosecution for rape, the state may be required to elect upon which of several instances of intercourse it will rely. Bader v. State, 57 App. 293, 122 S. W. 558.

Since the question of whether the state will be required to elect upon which count it will rely, when the indictment contains several counts charging different felonies, is for the trial court's discretion, there was no reversible error, in a prosecution for rape, in which the indictment charged intercourse on several different occasions, in refusing to require the state to elect until the testimony in chief was closed, the district attorney having elected to rely upon a particular count at the close of prosecution's examination, in which she testified as to acts of intercourse charged in the several counts, after which the court instructed the jury, except that offered to support the count relied upon by the state. Smith v. State, 64 App. 545, 142 S. W. 1173.

In a prosecution for rape, where the indictment consisted of two counts, one charging rape by force and another that she was an imbecile, the state could not be reso the count was valid, the court could then proceed, for the instruction of the jury was correct and the state could not be re­ that the offense was by force. Hubbard v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 250.

When a father, or other person standing in such relation to a girl under 15, in presence of rape on her, all acts of intercourse are admissible in evidence, but the state must elect upon which act it will seek a conviction. Ulmer v. State, 71 App. 579, 166 S. W. 1183.
It was not error to overrule defendant's oral motion to require the state to elect on which act of intercourse it would rely for a conviction of rape, where the court in its instructions expressly limited the jury to the act specified in the indictment as the one of which they must find accused guilty in order to convict. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 260, 162 S. W. 364.
Where the indictment appeared to separate different offenses in fact, and where the defendant was separately indicted for assaults with intent to rape a girl under 15 years of age, alleged to have been committed on two different dates, and evidence of both offenses was admitted in the trial on the indictment first, the defendant could not be convicted of the second offense, in connection with a statement that the state relied on the second offense, the defendant could be convicted only for the second offense. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 719.
The state, at the conclusion of the testimony in a prosecution for rape on a girl under 15 years of age, should be required, on motion of defendant, to elect upon which specific act of intercourse it would rely for a conviction. Mora v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 244.
43. — Rape and assault to rape.—Where the state elected to prosecute accused for assault to rape, he was not entitled to a peremptory instruction because the testimony of prosecutrix showed rape instead of assault to rape. Grimes v. State, 71 App. 614, 169 S. W. 688.
44. — Rape and incest.—Counts for rape and incest, based on the same transaction, could be joined in the indictment, so that the state was not required to elect upon which count it would proceed. Watkins v. State, 58 App. 118, 124 S. W. 659, 125 Am. St. Rep. 922, 21 Ann. Cns. 556.
45. — Rape and bigamy.—It is no defense to a prosecution for rape accomplished by a pretended marriage, where the man had a wife living and not di­ voiced that the marriage would have been a valid, common-law marriage except for his previous marriage, and that therefore the offense was bigamy, since the state tended to the right to elect, where the act of the defendant constitutes more than one offense, upon which charge the defendant shall be prosecuted. Melton v. State, 71 App. 139, 158 S. W. 500.
46. — Seduction.—In a prosecution for seduction where numerous acts of intercourse were proven, and the court charged the jury that a conviction could be had on the second, the overruling of accused's motion to compel an election was not error. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.
47. — Burglary.—Where an indictment in one count charged a burglary in the daytime, and in another count charged a burglary in the nighttime, it was held error to require the state to elect upon which count defendant should be tried. Gonzalez v. State, 12 App. 657.
Where an indictment for burglary contained two counts, one charging burglary of a private residence and the other burglary in the ordinary form, and the evidence, which was circumstantial, fairly showed that the burglary was at night, but misled a finding that it was committed in the daytime, the court did not err in refusing to require the state to elect upon which count a verdict would be asked. Hawthorn v. State, 62 App. 114, 138 S. W. 776.
There was no error in refusing to require the state to elect whether it would prosecute on a count for daylight burglary or on one for nighttime burglary. Fox v. State, 62 App. 430, 138 S. W. 415.
Where an indictment contained two counts, one charging burglary and the other an attempt to commit burglary, both based on the same transaction, the state could not be required to elect, and the court properly submitted both counts. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273.
48. — Theft.—An indictment charged accused with stealing three sheep, and the evidence, which was all circumstantial, tended to show that six sheep were taken. Held, that the district attorney should have been required to elect for which sheep the conviction would be based. Mazurczek v. State, 59 App. 211, 128 S. W. 136.
Where two indictments were returned against accused for theft of two cows, and, on the trial of one of them alleging ownership in B., the court in terms required the jury to find the ownership in B. in order to convict, and that they could not consider the evidence of the taking of the other cow as proof of the theft in question, the court did not err, in the absence of a request, in failing to require the county attorney to elect as to which cow he would put defendant on trial for stealing. Cooper v. State, 59 App. 446, 129 S. W. 381.
49. — Bringing stolen property into state.—In a trial of an indictment for bringing stolen goods into the state charging only one transaction by different counts, the state was not required to elect upon which count it would ask for a conviction. State v. Zweig (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 747.
50. — Accomplices, accessories, and principals.—Where the several counts of the indictment which were based on the same transaction charged accused as principal, accomplice, or accessory, the state is not compelled to make an election between them. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 346.
51. Charge of court submitting counts.—See notes under: article 785, post.
Art. 482. [470] When indictment or information has been lost, mutilated, etc.—When an indictment or information has been lost, mutilated or obliterated, the district or county attorney may suggest the fact to the court; and the same shall be entered upon the minutes of the court; and, in such case, another indictment or information may be substituted, upon the written statement of the district or county attorney that it is substantially the same as that which has been lost, mutilated or obliterated. Or another indictment may be presented, as in the first instance; and, in such case, the period for the commencement of the prosecution shall be dated from the time of making such entry. [O. C. 406.] See Willson's Cr. Forms, 750-752.

1. Constitutionality.
2. Former law.
3. Application as statute of limitation.
4. Mutilation.
5. Original indictment on file as lost or mislaid.
7. Duty of defendant to supply lost indictment.
8. How indictment may be supplied.
9. Plea as predicate to substitution.
10. Suggestion of loss and proceedings thereon in general.
11. Right to contest substitution.

2. Former law.—Under a former statute (Hart Dig., art. 454), the fact of loss must have entered on the minutes and a new indictment be found as originally, or the prosecution might have proceeded under another statute (Hart Dig., art. 2769), by publishing, by clear and conclusive evidence, the exact contents of the lost indictment. State v. Elliott, 14 Tex. 423; State v. Adams, 17 Tex. 323.

3. Application as statute of limitation.—This article applies as a statute of limitation only where a new indictment is found, and not where another indictment is substituted for the one lost, so that, if the prosecution was not barred when the original indictment was returned, a prosecution under an indictment substituted for the one lost will not be barred though substituted at a time when prosecution would be barred on a new indictment. Brown v. State, 57 App. 570, 124 S. W. 101.

4. Mutilation.—An indictment which has become so mutilated as to become unintelligible, may be substituted. State v. Ivy, 33 Tex. 646. Where an information has been torn, and so mutilated as to render illegible an entire line, it should be substituted. Perez v. State, 20 App. 327.

The fraudulent alteration of a date in a complaint is a mutilation, not only of the complaint, but of the information, and the proper practice in such case would be to substitute the complaint and information, as the complaint could not be amended with respect to the date of the commission of the offense. Huff v. State, 23 App. 291, 4 S. W. 839.

Under this article the county attorney had no authority to change the date of filing an information and complaint, and that such change constituted a mutilation, rendering the same nugatory. Kelly v. State, 58 App. 1, 127 S. W. 544.

An indictment is sufficient as against a motion to quash, on the ground that it is mutilated, though drawn on two pieces of paper, pasted together, where it is probable that the grand jury took this method of having the bill prepared, instead of writing it in the usual way; there being no attempt to show that some one, other than they, was responsible for its condition. Jenkins v. State, 64 App. 88, 141 S. W. 222.

An indictment is sufficient as against an objection that it is mutilated, though it consists of two pieces of paper, pasted together, where one portion contains a printed form of the preliminary allegations, and the other, which is pasted securely thereto, contains the body of the charge in correct terms and in print, where there is no showing that its condition was caused by other than the grand jury presenting it. Jenkins v. State, 64 App. 88, 141 S. W. 222.

5. Original indictment on file as lost or mislaid.—An indictment or information can only be substituted when it has been lost, mislaid, mutilated, or obliterated. Where the original indictment was on file in the clerk's office of the court of appeals on appeal for inspection and said court, it was held that it could not be substituted. Sheshene v. State, 13 App. 523.

6. Loss of indictment after retransfer of case.—Where a criminal case, after being transferred, was retransferred to the original district, and the indictment was lost, it might be substituted as any other lost indictment. Berg v. State, 64 App. 613, 148 S. W. 884.

Where an indictment has been lost or destroyed after trial and conviction, it may be supplied either by the presentment by the grand jury of a second indictment, or by substitution. Harwood v. State, 16 App. 416; Turner v. State, 15 App. 258, 49 Am. Rep. 194.

9. Plea as predicate to substitution.—This article contemplates plea to the indictment before its loss as a predicate to its substitution. Schultz v. State, 15 App. 258, 49 Am. Rep. 194.

10. Suggestion of loss and proceedings thereon in general.—The suggestion of loss should be in writing, and should set out the facts, and be signed by the presentment of the party; and upon the presentation of the paper prepared as the substitute, accompanied by a written statement of the district or county attorney, that it is substantially the same as that lost, an order of the court should be entered, showing that the substitution was allowed and made. See this case for an insufficient record entry of substitution. Clampitt v. State, 3 App. 638; Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550; State v. Adams, 17 Tex. 232.

Before one can be tried upon what purports to be a substituted information, a motion must be presented by prosecution alleging the loss of the information and asking permission to substitute same. Reed v. State, 42 App. 572, 61 S. W. 925.

11. Right to contest substitution.—As the allowance of substitution is a judicial act, the accused has the right to contest it, and cannot be relegated to a motion to quash the substituted papers, or to the presentation of the papers of the substitute. Bowers v. State, 45 App. 155, 75 S. W. 299.

12. Substitution pending appeal.—The indictment or information cannot be supplied after an appeal has been perfected, so as to sustain the conviction. Turner v. State, 16 App. 318.

Under this and article 216, providing for the substitution of a lost information even after notice of appeal, the trial court may permit the substitution of a lost information, where the trial judge stated that in his opinion he had the information filed where the county clerk thought he had the information when he wrote the judgment, and three persons testified that an information had been prepared and filed, and only one witness testified that he had examined the papers on the day of the trial, and that he could not find the information. James v. State, 62 App. 610, 128 S. W. 409.

Pending an appeal, lost papers may be substituted, but only when they are lost subsequent to the trial of the case and after the attaching of the jurisdiction of the court. White v. State, 72 App. 16, 160 S. W. 705.

Where a criminal case was tried in the county court at the January term on an indictment substituted for the original indictment, which was lost, orders could not be entered at the August term after an appeal had been taken and the jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal Appeals had attached, substituting such indictment. White v. State, 72 App. 16, 160 S. W. 705.

13. Necessity of substituting papers substantially the same.—In order to substitute at all, the substituted paper must be substantially the same as that which has been lost, mutilated, mutilated, or obliterated. A complaint signed by one party cannot be substituted by one of another party. Morrison v. State, 43 App. 457, 60 S. W. 785.

Under this article, where there was no written statement that the substituted indictment was substantially the same as that lost and no written request or pleading of any sort filed, the judgment would be reversed. White v. State, 72 App. 16, 160 S. W. 705.

14. Agreement.—Agreement of counsel that an indictment is a true substituted indictment is not a substitution. Carter v. State, 41 App. 698, 58 S. W. 89.

Where the original indictment was misplaced while in the hands of accused's attorney, who stated that he had a copy which could be used as a substitute, which was done with consent, in the presence of accused, accused could not on appeal complain because he in person made no agreement for substitution. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 43.

15. Notice.—When an indictment is lost, and no new indictment is found there is simply a substitution of the lost paper; the defendant is not entitled to two days' service of substituted indictment. James v. State, 52 App. 21, 105 S. W. 136.

The record disclosed that defendant was present and contested the entry of an order allowing the state to substitute an information for the one which had been lost and the bill of exceptions did not recite that defendant was not served with notice of the motion for the entry of order. A motion in arrest of judgment re­ cited that defendant had not been served with process for this order. Held that, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing that fact, the matter will not be reviewed. Banks v. State, 62 App. 552, 193 S. W. 496.

16. Order of court.—An order of the court is indispensable to the substitution of a record or a file paper. See Burrough v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 159, in extenso on the rule, and Strong v. State, 18 App. 19; Rogers v. State, 11 App. 608. A county attorney moved to substitute an information for the original which was lost, and the motion was granted, the order conferred no authority for the substitution of the complaint as well. Kelly v. State, 59 App. 14, 127 S. W. 544.

17. Nunc pro tunc.—Substitution of lost information cannot be made after the trial of an order to substitute nunc pro tunc. Reed v. State, 42 App. 572, 61 S. W. 925, 926.

The action of the trial court in entering a nunc pro tunc order allowing the state to substitute an information for one which has been lost, where the recitals of that order show that the proceedings were regular, that a motion was presented, 250 and that the court heard evidence, must be presumed to be correct, in the absence of facts, even though defendant preserved a bill of exception, which merely objected to the order. Banks v. State, 62 App. 552, 133 S. W. 496.

18. Record.—The record must show: (1) The suggestion of loss, etc. (2) The leave of the court to substitute. (3) That the substitution was in fact made. Turner v. State, 4 App. 306; Beardall v. State, 4 App. 631; Magee v. State, 14 App. 398. And see Pate v. State, 21 App. 191, 17 S. W. 461; Pierce v. State, 14 App. 365; Bridges v. State, 17 App. 579.

Record may be amended by making the substitution entries nunc pro tunc. Turner v. State, 7 App. 586. The authenticity of a substitute indictment cannot be rested on presumption, nor on mere inference from a record recital that, the original indictment being lost, the court granted leave to substitute it with a copy kept by the court. The record must affirmatively verify it as a fact that the substitution was actually made. Rogers v. State, 11 App. 668; Turner v. State, 7 App. 598; Strong v. State, 18 App. 19; Beardall v. State, 9 App. 252.

To substitute lost indictment the minutes must show suggestion of loss and leave to substitute, and that substitution has been made. Carter v. State, 41 App. 608, 58 S. W. 80.

19. — Essentials of transcript on appeal.—See notes to art. 929.

20. Necessity of showing actual substitution.—It must be shown that the substitution was actually made. Turner v. State, 7 App. 596, and cases cited; Rogers v. State, 11 App. 608, and Strong v. State, 18 App. 19.

21. Service of copy of second indictment.—Where the original indictment has been dismissed for defects and a second indictment has been presented, the defendant is entitled to a copy of such second indictment for at least ten days before he can be put upon trial. Lockwood v. State, 32 App. 137, 22 S. W. 413.

Where defendant announced ready for trial not knowing that a second indictment had been presented, held, such announcement was not a waiver of his right to prejudice by copy made. Harris v. State, 32 App. 279, 22 S. W. 1027.

22. Lost complaint or information.—See notes, ante.

The statute only relates to indictments and informations saying nothing about affidavits and complaints but the latter are part of the information, being based thereon. However article 1458, Sayles' Civ. St. 1877 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1874, art. 2157) provides for the substitution of lost records of all kinds, and if other statutory authority to substitute a lost complaint is wanting, it could be found under said provisions. Bradburn v. State, 43 App. 309, 65 S. W. 519.

The substituted complaint or information must be substantially the reproduction of the lost original. This requirement is not met by substituting a complaint made by C for the lost original made by D. Morrison v. State, 43 App. 457, 66 S. W. 779.

The substitution of a lost complaint or information is a judicial act, and is upon notice; and it is competent for the defendant to contest the substitution of said papers if he sees fit. Bowers v. State, 45 App. 185, 75 S. W. 299.

23. Amendment.—As to amending an indictment or information, see post, arts. 698, 699, and notes thereto. Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 821.

Art. 483. [471] Order transferring cases.—Upon the filing of an indictment in the district court of each county in this state, which charges an offense, over which such court has no jurisdiction, the judge of such court shall immediately, or as soon as convenient, make an order transferring the same to such inferior court as may have jurisdiction to try the offense therein charged, stating in such order the cause transferred and to what court transferred. [Const., art. 5, § 17; Act Aug. 12, 1876, p. 135; Act 1879, ch. 65, p. 71; Act Feb. 5, 1881, ch. 3, p. 2.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 750, 753. See notes to article 485.

Authority and jurisdiction.—As to the jurisdiction of the district courts, see, ante, arts. 85, 90. Of county courts, ante, art. 98, and notes.

Where the indictment charges a felony, the case is not transferable from the district court, because it may have been developed by the evidence on a trial that the defendant, if guilty, was guilty of a misdemeanor only. Ingle v. State, 4 App. 91; Cassidy v. State, 4 App. 86.

All indictments must be presented in the district court, and those for misdemeanor, over which said court has no jurisdiction, must be transferred to the proper tribunal for trial. Davis v. State, 6 App. 133; Coker v. State, 7 App. 83; Johnson v. State, 28 App. 562, 13 S. W. 1005.

The district court has no authority to transfer a felony case to the county court, and an order of transfer in such case is a nullity, and does not divest the district court of jurisdiction, and no order to retransfer the case is requisite. Fossett v. State, 11 App. 46.

Where the district court, is vested with jurisdiction over misdemeanors, and by statute such jurisdiction is divested, and vested in the county court, indictments and informations for misdemeanors then pending in said district court should be transferred to the county court. Hildreth v. State, 19 App. 165.

Nothing to the contrary appearing, the appellate court will presume in favor of the regularity of the selection of the special judge who ordered the transfer. Schwartz v. State, 38 App. 26, 40 S. W. 976.

A district judge though disqualified to try a case (on account of relationship) is authorized to receive the indictment and transfer the case to the county court which has jurisdiction. The act of the district judge in transferring a case over which his court has no jurisdiction is merely ministerial. Oxford v. State, 49 App. 221, 94 S. W. 464.
Art. 483. PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

Proceedings for transfer in general.—Proceedings held regular and proper in the transfer of an information from the district to the county court. Hildreth v. State, 19 App. 195.

Proceedings of transfer of indictment held erroneous, and that plea to jurisdiction should have been sustained. Mitten v. State, 24 App. 346, 6 S. W. 196.

Substantial compliance with statute as sufficient.—A substantial compliance with this article is all that is necessary. Richards v. State, 83 App. 175, 140 S. W. 450; Gaston v. State, 11 App. 142; Brannon v. State, 23 App. 428, 5 S. W. 122; Lynn v. State, 28 App. 515, 13 S. W. 867, and cases cited.

Order.—See notes under article 485, post.

Jurisdiction of the new court will not attach in default of an order of transfer. Austin v. State, 8, 49 S. W. 724.

Inasmuch as the county court is not authorized to impanel a grand jury or receive indictments, in order to attach jurisdiction of the county court, there must be an order entered in the district court transferring the indictment to the county court for trial. Bird v. State, 49 App. 296, 91 S. W. 791.

The order of transfer is not required to state the name and nature of the offense charged. If the order states the nature of the offense incorrectly this fact does not destroy the order. Taylor v. State, 49 App. 483, 66 S. W. 775; Malloy v. State, 35 App. 339, 33 S. W. 1052, citing Tellison v. State, 35 App. 388, 33 S. W. 1052.

Under article 446, ante, it is not necessary to name the defendant on the minutes of the district court. In the order transferring a case from the district to the county court it is sufficient to give the file number without stating either the offense or the name of the defendant. Haynes v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 16.

In the trial of criminal cases in the district court, a general order giving the numbers in the district court and character of offense is sufficient and a particular order is not necessary in each case. Dittfurth v. State, 46 App. 424, 42 S. W. 372; Forbes v. State, 35 App. 262. Omission in the order of transfer of the word "county" before "court," is immaterial error, the presumption obtaining that the district court intended to transfer to the proper jurisdiction, which was the county court. Johnson v. State, 28 App. 563, 13 S. W. 1065.

Where an order was made in the district court transferring to the county court indictments numbered 158 to 195, and the names of the defendants were not given, only the file numbers being entered, such an order does not show that indictment numbered 214 in the county court was one of those transferred from the district court, and hence the county court obtained no jurisdiction. Hyatt v. State, 61 App. 421, 35 S. W. 142.

Impeachment of jurisdiction of county court.—When a case has been transferred by the district court to the county court and the latter court has jurisdiction to try the particular case, its jurisdiction cannot in any way be impeached. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 62 S. W. 921.

Record on appeal.—Where an indictment charges a misdemeanor, the record must show the cause from the district to the county court for trial, in order to show the jurisdiction of the county court to sustain a conviction there. Harris v. State, 57 App. 84, 121 S. W. 1116.

It being impossible for a county court to obtain an indictment other than by transfer from the district court, the record on appeal from the county court must show the indictment was presented in the district court and transferred to the county court. Richardson v. State, 57 App. 283, 122 S. W. 560.

Transfer between district courts in same county.—A county having two district courts within and only one authorized to impanel the grand jury, the transfer by that court to the other courts jurisdiction upon the other. Moore v. State, 36 App. 88, 35 S. W. 668.

So there being two district courts in McLennan county under the act creating them, indictments may be transferred from one to the other. Moore v. State, 36 App. 88, 35 S. W. 668.

Transfer from county to district court.—A case cannot now be transferred from county to district courts because of the disqualification of the county judge. Const. v. sect. 18; Johnson v. State, 42 App. 146, 29 S. W. 985.

Objection to transfer or proceedings.—See notes under article 485, post.

Art. 484. [472] What causes shall be transferred to justice of the peace at county seat.—Causes over which justices of the peace have jurisdiction may be transferred to a justice of the peace at the county seat, or, in the discretion of the judge, to a justice of the precinct in which the same can be most conveniently tried, as may appear by memorandum indorsed by the foreman of the grand jury on the indictment or otherwise; but, if it appear to the judge that the offense has been committed in any incorporated town or city, the cause shall be transferred to a justice in said town or city, if there be one therein: and any justice, to whom any such cause may be transferred, shall have jurisdiction to try the same. [Const., art. 5, § 16; Act April 3, 1879, ch. 65, p. 71; original Act Aug. 12, 1876, ch. 91, p. 135.]

See Const. art. 5, § 17; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xlv. See notes to article 485.

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—See article 106, and notes. Judicial knowledge.—When an indictment is for an offense cognizable by a justice of the peace, and it is made to appear to the district court that the offense was committed in an unincorporated town or city, the cause should be transferred to a justice of the peace in said town or city, if there be such officer therein. But the county judge, with judicial knowledge that any designated locality is an incorporated town or city, and that there is a justice of the peace therein. If, therefore, these facts were not made to appear to the district judge when he transferred the cause to the county court, the latter court acquires jurisdiction by the order of transfer, and that jurisdiction cannot be impeached in the county court. Patterson v. State, 12 App. 222; Koenig v. State, 33 App. 367, 26 S. W. 585, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, and cases cited.

Art. 485. [473] Duty of clerk of district court when case is transferred.—It shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court, without delay, to deliver the indictments in all cases transferred, together with all the papers relating to each case, to the proper court or justice of the peace, as directed in the order of transfer; and he shall accompany each case with a certified copy of all the proceedings taken therein in the district court, and also with a bill of the costs that have accrued therein in the district court; and the said costs shall be collected in the court in which said cause is tried, in the same manner as other costs are collected in criminal cases. [Act Aug. 12, 1876, p. 135.]

Order of transfer.—See notes under article 483, ante.

Under this article, an order transferring an indictment from the district court to the county court, which recited that the district court had no jurisdiction of the offense, which was a misdemeanor, and that the county court had jurisdiction, and that the cases should be transferred "to said county of said county," was sufficient, though it omitted the word "court" after the word "county" in the quoted phrase. Ellis v. State, 59 App. 626, 130 S. W. 170.

Cases to which statute refers.—This article has reference only to cases that have been improperly transferred from one court to another in the county where the indictment is preferred; that is from a court not having jurisdiction to one that did. It does not relate to a change of venue from one county to another. Moore v. State, 49 App. 498, 96 S. W. 322.

Transcript and certificate.—In executing the order of transfer, the district clerk must accompany each case with a certificate taken therein in the district court. Noncompliance with this requirement is available to the defendant by plea to the jurisdiction of the court to which the transfer is made. Brumley v. State, 11 App. 114, and cases cited; Lynn v. State, 28 App. 515, 13 S. W. 867. The record of the presentment of the indictment should be certified to the court to which the cause is transferred as a part of the proceedings taken in the district court. Walker v. State, 7 App. 52.

The certificate must show that the indictment was presented in the district court by the grand jury. Estes v. State, 23 App. 560, 28 S. W. 469, and cases cited. But the law does not require that the certificate of transfer shall recite that the indictment was signed, or not signed, by the foreman of the grand jury. Robinson v. State, 24 App. 4, 8 S. W. 569; Baker v. State, 25 App. 8, 11 S. W. 676. Or describe the offense. Howard v. State, 44 App. 38, 6 S. W. 374; Malloy v. State, 35 App. 389, 33 S. W. 1083, citing Tellison v. State, 35 App. 388, 33 S. W. 1082. Or state when the district court adjourned. Adams v. State, 48 App. 7, 33 S. W. 1080. The record of the presentment of the indictment should be certified to the court to which the cause is transferred, as a part of the proceedings therein. See Art. 11, § 33, and cases cited: Adams v. State, 48 App. 7, 33 S. W. 1089.

For insufficient certificates of transfer, see Donaldson v. State, 15 App. 25; McDonnell v. State, 2, App. 113; Walker v. State, Id. 52. Substantial compliance with the statute regulating the transfer of indictments is all that is required in such proceeding. Brannon v. State, 28 App. 428, 5 S. W. 132.

See a certificate held to be in substantial compliance with the statute. Gaston v. State, 7 App. 149; Coker v. State, 7 App. 148.

The certificate must be authenticated by the seal of the district court. Walker v. State, 7 App. 52.

Curing defects.—The certificate, when defective, may be amended, or a new certificate may be made by the clerk of the district court, with the papers of the cause in the court to which the cause has been transferred. McDonnell v. State, 7 App. 115; Hasley v. State, 14 App. 217; Johnson v. State, 28 App. 253.
Art. 486. [474] Proceedings of court to which cases have been transferred.—All cases transferred from the district court shall be entered on the docket of the court to which they are transferred; and all process thereon shall be issued, and the defendant tried, in the same manner as if the causes had originated in the court to which they have been transferred. [Id.]

Issuance of process.—In cases transferable from the district court, no process therein can issue from that court, but the process therein must issue from the court to which the causes are transferred. Cassaday v. State, 4 App. 96.

Art. 487. [475] Cause improvidently transferred, shall be retransferred.—When a cause has been improvidently transferred to a court which has no jurisdiction of the same, the court to which it has been transferred shall order it to be re-transferred to the proper court; and the same proceedings shall be had as in the case of the original transfer. In such case, the defendant and the witnesses shall be held bound to appear before the court to which the case has been re-transferred, the same as they were bound to appear before the court so transferring the same.

Improper transfer.—The district court having no jurisdiction to transfer a felony case to the County Court, an order making such transfer is a nullity, and an order sending the case back is unnecessary. Fossett v. State, 11 App. 49.

631. Changed to nearest county, unless.

632. When adjoining counties are all subject to objection, etc.

632a. Change of venue in certain cases.

633. Application for change of venue may be controverted, how.

634. Order of judge shall not be revised on appeal, unless, etc.

635. Clerk's duties in case of change of venue.

636. Same subject.

637. If defendant is on bail, shall be recognized.

638. Defendant failing to give recognizance shall be kept in custody, etc.

639. If defendant be in custody.

640. If the court be in session, etc.

641. Witnesses need not again be summoned, etc.

11. OF DISMISSING PROSECUTIONS

642. When defendant is in custody, etc., and no indictment has been presented, etc., prosecution shall be dismissed.

643. Prosecution may be dismissed by state's attorney, etc.

1. OF ENFORCING THE ATTENDANCE OF DEFENDANT AND OF FORFEITURE OF BAIL

Article 488. [476] Bail forfeited, when.—Whenever a defendant is bound by recognizance or bail bond to appear at any term of a court, and fails to appear on the day set apart for taking up the criminal docket, or any subsequent day when his case comes up for trial, a forfeiture of his recognizance or bail bond shall be taken. [O. C. 407.]

See ante, ch. 4, title 5.

Jurisdiction of county court.—See notes under article 99, ante.

When bail bond or recognizance is functus officio.—When the principal appears at the trial and is fined and placed in jail, the bond has served its purpose and is functus officio. Not so with an appeal bond from a justice to county court. Johnson v. State, 32 App. 353, 22 S. W. 406.

When forfeiture may be taken.—A forfeiture declared on a day previous to the day on which the defendant is bound to appear is void. Crowder v. State, 7 App. 484.

A forfeiture may be judicially declared at any time after it has occurred, and before the obligation is barred by the statute of limitation. Hill v. State, 15 App. 530; Barrera's Sureties v. State, 32 Tex. 644.

Bail bond or recognizance is not vitiated by the setting aside of a defective judgment, nisi, and may be forfeited later. Anderson v. State, 19 App. 259; Burris v. State, 34 App. 551, 31 S. W. 395, and cases cited.

Default and judgment nisi.—See notes under the following article, and also under article 499, post.

The undertaking of the bail is an original undertaking for the appearance of his principal to answer to the indictment; and hence, if he does not have his principal in court according to his undertaking, he forfeits his undertaking, and it becomes a debt of record, and he a principal judgment debtor, as between himself and the state. Gay v. State, 30 Tex. 504.

The failure of a defendant to appear in compliance with the condition of a recognizance or bail bond, is a forfeiture, and a judgment nisi is a recorded declaration of the fact. Taylor v. State, 21 Tex. 499.

Bail bond was forfeited and judgment nisi rendered at the July term of the court. Scire facias was issued to the sureties on the twentieth day of July, citing them to appear and answer on the third Monday of the same month, which was the eighteenth day already passed. Held, that a default judgment was void. Bul-lard v. State, 32 App. 618, 24 S. W. 895.

Dismissal of scire facias without concurrently setting aside judgment nisi will defeat any subsequent forfeiture. Burris v. State, 34 App. 551, 31 S. W. 395, and cases cited.

As this and the following section do not require that the judgment on forfeiture of bail shall recite when accused was to appear, a judgment nisi was not invalid.
because it recited that the principal was to make his personal appearance "on the ---" and it also recited that the principal "may and shall appear." The blank quoted not operating to show that the principal was to appear on an impossible day, but being mere surplusage, and the court having fixed the time of his appearance as of the very date when the bond was given.

Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 667.

Art. 489. [477] Manner of taking a forfeiture.—Recognizances and bail bonds are forfeited in the following manner: The name of the defendant shall be called distinctly at the door of the court house, and, if the defendant does not appear within a reasonable time after such call is made, judgment shall be entered that the state of Texas recover of the defendant the amount of money in which he is bound, and of his sureties, the amount of money in which they are respectively bound, which judgment shall state that the same will be made final, unless good cause be shown at the next term of the court why the defendant did not appear. [O. C. 408; amended.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 507.

See notes under preceding article, and also under article 490, post.

1. Judgment nisi in general.—A judgment final in the first instance is not authorized. There must first be a judgment nisi, and notification to the sureties.
Wauchope v. State, 6 Tex. 337.

It is not a valid object to a judgment nisi, on a bond to answer a charge of murder, that the complaint on which the principal was brought before the magistrate by whom the bond was taken only charged the principal with an assault with intent to murder. Dyches v. State, 24 Tex. 266.

1. Judgment nisi is not valid unless it includes both principal and all sureties, and will not support final forfeiture. Ellis v. State, 10 App. 824; Douglass v. State, 26 App. 248, 9 S. W. 722.

A judgment nisi is properly rendered against the principal and his sureties severally for the amount of the recognizance or bond. Kiser v. State, 13 App. 201; Stallings v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 133; ante, art. 339. But see Carr v. State, 9 App. 463; Sass v. State, 8 App. 426, and Ishmael v. State, 41 Tex. 244, which it would have been virtually, though not expressly, overruled by the Kiser case, supra, and other cases cited in art. 339, note ante.

A. was held to bail for his appearance before the district court to answer a charge of swindling. He was indicted for theft, and failing to appear his bail bond was forfeited. Held, that the indictment for theft did not authorize the forfeiture of the bail bond for swindling. Addison v. State, 14 App. 568.

A judgment nisi which fails to specify the amount of money for which the judgment is rendered, both against the principal and the sureties, though in other respects it comply strictly with the requirements of law, is insufficient and will not support a judgment final. Galindo v. State, 15 App. 319.

The judgment nisi must specify the amount of money for which it is rendered, both against the principal and the sureties. Galindo v. State, 15 App. 319; State v. Cox, 25 Tex. 404.

Under the present law, the judgment nisi must show that the forfeiture was taken according to law, and recite that it will be made final unless good cause be shown at the next term of the court why the defendant did not appear. Lindley v. State, 17 App. 120, and cases cited. Thompson v. State, Id. 218, and cases cited; Ware v. State, 21 App. 328, 17 S. W. 624; McIntyre v. State, 19 App. 443, and cases cited.

The obligation of both surety and principal is both joint and several, and therefore, it is immaterial whether the citation or judgment nisi describes it as joint "or," several, or joint "and" several. Allee v. State, 28 App. 631, 13 S. W. 991.

A. Judgment nisi which does not contain the statutory provisions is void, and can not be made the basis of a final judgment. Thus, it must state that "the same will be made final, unless good cause be shown at the next term of the court why the defendant did not appear." Ware v. State, 21 App. 328, 17 S. W. 624; McIntyre v. State, 19 App. 443; Burnett v. State, 13 App. 392; Lindley v. State, 15 App. 120; Thompson v. State, Id. 318; Pickett v. State, 16 App. 648; Watkins v. State, Id. 646; Collins v. State, 12 App. 356; Thomas v. State, Id. 416; Barton v. State, Id. 618; Fulton v. State, 14 App. 32; McWhorter v. State, Id. 339; Addison v. State, Id. 585; Hart v. State, 15 App. 565; Smith v. State, Id. 31; Cheatham v. State, Id. 22.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—17 257

It should show, however, where the parties were obligated to appear. Moseley v. State, 37 App. 18, 38 S. W. 800.

2. Description of bond. — Where a bail bond required the principal to appear in R. county, and was forfeited in A. county, and the judgment nisi described the bond as requiring the principal to appear in A. county, it was held to be a fatal misdescription of the bond. Cushman v. State, 38 Tex. 181.

A judgment nisi in a proceeding on a bail bond should so describe the bond as to identify it; and it is better that it should state also the date of the bond, though the bond itself is essential. Holley v. State, 34 Tex. 235. (Cr. App.)

3. Statement of matter of evidence. — Under this article and article 491, stating the requisites of the citation to the sureties to show good cause, and not requiring it to state that the bond was approved, as required by statute, and accused released thereunder, it is not necessary that the judgment or citation should state such facts; this being a matter of evidence. Sanders v. State, 79 App. 532, 158 S. W. 291.

4. Surplusage. — As this and the preceding article do not require that the judgment on forfeiture of bail shall recite when accused was to appear, a judgment nisi was not invalid because it recited that the principal was to make his personal appearance on the last day of . . . 191-" where it also recited that the principal "should well and truly make his personal appearance before said court * * * and there remain from day to day until discharged"; the blank quoted not operating to limit the time to appear on an impossible day, but being more surplusage, and the words last quoted fixing the time of his appearance as of the very date when the bond was given. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 607.

Though there was but one surety on a bail bond, the judgment nisi is not invalid in the use of the word "each" with "surety" is singular, and, if superficial, may be disregarded as surplusage. General Bond ing & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

5. Failure to order citations and direct time for return. — The judgment nisi made no requisites of the issuance of citations nor direct when they shall be returnable. Error in these respects is not material and does not affect the validity of the judgment nisi. Gragg v. State, 18 App. 255.

6. Alleging date of default. — Under this article it is not fatal error for the judgment nisi to fail to allege the date on which accused failed to appear. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

7. Dismissal as to principal or co-surety. — In proceedings on the forfeiture of a bail bond, the state may dismiss as to the principal, whether with or without cause; it not being contemplated by this article 490 and 500, post, that questions arising between the principal and his sureties, or between the principal and the sureties themselves, shall be adjudicated in such proceeding. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 618.

A bail bond is a several obligation of the principal and the sureties, and where judgment nisi is taken against the principal, and citation is issued for him and the sureties, the case may be dismissed as to the principal and trial had and judgment rendered against the sureties alone. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 618.

A dismissal as to the principal on a bail bond is not improper, and will not free the surety, where the principal is a refugee from justice; this conclusion being strengthened by Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1294, providing that a surety is not prejudiced by the necessity of previously authors of the principal: when he resides beyond the limits of the state or cannot be reached by the ordinary process of law. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

A bail bond is a joint and several obligation, and the dismissal as to one bondsman thereby does not prevent judgment being entered against another. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

8. Taking against sureties only. — And the judgment nisi must be entered against the principal as well as the sureties. Ellis v. State, 10 App. 224.

Forfeiture against sureties without contemporaneous judgment against the principal is erroneous. Cox v. State, 34 App. 94, 29 S. W. 273, and cases cited. And some authorities to the effect that the scire facias must comprise the substantial requisites of both petition and citation, showing the character of the obligation, etc.

Under this article where the judgment nisi was not taken against the principal in the bond, but only against the sureties, it will not support a final judgment. Huntley v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1152.

9. Issuance of alias capias. — It is proper to order an alias capias for the principal to issue at the time of rendering judgment nisi. Post, art. 508; Slocumb v. State, 11 Tex. 15.

Any variance is fatal. Werbiski v. State, 20 App. 132, and cases cited. And the variance renders a greater sum than the recognition or bail bond, such judgment is invalid. Barringer v. State, 27 Tex. 553.

There was no variance between a bond reciting that defendant was charged "with a felony" and a judgment that he was "charged with a felony, to-wit, burglary." Barrrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558.

"Variance" is a disagreement between the allegation and the proof in some matter which, in point of law, is essential to the charge or claim; and matter which is made in a pleading not vitiated. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 667.

In view of this and the two following articles authorizing forfeiture of a bail bond, and declaring that the citation in a forfeited case shall state the date of the bond and that it has been declared forfeited, and shall notify the party to appear, etc., a bail bond, correctly stating the date for the appearance of accused, and a judgment nisi, based on the forfeiture of the bond, which gives the date of appearance as "on the day of — , 19—," since the quoted words state no date, and since the judgment need not state the date of appearance. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 618.

11. Effect of amendment.—Liens pendens is an untenable defense against a second scire facias when it appears that exceptions to the original judgment nisi were sustained, the judgment annulled and citation under it quashed. Anderson v. State, 19 App. 299.

12. Presumption on appeal.—It has been held that, on appeal, it will be presumed that the judgment nisi was taken in accordance with the statutory requirements, unless it affirmatively appear otherwise. Thompson v. State, 31 Tex. 166.

But see subsequent cases which hold that the judgment nisi must show that the forfeiture was taken in accordance with the statutory requirements. Lindley v. State, 17 App. 120; McWhorter v. State, 14 App. 220; Collins v. State, 12 App. 356.

13. Former law.—Before the adoption of the Code a simple entry declaring the recognizance or bond "forfeited" and ordering scire facias to issue was sufficient. Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 272.

The article formerly required that the sureties as well as the principal should be called at the door of the courthouse. See Odiorne v. State, 37 Tex. 122, decided under the article before the same was changed.

Art. 490. [478] Citation to sureties.—After the adjournment of the court at which the proceedings set forth in the last two articles have been had, a citation shall issue from the court, notifying the sureties of the defendant that the recognizance or bond has been forfeited, and requiring them to appear at the next term of the court and show cause why the same should not be made final; but it shall not be necessary to give notice to the defendant. [O. C. 409.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 858.

Function of citation or scire facias.—A function of the citation or scire facias is to bring the sureties into court to show cause against a final judgment on the forfeited bail bond. The scire facias need not include the principal, nor need he be served. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 212, 6 S. W. 34, citing Branch v. State, 25 Tex. 423; Vaughan v. State, 29 Tex. 272; Sims v. State, 41 App. 440, 55 S. W. 175.

The citation in a scire facias proceeding on a bail bond is to give notice to the sureties on the bond before a final judgment can be rendered on the bond and judgment nisi, and also serves as the pleading of the state, based on the judgment nisi. Holley v. State, 70 App. 311, 157 S. W. 937.

After the sureties have appeared and answered, a citation issued on forfeiture of a bail bond will be treated solely as a pleading on the bond and judgment nisi. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 607.

Jurisdiction to issue scire facias.—Scire facias to forfeit a bail bond can be issued only from the court having possession of the records on which it is founded. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

Citation and judgment nisi during same term.—It is no valid objection to a citation that it was issued during the term of the court at which the judgment nisi was rendered. Jones v. State, 15 App. 82.

Insistence of citation and rendition of judgment nisi at the same term of court does not affect action on a bail bond. Jones v. State, 15 App. 82.

Necessity of citation for or notice to principal.—See notes under article 492, post.

Citation for the principal need not be issued. Branch v. State, 25 Tex. 423; Vaughan v. State, 29 Tex. 272; Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 212, 6 S. W. 34. It is not necessary to serve notice on principal of intention to move to amend the recitals of scire facias and judgment nisi. Sims v. State, 41 App. 440, 55 S. W. 175; dismissing Collins v. State, 16 App. 274.

Dismissal as to principal.—In proceedings on the forfeiture of a bail bond, the state may dismiss as to the principal, whether with or without cause; it not being contemplated by this and the preceding article and article 500, that questions arising between the principal and his sureties, or between the sureties themselves, shall be adjudicated in such proceeding. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 607.

Variance between bond and judgment nisi.—See notes under article 499, ante.

In view of this article and the articles preceding and following, there is no variance of a bail bond, correctly stating the date for the appearance of accused, and a judgment nisi, based on the forfeiture of the bond, which gives the date of appearance as "on the day of — , 19—," since the quoted words state no date, and since the judgment need not state the date of appearance. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 614.

Objection to citation.—Where, on forfeiture of a bail bond, the sureties desire to object to insufficiency of the citation, they must in limine file a motion to
Art. 490. PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

TITLE 7

quash it and appear solely for that purpose. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 697.

Amendment of citation.—See article 499, post, and notes thereunder.

Art. 491. [479]. Requisites of citation.—A citation shall be sufficient if it contain the following requisites:

1. It shall run, “In the name of the state of Texas.”
2. It shall be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county where the surety resides or is to be found.
3. It shall state the name of the principal in such recognizance or bail bond and the names of his sureties.
4. It shall state the date of such recognizance or bail bond, and the offense with which the principal is charged.
5. It shall state that such recognizance or bail bond has been declared forfeited, naming the court before which the forfeiture was taken, the time when taken, and the amount for which it was taken against each party thereto.
6. It shall notify the surety to appear at the next term of the court and show cause why the forfeiture should not be made final.
7. It shall be signed and attested officially by the court or clerk issuing the same.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 668.

See, also, State v. Cox, 25 Tex. 404; Davidson v. State, 20 Tex. 649; Lindley v. State, 17 App. 121. (In so far as it holds that citation must show the authority under which the principal was arrested, the Lindley case was overruled in Werbiski v. State, 20 App. 131.) Irrelevant and informal matter will not vitiate the citation. Davidson v. State, 20 Tex. 649; State v. Gleavecke, 33 Tex. 53.

The citation must not vary essentially from the recognizance or bond. Baringer v. State, 27 Tex. 668; Cushman v. State, 33 Tex. 181; Smith v. State, 7 App. 169.

Seire facias is not sufficient if it fails to state such facts as would support a final judgment by default. Brown v. State, 45 Tex. 349.

It is not required that the citation to the sureties should show by what authority the bail bond was taken, or that it should appear therefrom that such bond was taken and approved by competent legal authority. The requisites of the citation are presented by the preceding article, and a citation containing such requisites is sufficient. A contrary rule was laid down in Pearson v. State, 7 App. 280, decided before the enactment of the preceding article, which decision was inadvertently approved in Lindley v. State, 17 App. 121. But said decisions in this particular were expressly overruled in Werbiski v. State, 20 App. 131, following the decision in Brown v. State, 18 App. 326.

The citation may, omit unessential particulars, provided it sets out all the substantial requisites. Sass v. State, 8 App. 426; Cowen v. State, 3 App. 530; Brown v. State, 42 Tex. 459; State v. Cox, 25 Tex. 404.

And defects of form are immaterial after a continuance of the cause. Gragg v. State, 18 App. 296.

The citation need not show by what authority the bond was taken, or that it was taken or approved by competent authority. Brown v. State, 18 App. 326; Werbiski v. State, 29 App. 131, overruling Lindley v. State, 17 App. 121, on this point.

It is not necessary that the citation recite that the recognizance was entered into in open court. Pleasants et al. v. State, 29 App. 214, 35 S. W. 43.

It is not necessary or material in a proceeding to forfeit a bail bond to show that the defendant was arrested. Trail v. State, 56 App. 73, 118 S. W. 714.

Under article 489, ante, providing that upon a forfeiture of a bail bond by non-appearance of accused judgment shall be entered that the state recover the amount of the bond, which shall state that it will be made final unless good cause be shown at the next term of court why accused did not appear, and article 491, stating the requisites of the citation to the sureties to show such cause, and not requiring it to state that the bond was approved, as required by statute, and accused released thereon, it is not necessary that the judgment or citation should state such facts; this being a matter of evidence. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 533, 158 S. W. 291.

In view of this and the two preceding articles, authorizing the forfeiture of a bail bond, and declaring that the citation in a forfeited case shall state the date of the bond and that it has been declared forfeited, and shall notify the party to appear, there is no variance between a bail bond, correctly stating the date for the appearance of accused, and a judgment nisi, based on the forfeiture of the bond, which gives the date of appearance as "on the —— day of ——, 191—".
since the quoted words state no date, and since the judgment need not state the date of appearance. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 613.

A citation for the forfeiture of a bail bond is not insufficient, as failing to allege facts constituting a cause of action, because after alleging the giving of the bond, and the transfer of the cause to a named court, it only averred that the plaintiff failed to make his appearance when duly called in "said court." General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

Requisite 1. Caption.—The style of the writ should be "The State of Texas." Const. art. 5, sec. 12. The caption "In the name of the state of Texas" preceding the address to the proper officer, this subdivision is sufficiently complied with. Const. art. V, sec. 12; Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022, citing Werbiski v. State, 20 App. 131. And see Goodin v. State, 14 App. 443.

Requisite 2. Direction to sheriff, etc.—A citation may be issued to any county sheriff for the defendant, for whom it was issued resides, and it is not required that either the citation or the judgment nisi shall show the place of the defendant's residence. Dyches v. State, 24 Tex. 266.

In material that the judgment or writ omitted to allege the residence of the party in the county to which the scire facias was issued. Dyches v. State, 24 Tex. 266.

Where a scire facias was directed to the sheriff or any legal officer of the county, and was returned by one who signed his name as a constable, stating that there is no sheriff or coroner in the county, on which judgment was rendered by default, the service was held sufficient. Gay v. State, 20 Tex. 594.

A citation commencing "The state of Texas to the sheriff or any constable, greetings," was held sufficient. Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022.

Requisite 3. Name of principal, etc.—Misstatement of the Christian name in the body of the recognizance is not ground for objection. It being conceded that the defendant was the party who signed the bond. State v. Rhodius, 37 Tex. 165. And see Whitener v. State, 28 App. 146, 41 S. W. 596.

There is an apparent variance between the names of the principal or a surety as used in the recognizance or bond or indictment, and as used in the citation, it must be shown by proper averment in the citation that the variant names designate the same person. Thus, where the bond was signed "W. J. McCulloch," when the information charged "John McCulloch," the citation should have averred that the two names referred to one and the same party. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 6 S. W. 34; Vidauri v. State, 22 App. 676, 3 S. W. 247; McIntyre v. State, 19 App. 413; Weaver v. State, 13 App. 191; Loving v. State, 9 App. 471; Walter v. State, 6 S. W. 544; Cassaday v. State, 4 App. 96; Lowe v. State, 15 Tex. 141.

The object of the citation is to bring the sureties into court to show cause why judgment final should not be entered against them, and it is not essential that it should be issued for, or served upon, the principal. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 6 S. W. 34; ante, art. 490, note.

Any variance between names as set out in the bond or judgment nisi and the citation or scire facias, unless by proper averment the writ shows the variant names to mean same party, is fatal. Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022; Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 6 S. W. 34, and cases cited.

Variance in the name of the principal. Whitener v. State, 28 App. 146, 41 S. W. 596.

Requisite 4. Date and offense charged.—See note as to "Variance" under article 497, post.

It must state the date of the recognizance or bond, and the offense with which the principal is charged, and it must appear to be an offense against the law. Thompson v. State, 17 App. 218; Jones v. State, 15 App. 82.

And it must be the offense named in the recognizance or bond. Bales v. State, 20 Tex. 486.

Oral testimony is available to show that the apparent variance was due to a clerical error. Day v. State, 51 App. 224, 101 S. W. 896.

And see an apparent variance satisfactorily explained. Pearson v. State, 51 App. 228, 101 S. W. 802.

The date of a bail bond is the date on which it was executed, and not the date of its approval. Holt v. State, 20 App. 271; Faubion v. State, 21 App. 494, 2 S. W. 830.

A citation held to sufficiently state date of bond. Robinson v. State, 34 App. 131, 29 S. W. 788.

Ball bond dates from its signature and execution, and not from the approval. Faubion v. State, 21 App. 494, 2 S. W. 830, citing Holt v. State, 20 App. 271. If the offense be not nominal, then its constituent elements must be stated. Cresap v. State, 28 App. 529, 13 S. W. 992; La Rose v. State, 28 App. 215, 15 S. W. 33; Edwards v. State, 29 App. 452, 16 S. W. 93.
Bond and writ may both state the offense by name if it be an offense eo nomine. Camp v. State, 26 App. 213; 15 S. W. 35; Brown v. State, 15 App. 421; 15 S. W. 1022; Stephens v. State, 50 App. 531, 98 S. W. 859, 99 S. W. 1122.

Exception that citation fails to allege date of recognizance comes too late after answer to the merits. Garrison v. State, 21 App. 542, 17 S. W. 351.

Sureties recited the bond signed dated this 23d day of Jan., 1895, the bond offered in evidence was dated — day of January, 1895, was approved on the 25d day of January, 1895; held, no variance. Mills et al. v. State, 36 App. 71, 25 S. W. 876.

Recognize described the offense as "passing as true, a forged instrument knowing the same to be forged, with intent to injure and defraud." Held sufficient. Camp v. State, 39 App. 142, 45 S. W. 499.

And place of appearance "the district court of W. county, at the court house of said county, in G. now in session," held sufficient. Camp v. State, 39 App. 142, 45 S. W. 491.

Recognize not stating, and the citation stating a date on which the former was entered into is not a variance. Camp v. State, 39 App. 142, 45 S. W. 491.

The bond and judgments nisi and final stating the offense only as "violating the local option law," which is not an offense eo nomine, were each insufficient. Stephens v. State, 50 App. 531, 98 S. W. 859, 99 S. W. 1122. And see Cravey v. State, 29 App. 54, 9 S. W. 62.

The offense "swindling," being one which by statute is made a distinct offense eo nomine, it is enough to state the offense in the scire facias as "swindling," without reciting whether it is a felony or misdemeanor, though under subdivision 2 of article 321, ante, the latter recital would also be necessary in the bond. Calaghan v. State, 57 App. 314, 122 S. W. 879.

Where a citation on scire facias on a bail bond did not recite the date of the bond, was finally defective. Holley v. State, 79 App. 404, 102 S. W. 569.

Under subdivision 3 of article 321, ante, providing that a bail bond shall describe the offense as a felony or as a misdemeanor, according to the charge, where a bond stated that defendant was charged with a felony, a citation to the sureties which was signed and made bond to appear and answer a "felony," stated that he was charged "with the offense of keeping premises for the purpose of being used for gaming," was sufficient, and sufficiently apprised the sureties of the offense charged. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 697.

Amount of judgment must be stated in judgment nisi and specified in the scire facias. State v. Cox, 25 Tex. 404.

A judgment nisi or scire facias stating an amount in excess of the bond should be quashed. Barringer v. State, 21 Tex. 553.

Variance between judgment nisi and scire facias as to time of forfeiture of the bond is fatal. Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022, and cases cited.

Judgment on forfeited bail bond is properly rendered against the defendant without Avant v. State, 32 App. 312, 26 S. W. 411, and cases cited.

Bail bond, which fails to designate the particular one of the two district courts of concurrent jurisdiction of the county to which the principal is bailed, is defective and not admissible in evidence in a scire facias proceeding. Granberry v. State, 55 App. 320, 116 S. W. 594.

Requisite 6. Notice to appear.—"To show cause why said judgment should not be made final," are the proper words to use in the conclusion of the citation. Jones v. State, 15 App. 82.

Where bond was forfeited and a scire facias was issued on the twelfth day of July citing the sureties to appear on the third Monday in July, which was the eighteenth day, held the service was void and a default judgment could not stand. Bullard v. State, 32 App. 518, 24 S. W. 898.

Amendment.—See notes under article 499, post.

Art. 492. [480] Citation shall be served and returned as in civil actions.—Sureties shall be entitled to notice by service of citation, the length of time and in the manner required in civil actions; and the officer executing the citation shall return the same in the manner provided for the return of citations in civil actions. [O. C. 412.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 808. See notes under article 439, post.

For service and return of citations in civil actions, and decisions relating there-to, see Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, title 37, c. 6.

1. Service and return in general. 2. Necessity of service on principal. 3. Time and manner of service as in civil actions. 4. Answer as curing want of service. 5. Objection to copy by plea in abatement. 6. Necessity of return showing service on defendants severally. 7. Noting in return time of receiving citation. 8. Return prima facie sufficient. 9. Insufficient return and citation. 10. Assignment of error as to service and return. 262

The return of the officer of service of citation may be amended as in civil actions, and a continuance of the cause renders all defects of form immaterial. Gragg v. State, 18 App. 255.

3. Time and manner of service in civil actions.—The sureties are entitled to notice by service of citation for the length of time and in the manner required in a civil action. Each defendant must be served by delivering to him in person a true copy of the citation, and the return of the officer must show the manner of the service, and that it was in compliance with law. Thus, a return as follows: "Executed on July 14, at 2 p.m., 1891, by delivering to J. Marshall in person, a true copy of this citation," was held insufficient, because it failed to show that a true copy of the citation was served upon each of the defendants, but on the contrary shows that the defendants were jointly served with one copy. Fulton v. State, 14 App. 32; Vaughan v. State, 29 Tex. 273; Covington v. Hutchins, 23 Tex. 379; King v. Goodson, 42 Tex. 152; Middleton v. State, 11 Tex. 255; Winans v. State, 25 Tex. Supp. 175; Couch v. State, 57 App. 134, 122 S. W. 24.

5. Objection to copy by plea in abatement.—Objections to the copy of the citation served upon the defendant must be made by plea in abatement. Wilson v. State, 25 Tex. 169.

6. Necessity of return showing service on defendants severally.—Return must show that service was had upon each of the defendants severally. Fulton v. State, 14 App. 32, and cases cited; Harryman v. State, 57 App. 204, 122 S. W. 208.

7. Noting in return time of receiving citation.—Failure of the sheriff to note in his return the hour of the day on which the citation was received is a mere irregularity which, of itself, will not invalidate a judgment final by default. Hurbolt v. State, 37 App. 699, 46 S. W. 906, following Peters v. Crittenden, 8 Tex. 125.

8. Return prima facie sufficient.—The return of service by an officer authorized to make service in certain contingencies is prima facie sufficient, and the authority of such officer cannot be questioned for the first time on appeal. Gay v. State, 20 Tex. 504.

9. Insufficient return and citation.—Under this article a return of service and citation reading: "Came to hand 22d day of August, 1908, in B. county," was not sufficient to sustain a default judgment against a surety on a bail bond. Couch v. State, 57 App. 134, 122 S. W. 24. Under this article to support a judgment by default, making final a judgment nisi, the return must show that each of the defendants was served in person with a copy of the writ, giving the date and place of such service, and a return: "Came to hand 22d day of August, 1908, and executed on C. 22d day of August, 1908, in B. county," was insufficient. Harryman v. State, 57 App. 204, 122 S. W. 208.

10. Assignment of error as to service and return.—An assignment of error that no copy of the citation was served upon the surety, brings in question, on appeal, the service of the defendant. Middleton v. State, 11 Tex. 255. A service wholly defective will support a default judgment on appeal, if not specially assigned as error. Evans v. State, 25 Tex. 80; Davis v. State, 30 Tex. 352.

Art. 493. [481] Citation may be served by publication.—Where the surety is a non-resident of the state, or where he is a transient person, or where his residence is unknown, the district or county attorney may, upon application in writing to the county clerk, stating the facts, obtain a citation to be served by publication; and the same shall be served by publication and returned in the same manner as in like cases in civil actions.

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1874, 1878.

Art. 494. [482] County shall pay cost of publication.—When service of citation is made by publication, the county in which the forfeiture has been taken shall pay the costs of such publication, and the amount shall be taxed as costs in the case.

Art. 495. [483] Service may be made out of the state, how.—Service of a certified copy of the citation upon any absent or non-resident surety may be made outside of the limits of this state by any person competent to make oath of the fact; and the affidavit in writing of such person, stating the facts of such service, shall be a sufficient return.

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1859, et seq.

Art. 496. [484] When surety is dead, citation to legal representatives.—When the surety is dead at the time the forfeiture is taken, the forfeiture shall nevertheless be valid. But the final judgment shall not be rendered where a surety has died, either before or after the forfeiture has been taken, unless his executor, administrator or heirs, as the case may be, have been cited to appear and show cause why the judgment should not be made final, in the same manner as provided in the case of the surety.

Judgment final against estate.—A general judgment should not be rendered against the administrator of an estate, but should direct payment “in due course of administration.” Wilcox v. State, 24 Tex. 544.

Art. 497. [485] Cases shall be placed upon civil docket.—When a forfeiture has been declared upon a recognizance or bail bond, the court or clerk shall docket the case upon the civil docket, in the name of the state of Texas, as plaintiff, and the principal and his sureties, as defendants; and the proceedings had therein shall be governed by the same rules governing other civil actions.

Bail defined.—See ante, art. 315, and notes.

The proceeding of forfeiture of bail is a criminal action, but after the rendition of a judgment nisi, all the proceedings, unless otherwise expressly provided, are governed by the same rules as govern in civil causes. Hart v. State, 13 App. 555; Houston v. State, Id. 558-560; Perry v. State, 14 App. 166; Jones v. State, 15 App. 82; Thompson v. State, 17 App. 218; Holt v. State, 20 App. 271; Redick v. State, 21 App. 267, 17 S. W. 465; Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 212, 6 S. W. 34; State v. Ward, 9 App. 462; State v. Norvell, 11 Tex. 427; Aber v. Warden, 49 Tex. 377. Judgment final upon a judgment nisi, where the proceeding is in the county court, is rendered only at a civil term of said court. Houston v. State, 13 App. 558, which declares that a contrary doctrine laid down in Cassaday v. State, 4 App. 96; Carter v. State, Id. 165; Will v. State, Id. 613, is not now the law. See, also, Hart v. State, 13 App. 555; Jones v. State, 15 App. 82. Titus county court, by peculiar legislation, is excepted from the rule above stated. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 424, 6 S. W. 34.

Scire facias cases are purely criminal, and a civil court has no jurisdiction over such cases. Jeter v. State, 86 Tex. 555, 28 S. W. 49, and cases cited.

But after judgment nisi and scire facias, the proceedings are governed by the rules that obtain in civil cases. Jay v. State, 34 App. 98, 29 S. W. 472; Cox v. State, 24 App. 94, 29 S. W. 273, and cases cited; Hollenbeck v. State, 40 App. 534, 61 S. W. 373.

Proceedings for forfeiture of a bail bond are, under this article, governed by the rules governing civil actions. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 584.

The procedure and practice, governing a suit on a forfeited bail bond are the same as in civil cases. Heinman v. State, 76 App. 489, 91 S. W. 276.

All the proceedings and judgments on the forfeiture of a bail bond constitute a criminal and not a civil case. Hudgens v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 607.

A proceeding to recover on forfeited bail bonds is a criminal action, and not a civil action; this being true, regardless of the amendments to the Code of Criminal Procedure in 1875, General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

Variance.—Under this article and Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1852, defining the requisites of a citation, there is no variance between a bail bond, which states accused a person, charged with a felony and a judgment nisi and citation, which recite that he is by indictment accused of keeping premises for gambling, since the keeper of a gambling house is guilty of a felony, and since the judgment and indictment state the offense with the definiteness required in bail bonds or indictments. Hudgens v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 613.

Continuance.—Continuance in scire facias proceedings is governed by rules in civil cases. Balley v. State, 26 App. 341, 9 S. W. 765.

Sureties are not entitled to continuance for the testimony of their principal when it appears he is absent on his own private business. Markham v. State, 33 App. 91, 26 S. W. 137.

Dismissal.—One of the defendants being dead at the time forfeiture was taken, subsequent dismissal of the case as to him was not error. Thompson v. State, 31 Tex. 165.

Suit as against an unserved surety may be dismissed and judgment taken against the principal and other sureties. Pleasants v. State, 33 App. 214, 15 S. W. 42.

New trial, writ of error, or appeal.—See articles 960-962, post, and notes.

The state is not entitled to a new trial in this proceeding, and when it has been granted one, a subsequent forfeiture on the same recognizance or bond is a nullity. Perry v. State, 14 App. 186; Robertson v. State, Id. 211.

The record on appeal must contain the statement of facts. Abbott v. State, 45 App. 514, 78 S. W. 510.

A party appealing from a judgment of forfeiture must file briefs in the lower court and in the Court of Criminal Appeals as in civil actions; hence an appeal from such judgment must be dismissed where no briefs were filed. Heilman v. State, 79 App. 490, 138 S. W. 276; Thetford v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1153.

Art. 498. [486] Sureties may answer at next term.—At the next term of the court, after the forfeiture of the recognizance or bond, if the sureties have been duly notified, or at the first term of the court after the service of such notice, the sureties may answer in writing and show cause why the defendant did not appear, which answer may be filed within the time limited for answering in other civil actions. [O. C. 410.]

Answer or plea in general.—If the proceeding be in the county court, the answer or plea must be made at the next term of such court; See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1911, arts. 1567, 1594 et seq., as to time of answering. Odorne v. State, 37 Tex. 123.

Plea of misnomer in abatement. State v. Rhodius, 37 Tex. 165.

This article refers to the civil and not the criminal term of the county court. Housley v. State, 15 App. 558; Custody v. State, 4 App. 396; Carter v. State, Id. 165 and Wills v. State, Id. 613, are obsolete. And see Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 6 S. W. 34, and cases cited.

Plea of non est factum.—See Lindsay v. State, 29 App. 468, 46 S. W. 1045.

Withdrawal of answer.—Motion of sureties to withdraw answer was denied, but they were permitted to file another in the nature of a plea in abatement, which was heard. Held, not error. Camp v. State, 29 App. 424, 42 S. W. 498.

Answer as curing want of, or defects in, service of citation.—An answer or appearance cures the want of service, or of defective service, of citation. Steen v. State, 27 Tex. 86; Goode v. State, 15 Tex. 124.

As to time when answer must be filed.—See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1887, 1924.

Art. 499. [487] Proceedings shall not be set aside for defect of form, etc.—The recognizance or bail bond, the judgment declaring the forfeiture, the citation and the return thereupon, shall not be set aside because of any defect of form; but such defect of form may, at any time, be amended under the direction of the court.

Setting aside judgment nisi.—Motion to set aside judgment nisi should be made at the entry term, and at the earliest practicable moment. Cause of failure to file such motion should not be set up in answer to scire facias. Barton v. State, 24 Tex. 250; Goode v. State, 15 Tex. 124.

It was held error to set aside a judgment nisi upon an answer unsworn to, and unsupported by evidence, setting up that the principal was dead at the time the judgment nisi was rendered. State v. Brown, 24 Tex. 146.

Effect of dismissal of scire facias.—Dismissal of the scire facias without setting aside the judgment nisi does not set aside or vacate said judgment nisi, and a second forfeiture of the bail bond and judgment nisi were void, and it was error to overrule the plea in abatement to the second scire facias. Burris v. State, 34 App. 551, 31 S. W. 305.

Amendment or correction.—See, as to amendments, Sayles' Civ. Stat., 1185, 1239 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1824, 1873) and notes; Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1032.

is it not necessary when the sureties are in court contesting the proceedings. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 442, 6 S. W. 24.

Where the judgment nisi is defective, the state, by proper motion, etc., should have the same amended before taking judgment final upon it. Robertson v. State, 14 App. 211.
The judgment nisi may be amended even after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered, as to correct clerical errors or mistakes, or to add an omitted clause necessary to give it effect, when there is anything in the judgment by which to amend. In such case, however, the principal, as well as the sureties, must have notice of the motion to amend. Collins v. State, 16 App. 274. Amendment to correct clerical errors or omissions may be made to judgment nisi even after the expiration of the judgment term, but in such case the principal as well as sureties must be cited. Collins v. State, 16 App. 274, and cases cited. Citation may be amended as to defects of form under direction of the court. Gregg v. State, 18 App. 295.

It is not necessary to serve notice on the principal of State's intention to amend judgment nisi and scire facias issued thereon to make them correspond with date of bond. Sims v. State, 41 App. 440, 55 S. W. 173.

Where a mistake is made, either in the judgment nisi or in the citation in scire facias on the bail bond, or both, either may be amended by leave of court as pleadings in a civil case, the judgment nisi by the judgment of the court making the necessary corrections, and the citation by proper pleading on behalf of the state, by the district or county attorney, or other person properly representing the state, under authority of the presiding judge, and on proper notice to the sureties. Holley v. State, 70 App. 511, 157 S. W. 957.

Where a mistake is made, either in the judgment nisi or in the citation in scire facias on the bail bond, or both, either may be amended by leave of court as pleadings in a civil case, the judgment nisi by the judgment of the court making the necessary corrections, and the citation by proper pleading on behalf of the state, by the district or county attorney, or other person properly representing the state, under authority of the presiding judge, and on proper notice to the sureties. Holley v. State, 70 App. 511, 157 S. W. 957.

Proceedings nunc pro tunc.—The court, at a subsequent term, on proper application, may amend the record of a recognizance to supply an omitted word, and conform it to the judge's docket, but this only after notice to all parties concerned. Hand v. State, 26 App. 28, 11 S. W. 679, and cases cited.

Art. 500. [488] Causes which will exonerate from liability on forfeiture.—The following causes, and no other, will exonerate the defendant and his sureties from liability upon the forfeiture taken:

1. That the recognizance or bail bond is, for any cause, not a valid and binding undertaking in law; but, if it be valid and binding as to the principal, and one or more of his sureties, they shall not be exonerated from liability because of it being invalid and not binding as to another surety or sureties. If it be invalid and not binding as to the principal, each of the sureties shall be exonerated from liability. If it be valid and binding as to the principal, but not so as to the sureties, the principal shall not be exonerated, but the sureties shall be.

2. The death of the principal before the forfeiture was taken.

3. The sickness of the principal, or some uncontrollable circumstance which prevented his appearance at court, and it must, in every such case, be shown that that his failure to appear arose from no fault on his part. The causes mentioned in this subdivision shall not be deemed sufficient to exonerate the principal and his sureties, unless such principal appear before final judgment on the recognizance or bail bond to answer the accusation against him, or show sufficient cause for not so appearing.

4. Failure to present an indictment or information at the first term of the court which may be held after the principal has been admitted to bail, in case where the party was bound over before indictment or information, and the prosecution has not been continued by order of the court as provided in article 642. [O. C. 414.]

Construction with other articles.—Under this article and article 501 providing that when no sufficient cause is shown for accused's failure to appear judgment on the appeal bond shall be made final against him and his sureties; and article 603 providing that if, before final judgment, the principal shall appear or be arrested in his direction, remit the amount specified in the bond. Held that, where accused, though without his sureties' fault, purposely left the county seat and hid, to avoid arrest, until after the term had adjourned, there was no evidence that he had rendered judgment against the sureties on his bail bond for the full amount of the bond; no facts being shown which would exonerate them. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 992.

In proceedings on the forfeiture of a bail bond, the state may dismiss as to the principal cause; but not being contingent upon this article and articles 480 and 490, ante, that questions arising between the principal and his sureties, or between the sureties themselves, shall be adjudicated in such proceeding. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 697.

CAUSE 1. Invalidation of bond.—Variance in names, see ante, art. 491, subdivision 3, and notes.

Recognizance and bail bond, see ante, title 5, ch. 4. A bail bond, which obligated the principal to appear before the district court of Texar county instanter, etc., was held sufficient as to time. Instanter means within the next twenty-four hours, or within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case with reference to which it is used. Fentress v. State, 16 App. 79. Bail is not only a joint, but a joint and several undertaking, and if good as to the principal and any one of the sureties, they are not only bound, but are liable, though another surety may have been disqualified in any way, and the proceeding may be continued as to another. Even where one surety has not been served, suit may be dismissed as to him, and judgment taken against those served. Ray v. State, 16 App. 368; Goode v. State, 15 Tex. 134; Siss v. State, 8 App. 426. Thus, the surety who voids the bail bond of an insane man is liable as principal and other sureties. Pickett v. State, 16 App. 648; ante, art. 321. If the recognizance or bail bond is defective in substance, such defect may be reached by a motion in arrest of judgment. Silvey v. State, 44 Tex. 274. A recognizance or bail bond, which binds only the sureties to appear, is invalid. Wright v. State, 22 App. 670, 3 S. W. 346. Where the indictment and judgment nisi named the principal Atanacio Vidauri, but the return of citation showed that the principal had been executed on Rafael Vidauri, the judgment final was set aside on appeal. Atanacio and Rafael Vidauri were the same person. Vidauri v. State, 27 App. 27, 3 S. W. 347. A recognizance or bail bond, based upon a void indictment, is itself void. Harrell v. State, 22 App. 692, 3 S. W. 479. The validity of a bail bond does not depend upon the officer taking it. Holt v. State, 26 App. 571; Taylor v. State, 16 App. 514. A bond was signed "J. W. Dixon," but in the body of the bond the name of the principal was stated to be "Jack Dixon." The indictment charged "Jack Dixon" and the citation was for "Jack Dixon." Held, that the middle initial being immaterial, "J" might stand for "Jack," and there was no variance. Anderson v. State, 16 App. 299. But where, in the body of the bond the principal's name was stated to be "Neil McIntyre," and the bond was signed "C. A. McIntyre," it was held that said signature could not be considered to be that of the principal named in the indictment. McNulty v. State, 20 App. 421. A bond held to be void is defective in substance, and its conditions require the appearance of the principal at a time when there can legally be no term of the court in which he is required to appear. Burnett v. State, 18 App. 283. A bail bond is strictly a statutory bond, and must contain all the requisites of a suretyship. Wallen v. State, 28 Tex. 56. See also article 490, re requisites as to requisites of recognizances and bail bonds, see, ante, notes under articles 329 and 321. A bail bond may be filed nunc pro tunc, and judgment final entered thereon, although a capias has been issued for the principal. Slocumb v. State, 11 Tex. 15; Haverty v. State, 22 Tex. 692. That the bond bears no file mark, is not an objection that will be entertained when presented for the first time on appeal. State v. Franklin, 35 Tex. 497; Turner v. State, 41 Tex. 549. Evidence alium will not be heard to impeach the bond, but if it is substantially defective on its face, exceptions to it may be taken and sustained at any stage of the proceedings. State v. Angell, 27 Tex. 357; Sively v. State, 44 Tex. 574; Smalley v. State, 3 App. 203; McAdams v. State, 10 App. 317; Barringer v. State, 27 Tex. 553; Cassiday v. State, 4 App. 56. It is not a fatal objection to the recognizance or bond that the indictment is lost. Crouch v. State, 28 Tex. 753. Not that the bond was void ab initio because of secession. Shadrer v. It is no answer to score facias that the sureties signed the bond upon the condition that it would also be signed by a certain other party. Brown v. State, 18 App. 326.

A married woman's signature invalidates the bail bond only as to her and not as to other obligors. Pickett v. State, 16 App. 618.

After amendment for intrinsic defects, the forfeiture must be as of the original recognizance and by the same proceeding. Hand v. State, 28 App. 28, 11 S. W. 673.

Bail bond is invalid unless it binds the principal as well as the sureties. Wright v. State, 22 App. 676, 3 S. W. 316, citing Larringer v. State, 37 Tex. 553.

The offense named in the bond must be that of which the accused is charged and no other. Lamman v. State, 27 App. 698, 11 S. W. 521, and cases cited.

Bond must be amended as to matters of substance without notice to all parties concerned. Hand v. State, 28 App. 28, 11 S. W. 673, and cases cited.

Bail taken after indictment must state the very offense stated in the indictment, and not the class of offenses. Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022, and cases cited.

An objectionable condition cannot be treated as surplusage. Wegner v. State, 28 App. 419, 13 S. W. 608, and cases cited.

If the bond recites no offense against the state, it will not support scire facias proceedings. Bowen v. State, 28 App. 103, 13 S. W. 787, and cases cited.

An impossible date named in the bond invalidates it. Butler v. State, 31 App. 315, 18 S. W. 676, and cases cited.

"Violating local option law" is not an offense so nomine, nor is it such a definition of an offense as would make a bail bond valid. Woods v. State, 51 App. 695, 105 S. W. 806.

Bail bond executed and filed before the filing of an information charging the offense is a nullity and will not support a forfeiture. Baker v. State, 54 App. 52, 111 S. W. 735, citing Leal v. State, 51 App. 425, 102 S. W. 414.

Cause 2. Death of principal.—The death of the principal in an appeal recognition (post, art. 919), before the time for his appearance in the lower court, will exonerate the obligors, notwithstanding the conviction has been affirmed. Conner v. State, 30 Tex. 94. The death of the principal prior to the time of declaring the forfeiture, exonerates his sureties, and where they set up such defense they are entitled to an opportunity to prove it. Blalock v. State, 2 App. 375.

 Allegation of the death of the principal before forfeiture must be supported by affidavit. State v. Brown, 34 Tex. 146.

Proof in a suit on a forfeited bail bond that one had received a letter from the principal stating that he was sick, but expressing a willingness to come to trial, and that for two years the principal had not been heard from, did not present the issue of his death. Helman v. State, 79 App. 489, 158 S. W. 276.

Inmates in the penitentiary under conviction for crime is answer, though it may be rebutted by the state, showing escape from the penitentiary and that the principal was at large at the time of forfeiture. Allee v. State, 25 App. 501, 13 S. W. 991; Cooper v. State, 5 App. 215, 32 Am. Rep. 571.

That defendant relied on was that the defense relied on was that the burden of proof was on the sureties. Allee v. State, 25 App. 501, 13 S. W. 991.

Another custody under conviction for another felony, if pleaded, is an answer to scire facias. Wheeler v. State, 38 Tex. 170.

Sickness of the principal at the time the forfeiture is had, if established, is a statutory and valid defense. Thompson v. State, 17 App. 318; Price v. State, 4 App. 73. See facts held sufficient to establish such defense. Baker v. State, 21 App. 359, 17 S. W. 266. But a physician's certificate is not competent to establish such defense. Price v. State, 4 App. 73.

Principal appearing before judgment final, it is immaterial whether he appeared voluntarily or under process. The sureties would be released, on showing of good cause. Baker v. State, 21 App. 359, 17 S. W. 266.

When the order of court setting aside a forfeiture shows no ground for the action, the presumption obtains that it was taken under this subdivision. Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022.

The principal is a competent witness as to his sickness when forfeiture is taken. Reddick v. State, 21 App. 267, 17 S. W. 465.

This defense must show that the principal's failure to appear did not result from his own fault; and further, it will not avail unless the principal appears before final judgment on the bail bond to answer the accusation, or show sufficient cause for not appearing. Markham v. State, 33 App. 91, 25 S. W. 127. And see Brown v. State, 28 App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022.

That defendant was in attendance in another county under bond when the forfeiture was taken was a sufficient excuse for not being present when his case was called in county where forfeiture was taken. Woods v. State, 51 App. 696, 103 S. W. 496.

at court, could not take advantage of such defense, unless properly pleaded. Holley v. State, 70 App. 511, 157 S. W. 297.

Cause 4. Delay in or failure to prosecute.—It is no sufficient answer by the sureties that the principal did not appear because no indictment had been found against him for the offense named in his bond. State v. Cocke, 37 Tex. 156. Where it appears before the county court before indictment or information was presented, and at the next term of said court no indictment or information was presented against him, and no cause shown for further holding the principal, it was held that his sureties were discharged from further liability on the warrant. Jones v. State, 31 App. 412. See, post, art. 416.

Failure to present indictment or file information, does not excuse the principal or sureties for non-appearance of the former to answer any indictment or information that might be presented. McCoy v. State, 37 Tex. 219; State v. Cocke, Id. 156.

Subdivision 4, exonerating defendant and his sureties in case of failure to indict at the first term after his admission to bail where the prosecution has not been continued by order of court, leaves it to the court's discretion to continue by an order entered of record that the prosecution should be and has been continued by its direction, which order ordinarily must specify the case or cases continued, and such a continuance is not made by a general entry to the effect that it is unnecessary to impanel a grand jury. Headley v. State, 58 App. 155, 125 S. W. 27.

Surrender or arrest of principal before judgment nisi will release sureties, but such surrender or arrest after such judgment will not. Lee v. State, 25 App. 331, 8 S. W. 777. See also Hughes v. State, 17 App. 496, 13 S. W. 777.

The answer should show cause for a failure to move to set aside the judgment nisi at the term at which said judgment was rendered. Such motion should be made with practicable speed. Goad v. State, 15 Tex. 250. When a former judgment nisi has been set aside as to the instance of the defendant, such former judgment is not a bar to a subsequent forfeiture, and is no answer thereto. Anderson v. State, 19 App. 299. Where the principal appeared on his trial, but there was a mistrial, and then proceeded with the regular call of the docket, and before said call was completed, recalled the case of the defendant, without previous order for its recall, and he being absent, a forfeiture was taken, it was held that such judgment was without authority of law and was void. Thomas v. State, 12 App. 416; Lee v. State, 25 App. 331, 8 S. W. 777.

The delivery of the principal in court is not a good answer to a citation, without showing as a legal cause for such provocation. Chambless v. State, 20 Tex. 197; Barton v. State, 24 Tex. 250. It is a sufficient answer in a misdemeanor case, punishable by fine only, that the principal appeared by attorney. Neaves v. State, 4 App. 1. See, also, Page v. State, 9 App. 406. It is a sufficient answer that the sureties had delivered him to the sheriff and that he had thereafter escaped. State v. Rosseau, 39 Tex. 614. It is a sufficient answer that at the time the judgment nisi was rendered the principal had been convicted of crime in another county, and was then held in custody under said conviction. Cooper v. State, 5 App. 215, 32 Am. Rep. 571; Wheeler v. State, 33 Tex. 173. And, where the principal, before the rendition of the judgment nisi has been a second time arrested and has given new bail, the sureties upon the first order were released. Peacock v. State, 44 Tex. 13; Lindsey v. State, 17 App. 129; Roberts v. State, 22 App. 64, 2 S. W. 622. It is not a sufficient answer that after the forfeiture the principal had been rearrested and had escaped. Chappell v. State, 63 Tex. 612. See Foster v. State, 35 App. 372.

No other causes than those specified in this article will exonerate from liability. Barton v. State, 24 Tex. 250; Wheeler v. State, 33 Tex. 173; McCoy v. State, 37 Tex. 219; Thompson v. State, 31 Tex. 166; Martin v. State, 16 App. 265.

The approval of bond, the bond and the approbately arrested the principal on a capias from another county for a different offense, and turned him over to the sheriff of such other county, from whose custody he subsequently escaped. To seise facias on forfeiture of the bail bond, the sureties pleaded that the bond had never become operative, as their principal had never in fact been released under the bond, or placed in their custody. But held, that as the principal was not detained under the original mittimus from which the bond released him, but under the capias, the plea was without merit. Stafford v. State, 10 App. 46.

On the mistrial of the principal and the discharge of the jury, and before completing the regular call of the docket, the court recalled the principal's case without a previous order for its recall, and the principal failing to answer, or enter a judgment nisi, forfeiting the bond. Held, error. Johnson v. State, 12 App. 414.

It is well settled that neither the principal nor the sureties will be permitted to question the sufficiency of the indictment or information, or the order of the court on a judgment nisi. Jones v. State, 15 App. 82; Hester v. State, Id. 418; Martin v. State, 16 App. 265; Brown v. State, 6 App. 158; Smalley v. State, 3 App. 208; State v. Ake, 41 Tex. 166; State v. Cocke, 37 Tex. 155; State v. Robinson, Id. 165; McCoy v. State, Id. 219; State v. Angell, Id. 357. But if in fact there was no indictment or information presented, the judgment nisi would be void. Brown v. State, 6 App. 158. And so, if the pretended indictment was presented by an illegal grand jury, composed of more men or few men than was the number required, and proceedings thereunder would be void. Harrell v. State, 22 App. 692, 3 S. W. 479.

The judgment nisi being on a recognizance on appeal, the sureties could not question the sufficiency of the indictment or the regularity of the proceedings preliminary to conviction. Martin v. State, 16 App. 265, and cases. State, 16 App. 265.

The mere presence of the principal to stand trial will not remit the forfeiture, but if he appears and shows either of the causes named in this article, judgment final shall not be entered against him or his sureties. Thompson v. State, 17 App. 315, citing Barton v. State, 21 Tex. 256.

A plea by sureties that the state's attorney, without their knowledge or consent, agreed with their principal, that he need not appear at a preceding term of the court, that he did not appear, and that the judgment was rendered in his absence, is a plea of non est factum by the sureties, and is sufficient to make the judgment non est factum. Brown v. State, 18 App. 329. See an answer setting up several matters, none of which constituted a legal defense. Pentress v. State, 16 App. 79. Where the judgment is upon a recognizance given on appeal, the sureties cannot question the validity of the conviction of the principal. Martin v. State, 18 App. 265.

Non est factum is a valid defense, but it must be pleaded under oath, and the plea must be accompanied by the execution of the obligation by the person making the defense, or by any one acting under his authority. Holt v. State, 20 App. 271; McWhorter v. State, 14 App. 239. And so a plea of former judgment nisi pending, if properly pleaded under oath, is a valid defense. McWhorter v. State, 14 App. 239. Where the surety signed bail bond blank as to the amount of the penalty, and delivered it to the principal with the understanding that the blank was to be filled with $300—but the blank was afterward filled with $1,000—it was held that the surety was liable for the amount of the bond, and that his plea of non est factum was not a valid defense. Gary v. State, 11 App. 527. Where a defendant pleads non est factum he must show that he is the party upon whom citation was served. Rutledge v. State, 36 Tex. 459; State v. Boydus, 37 Tex. 165.

Appearance, fine and imprisonment of the principal renders the bond functus officio, and releases the sureties. Johnson v. State, 32 App. 353, 22 S. W. 406, and cases cited.

Release of the principal on the personal check of a surety which was dishonored at the bank is no defense to a subsequent forfeiture of the bond. Robinson v. State, 34 App. 131, 29 S. W. 788, and cases cited.

Where an accused one indicted for crime made no serious effort to secure the arrest of the accused failing to appear, that the officers were diligent did not inure to the benefit of the bondsmen; but, in a suit on the bail bond, final judgment for the full amount of the bond could be rendered against them. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 890.

Where a bail bond was executed to guarantee the appearance of accused in the criminal district court of Dallas county, the transfer of the prosecution under Acts 1985, 33d Leg., ch. 19, to the criminal district court No. 2, carried with it the bond, and did not discharge the surety. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 615.

Art. 501. [489] Judgment final, when.—When, upon a trial of the issues presented by the answers of the sureties, no sufficient cause is shown for the failure of the principal to appear, the judgment shall be made final against him and his sureties for the amount in which they are respectively bound; and the same shall be collected by execution as in civil actions. Separate executions shall issue against each party for the amount adjudged against him, and the costs be equally divided between the sureties, if there be more than one. [O. C. 417.]

2. Collection of recognizance on change of venue.—When a change of venue is taken the recognizance may be collected in the county to which the change is taken. Russell v. State (Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 69.

Where a recognizance or bail bond, upon which a recovery is sought, shows upon its face an erase or alteration in a material matter, it involves upon the state to sustain such erase or alteration, and show that it was made under such circumstances that the validity of the obligation was not affected thereby: and until such explanation is made the obligation is not admissible in evidence.
Kiser v. State, 13 App. 201.
This proceeding is in effect a suit upon the recognizance or bail bond, in which the citation performs the double function of petition and citation. The foundation of the recognizance or bail bond, and the whole proceeding is a judicial declaration of the forfeiture of such obligation. The production in evidence of the recognizance or bond, and the judgment nisi, is essential to a recovery, and they must be adduced in evidence on the trial. Hester v. State, 15 App. 415.

A general denial puts in issue all the material issuable allegations in the cita-

In an action on a forfeited bail bond, it is not necessary to introduce in evidence

Where the judgment nisi forfeiting a bail bond did not allege the day on which the principal was required to be present, but left that a blank, there was no variance allegata in the bond allegata, and a variance must be present, and the surety cannot object to the introduction in evidence of the bond on that ground. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S.

The citation performs the double function of a petition and a citation, and in establishing the essential matters therein stated the allegata and the probata must substantially correspond. Arrington v. State, 13 App. 554; Houston v. State, Id.

And the allegata and the probata must substantially correspond. Arrington
v. State, 13 App. 554; Werbski v. State, 20 App. 131. But to constitute a fatal variance the citation must misdescribe the cause of action in a manner calculated to mislead or surprise the adverse party. Werbski v. State, 20 App. 131.

Where the citation described the undertaking forfeited as a recognizance, and the undertaking which was in fact forfeited was a bail bond, the variance was held to exist. Garrison v. State, 21 App. 312, 17 S. W. 351.

Where the citation declared upon a forfeited recognizance, and the obligation offered in evidence by the state was a bail bond, the variance was held to be fatal.
Garrison v. State, 21 App. 342, 17 S. W. 361. Where the citation described the bail bond as introduced, and the true date of the bond as June 1, 1884, and the judgment date of 1884, the variance was held to be fatal. Faubion v. State, 21 App. 494, 2 S. W. 830.

The scire facias recited the bond dated April 2nd, 1894, the proof showed the bond to have been executed on May 2, 1894; the proof showed the bond to have been executed April 28. The bond in evidence was executed April 21 and approved April 25; held, the variance was fatal. Hayden v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 891.

In scire facias proceedings, a bail bond offered in evidence, which recites that the principal was charged with burglary by a complaint or a justice, and that on August 11th the justice required him to enter bond for his appearance, and which shows that it was approved by the justice on August 13th, is insufficient to support pleadings reciting the 11th day of August as the date of the execution of the undertaking for the appearance of the principal, and the court to enter a charge of burglary, presented in the district court by complaint. Huntley
v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1166.

6. Trial by jury.—Submission of the whole case to the judge without demand for jury is waiver of the right by defendants. Dyches v. State, 24 Tex. 266.

Where the defense is a variance between the name of the principal as it appears in the indictment, and in the recognizance or bail bond, it is not error to submit the issue to the jury. Wilcox v. State, 24 Tex. 544.

Nor error to refuse a jury when the mooted question was one purely of law.
McCoy v. State, 37 Tex. 216. 271

Chap. 4) PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC. Art. 501
Art. 501  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC. (Title 7)

It was held in one case that where the only answer was a general denial, and that there was no indictment against the principal for the offense named in the bond, that the defendants were not entitled to a trial by jury. McCoy v. State, 27 Tex. 219. This decision, however, does not seem to accord with subsequent decisions cited above.

The right of trial by jury is the same in this proceeding as in other civil cases, and is governed by the same rules. Short v. State, 16 App. 44, citing Hart v. State, 13 App. 555. If a jury be not demanded, the court may determine the facts. Dykes v. State, 24 Tex. 595.

7. Judgment final in general.—The suit may be discontinued as to either the principal or one or more sureties, and judgment final may then be rendered against the other obligors. Gay v. State, 20 Tex. 504; Thompson v. State, 31 Tex. 166.

A judgment nisi is properly rendered against the defendants severally for the amount of the recognizance or bond, and a final judgment rendered thereon against the defendants jointly and severally, though a variance from the judgment nisi, and not strictly correct, is immaterial error, and does not vitiate the judgment final. Kiser v. State, 25 App. 201.

A judgment is not final, unless the whole matter in controversy is disposed of as to all the parties. Thus, where the case is not disposed of as to one of the sureties, although such surety has not been served with citation, and has not answered, the judgment is not final. Thompson v. State, 17 App. 318. See also, Cowen v. State, 3 App. 321; Walter v. State, 6 App. 224; Stephenson v. State, 9 App. 459; Brown v. State, 49 Tex. 49; Blalock v. State, 25 Tex. 83; Ellis v. State, 10 App. 369; Wills v. State, 4 App. 617; McIntyre v. State, 19 App. 443; Cox v. State, 24 App. 94, 29 S. W. 273, and cases cited.

It is not necessary that the judgment in scire facias on a forfeited bail bond recite the date of the bond or of rendition of the judgment nisi, so that mis­citations thereof are surplusage and immaterial. Collaghan v. State, 27 App. 214, 122 S. W. 879.

8. When judgment may be rendered.—It is well settled that in this proceeding in the county court, a trial and judgment final can be legally had only at a term of said court held for civil business. A judgment final rendered at a criminal term of said court would be without authority of law, and a nullity. Hutchings v. State, 24 App. 242, 6 S. W. 34; ante, art. 497.

9. Entry nunc pro tunc.—Where a final judgment of forfeiture of a bail bond, conditioned for the defendant's appearance in a criminal case, was rendered in county court, but through some oversight was not entered at that term, the county court properly permitted the judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc at a subsequent date; the parties to the bond not being deprived thereby of any right to move for a new trial or to seek to set aside the judgment. Willis v. State (Cr. App.) 350 S. W. 904.

10. Discretion of court.—In view of article 501 and article 500, providing that certain named causes will exonerate defendant and his sureties from liability upon a forfeited bail bond, and article 502 providing that if, before final judgment, the principal shall appear or be arrested the court may, in its discretion, remit the amount specified in the bond, it was held that, where accused, though without his sureties' fault, purposely left the county seat and hid, to avoid arrest, until after the term had adjourned, there was no abuse of discretion in rendering judgment against the sureties on his bail bond for the full amount of the bond; no facts being shown which would exonerate them. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 350 S. W. 892.

11. Dismissal as to defendant deceased.—Dismissal may be had as to a defendant deceased at the time of forfeiture and judgment nisi. Ray v. State, 16 App. 268, and cases cited; Thompson v. State, 31 Tex. 166; Pleasant v. State, 29 App. 214, 15 S. W. 45.

12. Principal not served.—Judgment may be rendered against all parties without service on principal. Vaughan v. State, 29 Tex. 215.

14. Judgment of justice of the peace.—Judgment of justice court is not void because it was not entered until nine days after its rendition. Ex parte Quong Lee, 34 App. 511, 31 S. W. 291.

15. Writ of error.—Where affidavits show that plaintiffs in error from a judgment on a forfeited bail recognizance filed a petition and bond, and their attorney took the papers to his office to issue citation to the state, but failed to issue it for over a year, though requested by the clerk of the court, the writ of error will be dismissed as abandoned. Cruz v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 255.

Art. 502. [490] Judgment by default, when.—When the sureties have been duly cited and fail to answer, and the principal also fails to answer within the time limited for answering in other civil actions, the court shall enter judgment final by default as in other civil actions.

See article 498, ante.

Default judgment.—The judgment in such case will be for the full amount of the penalty, and without a jury. Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 272.

272
Art. 503. [491] The court may remit, when.—If, before final judgment is entered against the bail, the principal appear or be arrested and lodged in jail of the proper county, the court may, at its discretion, remit the whole or part of the sum specified in the bond or recognizance. [O. C. 415.]

See Jackson v. State, 13 Tex. 218.

Discretion of court.—As to judicial discretion, see State v. Warren, 17 Tex. 233; Chambers v. State, 20 Tex. 198; Haverty v. State, 52 Tex. 662; Barton v. State, 82 Tex. 296; Lee v. State, 25 App. 531, 5 S. W. 277.

Where, in an action on a bail bond, accused testified that there were two cases against him, that one of them was continued, that he returned to his home intending to return to court, that a day or two later a witness informed him that he had made arrangements with the officers to telephone the witness if the case was reached, and that he would notify accused, and the state proved a determination of accused not to appear at that term of court, a finding for the state and a forfeiture of the bond for the full amount was within the discretion of the trial court, within article 503, and though the facts proved by accused would not justify a judgment of forfeiture for the full amount, the court on appeal would not interfere with the judgment. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 896.

In view of this article and articles 500 and 501, ante, it was held that, where accused, though without his sureties' fault, purposely left the county and hid, to avoid arrest, until after the term had adjourned, there was no abuse of discretion in rendering judgment against the sureties on his bail bond for the full amount of the bond; no facts being shown which would exonerate them. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 892.

Judgment against principal different from that against sureties.—Under this article, the court may enter judgment against principal in a different sum from that entered against sureties; provided the judgment as a whole does not exceed the penal sum fixed by the bond. Williams v. State, 51 App. 552, 103 S. W. 929.

So where a bail bond is for $500, the court can render judgment against the principal for $500, and against the sureties for $100, jointly and severally. Williams v. State, 51 App. 552, 103 S. W. 929.

Art. 504. [492] Forfeiture shall be set aside, when, etc.—When the principal appears before the entry of final judgment, and sufficient cause is shown for his failure to appear before the forfeiture taken, and a trial is had of the criminal actions pending against him, he shall be entitled to have the forfeiture set aside, and the criminal action against him shall stand for trial; but the state shall not be forced to try the same until reasonable time has been allowed to prepare for trial, and the state shall, in such case, be entitled to a continuance of the cause. [O. C. 416.]

See ante, art. 497, and notes.

Setting capital cases for trial, see post, art. 659.

Appearance or arrest.—The mere appearance of the principal for trial, without evidence to entitle him to a remission of the forfeiture. State v. Warren, 17 Tex. 283. This article does not limit the appearance of the principal to a voluntary appearance. His appearance before entry of final judgment, whether voluntary or involuntary, requires the court to set aside the forfeiture, provided good cause be shown why he did not appear in court in accordance with his undertaking. Baker v. State, 21 App. 325, 17 S. W. 256.

The arrest or surrender of principal after forfeiture of bail bond will not relieve sureties. But pending final judgment, if principal is apprehended, it is within the power of the court to remit, either in whole or part, the penalty specified in the bond. Lee v. State, 25 App. 331, 8 S. W. 277.

New trial.—The state is not entitled to a new trial in this proceeding. Robertson v. State, 14 App. 211; Perry v. State, Id. 166. The cases cited virtually overrule Gary v. State, 11 App. 527, which holds that the state may be granted a new trial.

2. OF THE CAPIAS

Art. 505. [493] Definition of a "capias."—A "capias," as a writ issued by the court or clerk, and directed "To any sheriff of the state of Texas," commanding him to arrest a person accused of an offense and bring him before that court forthwith, or on a day or at a term stated in the writ. [O. C. 420.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 786.

Art. 506. [494] Its requisites.—A capias shall be held sufficient if it have the following requisites:

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—18 273
Art. 506  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.  (Title 7)

1. That it run in the name of "The State of Texas."
2. That it name the person whose arrest is ordered, or, if unknown, describe him.
3. That it specify the offense of which the defendant is accused, and it appear thereby that he is accused of some offense against the penal law of the state.
4. That it name the court to which it is returnable and the time when returnable.
5. That it be dated and attested officially by the court or clerk issuing the same.  [O. C. 421.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 786.

Art. 507.  [495]  Capias shall issue at once in all felony cases.—A capias shall be immediately issued by the clerk of the district court upon each indictment for felony presented, and shall be delivered by the clerk or forwarded by mail to the sheriff of the county where the sheriff resides or is to be found.

Art. 508.  [496]  In misdemeanor cases.—In cases of misdemeanor, the capias shall be issued from the court having jurisdiction of the same; and, if the defendant be in custody or under bail, a capias need not be issued for him.

Transferred cases.—In a misdemeanor case transferred from the district to an inferior court under article 483, ante, the capias must issue from the court to which the cause has been transferred.  Cassaday v. State, 4 App. 96.

Art. 509.  [497]  Capias in case of forfeiture of bail.—In all cases where a forfeiture is declared upon a recognizance or bail bond, a capias shall be immediately issued for the arrest of the defendant, and when arrested, he shall be required to enter into a new recognizance or bail bond, unless the forfeiture taken has been set aside under the third subdivision of article 488, [500] in which case the defendant and his sureties shall remain bound under his present recognizance or bail bond.

Alias capias should issue concurrently with the judgment nisi.  Slocumb v. State, 11 Tex. 15.

Art. 510.  [498]  New bail in felony case, when.—When a defendant who has been arrested for a felony under a capias has previously given bail to answer said charge, his sureties shall be released by such arrest, and he shall be required to give new bail.

The state may controvert the sheriff's return on capias that he had executed it by the defendant.  "Executed," without showing how, does not import arrest of the party.  Gary v. State, 11 App. 527.

New indictment.—This article does not apply when the second arrest is under a second indictment, though based on the same transaction.  Foster v. State, 38 App. 972, 43 S. W. 86.

Effect of taking new bond.—Where accused pending an appeal secured his release on bail, and after the reversal and remand of the cause and a second conviction the sheriff arrested him, refused to release him on the first bond, and demanded a new bond, which was given, his sureties on the first bond were released, and the second bond was valid even though the first bond had been a valid obligation conditioned after his second conviction for his appearance.  Sanders v. State, 70 App. 532, 108 S. W. 291.

Art. 511.  [499]  Capias does not lose its force, etc.—A capias shall not lose its force or virtue if not executed and returned at the time fixed in the writ, but may be executed at any time afterward, and return made; and all proceedings under such capias shall be as valid as if the same had been executed and returned within the time specified in the writ.  [O. C. 423.]

Art. 512.  [500]  Officer shall give reasons for retaining capias, when.—When the capias is not returned at the time fixed in the writ, the officer holding the same shall notify the court from whence it issued, in writing, of his reasons for retaining it.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 786, 793.
Art. 513. [501] Capias may issue to several counties.—Capias for a defendant may be issued to as many counties as the district or county attorney may direct.

Art. 514. [502] Sheriff, etc., can not take bail in felony cases, when.—In cases of arrest for felony in the county where the prosecution is pending, during a term of the court, the sheriff, or officer making the arrest, can not take bail, but must forthwith bring the defendant before the court, that he may be dealt with according to law. [O. C. 427.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 790. See ante, arts. 318, 336-338; post, art. 554.

Explanatory.—This article seems to be superseded by Act 1997, p. 148, amending art. 357, ante.

Art. 515. [503] Sheriff may take bail in felony cases, when.—In cases of arrest for felony less than capital, made during vacation, or made in another county than the one in which the prosecution is pending, the sheriff may take bail. In such cases, the amount of the bail shall be the same as is indorsed upon the capias; and, if no amount be indorsed upon the capias, the sheriff shall require a reasonable amount of bail. [O. C. 426-432.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 791. See ante, arts. 318, 337, 338, and notes.

Art. 516. [504] Court shall fix amount of bail in felony cases, etc.—In all felony cases which are bailable, the district court shall, before adjourning, fix the amount of the bail to be required in each case, and the same shall be entered upon the minutes, and, in issuing the capias, the clerk shall indorse thereon the amount of bail required; but in case of neglect to comply with either of the requirements of this article, the arrest of the defendant, and the bail bond taken by the sheriff, shall be as legal and valid as if there had been no such omission. [O. C. 424.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 787.

Presumption that amount was fixed by court.—Thrash v. State, 16 App. 271.

Art. 517. [505] Who may arrest under capias.—A capias may be executed by any constable or other peace officer; but, in cases of felony, the defendant must be delivered forthwith to the sheriff of the county where the arrest is made, together with the writ under which he was taken, to be dealt with according to law. [O. C. 425.]

Art. 518. [506] Officer making arrest may take bail in misdemeanor, etc.—In cases of misdemeanor, any officer making an arrest under a capias may take bail of the defendant, either in term time or in vacation. [O. C. 426.]

See arts. 318, 336, 337, ante, and art. 973, post.

Art. 519. [507] Arrest in capital case, in county where prosecution is pending.—Where an arrest is made under a capias in a capital case, the sheriff shall confine the defendant in jail, and the capias shall, for that purpose, be a sufficient warrant of commitment. This article is applicable when the arrest is made in the county where the prosecution is pending.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 788. See ante, arts. 318, 336, 337, and notes.

Art. 520. [508] Arrest in capital case in another county than that in which prosecution is pending.—In every capital case where a defendant is arrested under a capias in a county other than that in which the prosecution is pending, it is the duty of the sheriff who arrests, or to whom the defendant is delivered by some other peace officer, to convey him forthwith to the county from which the capias issued and deliver him to the sheriff of such county; and, upon failure to do so, such sheriff shall be guilty of an offense. [O. C. 431.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789. See ante, arts. 270 and 271, and notes.

Art. 521. [509] Bail bond and capias must be returned, etc.—When an arrest has been made and a bail bond taken, the bail bond, together with the capias, shall be returned forthwith through the mail or by other safe conveyance to the proper court. [O. C. 422.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 791.

Art. 522. [510] Defendant placed in jail in another county, etc., shall be discharged, when.—If a defendant be placed in jail out of the county of the prosecution, on a charge of felony, he shall be discharged from custody if not applied for and taken by the sheriff of the proper county before the end of sixty days from the day of his commitment. If the defendant be placed in jail on a charge of misdemeanor, he shall be discharged from custody if not applied for and taken by the sheriff of the proper county before the end of thirty days from the day of his commitment. [O. C. 434.]

Bail.—In the cases mentioned in this article, the sheriff of the county of the prosecution is the proper officer to take bail of the prisoner. Hill v. State, 15 App. 530.

Art. 523. [511] Preceding article shall not apply, where.—The preceding article shall not apply to cases where the defendant has been placed in jail out of the county of the prosecution, under the provisions of this Code, for the want of a sufficient or safe jail in the county of the prosecution. [O. C. 434.]

Art. 524. [512] Return of the capias, and what it shall show.—The return of the capias shall be made to the court from which it is issued, and, if it has been executed, the return shall state what disposition has been made of the defendant. If it has not been executed, the cause of the failure to execute the same shall be fully stated; and, if the defendant has not been found, the return shall further show what efforts have been made by the officer to find him, and what information, if any, he has obtained as to the defendant's whereabouts.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 788-790, 792.

Return.—A return of "executed," without showing how executed, does not purport an actual arrest of the party. Gary v. State, 11 App. 537.

3. Of Witnesses and the Manner of Enforcing Their Attendance

Art. 525. [513] Definition of "subpœna."—A "subpœna" is a writ issued to the sheriff or other proper officer commanding him to summon a person therein named to appear at a certain term of the court, or on a certain day, to testify in a criminal action, or upon any proceeding before an examining court, coroner's inquest, the grand jury, or before a judge hearing an application under habeas corpus, or in any other case in which the testimony of a witness may be required under the provisions of this Code. The writ shall be dated and signed officially by the court or clerk issuing the same but need not be under seal. [O. C. 438.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780, 865: See ante, art. 4, and notes.

Writ of right.—A defendant may procure a subpœna during the progress of the trial, and its issuance is not a matter of discretion with the judge or clerk, but of right, unless it be shown that the attendance of the witness can not be procured. Edmondson v. State, 43 Tex. 230. The right of a defendant to have compulsory Unorganized county.—If witness resides in an unorganized county the process should name such county as his residence. Parkerson v. State, 3 App. 72.

Subpœna duces tecum.—A subpœna duces tecum should give a reasonably accurate description of the papers wanted, either by state, title, substance, or the subject to which they relate. Ex parte Gould, 69 App. 442, 132 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335.

A subpœna duces tecum for the production of all telegrams sent from a telegraph office ordering intoxicating liquor without specifying whether the liquor ordered were unlawfully sent for, is unauthorized because too general and because it does not relate to any crime committed nor to any person accused or suspected. Ex parte, 262 App. 764, 132 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 826.

Art. 526. [514] What it may contain.—A subpœna may contain the names of any number of witnesses residing in the same county to which it is issued; and, if a witness have in his possession any instrument of writing or other thing desired as evidence, the subpœna may specify such evidence and direct that the witness bring the same with him and produce it in court.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 780, 865, 878.

Art. 525a. Application for subpœna.—Hereafter before the clerk of the district court in any county in Texas, or his deputy shall be required or permitted to issue a subpœna in any felony case filed or pending in any district court of which he is clerk or deputy, the attorney representing the defendant or the defendant himself or the district attorney or attorney representing the State shall make his application in writing to the district clerk under oath for said witnesses. Said application shall state the name of the witnesses desired, the location and vocation, if known, and that the testimony of said witnesses is believed to be material to the State or the defense; provided, however, if the defendant be not represented by an attorney, then he, the defendant, would be authorized to make application under oath for his witnesses, as above provided for. [Act 1913, p. 319, ch. 150, § 1.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 777.

Penalty for violation, see art. 552a, Pen. Code. See, also, arts. 1137a and 1137b.

Art. 527. [515] Service and return of subpœna.—A subpœna is served by reading the same in the hearing of the witness. The officer having the subpœna shall make due return thereof, showing the time and manner of service, if served, and, if not served, he shall show in his return the cause of his failure to serve it; and, if the witness could not be found, he shall state the diligence he has used to find him, and what information he has, if any, as to the whereabouts of the witness.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 780, 869, 876.

Service.—A subpœna cannot be served on a witness by reading it to him over the telephone. Ex parte Terrell (Cr. App.) 95 S. W. 537.

Return.—The return should show that the subpœna was read to the witness; and if the subpœna contains the names of several witnesses, it should show distinctly which were served and which not. Tooney v. State, 5 App. 155. The preceding article declares the legal requisites of the service and return of a subpœna.

As a general rule an officer’s return on process of any kind should state that he has performed what the mandatory part of the process required of him. And when the law requires and prescribes any particular forms of proceedings in the service, the return should show that they were specifically complied with, and should set them forth as fully and circumstantially as if they had been expressly required in the mandatory part of the process. Neyland v. State, 13 App. 556.

A sheriff’s return that he was informed at the witness’ last place of employment that the witness had left for another state, is not admissible as a foundation for the admission of the testimony of the witness taken at accused’s examining trial, being only hearsay. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 112.

Art. 528. [516] Penalties for refusing to obey a subpœna.—If a witness refuse to obey a subpœna, he may be fined at the discretion of the court, as follows: In a capital case, not exceeding five hundred dollars; in a case of felony less than capital, not exceeding two hundred dollars; in a case of misdemeanor, not exceeding one hundred dollars. [O. C. 444-445]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780, 872.

Contempt.—In a contempt proceeding for failing to obey a subpena, the court cannot in the first instance make his judgment final. He can only enter judgment nisi and then after citation to the party and a hearing on evidence render a final judgment. Ex parte Terrell (Cr. App.) 95 S. W. 558.

Appeal will not lie from a judgment fining one for contempt of court in refusing to obey a subpena. Pegram v. State, 72 App. 176, 161 S. W. 458.

Art. 529. [517] Before fine is entered against witness, it must appear, etc.—Before a fine is entered against a witness for disobedience to a subpena, it must be made to appear to the court by the oath of the defendant or some other credible person, or the statement of the attorney representing the state, that the testimony of such witness is believed to be material, either to the prosecution or defense. [O. C. 446.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 871-873.

Materiality.—The court may not punish one for contempt for disobeying a subpena duces tecum issued by a grand jury unless it is made to appear that the disobedience is as to some matter material to the prosecution of some crime or person charged with crime. Ex parte Gould, 60 App. 442, 332 S. W. 364, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 835.

Oath.—These requisites are essential, and the unsworn statement of defendant's counsel will not suffice. McGehee v. State, 4 App. 94; Willson's Cr. Forms, 871-872.

Art. 530. [518] What constitutes disobedience of a subpena.—It shall be understood that a witness refuses to obey a subpena—

1. If he is not in attendance on the court on the day set apart for taking up the criminal docket or any day subsequent thereto, and before the final disposition or continuance of the particular case in which he is a witness.

2. If he is not in attendance at any other time named in a writ.

3. If he refuses without legal cause to produce evidence in his possession which he has been summoned to bring with him and produce. [O. C. 441.]

Art. 531. [519] Fine against witness conditional, etc.—When a fine is entered against a witness for failure to appear and testify, the judgment shall be conditional; and a citation shall issue to him to show cause, at the term of the court at which said fine is entered, or at the first term thereafter, at the discretion of the judge of said court, why the same should not be final; provided, citation shall be served upon said witness in the manner and for the length of time prescribed for citations in civil cases. [O. C. 447; amended, 1895, p. 95.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780, 873, 874.

Art. 532. [520] Witness may show cause, when and how.—A witness cited to show cause, as provided in the preceding article, may do so under oath, in writing or verbally, at any time before judgment final is entered against him; but, if he fails to show cause within the time limited for answering in civil actions, a judgment final by default shall be entered against him. [O. C. 448; Id.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 779, 780.

Art. 533. [521] Court may remit the whole or part of fine upon excuse made, etc.—It shall be within the discretion of the court to judge of the sufficiency of an excuse rendered by a witness, and, upon the hearing of the case, the court shall render judgment against the witness for the whole or any part of the fine, or shall remit the fine altogether, as to the court may appear proper and right, and said fine shall be collected as fines in misdemeanor cases.  [O. C. 452; Id.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789.

Art. 534.  [522] When witness appears and testifies, etc., fine may be remitted.—When a fine has been entered against a witness, but no trial of the cause takes place, and such witness afterward appears and testifies upon the trial thereof, it shall be discretionary with the judge, though no good excuse be rendered, to reduce the fine or remit it altogether; but the witness, in such case, shall, nevertheless, be adjudged to pay all the costs accruing in the proceeding against him by reason of his failure to attend.  [O. C. 449.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789.

Art. 535.  [523] Definition and requisites of an attachment.—An “attachment” is a writ issued by a clerk of a court, or by any magistrate, or by the foreman of a grand jury, in any criminal action or proceeding authorized by law, commanding some peace officer to take the body of a witness and bring him before such court, magistrate or grand jury on a day named, or forthwith, to testify in behalf of the state or of the defendant, as the case may be.  It shall be dated and signed officially by the officer issuing it, and, when issued by a clerk of a court, shall be authenticated by his official seal.  [O. C. 439.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 879, 880.

Art. 526.  [524] When an attachment may be issued.—When a witness who resides in the county of the prosecution has been duly served with a subpoena to appear and testify in any criminal action or proceeding fails to so appear, the state or the defendant shall be entitled to have an attachment issued forthwith for such witness.  [O. C. 436-440.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 776, 780, 865, 873, 876, 877, 879.

A witness residing in the county of the prosecution can not be attached until he has disobeyed a subpoena.  Colbert v. State, 1 App. 318; Tooney v. State, 5 App. 163.  But if nothing appears to the contrary, it will be presumed that the attachment was properly issued.  Farrar v. State, 5 App. 489.  When a witness who resides in the county of the prosecution has been duly served with, and has disobeyed a subpoena, the party who had him summoned is entitled to have an attachment issued forthwith for such witness.  Long v. State, 17 App. 128; Massie v. State, 36 App. 64, 16 S. W. 770.

Art. 537.  [524a] Witnesses residing in the county of the prosecution, attachment for may issue, when.—When a witness resides in the county of the prosecution, whether he has disobeyed a subpoena or not, either in term time or vacation, upon the filing of an affidavit with the clerk by the defendant or state's counsel, that he has good reason to believe, and does believe, that such witness is a material witness and is about to move out of the county, it shall be the duty of the clerk to forthwith issue an attachment for such witness; provided, that in misdemeanor cases, when the witness makes oath that he can not give surety, the officer executing the attachment shall take his personal bond.  [Act 1897, p. 30.]

Personal recognizance.—This article is to be construed in pari materia with articles 543, 544, 547 and 548, and in all cases where the witness is brought before the court and it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the witness is unable to give security for his attendance, it is the duty of the court to take his personal recognizance.  Ex parte Sheppard, 43 App. 572, 66 S. W. 366.

Art. 538.  [525a] Subpoena or attachment for witness about to move out of the county to testify before grand jury, when.—At any time before the first day of the meeting of any term of the district court in any county of this state, it shall be the duty of the clerk, upon application of the district or county attorney, to forthwith issue a subpoena for any witness who resides in the county; provided, if, at the time such application is made, the district or county attorney shall file a sworn application, that he has good reason to believe, and does believe, that such witness is about to move out of the county, then said clerk shall issue an attachment for such witness to be and appear before said district court on the first day thereof to testify as a witness before the grand jury. And any witness so summoned or attached, who shall fail or refuse to obey a subpoena or attachment, shall be punished by the court by a fine in any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, to be collected as fines and costs in other criminal cases. [Act 1899, p. 245.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 778-789.

Art. 539. Where witness resides out of the county where prosecution is pending, defendant or state entitled to subpoena, when.—Where a witness resides out of the county in which the prosecution is pending, the defendant shall be entitled, on application, either in term time or in vacation, to the proper clerk or magistrate, to a subpoena issued to compel the attendance of such witness. Such application shall be in writing and under oath, shall state the name and residence of the witness, and his exact location and avocation, if known, and that his testimony is believed to be material to the defense. The state shall also be entitled to subpoenas, under the provisions of this article, upon the written application of the attorney representing the state, which application shall state the name and residence of the witness, and his exact location and avocation, if known, and that his testimony is believed to be material for the state. [Act 1897, 1st S. S., p. 58.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780, 866, 867.

Art. 540. Duty of officer receiving said subpoena.—It shall be the duty of the officer receiving said subpoena to execute the same by delivering a copy thereof to the witness or witnesses therein named; and he shall make due return of said subpoena, showing therein the time and manner of executing the same, and, if not executed, such return shall show why not executed, the diligence used to find said witness, and such information as the officer has, if any, as to the whereabouts of said witness. [Id., p. 58.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780.

Art. 541. When subpoena is returnable forthwith, duty of officer.—When a subpoena is returnable forthwith, it shall be the duty of the officer to immediately serve the witness with copy of the same; and it shall be the duty of said witness to immediately make his appearance before the court, magistrate or other authority issuing the same; and, if said witness makes affidavit of his inability from lack of funds to appear in obedience to said subpoena, it shall be the duty of the officer executing the same to provide said witness, if said subpoena be issued in a felony case, with the necessary funds or means to appear in obedience to said subpoena, taking his receipt therefor, and showing in his return on said subpoena, under oath, the amount furnished to said witness, together with the amount of his fees for executing said subpoena; and such officer shall be entitled to receive from the state, for executing such process, the sum of fifty cents for serving each witness, and five cents per mile for each mile actually traveled in the execution of the same. [Id., p. 58.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 783.

Art. 542. Duty of clerk, magistrate or foreman of grand jury issuing process.—It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court, the magistrate, or the foreman of the grand jury, issuing said process, immediately upon the return of said subpoena, if issued in a felony case, to issue to such officer a certificate for the amount furnished such witness, together with the amount of his fees for executing the same, showing the amount of each item; which certificate shall be approved by the judge of the district court, and recorded by the clerk of the district court in a well-bound book kept for that purpose; and said certificate transmitted to the officer executing such subpoena, which amount shall be paid by the state, as costs are paid in other criminal matters. [Id., p. 58.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 780.

Art. 543. Subpoena returnable at some future day, duty of officer.—If the subpoena be returnable at some future date, the officer shall have authority to take a good and sufficient bail bond of such witness, for his appearance under said subpoena, which bond shall be returned with such subpoena, and shall be made payable to the state of Texas, in the amount in which the witness and his surety shall be bound and conditioned for the appearance of the witness at the time and before the court, magistrate or grand jury named in said subpoena, and shall be signed by the witness and his sureties; but, if said witness refuse to give bond, he shall be kept in custody until such time as he shall start in obedience of said subpoena, when he shall be, upon affidavit being made, provided with funds necessary to appear in obedience of said subpoena. [Id., p. 59.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 803, 804, 879.

Art. 544. The court or magistrate issuing subpoena may direct therein amount of bond.—The court or magistrate issuing said subpoena may direct therein the amount of the bond to be required, but in case the amount is not specified, the officer may fix the amount, and, in either case, shall require good and sufficient security, to be approved by himself. [Id., p. 59.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 803, 879.

Art. 545. Witness disobeying subpoena may be fined and attached; what words shall be written or printed on face of subpoena.—If a witness refuse to obey a subpoena as herein provided, he shall be fined by the court or magistrate in any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, which fine and judgment shall be final, unless set aside after due notice, to show cause why it should not be final, which notice may immediately issue, requiring the defaulting witness to appear at once or at the next term of said court, in the discretion of the judge, to answer for such default; and the court may, in his discretion, cause to be issued at the same time an attachment for said witness, directed to the proper county, commanding the officer to whom said writ is directed, to take said witness into custody and have him before said court at the time named in said writ; in which case such witness shall receive no compensation, unless it appears to the court that such disobedience is excusable, when the witness may receive the same compensation as if he had been attached; and said fine and all costs thereon shall be collected as in criminal cases; provided, that said fine and judgment may be set aside at the same or any subsequent term of the court or in vacation for good cause shown, after the witness shall have testified or been discharged.

The following words shall be written or printed on the face of such subpoena: “A disobedience of this subpoena is punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, to be collected as fines and costs in other criminal cases.” [Id., p. 59.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 789, 803, 806, 875, 877, 879.

Contempt.—It was not error to refuse to fine a juror for contempt on his failure to obey a subpoena and attachment to testify on the settlement of a bill of exceptions, where the subpoena was issued for the jury, and the attachment was issued for the juror and not returned. Johnson v. State, 59 App. 11, 127 S. W. 559.
Art. 546. [535] Witness shall be released upon giving bond.—A witness who is in custody for failing to give bond shall be at once released, upon giving the bond required.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 879.

Art. 547. [536] Either party may have witness recognized, etc. —Witnesses on behalf of the state or defendant may, at the request of either party, be required to enter into recognizance in an amount to be fixed by the court to appear and testify in a criminal action; but, if it shall appear to the court that any witness is unable to give security upon such recognizance, he shall be recognized without security.

Bond.—A bond to the sheriff to insure the appearance of a witness was defective, where it did not set forth any authority authorizing the sheriff to take it. Gause v. State, 60 App. 221, 131 S. W. 605.

Where judgment nol on a witness' appearance bond was rendered against the surety, its amendment after the term to show that it was a bond that was given instead of a recognizance, and to also correct the Christian name of the principal, was invalid, where notice had not been given the surety; Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1355, 1357, authorizing such correction only on notice. Gause v. State, 69 App. 221, 131 S. W. 605.

Art. 548. [537] Personal recognizance of witness may be taken, when.—When it appears to the satisfaction of the court that personal recognizance of the witness will insure his attendance, no security need be required of him; but no bail shall be taken by any officer without security.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 789, 798; Ex parte Sheppard, 42 App. 372, 66 S. W. 304.

Art. 549. [538] Recognizance or bail bond of witness may be enforced, how.—The recognizance or bail bond of a witness may be enforced against him and his sureties in the manner pointed out in this Code for enforcing the recognizance or bail bond of a defendant in a criminal action. [O. C. 437b.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 790. See ante, arts. 488, et seq.

Art. 550. [539] Sureties can not discharge themselves after a forfeiture.—The sureties of a witness have no right, in any case, to discharge themselves by the surrender of such witness, after the forfeiture of their recognizance or bond. [O. C. 453.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 790.

4. Service of a Copy of the Indictment

Art. 551. [540] Copy of indictment delivered to defendant in case of felony.—In every case of felony, when the accused is in custody, or as soon as he may be arrested, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court where an indictment has been presented, immediately to make out a certified copy of the same, and delivered such copy to the sheriff, together with a writ directed to such sheriff, commanding him forthwith to deliver such certified copy to the defendant. [O. C. 458.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 894.

Indorsement of names of witnesses on copy, see notes under article 444, ante.

Time for arraignment, see post, art. 557.

Time for pleading, see post, art. 578.

Defendant in a felony case is entitled to service of copy of indictment as soon as same is presented by the grand jury, and to two days thereafter, in which to file written pleadings. Post, art. 578; Woodal v. State, 25 App. 611, 8 S. W. 892; Johnson v. State, 36 Tex. 202.

This article requires the court in every case of felony to have the accused, when he is in custody served with a certified copy of the indictment. Holden v. State, 44 App. 382, 71 S. W. 906. 282
Where a party was in jail when he was indicted but was released two days thereafter for nine months and continued at large for nine months until the trial took place and in the meantime his attorney had procured a certified copy of the indictment, he was not entitled to have a copy served on him and two days' postponement of the trial. Keener v. State, 51 App. 550, 103 S. W. 965.

Writ service.—It is the duty of the clerk to make a copy of the indictment and deliver it to the sheriff, and accompany it with a writ, commanding the sheriff to deliver said copy forthwith to the defendant, if in custody, or when arrested. The importance of the writ is chiefly to furnish record evidence that the accused was served. If the copy has been in fact delivered to the defendant, no right of his is prejudiced by neglect of the clerk to issue the writ. Barrett v. State, 9 App. 33; Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 521.

Accused not in custody.—An objection to the copy served is not available to defendant who was not in custody when the indictment was presented. Johnson v. State, 4 App. 268.

Second copy.—Where the original indictment and the copy served on accused were identical, accused was not entitled to service of another copy thereof, especially where motion was made in the court to which a change of venue had been allowed. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Technical inaccuracies in the copy served will not vitiate the service. Johnson v. State, 4 App. 268.

A clerical mistake in transcribing a word from the indictment to the copy served is an immaterial variance. Johnson v. State, 4 App. 268.

Where names of the witnesses appearing on the indictment were not transcribed on the copy is a hypercritical objection. Walker v. State, 19 App. 176, and cases cited; Hurt v. State, 15 App. 262, 49 Am. Rep. 138.

Where the copy served on defendant varies from the original so that it charges the defendant on a day subsequent to that on which he was committed to trial, his objection to going to trial without having had a true copy of the indictment is good. Lightfoot v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 795.

Where defendant filed no motion to be furnished the names of witnesses not endorsed on his copy of the indictment, but waited until the case was called for trial, he thereby waived his right to object that the names had not been furnished him. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1173.

Presumption.—It will be presumed that defendant was served, where the record on appeal does not show the contrary. Record v. State, 36 Tex. 521; McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58.

Waiver.—It is too late after verdict to object to the copy or to the failure to serve a copy. Richardson v. State, 7 App. 486; Roberts v. State, 5 App. 141; Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 631.

Waiver must be by defendant himself, and it should be in writing and made part of the record. McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58; Richardson v. State, 7 App. 486.

Announcement of ready for trial held not a waiver of service of a copy of a second indictment where accused did not know it had been presented. Harris v. State, 32 App. 279, 22 S. W. 1037.

After arraignment and plea defendant cannot ask two days' service of a "true certified copy of the indictment" on the ground that there was a variance as to name between indictment and copy served. White v. State, 32 App. 625, 25 S. W. 784.

It was not error to refuse a request for copy of indictment when first demanded, when the State announced ready for trial after the first trial had been prosecuted to conviction and new trial granted and defendant had been out on bond and rearrested. Scoville v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 792.

Defendant's attorney cannot waive the right to have the copy served. Lightfoot v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 795.

Under this and articles 553 and 579, Code Cr. Proc., where a defendant has been at large on bail and his case is called for trial at a term and he then fails to ask for service of copy of indictment and for two days' time in which to prepare for trial, and meets the case at that time by a motion for continuance, he thereby waives service of copy of indictment. Rice v. State, 49 App. 569, 94 S. W. 1028.

Second indictment.—When defendant had been served with a copy of an indictment, but it was dismissed and a new indictment for the same offense presented, he was entitled to the service of a copy of the new indictment. Harris v. State, 32 App. 279, 22 S. W. 1037.

The rule as to service of a copy holds good as to a second indictment to supply one dismissed for defects, unless waived by accused. Stokes v. State, 36 App. 279, 22 S. W. 350, and cases cited; Lockwood v. State, 32 App. 187, 22 S. W. 412, and cases cited.

Computation of time.—Speer v. State, 2 App. 246.

Art. 552. [541] Service of copy and return of writ.—Upon receipt of such writ and copy, the sheriff shall immediately deliver such certified copy of the indictment to the defendant, and return the writ to the clerk issuing the same, with his indorsement thereon, showing when and how the same was executed.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 865. See notes under art. 551, ante.

Art. 553. [542] When defendant is on bail in felony.—When the defendant, in case of felony, is on bail at the time the indictment is presented, it is not necessary to serve him with a copy, but the clerk shall deliver a copy of the same to the defendant or his counsel, when requested, at the earliest possible time. [O. C. 460.]

See notes under article 551, ante.

Defendant on bail.—A defendant on bail is not entitled to service of copy of the indictment. Johnson v. State, 4 App. 265; Abridge v. State, 29 App. 145, 15 S. W. 409; Barrett v. State, 9 App. 125. Defendant has the right to have a copy of indictment delivered to him at his request when he is on bail. Lightfoot v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 733.

The execution of a bail bond is not a waiver of service of indictment, nor does the mere fact that defendant executed a bail bond do away with the provisions of the statute. Brewin v. State, 48 App. 51, 85 S. W. 1141.

This statute only applies when the party is on bail at the time of presentment of the indictment. See, also, Keener v. State, 51 App. 590, 103 S. W. 905.

Art. 554. [543] May demand a copy in misdemeanors.—In misdemeanors, it shall not be necessary before trial to furnish the defendant with a copy of the indictment or information; but he or his counsel may demand a copy, which shall be given at as early a day as possible. [O. C. 459.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 894.

5. OF ARRAINMENT AND OF PROCEEDINGS WHEN NO ARRAINMENT IS NECESSARY

Art. 555. [544] No arraignment of defendant, except, etc.—There shall be no arraignment of a defendant, except upon an indictment for a capital offense. [O. C. 461.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 887. See Reed v. State, 31 App. 36, 19 S. W. 678; Ex parte Cox, 12 App. 655.

Necessity of arraignment.—Capital offenses enumerated, see notes under art. 6, ante.

Capital offense is one for which the maximum penalty is death. Pen. Code, art. 56.

If the record on appeal shows neither arraignment nor plea the conviction will be set aside. Steagall v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771; Plusters v. State, 1 App. 678; Pringle v. State, 2 App. 300; Avara v. State, 3 App. 411; Wilson v. State, 17 App. 525; Tamplin v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 542.

Arraignment is not necessary when on a former trial there had been a conviction for a lower grade of homicide than murder in the first degree. Cheek v. State, 4 App. 444.

If the conviction be for felony less than capital, the record on appeal need not show arraignment. Nolen v. State, 8 App. 655.

Failure to arraign the accused and receive his plea by the primary court will not affect the jurisdiction of the court to which the venue was changed. Ex parte Cox, 12 App. 655. See, also, Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86.

When an indictment in one count charges a capital felony, and in another charges a lower crime, defendant can not complain that he was arraigned for the capital felony. Owens v. State, 35 App. 345, 33 S. W. 875.

Time for arraignment.—The arraignment should precede the commencement of the trial, but a conviction will not be set aside for arraignment at an improper time. Smith v. State, 1 App. 408; Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 16 S. W. 757; Cordova v. State, 9 App. 207. And see Essary v. State, 53 App. 558, 111 S. W. 927, and cases cited; Mays v. State, 50 App. 165, 95 S. W. 323; West v. State, 40 App. 148, 49 S. W. 95; Lister v. State, 1 App. 740.

The court's omission to have accused arraigned before a change of venue is no ground for a new trial. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Mode and sufficiency.—See Sims v. State, 36 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256.

It is only in extreme cases that arraignment of an accused in manacles is permissible. Rainey v. State, 20 App. 455.

Objection to such procedure, however, should be interposed at the time. Vela v. State, 33 App. 322, 26 S. W. 296.

No objection to the entry on the minutes that it shows action on arraignment contemporaneously with action on motion to change venue. Bohmeyer v. State, 14 App. 271.

It is sufficient if recitals show that the indictment was read to defendant before he was required to plead. Smith v. State, 21 App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.

It is sufficient if the judgment shows arraignment, without a special order. West v. State, 40 App. 149, 49 S. W. 95.

Where defendant's counsel was granted 10 minutes to confer with witnesses, and could not be found at the expiration of 25 minutes, whereupon the court proceed to arraign the defendant, who was present, and whose counsel returned during the reading of the indictment and entered a plea of not guilty, the absence of counsel did not render the arraignment erroneous. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 115.

Presumptions on appeal.—See post, art. 938, and notes.

Rearrangement.—Rearrangement, under the same indictment, is neither required nor prohibited, and, in any event, can not operate as error. Shaw v. State, 22 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588. And see Cheek v. State, 4 App. 444.

When venue is changed after arraignment it is not necessary that defendant be rearraigned. Sims v. State, 36 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256. It is no objection that defendant was twice arraigned, once before and once after, a change of venue. Meyers v. State, 37 App. 206, 39 S. W. 111.

Joint defendants.—A joint defendant being called to trial immediately upon the retirement of the jury in his co-defendant's case, the court recalled from that jury to arraign the former of which to arraign the latter for the purpose of recalling the indictment. Held, no error in the proceeding. Rainey v. State, 20 App. 455.

Art. 556. [545] An arraignment; for what purpose.—An arraignment takes place for the purpose of reading to the defendant the indictment against him and hearing his plea thereto. [O. C. 462.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 397. See notes under preceding article.

Purpose.—Arraignment is for the purpose of fixing the identity of accused and proof thereof is made by the plea of "not guilty." Hendrick v. State, 6 Tex. 341.

Art. 557. [546] No arraignment until two days after service of copy, etc.—No arraignment shall take place until the expiration of at least two entire days after the day on which a copy of the indictment was served on the defendant, unless the right to such copy or to such delay be waived, or unless the defendant is on bail. [O. C. 463.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 897. See arts. 579, 579, post. See White v. State, 32 App. 625, 25 S. W. 784.

The refusal of the court to grant a continuance in a case set for trial 13 days after a copy of the indictment was served, 12 days after an attorney had been appointed by the court to represent the defendant, and 7 days after another attorney had been employed by the defendant in the case, was not an abuse of the court's discretion where it is not shown that the defendant was deprived of any testimony of any witnesses, or that he had subsequently ascertained any additional facts that would have been beneficial to him. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 115.

Waiver.—McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58; Richardson v. State, 7 App. 456; Lockwood v. State, 26 App. 137, 22 S. W. 413.

It was not error to try defendant on Monday after service of the indictment on him on Saturday, where the trial was set for Monday at his request. Spicer v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 545.

Accused, who after the indictment was presented moved to transfer the cause so as to expedite trial, is not, after an announcement of ready for trial, entitled to have the indictment quashed, which was read on arraignment, after the impaneling of the jury, on the ground that the copy served was not an exact copy of the indictment read. Since accused did not move for a continuance, and thus waived the error. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 346.

Art. 558. [547] Court shall appoint counsel, when.—When the defendant is brought into court for the purpose of being arraigned, if it appear that he has no counsel and is too poor to employ counsel, the court shall appoint one or more practicing attorneys to defend him; and the counsel so appointed shall have at least one day to prepare for trial. [O. C. 466.]

Explanatory.—Vernon's Sayles's Cr. St. 1914, art. 1772, provides for the appointment by the county judge of an attorney for a party making affidavit of poverty.

Grounds for new trial.—See art. 837 (1), and notes.

Appointment of counsel.—Burden v. State, 70 App. 349, 156 S. W. 1196.

It is only in capital cases that the court is required to appoint counsel. Pennington v. State, 13 App. 44; Brotherton v. State, 39 App. 369, 17 S. W. 952; Mass v. State (Cr. App.) 91 S. W. 46; Brown v. State, 52 App. 207, 106 S. W. 268; Burden v. State, 70 App. 349, 156 S. W. 1196.

255
Where the trial court found that accused was intelligent and desired to conduct his own defense, and required the clerk to summon the accused, and knew that he desired counsel, accused cannot complain that he was not given counsel, and that the case was speedily conducted. Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 580.

Time to prepare for trial.—Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 580.

This article is not mandatory in the clause providing that "counsel so appointed shall have at least one day to prepare for trial." Brotherton v. State, 20 App. 369, 17 S. W. 332.

Refusal to grant a continuance in a case set for trial 13 days after a copy of the indictment was served, 36 days after an attorney had been appointed by the court to represent the defendant, and 7 days after another attorney had been employed by the defendant, held not an abuse of discretion. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 115.

Where appointed counsel was given all the time required by statute to prepare to defend accused, and made no request for further time when the case was called for trial, or during the trial, it was too late, after verdict, to contend that counsel should have been given more time to prepare the case, in the absence of some showing that after the trial counsel had learned of testimony which would have been beneficial, and attached the affidavits of the witnesses, stating the facts to which they would testify. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 657.

Authority of counsel.—Waiver by original appointed counsel of service of copy of indictment, without the knowledge or consent of defendant, will not bar demand by succeeding counsel, nor bind defendant. McDuff v. State, 4 App. 58.

Art. 559. [548] Name as stated in indictment.—When the defendant is arraigned, his name, as stated in the indictment, shall be distinctly called; and, unless he suggest by himself or counsel that he is not indicted by his true name, it shall be taken that his name is truly set forth, and he shall not thereafter be allowed to deny the same by way of defense. [O. C. 408.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 297, 299.

Suggestion of true name.—If a party is not indicted under his true name, he must suggest this on arraignment or it will be too late. Henry v. State, 38 App. 313, 42 S. W. 593; Wilcox v. State, 31 Tex. 556; White v. State, 32 App. 625, 23 S. W. 784; Carrabin v. State, 33 Tex. 697; Kinkead v. State, 61 App. 651, 135 S. W. 772; Surangan v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 732.

It is proper to change the name of the defendant at his suggestion. Sinclair v. State, 34 App. 455, 30 S. W. 1070; Peters v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 563.

Change of name can only be made in the information, after which the defendant will not be heard to complain of repugnancy. Wilson v. State, 6 App. 154.

The disclosure, on the trial, of defendant's Christian name alleged in the indictment to be unknown, will not necessitate inquiry as to whether the said name was unknown, or inaccessible to the grand jury. Wilcox v. State, 35 App. 683, 34 S. W. 298.

Error in not requiring accused to be prosecuted under his true name, instead of under that and an alias, cannot be first raised on motion for new trial. Jones v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 957.

Accused, indicted as J. alias W., held not injured by the court's failure to enter an order directing accused to be prosecuted under the name of J., his true name. Jones v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 957.

Being informed that accused was not indicted by her right name, having ruled that she would be prosecuted under the name she desired, but her attorney declined to make any motion or request to change the record, she could not thereafter claim error in that she was indicted under the wrong name. Moreno v. State, 71 App. 460, 160 S. W. 561.

The giving of a wrong name or the failure to give accused's full name is a matter of form only, and, where he was described by his Christian name, nationality, and place of residence, which description was not shown to be untrue, and it appeared that he was the identical person alleged to have committed the offense charged, the judgment will not be reversed. Crescenio v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 399.

That one commonly known as "Randolfs," and indicted as such, was really named "Randall," presented no variance. Ranolfs v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1128.

— Reswearing jury.—Where the defendant's name was improperly given in the indictment but he corrected it on arraignment it was not error not to reswear the jury. Clark v. State, 45 App. 466, 76 S. W. 574.

Art. 560. [549] If defendant suggests different name.—If the defendant, or his counsel for him, suggest that he bears some name different from that stated in the indictment, the same shall be noted upon the minutes of the court, the indictment corrected by inserting therein the name of the defendant as suggested by himself, the style of the cause changed so to give his true name, and the cause proceed as if the true name had been first recited in the indictment. [O. C. 469.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 893. See notes under art. 559, ante.

Art. 561. [550] If defendant refuses to give his real name.—If the defendant alleges that he is not indicted by his true name, and refuses to say what his real name is, the cause shall proceed as if the name stated in the indictment were true; and the defendant shall not be allowed to contradict the same by way of defense. [O. C. 470.]

See notes under art. 559, ante.

Art. 562. [551] Where name is unknown, etc.—Where a defendant is described as a person whose name is unknown, he may have the indictment so corrected as to give therein his true name. [O. C. 471.]

See notes under art. 559, ante.

Art. 563. [552] Indictment read.—The name of the accused having been called, if no suggestion, such as is spoken of in the four preceding articles, be made, or, being made, is disposed of as before directed, the indictment shall be read, and the defendant asked whether he is guilty or not, as therein charged. [O. C. 472.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 897.

Time for plea in cases not capital, see post, art. 653.

Art. 564. [553] Plea of not guilty entered upon the minutes of the court.—If the defendant answer that he is not guilty, the same shall be entered upon the minutes of the court; if he refuses to answer, the plea of not guilty shall in like manner be entered. [O. C. 473.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 897, 898, 900.

Mode of pleading, see post, arts. 584-586.

And although the case was tried by the judge, a jury being waived, the record must show that the defendant pleaded, or that a plea was entered for him. Roe v. State, 19 App. 89; Melton v. State, 8 App. 619. The proper practice is to enter the plea on the minutes, but in felonies less than capital it may be recited in the judgment. Stacey v. State, 3 App. 121. And even in a capital case it may be recited in an entry of a judgment of the court disposing of an application for a change of venue. Bohannon v. State, 14 App. 271. Although the record may show that the defendant pleaded, or that a plea was entered for him, he may in the trial court, on motion for new trial, contradict such record, and show by proof dehors the record, that in fact no plea was made by, or for him. Smith v. State, 4 App. 626.

After an appeal has been perfected, the minutes can not be corrected so as to show that a plea was made by or for the defendant. Knight v. State, 7 App. 206; Gerard v. State, 10 App. 690; Hill v. State, 4 App. 559; McCreight v. State, 31 App. 326, 20 S. W. 740.

Presumptions on appeal.—See post, art. 938.

Art. 565. [554] Plea of guilty not received, unless, etc.—If the defendant plead guilty, he shall be admonished by the court of the consequences; and no such plea shall be received unless it plainly appear that he is sane, and is uninfluenced by any consideration of fear, by any persuasion or delusive hope of pardon prompting him to confess his guilt. [O. C. 474.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 500, 956, 976.

See articles 551 and 552, post.

See King v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 813.

Misdemeanors.—This article does not apply to misdemeanor cases so far as admonition, personal plea, etc., are concerned. Berliner v. State, 6 App. 181; Johnson v. State, 39 App. 625, 48 S. W. 70; Scott v. State, 29 App. 217, 15 S. W. 814.

Requisites of plea.—See Johnson v. State, 39 App. 625, 45 S. W. 70; Giles v. State, 23 App. 281, 4 S. W. 886, and cases cited; Coleman v. State, 35 App. 494, 33 S. W. 1933.

In a felony case a plea of guilty can be made only by the defendant in person, and in open court. It can only be accepted under the three following named conditions, viz.: 1. The defendant must be admonished by the trial court of the consequences of the plea. 2. It must plainly appear that the defendant is sane at the time of making the plea. 3. It must plainly appear that he is uninfluenced by any persuasion or delusive hope of pardon prompting him to make such plea. These prerequisites to the validity of the plea, and the acceptance thereof by the court, are indispensable and must be made manifest of record. They cannot be supplied by inference, intendment, or presumption. Saunders v. State, 10 App. 336; Wallace v. State, Id. 407; Frosch v. State, 11 App. 290; Harris v. State, 17 App. 539; Paul v. State, Id. 587; Saunders v. State, 18 App. 372; Evora v. State, 22 App. 233, 22 S. W. 1019, and cases cited; Caruth v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 973.

Where the trial court admonished defendant before accepting a plea of guilty, the voluntary, though a layman, and advised the defendant to plead guilty, so as to receive the lightest sentence. Patton v. State, 62 App. 28, 135 S. W. 42.

A plea of guilty entered in a Justice's court by a father for his 17 year old son, when not authorized by the son, is void, and would not authorize the son's imprisonment for non-payment of the fine imposed. Ex parte Williamson (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 89.

Construction and effect of plea.—See Crow v. State, 6 Tex. 334.

A person by pleading guilty to a smaller offense cannot prevent the trial of a greater offense. Daniels v. State, 36 App. 615, 34 S. W. 118, 528.

Defendant charged in two counts, first for betting at a gaming table or bank, second for keeping and exhibiting a gaming table or bank, pleaded guilty to the first count; held, that such plea did not bar a prosecution under the second count. Id.

Plea of guilty on a trial for murder does not embrace confession to murder of first degree. Martin v. State, 36 App. 612, 36 S. W. 557, 38 S. W. 104.

When defendant pleads guilty he cannot attack the verdict on the insufficiency of the evidence. Doane v. State, 36 App. 468, 37 S. W. 761.

When an accused pleaded guilty of murder, and his plea was accepted by the court after examination, and evidence was introduced before a jury which conclusively proved that the murder was committed in the perpetration of robbery, the court was not compelled to submit the issue of second degree murder, under Penal Code, article 1142. Miller v. State, 58 App. 600, 126 S. W. 864.

Accused, in a prosecution for homicide, though having pleaded guilty, could not be convicted under the plea if the evidence offered to death punishment showed that he acted in self-defense. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 975.

Withdrawal of plea.—Accused, having pleaded guilty, is entitled at any time before the retirement of the jury to withdraw such plea, and put on the state the burden of proving his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 456.

Where defendant through her attorney agreed to plead guilty, but afterwards exercised her right not to do so, such agreement was not admissible in evidence. Dean v. State, 72 App. 274, 161 S. W. 974.

Sanity of accused.—See Pen. Code, art. 40, and notes.

The general rule presuming the sanity of a defendant is reversed on his plea of guilty, and until the contrary is shown he is presumed insane, or that, in pleading guilty, he has been improperly influenced. Sanders v. State, 18 App. 372. And see Burton v. State, 33 App. 153, 25 S. W. 782; Coleman v. State, 35 App. 494, 33 S. W. 1833.

On the question of sanity, under a plea of guilty in a prosecution for homicide, the burden of proof is on the state to show that accused was sane at the time he committed the offense. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 975.

Where, notwithstanding a plea of guilty, there was evidence pro and con on the issue whether defendant was insane at the time of the killing, the court erred in instructing the jury that, under the facts, they should find defendant sane. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 975.

Charge of court.—When defendant was indicted for rape and offered to plead guilty to an assault with intent to rape which the State did not accept, the fact that the court in charging this article omitted the words "by any persuasion" did not injuriously affect the rights of defendant, and was not cause for reversal. Childress v. State, 41 App. 455, 108 S. W. 866.

Art. 566. [555] Jury shall be impaneled, when.—Where a defendant in a case of felony persists in pleading guilty, if the punishment of the offense is not absolutely fixed by law, and beyond the discretion of the jury to graduate in any manner, a jury shall be impaneled to assess the punishment, and evidence submitted to enable them to decide thereupon. [O. C. 476.]

In general.—Patton v. State, 62 App. 28, 138 S. W. 42.

On trial for murder, there was an agreement between the parties for the defendant to plead guilty to murder in the second degree, but the court refused to accept such plea, and informed defendant that if he pleaded guilty he must plead guilty to murder and leave it to the jury to find the degree. Held correct. Burton v. State, 33 App. 138, 23 S. W. 782.

In pleas of guilty, as well as not guilty, the provisions of the statute should be looked to, and govern the trial of criminal cases. Woodall v. State, 58 App. 513, 126 S. W. 501.

Where the evidence conclusively showed that murder was committed in the perpetration of robbery, the court was not compelled to submit the issue of second degree murder, under Penal Code article 1143. Miller v. State, 58 App. 600, 126 S. W. 864.

Statute mandatory.—This article is mandatory, and it is fundamental error to disregard it. In so far as it requires evidence to be submitted, it is not intended solely for the benefit of the defendant, but is also intended to protect the interests of the state, by preventing aggravated cases of crime from being covered up by the plea of guilty, so as to allow the criminal to escape with the minimum punishment fixed by law. This provision of the statute should be fully observed and administered, and the proper practice is to have the judgment entered upon affirmatively that evidence was adduced upon the plea of guilty. Harwell v. State, 19 App. 423; Paul v. State, 17 App. 583; Turner v. State, Id. 587; Saunders v. State, 10 App. 225; Wallace v. State, Id. 497; Frosh v. State, 11 App. 210; Scott v. State, 20 App. 285; Johnson v. State, 20 App. 251, 26 S. W. 213; Evers v. State, 32 App. 285, 22 S. W. 1019; Hopkins v. State (Cr. App.) 68 S. W. 956; Sullivan v. State, 47 App. 615, 85 S. W. 812; Woodall v. State, 58 App. 513, 126 S. W. 591.

Evidence.—Sanity of the accused is an issue on plea of guilty which must be shown by the proof. Burton v. State, 33 App. 138, 25 S. W. 782.

The record on appeal showing that, as a matter of fact, no evidence was adduced on the plea of guilty, conviction will be set aside. Martin v. State, 38 App. 828, 38 S. W. 537, 38 S. W. 594; Josef v. State, 22 App. 251, 26 S. W. 213; Evers v. State, 32 App. 283, 22 S. W. 1019.

Statutory requirements being complied with, defendant, under the plea of guilty, can not afterwards, in the absence of bill of exceptions, showing the admission of illegal evidence, question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the plea. Doans v. State, 36 App. 468, 37 S. W. 751.

The word "evidence," as used in this article, means legal evidence, such as would be authorized to go before a jury. Woodall v. State, 58 App. 513, 126 S. W. 591.

Art. 567. [556] Same proceedings in respect to name of defendant in all cases.—The same proceedings shall be had in all cases with respect to the name of the defendant and the conviction of the indictment, as provided with respect to the same in capital offenses. [O. C. 479.]

6. OF THE PLEADINGS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Art. 568. [557] Indictment or information.—The primary pleading in criminal action on the part of the state is the indictment or information. [O. C. 481.]

Art. 569. [558] Defendant's pleading.—On the part of the defendant, the following are the only pleadings:

1. The motion to set aside the indictment or information.
2. A special plea setting forth one or more facts as cause why the defendant ought not to be tried upon the indictment or information presented against him.
3. An exception to the indictment or information for some matter of form or substance.
4. A plea of guilty.
5. A plea of not guilty. [O. C. 482.]

Plea in abatement.—See notes under article 572, post.

Plea to jurisdiction.—See notes under article 572, post.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—19 289
Art. 570. [559] Motion to set aside indictment, etc., for what causes only.—A motion to set aside an indictment or information shall be based on one or more of the following causes, and no other:

1. That it appears by the records of the court that the indictment was not found by at least nine grand jurors, or that the information was not presented after oath made as required in article 467 [479].

2. That some person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant, or were voting upon the same. [O. C. 483.]

1. Nature of motion.
2. Grounds of motion in general.
3. Illegal jury.
4. Presence of unauthorized person.
5. Defects in preliminary proceedings.
6. Improper or insufficient evidence.
7. Race discrimination.
8. Defects in indictment or information in general.
9. Signature.
10. Failure to charge offense.
11. Presentment, filing, and service of copy.
12. Limitations.
14. Transferred cases.
15. Time for exception or motion.
16. Waiver.

1. Nature of motion.—Where accused, after arraignment upon the indictment which had just been read, and before pleading, objected to going to trial, and moved the court to quash and set aside because such indictment was not a true original of the certified copy served, the motion was one to quash, and not for a new indictment to be issued. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

An indictment or information defective in substance may be taken advantage of on appeal, as well as by exception or in arrest of judgment. State v. Mann, 13 Tex. 61; Anderson v. State, 20 App. 595; Strickland v. State, 19 App. 518.

There is no such plea recognized by our Codes as a general demurrer or general exception to an indictment which does not specify defect in indictment as of form or substance. Phillips v. State, 29 Tex. 228; State v. Schoolfield, 29 Tex. 501.

Independent of the statutory grounds, jeopardy and want of jurisdiction are the only grounds upon which an indictment can be vacated or avoided. Woods v. State, 26 App. 490, 10 S. W. 168; Williams v. State, 20 App. 257.

The court, after organizing the grand jury, left it deliberating on the finding of an indictment, and went to another county, is not ground for quashing the indictment, in the absence of a showing of injury. Elliott v. State, 55 App. 200, 125 S. W. 568.

It is no ground for quashing an indictment that defendant not having been arrested, it was placed on the retired docket to be brought forward on the trial docket when defendant should be arrested. Allen v. State, 62 App. 567, 135 S. W. 593.

3. Illegal jury.—That the grand jury was not sworn is not a good exception to indictment. Chevarrio v. State, 17 App. 390. Compare Vanvickie v. State, 22 App. 625, 2 S. W. 614.

But an exception or motion in arrest of judgment, on ground that indictment was not found by illegal grand jury, is available. Lott v. State, 18 App. 637; Ex parte Reynolds, 35 App. 437, 34 S. W. 120, 60 Am. St. Rep. 54, and cases cited.

Where an indictment recites upon its face that it was presented in the district court of the proper county and state, by the grand jurors of said county, duly elected, sworn and charged as such, it will be presumed that it was presented by a legal grand jury of the proper county, and, to overcome such presumption accused, in his motion to set it aside, must show that, in fact, it was not the act of a legal grand jury of the county. De Oiles v. State, 20 App. 146.

Nor state term at which grand jury was organized. Grayson v. State, 35 App. 629, 34 S. W. 961.

Not essential that indictment show date the grand jury was organized. Murphy v. State, 24 App. 24, 35 S. W. 174.

An indictment will not be quashed because the foreman of the grand jury finding it was at the time a deputy sheriff of the county. Trinkle v. State, 60 App. 187, 131 S. W. 583.

Where a challenge to the grand jury was withdrawn when the jury was impaneled, and not renewed until after indictment returned, the juror's alleged incompetency was not ground for motion to quash. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 135 S. W. 742.

Where an accused moves to quash the indictment on the ground that the sheriff who summoned one of the jurors was not a good exception to the indictment. Murphey v. State, 36 App. 24, 35 S. W. 174.
dictment was not properly sworn, the motion comes too late, if not made until the State v. Ybarra v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 10.

The prosecuting officer is an "unauthorized person" within the meaning of this article. Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519.

No form is prescribed for motion to set aside indictment under this subdivision, nor need it be verified, and refusal to afford defendant opportunity to prove it, even delayers the record, is error. Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519.

An indictment will be set aside if any one was present when bill was found who is not allowed by law to be present. Kingsbury v. State, 37 App. 264, 39 S. W. 365.

This clause refers to persons not impaneled, and the objection to a person proposed to be impaneled can only be made by challenge. Doe v. State, 29 App. 561, 39 S. W. 788, overruling contrary doctrine in Woods v. State, 26 App. 496, 19 S. W. 105.

This clause inhibits the presence of the assistant county attorney during the “investigation and deliberation” of the grand jury. Stuart v. State, 35 App. 440, 34 S. W. 115.

The fact that the assistant district attorney was present and examined witnesses in the grand jury room, and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case, is not notice to quash information. Lawshe v. State, 57 App. 76, 121 S. W. 1117.

The burden is on accused to show the presence of an unauthorized person before the grand jury, when it was deliberating upon the indictment against accused. Moody v. State, 57 App. 76, 121 S. W. 1117.

If a grand juror was disqualified from sitting where an indictment was returned, the question could have been raised to the grand jury as to whether a person was present with the grand jury during its deliberations not authorized to be present. Edgar v. State, 59 App. 252, 127 S. W. 1053.

The fact that the county attorney, while the grand jury was interrogating witnesses in the grand jury room, and had the regular bailiff as his stenographer taking down testimony, though he was not present while the grand jury was discussing the finding of a bill or voting, would not invalidate the indictment, so as to be a ground for quashing it. Porter v. State, 72 App. 71, 190 S. W. 1194.

5. Defects in preliminary proceedings.—Information cannot be quashed on the ground that the arrest was made on the complaint before filing of the information. Evans v. State, 35 App. 52, 35 S. W. 109.

An indictment cannot be quashed because defendant was not present when grand jury was impaneled. Barkman v. State (Cr. App.) 52 S. W. 69.

A motion to dismiss the indictment on the ground that accused was brought into court from Mexico without a proper warrant is without merit. Minter v. State, 169 S. W. 747; Barnes v. State, 37 App. 51, 125 S. W. 390.

A motion to quash information will not lie because the complaint was filed April 30, and the information not until the following June 9th. Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

7. Race discrimination.—See notes 339, 499, ante.

Such objection to the grand jury should be made by challenge to the array. Carter v. State, 39 App. 346, 46 S. W. 255, 48 S. W. 508.

On motion to quash on ground of race discrimination, witnesses should be named and tendered to prove facts, else motion will be overruled. Carter v. State, 39 App. 356, 357, 46 S. W. 256, 48 S. W. 508.

While the circumstance that for many years no negro had been selected or impaneled as a grand or petit juror might have weight in a close case, it cannot be considered on a motion to quash an indictment for discrimination as to race in the composition of the grand jury, when it is shown that the law has been in every respect complied with. Pollard v. State, 55 App. 259, 135 S. W. 390.

Evidence, on a motion to quash an indictment, held not to sustain the ground of discrimination as to race in the composition of the grand jury. Pollard v. State, 55 App. 259, 135 S. W. 390.

Motions to quash the indictment because accused was a negro, and negroes were improperly excluded from the grand and petit juries, were properly overruled, where there was no evidence that he was a negro. McClure v. State, 64 App. 19, 141 S. W. 977.

Accused, a negro, who moves to quash the indictment on the ground of discrimination against negroes in the selection of the grand jury, must allege and prove discrimination. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 149, 169 S. W. 255.

8. Motion to quash information in general.—Where an indictment or information is substantially defective, a conviction had upon it will be set aside, and the prosecution will be dismissed, although such defect was not presented in the trial court. But when the defect in an indictment or information is one of form merely, it will not be considered when presented primarily on appeal, nor will the prosecution be dismissed because of the same, although presented in the trial court. Morris v. State, 15 App. 66; S. v. State, Woolsey v. State, 14 App. 57.

The information, though it must be based upon affidavit, must clearly show, on its face, that the charge is preferred by the prosecuting attorney. Johnson v. State, 17 App. 236, and cases cited. And see Alderson v. State, 53 App. 525, 111 S. W. 788; And see also Black v. State, 58 App. 569, 24 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024.

Presumption obtains in the absence of converse proof that the assistant county attorney possessed all the necessary legal qualifications. Kelly v. State, 36 App. 430, 35 S. W. 29.

Objection that indictment for violation of the local option law failed to allege that the law was in operation is matter of form which must be raised by motion to quash and not by motion in arrest. Dobson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 468. The preserving both burglary and an attempt to commit burglary was not void or subject to quashal because it was indorsed only "indictment for burglary." Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273.

A motion to quash an indictment which did not state accused's full name, on the ground that the grand jury, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have ascertained his true name, was properly overruled, where it was not sworn to, and was supported by no evidence. Crescencio v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 326.

10. Failure to charge offense.—Failure to allege matter of which the court has jurisdiction, will not vitiate indictment. State v. Mann, 15 Tex. 61.

The question is not whether the information is sufficient to give the defendant legal notice of the charge, but whether it is an indictment. "Foresee if not the offense in plain and intelligible words" is a good exception, either to form or substance, under the seventh subd. of Art. 431, ante. State v. Shwartz, 25 Tex. 762, and see Collins v. State, 25 Tex. Supp. 292.

That in his notation in minutes of presentment of indictment clerk misnamed the offense, is not tenable exception. Rowlett v. State, 22 App. 181, 4 S. W. 582, and see Barr v. State, 18 App. 332.

That the indictment does not show on its face that it was presented in the proper court is good exception on motion to quash. Murphy v. State, 29 App. 507, 18 S. W. 417, and cases cited: Matthews v. State, 44 Tex. 210.

Clerk's failure to file indictment is not ground for quashal. Boren v. State, 32 App. 637, 25 S. W. 775.

There being two district courts of the county, it was not necessary that the indictment should show on its face in which of the two it was presented. Phillips v. State, 35 App. 480, 34 S. W. 272, citing Sargent v. State, 35 App. 325, 33 S. W. 264.

Indictment not invalid because returned on a legal holiday. Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 983.

That the presentation of an indictment against accused had not been entered on the minutes of the court, and that a certified copy of the same was not filed, while a ground for postponing the trial, was no ground for quashing the indictment. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 305, 183 S. W. 1055.

The defect in an information bearing no file mark, and not specifically charging the defendant was committed before presentation, was committed before advancement of by motion in arrest, but only by motion to quash. Hall v. State, 70 App. 240, 158 S. W. 644.

An indictment alleged that the grand jury presenting it was organized at the July term, 1915, and was marked "filed" in the district court July 8th, while the records of the district court showed that it was returned in January, 1913, and was at that time by proper order transferred to the county court. Held, that the statement in the indictment and the file mark might be disregarded as surplusage. Matthews v. State, 71 App. 374, 160 S. W. 1185.

12. Limitations.—See ante, art. 451, subds. 4 and 6, and notes.

13. Want of jurisdiction.—Venue must be alleged in the indictment, and it must be within the jurisdiction of the court. Ante, art. 257, and notes, and ante, art. 451, subd. 6, and notes.

Cases originating in unorganized counties: Hernandez v. State, 19 App. 408, and cases cited.

This district court can try an indictment for felony that includes a misdemeanor, or to adjudge, not only as to the felony, but as to any lower grade of the offense the verdict may find. Nance v. State, 21 App. 457, 1 S. W. 448, and cases cited. But for exception to rule see Robles v. State, 33 App. 51, 41 S. W. 620.

The sufficiency of the evidence on which the indictment was predicated cannot be challenged by plea to jurisdiction. Jacobs v. State, 35 App. 419, 34 S. W. 119, following Terry v. State, 15 App. 66.

Information filed in the county court on a complaint which was filed in the justice court gives the latter court jurisdiction. Morrow v. State, 37 App. 530, 33 S. W. 944. And see generally, Haberger v. State, 4
4. Transferred cases.—See ante, arts. 455, 456, 457 and notes.

15. Time for exception or motion.—An exception on account of form must be taken before plea made, and before a change of venue is ordered. Ringo v. State, 2 App. 291; Loggins v. State, 8 App. 454; Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 56. It may be taken after the state has announced ready for trial. Carr v. State, 19 App. 635, 53 Am. Rep. 355.

An exception that the indictment does not show that it was presented in the proper court must be in limine; it cannot be made in arrest or judgment. Jones v. State, 32 App. 110, 22 S. W. 149, citing Niland v. State, 19 App. 166; Rather v. State, 25 App. 623, 5 S. W. 65, and cases cited; Kowlett v. State, 23 App. 191, 4 S. W. 532, and cases cited; Murphey v. State, 29 App. 567, 14 S. W. 417.

An objection that an information for selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory does not show that the election putting prohibition into effect was held before the passage of the Act of April 24, 1909, c. 55, making such sale a felony, is an objection to the form of the prosecution, and to be available an exception must be taken before announcement for trial and a motion in arrest of judgment filed within two days after judgment, as required by article 548. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 548.

16. Waiver.—Where exceptions are filed but not called to the attention of the court or acted on they will be treated as waived. State v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 528; Myers v. State, 31 Tex. 173.

Art. 571. [560] Motion shall be tried by judge without jury.—An issue of fact arising upon a motion to set aside an indictment or information shall be tried by the judge without a jury. [O. C. 483.]

See post, arts. 587, 588, 589 and 592.

Art. 572. [561] Only special pleas for defendant.—The only special pleas which can be heard for the defendant are:

1. That he has been convicted legally, in a court of competent jurisdiction, upon the same accusation, after having been tried upon the merits for the same offense.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 822.

2. That he has been before acquitted by a jury of the accusation against him, in a court of competent jurisdiction, whether the acquittal was regular or irregular. [O. C. 484.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 822, 823, 825.

Acquittal in court without jurisdiction, see ante, art. 20. Burglary and felony committed after entry, see Pen. Code, arts. 1313, 1317, 1320. Conviction of lower as acquittal of higher offense, see post, art. 752. Conviction or acquittal in other state or county, see arts. 250, 256. Discharge by examining court, see ante, art. 314. Forgery and passing or possession with intent to pass forged instruments, see Pen. Code, art. 946.

Former jeopardy in general, see ante, art. 9, and notes.

Higher offense not within jurisdiction of court, see post, art. 601. Offenses against state and municipality, see post, art. 965. Practicing medicine without authority, see Pen. Code, art. 756.

Cited, McCline v. State, 64 App. 19, 141 S. W. 977; Payne v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 171; Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29; Miles v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 567.

1. Same offense.
2. Pleas distinguished.
4. Time for plea.
5. Requisites of plea.
6. Amendment of plea.
7. Demurrer, exception, or motion to strike and amendment.
8. Evidence.

1. Same offense.—Defined, see ante, art. 9, and notes.

And note, that in former conviction, it is not required that the proofs in the two prosecutions should be identically the same, as is required in former acquittal; it is only essential that the offense, or the transaction out of which it grew, were the same. Simeo v. State, 9 App. 338; Arnold v. State, Id. 468; Wright v. State, 17 App. 152; Wilson v. State, 45 Tex. 76, 23 Am. Rep. 602.

3. Necessity.—A second trial in the same court, on the same indictment, dispenses with the necessity of a plea of former acquittal, the whole record having been shown to the court. De Leon v. State, 22 App. 169, 17 S. W. 632; Vela v. State, 49 App. 558, 25 S. W. 529; Samuels v. State, 25 App. 537, 8 S. W. 656.

The defense of former acquittal is not available under the plea of not guilty, but must be pleaded specially, alleging acquittal by a jury in a court of competent jurisdiction. Swancont v. State, 4 App. 105.

Former conviction is a defense which must be specially pleaded. Samuels v. State, 25 App. 537, 8 S. W. 656; Lindley v. State, 57 App. 256, 125 S. W. 141. And see, also, Munch v. State, 25 App. 53, 7 S. W. 311.

4. Time for plea.—See post, art. 578.

A defendant should be allowed reasonable time to prepare and file a special plea. Coon v. State, 21 App. 332, 17 S. W. 455.

A plea of former acquittal cannot be considered when interposed after verdict.

Barton v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 987.

A plea of former conviction must be made before trial on the merits, and it comes too late after trial. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 567, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1122.

7. Demurrer, exception, or motion to strike, and amendment.—See post, art. 600.

8. Evidence.—On plea of former acquittal or conviction, the burden of proof rests on defendant. Hoxier v. State, 6 App. 501; Kain v. State, 16 App. 252; Willis v. State, 24 App. 566, 6 S. W. 857; Pehr v. State, 50 App. 38, 35 S. W. 382, 650; Kain v. State, 50 App. 422, 17 S. W. 527. He must show the same facts constituting the offense for which the former conviction was had are the very acts constituting the offense for which he is now on trial. Creech v. State, 70 App. 229, 158 S. W. 277. He must identify the charge on trial with the offense previously adjudged. On State v. State, 43 App. 153, 109 S. W. 1679. In the case of an orderly house, the burden is on defendant to show that acquittal was for the same day for which he is being prosecuted. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 1086. On plea of former conviction for theft, the burden of proving the plural takings were one and the same transaction rests on the defendant. Davidson v. State, 40 App. 288, 49 S. W. 372, 50 S. W. 365. Evidence under defective plea not excepted to. Adams v. State, 16 App. 162; Pickens v. State, 9 App. 270; Troy v. State, 10 App. 319; Grisham v. State, 19 App. 564.

In the absence of proof showing the identity of the two transactions the court should instruct to disregard the plea altogether. Morton v. State, 37 App. 131, 38 S. W. 1019.

The proof showed that defendant sold to two different parties, and had been convicted of each sale. His plea of former conviction set up that the sales, though charged in separate complaints, were parts of the same transaction. The court submitted the plea to the jury, instructing the burden of proof on the defendant. Held, correct. Benton v. State, 52 App. 422, 167 S. W. 837.

In an action for statutory rape, where accused, upon a previous trial he was acquitted under an indictment for a different act, and on the present trial he offered no evidence to show that the act upon which the state relied was the same, his plea of former acquittal was properly denied. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 108 S. W. 246.
9. Other pleas.—The pleas of jeopardy and to the jurisdiction of the court are the only special pleas, independent of the statutory pleas of former acquittal or conviction, that can be interposed by defendant. Alonzo v. State, 15 App. 378; Am. Rep. 207; Williams v. State, 20 App. 357; Owens v. State, 25 App. 552, 8 S. W. 688.

10. — Plea to jurisdiction.—Priority of jurisdiction, see notes under art. 63, ante. Cock v. State, 8 App. 660.

A defect in the transfer of an indictment from the district to an inferior court can be availed of only by a plea to the jurisdiction of the court to which the transfer is made. (Art. 457) Mitten v. State, 54 App. 346. 6 S. W. 196.

13. Motion to quash indictment.—See ante, art. 576. Motion to quash indictment cannot be made to serve the purpose of a plea of former conviction. Robinson v. State, 21 App. 166, 17 S. W. 626.

A fundamental question arising under the constitution of the United States cannot be raised by a special plea outside of our statute. This article cannot be construed to exclude other fundamental constitutional grounds. Accordingly, a motion to quash indictment on ground of race discrimination in the organization of the grand jury is permissible practice. Curry v. State, 39 App. 345, 46 S. W. 296, 48 S. W. 598, judgment reversed, s. c. 177 U. S. 342, 19 Sup. Ct. 857, 44 L. Ed. 852.

14. Habeas corpus.—The question of former acquittal or conviction cannot be raised on habeas corpus. Bril v. State, 1 App. 152; Ex parte Rogers, 10 App. 655, 38 Am. Rep. 654; Pilner v. State, 44 Tex. 578; Perry v. State, 41 Tex. 488.

15. Regularity of former proceeding.—Where defendant was convicted of manslaughter under a void indictment for murder, murder on the theory of inchoate murder, which was properly submitted on a subsequent trial under a valid indictment. Whiten v. State, 71 App. 555, 160 S. W. 662. But if the first indictment was valid defendant could not be tried for any higher offense than manslaughter. Id. And where defendant's conviction of manslaughter was reversed on the ground that the indictment was void, and on trial under a proper indictment defendant was again convicted of manslaughter, which was also reversed, and a doubt existed whether the first indictment was in fact defective, on the new trial no higher grade of homicide than manslaughter will be submitted. Id.

The fact that the defendant was acquitted of murder in first degree by virtue of conviction of murder in second degree which was reversed because order changing venue was erroneous, the acquittal of murder in first degree bars further prosecution for that grade of homicide and applicant is entitled to bail. Ex parte Moore, 46 App. 417, 89 S. W. 229.

Under this article an acquittal will bar any subsequent prosecution for the same offense, if the trial occurs in a court having jurisdiction, whether the indictment is a valid one or not. Shoemaker v. State, 58 App. 518, 126 S. W. 887.

Art. 573. [562] Special plea must be verified.—Every special plea shall be verified by the affidavit of the defendant. [O. C. 485.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 823-825.

Cited: Miles v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 557.

Verification.—Swancoat v. State, 4 App. 165; Samuels v. State, 25 App. 537, 8 S. W. 656.

Where an indictment for forgery alleged that a company was a corporation, and the allegation was not denied under oath, there was no error in permitting the secretary and treasurer to testify that the company was a corporation. White v. State, 61 App. 698, 135 S. W. 562.

Art. 574. [563] Issues of fact on special plea to be tried by jury.—All issues of fact presented by a special plea shall be tried by a jury. [O. C. 486.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 811. See post, arts. 559, 770.

Trial of jury.—If the plea is not excepted to or motion to strike out interposed, it must go to the jury. Grisham v. State, 19 App. 504, and cases cited; Troy v. State, 19 App. 319; Picket v. State, 9 App. 270; Adams v. State, 16 App. 162.

Art. 574  PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

While conviction for simple assault as a justice of the peace would be no bar to subsequent prosecution for aggravated assault based on same transaction, yet plea of former conviction should be submitted; and, if proof shows only simple assault, defendant acquitted. Pritchford v. State, 2 App. 29. Exception to the rule arises in misdemeanor when defendant has waived jury. In such case, the court may decide special pleas without passing on their verity. Taylor v. State, 4 App. 28.

On trial for cattle theft, defense of former acquittal was interposed, the indictment charging a different animal and different owner than involved in previous trial. The court charged that it devolved upon defendant to prove that the animal was taken at the same time and place so as to constitute a single taking. Hold correct. Hosier v. State, 6 App. 542.

It develops upon the courts to determine the legal sufficiency of special pleas, and they should not submit to the jury such as constitute no defense in law. Simco v. State, 9 App. 239.

The pleas of former conviction and not guilty may be submitted together with instruction to first find upon the plea of former conviction, and proceed no further if the evidence sustains it. Failure to respond to the plea of former conviction, and convicting under the plea of not guilty, is error for which the judgment will be reversed. Burks v. State, 21 App. 326, 6 S. W. 300; Smith v. State, 18 App. 329, and cases cited.

Former conviction was the defense specially pleaded to this prosecution. Exception to the sufficiency of the special plea was interposed by the state. The trial court ignored the exception and admitted evidence pro and con upon the issue raised by the special plea. Held, that in this state of case the special plea prejudiced issue for the determination of the jury, and the trial court erred in not submitting that issue to the jury under proper instruction. Munch v. State, 25 App. 30, 7 S. W. 341.

But the plea should not be submitted if there was no evidence to support it. Johnson v. State, 24 App. 113, 29 S. W. 477.

The court should submit the plea of former jeopardy as an issue to the jury. Woodward v. State, 42 App. 188, 55 S. W. 128.

The court did not err in sending the jury back on suggestion of state's counsel to find on the defendant's plea of former acquittal. Stone v. State, 47 App. 575, 55 S. W. 808.

Where there is any view of the evidence under which the plea amounts to a bar, the issue must be submitted. Lindsey v. State, 57 App. 398, 122 S. W. 873.

Vacancy or finding.—The court should instruct the jury to return a special verdict upon the plea, and the verdict should find whether the plea be true or untrue. Davis v. State, 42 Tex. 494; Denton v. State, 41 Tex. 446; Brown v. State, 7 App. 518; McCampbell v. State, 9 App. 124, 35 Am. Rep. 726; Pickens v. State, 9 App. 276; White v. State, 9 App. 320; Smith v. State, 18 App. 329; Burks v. State, 24 App. 326, 6 S. W. 300; Wright v. State, 27 App. 447, 11 S. W. 458.

Art. 575. [564] Exceptions to the substance of an indictment.
—There is no exception to the substance of an indictment or information, except:
1. That it does not appear from the face of the same that an offense against the law was committed by the defendant.
2. That it appears from the indictment or information that a prosecution for the offense is barred by a lapse of time, or that the offense was committed after the finding of the indictment.
3. That it contains matter which is a legal defense or bar to the prosecution.
4. That the indictment or information shows, upon its face, that the court trying the case had no jurisdiction thereof. [O. C. 487.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 511-515. See notes under art. 576, ante.

Amendment of indictment or information, see post, arts. 597, 598, 599.

Exceptions to defendant's special plea, see post, art. 609.

Requisites of indictment or information, see ante, arts. 451, 478.

Art. 576. [565] Exceptions to the form of an indictment.—Exceptions to the form of an indictment or information may be taken for the following causes only:
1. That the indictment or information does not appear to have been presented in the proper court, as required by article 451 or 478.
2. The want of any other requisite or form prescribed by articles 439 [451] and 466 [478], except the want of the signature of the former of the grand jury, or in the case of an information, of the signature of the attorney representing the state. [O. C. 488.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 7, 816-821. See notes under art. 570, ante.

Requisites of indictment or information, see ante, arts. 451, 478, and notes.

Indictment is subject to exception where the statutory requirements are not complied with. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213.

296
Time of taking exceptions.—Exceptions must be duly taken below. Hauck v. State, 1 App. 257. Exceptions to the indictment should be taken below before entry of plea. Houli­

Art. 577. [566] Motions, etc., shall be in writing.—All motions to set aside an indictment or information, all special pleas and ex­ cceptions, shall be in writing. [O. C. 489.]

Written motion.—Defendant must plead in writing under oath the facts, showing that the court has no jurisdiction. Garner v. State, 62 App. 525, 118 S. W. 171.

Where a motion to quash an indictment was verbal, and it was not argued by the defendant's attorney and the county attorney in open court, and ruled on by the court in open court, no question of its insufficiency is presented for review. Simpson v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 204.

Art. 578. [567] Two days allowed for filing written pleadings.

—In all cases, the defendant shall be allowed two entire days, exclusive of all fractions of a day after his arrest, and during the term of the court, to file written pleadings. [O. C. 491, 494, 495, 496.]

See ante, arts. 557, 572, and notes.

Time allowed.—Accused is entitled to two days within which to prepare and file his pleadings, irrespective of whether such time is necessary; the statute being mandatory. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 225; Woodall v. State, 25 App. 617, 8 S. W. 509; Reed v. State (App.) 25 App. 26, 19 S. W. 675; Evans v. State, 36 App. 62, 38 S. W. 165; Holden v. State, 44 App. 382, 71 S. W. 609; Whitesides v. State, 44 App. 410, 71 S. W. 969; McFadin v. State, 44 App. 471, 72 S. W. 172; Lightfoot v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 735; Templeton v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 933; Partridge v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 254; Graham v. State, 72 App. 9, 160 S. W. 714.

Defendant, when his case was called, and a jury was selected and sworn, and after his motion to postpone for two days, in which to prepare written pleadings was denied, whereupon the court entered a plea of not guilty for him, but, before further steps were taken, the court granted such time, and defendant, when so informed, declined to agree to a discharge of the jury, but insisted upon his motion; whereupon the court withdrew the case from the jury, and continued the case for two days. Held, that such facts did not constitute former jeopardy. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 823.

Computation of time.—The two days must be computed from the filing of the information. Evans v. State, 36 App. 32, 35 S. W. 163.

Waiver.—Filing of pleas under compulsion held not a waiver of the two days provided by this article. Reed v. State, 31 App. 26, 19 S. W. 675.

Where one goes to trial, it is too late then to ask for postponement of the case because he has not had two full days after indictment filed in which to prepare for trial. Counts v. State, 49 App. 339, 94 S. W. 222.

New trial.—When a motion for new trial is granted, the cause may be again tried at the same term, but the defendant should not be unduly hurried to his prejudice. Lott v. State, 41 Tex. 121.

Art. 579. [568] When defendant is entitled to service of copy of indictment, etc.—In cases where the defendant is entitled to be served with a copy of the indictment, he shall be allowed the two days' time mentioned in the preceding article to file written pleadings after such service. [O. C. 496.]

As to service of copy of indictment, see art. 551, et seq., ante.

ridge v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 796.

Service of copy of indictment.—Refusal to postpone the trial for two days after service of indictment, held ground for reversal. Woodall v. State, 25 App. 617, 8 S. W. 892.

After verdict it is too late to object for the first time that no copy of the indicement was served on defendant. Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 821, and cases cited.

Where the first proceedings became functus officio and a second arrest, which was legal and proper, was made, the arrested party was entitled to the statutory service of a copy of the second indictment unless waived by him. Lockwood v. State, 32 App. 167, 23 S. W. 413, and cases cited; Harris v. State, 32 App. 273, 22 S. W. 1937.

Where no request is made to postpone the case for two days after service of copy of the indictment the right to such postponement is waived. Callison v. State, 37 App. 211, 39 S. W. 309.

Art. 580. [569] Defendant may file written pleadings at any time, etc.—The two preceding articles shall not be construed so as to preclude the defendant from filing written pleadings at any time before the case is called for trial, except in case of change of venue. [O. C. 496a.]

Art. 581. [570] Plea of guilty; how made in felony case.—A plea of guilty in a felony case must be made in open court, and by the defendant in person; and, in such case, the proceedings shall be as provided in articles 565 and 566.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 975.See ante, arts. 565, 566, and notes; Johnson v. State, 39 App. 625, 48 S. W. 70.

Art. 582. [571] Plea of guilty in misdemeanor.—A plea of guilty in a case of misdemeanor may be made, either by the defendant or his counsel in open court; and, in such case, the defendant or his counsel may waive a jury, and the punishment may be assessed by the court, either upon evidence or without it, at the discretion of the court.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1041.

Admonition.—The court may receive a plea of guilty from a defendant charged with a misdemeanor and enter judgment thereon without his being admonished of the consequences and without a showing that it was voluntary. Johnson v. State, 39 App. 625, 48 S. W. 70 (distinguishing Rice's case, 22 App. 654, 3 S. W. 791); Berliner v. State, 6 App. 181; Scott v. State, 29 App. 217, 15 S. W. 814.

Presence of accused.—A judgment based upon plea of guilty by constable in misdemeanor case while defendant is in jail and never brought into court is void. Plea of guilty in such case must be made in open court by the accused or his attorney. Ex parte Jones, 46 App. 433, 80 S. W. 996.

A conviction of violation of the gambling laws entered upon plea of guilty by defendant's mother, not an attorney at law, unauthorized by him, and made in his absence, was void. Ex parte Super (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 697.

Persuasion and threats.—A conviction entered on a plea of guilty will not be disturbed on appeal, on the theory that accused was overpersuaded to enter the plea, where the evidence is conflicting on that point. Kirk v. State, 60 App. 172, 131 S. W. 414.

Where defendant, under arrest and in jail on the charge of carrying a pistol, pleaded guilty thereto upon threats by the deputy sheriff, who had arrested him, that if he did not plead guilty he would be prosecuted both for carrying the pistol and for the theft of it, without understanding the situation, and to avoid the expense of the prosecution for theft, he was entitled to a new trial. Meeking v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 309.

Vacation proceedings.—Where a session of the county court was convened by the sheriff, in the absence of the judge, on the opening day of the term, and the judge appeared the next day, and made an order postponing the regular business to a specified date, except cases where accused persons were unable to give bond and such probate and civil cases as might be tried by agreement at any time, the court was not in vacation, as affecting validity of a plea of guilty. Kirk v. State, 60 App. 172, 131 S. W. 414.

Defendant in a misdemeanor case may waive jury trial or consent to trial by a jury of less than six men. Stell v. State, 14 App. 59, citing Marks v. State, 19 App. 334.

Findings of fact by trial court are as conclusive as the verdict of a jury. Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 908.

Art. 583. [572] Any person charged with misdemeanor may plead guilty without jury in the county court at special session held for that purpose.—When any person charged with a misdemeanor in the county court shall desire to make speedy disposition of his case upon a plea of guilty, without the intervention of a jury, the county judge shall be authorized and permitted to hold a special session of the court to dispose of such case; and, in such case, the court being in session, the county judge may hear and determine such plea of guilty, and assess the punishment in like manner as if the defendant had been convicted at a regular term; and the same shall be duly entered of record in the minutes of the court; and the same proceedings shall be had to enforce the judgment as in other cases in the county court. [Act April 4, 1891.]

Constitutionality.—This article is unconstitutional; that is, it is beyond the power of the Legislature to authorize county judges to call indiscriminately special terms at any time to suit themselves in order to take pleas of guilty. Ex parte Cole, 51 App. 196, 101 S. W. 239, 250.

Art. 584. [573] Plea of not guilty, how made.—The plea of not guilty may be made by the defendant or by his counsel in open court; and, in all cases where the defendant refuses to plead, the plea of not guilty shall be entered for him by the court. [O. C. 480.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 538.
See ante, art. 564, and notes.
Time for pleading, see post, art. 653.

Judgment recitals.—A judgment of conviction reciting that a jury had "heard the indictment read by the district attorney and the defendant's plea of not guilty," sufficiently showed that all of the defendants pleaded to the indictment. Martines v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 886.

Art. 585. [574] Plea of not guilty, how construed.—The plea of "not guilty" shall be construed to be a denial of every material allegation in the indictment or information. Under this plea, evidence to establish the insanity of defendant, and every fact whatever tending to acquit him of the accusation may be introduced, except such facts as are proper for a special plea under article 572. [O. C. 497.]

Art. 586. [575] Pleas of guilty and not guilty may be oral.—The plea of "guilty" and the plea of "not guilty" may be made orally, and shall be entered of record on the minutes of the court.

See ante, arts. 564, 565, 566, and notes.

7. OF THE ARGUMENT AND DECISION OF MOTIONS, PLEAS AND EXCEPTIONS

Art. 587. [576] Motions, etc., to be heard and decided without delay.—The motion to set aside an indictment or information, and all exceptions, shall be heard together, and shall be decided without delay. [O. C. 502.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 992.

Art. 588. [577] Same subject.—The court, at its discretion, may hear and determine such pleadings as are named in the preceding article at any time before a trial upon the plea of not guilty has been entered upon, but not afterward.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 992.
Must be disposed of before venue is changed. Post, art. 630.

Art. 589. [578] Defendant may open and conclude argument.—The counsel of the defendant has the right to open and conclude the argument upon all pleadings of the defendant, presented for the decision of the judge.

Refusal to hear argument.—The matter of hearing arguments on a motion to quash an indictment rests solely within the discretion of the trial court, and where he refuses to hear argument, and errs in refusing to quash the indictment, his ruling is reviewable on appeal. Hickman v. State, 64 App. 161, 141 S. W. 955.

Art. 590. [579] Special pleas setting forth matters of fact.—Such special pleas as set forth matter of fact proper to be tried by a jury shall be submitted, and tried with a plea of "not guilty." [O. C. 503.]

See ante, arts. 573, 574, and notes; post, art. 770.

Submission to jury.—The plea of not guilty and the special plea should be submitted together, with directions to the jury to first consider the special plea; and, if they find that to be true, to proceed no further than to return their verdict upon it. Wilson v. State, 45 Tex. 76, 23 Am. Rep. 682; Davis v. State, 42 Tex. 494; Prine v. State, 41 Tex. 300; Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 387; Pritchford v. State, 2 App. 62; Pickens v. State, 9 App. 279; White v. State, Id. 299; Troy v. State, 10 App. 319; Adams v. State, 16 App. 162; Grisham v. State, 10 App. 594.

Art. 591. [580] Process to procure testimony on written pleadings.—Where the matters involved in any written pleading depend, in whole or in part, upon testimony, either written or verbal, and not altogether upon the record of the court, every process known to the law may be obtained, either on behalf of the state or of the defendant, for the purpose of procuring such testimony; but there shall be no delay on account of the want of the testimony, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that all the means given by the law have been used to procure the same. [O. C. 503.]

Art. 592. [581] Where motion to set aside, etc., is sustained in misdemeanor.—Where the motion to set aside an indictment or information, or an exception to the same, is sustained, the defendant, in a case of misdemeanor, shall be discharged, but may be again prosecuted within the time allowed by law. [O. C. 504.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 993.
Discharge of accused.—Where, after defendant announced himself ready for trial for aggravated assault the information was quashed at the instance of the county attorney for variance between it and the complaint as to the date of the offense, and a new information was filed instantaneously, defendant could not, over objection, be tried under the new information without being discharged and re-arrested. Turner v. State, 21 App. 198, 18 S. W. 96.

Art. 593. [582] In cases of felony.—If the motion to set aside or the exception to the indictment in cases of felony be sustained, the defendant shall not therefore be discharged, but may be immediately recommitted by order of the court, upon motion of the attorney representing the state or without motion; and proceedings may afterward be had against him as if no prosecution had ever been commenced. [O. C. 505.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 994.
Discharge of accused.—In a capital case, when an indictment is defective, the prosecution will not be dismissed, but it will be ordered that the defendant be committed to await the action of the next grand jury. Calvin v. State, 25 Tex. 789.

Where a nolle prosequi is entered to a good indictment in a felony case, and no new proceedings are instituted, defendant cannot be detained in custody. Venter v. State, 18 App. 198.

Art. 594. [583] Shall be fully discharged, when.—Where, after the motion or exception is sustained, it is made known to the court by sufficient testimony that the offense of which the defendant is accused will be barred by limitation before another indictment can be preferred, he shall, in every case, be fully discharged. [O. C. 506.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 995.
Limitations.—If a new indictment or information would be barred by limitation, the prosecution will be dismissed, although defect in the indictment or information be one of form merely. Ante, art. 695. Redfield v. State, 24 Tex. 131.

Art. 595. [584] When exception is that no offense is charged.—If an exception to an indictment or information is taken and sustained upon the ground that there is no offense against the law charged therein, the defendant shall be discharged, unless an affidavit be filed accusing him of the commission of an offense punishable by law. [O. C. 507.]

Discharge of accused.—The defendant cannot be detained to answer another indictment or information, without an affidavit charging him with an offense. Crou hij v. State, decided at Galveston, February 11, 1874, unreported.

Where exceptions are sustained because no offense is charged defendant should be discharged by final judgment, but where exceptions are sustained to the form of the indictment the judgment should be only interlocutory. State v. Thornton, 32 Tex. 104.

Art. 596. [585] When defendant is held by order of court, etc., shall be discharged in ten days, unless, etc.—In case the motion to set aside the indictment or the exceptions thereto are sustained, but the court refuses to discharge the defendant at the expiration of ten days from the order sustaining such motions or exceptions, the defendant shall be discharged, unless in the meanwhile complaint under oath has been made before a magistrate charging him with an offense against the law, or unless another indictment has been presented against him for such offense.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 964.

Art. 597. [586] When exception is on account of form.—When the exception to an indictment or information is merely on account of form, the same shall be amended, if decided to be defective, and the cause proceed upon such amended indictment or information.

[O. C. 508.]

Ante, arts. 570, 576, and notes.

Art. 598. [587] Amendment of indictment or information.—Any matter of form in an indictment or information may be amended at any time before an announcement of ready for trial upon the merits by both parties, but not afterward. No matter of substance can be amended.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 748, p. 396.

Name of accused, see ante, arts. 599-602, and notes.

Validity of statutes.—The provisions allowing amendments are not ex post facto as to indictments pending. State v. Manning, 14 Tex. 492.

It is not error to permit the clerk to change the date of filing the indictment from 1897 to 1891, to make it correspond with the date of its return, as shown by the minutes of the court. Boren v. State, 29 App. 537, 25 S. W. 775. See Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448, and cases cited. De Olles v. State, 20 App. 145.

A defect in an information for a sale of intoxicating liquor in violation of the prohibitory law, in not alleging the date when the law was adopted or put in force, is a defect of form. Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1184; Jackson v. State, 70 App. 682, 157 S. W. 1196.

Amendment was properly allowed where the word "court" was omitted where it should have been inserted to show where the prosecution was had. James v. State, 44 Tex. 314.

A defect in an indictment in that it did not show that it was presented in the district court of the county where the grand jury was in session, being one of form, was curable by amendment. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213.

Permitting the clerk to amend his signature to the file mark held not error. De Olles v. State, 20 App. 145.

A defect in the information in that it failed, except inferentially, to show in what court it was presented, should, on being pointed out, have been cured by amendment. Bowen v. State, 28 App. 498, 19 S. W. 787.

Permitting clerk to supply omission by endorsing file mark on indictment held not error. Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

An original information, bearing the date "Filed the 9 day of Oct. 19," may be amended to show that the date meant was "1909," after trial, and after motion in arrest of judgment, in that the information showed that it was not filed within two years next after the commission of the offense, where the evidence showed that both the affidavit and information were filed at the same time, and on the 9th day of October, 1908. Burke v. State, 27 App. 635, 124 S. W. 658.

An indictment for keeping a house where intoxicants were sold in quantities of a gallon or less without having obtained a license to "retail" such liquors should be amended to use the word "retail." Minter v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 733.

An indictment for pursuing the business of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory which alleged that the grand jurors in N. county "illegally organized as such at this time, D. 1913," was properly amended by adding the name of the month and year. Hightower v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 181.

The court may permit an information to be amended by inserting the name of the assistant criminal district attorney and to be signed by him. Tuiley v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 364.

A defect in an indictment that it did not show that it was presented in the proper court, not being one of substance, should have been cured by amendment. Walker v. State, 7 App. 52.

A defect in an indictment for forgery that it set out the forged instrument by its substance and effect only, being one of substance, was not curable by amendment. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213.

Where an indictment for violating the local option law places the prosecution under a particular election it cannot be amended by striking out the dates of the publication in the newspaper under such election. Wade v. State, 52 App. 619, 108 S. W. 617, and cases cited.

Where an indictment, charging the offense of pursuing the occupation of an itinerant physician without payment of the tax required, used the word "physical" instead of "physician," the court is without authority to substitute "a" for "the." Rutherford v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1157.

Complaint.—Amendment of information without amending the complaint held not error. Wilson v. State, 6 App. 144.

Affidavit.—Permitting one other than attorn to amend the affidavit by inserting the true name of defendant, held error. Patillo v. State, 3 App. 442.

Record of amendment.—It is essential that the record show affirmatively that the amendment was in fact made, and not show merely an order that the indictment be amended. Robins v. State, 9 App. 666, and cases cited; Cox v. State, 7 App. 495; Turner v. State, 7 App. 596.

Time for amendment.—Matters of form in an indictment or information are amendable before both parties announce themselves ready for trial upon the merits, but not thereafter. Allegations as to the form and term at which the indictment was presented are matters of form, and amendable, subject to the above limitations. Ante, art. 598; Osborne v. State, 23 App. 451, 5 S. W. 251; Williams v. State, 24 App. 109, 29 S. W. 472; Murphy v. State, 29 App. 307, 16 S. W. 417; Grayson v. State, 39 App. 429, 34 S. W. 961; Stiff v. State, 21 App. 259, 17 S. W. 726; Wade v. State, 52 App. 619, 108 S. W. 677. An amendment as to a matter of form held too late after announcement of readiness for trial by both parties. Williams v. State, 34 App. 109, 29 S. W. 472.

An indictment may be amended at trial as to an immaterial matter. Murphy v. State, 36 App. 24, 55 S. W. 174.

Where the amendment as to form of an information or indictment relates to the place of court at which it is presented, it may be made after the parties have announced ready for trial. Young v. State, 55 App. 353, 116 S. W. 1155.

Art. 599. [588] Amendments, made how.—All amendments of an indictment or information shall be made with the leave of the court, and under its direction.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 749, p. 599.

See notes under art. 598, ante.

Art. 600. [589] State may except to plea, etc.—When a special plea is filed by the defendant, the state may except to its efficiency for substantial defects; and, if the exception be sustained, the plea may be amended. If the plea be not excepted to, it shall be considered that issue has been taken upon the same. [O. C. 509, 510.]

See ante, art. 572, and notes. Venters v. State, 18 App. 198.

The plea of former acquittal or conviction may be excepted to for insufficiency. Bogess v. State, 43 Tex. 347; Grisham v. State, 19 App. 504; Pickens v. State, 9 App. 270.

Where defendant interposed a plea of former record and judgment which was subject to objection made, but upon which the court did not act, and evidence was introduced under the plea as though no objection had been made, failure to submit to the jury the question raised by the plea, was error. Munch v. State, 25

Sustaining of demurrer to plea of former acquittal held error. Fenton v. State,
33 App. 633, 28 S. W. 537.

Art. 601. [590] Former acquittal or conviction; when a bar and when not a bar.—A former judgment of acquittal or conviction in a court of competent jurisdiction shall be a bar to any further prosecution for the same offense, but shall not bar a prosecution for any higher grade of offense over which said court had not jurisdiction, unless such trial and judgment were had upon indictment or information, in which case, the prosecution shall be barred for all grades of the offense.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, § 22, § 23.
Acquittal in court having no jurisdiction, see ante, art. 20.
Burglary and felony committed after entry, see Pen. Code, arts. 1313, 1317, 1318.
Conviction of lower as acquittal of higher offense, see post, § 763.
Conviction or acquittal in other state or county, see arts. 255, 256.
Discharge by examining court, see ante, art. 314.
Forgery and passing or possession of forged instrument with intent to pass, see Pen. Code, art. 946.
Former jeopardy in general, see ante, art. 9.
Offenses against state and municipality, see post, § 965.
Plea, see post, arts. 572-574.
Practicing medicine without authority, see Pen. Code, art. 756.

A conviction on a complaint before a justice of the peace, of the offense of simple assault, is no bar to a prosecution by information based on the same facts for aggravated assault upon a female. Henkel v. State, 27 App. 510, 11 S. W. 671, and cases cited. See Davis v. State, 29 App. 651, 47 S. W. 978; Allen v. State, 7 App. 298.

Though a plea of former conviction of a simple assault founded on a trial before a justice of the peace, is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for aggravated assault based on same act, the plea should be submitted to the jury, and the defendant acquitted if they should find that a simple assault only had been committed. Funderburk v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 1060.

It is no defense to a prosecution for aggravated assault that accused had been prosecuted for simple assault in the mayor’s court. Cauille v. State, 57 App. 363, 123 S. W. 413.

A conviction by a justice of the peace for engaging in an affray will not bar a prosecution for aggravated assault, even though growing out of the same transaction. McGraw v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 967.

Trial under indictment.—If the former acquittal or conviction was under an indictment or information, and for a minor offense embraced in a transaction which also constituted a higher offense, such acquittal or conviction will bar a subsequent prosecution for the higher grade of offense, although the court in which the former acquittal or conviction was had, did not have jurisdiction of the higher grade of offense, and although an indictment for said higher grade of offense was pending in another court having jurisdiction of it. Grisham v. State, 19 App. 594; Kain v. State, 16 App. 252; White v. State, 9 App. 390; Achterberg v. State, 8 App. 462; Allen v. State, 7 App. 298; Thomas v. State, 49 Tex. 36.

Dismissal or quashal.—Prior prosecution which was dismissed held not a bar. Brill v. State, 1 App. 352; Swindell v. State, 32 Tex. 102; Longley v. State, 42 Tex. 490.

Judgment quashing former indictment held not a bar. Swancoat v. State, 4 App. 165.

Art. 602. [591] Plea of not guilty allowed where motion, etc., has been overruled.—Judgment shall, in no case, be given against the defendant where his motion, exception or plea is overruled; but he shall, in all cases, be allowed to plead not guilty. If he refuses to plead, it shall be considered as if the plea were offered, and be noted accordingly. [O. C. 512.]

See ante, arts. 663, 575.
See notes under article 79, ante.

8. Of Continuance

Art. 603. [592] Continuance by operation of law, when.—Criminal actions are continued by operation of law when there is not sufficient time for trial at any particular term of a court, or where the defendant has not been arrested. [O. C. 513.]

Nolle prosequi.—The entry of a nolle prosequi to a good indictment terminates the prosecution and entitles defendant to a discharge. Venters v. State, 18 App. 196.

Mistrial.—After mistrial the cause stood as it did before the mistrial, and if defendant had no cause to claim a continuance he should have made his application in the terms of the statute. Jones v. State, 3 App. 575.

Art. 604. [593] By consent of parties.—A criminal action may be continued by consent of the parties thereto, in open court, at any time.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 537.

Consent.—An agreement between attorneys to constitute a ground for continuance must be in writing as required by the rules or must be consented to by the judge. Nixon v. State, 36 App. 66, 35 S. W. 394.

The mere agreement of counsel to continue a case is not of itself sufficient to authorize continuance. Keaton v. State, 41 App. 624, 57 S. W. 1,126.

Art. 605. [594] For sufficient cause shown.—A criminal action may be continued on the written application of the state or of the defendant, upon sufficient cause shown; which cause shall be distinctly and fully set forth in the application. [O. C. 514, 517, 520.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 839, 833.

1. Discretion of court.
2. Grounds in general.
3. Other prosecution pending.
4. Absence of accompurgators on motion for change of venue.
5. Former conviction.
6. Physical and mental condition of accused.
8. Local prejudice.
10. Codefendants.
11. Severance.

1. Discretion of court.—An application based upon a good ground not provided for in the statute, like other applications for continuance, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and unless it be shown that such discretion has been abused the action of the court will not be revised. Towns end v. State, 41 Tex. 1st; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; Zumwalt v. State, 2 App. 108, 26 S. W. 69; Krebs v. State, 8 App. 36; Myers v. State, 7 App. 546, and cases cited; Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 455; Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1064; Stacy v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 114.

In determining whether the court abused its discretion the whole record must be considered. Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 455.

2. Grounds in general.—Art. 469, Vernon's Statutes, 1014, prescribing legal holidays does not suspend proceedings of courts on those days; such statute, in so far as it relates to judicial proceedings, being merely permissive. Pender v. State, 12 App. 490, citing Dunlap v. State, 9 App. 178, 35 Am. Rep. 736.

It is not cause for a continuation that a prosecution against a defendant's witness has been continued by the state, which prosecution rendered said witness incompetent to testify in behalf of defendant. Moore v. State, 16 App. 1; Phillips v. State, Id. 45.

A continuance because the court convened at 8:30 in the morning held properly denied. Chappell v. State, 58 App. 461, 126 S. W. 274.

The continuance is at the discretion of the trial court, whether the trial will take a recess until a motion for continuance is prepared, or call the next case on the docket. Brown v. State, 72 App. 38, 120 S. W. 374.

Where accused was represented by counsel, the denial of a continuance because he had not been able to get into communication with his father, held harmless. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 334.

3. Other prosecution pending.—One indicted in the district court for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory is not entitled to a continuance pending trial in the county court for sales of liquor; for separate and distinct offenses are charged. Jackson v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 521.

4. Absence of accompurgators on motion for change of venue.—The defendant is not entitled to a continuance merely for the purpose of finding accompurgators to join with him in a motion for change of venue. Wali v. State, 18 Tex. 928, 70 Am. Dec. 382. But by reason of surprise may be entitled to a postponement for such purpose. Blackburn v. State, 43 Tex. 522.

5. Former conviction.—Where it appeared that defendant had been convicted as an accessory upon the same facts and that he had appealed therefrom, his motion for a postponement until the final disposition of such case, in order that he might plead either former conviction or former acquittal, should have been granted. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 552.

Where accused pleads a former conviction, from which an appeal is pending, he must move for a continuance of the second prosecution until the appeal is determined, if he would take advantage of his plea. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1094.

6. Physical and mental condition of accused.—See note to art. 616, post.

A continuance on the ground of accused's illness held properly denied. Tilmeyer v. State, 62 App. 772, 120 S. W. 1066; Ferales v. State, 72 App. 176, 161 S. W. 282.
Sickness of the defendant rendering him unable to be present in court at every stage of the trial is cause for continuance or postponement. Brown v. State, 33 Tex. 482.

Accused should not be forced to trial when too sick to confer with counsel, in which case the trial should be continued. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 133 S. W. 742.

It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse a continuance on the ground that counsel have just learned that accused is a monomaniac, counsel having had ample time to consider his condition. Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 759.

Refusal to continue a case for the illness of accused was not prejudicial where he could and did undergo a trial without any breakdown. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 140, 159 S. W. 255.

Where accused is not mentally or physically able to be tried, and can not be of any assistance to his counsel at trial because of his mental condition, and probably can not testify, a continuance should be granted. Graham v. State, 72 App. 9, 160 S. W. 714.

7. Want of preparation.—A motion not stating in what particulars accused's attorneys were unable to prepare his defense, held insufficient to justify a continuance. Luster v. State, 63 App. 541, 141 S. W. 299, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1089.

Where accused did not move for a continuance so as to enable her to prepare for trial, she cannot complain in the motion for non-probation that she was not prepared for trial. Hum. v. State, 72 App. 655, 163 S. W. 71.

Continuance of a homicide case, after the denial of a writ of habeas corpus because attorneys had not had time to investigate the facts, and because witnesses for the State were not to tell attorneys what their testimony would be, held properly denied. Muldrew v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 156.

An application for a continuance based on alleged "excited condition" of the public mind held too vague. Law v. State, 32 App. 24, 24 S. W. 293.

That a mob attempted to hang defendant is not a ground for continuance. Miller v. State, 52 App. 319, 29 S. W. 1165.

Application for a continuance because of threats of mob violence if application for postponement should be made is insufficient, when it does not show what kinds of harm might be, nor the extent of the warning. Hutcherson v. State, 62 App. 1, 136 S. W. 53.

The refusal of a continuance, sought because the accused was tried at the same term for another crime making it difficult to obtain an impartial jury, if error, is harmless, where no improper juror is forced upon the accused. Lawson v. State (Cr. App.) 118 S. W. 587.

A continuance sought because the leading counsel was improperly denied where the junior counsel conducted the case with skill and ability. Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 939.

Denial of application for continuance, because defendant's attorney was temporarily out of the state and had no arrangement for trial, believing that he would return in time to try the case, held not an abuse of discretion. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 104 S. W. 226.

Where accused's attorney, absent when the case was called, appeared before any witness was examined, and the only absent witness appeared before the trial was completed and testified, and accused was not injured by the attorney's absence, he could not complain that he was forced to trial during the absence of his attorney. Castenua v. State, 76 App. 416, 166 S. W. 1159.

10. Codefendants.—If a joint application is granted as to one defendant, the continuance must operate as to all, notwithstanding there is a motion for severance. Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Thompson v. State, 9 App. 301.

Testimony of separately indicted defendant whose case had been continued held not ground for continuance. Moore v. State, 15 App. 2; Phelps v. State, Id. 45.

Refusal of continuance to await trial of codefendant held not error. Stoudard v. State, 27 App. 1, 10 S. W. 442.

An application for a continuance to obtain the testimony of a convicted codefendant, was properly overruled. Magruder v. State, 25 App. 214, 53 S. W. 232.

Refusal to continue case until after the trial of another defendant in another court held proper. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 649.

11. Severance.—See notes to arts. 726, 727, ante.

If there has been a severance and conviction of one defendant, the other is not entitled to a continuance to await the result of an appeal. Lawson v. State, 7 App. 63; Myers v. State, Id. 610; Krebs v. State, 8 App. 1.

A party whose evidence is the object of the severance must be present or in such situation that his case can first be tried with reasonable dispatch; and hence where he has forfeited his bail and is at large, the severance should be denied. Anderson v. State, 5 App. 542.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—20 305
The filing of an affidavit for severance by one of plural defendants will not, without other sufficient cause, operate a continuance to either party. Stovall v. State, 27 App. 1, 10 S. W. 442.

The overruling of a motion for continuance is not an announcement of ready for trial on the merits so as to deprive defendant of the right to have another person separately indicted for the same offense first placed on trial, so that he may obtain the latter's testimony in case of acquittal. Dodson v. State, 32 App. 529, 24 S. W. 899.

Art. 606. [595] First application by the state for a continuance.—It shall be sufficient, upon the first application by the state for a continuance, if the same be for the want of a witness, to state—

1. The name of the witness and his residence, if known, or that his residence is unknown.
2. The diligence which has been used to procure his attendance; and it shall not be considered sufficient diligence to have caused it to be issued, or to have applied for, a subpoena in cases where the law authorized the issuance of an attachment.
3. That the testimony of the witness is believed, by the applicant, to be material for the state. [O. C. 515.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §26.

Art. 607. [596] Subsequent application by the state.—On any subsequent application for a continuance by the state, for the want of a witness, the application, in addition to the requirements in the preceding article, must show—

1. The facts which the applicant expects to establish by the witness, and it must appear to the court that they are material.
2. That the applicant expects to be able to procure the attendance of the witness at the next term of the court.
3. That the testimony can not be procured from any other source during the present term of the court. [O. C. 516.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §27.

Art. 608. [597] First application by defendant for a continuance.—In the first application by the defendant for a continuance, it shall be necessary, if the same be on account of the absence of a witness, to state under oath—

1. The name of the witness and his residence, if known, or that his residence is not known.
2. The diligence which has been used to procure his attendance; and it shall not be considered sufficient diligence to have caused to be issued, or to have applied for, a subpoena, in cases where the law authorizes the issuance of an attachment.
3. The facts which are expected to be proved by the witness, and it must appear to the court that they are material.
4. That the witness is not absent by the procurement or consent of the defendant.
5. That the application is not made for delay.
6. That there is no reasonable expectation that attendance of the witness can be secured during the present term of court by a postponement of the trial to some future day of said term; and the truth of the first, or any subsequent application, as well as the merit of the ground set forth therein and its sufficiency shall be addressed to the sound discretion of the court called to pass upon the same, and shall not be granted as a matter of right; provided, that should an application for continuance be overruled, and the defendant convicted, if it appear upon the trial that the evidence of the witness or witnesses named in the application was of a material character, and that the facts set forth in said application were probably true, a new trial should be granted, and the cause continued for the term, or postponed to a future day of the same term. [O. C. 518.]

\textbf{Subd. 1}

\textbf{1. Name and residence of witness.}—Failing to state the residence of the absent witness, or that his residence is unknown, renders the application fatally defective. Thomas v. State, 17 App. 457; Vanway v. State, 41 Tex. 639; Wolf v. State, 4 App. 382; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 226; Anderson v. State, 8 App. 512.

The statement that one of the witnesses is temporarily absent from the state should be followed by a statement showing at what time he left the county of his required residence. Dove v. State, 36 App. 185, 35 S. W. 648.

A continuance because of an absent witness is properly refused where the witness is unknown in the county, and where his whereabouts are unknown, and a search of that and surrounding counties fails to show that he has ever been in any of them, and defendant's counsel is the only person professing to be acquainted with him. Byrd v. State, 47 S. W. 721, 39 App. 669.

\textbf{2. Subsequent applications.}—See art. 609, post, and notes.

\textbf{3. Mode of enforcing attendance of witnesses.}—See arts. 525-550, ante, and notes.

\textbf{Subd. 2}

The application must show affirmatively and clearly that due diligence had been used to obtain the testimony of the witness, or it must, in like manner, disclose facts which will excuse the use of such diligence. The diligence used must be fully and distinctly set forth, and it must be apparent therefrom that all the means provided by law were promptly resorted to. It is the duty of the defendant, as soon as he is arrested, to use the means provided by law to obtain the testimony he desires, or he must show good cause for failure to do so, upon applying for a continuance. The burden is upon the party seeking a continuance to show himself entitled to it by definite, exact, and certain averments. He should show such facts as negative a want of legal diligence. A mere general statement that he has used due diligence will not be sufficient, but the acts of diligence must be stated fully and clearly, and where process has been issued and returned, it is better to make the same a part of the application. It is not sufficient to merely state that process was sued out, but it must be shown what was done with it; to whom, and when it was delivered, and when issued to another county, the manner and time of its transmission must be shown, and where process has been returned, the time when it was returned must be shown. Barrett v. State, 18 App. 64; Timbrook v. State, 1d. 1; Hughes v. State, 1d. 139; Bond v. State, 20 App. 421; Hawkins v. State, 17 App. 653, 59 Am. Rep. 129; Long v. State, 17 App. 128; Lane v. Art. 608

PROCEEDINGS AFTER COMMITMENT, ETC.

Title 7

The law requires of the defendant a strict compliance with its exact requirements upon application for a continuance. What constitutes legal diligence to enforce the attendance of witnesses is explicitly prescribed by the statute, and a defendant, who deviated from its directions, must be made to adhere. Skipworth v. State, 17 App. 128, and cases cited; Melton v. State, 63 App. 362, 140 S. W. 230; Murff v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 233.

Diligence held sufficient. Cameron v. State, 57 App. 316, 122 S. W. 870; Presley v. State, 60 App. 102, 131 S. W. 232.

An application made several days before the trial should show that the attendance of the witness could not be had at the time, or that the proper diligence would have been useless. Morgan v. State, 44 Tex. 511.

It is not a good excuse for a failure to use diligence, that the testimony could not be obtained between the time of the presentment of the indictment and the trial. Murphy v. State, 6 App. 420. Nor is it in any way to be considered that the defendant’s attorney neglected and abandoned the defense. Goodman v. State, 4 App. 319. Nor that a capias pro fine had been issued against the witness because of a failure to attend at a previous term; nor that the state had summoned the witness. Drake v. State, 5 App. 649; Handlin v. State, 40 App. 347; Clark v. State, 54 App. 92, 6 Stat. That the defendant was called upon to announce for trial so soon after the presentment of the indictment that service of process upon an absent witness in a distant county was impracticable, was held to be a sufficient excuse for failure to sue out process for such witness. Mapes v. State, 14 App. 129.

Second application for continuance held to show a total want of diligence. Washington v. State, 35 App. 154, 32 S. W. 691.

Continuance was properly denied, when the case had been several times continued for witnesses, and the names of such witness had not been included in any former application. De Alberts v. State, 34 App. 508, 31 S. W. 391.

In order to show diligence the application should state, when process had been issued in former term, that the witness had been in actual attendance at the time which the application was made. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 510, 34 S. W. 623.

When the bill shows that the witnesses were summoned before court opened, that they were not present on the day of trial; held, such bill does not show diligence. Henry v. State, 38 App. 206, 42 S. W. 559.

If a defendant has been arrested three days before trial, motion will be overruled if no process has been applied for, even though defendant had no counsel and claimed not to know that evidence was material. Holmes v. State, 38 App. 370, 42 S. W. 996.

It is sufficient excuse for want of diligence in obtaining testimony, for absence of which continuance is sought, that the prosecuting witness by false statements to defendant misled him, so that the different testimony given by the prosecuting witness, and for which the absent testimony would not have been necessary, was a surprise to him. Richardson v. State, 57 App. 265, 13 S. W. 553.

An application for a continuance, which alleges that several subpoenas had been issued, and that applicant had learned for the first time, two days before, that the witness lived in Oklahoma, and that applicant had not time to procure deposition, is insufficient for failing to show that due diligence had been used, especially where it was not shown whether it was the first or second continuance and the application had been considered on a motion for new trial. Smalley v. State, 59 App. 85, 137 S. W. 225.

Where accused was indicted for murder on January 11, 1907, there was no abuse of discretion in denying a second application for a continuance to procure absent witnesses, made when the case was called for trial on May 5, 1909, in view of the long time which had elapsed since the indictment was filed. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 453, 128 S. W. 129.

Accused, failing to avail himself of the offer of the court to issue additional process for an absent witness, and to exhaust all means at its command to procure the witnesses, may not complain of the denial of his application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of the witness. Cromwell v. State, 59 App. 565, 128 S. W. 623.
A motion for a continuance for the absence of a witness was properly denied, where it showed no diligence, and where the witness thereafter testified for the defendant. Barrego v. State, 61 App. 629, 136 S. W. 41.

An application, which showed that the witness attended a former term of the court in the absence of the accused, but that since he had been away, his health was not such as to enable him to attend the trial, was properly denied, and the application to procure his attendance, was not shown to have a sufficient purpose. Jones v. State, 61 App. 656, 136 S. W. 57.

A continuance for absent witnesses will be denied where no subpoena was attached to the application, and the application fails to show when the absent witnesses were subpoenaed. Clark v. State, 61 App. 557, 136 S. W. 269.

A continuance for absent witnesses who had left the county is properly denied, where the time the witness was absent, where the showings made as to the reason why process was not served, and where any other reason why process was not served before the trial, is not stated. Toliver v. State, 63 App. 563, 140 S. W. 776.

Where accused knew for more than five months before his trial that he needed an instrument in the possession of a third person in a sister state, but made no effort to obtain possession thereof, and made no excuse for his failure to do so, a continuance to enable him to procure the instrument was properly denied. Melton v. State, 63 App. 573, 140 S. W. 781.

Where the defendant knew of certain testimony before the indictment was returned and had not issued a subpoena, nor included names of witnesses in a motion for a continuance made when the case was first called for trial, a lack of diligence is shown, and a motion for a continuance on the ground that this evidence was newly discovered, made at a time when nearly all the evidence had been introduced, is properly refused. Schmidt v. State, 63 App. 491, 110 S. W. 1088.

The trial judge, in allowing the bill of exception to the denial of a motion for continuance made on the ground of the absence of two witnesses, who testified by stating that one of the witnesses for whom the motion was made was present and testified at the trial, and that defendant, after the motion was overruled, used no diligence to secure the other witness, who was his relative, and whose attendance had been procured; that testimony of the motion was made testified the reverse of what defendant in his motion for continuance swore he would testify; and the testimony of the other witnesses was not shown to have been material. Held, that any error in overruling the motion for continuance was not prejudicial. Luster v. State, 62 App. 511, 141 S. W. 209, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1089.

An application for a continuance in a criminal prosecution on account of the absence of a witness for the defense, which merely states that a subpoena which the defendant caused to be issued to the county in which the cause was tried was placed in the hands of the sheriff, and returned into court after days later and four days before the cause was called for trial without a showing of service, or any reason why it was not served, and which also shows that the defendant was informed that the witness was visiting in the adjoining county of another state, and that her home was in the state in a county adjoining that where he was being tried, is insufficient to show diligence, as the defendant had the burden of showing when he learned of the temporary absence of the witness from the state, when she would return, and whether he could have taken her deposition, why the officer made no return upon the subpoena, and that the witness had not returned to her home in ample time to have been secured as a witness by due diligence. Jones v. State (App.) 141 S. W. 262.

An application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness, made by accused, who had obtained three postponements of the trial, one on account of the absence of the witness, is properly denied as a fourth application where there is a total failure to show diligence. O'Neal v. State (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 938.

Where a companion case was tried while accused was present in court, knowing that witnesses were in attendance, and were not in the hands next for trial, and he made no effort to secure the attendance of such witnesses although knowing where they lived, there was not such diligence in securing their attendance as would justify a continuance. Yarbrough v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 271.

An application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses must state the facts of diligence to procure the attendance of the witnesses, and a mere affirmation of diligence is insufficient. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 217.

A continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses is properly refused, where there is a want of diligence to procure the witnesses for the trial. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 217.

Where an application for a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses was made prematurely and under circumstances showing that by the use of ordinary diligence between the date of the application and the trial the witnesses might have been procured, the application was properly denied. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 317.

Where accused, applying for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness, showed that he learned on Sunday, August 6th, that the witness was absent about 100 miles away, but he applied for no process and did not undertake to communicate with the witness to secure his attendance in any way, and the trial commenced the following day and was not concluded until August 9th, the refusal to grant a continuance was proper for want of due diligence to procure the witnesses. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 317.

Where accused, by the use of diligence could have located the witness in time to have secured her attendance, or could have obtained her deposition, the continuance was properly denied. Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 199.
The rule as to diligence is not so strictly enforced on the first application as on subsequent applications, especially where material facts which would require an acquittal or mitigate the offense. Valigura v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 778.

A motion for a continuance for absence of witnesses is properly overruled for lack of diligence where it was not shown that accused made any effort to ascertain their whereabouts before issuing the process, or that during the trial he attempted to have them served. Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1053.

Defendant was arrested for burglary on May 14th, brought to trial on June 4th, when he moved for a continuance because he had not employed counsel, and because of the absence of two witnesses, whose names he did not know, the application was properly denied for lack of diligence. Ragland v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1117.

No need to employ a lawyer before securing the witness' attendance. Johnson v. State, 79 App. 317, 155 S. W. 1181.

A continuance for the absence of a witness on a third trial is properly denied for lack of diligence where on the first trial the witness had testified, and on the second trial, resulting in a hung jury, motion for continuance to procure this witness was denied. Cowser v. State, 70 App. 266, 157 S. W. 758.

A continuance is properly denied where no diligence is shown, and where witnesses in attendance could testify to the facts as completely as the absent witness. Oliver v. State, 76 App. 140, 152 S. W. 235.

Accused is not entitled to a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses where he did not exercise any diligence to procure their attendance; it appearing that one of the absent witnesses was within two blocks of the courthouse, and no attatchment was issued against him. Cole v. State, 72 App. 282, 162 S. W. 863.

In the overruling of accused's motion for continuance, showing that the case was set for trial a week or more before it was finally tried, that the state was then unable to go to trial because of illness in a witness' family, we reprove the case was re-set, that the court then notified the parties that if it came on because of such illness as to enable them to dictate their depositions, that the state offered to cross any interrogatories and waive time and permit them to be taken, that during the trial, lasting three or four days, both parties were given the opportunity to get such testimony if they wanted it, and accused and the witnesses mentioned in the application did testify, showed no error. Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 575.

Where defendant was indicted February 23d and his case called for trial March 28th, an application for continuance on account of the absence of his husband which gave no reason why his attendance could not be secured, and which showed no diligence to have been summoned, was properly denied. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1164.

Where, though indicted in January, accused did not apply for a subpoena for an absent witness until two days before the May term at which he was tried, and no reason for delay was assigned, accused was not entitled to a continuance to procure the attendance of such witness. Yelet v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 216.

Accused's second application for a continuance because of the absence of a witness, who had been subpoenaed and attended at least one term of court, and who subsequently removed from the state, was properly overruled, where no proper diligence to secure his testimony was shown. Blutock v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 726.

Where the witness resides out of the county in which the prosecution is pending, issuance of a subpoena for him is not diligence, because an attachment may and usually is issued. And where a witness who has been subpoenaed fails to attend, an attachment should be obtained as soon as his absence is discovered, or would be discovered by proper diligence, which would ordinarily be on the day set apart for the call of the criminal docket. Hyde v. State, 16 Tex. 457. 46 Am. Dec. 615, 44 Am. Rep. 716, 717; 17 App. 128; Hughes v. State, 18 App. 130; Hahn v. State, 34 App. 418, 31 S. W. 363; Harvey v. State, 35 App. 546, 31 S. W. 623; Massie v. State, 30 App. 64, 16 S. W. 744; in cited cases; Hill v. State, 56 App. 428, 37 S. W. 735; Clark v. State, 38 App. 39, 48 S. W. 992; Rowland v. State, 55 Tex. 487; Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 759; Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1067.

Service of a subpoena upon a witness who resides in a different county than that of the prosecution is not diligence. Chaplin v. State, 7 App. 87.

Nor is the acceptance of service of a subpoena on the day of the trial by a witness who resides several miles distant from the courthouse. Gaston v. State, 11 App. 143.

Where process has been issued it should also be shown whether or not it has been served, and if not served, the diligence used to procure its service, and also that the process was issued by the proper authority. Williams v. State, 10 App. 114. And see Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 317.

If a person issued process is the subject of another suit, he must appear, or the order for due diligence was not to be served.

Every person who is properly served by the sheriff with a citation, or other process, or legal notice, and who has not appeared shall be cited for custody, and the proper and necessary steps shall be taken to procure his attendance, if the trial is not delayed for a sufficient cause to appear.

To avoid a continuance, see Coward v. State, 6 App. 59.

It is not sufficient for the applicant to state that he is 'informed and believes' that process issued, with a like statement as to what had been done with it. Labbate v. State, 6 App. 257.

When an application is authorized the issuance of a subpoena is not diligence. Chaplin v. State, 7 App. 87; De Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 464.

Process for a witness who resides in an unorganized county should name such county as his residence in order to enable the sheriff to find him. Parkerson v. State, 9 App. 72.

It is not diligence to place process for a witness who resides in another county than that of the forum in the hands of the sheriff of the county of the forum. If the county in which the witness resides is the county in which the order for due diligence was not properly served.

Halles v. State, 10 App. 490; Skipworth v. State, 8 App. 135.

In such case, if the disposition made of the process is alleged upon information and belief, the name of the informant should be disclosed. Pullen v. State, 11 App. 89.

A witness is in default if he is not in attendance on the day set apart for the taking of the criminal docket, or any day of the term subsequent thereto, and before final disposition or continuance of the cause, or, if he is not in attendance at any other particular time named in the writ, or in his bond or recognizance. If the process under which he was summoned be a subpoena, and he disobeys it, the defendant should promptly sue out an attachment. If the witness be under bond or recognizance, such bond or recognizance should be forfeited, and unless these steps are taken, diligence can not be shown. Hill v. State, 15 App. 666; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 715, note.

Defendant was arrested, charged with murder, in October. In January he filed his application for a continuance in order that blood found upon his clothing might be analyzed. Held, there was a total want of diligence, and the application was properly overruled. Brown v. State, 32 App. 119, 22 S. W. 596.

Defendant had two months in which to secure his testimony and had only had subpoenas issued which were returned, "not found." Held, the application was properly overruled. Dean v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 477.

Where witnesses appeared at the March term of the court, but failed to appear at the fall term and no process was issued until the next March term, the continuance was improper. Washington v. State, 38 S. W. 299; 292, 532.

Application for continuance for the testimony of defendant's wife who had been in attendance upon the court, but who had taken measles and had been removed to her father's some twelve miles distant; held, the application should have been granted, although no subpoena had been issued for her. Phillips v. State, 35 App. 490, 34 S. W. 272.
It is not error to refuse a continuance when defendant relies on process issued at a former term to procure attendance of witnesses. Brittain v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 297.

An application which alleged service of process, but did not show on its face when the process was issued, or from what court, did not show due diligence. Goode v. State, 220, 123 S. W. 597.

It is error not to continue a prosecution for absence of the only witness of the assault other than the prosecuting witness, and who accused believed would testify that the assault was committed in self-defense; the failure of accused to subpoena witness being due to his belief that the trial judge had agreed to issue a subpoena, which the judge failed to do. Simmons v. State, 58 App. 571, 126 S. W. 1157.

Where accused was arrested on the day the information was filed, and on the next day procured the issuance of a subpoena for an absent witness, such subpoena being mailed to the proper sheriff, accused showed sufficient diligence. Wilman v. State, 63 App. 623, 141 S. W. 116.

Denial of a first application for a continuance for the absence of witnesses who would testify to matters material to the defense was erroneous, where accused showed that he had process issued for the witnesses, and that they had been served and were in attendance at the former term of court. Boydston v. State, 64 App. 135, 141 S. W. 953.

Where a witness in attendance while the cause was pending on an indictment, thereafter went away, and process, issued as soon as the second arrest on an information occurred, could not be served, there was sufficient diligence. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 614.

Where no process was issued for a witness, defendant relying on his promise to attend, but when the case was called he was sick, there was no error in denying a continuance, especially where, before motion for new trial, he had died. Jordan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 622.

An application for continuance because of an absent witness, accompanied by exhibits showing the issuance of various subpoenas for the witness, was properly refused for lack of diligence, where the exhibits showed that no subpoena was issued in county wherein it was said the witness resided, or to a county where accused had been informed he was temporarily staying. Bost v. State, 64 App. 464, 144 S. W. 589.

Where accused at a former trial did not issue process for witnesses for whose absence he claimed a continuance on the second trial; and, there being a mistrial, he issued process for the witnesses two or three days after the first jury was discharged, the diligence was insufficient to require the granting of the motion. Wells v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 950.

A subsequent application by another proceeding issued a subpoena for a witness on account of whose absence a continuance was asked is not a sufficient showing of diligence to entitle accused to continuance. Vanderberg v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 315.

Where a witness for the state, in a criminal prosecution, after the summons moved to another county and the state, when the case was called, had an attachment issued for the witness, accused, who prior to that time had made no application to have this witness subpoenaed in his own behalf, was not diligent, and hence his motion for a continuance on account of absence of such witness was properly overruled. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1065.

Where a witness for the state had testified against accused at his examining trial in a justice court, and a witness for accused was also present then, but was not sworn in and no process was issued for him before accused was tried, accused was not entitled to a continuance because of his absence. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 197.

Where a subpoena was returned unserved, a continuance granted, and another process issued to the same county, a second continuance was properly denied for want of diligence to locate the witness. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 738.

A continuance on the ground of absent witness was properly denied where process had been issued for him at the preceding term, and a continuance for his absence was then granted, and no additional process had been since applied for. Clary v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 915.

Accused must show that he procured process for his witnesses at once, or at least within a very few days after indictment, requiring them to attend court at the next term. Hogue v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 565.

A second application by accused for a continuance because of the absence of a witness who had been removed from the county was insufficient, where it did not show that a subpoena had been issued to the county to which the witness had moved, or some good reason for it not being issued. Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 579.

Where defendant's subpoenas had been returned a considerable time before the trial, showing that the witnesses had not been found, and no further process issued or was asked for up to the time of the trial, and it appeared that defendant himself did not know where such witnesses resided, his motion for a continuance was properly overruled. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 196.

Where the witness for whose absence continuance was asked had moved to another county after he was summoned, and no additional process was issued for him in such county, there was not sufficient diligence to authorize a continuance, in absence of showing as to why accused had not issued additional process for the witness. Nesbitt v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 203.

Upon second trial an accused is not entitled to a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness, where she did not appear at the first trial, though summoned, and no additional summons was served. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 538.

An application for a continuance of absence of witnesses was properly denied for lack of diligence in attempting to procure their attendance, where the first process issued for the only two witnesses who failed to appear was not served upon them because they were not in the county, and the second was issued on the day of trial, though defendant knew that such witnesses had left the county and resided at certain other places in the state. Chappell v. State, 72 App. 191, 161 S. W. 964.

Where no process had been issued for an alleged absent witness, and his residence at the time of the trial was unknown, an application for continuance because of his absence was properly denied for want of diligence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 447.

A defendant is not entitled to a continuance of a second trial on the ground of absence of witnesses, who are not shown to have been in attendance at the former trial, where no process had been issued for them since that trial to secure their attendance at the second trial. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

Where accused was denied subpoena for a witness because the state had already subpoenaed him, whatever diligence the state used would be sufficient for accused. Wade v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 251.

The prosecutor agreed with accused as to a conversation to which accused testified. A witness to the conversation who was also desired by the state was absent. Held, that the absence of such witness did not, where accused had not filed his application for process for him with the proper officer, entitle accused to a continuance. State v. Leady (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 508.

7. Deposition.—In a case where the deposition of a witness is authorized to be taken, the application for continuance must show diligence to obtain the testimony by that means, or good excuse for the want of such diligence. Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617; Adams v. State, 19 App. 259; Hennessy v. State, 23 App. 240, 5 S. W. 215; Harvey v. State, 35 App. 645, 24 S. W. 633; De Alberts v. State, 34 App. 565, 1 S. W. 415; Stein v. State, 37 App. 119; S. v. App. 38 S. 572; Lyles v. State, 64 App. 621, 142 S. W. 592; Slain v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 366; Rhein v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 578; Gains v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 159; Slaughter v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 562. And see Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 252.

Where no effort had been made to take the depositions of nonresident witnesses, nor to procure the attendance of a resident witness who had testified on the first trial until two days before the trial, when his whereabouts could have been easily ascertained three weeks before the trial, there was no sufficient diligence to sustain a second application for a continuance for absence of such witnesses. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 818.

Where accused knew the location of a witness beyond the court's jurisdiction, his second application for a continuance should have shown that he made some efforts to take her deposition, or obtain her attendance on court. Boesley v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 678.

A general statement that the absent witness will prove the defendant's innocence is insufficient. The facts which it is expected the witness will testify to must be stated definitely. Mere inferences or negations or conclusions or vague indefinite allegations, will not suffice. Grissom v. State, 8 App. 386; Thomas v. State, 17 App. 497; Williams v. State, 19 App. 194; Summerlin v. State, 3 App. 444; Holland v. State, 35 Tex. 474; Brown v. State, 23 Tex. 195; Winkfield v. State, 41 Tex. 140; Mitchell v. State, 1 App. 195; Cockburn v. State, 32 Tex. 559; Smoother v. State, 36 App. 367, 38 W. 407; Shirley v. State, 37 App. 475, 26 S. W. 267; Garrett v. State, 37 App. 195, 38 S. W. 197; Brittain v. State, 38 App. 1, 41 S. W. 412.

Where there is such direct conflict between the incriminatory facts and those set forth in application for continuance as to render it improbable that the facts stated in the application are material and probably true, the continuance should be refused, and consequently an application for a new trial, based thereon, should also be refused. McAdams v. State, 24 App. 86, 5 S. W. 826; Riden v. State (App.) 5 App. 152; Williams v. State, 34 App. 194; Arrighini v. State, 28 S. W. 639; Jackson v. State, 31 App. 552, 21 W. 367; Boggs v. State, 38 App. 52, 41 S. W. 612.

When the absent testimony is consistent with the theories of both the state and the defendant it becomes immaterial, as bearing upon the question of continuance, which should be refused. Stude v. State, 29 App. 331, 18 S. W. 253. See also, Taylor v. State, 27 App. 44, 11 S. W. 35; Peace v. State, 27 App. 83, 10 S. W. 761; Benavides v. State, 31 App. 173, 20 S. W. 309, 37 Am. St. Rep. 799; Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1054.

Accused has the burden of showing by his application such a definite statement of facts proposed to be proved as would demonstrate their materiality and the value of such testimony. Patton v. State, 58 App. 231, 125 S. W. 24. And see Spicer v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 548.

The defendant will not be permitted to select a fact abstractly indifferent in regard to which he finds the witness mistaken, and base his application upon a necessity to disprove such fact, without showing how it has become material. Brumton v. State, 21 Tex. 357.

The facts expected to be proved should be definitely stated in an application for a continuance for absent testimony. Miller v. State, 31 App. 669, 21 S. W. 525, 37 Am. St. Rep. 826.

When it appears from the evidence that the absent witness could not have known anything about the facts which it was alleged that he would testify to; held, that the application was properly overruled. Lindsey v. State, 35 App. 164, 22 S. W. 768.

Where the facts were so remote as to have no particular bearing on the case, the application was properly overruled. Goldsmith v. State, 32 App. 112, 22 S. W. 409.

When the absent witness did not see the difficulty, the application for continuance for his testimony as to what occurred at the place of the difficulty was properly denied. Chalk v. State, 35 App. 116, 32 S. W. 554.

A continuance will not be granted for absent witnesses to prove a conversation when State's evidence shows that he was not present and did not hear the conversation. Barkman v. State, 41 App. 105, 52 S. W. 74.

The absent testimony must not be hearsay. Fullerson v. State, 57 App. 80, 121 S. W. 111.

One is not entitled to continuance to secure witnesses to give testimony incriminating themselves. Griffith v. State, 62 App. 642, 135 S. W. 1016.

Testimony of an absent witness, which meets the state's case at its strongest points, and is in direct conflict with it, is material. Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 141 S. W. 264.

Accused cannot complain of refusal of a continuance asked for absent testimony to combat proof which it was assumed the state would make, where such proof was not given. Weyning v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 941.

One charged with being an accomplice held entitled to a continuance on showing that the absent witness would have contradicted the principal on a material fact. Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 560.

It is not error to refuse a continuance for the absence of witnesses to testify concerning undisputed matters. McDowell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 521.

Denial of a continuance to procure the testimony of the mother of the second wife of accused, prosecuted for bigamy; held error. Sparrin v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 291. 314
Where accused's own testimony contradicted the evidence sought to be elicited from an absent witness, he cannot complain that a continuance was denied. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 218.

In a prosecution for murder, wherein defendant asked a continuance to secure the attendance of his wife, stepson, his two brothers-in-law, his brother, and other neighbors to prove that he had not committed the killing, as proof of the weight of the evidence adduced in his favor, the court did not err in refusing the continuance. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 218.

In a prosecution for the murder of a man, wherein the accused's brother, upon whose evidence the prosecution was based, refused to testify in court where the accused was present to be present, and wherein the continuance would have been granted had the continuance been granted, the court did not err in refusing the continuance. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 218.

A continuance was properly granted. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 218.

Accused, who sought a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses, for whom no process had been issued, relied solely on a certificate of a physician that one witness was unable to appear and a statement by the other witness' husband to that effect. On the motion for new trial he offered no affidavit showing what the testimony of the witness would be. For that reason, the court did not err in denying the continuance. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 218.

A continuance on the ground of absent witnesses is properly denied, where other persons present, who could have testified to the fact accused desired to elicit from the absent witnesses, were not called. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

And see Henry v. State, 33 App. 306, 42 S. W. 559; McCulloch v. State, 33 App. 568, 33 S. W. 259.

9. Gaming.—Absent testimony held not of sufficient materiality to entitle accused to a continuance in a prosecution for keeping a gambling room. Boswell v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 432.

One charged with gaming held entitled to a continuance to procure the testimony of absent witnesses, who would have testified that accused did not bet at the game. Knowles v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 777.

10. Selling liquor.—There was no error in refusing a continuance on account of an absent witness in a prosecution for violation of the local option law, where the state relied for conviction on sales of liquor when such witness was not present. Matthews v. State, 57 App. 337, 123 S. W. 127.

Continuance on the ground of absence of a witness in a prosecution for carrying on the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory held properly denied. Clark v. State, 61 App. 507, 123 S. W. 200.

Where the state negatived the idea that accused kept the liquor for sale in a gin, the denial of a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses who would prove that accused did not keep liquor in the gin was not erroneous. Crawford v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 229.

Continuance because of the absence of witnesses on a trial for selling intoxicating liquor in prohibition territory, held improperly denied. Barnes v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 585.

The mere fact that the injured party had said that the defendant had been guilty of theft is immaterial in a prosecution for aggravated assault. Boons v. State, 31 Tex. 557.

And so may testimony to prove that certain blood stains were not made by human blood. Landers v. State, 35 Tex. 365.

And the identity of money found upon the deceased may be material. White v. State, 36 Tex. 247.

In a capital prosecution the age of the defendant may be material. Sheffield v. State, 36 Tex. 378.

On charge of an assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been committed with a razor, defendant applied for a continuance for witness, by whom he expected to prove that he did not have any razor at the time he made the assault. Held, the continuance should have been granted. Porter v. State (Cr. App.) 52 S. W. 992.

A statement that an absent witness would testify that "a short time" after the assault she saw the prosecuting witness and discovered no signs of bruises, is too indefinite. Patton v. State, 63 App. 221, 126 S. W. 24.

An application for a continuance for absence of a witness, whose testimony would show that defendant the night before the murder left his pistol home, is properly refused, since, there being direct evidence that he fired the fatal shot, such evidence did not go to show that he did not have a pistol at the time of the killing. Robinson v. State, 58 App. 559, 126 S. W. 276.

The refusal of a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness who would testify only to matters occurring in a controversy between accused and a third person prior to the assault held not reversible error. Porter v. State, 60 App. 558, 123 S. W. 955.

It was no ground for a continuance that the assaulted party had other enemies in the community, where she testified that several persons were present with the defendant at the time of the assault. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 246.

The denial of a continuance because of an absent witness, who would testify to deceased's unfaithfulness to accused held not error. Stanton v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 696.

It was not grounds for a continuance in a murder case that an absent witness would testify that a third party, charged with the same offense, asked defendant's wife not to turn against him, and stated to her there was no case against him unless she did so. Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132.

The denial of a continuance and a new trial because of the absence of an eye witness was not reversible error, where such witness' testimony at the examining trial was introduced in evidence by accused, and did not tend to show self-defense, but was offered to prove the killing was done by one other than accused. Hall v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 953.

There on trial for murder, defendant applied for continuance for a witness who would corroborate defendant's testimony as to deceased's motions which led defendant to act in self-defense, held, the continuance should have been granted. Phillips v. State, 24 App. 31, 8 S. W. 267.

According to People v. State, 9 App. 468, 28 S. W. 507, continuance is entitled to a continuance to procure witness to testify that he acted in self-defense. Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 191.

Continuance should be granted to obtain the evidence of a witness who the appellant swears will testify that deceased made an assault upon defendant with a knife, although two of defendant's witnesses testified as to the homicide and did not say there was an assault. Pant v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 819.

An application for a continuance for a witness to prove threats against defendant is wholly indefinite and insufficient. Miller v. State, 32 App. 319, 20 S. W. 1103.

15. Rape.—Application for a witness, who would swear that he was in the "vicinity" of the spot where the alleged offense was committed and that he heard no outcry, held, properly overruled as too indefinite. Russell v. State, 32 App. 424, 26 S. W. 998.

Absent testimony in a rape case held to be of sufficient materiality to entitle accused to a continuance. Smith v. State, 64 App. 454, 142 S. W. 1175.

There was no abuse of discretion in denying a first application for a continuance in a rape case to procure witnesses to show that prosecutrix's reputation for chastity was not impaired by the alleged offense, where the physical facts and the evidence conclusively showed that prosecutrix did not consent. Sharp v. State, 71 App. 633, 160 S. W. 569.

16. Arson.—Defendant's application for continuance stated that his wife who was in bed sick, had, a short time before the fire, taken an invoice of the goods stored in the house and that she would testify that the stock amounted to twenty-five hundred dollars, and that he was insured only in the sum of one thousand dollars; held, the continuance should have been granted. Dawson v. State, 38 App. 9, 48 S. W. 721.

17. Burglary.—Application for continuance set up that defendant expected to prove by the absent witness that he had repaired a rifle gun for defendant a few days before the burglary was committed, but the testimony showed that the gun attempted to be used in the burglary was a shot-gun; held, the application was properly overruled. Pilot v. State, 38 App. 515, 48 S. W. 112, 1021.

Absent testimony in a burglary case, held material, and it was error to refuse the continuance. Elkins v. State, 57 App. 247, 12 S. W. 393.

Absent testimony in a burglary case held immaterial. Hart v. State, 61 App. 569, 134 S. W. 1175.

For absent testimony presenting no defense in a burglary case, see Spicer v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 548.

18. Robbery.—Evidence of absent witnesses that the prosecuting witnesses were engaged in a game of cards with defendant charged with robbery held material and relevant. Keys v. State, 60 App. 279, 121 S. W. 1068.

19. Theft.—Absent testimony in a prosecution for theft held to be of sufficient materiality to entitle accused to a continuance. Fresley v. State, 60 App. 102, 131 S. W. 332; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 928; La Full v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 854; Sillivas v. State, 71 App. 212, 159 S. W. 225.

The application stated that defendant expected to prove by the absent witness that he purchased the horse for a valuable consideration. Held, too indefinite. Emmerson v. State, 33 App. 89, 25 S. W. 289.

On trial for theft of a steer, where the defense was that the taking by defendant was under claim of right, and the application for continuance was for the testimony of witnesses, by defendant expected to prove that he owned and controlled animals in the brand found upon the stolen animal, and by one witness that he thought the animal belonged to defendant, and had notified him to come and get it. Walker v. State, 32 App. 175, 25 S. W. 685.

Application was properly refused where defendant prosecuted for a theft wanted a witness to prove that he (witness) had cattle on the same range, and when there was no showing that witnesses had a brand, and the brand found on the cattle in controversy was similar. Birmingham v. State, 35 App. 453, 27 S. W. 753.

20. Fraudulent disposition of mortgaged property.—Where defendant charged with selling mortgaged property, testified that he told the purchaser the property was mortgaged, a continuance should have been granted for a witness who heard the conversation between defendant and purchaser. Massey v. State (Cr. App.) 40 W. 726.

21. Seduction.—Application for a continuance of a trial for seduction on the ground of the absence of a witness who would testify that, at some time prior to the alleged offense, he had had intercourse with prosecutrix, was properly refused because of the failure to specify the time and place of the act. Hinman v. State, 39 App. 39, 137 S. W. 221.

Denial of a continuance. In a prosecution for seduction, because of the absence of two witnesses by whom defendant expected to prove that such "bad haggled and irregular" two years prior to the commission of the offense, was not an abuse of discretion. Bush v. State, 71 App. 14, 157 S. W. 944.

Continuance of a trial for seduction because of the absence of a witness alleged to have had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix before the offense, held improperly denied though the state introduced evidence that the witness would not so testify. Crecy v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 162.

An accused is not entitled to a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness whose testimony would only have been cumulative. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 536; Brittain v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 297; Francis v. State, 57 App. 556, 125 S. W. 1114; Polk v. State, 60 App. 466, 132 S. W. 134; White v. State, 69 App. 669, 132 S. W. 799; Florence v. State, 61 App. 326, 134 S. W. 650; Dozier v. State, 63 App. 155, 137 S. W. 673; O'Neal v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 928; Crawford v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 229; Dowd v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 301; Boswell v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 452; Oliver v. State, 78 App. 119, 159 S. W. 235; Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 896.

The refusal of an application for a continuance in a criminal case, on the ground of the absence of witnesses, was not erroneous, where some of the witnesses appeared at the trial and testified or could have testified to the facts sought to be proved by all of the absent witnesses. Luhue v. State, 51 App. 159, 101 S. W. 1098; Dobbs v. State, 54 App. 579, 113 S. W. 921.

Where the issue upon which the testimony is desired is insanity, it is no objection to its materiality that it is cumulative. Webb v. State, 5 App. 586. Nor where the testimony for the state conflicts with that for the defendant. Dozier v. State, 5 App. 220.

Accused is not entitled to a continuance to take the deposition of nonresident witnesses who testified in the former trial, when their testimony is admissible, and it is not alleged that he expects to prove additional facts by them. Ritch v. State, 63 App. 83, 135 S. W. 483.

23. Corroborating testimony.—Where defendant's witnesses were attacked and testimony of absent witnesses tended to corroborate them continuance should have been granted v. State, 40 App. 490, 55 S. W. 498.

A continuance should have been granted to secure the testimony of defendant's wife to prove that, just before the homicide, his daughter, as she testified, informed him of her misconduct of deceased toward her, and that his wife informed him, and that his mind was excited. Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 841.

Where accused testified practically alone as to self-defense, it was error to refuse a continuance to procure corroborative testimony. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 844.

But see Murphy v. State, 41 App. 120, 61 S. W. 941.

On trial for seduction, where the witness was for whom by the defense was to prove that they had had carnal intercourse with the defendant, and her own testimony tended to show her unchaste, a new trial should have been granted. Kelly v. State, 23 App. 31, 24 S. W. 295.

If the application was for a witness by whom defendants expected to prove the defense, and it appeared that the witness did not ask the state's witness about the statements, held, that he could not be heard to complain that his application was overruled. Jameson v. State, 32 App. 385, 21 S. W. 508.

The proposition, which was the same as that of the witness sought to be impeached, was not impeaching testimony so as to authorize a continuance in a criminal case to procure it for that purpose. Chancey v. State, 58 App. 54, 124 S. W. 426.

It was error to deny a first application for continuance for the absence of two witnesses for accused, duly subpoenaed, whose testimony, while impeaching in character, could have tended to corroborate defendant's version of the difficulty. Girl v. State, 62 App. 263, 137 S. W. 372.

A continuance should not be granted for the absence of a witness who would testify to acts of sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix in a rape case. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 342.

For statement of rule as to impeaching and cumulative testimony, see Loggins v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 170.

25. Alibi.—A continuance to procure an absent witness to prove an alibi was properly refused, where accused, when testifying, did not state that he was with such witness at the time of the offense. Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 169.

And where the absent witness could not have testified as to the whereabouts of the defendant as claimed. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 188. And where the defense could have required the place of the crime after he was seen by the witness in time to have committed it. Allen v. State, 62 App. 501, 137 S. W. 1153.

And where the application failed to show how far accused was from the place of the crime. Bussey v. State, 59 App. 260, 127 S. W. 1085. And where the evidence showed that the State, 61 App. 599, 134 S. W. 515, v. State, 61 App. 599, 134 S. W. 515.

It is error to refuse continuance to obtain evidence to alibi where diligence is used and it is not shown that the evidence could not be procured. Murphy v. State, 41 App. 126, 51 S. W. 941; Gilder v. State, 61 App. 16, 135 S. W. 852; Davis v. State, 44 App. 527, 141 S. W. 294; McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1190.

And alibi can be relied upon to dispose or surround with doubt not only the main but any incriminating fact relied upon for conviction. Taylor v. State, 27 App. 44, 11 S. W. 35; Gaylor v. State, 28 App. 248, 12 S. W. 1087.

27. Admissions to prevent continuance.—An admission that a witness, on account of whose absence a continuance is asked, would swear, if present, as stated in the application, will not defeat the application; it could only have that effect when the facts stated in the application are admitted to be true. Shako v. State, 42 Tex. 88; DeWarren v. State, 29 Tex. 464; Hyde v. State, 21 Tex. 16, 14 Tex. Dec. 380; Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 489; Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 614; Burford v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 588.

After such an admission the state cannot controvert the facts which would have been testified to. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 614; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

As to admissions to defeat continuance, see Graves v. State, 9 App. 559; Harvey v. State, 54 S. W. 62; Phillips v. State, 46 S. W. 733.

The rule that an admission that an absent witness would testify to the facts stated in the application will not defeat a continuance, applies only when the defendant is legally entitled to a continuance. Hackett v. State, 13 App. 406; Gregg v. State, 23 App. 390, 29 S. W. 740.

It is no answer to an application for a continuance that the defendant declined to go to the court and jury to the place where his witness was sick, which place was outside of the courthouse, and there hear the testimony of such witness. Adams v. State, 19 App. L. 318.
When defendant's application for continuance is admitted by the state to be true, it is admissible as evidence to the jury, and the jury may consider it in determining whether the application was made in good faith. Gardner v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 1115.

The state cannot introduce the testimony of the absent witness taken on a former trial without first admitting the truth of the facts stated in the application for continuance. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 93 S. W. 1174.

The refusal to grant a continuance for the absence of a witness who would testify to things already admitted by the state was not error. Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132.

Where the state, to avoid a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses for accused, admitted the truth of every fact set forth in the application for a continuance, and the court charged the jury to take such facts as true and that the accused could not object thereto, accused could not complain. Truett v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 523.

It was not error to deny a continuance, where defendant's counsel was permitted to return to the jury as to what he claimed an absent witness would testify, and the prosecuting attorney admitted its truth, and defendant's attorney then expressed himself as satisfied. Sutton v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 791.

Where, on a trial for homicide, the testimony of one of the two physicians who examined deceased's body was not materially different from that which the other physician would have given had he been present, and the state offered to admit that the absent physician would testify as claimed and that such testimony was true, the denial of a continuance was not error. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 360.

28. Cause of absence of witness.—All applications for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness, must state that the witness is not absent by the defendant's procurement or with his consent. Pullen v. State, 11 App. 89; Cockler v. S., 66; White v. State, 5 App. 41; Bowers v. State (Cr. App.) 1 S. W. 254; Gaines v. State, 63 App. 73, 128 S. W. 357; Perry v. State, 62 App. 627, 141 S. W. 209; Sandoloski v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 151; Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 163; Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132. And see Gaines v. State, 150 S. W. 163; Sawyer v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 7.

On motion for new trial because of refusal of continuance for absent witnesses, it is proper for the state to show that they were either fictitious persons, or absent by the procurement and consent of defendant. Sargent v. State, 35 App. 325, 33 S. W. 364.

Where it was suggested before the court in a murder trial that an absent witness had been kept away by deceased's friends, and a witness was sent for to prove this but he was brought to the court until after overruled into court for continuance, the matter should have been thoroughly sifted by the court. Logan v. State, 39 App. 573, 47 S. W. 615.

An application for a continuance must state the residence of the witness, and when the defendant said that a witness is temporarily absent, it should state how long he had been absent, and when he left the county of his residence. Stacy v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 114.

Where the probability of securing the attendance of the witness is remote, a continuance is properly denied. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

It is not error to refuse a continuance sought because of the absence of defendant's fugitive partner in the crime. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1859.

30. Probability of securing attendance of witness.—See notes to art. 609, subd. 9, post.

If the improbability of ever securing the witness appears the continuance should be refused. Sinclair v. State, 34 App. 453, 30 S. W. 1070.

A continuance will not be granted to procure the testimony of a fugitive from justice, whose whereabouts is unknown. Dickard v. State, 58 App. 144, 124 S. W. 673.

The denial of application for a continuance is not for reversal where there is no showing that the attendance of an alleged absent witness could be secured at another trial. Roquemore v. State, 59 App. 585, 129 S. W. 1129.

Where the probability of securing the attendance of the witness is remote, a continuance is properly denied. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

It is not error to refuse a continuance sought because of the absence of defendant's fugitive partner in the crime. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1859.

33. Denial of continuance as ground for new trial—In general.—Where testimony of a defendant is absent from any cause he should make application for a postponement or continuance of the trial, and make the refusal of such application

33. Denial of continuance as ground for new trial—In general.—Where testimony of a defendant is absent from any cause he should make application for a postponement or continuance of the trial, and make the refusal of such application

33. Denial of continuance as ground for new trial—In general.—Where testimony of a defendant is absent from any cause he should make application for a postponement or continuance of the trial, and make the refusal of such application

When the trial court is called upon to reconsider, upon a motion for a new trial, a continuance, the truth, materiality, and sufficiency of the application for continuance be both admitted and probably true, it will not, if immaterial, require the award of a new trial because of the refusal of the continuance. Peace v. State, 27 App. 33, 10 S. W. 761.

A continuance is properly refused where it is improbable that the absent witness would testify as claimed or that their testimony would not probably be true. Bost v. State, 64 App. 464, 144 S. W. 589; Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 587; State v. App. 130, 128 S. W. 128; Gillet v. State, 128 App. 713, 128 S. W. 317; Ragland v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1137; Brown v. State, 72 App. 33, 160 S. W. 374; Dugat v. State, 72 App. 39, 160 S. W. 376; Conatser v. State (Cr. App.) 137 S. W. 314.

Even if the absent witness' testimony were set out in an application for continuance be both admitted and probably true, it will not, if immaterial, require the award of a new trial because of the refusal of the continuance. Peace v. State, 27 App. 33, 10 S. W. 761.

Denial of a continuance was not erroneous, where, after the trial and before the ruling on the motion for new trial, the witness appeared and made affidavit denying that he would testify favorably to accused. Hinman v. State, 59 App. 23, 127 S. W. 221; Wilkins v. State, 35 App. 625, 34 S. W. 627; Singleton v. State, 57 App. 560, 124 S. W. 82.

Where the facts in the record positively contradict the proposed testimony, the overruling of the application was not error. Waul v. State, 33 App. 278, 26 S. W. 192.

If the facts set out in the application for a continuance do not appear to be relevant and material and probably true, when considered in connection with the evidence adduced on the trial, the action of the trial court in refusing a new trial, will not be reviewed on appeal. Rice v. State, 22 App. 664, 11 S. W. 721.

The trial court has discretion in granting a continuance, which discretion will not be controlled on appeal by the mere fact that the affiant or affiants have been granted a continuance in a prior case. Wood v. State, 21 App. 178, 17 S. W. 168; Doss v. State, 21 App. 505, 2 S. W. 814, 57 Am. Rep. 618; Cunningham v. State, 20 App. 162; Weaver v. State, 19 App. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 339; Blumna v. State, 33 App. 45, 21 S. W. 1057, 26 S. W. 75. If the continuance was improperly refused by the trial court, on motion for a new trial, if the evidence adduced at the trial denotes that the absent testimony was material and probably true, the trial court should grant a new trial, and the action of the trial court in this matter will be revised on appeal if it appears that the defendant may have sustained injury in consequence of the continuance, and if it be reasonably probable that the absent testimony would induce a verdict more favorable to him. Covey v. State, 23 App. 338, 8 S. W. 283; Schultz v. State, 29 App. 315; Tyler v. State, 13 App. 265.

When defendant moved for a continuance on account of absent witnesses, by whom he expected to prove that they had had carnal intercourse with prosecutrix, and the evidence tended to show that she was unchaste, a new trial should have been granted. Kelly v. State, 23 App. 31, 24 S. W. 295.

The rule which should govern the trial court in passing, first, upon an application for continuance, and subsequently upon a motion for a new trial is, if there is such a conflict between the culpatory facts and those set forth in the application as to render it improbable that the facts stated in the application are material and probably true, the continuance should be refused, and also a new trial based upon such refusal should be denied. There must, however, not only be such a conflict, but the inculpatory facts should be so strong and convincing as to render the truth of the facts set forth in the application improbable. McAdams v. State, 24 App. 86, 5 S. W. 826; Hollis v. State, 9 App. 613.

The ruling of the trial court refusing a continuance will not be revised, unless in addition to its other requisites the application shows the relevancy and materiality of the absent testimony. Brooks v. State, 24 App. 274, 5 S. W. 552; Hensley v. State, 23 App. 340, 5 S. W. 215.

The appellate court will not reverse the action of the trial court in refusing a new trial because of its previous refusal of a continuance, unless it be made to appear that the accused might probably have been prejudiced by the denial, but that it is reasonably probable that had the absent testimony been before the jury, a verdict more favorable to the defendant would have resulted. See the opinion for the substance of absent testimony set forth in the application for continuance and held as to one witness to be immaterial, and as to the other not probably true; wherefore the trial court did not err in refusing a new trial. Browning v. State, 26 App. 432, 9 S. W. 770.

When defendant moved for a continuance for witnesses to prove communicated threats, and the evidence presented two theories, one of premeditated murder and one of self-defense, a new trial should have been granted. Gilcrease v. State, 33 App. 619, 28 S. W. 561.

When it is apparent to the Court of Appeals that the facts set out in defendant's application for continuance are not probably true, and that the witness mentioned therein is a fictitious person, the alleged error of the lower court in overruling such application will not be considered. Benson v. State, 33 App. 457, 45 S. W. 537.

Although the trial judge holds in ruling on motion for new trial after conviction, that the evidence of the absent witness is not probably true, yet if the appellate court in reviewing the evidence is of the opinion that the evidence is probably true, the case will be reversed. Perez v. State, 48 App. 225, 87 S. W. 351.

On the hearing the affidavit or statement of the absent witness as to the truth of the allegations in the application for a continuance respecting the testimony he would give may be considered. Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 141 S. W. 264.

Application for a new trial on the ground that a continuance was improperly refused should have been granted, where it was supported by the affidavit of the absent witnesses that they would testify to accused's whereabouts when the crime was committed, making it impossible, if their testimony were true, that he could have committed it. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 1196.
One charged with receiving deposits while insolvent, held entitled to have absent himself from the court, with the consent of the defendant. Callahan v. State, 30 Tex. 488.

The court may, but only for good reason, set aside a continuance without consent of defendant. Brown v. State, 3 App. 294. And see Callahan v. State, 30 Tex. 488.

An order of continuance may be set aside by the court granting it, but this power should be exercised only in rare and exceptional cases. Brown v. State, 3 App. 295. See, also, Hamilton v. State, 40 App. 464, 51 S. W. 217.

Where an order granting a continuance was set aside, and another application made for another witness, the latter application should be considered a first one. Brown v. State, 3 App. 295.

323
Art. 609 * [598] Subsequent application by defendant.—Subsequent applications for continuation on the part of the defendant shall, in addition to the requisites in the preceding article, state also—

1. That the testimony cannot be procured from any other source known to the defendant.

A first application need not aver that the desired testimony cannot be procured from any other source. Pinckard v. State, 13 App. 655; Parker v. State, 18 App. 73.

A second application on account of absence of a witness must show that the facts cannot be proved by any other witness. Land v. State, 34 App. 339, 30 S. W. 578, see Goode v. State, 58 App. 409, 126 S. W. 267.

Cumulative testimony.—See notes to art. 608, subd. 3, ante.

2. That the defendant has reasonable expectation of procuring the same at the next term of the court. [O. C. 516].

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 829.

Where a continuance has been entered by consent, another application thereupon is a second or subsequent application, and shall conform to the requirements of second applications. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 128 S. W. 597; McKinney v. State, 59 App. 134, 139 S. W. 822.

General requirements.—Nothing is to be presumed in aid of a subsequent application. It must show that the applicant has been guilty of no laches or neglect. Henderson v. State, 5 App. 134; Peck v. State, 6 App. 347; Fulkerson v. State, 5 App. 134; Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 128 S. W. 597; Deckard v. State, 58 App. 34, 124 S. W. 673. A second application must conform strictly to the statute; nothing being presumed in its favor. Henderson v. State, 5 App. 134; Barrett v. State, 9 App. 33. As to strictness necessary in a subsequent application, see Barrett v. State, 9 App. 33.

An application made after a postponement for some days, holds a second application. Griffith v. State, 62 App. 441, 138 S. W. 1016.

An application for a continuance reciting that it is defendant's first application for continuance "for want of the testimony of absent witnesses," shows that he had applied for a continuance on other grounds. Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 506.

It cannot avail defendant as diligence, as regards his right to a second continuance for absence of a witness, that a person was served with process issued by the state for such witness, if he was not such witness. And that defendant caused a subpoena to issue is not a showing of diligence. Swilley v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 734.

Showing as to diligence held sufficient. Preston v. State, 4 App. 186.

When the defendant had the opportunity of having the absent witness put under recognizance, and failed to do, sufficient diligence is not shown on a sub-

324

The rule as to diligence is much more strict on a third application than it is on a first application. Beaver v. State, 63 App. 581, 142 S. W. 11.

Discretion of court.—See notes to art. 606, subd. 6, ante.

Denial of continuance as ground for new trial.—See notes to art. 606, subd. 6, ante.

Art. 610. [599] Defendant shall swear to his application.—All applications for continuance on the part of the defendant must be sworn to by himself. [O. C. 521.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 828.

Application.—It should show whether it is the first or a subsequent application. Washington v. State, 55 App. 156, 32 S. W. 694. And see Chancey v. State, 58 App. 54, 124 S. W. 426; Rodgers v. State, 36 App. 542, 38 S. W. 184; McCulloch v. State, 35 App. 208, 33 S. W. 239; Halliburton v. State, 34 App. 419, 31 S. W. 297; Sims v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 765.

It must be complete within itself, no presumptions being entertained to support it. Massie v. State, 39 App. 64, 16 S. W. 770; Thomas v. State, 17 App. 437, and cases cited; Cantu v. State, 1 App. 403.

As to Jurat, see Morris v. State, 2 App. 502; Dishough v. State, 4 App. 158.

The application must state all the requisites of the statute, and must be sworn to. Anderson v. State, 8 App. 542.

An application which recites that accused is “informed” that the absent witness is suffering from an injury rendering him physically unable to attend court, not supported by the affidavit of the witness or a certificate of any physician, is properly denied. Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 455.

If based on information and belief, it should state and verify the source of information. Byars v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1132.

The allegations of a motion for continuance that defendant had just learned that the individual to the same offense, had turned state’s evidence, and that J. had, under another name, unknown to defendant, been convicted of a felony, in a county also unknown to defendant, and had never had his citizenship restored, are too vague and indefinite. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 596.

Amendment of application.—The policy of the law is against permitting the amendment of affidavits. Sydnor v. Chambers, Dalhim, 601.

A defendant made application for a continuance which was refused, because it did not show proper diligence. After a jury was impaneled to try the cause, defendant advised the court he had been employed after the continuance had been refused, discovered that diligence had in fact been used, and he thereupon made another application for continuance. It was held that to have granted the second application would have been a proper exercise of judicial discretion. Skaro v. State, 43 Tex. 88.

When an amendment is allowed, the defendant must swear to the amended statement. Patillo v. State, 3 App. 442.

It is discretionary with the trial judge to permit an application for a continuance or postponement to be amended. McKinney v. State, 8 App. 638.

Art. 611. [600] Written motion not necessary.—It shall not be necessary to file any written motion for continuance; the motion, based upon the written statement, may be made orally. [O. C. 522.]

Art. 612. [601] Statements in application may be denied under oath, etc.—Any material fact stated, affecting diligence, in an application for a continuance may be denied by the adverse party. The denial shall be in writing, supported by the oath of some credible person, and filed as soon as practicable after the filing of the application for a continuance.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 831, 832, 837.

Denial.—See notes to art. 613, post.

Art. 613. [602] Proceedings when denial is filed.—When a denial is filed, as provided in the preceding article, the issue shall be tried by the judge; and he shall hear testimony by affidavits, and grant or refuse continuance, according to the law and facts of the case.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 821, 833.

Denial of grounds of application, and trial of issue.—It is only upon such controverted allegations as affect the question of diligence, or that the testimony cannot be obtained, that evidence will be heard. Howard v. State, 8 App. 53; Rucker v. State, 2 App. 66; Murry v. State, 1 App. 174; Dixon v. State, 2 App. 538.

A failure to controvert the application does not preclude the state from controverting it as to diligence on a motion made by the defendant for a new trial. Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Richardson v. State, 28 App.
Art. 614. [603] No argument heard, unless, etc.—No argument shall be heard on an application for a continuance, unless requested by the judge; and, when argument is heard, the applicant shall have the right to open and conclude the same.

Art. 615. [604] Defendant in capital case entitled to bail, when, etc.—If a defendant in a capital case demand a trial, and it appears that more than one continuance has been granted to the state, and that the defendant has not before applied for a continuance, he shall be entitled to be admitted to bail, and unless it be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that a material witness of the state had been prevented from attendance by the procurement of the defendant or some person acting in his behalf. [O. C. 524.]

Art. 616. [605] Continuance after trial commenced, when.—A continuance may be granted on the application of the state or defendant after the trial has commenced, when it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that by some unexpected occurrence since the trial commenced, which no reasonable diligence could have anticipated, the applicant is so taken by surprise that a fair trial can not be had, or the trial may be postponed to a subsequent day of the term. [O. C. 526.] have a fair trial. Stanley v. State, 16 App. 392; Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 906.

The denial of a postponement to procure testimony to impeach state’s witnesses held not error, no diligence being shown. Mancha v. State, 57 App. 222, 133 S. W. 128; Miller v. State, 75 App. 151, 161 S. W. 128.

The preceding article seems to have been the law before the adoption of the Codes. Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260.

Defendant was charged with rape and was preparing an application for change of venue, the one day’s service of a copy of the special venire not having expired. The state dismissed the charge of rape, and immediately the defendant was put upon his trial for assault with intent to rape, a motion to postpone to allow him time to complete his motion for a change of venue having been overruled. Held that a postponement should have been granted. Blackburn v. State, 43 Tex. 522.

If deception be practiced upon the defendant in relation to the attendance of a state’s witness, it may constitute surprise. March v. State, 41 Tex. 64.

The unexpected attendance of a state’s witness, no deception having been used upon defendant, does not constitute surprise. Townsend v. State, 5 App. 574.

Where the defendant was taken by surprise by material testimony of a new witness who was not produced by the prosecution in the trial to which his testimony related, and the investigations of the case previously had, it was held that this was good cause for a postponement of the cause to enable the defendant to obtain the testimony of a witness for whom he had sued out process, by which he expected to show the falsity of the new witness. A recent decision in a similar case, in which two in the progress of a trial involving the life of a defendant, or his liberty for life, is trivial when taken in comparison with the grave issues at stake, Dispatch is to be commended in judicial proceedings, but never at the sacrifice of an impartial trial, by which the defense and the prosecution alike are afforded all reasonable means and opportunity for adding all evidence on their respective sides which may tend to illustrate the very truth of the issue before the court. Hodde v. State, 8 App. 382.

That mere fact that an application for continuance has been overruled does not prevent another application during the progress of the trial, on account of surprise. McKinney v. State, 8 App. 626.

The unauthorized departure of a material witness in the course of the trial and before his examination is such surprise as will be good cause for a continuance or postponement. Eldredge v. State, 12 App. 208; Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260; Hodde v. State, 8 App. 382.

A delay of continuance on ground of surprise, because a witness testified to material facts which he did not testify to on the examining trial and because of illness of subpoenaed witness, see Evans v. State, 13 App. 225; Shulze v. State, 28 App. 316, 12 S. W. 1084.

Where the defendant was surprised by the failure of his witness to produce an account-book which he had been summoned to bring with him, it was held that a postponement should have been granted. Lutton v. State, 14 App. 518.

The fact that a witness testifies to something different from what defendant supposed, is not ground of surprise. White v. State, 34 App. 282.

An application to continue or postpone on account of surprise is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, but if the court improperly refuses it, and the trial develops that because of such refusal the defendant has suffered, a new trial should be granted. Roach v. State, 21 App. 494, 17 S. W. 494; Eldredge v. State, 12 App. 208; Childs v. State, 10 App. 183; McDow v. State, id. 98; Hodde v. State, 8 App. 383.

A witness who is misled or surprised by the state’s testimony should ask for a postponement or continuance. Robbins v. State, 23 App. 574, 28 S. W. 472; Garner v. State, 34 App. 355, 30 S. W. 782.

The principal State’s witness was charged by separate indictment, as a principal in the robbery charged against defendant, but on the stand denied having anything to do with the robbery. Defendant was entitled to prove by other witnesses that said witness was a principal or an accomplice, and having moved for a continuance, to obtain such testimony, which motion was overruled, the court erred in not granting the motion. Landon v. State, 34 App. 229, 30 S. W. 222.

A continuance asked on the fifth day of the trial for the testimony of one who had already been convicted on the same charge was properly denied. Magruder v. State, 35 App. 241, 33 S. W. 222.

The cross-examination of a state’s witness showing he was a convict, accused, to avail the discovery as newly discovered evidence, should have filed motion for continuance to secure record of conviction, etc. Batson v. State, 36 App. 606, 33 S. W. 329 in Court of Criminals weiß. White v. State, 33 App. 277, 26 S. W. 74.

The granting of an oral motion to suppress depositions, held ground for continuance. Blake v. State, 33 App. 375, 34 S. W. 167.

The state’s witness having testified to buying whisky from accused in the presence of the accused, was entitled to a continuance to procure a witness to contradict the state’s witness. Rankin v. State, 57 App. 122, 125 S. W. 25.

Where defendant knew that a witness had testified and would testify that defendant had sold to the witness intoxicating liquor, and this was known to state’s counsel, the continuance on the ground of surprise of such testimony, though there had been a misstatement in which the witness had not been introduced by the state, and though he had not been subpoenaed as a witness in the present case. Sweeney v. State, 59 App. 369, 18 S. W. 339.
The county attorney is under no obligation to disclose the state of his evidence, nor is the defendant entitled to rely thereon. Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 298.

Where the state introduced evidence of and relied on acts prior in time to those alleged, accused, who proceeded with the trial without objection, cannot urge on appeal that he was surprised, in the absence of any request to be allowed to withdraw his announcement of ready and to move to continue. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

Where the state, before defendant announced ready for trial, gave him the names of the witnesses used at the trial, his request for a postponement to prepare his defense because the state's attorney had not indorsed the names of all the witnesses on the indictment was properly denied. Polk v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 967.

Refusal of a postponement, on the ground of surprise that evidence of acts before a certain date was admitted, held not an abuse of discretion. Shanklin v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1063.

Where the absent testimony could have been used only to contradict testimony, and it appeared that there was no conflict between the testimony and what the absent witness would have testified, the court did not err in refusing a postponement. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 266, 162 S. W. 364.

Refusal to postpone case to give defendant's counsel time to consult witnesses from Saturday noon until Monday morning because of the expense of the witnesses in attendance, held not erroneous, where the court granted each request for time to confer with witnesses. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 115.

Accused held not entitled to withdraw his announcement of ready for trial and to a continuance because a juror objected to the cross-examination of the state's witness. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 109 S. W. 411.

Physical condition of accused or witness.—See notes to art. 665, ante.

If a defendant, after the commencement of the trial, is taken too ill to remain in court, the cause should be postponed, see Tex. Cr. 182. When during the trial a material witness becomes so intoxicated as to render him incapable of testifying, it is good ground for a postponement of the cause. McCurry v. State, 10 App. 95.

The critical, immediate illness of a material witness entitles defendant to a continuance, and he can not be compelled to go with the court and jury to the house of the sick witness to take his testimony. Adams v. State, 19 App. L. 141.

The granting of a continuance because the witness is drunk is in the discretion of the court. Branch v. State, 35 App. 304, 33 S. W. 356.

The granting of a continuance because the witness is drunk is in the discretion of the court. Branch v. State, 35 App. 304, 33 S. W. 356.

If drunk when his case is called a continuance should be sought at the time. Inglis v. State, 36 App. 472, 37 S. W. 861.

Discharge of jury.—It is not contemplated by the preceding article that, in case of a postponement of the trial, after the jury has been impaneled, the court has the right to discharge the jury; nor would the court have such right even in the case of a continuance for the term, except upon a clear showing of necessity. Phaino v. State, 20 App. 139, 54 Am. Rep. 511.

Re-examination of witness.—See a case in which it was held that error was not committed in refusing to delay a case to procure a witness whom the defendant desired to recall for the purpose of having him repeat his statement. Moore v. State, 7 App. 14.

Postponement on account of absence of jurors.—See notes to art. 656, post.

9. Disqualification of the Judge

Art. 617. [606] Causes which disqualify judges, etc.—No judge or justice of the peace shall sit in any case where he may be the party injured, or where he has been of counsel for the state or the accused, or where the accused or the party injured may be connected with him by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree. [Const., art. 5, § 11; Act June 10, 1876, p. 19, § 6; Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 164, § 24.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 757, 758, 853, 854, 856.

For decisions in civil cases, see Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1516, 1584, 1675, 1726, 2290.

Explanatory.—The present constitution reads as follows: “No judge shall sit in any case in which he may be the party injured, or where he has been of counsel for the state or the accused, or where the party injured may be connected with him by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree as may be prescribed by law, or when he shall have been counsel in the case.” (Const. art. 5, § 11 (Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. xxiii.).]

In general.—A justice cannot try a case in which he is the party injured. Ex parte Ambrose, 32 App. 488, 24 S. W. 291.

Prejudice not based on the property interest is not a legal disqualification. Johnson v. State, 31 App. 456, 26 S. W. 985.

A remark of the trial judge held not to disqualify him. Bismarck v. State, 45 App. 54, 73 S. W. 986.

328
R. and S. were jointly indicted for murder. S. was not arrested. The judge was disqualified because he was a brother to R. and had a legal interest in the case. He excused himself from trying R., and the governor appointed a special judge to try him. R. pleaded to the jurisdiction of the special judge to try him. Held, that the plea should have been sustained—that the judge was disqualified to try R., and that the special judge to S., who had not been tried, would have been disqualified. Reed v. State, 11 App. 587.

A judge is disqualified to try a case whose brother was the brother of the defendant's grandmother. Gresham v. State, 43 App. 466, 66 S. W. 845.

Interest.—The interest which disqualifies a judge does not signify every bias, prejudice, or partiality which he may entertain with reference to the case, and which may be included in the broadest sense of the word “interest,” as contradistinct to the term in its legal sense of pecuniary interest. Justice is often required to give his advice to parties, and when an officer assumes to give the advice to parties he charges no fee for giving the advice. McElderry v. Ryan, 44 Tex. 435. Where the judge was disqualified to act as counsel for the defendant, but was disqualified from acting as a witness, he was not disqualified to act as the defendant's counsel in a conjoint proceeding. Bankhead v. State, 55 Tex. 567.

Counsel.—The disqualification exists, if the judge has, before becoming such judge, been consulted, and has given his advice in regard to the case, although the advice was not acted on. Court v. Bankhead, 44 Tex. 438. Where the judge was disqualified to act as counsel for the defendant, he was disqualified from making the prosecution in another case. Fulton v. State, 53 App. 821, 11 S. W. 415. Where the judge was disqualified because he has been counsel in the same cause. Nelson v. State, 19 App. 236, 51 S. W. 737.

Nor is a county judge disqualified by reason of fees allowed him by law in criminal cases. Bennett v. State, 4 App. 72. Nor is a county judge disqualified from sitting in the trial of a case where the defendant is charged with being a defaulter road-hand. Ex parte Call, 2 App. 497.

The fact that the title to a schoolhouse was vested in the county judge in his official capacity, for the use of the county, does not disqualify him from presiding over a trial for defacing the said schoolhouse. Clark v. State, 29 App. 160, 5 S. W. 115.

Consent.—Consent of parties cannot remove a judge's incapacity to sit. See also, Thompson v. State, 9 App. 649; Bateman v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 290.

Consent of parties.—Consent of parties cannot remove a judge's incapacity to sit. See also, Thompson v. State, 9 App. 649; Bateman v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 290.

Disqualification does not prevent him from receiving an indictment from the grand jury, or from making incidental orders, such as an order changing the venue, or making an order appointing a special judge. Code v. State, 3 App. 659. The judgment of a court appointing a receiver for a corporation is not void because the judge is related to some of the stockholders in the corporation. Ex parte Tinsley, 37 App. 517, 40 S. W. 306, 66 Am. St. Rep. 815. The member of the bar selected by the attorneys in a civil case was hearing that cause does not deprive the regular district judge, who was disqualified to sit in the civil case, from proceeding in a criminal trial. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 536.

An issue, as to the disqualification of a judge, should be tried and determined by him. His evidence should be given under oath, and the facts in evidence on

Upon the suggestion of the disqualification of the judge in that he has been of counsel against defendant, it is not proper for the court to pass upon such matter without allowing defendant to introduce evidence in the matter, although the facts are within the court's personal knowledge. Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091.

A verified plea in limine alleging that a judge of a different district is threatening to try the case, though the regular judge is not disqualified, and though the judge from the other district has not been appointed by the Governor to hold court, and though the lawyers practicing at the bar have not elected him to hold court, and though accused has not agreed to try the case before him, does not prove itself; but there must be evidence to sustain it, especially where the record contradicts the plea. Hart v. State, 61 App. 509, 134 S. W. 1178.

Plea alleging that a special judge is disqualified to try a case held required to be proved by evidence. Hart v. State, 61 App. 569, 134 S. W. 1178.

Art. 618. [607] Proceedings when judge of district court is disqualified.—Whenever any case or cases, civil or criminal, are pending in which the district judge is disqualified from trying the same, no change of venue shall be made necessary thereby; but the judge presiding shall immediately certify that fact to the Governor, whereupon the Governor shall designate some district judge in an adjoining district to exchange and try such case or cases, and the Governor shall notify both of said judges of such order; and it shall be the duty of said judges to exchange districts for the purpose of disposing of such case or cases, and, in case of sickness or other reasons rendering it impossible to exchange, then the parties or their counselors shall have the right to select or agree upon an attorney of the court for the trial thereof; and, in the event the district judges shall be prevented from exchanging districts and the parties and their counselors shall fail to select or agree upon an attorney of the court for the trial thereof, which fact shall be certified to the Governor by the district judge or the special judge, whereupon the Governor shall appoint a person legally qualified to act as judge in the trial of the case. [Act Aug. 15, 1876, p. 141; Act 1879, p. 1; Act 1897, S. S., p. 39, ch. 12; Act 1915, p. 80, ch. 45, amending art. 1676, Rev. St. 1911.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 853, 853.

Explanatory.—Arts. 618 and 619, revised C. C. P., 1911, appeared as arts. 570 and 571 of the Code of 1879 and as arts. 607 and 608 of the Code of 1895, and in each case are ascribed to Act Aug. 15, 1876, p. 141. The act of 1876 was amended by Act 1878, p. 1 (see note to art. 1092, Rev. Civ. St. 1879). The amendatory act was then carried into Rev. Civ. St. 1895, as arts. 1669 and 1670, and provision was left in the criminal statutes as above stated. In 1897 (Act 1897, S. S. p. 39, ch. 12) arts. 1669 and 1670, Rev. Civ. St. 1895, were amended, and such amendment was carried into Rev. Civ. St. 1911, as arts. 1676 and 1677, but the old provision of 1876 was still carried in the revised C. C. P. of 1911. The legislation in 1915, amended art. 1676, Rev. Civ. St. 1911, so as to make it read as above. In view of the fact that the various amendatory acts referred to clearly supersede these obsolete provisions of the C. C. P., the old provisions (arts. 618 and 619) are eliminated, and the new provision inserted as art. 618.

Validity and construction in general.—This article does not transcend the constitutional provision in providing that such agreement may be made by the Attorneys of the parties and the attorney representing the State may make such agreement with the defendant or his attorney. Davis v. State, 44 Tex. 313; Early v. State, 9 App. 476, overruling Murray v. State, 34 Tex. 331.

This and article 1677, Rev. Civ. St. 1911 (same article in Vernon's Sayles') as amended by the twenty-fifth legislature in no wise conflict with article 1678, Rev. St. 1911 (same article in Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914). Greer v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1077.

This article does not conflict with article 5, section 11, of the constitution and must be complied with when the district judge is disqualified by reason of being a party to a suit pending in his court. Kruegel v. Nash (Civ. App.) 72 S. W. 601, 692; Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370; Alley v. Mayfield (Civ. App.) 131 S. W. 295.

That a suit filed in the district court of the one district was tried there by the judge of another district held of no consequence. Rabb v. Texas Loan & Investment Co. (Civ. App.) 86 S. W. 77.

If the provision of this article that "in case of sickness or other reasons rendering it impossible to exchange, then the parties or their counsel shall have the right to select or agree on an attorney of the court for the trial thereof," should be held invalid as violating Const. art. 5, § 11, guaranteeing to litigants the right to appear on the disqualification of the resident judge, its invalidity would not invalidate the balance of the section in so far as it provided for an exchange of judges under such circumstances. Onies v. State, 55 App. 671, 121 S. W. 376.

Under this article, articles 3459 and 5728, Rev. St. 1911 (same articles in Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914) and Const. art. 5, § 11, which declares that district judges may hold courts for each other when expedient, a district judge of a district notembracing the county in which the contested election was held, sitting in each district, could try the case, jurisdiction being conferred on the district court and not its judge. Savage v. Lumphres (Civ. App.) 121 S. W. 297.

Where the mode of selecting a special judge is prescribed by law, and the causes for such selection are indicated, other modes and other causes are thereby excluded. Summerlin v. State (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 890.

Under the mandatory provisions of the constitution and the statutes, the selection of a special judge by agreement was authorized only when the regular judge was disqualified, and where there was no such disqualification his selection and his judgment was a nullity. Summerlin v. State (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 890.

Disqualification of special judge.—See notes under art. 617, ante.

Exchange of judge.—Under Const. art. 5, § 11, providing that district judges may exchange or hold court for each other when they deem it expedient, and shall do so when required by law, the judge of another district may sit at the request of the regular judge, though the latter is not disqualified or at the time holding court for the former or another judge. Johnson v. State, 61 App. 101, 134 S. W. 225.

In Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1715, providing that a district judge may hold court for any other district judge, the regular presiding judge of a district may vacate the bench, and the judge of another district may hold court for him. Hart v. State, 61 App. 569, 134 S. W. 1178.

under this article, the local bar, under article 2, Revised Civ. St. 1911, providing that whenever the judge of the court shall be absent or unable or unwilling to hold court the practicing lawyers of such court may elect a special judge, may select a special judge where the Governor fails to designate a regular judge, and in the case in which the regular district judge was disqualified. Webb v. Reynolds (Civ. App.) 160 S. W. 152.

This article does not render it erroneous for a district judge who was disqualified to call in on his initiative a judge of an adjoining district to try the case, and article 1715 of the Revised Civil Statutes containing a similar provision. Connolley v. Blanton (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 101.

See, also, Wyers v. State, 21 App. 448, 2 S. W. 116; Gilliland v. State, 44 Tex. 256.

Transfer of cause.—The statute does not make the disqualification of a judge ground for transferring a cause pending in his court to another. Johnson v. Johnson (Civ. App.) 89 S. W. 1102.

Certification of disqualification.—There being no law authorizing an appeal from a refusal of a district judge to certify to the governor his disqualification, the appellate court had no jurisdiction to review his ruling, and had no power to enjoin, by writ of mandamus or otherwise, the performance of such duty. Grigsby v. Bowies, 79 Tex. 138, 15 S. W. 30.

Party trying the case before special judge without objection held estopped to assert that he was not agreed on. Davis v. Bingham (Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 840.

The party, disqualifying the judge and the judge to whom the case was assigned, for the latter to try the case, it was not necessary for the case to be certified to the Governor, nor for him to designate a judge to try the case. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 583.

— On second trial.—Where a judge is disqualified a special judge can be selected to try the case. When a case has been tried before a special judge, and is reversed on appeal and the special judge has moved out of the county and refuses to return and try the case, the regular judge can certify his disqualification to the governor, and he can order the regular judge and the judge of an adjoining district to exchange districts, and the latter can try the case. Sovereign Camp W. of V. v. Boehme, 44 Civ. App. 159, 97 S. W. 48.

Selection by agreement.—In a suit by publication, the judge being disqualified, the plaintiff selected a special judge, who proceeded to render judgment by default. The selection by the plaintiff not being an appointment by the parties, there was no jurisdiction, and the judgment rendered in the cause was void. Mitchell v. Adams, 1 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 117.

The State is not bound by an oral agreement with defendant or his attorney for a special judge. Thompson v. State, 9 App. 649; Smith v. State, 24 App. 290, 5 S. W. 49.

It is not required that the agreement should be in writing, but the proper practice is to reduce it to writing, sign and file it with the papers in the cause. Thompson v. State, 9 App. 649; Davis v. State, 44 Tex. 523; Early v. State, 9 App. 476, overruling upon this point, Murray v. State, 34 Tex. 331.

A judge cannot be selected by one party in the absence of the other, and his ex-ante action is not binding. Latimer v. Logwood (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 860; Oates v. Webb (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 356.

Act June 19, 1897 (Acts 25th Leg. Sp. Sess. p. 39, c. 12), repealing Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1060, 1070, which gave the Governor authority to appoint a judge pro tem. from among the bar of the district on the disqualification of the resident judge, the Governor to make such appointment, but providing that in such case the resident judge shall exchange with the judge of another district if possible, was not in violation of Const. art. 5, § 11, guaranteeing to litigants, in case a judge is disqualified, the right by consent to appoint a proper person to try the cause. Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

Const. art. 5, § 11, declares that, when a judge of the district court is disqualified, the parties may by consent appoint a proper person to try the cause, or, if a competent person may be appointed to try the same in the county where it is pending in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and the district judges may exchange districts or hold court for each other when they deem it expedient and shall do so when required by law, and that the disqualification of judges of inferior tribunals shall be remedied and vacancies filled as may be prescribed by law. Held, that the right given to parties to agree on a special judge was the only part of such provision that was absolute and self-executing and hence the provision of power to restrict such right to the selection of a judge pro tem. by agreement to instances where, by reason of sickness or other exigency, it was impossible for judges to exchange districts on the disqualification of the resident judge. Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

Where under this statute a special judge was agreed upon by all of the parties except two, and it was not shown that they were parties to the agreement, and they did not appear, the special judge was without lawful authority to determine the issues affecting their rights. Donar v. Morris (Civ. App.) 176 S. W. 666.

Under Const. articles 5, § 11, and Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1675, and this article and articles 617 and 619, the selection of a special judge by agreement was authorized only when the regular judge was disqualified. Summerlin v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 890.

Parties who consent to the appointment of a special judge are not thereby estopped from denying his jurisdiction. Summerlin v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 890, supra.

A special judge appointed by the governor to try a cause without authority held not a judge de facto. Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

Where, on the disqualification of a resident judge to try accused for murder, the governor appointed a member of the bar selected by the governor to try a cause as judge pro tem., before whom defendant was tried and convicted and sentenced to be hung, such conviction was void as a deprivation of life without due process of law, in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14. Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

Art. 618a. Record to be made where special judge is agreed upon or appointed.— Whenever a special judge is agreed upon by the parties for the trial of any particular cause, as above provided, the clerk shall enter in the minutes of the court, as a part of the proceedings in such cause, a record showing:

1. That the judge of the court was disqualified to try the cause; and
2. That such special judge (naming him) was, by consent, agreed upon by the parties to try the cause; and
3. That the oath prescribed by law has been duly administered to such special judge. [Acts 1876, p. 141; Act 1897, Ist S. S., p. 39, ch. 12, § 1.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised C. C. P. 1911, and, in view of the decisions in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 625; Stevens v. State, 79 App. 566, 155 S. W. 565, is inserted in this compilation. See note under art. 618, ante.

Sufficiency of record.—The record should show how a special judge trying a cause became such; but if the record is silent, a party who, without objection, has participated in the trial of such cause, cannot, for the first time on appeal raise the objection that his authority did not appear. Shultz v. Lempert, 55 Tex. 276; Brinkley v. Harkins, 48 Tex. 226; Hess v. Dean, 60 Tex. 666, 3 S. W. 727.

It is sufficient if a record of the appointment as special judge be made before the proceedings in the case are ended in the district court. Harris v. Musgrave, 72 Tex. 189, 9 S. W. 90.

Under this article and C. C. P. 1911, art. 620 (art. 620, post) a special judge must take the oath of office in order to justify his sitting in a case and trying it. Summerlin v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 890.

Competency and authority of special judge.—That a special district judge appointed to try a case is a member of the legislature is no objection to his competency as a judge. Roundtree v. Gilroy, 57 Tex. 176.

The court is not invalidated because rendered by a special district judge who, at the time the trial began, was the county judge of the county. Even if he be such an officer as is forbidden under the constitution to hold another of-face, the acceptance and discharge of the duties of another office would operate as a bar to the office to which he had formerly qualified. Alsup v. Jordan, 69 Tex. 300, 6 S. W. 531, 5 Am. St. Rep. 53.

A special district judge, qualified under appointment, has authority to hear and determine not only the suit pending in which the appointment was made, but also suits growing out of the same judicial proceeding, if he can hear an injunction suit and application after the term for a new trial in the case. Harris v. Musgrave, 72 Tex. 18, 9 S. W. 90.

It is too late, after the trial of the case before a special judge, to raise the question of his disqualification. Such trial is in itself an agreement to submit the case to him. T. C. Ry. Co. v. Rowland, 3 Civ. App. 158, 22 S. W. 134.

The regularity of the appointment of a special judge cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding. Holl v. Jankowski, 9 Civ. App. 584, 29 S. W. 515.

Art. 619. [608] [Superseded. See art. 618 and note thereunder.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 554.

Art. 620. [609] Special judge shall take oath of office.—The attorney agreed upon or appointed, as provided in the two preceding articles, [618, 619] shall, before he enters upon his duties as special judge, take the oath of office required by the constitution of the state; and his selection by the parties, or appointment by the governor, as the case may be, and the fact that the oath of office was administered to him shall be entered upon the minutes of the court as a part of the record of the cause; and he shall have all the power and authority of the district judge that may be necessary to enable him to conduct, try, determine and finally dispose of such case.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 552-555.

Mode of selection of special judge.—Three modes only are prescribed by statute for the election, selection, or appointment of a special judge, viz.: 1. If the regular judge fails to appear at the appointed time and place for holding his court, an election of a special judge for the term shall be held. 2. If the regular judge is disqualified to try a case, the parties thereto, by agreement, may select a special judge. 3. If the parties fail to agree, the district judge shall certify the fact to the governor, who shall appoint a special judge to try the case. In either event, it is required that the special judge, before entering upon the discharge of his duties as such, take the oath of office required by the constitution. The manner of the selection or appointment of the special judge, together with the reasons therefor, and the fact that the oath of office was administered to him, shall be entered upon the minutes of the court as a part of the record in the cause, and the same must appear in the transcript on appeal.

The fact that a special judge in a prosecution was elected by the bar as authorized by Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1678, the district judge being unwilling to preside is not ground for sustaining a plea objecting to his presiding. Braseol v. State, 33 App. 323, 28 S. W. 723.

Oath.—Under the express provisions of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1677, and this article, a special judge must take the oath of office in order to justify his sitting in a case and trying it. Summerlin v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 990. See, also, Weatherford v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 814.

In a case tried before a special judge, in which an appeal is taken, and a statement of facts is desired, he must approve such statement. In such case the regular judge cannot authenticate the statement of facts. Myers v. State, 9 App. 157. He may enter a judgment nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term in a case tried by him, Pennington v. State, 13 App. 44.

A special judge has all the power and authority of the regular judge with reference to the case or cases which he is selected or appointed to try. Powers v. State, 25 App. 42, 5 S. W. 153.

The fact that a special judge who rendered judgment on a forfeited bail bond failed to sign such judgment during the term at which it was granted, does not invalidate the judgment. Lockhart v. State, 32 App. 149, 22 S. W. 413.

The action of the district judge, called in to try a criminal case because of the disqualification of the presiding judge, in ordering a special venire and having the venire drawn and issuing the writ, and setting the case for a certain day, while the presiding judge is trying a civil action in the same court building, is legal. Olive v. State, 76 App. 159, 55 S. W. 294.

Exercise of powers by regular judge after appointment of special judge.—Gill v. State, 36 App. 589, 38 S. W. 190.

Record.—Cited, Gill v. State, 36 App. 589, 38 S. W. 190.

If a special judge sits in a case the record must show the authority of his selection and how and that the proper oath was administered to him as special judge. Reed v. State, 55 App. 137, 114 S. W. 834; McMurray v. State, 9 App. 207; Perry v. State, 14 App. 166; Wilson v. State, 14 App. 205; Harris v. State, 14 App. 676;
Art. 621. [610] When judge of county court is disqualified, etc.—When the judge of the county court is disqualified in any criminal case pending in the county court, the parties interested may, by consent, appoint a proper person to try said case; and, if the parties shall fail to agree upon a special judge to try such case, on or before the third day of the term of the court at which said case may be called for trial, the county judge shall forthwith certify the facts to the governor, who shall appoint some practicing attorney to try such case. [Amended 1893, p. 83; Const., art. 5, § 16.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 757.

Decisions under former law.—When a cause is transferred from the county to the district court, under the old article (670), the jurisdiction of the latter court attaches as amply as if it was original and exclusive, and said court has no authority to transfer it back to the county court, although a new county judge, not disqualified from trying it, has succeeded the disqualified judge. Such a transfer will not invest the county court with jurisdiction. If the district judge be disqualified also to try the case, a special judge of said court must be selected or appointed to try it. Snow v. State, 11 App. 99. A special judge of the county court may be elected when the regular judge fails to appear at the time appointed for holding the court, or when, during the term, he is absent or unable or unwilling to hold his court. Sayles' Civ. Stats., arts. 1130, 1131; Byars v. Crisp, 2 Wilson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 767. But there is no authority of law for the selection of a special judge of the county court by agreement of the parties. Whittington v. Butler, 2 Wilson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 709.

Art. 622. [610a] Special judge shall take oath.—The attorney agreed upon or appointed as provided in the preceding article shall, before he enters upon his duties as special judge, take the oath of office required by the constitution of the state; and his selection by the parties or appointment by the governor, as the case may be, and the fact that the oath of office was administered to him, shall be entered upon the minutes of the court as a part of the records of the cause; and he shall have all the power and authority of the county judge that may be necessary to enable him to conduct, try, and finally dispose of said case. [Act 1893, p. 83.]

Art. 623. [610b] Compensation.—A special judge selected or appointed in accordance with the preceding articles shall receive the same compensation as now provided by law for regular county judges in similar cases. [Id.]

Art. 624. [611] When a justice of the peace is disqualified.—If a justice of the peace shall be disqualified from sitting in any criminal action pending before him, he shall transfer the same to the nearest justice of the peace of the county who is not disqualified to try it.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 758, 856.

See art. 617, ante.

Transfer of case to county court.—This article does not authorize transfer to the county court of a prosecution which is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Gill v. State, 46 App. 256, 76 S. W. 575.

Art. 625. [612] What the order of transfer shall state, etc.—In the cases provided for in the two preceding articles, the order of transfer shall state the cause of the transfer, and name the court to which the transfer is made, and the time and place, when and where, the parties and witnesses shall appear before such court; and the rules governing the transfer of cases from the district to inferior courts shall govern in the transfer of cases under the two preceding articles.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 757-769, 856.

Explanatory.—The words "two preceding articles" should read "preceding article." The reference was copied into the revisions of 1893 and 1911 without consideration of the fact that art. 573 of the revision of 1879 (art. 621 of revision of 1911) was amended by Act 1893, p. 83, by substituting appointment of a substitute county judge by the parties or by the governor in place of the old provision for a transfer of the case to the district court. The amendment rendered art. 625 inapplicable to the county court, and confined its operation to justices of the peace. 334
10. Change of Venue

Art. 626. [613] District judge may order change of venue on his own motion, when.—Whenever in any case of felony the district judge presiding shall be satisfied that a trial, alike fair and impartial to the accused and to the state, can not, from any cause, be had in the county in which the case is pending, he may, upon his own motion, order a change of venue to any county in his own, or in an adjoining district, stating in his order the grounds for such change of venue.

[Aet Aug. 21, 1876, p. 274; Const., art. 3, § 45.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 833.

Constitutionality.—This act is constitutional. Ex parte Cox, 12 App. 665; Cox v. State, 3 App. 254, 24 Am. Rep. 746.

Power and duty of court in general.—A district judge may, upon his own motion, change the venue in a criminal case to any other county in his own or in an adjoining district, when he becomes satisfied that a trial fair and impartial to the accused and the state cannot, for any cause, be had in the county where the cause is pending. Brown v. State, 6 App. 256.

This action of the court in changing the venue upon its own motion will not be revised on appeal, unless it be shown that the defendant has been materially prejudiced. Rothschild v. State, 37 App. 619; Treadway v. State, Cr. App. 271; Woodson v. State, 24 App. 152, 6 S. W. 181. See Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 360. And when a district judge is satisfied that from any cause a fair and impartial trial of a felony case can not be had in the county of the prosecution, he should exercise the power conferred upon him by the preceding article and change the venue. Webb v. State, 9 App. 496.

The discretion conferred upon district judges by the preceding article is not restricted by article 631, post, and whether such discretionary authority is a dangerous power, is not a question for judicial determination. No instance of its abuse has yet been made manifest. Bohannon v. State, 14 App. 271.

Venue should be changed where a fair trial cannot be had. Massey v. State, 21 App. 371; Frizzell v. State, 20 App. 42, 16 S. W. 781; Lucy v. State, 20 App. 119, 16 S. W. 761.

See a case in which the judge should have ordered a change of venue upon his own motion. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771.

A change of venue in a homicide case may be ordered where the county of the venue is small and two trials of the case have already been had in it. Campbell v. State, 35 App. 160, 22 S. W. 774. And see Webb v. State, 9 App. 490.

The court can not refuse continuance and change the venue of a rape case of his own motion. Griffey v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 22.

Where the application for a change of venue and occurrence in cause No. 4474, but pending the motion another for same offense was returned and numbered 4476, it was error to change the venue of the latter case when the defendant had not been arrested nor arraigned under the last indictment. Lankster v. State, 42 App. 360, 59 S. W. 883.

Where the testimony introduced by a person accused of homicide on a proceeding to change the venue only shows the opinion of the witnesses a jury to try the case could be procured without changing the venue, while it appeared that deceased and accused's families were prominent people in that county; that the killing excited a great deal of interest and much more than usual; that the families of the parties were influential; that newspapers all over the county had more or less to say about the killing; that two trials had been had, and difficulty experienced in securing a jury; that a great many people from the different portions of the county attended both trials; and that a great deal of interest was taken all over the county—the court did not abuse its discretion in making the change on its own motion. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Under this article the district judge is vested with a discretion which, although it is a judicial and not a personal discretion, will not be interfered with unless abused. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191. See Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655.

County to which venue may be changed.—In changing the venue of his own motion, the district judge is authorized to transfer the case to any county in his own or in an adjoining district. Boyett v. State, 26 App. 689, 5 S. W. 275.

Under this article the district judge is entitled to order a change of venue in the trial court, and the Court of Criminal Appeals, while it has the authority to direct a change of venue, cannot specify the county to which the change should be had. Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 939.

Under this article where an indictment found before the creation of a new county, including the scene of the crime, was transferred to such new county, 335 the trial judge was authorized, when the district court of such new county convened to change the venue to another county, if in his opinion the facts connected with the offense had gained such wide notoriety that a fair and impartial trial could not be had. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

Second change of venue.—Defendant would have right, on change of venue by the court, to another change upon any statutory ground that would have sufficed him in the first instance. Frizzell v. State, 20 App. 42, 18 S. W. 751; citing Thurmond v. State, 27 App. 347, 11 S. W. 461.

When the offense was committed in an unorganized county and before the organization of such county, jurisdiction in another county had attached. Defendant cannot claim change of venue as a matter of right, to the county where the offense was committed after its organization. Woodring v. State, 33 App. 26, 24 S. W. 233.

Retransfer of case to original county.—Where a court of one district, upon its own motion, transferred a criminal case to a second district, and by agreement of the parties the venue was changed back to the original court, the court of the second district was divested of all jurisdiction, and the original court was reinstated with jurisdiction, and could compel the clerk of the court of the second district to return the papers and documents in the case. Berg v. State, 64 App. 612, 142 S. W. 884.

A criminal case was transferred from one district to another, and was later, by consent of all the parties, transferred back to the original court. The defendant then objected to the jurisdiction of the original court, and parol testimony of the order showing the retransfer was offered and admitted without objection. Held that, while the transcript must be the best evidence, parol evidence having been admitted without objection, the court properly overruled defendant's exception to the jurisdiction; it appearing that he had consented to the order of retransfer, and had executed a new bond in the original court. Berg v. State, 64 App. 612, 142 S. W. 884.

Order for change of venue.—Art. 629, and notes. The requirement in the preceding article that the judge shall state in his order changing the venue the grounds therefor, is complied with in an order stating the grounds to be, "influence of terrorism prevailing among the good people of the county" where the case is pending. Cox v. State, 8 App. 254, 24 Am. Rep. 746. See Gregory v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 752.

Order must show grounds. Bowden v. State, 12 App. 246; Frizzell v. State, 30 App. 42, 16 S. W. 751; Campbell v. State, 33 Cr. R. 166, 32 S. W. 774.

The order, embodying the reasons upon which the court predicated his authority to change the venue should be embraced in the transcript. Without this order in the transcript the appellate court cannot say that the judge abused his discretion. Borden v. State, 43 App. 648, 62 S. W. 1085.

It is only necessary for the judge to assign reasons for changing the venue; he need not assign reasons for ignoring counties of the district nearest the court house of the county in which the homicide occurred. Ricks v. State, 48 App. 264, 87 S. W. 1037.

An order changing the venue in a criminal case after a reversal on a former appeal was not invalid because made at a special term, the order for the convening of which was made before the mandate reached the district court, where it appeared from the time elapsing after the issuance of the mandate, from the order changing the venue itself, and from the qualification of the bill of exceptions thereto that the mandate had reached that court before the order changing the venue was made. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 131.

Objection or exception to order.—See art. 634, and notes.

Art. 627. [614] State may have change of venue, when, etc.—Whenever the district or county attorney shall represent in writing to the district court before which any felony case is pending, that, by reason of existing combinations or influences in favor of the accused, or on account of the lawless condition of affairs in the county, a fair and impartial trial as between the accused and the state can not be safely and speedily had; or whenever he shall represent that the life of the prisoner, or of any of the witnesses, would be jeopardized by a trial in the county in which the case is pending, the judge shall hear proof in relation thereto, and, if satisfied that such representation is well founded, and that the ends of public justice will be subserved thereby, he shall order a change of venue to any county in his own, or in an adjoining district. [Act Aug. 21, 1870, p. 274.] See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 448, 841.

Discretion of court.—A change of venue in behalf of the State is within the discretion of the court. Gregory v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 752.

Art. 628. [615] Change of venue; when granted on application of defendant.—A change of venue may be granted on the writ-tenth application of the defendant, supported by his own affidavit and the affidavit of at least two credible persons, residents of the county where the prosecution is instituted, for either of the following causes, the truth and sufficiency of which the court shall determine:

1. That there exists in the county where the prosecution is commenced so great a prejudice against him that he cannot obtain a fair and impartial trial.

2. That there is a dangerous combination against him instigated by influential persons, by reason of which he cannot expect a fair trial. [O. C. 527.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 542-546.

1. Requisites of application in general.
2. Affidavits and other testimony in support of application.
3. Grounds in general.
4. Local prejudice.
5. Dangerous combination against accused.

1. Requisites of application in general.—If the statute is not fully complied with, the application is fatally defective. Mitchell v. State, 43 Tex. 512; O’Neal v. State, 14 App. 553; Macklin v. State, 55 App. 169, 109 S. W. 146; Gibson v. State, 53 App. 349, 110 S. W. 41.
A change cannot be granted upon a different ground than that set out in the application. Dupree v. State, 2 App. 613.

2. Affidavits and other testimony in support of application.—The requirement that the application shall be supported by the affidavits of at least two credible persons, residents of the county of the prosecution, is not met by the affidavit of the defendant and one other person. O’Neal v. State, 14 App. 553; Macklin v. State, 55 App. 169, 109 S. W. 146; Gibson v. State, 53 App. 349, 110 S. W. 41.
When there is a full investigation of the facts as to whether defendant could obtain a fair and impartial trial, he cannot be heard to complain that he was not allowed to file additional affidavits. Long v. State, 32 App. 140, 22 S. W. 409. When the testimony as to prejudice is meager and witnesses testify that defendant can get a fair and impartial trial, change is properly refused. Blain v. State, 34 App. 448, 31 S. W. 363.
On the hearing of the motion by the court, the orders of the courts in other cases granting the defendant change of venue on account of prejudice are admissible in evidence. Blain v. State, 34 App. 448, 31 S. W. 363.
In view of this article the words “means of knowledge” in article 633 should not be given restricted meaning, and the counter affidavits filed by the state were sufficient to raise an issue on both grounds of the motion. Lemons v. State, 59 App. 299, 128 S. W. 416.
Under this article the overruling of verbal and written motions for such change, unsupported by any affidavits, was proper. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 622.
An affidavit for change of venue, which was sworn to by accused attorney, could not be considered. Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 158, 151 S. W. 175.
An affidavit drawn in accordance with the Code provisions, and to which no controverting affidavit was filed, on objection that it was sworn to before one of defendant’s attorneys, should have been permitted to be sworn to before the clerk. Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1064.

3. Grounds in general.—Where both the grounds mentioned in the preceding article are set up in the application, the defendant is entitled to a change of venue if he establishes either. Curr v. State, 19 App. 635, 53 Am. Rep. 395.

4. Local prejudice.—As to review of decision, see art. 634, post.
Change of venue was applied for upon the ground that the accused could not secure a fair trial by an impartial jury, because of the prejudice prevailing against him throughout the county. The proof shows that whatever prejudice existed against the accused was confined to a single section of the county, and it is made to appear that none of the jurors who tried the case resided in that section of the county. Held, that the refusal of the trial court to change the venue was not error. Johnson v. State, 26 App. 396, 5 S. W. 762. See, also, Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 580.

Evidence held to show that the denial of a change of venue for prejudice of the inhabitants of the county constituted an abuse of discretion. Straight v. State, 63 App. 453, 138 S. W. 744; Coffman v. State, 62 App. 88, 109 S. W. 779; Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 299.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex. — 22
When evidence clearly shows prejudice, general in the county, no matter whether it is against the defendant or his case, venue should be changed. Myers v. State, 29 App. 31, 28 S. W. 592; Coffman v. State, 62 App. 256, 136 S. W. 437.

Prejudice and prejudgment mean the same thing, and if there has been such prejudgment that defendant cannot get a fair and impartial trial, venue should be changed. Myers v. State, 40 App. 256, 50 S. W. 235.

This article refers to a "prejudice" which may exist either as against defendant himself or by reason of a prejudgment of his case. Randle v. State, 34 App. 43, 28 S. W. 933.

This article has no connection with, or reference to, art. 629, post, and the "prejudice" herein contemplated is such prejudice, from whatever cause or source, against the accused individually, or because of the particular case against him, as to involve a prejudgment of the same, and deprive him of "a fair trial by an impartial jury." Such prejudice being shown, the defendant cannot be deprived of his right to a change of venue, because the "bias or prejudice" of the jurors summoned to try him must be tested by subdivisions 12 and 13 of art. 692, post. Randle v. State, 34 App. 43, 28 S. W. 933.

Where the evidence showed such a strong prejudice that it was unlikely that a fair and impartial jury could be obtained, the court should grant change of venue. Barnes v. State, 42 App. 256, 59 S. W. 835; 96 Am. St. Rep. 901.

On an application for change of venue for prejudice of the inhabitants, the question is whether the court may know, considering the mode provided for the selection of jurors, that a jury will be obtained that will not be influenced by the passions of the community, and would not consider matters outside the evidence. Streight v. State, 62 App. 455, 139 S. W. 712.

Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 692, § 13, providing that although a juror may have received an impression or formed an opinion from reading newspaper accounts of the homicide, communications, reports, or mere rumor, yet if he, on oath, states that such impression or opinion will not influence his action or disable him from rendering a fair and impartial verdict, he shall not be disqualified as a juror, a defendant, seeking a change of venue on such ground, must not only show that such publications, etc., were made, but that, by reason thereof, there was created in the public mind so great a prejudice as would prevent a fair and impartial trial in the county. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

5. Dangerous combination against accused.—It devolves upon accused to clearly establish the combination. Such proof is not afforded by resolutions of a Masonic lodge commemorative of the virtues of the deceased, slain by the accused. Lacy v. State, 59 App. 139, 16 S. W. 761. See Miller v. State, 41 App. 609, 21 S. W. 926, 37 Am. St. Rep. 536.

Conduct and threats of a mob may be ground for change of venue. Miller v. State, 32 App. 320, 29 S. W. 1163; Steagald v. State, 28 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771. See Marcus v. State, 31 App. 671, 29 S. W. 718.

That the sheriff, apprehensive of mob violence and called for troops, which troops were present at the trial, held not to require change of venue. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 1002.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence on a motion for change of venue, on the ground of the existence of a combination of influential persons, whereby a fair trial would be prevented, held to show that such combination did not exist. Barnes v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 80.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that the county officers had promptly arrested defendant, that the grand jury had reconvened, and that the cause was set for hearing five days after service of a copy of the indictment, did not show a "combination of influential persons," within the meaning of the statute, entitling a defendant to a change of venue on that ground. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

6. Agreement affecting right to change.—An agreement at one term that the court may continue the case if the defendant would not move for change of venue at next term does not bind defendant. Luttrell v. State, 40 App. 651, 51 S. W. 930.

7. Misdemeanor cases.—See notes under arts. 13 and 626, ante.

8. Change as to one of several defendants.—Change as to one of several jointly indicted is change as to all. Cock v. State, 5 App. 659. But see Krebs v. State, 8 App. 1.

11. Review of discretion of trial court.—See arts. 634, 938, and notes.

Art. 629. [616] Where jury can not be procured for trial of felony.—When an unsuccessful effort has been once made in any county to procure a jury for the trial of a felony and all reasonable means have been used, if it be made to appear to the court by the written affidavit of the attorney for the state, or any other credible person, that no jury can probably be had in that county, the court may order a change of venue, and cause the reasons therefor to be placed upon the minutes of the proceedings. [O. C. 528.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, § 442, § 446.

See art. 628, and notes.

Construction and operation in general.—See Sims v. State, 36 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256.
Affidavit.—When the record shows that the court had the sheriff sworn and he testified that it would probably be held in the county, this is not tantamount to a written affidavit, as required by this article. But under article 618 the court can of its own motion change the venue, and unless some prejudice to defendant is shown, the court’s discretion in changing the venue will not be revised. Gray v. State, 48 App. 200, 65 S. W. 372.

Art. 630. [617] Application may be made before announcing ready for trial, etc.—An application for a change of venue may be heard and determined, before either party has announced ready for trial; but, in all cases before a change of venue is ordered, all motions to set aside the indictment, and all special pleas and exceptions which are to be determined by the judge, and which have been filed, shall be disposed of by the court, and, if overruled, the plea of not guilty entered. [O. C. 592.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 233, 843.

Time for filing application.—Though filed after the state has announced, the application is in time if filed before the accused has announced. Carr v. State, 19 T. Cr. L., 635, 53 Am. Rep. 395.

Court can set aside continuance and change the venue, try the case or make other disposition of it. Hamilton v. State, 40 App. 467, 51 S. W. 217.

A defendant who had not announced ready for trial, and whose motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of his principal counsel, who was most familiar with the facts, witnesses, etc., had been overruled, was not thereby deprived of the right to thereafter file his application for a change of venue. Sismons v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1094.

Time for hearing and determination of application.—It is not necessary to summon a special venire before a change of venue can be granted. Sims v. State, 36 App. 154, 36 S. W. 258.

Disposition of other motions and pleas.—This article evidently contemplates that all questions relating to the form of the indictment, and other incidental questions, must be raised and disposed of before a change of venue, and that nothing should remain thereafter but the trial of the general issue. Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86; Loughins v. State, 8 App. 484; Ex parte Cox, 12 App. 665. See Barr v. State, 16 App. 333.

This article requires that all matters which do not affect the substance of the change must be disposed of before the defendant applies for change of venue. Vance v. State, 34 App. 356, 30 S. W. 792, and cases cited; Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Where the original indictment and the copy served on accused were identical, accused was not entitled to service of another copy thereof, especially where motion was made in the court to which a change of venue had been allowed; this article contemplating that all questions relating to the form of indictments, and those not relating to the substance of the charge which defendant may desire to make, must be heard by him before he applies for a change of venue. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

The provision of this article that a plea of not guilty shall be entered before change of venue is ordered, is directory only. McGregor v. State, 71 App. 604, 100 S. W. 711. And see Curr v. State, 19 App. 355, 53 Am. Rep. 395.

In view of art. 232, providing that an indictment is considered as presented when it has been duly acted on by the grand jury and received by the court, and Sunburn v. State, 110 (142 S. W. xxv) declaring that the record must show that the indictment was presented in open court by a quorum of the grand jury, and this article, where the record of the return of an indictment only showed that, on a specified date, the grand jury appeared in open court and presented the following true bill of indictment, etc., a motion to quash because it did not appear that the indictment was presented by a “quorum of the grand jury” should have been made in the court of original jurisdiction and, being a mere matter of procedure, could not be made in the court to which the venue was changed. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

Under this article a motion to quash an indictment for an irregularity in the grand jury came too late after change of venue. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 225.

Art. 631. [618] Venue changed to nearest county, unless, etc.—Upon the grant of a change of venue, the criminal cause shall be removed to some adjoining county, the court house of which is nearest to the court house of the county where the prosecution is pending, unless it be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that such nearest county is subject to some objection sufficient to authorize a change of venue in the first instance. [O. C. 530.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 233, 850.

As this article requiring criminal causes upon change of venue to be removed to some adjoining county, was enacted before the construction of railroads, and as the right of acquittal is not to direct the county in which the change shall be made, but only to a fair trial the trial court may, under article 626, direct the change to be made to a county the courthouse of which, though not nearest to that of the county wherein the prosecution is pending, is most easily accessible therefrom; the statutory provision being for the convenience of witnesses in the days before railroads. Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 933.

Judicial notice.—The Court of Criminal Appeals will take judicial notice that, at the time of the enactment of this article, requiring a change of venue in a criminal case from one county to the next adjoining county the courthouse of which was nearest that of the county in which venue was laid, there were no railroads in the country affording access from one county seat to another. Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 933.

Not applicable to change by court on its own motion.—It is only in cases where-in the application for change of venue is made by the state or the defendant that the case must be sent to the nearest county. The rule does not apply to changes made by the judges of their own motion. Frizzell v. State, 39 App. 42, 16 S. W. 751.

Co-defendants.—Where persons were jointly indicted and a severance was or-dered after which a change of venue was applied for, it was not error to change the venue as to different defendants to different counties. Wilson v. State, 79 App. 4, 155 S. W. 242.

Art. 632. [619] Where adjoining counties are all subject to ob-jection, etc.—If it be shown in the application for a change of venue, or otherwise, that all the counties adjoining that in which the prose-cution is pending are subject to some valid objection, the cause may be removed to such county as the court may think proper. [O. C. 531.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 538.

Art. 632a. Change of venue in certain cases.—Any officer or member of the military forces of this state, who is indicted or sued for any injury to persons or property done while performing, or endeavoring to perform, any duty required of him by this law, shall have the right, and it is hereby made the duty of the court in which such indictment or suit is pending, upon the application of the person so indicted or sued, to remove the venue of such cause to some court of competent jurisdiction in another county not subject to the same or some other disqualification; provided, such application is supported by the affidavit of two credible persons to the effect that they have good reason to believe that the defendant can not have a fair and impartial trial before such court. [Act 1905, p. 204, ch. 104, § 133.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised C. C. P. of 1911 by the decision in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 826 and Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 159 S. W. 505, is inserted in this compilation.

Knowledge of affiants.—Under this article, where a member of the national guard indicted for murder committed while doing guard duty applied for a change of venue, and filed an affidavit supported by necessary compurgators, and the county attorney elected not to attack the credibility of the latter but only their means of knowledge, it was the duty of the court to grant the change; the statute not contemplating a trial of the question whether accused could or could not get a fair trial in the county. Manley v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 1137.

Art. 633. [620] Application for change of venue may be con-troverted, how.—The credibility of the persons making affidavit for change of venue, or their means of knowledge, may be attacked by the affidavit of a credible person; and the issue thus formed shall be tried and determined by the judge, and the application granted, or refused, as the law and facts shall warrant.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 447-449.

The court may examine the compurgators touching their means of knowledge with regard to the facts. Bulle v. State, 1 App. 452; Dixon v. State, 2 App. 331; Dupree v. State, Id. 613.

And may take the sworn statements of citizens as to the existence of the alleged local prejudice. Labbonte v. State, 6 App. 267; Crow v. State, 41 Tex. 468; Winklefield v. State, 4 Id. 140; McCarty v. State, Id. 461; Pierson v. State, 21 App. 14, 17 S. W. 468.

If the defendant's application for a change of venue complies with the requirement of the statute and is not proper, controverted on the record, no triable issue is raised, and he is entitled to the change of venue as a matter of right. Davis v. State, 19 App. 291; Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1064.

The court may receive counter affidavits or resort to any legitimate method or proof. Cotton v. State, 32 Tex. 614.

Change of venue was sought by the defendant in this case upon the ground that the prejudice against him in the county of the forum was so great that he could not obtain a fair and impartial trial. The affidavits of his compurgators were traversed by counter affidavits on behalf of the state. A large number of witnesses testified pro and con as to the credibility and means of knowledge of the defendant's compurgators, and, over the objection of the defendant—who contended that the investigation should be confined solely to the credibility and means of knowledge of his compurgators—the trial court permitted the contesting witnesses to testify directly as to the existence or nonexistence of the prejudice alleged in the affidavit of a change of the application for the change of venue. Held, that the proceeding was correct, and the objection was properly overruled. Meuly v. State, 26 App. 274, 9 S. W. 563, 8 Am. St. Rep. 477; Byrd v. State, 26 App. 374, 9 S. W. 563; Hall v. Mere negative controverting affidavits held not to overcome direct supporting affidavits. Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 369.

The credibility of the compurgators, or their means of knowledge, may be controverted by the affidavit of a credible person, and such attacking affidavit may be made by the district attorney. Dunn v. State, 7 App. 609.

The controverting affidavit on the part of the state must directly impeach the credibility of the compurgators, or show that their means of knowledge are not sufficient to support and justify the statements contained in their affidavits. A triable issue on the application is raised only when the state has filed a contesting affidavit in accordance with the proceeding article. Davis v. State, 19 App. 201.

Where both the grounds mentioned in art. 628, ante, are alleged in the application, and the controverting affidavit assails but one of them, the change of venue should be awarded upon the other. Carr v. State, 19 App. 635, 53 Am. Rep. 399.

For a controverting affidavit held to be sufficient, see Hunnicutt v. State, 20 App. 632.

The district attorney is not required to make or sign affidavits controverting motion for change of venue. Baw v. State, 33 App. 24, 24 S. W. 293.

And the state filed an affidavit that the accused's affiants did not have sufficient acquaintance and knowledge of the people throughout the county, and had not sufficient knowledge to justify their statements that the accused was not guilty of the offense. The accused, and were wholly unacquainted with the feeling and sentiment in the county upon the case. Held, that the words "means of knowledge" in this article should not be given a restricted meaning, and the counter affidavits filed by the state were sufficient to raise an issue on both grounds of the motion. Lemons v. State, 59 App. 299, 128 S. W. 416.

A controverting affidavit averred that the compurgators had not sufficient knowledge and acquaintance with the people throughout the county to justify their statements made in their affidavits: that the county was large, and contained numerous qualified jurors who knew nothing of the case; that the scene of the homicide was in a remote part of the county; and that no great excitement had been created thereby outside of the immediate community. Held, that the controverting affidavit attacked the means of knowledge of the defendant and his compurgators, and properly raised an issue requiring the introduction of evidence. Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 580.

Burden of proof.—When an application is properly contested the burden of proof upon the issue thus raised is upon the applicant. Davis v. State, 19 App. 201; Pierson v. State, 21 App. 14, 17 S. W. 468; Lacy v. State, 29 App. 22, 25 S. W. 194.

Credibility of witnesses.—In determining as to the credibility of the compurgators the court may inquire into their motives, intent, and feelings, relationship to the party and the like, and their opportunities and means of knowledge. A person may be a truthful man, and still not a credible witness in matters involving innocence or guilt, prejudice and passion. Dunn v. State, 32 App. 119, 16 S. W. 781; Henning v. State, 24 App. 315, 6 S. W. 137. See Winklefield v. State, 41 Tex. 148; Smith v. State, 31 App. 14, 19 S. W. 252.

Whether a witness on such inquiry has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant is not material. Myers v. State, 7 App. 640.

The credibility of the controverting affiant is an issue for the determination of the trial judge. His credibility can not be impugned merely upon the grounds that he was the physician of the injured party, or that he is a witness in the case for the prosecution. Smith v. State, 21 App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.

Art. 634. [621] Order of judge shall not be revised on appeal, unless, etc.—The order of the judge granting or refusing a change of venue shall not be revised upon appeal, unless the facts upon which the same was based are presented in a bill of exceptions prepared, signed, approved and filed at the term of the court at which such order was made. See Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557.

The rule in civil cases that objections to a change of venue not made in the court below will not be considered on appeal, has been extended and applied in criminal cases, and in the absence of such objection duly taken and saved, the order changing the venue can not be attacked in the tribunal to which the venue has been changed by plea to the jurisdiction or otherwise. Harrison v. State, 5 App. 358; Preston v. State, 6 App. 185; Bt. & S. v. State, 59 S. W. 356; Bothwell v. State, 7 App. 519; Kreiss v. State, 8 App. 1; Ex parte Cox, 12 App. 655. Presumption that order for change was made before adjournment of the term will be indulged; it not being necessary that the order should contain the caution showing the term at which it was made. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 App. 20, 38 S. W. 896. In absence of a clear showing sustaining a motion for change of venue on the ground of prejudice and of the evidence in the record upon which the trial court acted in denying the motion, it must be assumed on appeal that its action was proper. Joy v. State, 57 App. 93, 123 S. W. 584.

An accused cannot claim that a change of venue was unauthorized, where, though present, he did not object thereto. Kemper v. State, 65 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1026.

Refusal of the court changing on its own motion the place of trial of a criminal case from one county to another county in the district of the presiding judge to retransfer the case to the original county is not reviewable where there was no motion or affidavit for the retransfer, but merely a verbal suggestion of accused's counsel. Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655.

An order on the court's own motion as authorized by article 626, changing the venue from one county to another within the district of the judge of the court, is not reviewable on appeal in the absence of any exception or objection thereto; the order reciting that accused and his counsel were personally present at the time it was made. Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655.

In a case where the defendant applied for a change of venue on the statutory ground of such prejudice against him in the county that he could not obtain a fair trial, and showed the publication of the remarks and conduct of the same trial judge who the jury acquitted another charged with killing the predecessor of the railroad terminal superintendent, whom defendant had killed, but did not ask the publishers as to the state of public feeling against him, and called no witnesses residing outside of the city of Ft. Worth as to the state of feeling existing among the 1,000,000 qualified jurors in the county outside of the city, there was no abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying the application. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

Where exceptions to the refusal of an application made by defendant for change of venue were reserved, and after the defendant was thereafter himself applied for a change of the cause to the next term of the court, such exception will not be considered on appeal. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557. See, further, as to necessity.
and requisites of bill of exceptions in such case, Pruitt v. State, 20 App. 128; Preston v. State, 4 App. 156, post, art. 744. The bill of exceptions should contain the evidence adduced, otherwise the case will not be reversed. Underwood v. State, 38 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618.

The act of 1905 [arts. 844, 846, post] allowing bills of exception to be filed 20 days after adjournment of term does not relate to, or affect this article regulating bills of exception on the action of the court on a motion for change of venue. Wallace v. State, 46 App. 191, 81 S. W. 967; Lacy v. State, 46 App. 628, 79 S. W. 572; Canon v. State, 55 App. 258, 123 S. W. 141; Sharp v. State, 71 App. 633, 169 S. W. 859.

A bill of exception to court's action on motion to change venue must be filed during term, though twenty days has been allowed after term in which to file bills of exception and statement of facts, and the act of 1905 [arts. 844-846, post] relating to stenographer's report of evidence does not affect the statute. Wink v. State, 59 App. 405, 58 S. W. 864, 585.

A change of venue cannot be reviewed, where the testimony taken in support of the motion was not filed and approved during the term. King v. State, 57 App. 363, 123 S. W. 135.

The provision that an order granting or refusing a change of venue shall not be reviewed unless the facts on which it is based are presented in a bill of exceptions filed at the term of court at which the order is made, applies to all matters, not arising on the trial, and hence where bills presenting such matters are not filed at the term at which the proceedings occurred, they cannot be reviewed. Hemp­hill v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 164.

Conclusiveness and effect of bill.—See notes under art. 744.

Art. 635. [622] Clerks' duties in case of change of venue.—When an order for a change of venue has been made, the clerk of the court where the prosecution is pending shall make out a true transcript of all the orders made in the cause, and certify thereto under his official seal, and shall transmit the same, together with all the original papers in the case, to the clerk of the court to which the venue has been changed. [O. C. 532.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §81.

Payment of fees.—The clerk of the district court is entitled to have his fees paid for making transcript and certified copies of papers as soon as he performs the work. Escaville v. Stephens, 102 Tex. 514, 119 S. W. 842.

Requisites of transcript.—It is not necessary that the transcript contain a caption or that the clerk's certificate state the number of pages. Nor does it require a caption as part of the transcript. Wolfforth v. State, 31 App. 357, 20 S. W. 741.

The transcript need not contain the order impounding the grand jury. Vance v. State, 34 App. 395, 30 S. W. 792.

It is not required to transmit a certified copy of the indictment; it being sufficient to transmit the original indictment. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Supplying deficiencies in transcript.—Under this article the court to which a cause has been sent on a change of venue may require the clerk of the court where the prosecution is commenced to place his seal upon the transcript, and certify to the orders embraced in the transcript on a change of venue. Biggerstaff v. State, 59 App. 575, 129 S. W. 840.

The better practice requires the court to which a case has been transferred on a change of venue to issue an order in certiorari compelling the clerk of the court transferring the cause to complete the record by attaching his seal to the certificate or to permit the state's counsel to withdraw the record for such purpose. Biggerstaff v. State, 59 App. 575, 129 S. W. 840.

The court to which a cause is sent on change of venue may issue any order necessary to compel the clerk of the court from which the case was sent to supply any deficiencies in the transcript which may be necessary to a full understanding of the previous proceedings. Brown v. State, 6 App. 354. Brown v. State, 31 App. 357, 20 S. W. 741. If the transcript fails to show the order of transfer, such defect can not be supplied by parol proof, unless it be shown that a copy of such order can not be obtained. Valentine v. State, 6 App. 459; Byrd v. State, 25 App. 374, 9 S. W. 728.

Proof of transfer on trial of cause.—Where, after change of venue, counsel for the state asked the court if it was necessary in order to show jurisdiction that
Art. 636. [623] Same subject.—The clerk shall also, in a change of venue, before transmitting the original papers, make a correct copy of the same, certifying thereto under his official seal, and retain such copy in his office, to be used in case the originals or any of them be lost. [O. C. 533.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 651.
See Byrd v. State, 26 App. 374, 9 S. W. 759.

Art. 637. [624] If defendant is on bail, shall be recognized.—When a change of venue is ordered and the defendant is on bail, he shall be required to enter into recognizance forthwith, conditioned for his appearance before the proper court at the next succeeding term thereof; or, if the court of the county to which the cause is taken be then in session, he shall be recognized to appear before said court on a day fixed, and from day to day and term to term thereafter until discharged. [O. C. 534.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 628.

Necessity of recognizance.—Order to change venue had no operation until defendant was recognized to appear before the new court. State v. Butler, 38 Tex. 560.

Under this article and arts. 638-640 an accused who was not in custody in R. county, but on bond, should have been required to recognize in that county when the venue was ordered changed to W. county, in order to give the court in W. county jurisdiction, even though accused had appeared in W. county at a prior term of court; such appearance not waiving his failure to recognize in R. county. Harris v. State, 71 App. 463, 160 S. W. 447.

Art. 638. [625] Defendant failing to give recognizance shall be kept in custody, etc.—If the defendant fails to give recognizance, as required in the preceding article, he shall be safely kept in custody by the sheriff, to be disposed of as provided in the two succeeding articles.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 838.

Art. 639. [626] If defendant be in custody.—When the venue is changed in any criminal action, if the defendant be in custody, an order shall be made for his removal to the proper county, and his delivery to the sheriff thereof before the next succeeding term of the district court of the county to which the case is to be taken, and he shall be removed by the sheriff accordingly, and delivered as directed in the order. [O. C. 535.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 839.

Art. 640. [627] If court be in session, etc.—If the court of the county to which the case is removed be then in session, the defendant shall be removed forthwith, and delivered to the sheriff of such county. [O. C. 536.]

Ball.—The state, in a murder case, having continued twice and defendant never having sought continuance, the new tribunal may admit defendant to bail. Ex parte Walker, 3 App. 668.

Art. 641. [628] Witness need not again be summoned, etc.—When the venue in a criminal action has been changed, it shall not be necessary to have the witnesses therein again subpoenaed, attached or recognized, but all the witnesses who have been subpoenaed, attached, or recognized to appear and testify in the cause shall be held bound to appear before the court to which the cause has been transferred, in the same manner as if there had been no such transfer.

11. Of Dismissing Prosecutions

Art. 642. [629] Defendant in custody and no indictment presented, prosecution dismissed, unless, etc.—When a defendant has been detained in custody or held to bail for his appearance to answer any criminal accusation before the district court, the prosecution, unless otherwise ordered by the court, for good cause shown, supported by affidavit, shall be dismissed and the bail discharged, if indictment or information be not presented against such defendant at the next term of the court which is held after his commitment or admission to bail. [O. C. 537.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 857-861.

Construction and operation in general.—If no bill is found, the defendant is entitled to a discharge, even though the only reason why a bill was not presented was because of the absence of the state’s attorney and the inability of the court to find some one to act pro tem. Bennett v. State, 27 Tex. 701; Ex parte Porter, 16 App. 321. When the prosecution is dismissed it is a termination of that prosecution, and there is no legal authority to detain the accused in custody when no new proceedings have been instituted against him by complaint or otherwise. Venter v. State, 18 App. 198. It seems that a dismissal may be set aside at any time during the term, and certainly so, if done with the consent of the defendant. Parry v. State, 21 Tex. 746.

To entitle defendant to a discharge, a grand jury must have met and been discharged without indicting. Ex parte Oakley, 54 App. 608, 114 S. W. 131.

That the state continued the case twice is no ground for the discharge of accused, where the time covered by both continuances did not cover over two months from the time of the arrest. Ex parte Young (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 50.

Former jeopardy.—See notes under art. 9, ante.

Art. 643. [630] Prosecution may be dismissed by state’s attorney, etc.—The district or county attorney may, by permission of the court, dismiss a criminal action at any time upon complying with the requirements of article 37 of this Code. [O. C. 538.]

8. Of the depositions of witnesses and testimony taken before examining courts and juries of inquest.

CHAPTER ONE OF THE MODE OF TRIAL

Art. 644. [631] Jury the only mode of trial, when.—The only mode of trial upon issue of fact is by jury, unless in cases specially excepted. [O. C. 539.]

Trial by jury.—See Short v. State, 16 App. 44; Const., art. 1, sec. 16; ante, arts. 10, 21 and 28, and notes.

Waiver of trial by jury.—In misdemeanors involving a pecuniary fine as a penalty, the case may be tried on an agreed state of facts, as in civil causes, State v. Jones, 18 Tex. 874, and a jury may be waived in the county court. Rasberry v. State, 1 App. 664.

The state cannot waive a jury, but the defendant may waive a trial by jury. Schullman v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1195.

Trial by court.—On trial by the court without a jury, the court is not authorized to file conclusions of fact and law, as in a civil action. Morris v. State (Cr. App.) 183 S. W. 709.

Art. 645. [632] Jury; when of twelve, when of six.—In the district court, the jury shall consist of twelve men; in the county court and inferior courts, the jury shall consist of six men.

In general.—Const., art. 5, secs. 15 and 17; arts. 10, 21 and 22, and notes.

In the district court.—Jester v. State, 26 App. 368, 9 S. W. 616, and cases cited.

Where the record merely states that the court impaneled the following jury, naming eleven, or states that twelve men came but names only eleven, it cannot be presumed that there were twelve jurors impaneled. Rich v. State, 1 App. 206; Huebner v. State, 3 App. 458, but see Gerard v. State, 30 App. 609.

But the record need not name the jurors, though it is better to do so if there is objection to any of them. Morton v. State, 3 App. 510.

In the county court.—Number of jurors in county court. Post, art. 766.

Where the record on appeal recites that a jury of lawful men came, but names only the one who signed the verdict as foreman, it cannot be presumed that five others were impaneled and sworn. Marks v. State, 10 App. 334.

A defendant can agree to be tried before less than six jurors. Stell v. State, 14 App. 99; Schullman v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1185.

Art. 645a. Same; criminal district court of Harris county.—Said Criminal District Court of Harris County [ante, arts. 97m–97v] shall try all misdemeanor cases coming before it with six jurors instead of twelve jurors, unless a jury be waived by the defendant. [Act 1911, p. 112, ch. 67, § 10.]

Art. 646. [633] Defendant must be personally present, etc.—In all prosecutions for felonies, the defendant must be personally present on the trial, and he must likewise be present in all cases of indictment or information for misdemeanors where the punishment or any part thereof is imprisonment in jail. [O. C. 640.]

When the above article was carried into the revision of 1911 it had been superseded by Act 1907, p. 31, ch. 19, § 1. The revisers of 1911 overlooked the fact of supersession and incorporated the above section of the act of 1907 into the new code as art. 859 (see same article in this compilation). The new provision is the existing law of the state, in view of such decisions as Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 626 and Stevens v. State, 79 App. 505, 109 S. W. 565. Its text is as follows:

In all prosecutions for felonies, the defendant must be personally present at the trial, and he must likewise be present in all cases of indictment for misdemeanors where the punishment, or any part thereof, is imprisonment in jail; provided, that in all cases the verdict of the jury shall be received by the court and entered upon the records thereof in the absence of the defendant, when such absence on his part is wilful or voluntary, and when so received it shall have the same force and effect as if received and entered in the presence of such defendant; and when the record in the appellate court shows that the defendant was present at the commencement, or any portion of the trial, it shall be presumed in the absence of all evidence in the record to the contrary that he was present during the whole trial. [Act 1907, p. 31, ch. 19, § 1, superseding art. 633, revised C. C. P. 1895.]

In general.—The defendant must not only be within the walls of the courthouse, but in the very room in which the case is conducted. Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482.

It is error to take any step during the trial, no matter how trivial, in the absence of the defendant, and such error renders the proceeding void. Gibson v. State, 3 App. 479; Conn v. State, 11 App. 399; Mapes v. State, 13 App. 85; Rudder v. State, 29 App. 262, 15 S. W. 717.

When defendant steps out of the court room during the impaneling of the jury and without the knowledge of the court, the defendant can waive his presence for the time, or, if he did not wish to waive, he should have presented the matter to the court at the time. O'Toole v. State, 49 App. 580, 61 S. W. 246.

Restraint of defendant.—In a prosecution for murder, where the sheriff on one occasion did not take the handcuffs off the accused until the jury were taking their seats, but it did not appear that the jury saw him take the handcuffs off, such custody or restraint of accused was not reversible error. Guerrero v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 731.

Where accused, as member of a company illegally organized in Texas to invade Mexico, was on trial for the killing of a deputy sheriff as an incident to the conspiracy to prevent discovery, and the other conspirators were only captured after he had fled, and another defendant was convicted and imprisoned, defendant was not prejudiced because certain of the alleged co-conspirators were brought into the court room during the trial of accused named. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1153.

Presence during particular proceedings.—Necessity of defendant's presence when sentence is pronounced. Post, arts. 855, 856, and notes.

Accused has the right to be present in court in a felony case, when his motion for a new trial is heard, and, if the record on appeal shows affirmatively that his motion for a new trial was heard and determined in his absence, and that he subsequently objected thereto in the court below, the conviction will be set aside and the cause remanded for a new trial. Gibson v. State, 3 App. 479; Berkley v. State, 4 App. 122; Krautz v. State, Id. 534; Garcia v. State, 5 App. 337.

In a capital case the defendant need not be present at the drawing of the special jury. Pockett v. State, 5 App. 553; Cordova v. State, 6 App. 287. Nor when his motion for a change of venue is heard and determined. Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519.

Where the court received a written communication from the jury, the contents of which divulge to the defendant, and orally refused to answer the communication, stating that it was not proper for him to do so, the proceeding was erroneous, since it is an evasion of the defendant's right to be present, to conduct proceedings secretly. Conn v. State, 11 App. 399.

In the trial court, altered its charge, while defendant was not present, the conviction must be reversed whether the alteration was material or immaterial. Granger v. State, 11 App. 434.

The defendant is entitled to be present when the judgment is entered against him, and when the sentence is pronounced, and when a motion to enter judgment

It is not necessary that the defendant be present while the clerk performs the ministerial act of entering up the judgment. Powers v. State, 23 App. 42, 5 S. W. 159.

While the defendant is entitled to be present when the jury is selected, he cannot complain where he left the courtroom, and one juror was examined and peremptorily challenged by the state before defendant's absence was discovered. Powers v. State, 23 App. 42, 5 S. W. 159.

The court is not authorized to discharge the judge in defendant's absence. Rudder v. State, 29 App. 362, 15 S. W. 717.

The court cannot in the absence of the defendant discharge a juror because of sickness in his family. Upchurch v. State, 26 App. 624, 26 S. W. 266, 44 L. R. A. 694.

But where the court set aside its order overruling the motion for new trial entered in defendant's absence, and set the motion for rehearing where the error was cured. Gonzales v. State, 35 App. 67, 41 S. W. 606.

The defendant must be present when the verdict is rendered in a felony case, but he need not be present in a misdemeanor case. Wyatt v. State, 49 App. 393, 34 S. W. 219.

The principal in an appeal bond is not bound, on scire facias, to make personal appearance, but may appear by counsel. Williams v. State, 51 App. 252, 103 S. W. 929.

A special venire can be ordered, the veniremen drawn and the writ issued, and a criminal case set for trial without the presence of accused or his attorney. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 149, 159 S. W. 235.

The rule that defendant in a trial for felony must be present during any and all proceedings of the actual trial did not require that he should present when the court continued the term in order to finish the trial, as it was authorized to do by Rev. St. 1911, art. 1726. Brucke v. State (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 196.

Effect of absence.—On a trial for murder, after the cross-examination of the state's last witness had begun, it was discovered that the accused was absent, had the sheriff's officer met him by the witness was placed on the stand. Further proceedings were suspended and the evidence withdrawn from the jury; but inasmuch as the witness had testified to important facts, a new trial should have been granted. Bell v. State, 32 App. 436, 24 S. W. 415.

Certain proof having been made in the unobserved absence of defendant in charge of the sheriff, the court, on the return of defendant, charged the jury not to consider such proof as so made, and required the re-introduction of the witness and its correct. Casson v. State, 58 App. 329, 9 S. W. 1.

Where accused, in a prosecution for rape, after the examination of a witness against him, absented himself from the court, and was not present thereafter during the trial, nor while a witness claimed to have testified falsely was giving his evidence, the court, by the absence of accused, lost jurisdiction to continue the trial, and hence the evidence of such witness, though false, did not constitute perjury. Emery v. State, 57 App. 423, 125 S. W. 132, 136 Am. St. Rep. 988.

Where accused during a recess of court retired to a room to await the resuming of the trial, expecting to be advised when the court would be ready to proceed, and while he was absent the state introduced material evidence, a new trial must be granted. Foreman v. State, 60 App. 517, 132 S. W. 637.

In a prosecution for a felony, where accused had been admitted to bail, his absence from the courtroom while his counsel was presenting his case to the jury will not work a mistrial; the court not having knowledge of his absence, and it being the accused's voluntary act. Whitehead v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 685.

Presenting the objection.—On appeal, to constitute material error, the record must show affirmatively the absence of the defendant, and that the attention of the trial court was called to the fact. Swat v. State, 4 App. 617; Cordova v. State, 6 App. 297.

Waiver of right.—When the record shows that defendant's presence on hearing of his motion for a new trial was waived by his counsel, it will be presumed that such waiver was authorized by the defendant. Escarce v. State, 16 App. 96; Bracken v. State, 29 App. 362, 16 S. W. 192; Muely v. State, 51 App. 155, 18 S. W. 411, 19 S. W. 915.

Where a jury came into court during their deliberation and asked that certain evidence be read to them and this was done in the absence of defendant who was out on bond, it was reversible error, even though his counsel stated that he waived his presence. Though the counsel said that he would take no “advantage” or “notice” of the absence, the error was assigned making it necessary for the court to rule. Hill v. State, 51 App. 446, 114 S. W. 118, 119.

Where the defendant (in a felony prosecution) was at his boarding house two blocks from the court when notified that the jury had agreed and started at once to the courthouse but arrived just after the verdict was received and the jury discharged, he was not voluntarily absent and case reversed because defendant not present when verdict was received. Derden v. State, 56 App. 396, 120 S. W. 486, 487, 133 Am. St. Rep. 986.

After the court's charge in criminal slander was prepared in the judge's chambers by the accused's attorney, accused's bond was delivered to an attorney, stated to the judge and to accused's attorney and the state's attorney that accused was not feeling well and would not return to court and hear the charge read, unless she had, when the state's attorney said it was entirely with the accused and her whether she returned. An hour or so afterward the judge, believing all parties were present, began reading the charge to the jury, 348.
Misdemeanors.—Where the prosecution is for a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment, the waiver of defendant’s presence at the trial is in violation of law, but where the punishment assessed is a pecuniary fine only, the judgment is not void because of the defendant’s absence from the trial. Cain v. State, 19 App. 661.

The presence of accused at a misdemeanor trial is not indispensable at every stage. Solman v. State, 72 App. 541.

The statute inhibits any part of the trial in the absence of the defendant in a misdemeanor case where imprisonment is part of the punishment. Washington v. State, 52 App. 325, 106 S. W. 361.

Under this and article 634 a bail bond requiring defendant charged with a misdemeanor to make his personal appearance before the court is more onerous than the law requires. Williams v. State, 51 App. 252, 163 S. W. 936.

Where defendant in a misdemeanor case voluntarily withdraws himself from the court room for a few minutes while his counsel is addressing the jury, the burden if any is of his own making, and the case will not be reversed on this account. Killman v. State, 63 App. 579, 112 S. W. 95, 96.

Defendant in a misdemeanor case, in which it was compulsory for a court to assess a jail penalty, had a right to be present at all stages of the trial. Ex parte Taylor, 63 App. 571, 140 S. W. 774.

That the county court, in a trial of a misdemeanor case in which the assessment of a jail penalty was compulsory, charged the jury in the absence of the defendant was not such an irregularity as to disentitle defendant to relief by habeas corpus. Ex parte Taylor, 63 App. 571, 140 S. W. 774.

In view of Penal Code 1911, art. 1341, and of this article a bail bond in the sum of $100, conditioned for the defendant’s appearance for trial on the charge of the theft of a pair of shoes worth $4, was not excessive. Willis v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 994.

Where, on conviction of a misdemeanor, no jail penalty was assessed, it was not material that defendant’s motion for rehearing was heard in his absence. Davis v. State, 70 App. 663, 158 S. W. 283.

In a prosecution for a misdemeanor, where the defendant’s counsel stated, when the case went to trial, that the defendant was too ill to appear and objected to proceeding with the trial in his absence, the court could not try the case in the defendant’s absence. Love v. State, 71 App. 259, 158 S. W. 532.

Art. 647. [634] Defendant may appear by counsel, when, etc. — In all other cases of misdemeanor, the defendant may, by consent of the attorney representing the state, appear by counsel, and the trial may proceed without his personal presence. [O. C. 541.]

In general.—See ante, art. 646. If the defendant appears by counsel, the latter need not bring into court the money to pay fines and costs. Neavea v. State, 4 App. 1. Where the defendant having been convicted in a justice’s court appealed to the county court, and executed an appeal bond, it was held that he had the right to appear in the county court in spite of the attorney representing the state. Page v. State, 9 App. 468. Where a defendant is tried in his absence under the provision of the preceding article, he must be under bond to waive the right of appeal, or he must appear at the proper time and enter into recognizance, if he desires the benefit of an appeal. His counsel can not enter in such recognizance for him. Ferrill v. State, 29 Tex. 489; Chaney v. State, 23 Tex. 24. Principal in appeal bond may appear by counsel. Williams v. State, 51 App. 252, 103 S. W. 929.

Art. 648. [635] Defendant on bail.—When the defendant in a case of felony is on bail, he shall, before the trial commences, be placed in the custody of the sheriff, and his bail be considered as discharged. [O. C. 542.]

When the above article was carried into the revision of 1911 it had been superseded by Act 1907, p. 31, ch. 15, § 2. The revisers of 1911 overlooked the fact of supersession and incorporated the above section of the act of 1907 into the new code. As art. 635 (Cr. App.) 648, the provision was omitted and an entirely new section substituted. The superseding provision is the existing law of the state in view of the decision in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 626; Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 159 S. W. 505, and other decisions. The text of the new provision is as follows:

Where the defendant in cases of felonies is on bail when his trial commences, the same shall not thereby be considered as discharged until the jury shall return into court a verdict of guilty and the defendant taken in custody by the sheriff, and he shall have the same right to have and remain on bail during the trial of his case and up to the return into court of such verdict of guilty as under the law he now has before the trial commences; but immediately upon the return into court of such verdict of guilty he shall be placed in the custody of the sheriff and his bail considered as discharged. [Act 1907, p. 31, ch. 19, § 2, superseding art. 635 revised C. C. P. 1895.]

In general.—The sureties are not discharged until the defendant has appeared before the proper court and entered his plea. This may be, and under the statute should be, before the jury is impaneled. There is no interregnum between his bail and his trial. That is his final plea, unless he has been surrendered by his sureties to the sheriff. Fossett v. State, 43 App. 117, 67 S. W. 322, 324.

Where one is on bail in a felony case he should not be remanded to jail during the trial but should be permitted to be at large until a verdict of guilty is returned. Spencer v. State, 52 App. 290, 106 S. W. 356; Choice v. State, 52 App. 288, 106 S. W. 588.

Where a prisoner made a second application for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain bail prior to her trial, it was error to refuse a hearing prior to the trial and to refuse to hear the application except in connection with the trial of the case; on the ground that, having heard the first writ, "knew that the evidence offered on the second hearing would be practically the same." Straight v. State, 52 App. 462, 138 S. W. 742.

The sheriff may not take accused into custody until after a verdict of guilty has been rendered, and accused will then be taken into custody and his sureties discharged when he is entitled to his discharge under the bond. Wisconsin v. State, 70 App. 477, 156 S. W. 633.

Misdemeanors.—The statute permitting persons accused of crime to remain at liberty on bail during the trial does not apply to misdemeanors. Ex parte Caldwell, 58 App. 230, 125 S. W. 25.

A person convicted of a misdemeanor is not entitled to liberty on his bail for appearance at trial pending his motion for a new trial. Ex parte Caldwell, 58 App. 230, 125 S. W. 25.

Art. 649. [636] Sureties still bound in case of mistrial.—If there be a mistrial in a case of felony, the original sureties of the defendant shall be still held bound for his appearance until they surrender him in accordance with the provisions of this Code. [O. C. 543.]

Explanatory.—The above provision is not necessarily inconsistent with the act of 1907 superseding art. 648, though the new act may carry the necessary inference that the liability of the sureties continues in case of a mistrial, since in such case there is no verdict of guilty.

Art. 650. [637] Criminal docket shall be kept.—There shall be kept by each clerk of the district and county court, and by each inferior court having jurisdiction in criminal cases, a docket in which shall be set down the style of each criminal action, the file number thereof, the nature of the offense, the names of counsel and the proceedings had therein, and the date of each proceeding. [O. C. 544.]

Art. 651. [638] District court shall fix a day for criminal docket.—The district court shall, on the first day of its organization at each term, fix a day for taking up the criminal docket, which shall be noted on the minutes; but in case of failure to make such order, the criminal docket may be taken up on any day not earlier than the third day of the term. [O. C. 545.]

In general.—It is proper to call a capital case for trial on the return day of the special venire, whether it has then been reached on the docket or not. Mitchell v. State, 42 Tex. 913.

This article is controlled in a capital case by art. 650, post, which expressly authorizes the court to set any day of the term for the trial of a capital case. Gaines v. State, 28 App. 292, 42 S. W. 385.

The order in which cases on the docket are called is largely a matter for the trial court's discretion, and its action is not reversible error unless accused is injured thereby. Goodwin v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 593.

Art. 652. [639] County court shall hold a term for criminal business.—The county court of each county shall hold a term for criminal business on the first Monday in every month, or at such other time as may have been fixed in accordance with law; but no criminal action shall be called for trial before nine o'clock a. m. of the first day of such term. [Act June 16, 1876, p. 17, § 2.]

In general.—See Const., art. 5, sec. 17; also Amendment to Const., Acts, 1883, pp. 124, 125; Wilson v. State, 15 App. 150; Thomas v. State, 14 App. 200.

A plea of guilty may be received and the cause disposed of in vacation, in the county court. Ante, art. 583.

One convicted at a term of the county court fixed by the commissioners' court, as authorized by Const. art. 5, § 29, cannot complain of the failure of the county court to hold a term every month for criminal business, as required by section 17. Matthews v. State, 57 App. 328, 122 S. W. 544.

Art. 653. [640] Defendant required to plead.—In all cases less than capital, the defendant is required, when his cause is called for trial, before it proceeds further, to plead by himself or his counsel whether or not he is guilty. [O. C. 546.]

A plea was not entered until after the evidence was all in and the arguments begun, the conviction cannot stand, though there was no prejudice to defendant. Cole v. State, 11 App. 67.

The court cannot enter a plea of not guilty for defendant unless the latter refuses to plead and has opportunity to do so as is given. Shaw v. State, 17 App. 225.

This article, however, is directory only, and it suffices if, after the jury is impaneled and the indictment read to the defendant, he is required to plead, or plea of "not guilty" is entered for him. McGrew v. State, 31 App. 345, 20 S. W. 740.

It is under these provisions of the statute that the plea of the defendant which party is placed on trial in a criminal case. Sims v. State, 49 App. 199, 91 S. W. 580.

Record of plea.—Where defendant's motions for new trial and in arrest, charged that he was not offered the opportunity to plead and that the judgment entered on plea being corrected, which motions were supported by uncontradicted affidavits of defendant and bystanders, the motions should have been sustained. Shaw v. State, 17 App. 225.

The uncorroborated affidavit of the defendant could not avail against a judgment recital that defendant pleaded not guilty. Gordon v. State, 29 App. 410, 16 S. W. 337.

Art. 654. [641] Meaning of the term "called for trial."—By the term "called for trial" is meant the stage of the cause when both parties have announced that they are ready, or when a continuance, having been applied for, has been denied. [O. C. 547.]

In general.—See note to art. 651, ante.

This article and article 653 are directory and not mandatory. McGrew v. State, 31 App. 336, 20 S. W. 740.

Withdrawal of announcement of ready.—The fact of surprise alone is not a ground for the postponement of the case or withdrawal of announcement of ready. Morrison v. State, 40 App. 489, 51 S. W. 358.

Order of cases.—A case cannot be called out of its order and defendant forced to trial in advance of a number of cases preceding his on the docket. Thomas v. State, 36 Tex. 215.

But the court has some discretion as to the order of its business and where cases are tried out of their regular order, to secure the attendance of jurors or witnesses or to try jail cases first, the convictions will not be reversed unless the defendant was thereby prejudiced. Nichols v. State, 3 App. 546; Jones v. State, 8 App. 648; Wright v. State, 10 App. 476.

Where a case is postponed to procure additional witnesses, the next case can be tried in the meantime. Jones v. State, 8 App. 648; Shehane v. State, 13 App. 533.

In mere matters of procedure and the order of calling cases, an alleged erroneous ruling will not be reversed in any event, unless injury or injustice is clearly shown. Todd v. State, 57 App. 28, 121 S. W. 506.

Where a larger number appeared on the trial docket preceding others of a lower number in regular order, the fact that they were called in the order in which they appeared, and that accused was forced to try an indictment for illegal sale of liquor prior to an indictment for running a disorderly house, of a lower number, was not error. Todd v. State, 57 App. 15, 121 S. W. 506.

Where a large number of cases were on the docket for trial on the day accused's case was tried, and, reading from the top to the bottom of the column in which the setting appeared, the causes were in the order, "12,084, 12,083, 12,082," and were called in that order by the court, except that cause No. 12,082 was not tried, accused was not entitled to object that he was forced to trial of case No. 12,084 before the trial of No. 12,082. Todd v. State, 57 App. 26, 121 S. W. 506.

Where a case was set for trial over the objection of the defendant on the same day as seventeen other cases, and tried three days later after various dispositions made been made of the other cases, and no motion for continuance was filed by the defendant, there was no abuse of discretion in proceeding with the trial, even though there were a number of days later in the term when it could have been tried, it cases were originally set for those dates and then continued. Creech v. State, 70 App. 229, 158 S. W. 277.
CHAPTER TWO

OF THE DRAWING OF JURORS, AND OF THE SPECIAL VENIRE IN CAPITAL CASES

Art. 655. Definition of a "special venire."
655a. Officer willfully or negligently failing to perform duty, penalty.
655b. Penalty for putting in or taking from wheel or violating any provisions of this law.
655c. In case no jurors, or not a sufficient number have been select-et, etc.
655d. Same subject.
655e. Service of writ.
655f. Return of writ.
655g. Sheriff shall be instructed by court as to summoning jurors.
655h. Defendant served with copy of list, etc.
655i. One day's service of copy before trial.

Article 655. [642] Definition of a special venire.—A “special venire” is a writ issued by order of the district court, in a capital case, commanding the sheriff to summon such a number of persons, not less than thirty-six, as the court in its discretion may order, to appear before the court on a day named in the writ, from whom the jury for the trial of such case is to be selected.  [O. C. 548.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 501, 504.

in general.—As to the order and writ, see post, art. 658, and notes.

Amended by act March 14, 1887, p. 20, omitting maximum number of sixty.

The statutes relating to special venire in capital cases are, for the most part, directory, and must be liberally construed.  Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 354, 132 S.
W. 766; Murray v. State, 21 App. 466, 1 S. W. 522; Roberts v. State, 20 App. 291, 17 S. W. 450, and cases cited.

The court cannot excuse special venire men in the absence of the defendant.

Ch. v. State, 49 App. 604, 51 S. W. 370.

The order for special venire may be made at the term preceding the trial.

These articles intend to provide the character of venire from which a jury in a capital case is to be selected and the obligation is cast upon the State in the first instance to ask for this special venire.  If the State has not acted, and the court has not taken the steps to provide for this special tribunal, it is the defendant's right to object to being tried by any other than a special venire at any time prior to his agreement to be tried by the regular jury.  He can, however, waive his right to be tried by a special venire.  Farrar v. State, 44 App. 296, 79
S. W. 210.

Capital case.—When a charge of murder in the first degree has been reduced by the county attorney dismissing as to that degree and going to trial on a lesser degree, the defendant is not entitled to have a special venire drawn.  Gentry v.
State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 635; Clay v. State, 70 App. 593, 48 S. W. 184.

Where the defendant is prosecuted for murder in the first, but is convicted of murder in the second degree, and is awarded a new trial, he is not entitled to a special venire.  Cheek v. State, 4 App. 444.

Murder by a person whom the prosecuting attorney admits is under 17 years of age is not a capital case, and does not entitle accused to a special venire.
Ex parte Walker, 28 App. 246, 13 S. W. 861; Walker v. State, 28 App. 603, 13 S.
W. 866.

Where an indictment contained two counts charging robbery and one charging theft from the person, and the county attorney dismissed the counts charging robbery after defendant requested a special venire, it was not error for the court to refuse to summon a special venire.  Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1184.

Number of veniremen.—The writ of special venire must include not fewer than three persons to be summoned.  Harrison v. State, 4 App. 638; Wasson v.
State, 3 App. 474; Hall v. State, 2 App. 446, 12 S. W. 739; Taylor v. State, 14
App. 340.

It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse accused's request for a venire of 100 instead of 50 men on the ground that, as a codefendant had just been tried, doubtlessly the facts shown on that trial had been extensively circulated in the county, especially since in selecting the jury accused procured 31 jurors out of the panel

Number sitting appearing.—The fact that not all of the persons named in the venire were summoned, even if the number summoned be less than thirty-six, does not invalidate the venire.  Hall v. State, 28 App. 146, 12 S. W. 739; Tay-

The fact that one of the named veniremen was dead and another was outside the state is not a sufficient ground for quashing the venire.  Smith v. State,
21 App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.
On call of special venire, one of the number was found to be absent. Defendant asked for a postponement until the absent juror could be brought in, which was refused. Upon his application for an attachment was issued for said juror. Upon his appearance, he was peremptorily challenged by defendant. Held, that defendant could not be heard to complain. Shaw v. State, 32 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588.

It is not ground for quashing a special venire that only 42 of 100 persons were present when the others being disqualified or excused by the parties where there was no unfaithfulness, the jury was completed out of the first 50 venire discharged, W. Holding, 38 App. 492, 43 S. W. 352.

And where the number of the special venire would have been ground for quashing the venire, yet defendant having declined and refused to move to quash it, but elected not to do so, even on suggestion of the court, there was a waiver, as he cannot complain of the court's refusal to delay trial in order to obtain the presence of such veniremen under attachment; especially where all his challenges to veniremen were sustained, and no objectionable juror was imposed on him. Chandler v. State, 60 App. 329, 181 S. W. 598.

Where the veniremen not served with summons were either out of the county or not found, and, of the 45 served, only 4 of those not appearing were unexcused and unaccounted for, leaving 23 present, and no attachments were asked for the absent jurors, a motion to quash the venire was properly overruled. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 132 S. W. 445.

Where the court ordered a special venire of 200 men, but when the case was called only 67 responded, of whom all were excused by the court, or by consent, except 40, the action of the court in refusing a complete venire out of which to select the jury and in requiring the defendant to proceed with the qualification and selecting veniremen after the part of the venire present was exhausted, was not error, in the absence of a motion to quash the venire, or of showing that defendant suffered any injury. Johnson v. State, 63 App. 150, 133 S. W. 1011.

A motion to quash a special venire in a homicide case because only 80 men were drawn and 54 of them summoned, and only 10 of those summoned answered, and some of those summoned were properly excused, was properly denied; accused in no way seeking any attachment for any of the veniremen not attending. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 110, 159 S. W. 215.

When the objection that a number of jurors were not summoned was presented to the court, it made an investigation, in which accused's counsel participated, and it was found that those not summoned were not in the county, and that those summoned and not in attendance had served longer than required by law for the term, and the court told them they could leave their excuse for nonattendance with the sheriff, and it would send for them if necessary, and such excuses were submitted to accused's counsel, and the court offered to have the jurors summoned and brought in, but accused's counsel acquiesced in their nonattendance, and did not ask for an attachment, and accused procured a satisfactory jury without exhausting his challenges. Held, that there was no error in not requiring the venire to be quashed. Ward v. State, 70 App. 392, 159 S. W. 272.

The fact that but 13 of the original 38 veniremen answered to their names was no ground for quashing the venire. Keets v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 149.

Names of veniremen.—A special venire will not be quashed on account of discrepancies between the names of some of the persons drawn, and the names written in the list served on the defendant, when such persons did not serve on the trial jury, and the defendant did not exhaust his challenges. Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617.

Where defendant does not exhaust his peremptory challenges, and no objectionable juror is chosen, it is not reversible error to overrule a motion to quash a special venire on the ground that one with the same name was on the writ, and then served it as changed. Williams v. State, 29 App. 89, 14 S. W. 388.

"Rowland" and "Roland" are idem sonans. Deckard v. State, 57 App. 359, 123 S. W. 417.

W. C. "Brackeen" was drawn on the venire, and served as foreman of the jury, and signed the verdict by that name, but signed it so that it looked like "Brecheen." Accused's counsel had known the juror for years, and accepted him as a juror, and saw him hand the verdict to the court, and heard it read with his name written on it, without objection. Held, that accused could not have been prejudiced by any apparent misspelling of the juror's name. Jones v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 555.

Second venire. —Until a special venire has been exhausted or discharged with defendant's consent, it is error for the court to order the issuance and execution of an additional venire. Sharpe v. State, 17 App. 498; Bates v. State, 19 Tex. 129; Hall v. State, 28 App. 146, 13 S. W. 739.

The law does not authorize the selection of two special venires at the same time. Foster v. State, 38 App. 525, 13 S. W. 1069.

Art. 656. [643] State may obtain order for special venire, etc. —When there is pending in any district court a criminal action for a capital offense, the district or county attorney may, at any time after indictment found, on motion either written or oral, obtain an order for a special venire to be issued in such case.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 901.

As to what is a capital case, see notes to art. 655, ante.

The trial court may, at the request of the state on the continuance of a capital case, order a special venire, returnable at the next succeeding term, and set the case for trial on a day certain of such succeeding term. Roberts v. State, 30 App. 291, 17 S. W. 480.

It devolves upon the state in the first instance to ask for a special venire. If the state defaults in this respect, the defendant has the right, at any time before the regular jury, to object to being tried by any other than a special venire. Farrar v. State, 44 App. 256, 70 S. W. 210.

The failure of a defendant in a capital case to demand a special venire prior to the overruling of his motion for continuance, is not tantamount to waiver of his right to such venire. Farrar v. State, 44 App. 256, 70 S. W. 210.

Art. 657. [644] Defendant may obtain special venire, when.—The defendant in a capital case may also obtain an order for a special venire at any time after his arrest upon an indictment found, upon a motion in writing, supported by the affidavit of himself or counsel, stating that he expects to be ready for the trial of his case at the present term of the court.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 902.

In general.—As to what is a capital case, see notes to art. 655, ante.

Depriving accused of his right to select his trial jury from the original special venire held error. Hall v. State, 28 App. 146, 12 S. W. 729.

Failure to demand special venire.—A party prosecuted for robbery by use of firearms is entitled to a special venire even if it would cause a continuance to great inconvenience, and to one day's service of a copy of such venire, and it is no answer or excuse that the defendant did not call for such venire. Burries v. State, 36 App. 15, 36 S. W. 164.

As to defendant's failure to demand special venire, see Farrar v. State, 44 App. 236, 70 S. W. 210.

Art. 658. [645] Order of the court; writ.—The order of the court for the issuance of the writ shall specify the number of persons required to be summoned, and the time when such persons shall attend, and the time when such writ shall be returnable; and the clerk shall forthwith issue the writ in accordance with such order.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 903.

Order.—See White v. State, 18 Tex. 206.

The order must be for not less than thirty-six persons. Harrison v. State, 3 App. 558; Wason v. State, Id. 474; Taylor v. State, 14 App. 346. On appeal the record must show the order for a special venire, or the conviction will not be affirmed, although no objection in limine was made to the organization of the jury. It will be presumed that such order was inferred that such Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771. Overruled, Williams v. State, 29 App. 89, 14 S. W. 388; Hall v. State, 28 App. 146, 12 S. W. 729.

Where no objection was taken in the trial court that the record did not show an order for a special venire, it will be presumed on appeal that such order as the law prescribes was made and entered, or that it was waived. Williams v. State, 29 App. 89, 14 S. W. 388, overruling Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 773.

Where a capital case was continued for the term the court could, on the motion of the state, before the end of the term order a special venire returnable at the next term. Roberts v. State, 30 App. 291, 17 S. W. 450.

Writ.—See White v. State, 16 Tex. 206.

It is not essential that special venire in a murder case be captioned as of the case pending, or contain name of deceased. Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617.

An objection that the seal impressed on the writ omitted the word "of" before the name of the county, is hypercritical. Cordova v. State, 6 App. 298.

A special venire writ which showed the style and number of the case, though it was preliminary recited it the name of the court or county in which the case was pending, but distinctly stated in the mandatory part that the persons named were to be summoned to be and appear before the district court of Williamson county, Texas, at the courthouse, therefor, in Georgetown town, on a day specified, was held to be sufficient, and not obnoxious to the objection that it did not show in what case it was issued, nor in what cause the said proceedings were pending. Murray v. State, 21 App. 405, 1 S. W. 522.

A writ of special venire facias, which was executed and returned by the sheriff, will not be quashed because it was improperly directed to the "sheriff or any constable," instead of the sheriff alone. Suit v. State, 30 App. 319, 17 S. W. 458; Jackson v. State, 30 App. 664, 18 S. W. 643.

A special venire issued in a capital case which names the case by style and number and the court in which it is pending, and which gives the date to which the same is returnable, is sufficient, and it need not state that the case is a capital one or state the nature of the offense. Harrison v. State, 69 App. 534, 132 S. W. 782.
Where a special venire in a capital case was actually issued on August 16th, and was made returnable on September 1st, following, and the jurors appeared on September 3d under authority and by direction of the writ, the fact that the certificate of the clerk at the bottom of the venire bore the date of September 10th did not render the writ invalid. Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 524, 152 S. W. 762.

Amendment of writ or minutes.—As to amendment of sheriff’s return, see notes to art. 669, post.

The special venire writ may be amended as to impossible dates. Suit v. State, 39 App. 219, 17 S. W. 428. See, also, Hall v. State, 28 App. 116, 12 S. W. 739; Roberts v. State, 30 App. 294, 17 S. W. 460; Brotherton v. State, 30 App. 369, 17 S. W. 932.

Where the order for a venire in a case was not entered in the minutes by the clerk, it was proper, after the return of the venire, to make the minutes conform to the order. English v. State, 34 App. 199, 39 S. W. 233.

Art. 659. [646] Capital cases may be set for particular day.—A capital case may, by agreement of the parties, be set for trial or disposition for any particular day of the term with the permission of the court; or the court may, at its discretion, set a day for the trial or disposition of the same; and the day agreed upon by the parties, or fixed by the court, may be changed and some other day fixed, should the court at any time deem it advisable.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 962.

In general.—Ante, art. 651, and notes.

A capital case may be taken up on the day fixed, though it is thereby called out of its order on the docket. Mitchell v. State, 43 Tex. 512.

When a case is continued for the term the court may, before the expiration of that term, set it for trial on a certain day of the succeeding term. Roberts v. State, 30 App. 291, 17 S. W. 450.

Under this article the case may be set for trial on a day preceding the day fixed for taking up the criminal docket under the provisions of art. 651, ante.

Gaines v. State, 38 App. 262, 42 S. W. 385.

Art. 660. [647] Manner of selecting special venire.—Whenever a special venire is ordered, the clerk or his deputy, in the presence and under the direction of the judge, shall draw from the wheel containing the names of jurors, the number of names required for such special venire, and shall prepare a list of such names in the order in which they are drawn from the wheel, and attach such lists to the writ and deliver the same to the sheriff; and the cards containing such names shall be sealed up in an envelope, and shall be retained by the clerk for distribution, as herein provided. If, from the names so drawn, any of the men are impaneled on the jury and serve as many as four days, the cards containing the names of the men so serving shall be put by the clerk, or his deputy, in the box provided for that purpose, and the cards containing the names of the men not impaneled shall again be placed by the clerk, or his deputy, in the wheel containing the names of the eligible jurors.

[Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 82, § 23; amended 1907, p. 271.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 961, 964.

In general.—The drawing of a special venire is a proceeding preliminary to trial, and it is not essential that the defendant or his counsel be present thereat. Cordova v. State, 6 App. 287; Pocket v. State, 5 App. 552. Nor is it essential that the clerk in person should draw the names from the box. And the box used may be an ordinary cigar box with any kind of a lid. Pocket v. State, 5 App. 552. A special venire shall be selected from the names of those persons selected by the jury commissioners to do service for the term. Weaver v. State, 19 App. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 339; Roberts v. State, 30 App. 291, 17 S. W. 450; Brotherton v. State, 30 App. 369, 17 S. W. 322; Jones v. State, 21 App. 177, 20 S. W. 354.

The statute does not require the names of talesmen to be placed in the box and drawn by lot and placed on the list in the order drawn. Locklin v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 367.

A defendant has a right, in a capital case, to demand special venire drawn in accordance with the statutes on the subject. To deny him such right is error. Oates v. State, 48 App. 131, 86 S. W. 770, 771.

It is the policy of the law that jurors be drawn by commissioners, and not selected by the sheriff or any officer. Knight v. State (Cr. App.) 247 S. W. 258.

There can be no fatal objection to the venire that in the county where it was drawn, there were many qualified jurors whose names were not in the wheel, where it was not shown that they were known to the officers, or contended that the omission of their names was intentional or hurtful to the defendant. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 255.
Constitutionality.—See Giebel v. State, 28 App. 151, 12 S. W. 591.

This article, when construed in connection with post, art. 664, is constitutional as a general law applicable to certain counties in Texas, and is not obnoxious on the ground that it is a special law or that it is class legislation. Logan v. State, 64 App. 74, 111 S. W. 1028; Brown v. State, 54 App. 121, 112 S. W. 50; Smith v. State, 53 S. W. 285; Brown v. State, 55 App. 9, 114 S. W. 830; Halsford v. State, 56 App. 118, 120 S. W. 193; Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370; Raso r v. State, 57 App. 10, 121 S. W. 512; Snowberger v. State, 58 App. 530, 126 S. W. 878; Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

Discrimination.—Evidence, on a motion in a criminal case to quash the special venire, that the ground on which the negro race had been discriminated against, was unsustained, where the only testimony was that of a juror commissioner that no intentional discrimination against the negro race was made in the selection of jurors for the particular term of court, but that the members selected good men whom they personally knew to act as jurors. Hemphill v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 154.

An objection that defendant, a negro, was discriminated against, in violation of Const. Amends. U. S. 14, 15, in that the jury commission did not draw a negro on the petit jury, came too late when first made after conviction. Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 202.

Art. 661. [647a] Same.—Whenever the names of the persons selected by the jury commissioners to do jury service for the term shall have been drawn one time to answer summons to a venire facias, then the names of the persons selected by the said commissioners, and which form the special venire list, shall be placed upon tickets of similar size and color of paper, and the tickets placed in a box and well shaken up; and, from this box, the clerk, in the presence of the judge, in open court, shall draw the number of names required for further venire service, and shall prepare a list of such names, in the order in which they are drawn from the box, and attach such list to the writ, and deliver the same to the sheriff; and it shall furthermore be the duty of the clerk, and he shall prevent the name of any person from appearing more than twice on all of such lists. [Amended Act 1905, p. 18.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 901, 904. See art. 663, post.

In general.—Where the writ commanded the sheriff to summon the sixty individuals named therein, it sufficiently shows that they had been previously selected, and it will be presumed in the absence of a showing to the contrary that they were selected in the manner required by law. Smith v. State, 21 App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.

Where the court orders a special venire of 90 men, and the clerk issues a writ for only 60, defendant's motion to quash the venire should be granted. Hunter v. State, 34 App. 599, 31 S. W. 674.

This act does not conflict with the previous law in regard to petit jurors drawn for service during the ensuing term. The only change in this respect is that it requires the jury commissioners to draw what is termed in this act of the Twenty-ninth Legislature a special venire list. This is an additional list of names to serve on special venires exclusively, and these cannot be called into service until the jurors summoned for regular service have been exhausted under the terms of the act, either by serving one week in the district court as petit jurors, and once on the special venire, or twice on special venires. When this has been done the clerk shall then resort to special venire jurors and the list selected specially for that purpose. In other words, the purpose of the act is to require the exhaustion of the petit jurors before resorting to those specially drawn for special venire service for the further purpose of using those jurors so specially drawn as talesmen. Moore v. State, 49 App. 629, 95 S. W. 516.

This article provides for a special venire list to be drawn by the jury commissioners out of which talesmen are to be drawn when the special venire authorized by the old law has been exhausted. Gahler v. State, 49 App. 625, 95 S. W. 523.

This amended article provides a further list of names from which special venires are to be drawn after the jurors for the term have been drawn once on any special venire. The purpose of the act being to equalize jury service among the citizens amenable thereto. Mays v. State, 50 App. 155, 96 S. W. 331.

Drawing the venire.—See ante, art. 660, and notes.

Where one hundred names had been drawn from the list of two hundred and fifty venire for the term prior to the time defendant's special venire was drawn it was proper to draw his venire from the remaining one hundred and fifty-two names without replacing the one hundred names in the box. Saye v. State, 50 App. 509, 99 S. W. 558.

358
Additional talesmen.—This act is inapplicable to the selection of talesmen and does not prevent the court from directing the sheriff under art. 662, to summon talesmen according to his own selection. May v. State, 50 App. 165, 98 S. W. 329; Wallace v. State (Cr. App.) 97 S. W. 1051. But see Keith v. State, 50 App. 63, 94 S. W. 1046.

The Act 1908 amended Title 8, chapter 2, by adding this article (617a), but this article does not repeal article 666 authorizing the court to order sheriff to summon enough jurors to make up the venire. Gibson v. State, 53 App. 349, 110 S. W. 47, 48.

Art. 661a. Special venire, how summoned.—Whenever district court shall have convened, and a day shall have been set for the trial of the different capital cases which call for a special venire, the men whose names may have been drawn to answer summons to the venire facias in the different capital cases shall be immediately notified by the sheriff to be in attendance on the court on the day and week for which they were respectively drawn to serve as veniremen for said day and week; and such notice shall be given at least one day prior to the time when such duty is to be performed, exclusive of the day of service. [Acts 1905, p. 17, amending Rev. St. 1895 by adding art. 3175a thereto.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised Code of Procedure of 1911. Though it had its being by way of amendment of Rev. Civ. St. 1895, by adding thereto, art. 3175a, it seems to relate solely to criminal matter, and it is inserted in this compilation, in view of the decisions in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 626.

Art. 662. Not to amend or repeal chapter 1, title 7, this Code.—Nothing contained herein is to be construed as in any manner amending or repealing any part of chapter 1, title 7, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [Act 1907, p. 272.]

Constitutionality.—See notes to art. 660, ante.

Art. 663. Repeals article 661 as to counties with cities of 20,000.—Article 661 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended by the act of 1905, page 18, is hereby repealed, so far as it applies to all counties of this State having a city or cities aggregating twenty thousand or more in population. [Id.]

Constitutionality.—See notes to art. 660, ante.

Application.—A county which has two cities aggregating a population of 20,000 comes within this article. Logan v. State, 54 App. 74, 111 S. W. 1028.

The provision of the Code requiring that a venire should be drawn from a wheel applies only to counties containing a city of more than 20,000 population. Asbeck v. State, 70 App. 225, 156 S. W. 925.

Art. 664. Certain officers to select jurors.—That between the 1st and 15th days of August of each year, in all counties in this State having therein a city or cities containing a population aggregating twenty thousand (20,000) or more people, as shown by the United States census of date next preceding such action, the tax collector of such county or one of his deputies, together with the tax assessor of such county or one of his deputies, together with the sheriff of such county or one of his deputies, together with the county clerk of such county or one of his deputies, together with the clerk of such county or one of his deputies, shall meet at the court house of such county and shall select from the list of qualified jurors of such county as shown by the tax lists in the tax assessor's office for the current year, the jurors for service in the district and county courts of such county for the ensuing year in the manner hereinafter provided. [Act 1907, ch. 139, § 10; Act 1911, p. 150, ch. 82, § 1, superseding part of art. 664, revised C. C. P. 1911.]

Explanatory.—The words "hereinafter provided" have reference to arts. 615-618, Vernon's Statutes Civil St. 1914, and to arts. 664a and 665, post.

Art. 664a. Officer wilfully or negligently failing to perform duty, penalty.—If any of said officers shall wilfully or negligently fail to serve as herein provided, or if any of the said officers shall wilfully or negligently fail to designate one of the deputies for such service, or if, after such designation, such deputy shall wilfully or negligently fail to serve, the officer so failing to serve or to designate a deputy, or the deputy so failing to serve, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars. [Act 1907, ch. 139, § 10.]

Explanatory.—This article constituted the second sentence of art. 664, C. C. P. as revised in 1911. The first sentence was amended by Laws 1911, ch. 82, and as so amended appears above as art. 661.

Constitutionality.—See notes to art. 660, ante.

Art. 665. Person putting in or taking from wheel, violating any provision of this law or failing to perform any duty, penalty.—If any person shall put into the wheel, or take from the wheel, except at the times and in the manner provided for by law, a card or cards bearing the name or names of any person, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars. If any person shall violate any of the provisions of this law, or shall wilfully or negligently fail or neglect to perform any duty herein required of him, then, where no penalty is specifically imposed by the terms of this law, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars. [Id., p. 272.]

Constitutionality.—See notes to art. 660, ante.

Art. 666. [648] In case no jurors, or not a sufficient number.—When, from any cause, no jurors have been selected by the jury commissioners for the term, or when there shall not be a sufficient number of those selected to make the number required for the special venire, the court shall order the sheriff to summon a sufficient number of good and intelligent citizens who are qualified jurors in the county to make the number required by the special venire.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 968.

In general.—A special venire shall be selected from the names of those persons who have been selected by the jury commissioners to do service during the term, and until those names are exhausted the court is not authorized to send to the body of the county for a special venire or for talesmen to complete the panel. Sharpe v. State, 17 App. 486. When there has been a failure by jury commissioners to select persons for jury service, the court may order the requisite number to be summoned from the body of the county. In the absence of a contrary showing, the presumption obtains that the jurors had been selected in the manner required by law, and that the venireman named in the list was dead, and that another was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, does not invalidate the venire. Smith v. State, 21 App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.

Where there were only thirty-six jurors drawn for the term, a special venire in a robbery case including these thirty-six and other jurors is authorized by this article. Delaney v. State, 48 App. 594, 90 S. W. 643.

This article was not repealed by the Act of 1905 adding article 647a to Code of Criminal Procedure. Gibson v. State, 53 App. 249, 130 S. W. 47, 48.

Where there was no willful violation of the statute requiring the jury commission to draw a jury panel, there was no error in forcing one to be tried before a jury summoned by the sheriff under the direction of the court. McKnight v. State, 57 App. 594, 124 S. W. 423.

Where only 17 of the jury drawn by jury commissioners were in attendance, the others having been excused, and the panel was filled with talesmen by the sheriff by order of the court, there was no error. Gentry v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 635.

Oath of sheriff.—See post, art. 670, and notes.

Art. 667. [649] Same subject.—When, from any cause, there is a failure to select a jury from those who have been summoned upon the special venire, the court shall order the sheriff to summon any number of persons that it may deem advisable for the formation of the jury.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 968.

In general.—See also, notes to art. 666, ante.

Prior to the enactment of this article it was held that when the special venire was exhausted before the jury was completed the regular jurors for the week should be reordered to before the sheriff was ordered to summon talesmen. Roberts v. State, 7 App. 111. This rule was followed after the article was adopted in Weaver v. State, 19 App. 547, 53 Am. Rep. 388, and Cahn v. State, 27 App. 769, 11 S. W. 723, and that practice was approved, though the failure to observe it was held harmless in Williams v. State, 29 App. 89, 14 S. W. 338. But the Weaver and Cohn cases were expressly overruled in Weatherby v. State, 29 App. 278, 15 S. W. 832, which held that under this article the court was not bound to call the jurors for the week before ordering the sheriff to summon the jurors. If the rule has been followed in Brosberton v. State, 39 App. 309, 17 S. W. 921; Thompson v. State, 33 App. 271, 14 S. W. 192; and Deen v. State, 37 App. 506, 46 S. W. 566.

Where the sheriff, of his own motion, summoned additional tellers in place of the veniremen he could not serve, the venire need not be quashed, but the jury may be selected from the jurors on the venire and from those thereafter summoned by the sheriff. The court, though some of them were the same persons as were erroneously summoned by him, Harris v. State, 6 App. 97; Adams v. State, 35 App. 205, 33 S. W. 254.

There is no conflict between article 361 and this article which refers to selection and summoning of tellers. Each stand and the manner of selecting tellers remains unchanged. Mays v. State, 50 App. 165, 98 S. W. 322.

After the special venire in a homicide case was exhausted, the jury was properly completed from jurors summoned by the sheriff. Williams v. State, 60 App. 463, 122 S. W. 345.

The statute providing for special venires and the organization of a jury is directory only, so that, where a special venire has been exhausted the court may properly order the summons of sufficient tellers out of which to complete the jury. Bullock v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 196.

Order.—It is not error for the court verbally to order the sheriff to summon additional jurors. Roberts v. State, 5 App. 141; Harris v. State, 6 App. 97.

Necessity.—Accused having requested the court to issue process for absent jurors, the clerk was directed to issue an attachment, which was placed in the hands of the sheriff, who within two hours reported back to the court that the absent jurors could not be found in the city, and that they lived in the country at a distance ranging from 8 to 20 miles. The sheriff had previously returned that eight of them could not be found in the county. Held, that the sheriff’s diligence was insufficient to justify the court in ordering tellers. Rasor v. State, 57 App. 10, 121 S. W. 512.

Prejudicial error.—A special venire having been exhausted, tellers to complete the panel were summoned from the city in which the trial was being had. Defendant moved to quash this second venire upon the ground of local prejudice, and to have jurors summoned from the country. Held, that the motion was properly overruled. Grissom v. State, 4 App. 374.

Where there was nothing to show that any prejudice existed against defendant in the minds of tellers improperly summoned, and it also appeared that he received the minimum punishment for an offense clearly proved, a conviction would not be reversed because of the court’s error in ordering tellers on an insufficient showing. Rasor v. State, 57 App. 10, 121 S. W. 512.

Objection to being required to be tried before a “picked-up” jury comes too late when first made after verdict. Ellington v. State, 62 App. 427, 140 S. W. 1101.

Oath of sheriff.—See post, art. 670, and notes.

Art. 668. [650] Service of writ.—The sheriff or other officer executing the writ shall summon the persons whose names are upon the list attached to the writ, to be and appear before the court at the time named in such writ, which summons shall be made verbally upon the jurors in person.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 965.

In general.—Under a previous statute the service of the writ might also be made by leaving a written notice at the jurors’ place of residence, with a member of his family over sixteen years old. Cordova v. State, 6 App. 207. And such is the law with respect to service upon regular jurors. Sayles' Civ. Stat. art. 3066. A special venire summoned by means of postal cards is no summons at all in law. Clay v. State, 40 App. 603, 51 S. W. 370.

Art. 669. [651] Return of writ.—The officer executing the writ shall return the same promptly on or before the time it is made returnable. The return shall state the names of those who have been summoned; and, if any of those whose names are upon the list have not been summoned, the return shall state the diligence that has been used to summon them and the cause of the failure to summon them.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 965.

In general.—It is the duty of the trial judge to see that the law is substantially observed and to enforce it with such strictness as to certainly accomplish its purpose, which is to secure an impartial jury for the trial of the cause. But a slight disregard of the provisions of the statute will not be sufficient per se to warrant the setting aside of a conviction. Charles v. State, 13 App. 658.

Art. 669  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS  (Title 8)

Number served.—It is no valid objection to a special venire, or return thereon, that all the persons named in the writ were not summoned, or that a lesser number than that summoned were summoned. Hull v. State, 23 App. 146, 12 S. W. 739; Taylor v. State, 14 App. 346; Charles v. State, 13 App. 658; Harris v. State, 6 App. 97; Rodriguez v. State, 23 App. 503, 5 S. W. 255; Martin v. State, 53 App. 462, 43 S. W. 355.

Diligence.—A return which named certain of the veniremen, and stated that they were not served because they could not be found in the county, though diligent search had been made for them by the sheriff and his deputies, said veniremen being absent from the county, and that others of the veniremen were not served for the same cause they could not be found after diligent search made for them at their residences and places of business, and at other places at which they were likely to be found, was held to be sufficient. Lewis v. State, 15 App. 647; Suit v. State, 39 App. 319, 17 S. W. 458; Jackson v. State, 39 App. 604, 18 S. W. 644; Charles v. State, 13 App. 658.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, the presumption of diligence obtains in favor of an officer charged with the execution of legal process. In this case the sheriff returned two of the jurors named in the special venire as "not found." The defendant's bill of exceptions to the action of the court holding the return sufficient failed to disclose the diligence used by the sheriff to execute the process, and hence the presumption must obtain in favor of the officer. Livar v. State, 26 App. 116, 9 S. W. 552.

Where return showed that some of the jurors who were not served were absent from the county and others lived in remote parts of the county so far away that they could not be reached and the return made in the time allowed, held the diligence was sufficient. Parker v. State, 39 App. 111, 21 S. W. 694, 25 S. W. 967.

The mere absence of veniremen, without any showing of a want of diligence to secure their attendance, is not ground for quashing the venire. Haywood v. State, 61 App. 92, 124 S. W. 218.

Under a motion to quash a venire "because out of 100 names herein drawn only 17 of said special venire are present in court," evidence going to show that the officer's diligence in summoning the venire was not sufficient is not admissible. Haywood v. State, 61 App. 92, 124 S. W. 219.

Attachment for jurors.—Where the return inadvertently showed as summoned a juror who was not in fact summoned, it was error to proceed to select the jury from the others present, the court should have issued process for the juror or discharged the venire and ordered a new one. Osborne v. State, 23 App. 482, 5 S. W. 261.

It is not required that every person drawn on the venire be summoned, but only that the sheriff exercise reasonable diligence to summon the jurors. Accused is not entitled to process for jurors not summoned. Rodriguez v. State, 25 App. 503, 5 S. W. 255.

If the defendant desires to confute the excuse of the juror as shown by the return of the officer he must procure process for his production. Livar v. State, 26 App. 116, 9 S. W. 552.

Art. 670. [652] Sheriff shall be instructed by court as to summoning jurors.—When the sheriff is ordered by the court to summon persons upon a special venire whose names have not been selected as provided in articles 660 and 661, the court shall, in every case, caution and direct the sheriff to summon such men as have legal qualifications to serve on juries, informing him of what those qualifications are, and shall further direct him, as far as he may be able, to summon men of good character who can read and write, and such as are not prejudged against the defendant or biased in his favor, if he knows of the existence of such bias or prejudice. [O. C. 553.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 908.

In general.—See ante, arts. 666, 667, and notes.

Instructions to the sheriff were not required prior to the enactment of this article. Dill v. State, 1 App. 278.

The court can amend its minutes showing that the sheriff and his deputies were properly sworn so as to show in addition that they were properly instructed. Rodriguez v. State, 32 App. 259, 22 S. W. 978.

But the failure to administer the oath must appear affirmatively in the record, by bill of exceptions or otherwise, a mere statement to that effect in the bill of exceptions not being sufficient. Samschen v. State, 8 App. 45.

Where the oath has been administered once during the term it is not necessary that it be administered again, at defendant's request, upon the issuance of a venire for convictions. Habel v. State, 28 App. 588, 13 S. W. 1001; Shaw v. State, 22 App. 155, 22 S. W. 558; Adams v. State, 35 App. 255, 33 S. W. 354.

It is not error to allow the minutes of the court to be corrected so as to show that the deputy sheriffs who were sworn to summon jurors were properly sworn and instructed by the court. Rodriguez v. State, 32 App. 259, 22 S. W. 978.

The failure of the court to administer to officers summoning jurors not selected
Art. 671. [653] Copy of list of jurors shall be served on defendant, etc.—The clerk, immediately upon receiving the list of names of persons summoned under a special venire, shall make a certified copy thereof, and issue a writ commanding the sheriff to deliver such certified copy to the defendant; and such sheriff shall immediately deliver such copy to the defendant, and return the writ, indorsing thereon the manner and time of its execution. [O. C. 553.]

Requisites of copy.—The clerk's certificate to the copy served, as well as the sheriff's return, may be amended. Washington v. State, 8 App. 577; Sterling v. State, 15 App. 249.

Amendment of writ.—On September 4th the court set a homicide case for trial on September 14th, and on the same day ordered a venire of 50 men drawn, making the writ returnable on September 11th, and on that date the sheriff filed the writ without making return, and on the 13th the district attorney filed a motion asking permission to make the return on the writ and for an order requiring him to do so, which motion was granted, and the return was made and accused served with a copy thereof on the 15th. Held, that no error was shown. Swanney v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 618.

Review.—The sufficiency of the writ commanding the sheriff to deliver an accused a certified copy of the venire, may be reviewed on appeal, though there is no statement of facts in the record. Ollora v. State, 60 App. 217, 131 S. W. 570.

Art. 672. [654] One day's service of copy before trial.—No defendant in a capital case shall be brought to trial until he has had one day's service of a copy of the names of persons summoned under a special venire facias, except where he waives the right, or is on bail; and, when such defendant is on bail, he shall not be brought to trial until after one day from the time the list of persons so summoned shall have been returned to the clerk of the court in which said prosecution is pending; but the clerk shall furnish the defendant, or his counsel, a list of the persons so summoned, upon their application therefor. [O. C. 554; amended by Act Feb. 15, 1887, p. 5.]

The defendant is entitled to a copy of the names of the persons summoned, not drawn. Service of the names drawn is not a compliance with the preceding article. Harrison v. State, 3 App. 555; Foster v. State, 38 App. 625, 45 S. W. 1093. This statute is mandatory. Hobbs v. State, 3 App. 340; Kollum v. State, 23 App. 82, 24 S. W. 887, and cases cited; Jones v. State, 23 App. 617, 28 S. W. 464. This article requires no more than that the names of all the jurors summoned under the special venire shall be served upon the defendant more than one day before the case is called for trial. It is immaterial that such copy contains other names which have been erased. Murray v. State, 21 App. 466, 1 S. W. 522.

Where the name of one of the special veniremen was inadvertently omitted from the list served on defendant, and he was held aside on defendant's objection, but thereafter summoned by the sheriff after the special venire was exhausted and challenged by the state for inability to read and write English, there was no error.

Under Rev. St. 1911, art. 2139 (Vernon's Statutes Civ. St. 1914, art. 2139), requiring all writs to be attested with the seal of the court, and art. 653, and this article must bear the seal of the court, and file mark affixed thereto, and the court may not sign or quash the venire on the ground that the writ did not bear the seal of court, permit the seal to be affixed to the writ and make it relate back to the time of its issuance, but it must postpone the case and direct the service of a copy of the venire properly attested. Ollora v. State, 69 App. 217, 113 S. W. 576.

The service of a true copy of the names of the jurors summoned held sufficient compliance with the statute, though no certificate was attached thereto until after service, and then was not under the seal of the court. Luster v. State, 63 App. 641, 141 S. W. 299, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1989.

Where, to prevent jury tampering, the court had some years before established a rule that in criminal cases the names of the jurors drawn by the jury commissioners should not be given out until the week for which they were to serve, accused cannot complain that the court denied his motion to postpone the trial for 10 days to enable him to examine the list of jurors, where his counsel did not request additional time to investigate the jurors, and he had sufficient time to do so before exercising his right to challenge. McLaughey v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 287.

“One day’s service” means an entire day, excluding the day of service and return. Speer v. State, 2 App. 246.

Service of the special venire on Saturday, the trial being on the following Monday, is in accordance with a statute allowing defendant one entire day’s service of the venire before the trial. Adams v. State, 35 App. 285, 22 S. W. 351.

Personal service.—The fact that defendant could not read and that list was served on his counsel is not sufficient. Jones v. State, 33 App. 617, 28 S. W. 461. An omission of such copy may be waived, and will be held to have been waived, unless asserted in limine. Houillion v. State, 3 App. 537; Roberts v. State, 5 App. 114.

Where defendant claimed his right to one day’s service of a copy of the special venire, it was error to try him with the regular jurors though neither he nor the State asked for a special venire. Burries v. State, 36 App. 12, 35 S. W. 164.

Variance in names.—Mere discrepancies in some of the names, as they appear in the original and copy, is not material, if it appears that none of them served in the trial of the case. Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617.

Effect of omission.—If the name of a juror varies in the copy from the original, on objection he should be set aside: and if nothing appears to the contrary it will be presumed he was. Swofford v. State, 3 App. 76; Thompson v. State, 19 App. 695.

When a venireman has been misnamed in the copy of the special venire served on the defendant, it is the proper practice to stand him aside. Swofford and Marksbury v. State, 3 App. 77; Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617; Thompson v. State, 19 App. 694; Jackson v. State, 28 App. 353, 13 S. W. 365; Mitchell v. State, 36 App. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 465. See, also, Roberts v. State, 29 App. 293, 17 S. W. 460. Defendant, indicted for murder, who was in jail, was served with two copies of a venire, one containing 60, and the other 52, different names. Defendant moved to quash the special venire for said cause, which was denied. Held error for which the cause would be remanded for a new trial. Foster v. State, 38 App. 525, 42 S. W. 1069.

The omission to serve on accused in a capital case one day before the trial a copy of the names of 5 jurors in a special venire of 125 names drawn, followed by the court permitting the sheriff to amend his return, but without subsequently serving the venire on accused, necessitated the quashing of the venire, on motion of accused. Thomas v. State, 63 App. 98, 138 S. W. 1018.

When the name of a juror is omitted from the list served on the defendant, it is not necessary to quash the panel, but the juror should be excused so that the defendant will not be required to pass upon him. Melton v. State, 71 App. 130, 158 S. W. 556.

Juries not appearing.—If certain names on the copy have not in fact been summed, the defendant is entitled to have process for such persons, and it is error in such case to proceed with the formation of the jury, but the proceeding should be suspended until said persons are brought in, or a new venire should be summoned, and the organization of the jury accomplished de novo. Osborne v. State, 23 App. 431, 5 S. W. 251. But the defendant may waive the right to have the said persons present, and when he declines proffered process to bring them in, it will be held that he has waived such right. Jackson v. State, 4 App. 292.

Talesmen.—The defendant is not entitled to service of a list of talesmen summoned. Johnson v. State, 4 App. 268; Drake v. State, 5 App. 649; Harris v. State, 6 App. 97; Gardenhire v. State, Id. 147; Sharp v. State, Id. 659; Richardson v. State, 7 App. 486; Dow v. State, 31 App. 278, 20 S. W. 533; Brotherton v. State, 30 App. 983, 17 S. W. 302.
CHAPTER THREE OF THE FORMATION OF THE JURY IN CAPITAL CASES

Art. 673. Names of jurors to be called, etc. When held to be qualified, etc. 688. Two kinds of challenges. 689. A peremptory challenge. 690. Number of challenges in capital cases. 691. Challenge for cause. 692. Evidence may be heard, etc. 693. Certain questions not permissible. 694. No juror shall be impaneled, when. 695. Jurors summoned shall be called in order. 696. Judge shall decide qualifications of jurors. 697. Oath to be administered to each juror. 698. Court may adjourn persons summoned, etc., but jurors, when sworn, should not separate, unless, etc. 699. Persons not selected as jurors shall be discharged. 700. Persons summoned on special venire, challenged or excused, paid, when.

Article 673. [655] In capital cases, names of jurors to be called, etc.—When any capital case is called for trial, the parties have announced ready for trial, the names of those summoned as jurors in the case shall be called at the court house door; and such as are present shall be seated in the jury box: and such as are not present may be fixed by the court a sum not exceeding fifty dollars; and, at the request of either party, an attachment may issue for any person summoned, who is not present, to have him brought forthwith before the court. [O. C. 555.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 909, 910.

The statutes regulating the formation of the jury in capital cases are directory and not mandatory, and where substantial compliance has been observed, no irregularity or failure on the part of the court to observe a literal compliance will constitute reversible error, unless injury to the defendant is shown. Murray v. State, 21 App. 466, 1 S. W. 522; Hudson v. State, 28 App. 523, 13 S. W. 388; Roberts v. State, 20 App. 391, 17 S. W. 490; Jackson v. State, 30 App. 664, 18 S. W. 643; Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 590.

Error in improperly excusing jurors who were summoned but not present was cured where the state peremptorily challenged such jurors. Hizzell v. State, 72 App. 412, 162 S. W. 851.

Where, in forming a jury in a prosecution for murder, several veniremen were out as jurors on another case when their names were reached, it was not error to pass them and call others; it appearing that they were examined next day. And it was not error to decline to postpone the case until the attendance of absent veniremen could be procured, where they were later called and examined, at which time appellant had a number of peremptory challenges left. Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 590.

Where only 33 of the 50 jurors summoned on the special venire were in attendance, it was error to proceed to the selection of a jury from those present without first issuing an attachment for the absentees. Calm v. State, 27 App. 709, 31 S. W. 722.

Art. 674. [656] Shall be sworn to answer questions.—When those who are present are seated in the jury box the court shall cause to be administered to them the following oath: "You, and each of you, solemnly swear that you will make true answers to such questions as may be propounded to you by the court, or under its direction, touching your service and qualification as a juror, so help you God.”

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 912.

In general.—See Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

The preceding article is directory merely. Murray v. State, 21 App. 466, 1 S. W. 547; Jackson v. State, 38 App. 664, 18 S. W. 543. Any number of the special venire may be sworn together to answer questions touching their qualifications; but the jurors should be examined separately. Wasson v. State, 3 App. 474; Taylor v. State, Id. 170; Hardin v. State, 4 App. 255.

The court cannot, under Bill of Rights, § 5, refuse a juror’s right to “affirm” instead of “swear” or to discharge a juror, over defendant’s objection, who refused to swear, but offered to affirm. Such error was fundamental. Riddles v. State (Cr. App.) 48 S. W. 1585.

Evidence on motion for a new trial held to sustain the court’s finding that a certain juror was sworn and examined on his voir dire. Williams v. State, 63 App. 507, 140 S. W. 447.

Art. 675. [657] Excuses heard and determined by court.—The court shall now hear and determine the excuses offered by persons summoned for not serving as jurors, if any there be; and, if an excuse offered be considered by the court sufficient, the court shall discharge the person offering it from service.

For good cause shown, over which he has no control, such as sickness, etc., the court may discharge a person summoned on special venire; but if a portion of the venire are engaged on another case, and are called in and accepted by both parties, the court can not on its own motion discharge them. Bates v. State, 19 Tex. 122.

Ordinarily, it is not competent for the court to excuse a juror summoned upon a special venire, unless he has appeared at the trial, and has been sworn to answer questions touching his service and qualifications, even though he may be exempt from jury service and the court apprised of the fact. His excuse, if any he has, must be claimed and established under oath. Robles v. State, 5 App. 346; Foster v. State, 8 App. 254; Hill v. State, 10 App. 618; Thuston v. State, 18 App. 36; Livar v. State, 26 App. 115, 9 S. W. 552, But to this, as to every other general rule, there must be exceptions where the court, in its discretion, is satisfied that the cause, excuse, or objection is good, and ought to be heard. Thus, the court held the defendant’s objection to his discharge improper, because he was not summoned from the certain county, upon which his service was based. In re, 162 Tex. 613.

The court machinery is not, and is not intended to be, a tribunal to test the bona fides of the excuse. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593. If, upon the call of the venire, it satisfactorily appears that a venireman whose name is called is absent on account of sickness, or other unavoidable cause over which he has no control, the court is authorized to excuse him. But when the court exercises this authority, without the consent of parties, or over the objection of the defendant, it should be only upon the most satisfactory evidence of unavoidable necessity, and even then an attachment is available to test the bona fides of the excuse. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593. If a juror’s objections should be overruled, objections should be made, objec. Bajaran v. State, 6 App. 266. The court has no authority to excuse a juror after he has been impaneled. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557; Hill v. State, 10 App. 618.

This article and art. 677 are directory merely. Murray v. State, 21 App. 486, 1 S. W. 622.

In this case the return of the sheriff described the juror as “decrepit,” and “over age.” Upon this return the court excused the juror, and the defendant objected, but did not sue out process for the production of the juror in court. Held, that the action of the court was not error. Livar v. State, 29 App. 115, 9 S. W. 552.

The court may excuse a juror, though he does not make his excuse known on the call for excuses, but only when called for the purpose of being passed on by the parties; this article not being mandatory with reference to the time of granting excuses. Goodall v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 355.

It being shown on the call of the venire that one of the jurors was out of the county, so that he could not be brought into court, it was a case of absence from unavoidable cause, for which the court could excuse his attendance. Cameron v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 857.

Prejudice.—It was not prejudicial error for the court to excuse seven jurors who did not appear in person to claim their exemptions, where the state thereafter peremptorily challenged them. Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

Art. 676. Persons summoned as jurors may claim exemption, how and when.—That all persons summoned as jurors in any court of this State, who are exempt by statutory law from jury service, may hereafter, if they so desire to claim their exemptions, make oath before any officer authorized by law to administer oaths, or before the officers summoning such person, stating their exemptions, and file said affidavit, at any time before the convening of said court, with the clerk of said court, which shall constitute sufficient excuse without appearing in person. [Act 1907, p. 216.]

In general.—See Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 412, 162 S. W. 861.

Objections which go to the fitness of the juror may be urged by the party to be affected by the verdict, but matters of exemption or privilege can only be claimed by the juror himself. Breeding v. State, 11 Tex. 257.

An exemption by special law (before the present constitution) was not affected by subsequent legislation. Ex parte House, 36 Tex. 83.

Constitutionality.—Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 269, c. 150, of which this section was a part is valid. Oakes v. State, 56 App. 671, 131 S. W. 270.

Art. 677. [658] May be excused by consent of parties.—A person summoned upon a special venire may be excused from attendance by the court at any time before he is impaneled, by consent of both parties.

In general.—See Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 412, 162 S. W. 861.

Art. 678. [659] Challenge to the array may be heard.—Before proceeding to try the persons summoned as to their qualifications to serve as jurors, the court shall hear and determine a challenge to the array, if any be made.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 913.

In general.—Challenge to array of grand jurors, see ante, art. 409, and notes. No challenge to the array of jurors selected by jury commissioners can be entertained. Post, 3 A. 631; Woodard v. State, 9 App. 412; O'Bryan v. State, 72 App. 118; Williams v. State, 24 App. 33, 8 S. W. 658; Carter v. State, 39 App. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 508.

Art. 679. [660] State may challenge array, when.—The array of jurors summoned for the trial of any capital case may be challenged by the state, when it is shown that the officer summoning the jurors has acted corruptly, and has wilfully summoned jurors with a view to securing an acquittal. [O. C. 568.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 913.

In general.—This and article 680 suggest that a challenge to the array can only be made when prejudice is shown. Whittle v. State, 43 App. 468, 68 S. W. 772.

Art. 680. [661] Defendant may challenge array, when.—The defendant may challenge the array for the following causes only: That the officer summoning the jury has acted corruptly, and has wilfully summoned persons upon the jury known to be prejudiced against the defendant with a view to cause him to be convicted. [O. C. 569.]

Grounds.—A challenge to the array is allowed only upon the grounds specified in the statute. Williams v. State, 44 Tex. 34; Swofford v. State, 3 App. 76; Woodard v. State, 9 App. 412; Harris v. State, 6 App. 97; Tuttle v. State, Id. 556; Coker v. State, 7 App. 53; Castameda v. State, Id. 582; Bean v. State, 17 App. 69; Anderson v. State, 34 App. 96, 29 S. W. 384; Ross v. State, 56 App. 275, 138 S. W. 1034.

Under a former law (Hart. Dig., art. 1667) it was not a valid objection to a jury panel that their names were not on the list required to be made out by the county court. Sayle v. State, 3 Tex. 120.

It is not a ground for challenge to the array of jurors that they had heard and tried a case against another party charged with an offense of the same character. C. C. P. arts. 680, 681. Bowman v. State, 41 Tex. 417; Anderson v. State, 34 App. 96, 29 S. W. 384.

Where the defendant is a negro, it is not a ground for challenge to the array that it is composed of white men exclusively. Williams v. State, 44 Tex. 34; Carter v. State, 39 App. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 508. Nor is it a ground for such challenge that a large number of the venire are incompetent to serve as jurors. Mitchell v. State, 43 Tex. 512. Nor that the sheriff had summoned persons not drawn on the special venire. Harris v. State, 6 App. 97. Nor that the officer who summoned the jury was prejudiced against the defendant. Tuttle v. State, 6 App. 556. Nor that the jury commissioners had failed to certify the jury list. Coker v. State, 7 App. 83.

A challenge to the array can not be entertained to jurors selected by jury commissioners, art. 681. Nor is it a good ground to quash a special venire, or of challenge to the array, that the jury commissioners selected jurors solely from persons known to be not defendant's equals, but his superiors, and unjustly discriminated against persons of his race and kind by refusing to select them as jurors. Cavitt v. State, 15 App. 190.
It is not a ground for challenge to the array that the writ for the special venire was directed to "the sheriff or any constable" if the writ was in fact executed by the sheriff. Jackson v. State, 30 App. 661, 18 S. W. 643.

The defendant moved to quash the venire because the court had ordered a venire of ninety men; the clerk had issued the writ for only sixty. Held the motion was well taken and should have been sustained. Hunter v. State, 34 App. 559, 31 S. W. 674.

A challenge to the array, where the sheriff, after the panel for the week had been quashed because the sheriff had not been sworn, summoned some of the jurors who had been on the panel that was quashed, can only be made by stating under oath that the sheriff acted corruptly, and with a view to cause accused to be convicted. Arnold v. State, 38 App. 1, 40 S. W. 754.

An array of jurors cannot be challenged on the ground that it had been summoned in the sheriff under order of the judge, though a jury had been selected for that term of court by the jury commissioners. Sanchez v. State, 39 App. 389, 46 S. W. 249.

Where the county judge has intentionally failed to select jury commissioners to select jurors for the term, the motion to quash a venire selected by the sheriff should be granted, although this is not one of the causes for challenging the array given by this article and article 716. White v. State, 45 App. 507, 78 S. W. 1067.

A jury panel can only be quashed where the officer has acted corruptly in summoning the jurors. Ross v. State, 56 App. 275, 118 S. W. 1035.

It was not error to refuse to set aside the jury in a prosecution for violating the local option laws, because many of the jurors were members of a local option league, which object was to enforce the laws, and some of them had voted for local option, while others had voted against it; the officers not having acted fraudulently in selecting the jury. Deadweyler v. State, 57 App. 63, 121 S. W. 863.

A motion to quash the array of jurors should be sustained, where they were not chosen as commissioners as the law directs, but selected and summoned by the sheriff. Irvin v. State, 57 App. 231, 123 S. W. 127.

It was not error to refuse a motion to quash a special venire because the officer made return for one person who should have served and made return on another, whose record showed that the person served was not selected as a juror in the cause. Deckard v. State, 67 App. 359, 123 S. W. 417.

Where after the jury, in a trial for violation of the local option law, were sworn, an adjournment was taken, and a heated campaign speech of an hour and a half followed, and prohibition was there delivered, the jury being present, a motion to set aside the jury should have been sustained. Rigsby v. State, 64 App. 594, 142 S. W. 991, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116.

The array cannot be challenged by one charged with assault on the sheriff with intent to kill where there was no showing that the sheriff or his deputies acted corruptly in summoning jurors. Forester v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 87.

The jury list having been drawn from the wheel, as prescribed by the statute, slight subsequent irregularities, as failure to properly fill out or certify the blanks would not vitiate the jury panel absent a showing that some injury might or could be done defendant thereby. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Review and waiver.—The overruling a challenge to the array is not revisable on appeal, unless excepted to at the trial and a proper bill of exception is reserved. Castanedo v. State, 7 App. 582. A failure to challenge the array at the proper time, and accepting the jury as summoned, is a waiver of defendant's right to such challenge. Buie v. State, 1 App. 465.

Art. 681. [662] Two preceding articles do not apply, when.—The two preceding articles do not apply when the jurors summoned are those who have been selected by jury commissioners. In such case, no challenge to the array is allowed.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 915.

In general.—See ante, art. 678.

A special venire selected by commissioners to serve at the May term need not be quashed because erroneously returned by the commissioners as jurors for the April term. Giebel v. State, 28 App. 141, 12 S. W. 591.

A challenge to the array, that the array, selected by jury commissioners, was so constituted as to be prejudiced against an accused person was properly overruled, his proper remedy being by motion for a change of venue. Columbia v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 910.

Art. 682. [663] Challenge to the array must be in writing, etc.—All challenges to the array must be made in writing, setting forth distinctly the grounds of such challenge; and, when made by the defendant, it must be supported by his affidavit, or the affidavit of some credible person.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 915, 916.

In general.—Ante, art. 680, and note.

The challenge to the array, which must be in writing, must precede challenge to the poll. Cooley v. State, 33 Tex. 10.
A challenge to the array must be made in the manner prescribed by this article. Woodard v. State, 9 App. 412.

Art. 683. [664] Judge shall decide challenge without delay.—When a challenge to an array is made, the judge shall hear evidence, and decide whether the challenge shall be sustained or not, without delay.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 916, 917.

Art. 684. [665] Proceedings when such challenge is sustained. —If the challenge be sustained, the array of jurors summoned shall be discharged, and the court shall order other jurors to be summoned in their stead, and shall direct that the officer who summoned the persons so discharged, and on account of which officer's misconduct the challenge has been sustained, shall not summon any other jurors in the case.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 917.

Art. 685. [666] Defendant entitled to list of persons summoned.—When a challenge to the array has been sustained, the defendant shall be entitled to service of a copy of the list of names of those summoned by order of the court, as in the first instance.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 917.

Ante, arts. 671 and 672, and notes.

Art. 686. [667] Court shall proceed to try qualifications of persons summoned.—When no challenge to the array has been made, or, having been made, has been overruled, the court shall proceed to try the qualifications of those who have been summoned, and who are present, to serve as jurors.

In general.—See Bizzell v. State, 12 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

Art. 687. [668] Mode of testing qualifications.—In testing the qualifications of a juror, he having first been sworn as provided in article 674, he shall be asked the following questions by the court, or under its direction:

1. Are you a qualified voter in this county and state, under the constitution and laws of this state?
2. Are you a householder in the county, or a freeholder in the state?

If the person interrogated answers the foregoing questions in the affirmative, the court shall hold him to be a qualified juror until the contrary be shown by further examination or other proof. Provided, that his failure to pay poll tax as required by law shall not be held to disqualify him for jury service in any instance. [Amended, Act 1903, 1st S. S., p. 16; amended Act 1905, p. 207.]

In general.—See notes to art. 692 (1), (2).

Cited, Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 897.

If a juror answers that he is a freeholder, his affidavit to a contrary effect will not be entertained on a motion for a new trial. Brennan v. State, 33 Tex. 266.

A juror who tried the case, qualified himself on his voir dire by declaring himself a freeholder in the state. It transpired after the trial he was neither a freeholder in the state nor a householder in the county. Applying for a new trial, the defendant and his counsel made affidavit that they did not know of the disqualification of the juror until after the return of the verdict. Held, that the new trial should have been awarded notwithstanding defendant and his counsel had intimately known the juror for years. Boren v. State, 33 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Brackenridge v. State, 27 App. 513, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. A. 366. When a juror has qualified himself on voir dire the defendant is not required to presume him guilty of perjury and extend the investigation. Armendares v. State, 10 App. 44; Henrie v. State, 41 Tex. 573. But in Luepke & Powell v. State, 29 App. 61, 14 S. W. 398, it was held that a new trial could not be granted for the disqualification of a juror unless injury to the defendant was shown, overruling Boren v. State, Brackenridge v. State and Armendares v. State, supra, insofar as they held to the contrary. This case was followed in Williamson v. State, 36 App. 225, 36 S. W. 444; Mays v. State, 36 App. 487, 37 S. W. 721.

These provisions as to qualification of jurors are in accordance with the constitution. Long v. State, 1 App. 708.

While it is better practice for the court merely to ask the statutory questions before impanelling a jury, the making of additional remarks is not error, unless shown to have been prejudicial. Edwards v. State, 61 App. 397, 138 S. W. 840.
Art. 688. [669] When held to be qualified, etc.—When a juror has been held to be qualified, he shall be passed to the parties, first to the state and then to the defendant, for acceptance or challenge. In general.—See Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

Art. 689. [670] Two kinds of challenges.—Challenges to individual jurors are of two kinds, peremptory and for cause. [O. C. 570.]

Art. 690. [671] A peremptory challenge.—A peremptory challenge is made to a juror without assigning any reason therefor. [O. C. 571.]

Accepted juror.—Defendant cannot peremptorily challenge an accepted juror. McMillan v. State, 7 App. 143.

Even if defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, using one of them on a juror who should have been discharged on defendant's challenge for cause was sustained, the conviction will not be reversed unless an objectionable juror was overruled, on his argument that he was previously challenged and exhausted. Holli s v. State, 8 App. 620; Logan v. State, 12 App. 65.

Where, after defendant had exhausted all his challenges, a juror then left on the jury but not yet impaneled nor sworn, was excused by the court for sickness, and another called in his place, there was no error. Heskew v. State, 17 App. 151.

Peremptory challenges have been exhausted, defendant can still challenge jurors subsequently called for cause, but not otherwise. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593; Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 618.

Where accused exhausted his peremptory challenges, using two on jurors who were disqualified, and thereafter was compelled to accept a juror who had a fixed opinion which it would take evidence to remove but who stated he would try defendant according to the law and the evidence, accused was entitled to a new trial even though his challenge for cause to the last juror was properly overruled. Maines v. State, 35 App. 110, 31 S. W. 667.

Error in overruling a challenge to a disqualified juror for cause is prejudicial, though he was challenged peremptorily, where, after accused had exhausted his peremptory challenges, there were remaining three jurors who had stated that they had formed an opinion as to accused's guilt. Keaton v. State, 30 App. 133, 49 S. W. 90.

Although the court may err in holding a juror qualified who is not, yet if accused is tendered a fair and impartial jury he cannot complain, although he is deprived of a challenge by the improper action of the court. Keaton v. State, 41 App. 621, 57 S. W. 1127.

When a challenge for cause was overruled, accused should have excused the juror peremptorily, if he had any peremptory challenges left. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 530.

An exception to the court's action on defendant's challenge of jurors for cause would not be considered on his appeal from a conviction, where the challenged jurors did not sit on the jury, and it was not shown that any objectionable juror was forced on defendant by reason of his being required to peremptorily challenge. James v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 727.

Art. 691. [672] Number of challenges in capital cases.—In capital cases, both the state and defendant shall be entitled to fifteen peremptory challenges; and, where there are more defendants than one tried together, the state shall be entitled to eight peremptory challenges for each of said defendants; and each defendant shall be entitled to eight peremptory challenges. [O. C. 572; amended, Act 1897, p. 12.]

In general.—Cited, Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

Where a challenge to a juror for cause is improperly overruled, and the defendant challenges him peremptorily, the error is cured by allowing the defendant an extra peremptory challenge. Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 194, 15 S. W. 567.
It is not error to refuse to permit a defendant in a criminal case to challenge a juror peremptorily after he has exhausted his 20 peremptory challenges. Person v. State, 21 App. 14, 17 S. W. 468; McKinney v. State, 31 App. 583, 21 S. W. 683; Thompson v. State, 19 App. 562; Kennedy v. State, 15 App. 618.

That accused was misled by the clerk as to the number of peremptory challenges, and was thereby compelled to accept an objectionable juror is not ground for reversal since he or his attorney must keep account of the number of challenges. Miller v. State, 32 App. 47, 35 S. W. 391.

Second degree murder.—If the defendant is convicted of murder in the second degree, and a new trial is awarded him, he is restricted to ten challenges. Cheek v. State, 4 App. 444; Hudson v. State, 20 App. 323, 13 S. W. 288; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 195, 16 S. W. 597; McKinney v. State, 31 App. 583, 21 S. W. 683.

Effect of amendment.—One is entitled only to the number of challenges allowed at the time of trial, not to the number allowed at the time he committed the crime. Edmonson v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 164.

Art. 692. [673] A challenge for cause may be made for what reason.—A challenge for cause is an objection made to a particular juror, alleging some fact which renders him incapable or unfit to serve on the jury. It may be made for any one of the following reasons:

1. That he is not a qualified voter in the state and county, under the constitution and laws of the state; provided, his failure to pay poll tax as required by law shall not be held to disqualify him for jury service in any instance.
2. That he is neither a household in the county nor a freeholder in the state.
3. That he has been convicted of theft or any felony.
4. That he is under indictment or other legal accusation for theft or any felony.
5. That he is insane or has such defect in the organs of seeing, feeling or hearing, or such bodily or mental defect or disease as to render him unfit for jury service.
6. That he is a witness in the case.
7. That he served on the grand jury which found the indictment.
8. That he served on a petit jury in a former trial of the same case.
9. That he is related within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity to the defendant.
10. That he is related within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity to the person injured by the commission of the offense, or to the private prosecutor, if there be one.
11. That the juror has conscientious scruples in regard to the infliction of the punishment of death for crime.
12. That he has a bias or prejudice in favor of or against the defendant.
13. That from hearsay or otherwise there is established in the mind of the juror such a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant as will influence him in his action in finding a verdict. For the purpose of ascertaining whether this cause of challenge exists, the juror shall first be asked whether, in his opinion, the conclusions so established will influence his verdict. If he answers in the affirmative, he shall be discharged; if he answers in the negative, he shall be further examined by the court, or under his direction, as to how his conclusion was formed, and the extent to which it will affect his action; and, if it appears to have been formed from reading newspaper accounts, communications, statements or reports or mere rumor or hearsay, and, if the juror states on oath that he feels able, notwithstanding such opinion, to render an impartial verdict upon the law and the evidence, the court, if satisfied that he is impartial, and will render such verdict, may, in its discretion, admit him as competent to serve in such case; but, if the court, in its discretion, is not satisfied that he is impartial, the juror shall be discharged.

2 CODE Cr. Proc. Tex.—24 369
14. That he can not read and write. This cause of challenge shall not be sustained, when it appears to the court that the requisite number of jurors who are able to read and write, can not be found in the county. [O. C. 575; amended, Act 1903, 1st S. S., p. 16; amended Act 1905, p. 207.]

SUBD. 1

1. In general.—Every male person who has attained the age of twenty-one years, shall be a citizen of the United States, and who shall have resided in this state one year next preceding an election, and the last six months in the district or county in which he offers to vote; and every male person, who has attained the age of twenty-one years, who, at any time before an election, shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in accordance with the federal naturalization laws, and shall have resided in the state one year next preceding such election, and the last six months in the county in which he offers to vote, and who has paid his poll tax, shall be deemed a qualified voter. But the following named are not qualified voters: 1. Persons under twenty-one years of age. 2. Idiots and lunatics. 3. All paupers supported by any county. 4. All persons convicted of any felony, subject to such exceptions as the legislature may make. 5. All soldiers, marines, and seamen employed in the service of the army or navy of the United States. Const., art. 6, secs. 1, 2; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 2108, 2910. The residence of a married man, if not separated from his wife, shall be where his wife resides. If a married man be separated from his wife, he shall be considered, as to residence, a single man. The residence of a single man shall be where he usually sleeps. Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2911. A citizen householder and voter of an unorganized county is a competent juror to serve on juries impaneled in the organized county to which the unorganized county of his residence is attached for judicial purposes. Groom v. State, 23 App. 82, 3 S. W. 660.

"Citizen" is a person, native or naturalized, who has the privilege of voting for public officers, and who is qualified to fill an elective office. Abrigo v. State, 29 App. 145, 15 S. W. 408.

The fact that a juror was a naturalized German-American citizen, who might not understand the meaning of some words of the English language, although he appeared to understand the questions asked on his examination, did not disqualify him from jury service. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1187.

2. Poll-tax.—The fact that a juror is disqualified because not a resident or citizen is not a ground for new trial unless it be shown that defendant was not lacking in diligence in ascertaining that fact and that injury resulted to him. Roseborough v. State, 42 Tex. 570; O'Mealy v. State, 1 App. 186.

Disqualification of a juror for non-age is not a ground for new trial unless it is made to appear defendant was not wanting in diligence and that injury resulted to him by reason thereof. Trueblood v. State, 1 App. 65.

It is error to overrule a challenge to a juror who has not paid his poll tax for the preceding year. Carter v. State, 15 App. 430, 76 S. W. 438.

Failure to pay a poll tax is not an absolute disqualification of a juror, but is a ground for challenge; article 269, stating that no one subject to the grounds of challenge in subds. 3, 4 and 5 of article 692 shall be impaneled as a juror. Poole v. State, 45 App. 348, 76 S. W. 567.

3. Objection.—It is not alone sufficient to award new trial that one of the jurors was not a qualified voter, that fact being unknown to defendant until after verdict. Sutton v. State, 21 App. 227, 20 S. W. 564.

SUBD. 2

4. In general.—The Constitution of 1876 (art. 12, sec. 45) repealed the qualification of "householder or freecrother." Molay v. State, 32 Tex. 595; and made all qualified voters competent jurors. Wilson v. State, 28 Tex. 365. But by the jury act of 1876 the qualification can not be dispensed with. Lester v. State, 2 App. 432; though intimated that the jury law of 1876 repealed former laws specifying causes for challenge (V. D., art. 3341). Drill v. State, 1 App. 572.

A single man renting land and living upon it with a younger brother and occupying the house for all purposes of a home, and taking his meals elsewhere, was held to be a householder. Lester v. State, 2 App. 433. So a person who rents a room and boards is a householder. B Babies v. State, 6 App. 216. And so a married man who lives with his father be a householder. Bejarano v. State, 6 App. 265.

"Householder" is a person, whether married or single, who occupies a house and is the head or master of the family occupying the house with him. He is not a householder who merely occupies a room or house. Lane v. State, 29 App. 310, 15 S. W. 827. Other decisions hereunder: Brackenridge v. State, 27 App. 513, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. A. 398; Leeper & Powell v. State, 29 App. 64, 14 S. W. 398; Allred v. State, 29 App. 442, 15 S. W. 408; Hitt v. State, 29 App. 314, 17 S. W. 414; Munson v. State, 24 App. 498, 31 S. W. 387.

A juror who occupies a room in his father's house, with the latter's permission, and a clerk, whose employer furnishes him a room at his house, where he eats and sleeps, are not householders. Maines v. State, 26 App. 199, 31 S. W. 667.

A single man who rents a room in one house and eats at another is not a householder. McArthur v. State, 41 App. 665, 57 S. W. 848.

A single man, living with his parents though paying board or renting a room from the occupant of a house, is not a "householder" so as to be a qualified juror. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

SUBD. 3

5. In general.—See Const., art. 6, sec. 1, subd. 4. And see post, art. 1561.

Under this subdivision and under art. 695, post, a juror who had theretofore been convicted and sentenced for perjury, and who had never been pardoned and his citizenship restored, is not a qualified juror. Rice v. State, 52 App. 359, 107 S. W. 812.

6. Pardon.—Under Const. art. 4, relative to the pardoning power, the governor may pardon a person convicted of theft, though he has served his full term, and such absolute pardon after he has served out his term removes his disability as a juror. Good v. State, 54 App. 400, 31 S. W. 294.

Where a juror had been convicted of a felony in a foreign state, but had been restored to citizenship by the grant of a full pardon, he was not disqualified under Vernon's Saxes' Ann. Civ. St. 1914, art. 5115, subd. 6, providing that no person who had been convicted of or pleaded guilty shall be a qualified juror in Texas. Wickizer v. Williams (Civ. App.) 173 S. W. 288.

SUBD. 4

7. In general.—See post, art. 695.

Under art. 694, post, this ground must be sustained by proof allumde the voir dire examination of the proposed juror to be available to either party. Sewell v. State, 15 App. 56.

SUBD. 5

Deafness.—There is no reason to excuse a venireman who, by reason of defective hearing, was unable to understand the proceedings in court. Mitchell v. State, 26 App. 74, 23 S. W. 387, 25 S. W. 456.

On a criminal trial a juror stated that his hearing was not good, and that unless seated he could not hear the testimony. He seemed to understand questions by the court, and stated that he could hear if placed near the witnesses, and the court informed counsel that if selected he would be placed in a favored position. Accused's counsel challenged him peremptorily, and, having exhausted his 10 peremptory challenges, challenged that R., an objectionable juror, was forced to upon him. Held, that there was no error in overruling the objection to such juror, especially where it was not shown why R. was objectionable, and it was not even claimed that he was disqualified. Calhoun v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 121.

A juror whose hearing in one ear was defective, but who heard the questions asked him on examination without apparent difficulty, was properly accepted on
10. In general.—Jurors whose names are endorsed on the indictment as witnesses for the state are incompetent, though they belong to the regular panel for the week and state that they know nothing about the case. West v. State, 8 App. 119.
A juror in a criminal case was accepted without being questioned by either side as to his qualifications. The state subsequently asked him if he was qualified, and, receiving affirmative answers, again accepted him, and defendant peremptorily challenged. Held no error prejudicial to defendant. Seals v. State, 35 App. 138, 32 S. W. 545.

11. Character witness.—That persons had been summoned as witnesses, one by the state and one by defendant, did not disqualify them as jurors, where they were summoned as character witnesses, and had been summoned in similar cases as character witnesses, but had not been called to testify. Edgar v. State, 58 App. 491, 129 S. W. 141.

SUBD. 7
12. In general.—The fact that a juror had sat on the grand jury who returned the indictment does not necessarily disqualify him, but is a statutory ground for challenge. If defendant fails to ask the jurors if any of them served on the grand jury who presented the bill he cannot afterwards complain that one of them did so serve. Franklin v. State, 2 App. 8; Seif v. State, 39 App. 155, 47 S. W. 26.
A juror on the grand jury which presented a bill charging the defendant with an offense is not disqualified from trying a similar offense against the same defendant. Johnson v. State, 24 App. 115, 29 S. W. 473.
That a juror was also a member of the grand jury which returned the indictment does not automatically preclude when the bill was examined and returned, did not disqualify him as a juror, but was only a ground for challenge. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 200, 139 S. W. 981.

The accused moved for a new trial on the ground that the foreman of the jury had been a member of the grand jury that presented the indictment, but that ground was not verified, it could not be reviewed. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 626.

SUBD. 8
13. In general.—Any person who has sat as a petit juror in a former trial of the same case, involving the same questions of fact, may be challenged for cause. Jacobs v. State, 9 App. 278; Willis v. State, Id. 297; Dunn v. State, 7 App. 600.

15. Trial of co-defendant.—Jurors are disqualified to try a person, having tried a case involving the same transactions against a co-defendant, though they state that they have not formed an opinion as to his guilt or innocence, and can try the case impartially. Sessions v. State, 37 App. 58, 53 S. W. 605.

16. Similar cases.—On a trial for similar cases, a trial for similar cases is error to impanel, over defendant's objections, a jury that had tried a similar case involving the same facts. Obenchain v. State, 35 App. 490, 34 S. W. 278.

On a trial for selling liquor, where the jurors on voir dire state that they were witnesses in the other cases. Each of the jurors who had served in the other cases stated that they had no opinion as to the accused's guilt and would try him fairly, but accused was not permitted to ask them whether they had formed an opinion as to the veracity of the witnesses testifying in the other trial. Held, that it was error to compel accused to accept such jurors. Hardgraves v. State, 61 App. 422, 135 S. W. 144.

A part of the jury which accused was compelled to accept, sat in the trials of two other similar offenses, and the only witnesses against accused herein were witnesses in the other cases. Each of the jurors who had served in the other cases stated that they had no opinion as to accused's guilt and would try him fairly, but accused was not permitted to ask them whether they had formed an opinion as to the veracity of the witnesses testifying in the other trial. Held, that it was error to compel accused to accept such jurors. Hardgraves v. State, 61 App. 422, 135 S. W. 144.

Where a prosecution for violating the local option law rested upon practically the same testimony of the same witness as in other cases in which defendant had been convicted, defendant was entitled to have the jury set aside, and to another jury. Smith v. State, 61 App. 328, 135 S. W. 154.
Where accused had at the same term been convicted of a similar offense, there is no error where there were only 13 jurors on the regular panel, 6 of whom tried accused in the first case, and the court excused them and retained one, 1 juror who had heard the evidence in the first prosecution, upon his statement that he... had no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of accused in the second. Byrd v. State, 72 App. 566, 102 S. W. 294.

18. In general.—That a juror is related to the prosecutor is not cause for challenge by the state, but is for the defendant. Black v. State, 9 App. 338. A private prosecutor is one who prefers an accusation against a party whom he suspects to be guilty of an offense against the law, and such person can not be allowed to try the case as a juror, if challenged for this cause by the defendant, nor can a person related to the private prosecutor within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity. Subscribers to a fund for the employment of counsel to prosecute a defendant are not private prosecutors. Hancock v. State, 13 App. 57; McIntosh v. State, 20 App. 325; McGee v. State, 27 App. 658, 40 S. W. 967; Moore v. State, 36 App. 574, 38 S. W. 269. Defendant was on trial for the theft of A.’s horse. He challenged certain jurors because they were related within the prohibited degree to the owners of other horses with the theft of which at the same time and place the defendant was charged by other indictments. Held, that it was error to overrule the challenge. Wright v. State, 72 App. 162. Second cousins are related to each other within the third degree, and where one of the trial jurors was the husband of the second cousin of the alleged injured party, and on a motion for a new trial it was made to appear that upon his voir dire such juror stated that he was not related to the alleged injured party, and that he was accepted as a juror by the defendant under the belief that his statement was true, it was held that a new trial should have been granted. Page v. State, 22 App. 416, 9 S. W. 745; Powers v. State, 27 App. 700, 11 S. W. 616.

19. Diligence.—It is not good ground for new trial on ground of relationship of juror to injured party, if the defendant failed to examine juror as to relationship before he took him. Templeton v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 833.

SUBD. 11

20. In general.—“Conscientious scruples” was cause for challenge prior to the enactment of the Code. White v. State, 16 Tex. 206; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713. This is a cause for challenge notwithstanding the law permits the jury to assess the punishment at imprisonment for life. Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86; Thompson v. State, 19 App. 590; Kennedy v. State. Id. 618; Gonzales v. State, 31 App. 585, 21 S. W. 253.

A juror, on his voir dire examination, stated that he had conscientious scruples as to inflicting the death penalty except in extreme murder cases and the court excused such juror; held, no error. Sawyer v. State, 39 App. 557, 47 S. W. 659. In a prosecution for murder, a juror who stated that if a cold-blooded murder was shown, authorizing the infliction of the death penalty, he would not agree thereto, and a juror who stated that he had conscientious scruples against the infliction of the death penalty, and that he did not believe his conscience would let him give that penalty in any case, were properly excused. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

21. Circumstantial evidence.—This is a cause for challenge, though such scruples are limited to cases of circumstantial evidence. Shafer v. State, 7 App. 238; Clanton v. State, 13 App. 133; Little v. State, 39 App. 654, 47 S. W. 384; Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 760, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428; Borders v. State, 72 App. 135, 161 S. W. 433. The acceptance of a juror whose scruples against capital punishment extend only to cases depending on circumstantial evidence is not error, where the conviction was on direct evidence. Nairn v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 703.

22. Discretion in challenging.—The action of the district attorney in testing the jurors on their voir dire in asking, under the statute, if they had conscientious scruples as to the infliction of the death penalty, in some cases challenging therefor and in others not, was a matter wholly within his discretion. Merkel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 738.

SUBD. 12

23. In general.—Where a juror voluntarily introduced himself to the prosecuting witness and stated that he was acquainted with the case and would do all he could for witness, defendant is entitled to a new trial though he did not examine juror on his voir dire. Hanks v. State, 21 App. 715.

Where a juror had previously stated that accused had killed a poor, innocent soldier and ought to have his neck broke, but stated on voir dire that he had no prejudice, defendant was entitled to a new trial. Henrie v. State, 41 Tex. 573.

Where a juror by statement on his voir dire stated he would not be in defendant’s shoes does not show prejudice. And where there was an affidavit that the same juror had stated that defendant was going to the penitentiary “or words to that effect,” it will be presumed that the juror qualified himself on his voir dire and the decision of the trial judge accepting his statement will not be reversed, especially where defendant’s counsel had procured a third affidavit as to the juror from one who subsequently repudiated it as incorrect. Nash v. State, 2 App. 562.

Where a juror by statement on his voir dire stated he had no prejudice to be in defendant, but remarked to two other jurors before the jury was fully impaneled that he was a bad juror for defendant, which remark was unknown to defendant or his counsel till after the trial, defendant is entitled to a new trial, though he did not exercise his challenges. Long v. State, 10 Tex. App. 373.
he would inflict on him the highest penalty allowed by the law, but on his voir de juror, was disqualified and defendant on first learning of the statements after the trial, was entitled to a new trial. Sewell v. State, 16
App. 55.

Where a proposed juror, on the day before the trial, expressed to the defendant the hope or belief that he would be acquitted, it was held that the challenge for cause made by the state was properly allowed. Mason v. State, 15 App. 534.
The word "bias" means a leaning of the mind; propensity toward an object; not having an indifferent, impartial; inclination, predisposition, inclina show bias in favor of defendant. Pierson v. State, 18 App. 534. Bias or prejudice

The state is as much entitled to an unbiased, unprejudiced jury as the defendant. Pierson v. State, 18 App. 524; McGill v. State, 25 App. 490, 8 S. W. 661; Gi gel v. State, 28 App. 151, 12 S. W. 591; Withers v. State, 30 App. 353, 17 S. W.

On motion for new trial one of the grounds was that one of the jurors had said before he sat on the jury that "defendant ought to have his d—d neck broke," which imputed statement the juror denied. It was further shown that he knew nothing about the parties or the facts in the case. Held, the motion was properly

A new trial will be granted on the ground of bias and prejudice on the part of juror, where defendant and his attorneys swear that such bias was unknown to them before the trial, and affidavits that such juror had said before the trial "that defendant was guilty of the crime charged, and ought to be punished," and that it was "bad case against the defendant," are not controverted. Graham v.
State, 28 App. 535, 13 S. W. 1028.

A juror was shown, after convicting for murder, to have stated that he had seen too much of the difficulty at the time it occurred, and knew too much of the case, to render any other verdict; that he should have been a witness instead of a juror. Held that a certain defense knew of his own personal knowledge, without merit.
A counter affidavit was to the effect that he had no prejudice against defendant, that he had tried the case on the law and the facts as he had not been controlled by any knowledge seen prior to the trial.
His first statements, however, were admitted, or, at least, not denied. Held, that a new trial should have been granted. Washburn v. State,
31 App. 353, 36 S. W. 715.

It was shown by affidavits that a juror had stated that defendant "ought to be hung" and "ought to be burned." This was controverted by the state, and the juror, in his affidavit, denounced the imputed statement as maliciously false. Held, that a new trial on such ground was properly refused. Washburn v. State, 31 App.

On motion for a new trial it was shown by the testimony of two witnesses that defendant and one of the jurors had had a difficulty after which they heard the juror abuse defendant and state that defendant had a case in court and if he could get on the jury he would send defendant to the penitentiary. A new trial should have been granted. Reed v. State, 32 App. 25, 22 S. W. 22.

"Prejudice," as used in this subdivision, refers only to the person of the accused, and means hatred, ill will, dislike, antipathy, etc. Randle v. State, 34 App.
43, 25 S. W. 955.

Where a juror, after retiring to consider the verdict, stated that he knew something about the case, and that he thought they had the right man, but not sufficient for reversal, without evidence that such knowledge created in his mind such a prejudice against defendant that he could not give him a fair trial. Ray v. State, 35 App. 334, 33 S. W. 365.

A certain juror, on his voir dire, stated that he had formed an opinion, and that he might have expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendants but that he would not be induced by it. Defendants did not ask him at the time anything further as to the matter, and did not challenge him. Held, that defendants were not entitled to a new trial on showing that such juror's sworn statement had stated that defendants were guilty. Aud v. State, 36 App. 76, 35 S. W. 671, disapproving Hanks v. State, 21 Tex. 527.

Two jurors who sat in the jury room that defendant had killed another and was caught cheating at cards, and that his brother had also killed a man, and they were not liable to have any accidental shooting, showed a prejudice against defendant which rendered them unfit to serve as jurors. Mitchell v. State, 35 App.
275, 35 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

A statement in an affidavit that a juror stated to affiant before the trial that, if selected, he would "give defendant what belonged to him," and that affiant undertook to learn what the juror meant by that he would convict defendant, was not sufficient for a ground for a new trial, where the juror makes an affidavit that he was without bias, and that what he said was that he would try defendant according to law,

Accused's counsel is not on voir dire examination entitled to ask a juror wheth-or he had any aversion to the defense that a man is not connected with the crime either by illegal act or omission, and that he is not a principal, accomplice, or accessory, for the burden of proof is on the state and not accused, and no juror could have a prejudice against the failure of the state to show guilt.

As each juror is required to take an oath he will be governed by the law given him. It is improper to question him as to whether he would follow the court's charge. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 345.

24. Race prejudice.—If a colored defendant objects to a trial by white jurors, he must do so by challenge for cause upon the ground of "bias or prejudice." Williams v. State, 41 Tex. 324. On the trial of a white man for the murder of a negro, it was held proper to permit the state's counsel to ask the jurors the following question: "If they could return the same kind of a verdict against a white man for killing a negro that they would return against a negro for killing another white man upon the same evidence?" Lester v. State, 2 App. 432. But it is not allowable to ask a proposed juror whether he has the "same neighborly regard" for a negro that he has for a white man. Cavitt v. State, 15 App. 190.

In the trial of a negro for murdering a white man, the question was asked a juror on the voir dire, "Under the same facts and circumstances, could and would you render the same verdict in a case where a negro killed a white man for insulting his (the negro's) wife, as in a case where a white man killed a negro for insulting (another negro's) wife?" Held proper, as tending to show whether or not the juror was prejudiced against defendant, he having killed deceased, it was claimed by defendant, under the peculiar circumstances disclosed by the question. People v. State, 39 App. 145, 45 S. W. 589.

A juror, who has a prejudice against the negro race socially, but not civilly or legally, is not incompetent to sit as a juror on the trial of a negro. Bass v. State, 59 App. 186, 127 S. W. 1020.

Jurors who testified on their voir dire examination in the prosecution of one negro for killing another that they could give accused as fair and impartial a trial for killing another negro as they could a white man for killing a white man under the same circumstances, but could not give a negro who had killed a white man as fair a trial as they could a white man, were not objectionable. Williams v. State, 60 App. 463, 132 S. W. 345.

25. Previous conviction.—Where six jurors who had previously convicted accused on a similar charge of violating the local option law were again tried to try him for an alleged unlawful sale of liquor to another person, and testified that though previously they had convicted accused, they had formed no opinion as to the present case, and would render an impartial verdict based on the evidence, the court did not err in denying a challenge for bias. Edgar v. State, 59 App. 252, 127 S. W. 1063.

26. Witnesses.—A juror, who states that he is a warm personal friend of one of the state's principal witnesses, and who states that he does not know accused or his principal witnesses, and who declares that he can give accused a fair and impartial trial, is not disqualified. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 53 W. 715.

27. Prejudice against offense.—A statement by the district attorney in examining jurors before empanelment, that the law made it a felony for one to engage in the business of selling intoxicants in local option counties, followed by a question whether the jury believed that was a good and wholesome law and ought to be enforced as any other law, to which they answered, "Yes," was not reversible error on the ground that it tended to prejudice the facts. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 571.

Where jurors stated on their voir dire that they had not formed any conclusion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, but that they had a prejudice against the crime with which accused was charged, they were not disqualified. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 268, 162 S. W. 364.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, it is not improper for the prosecutor to question jurors as to whether they have any prejudice against the statutory rape statute. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 536.

Jurors can only be examined as to whether they have a prejudice or bias against accused, and not whether they have a prejudice against particular heinous offenses. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

28. Prejudice against defense of alibi.—Where on a voir dire examination accused asked a juror if he had any prejudice against the defense of alibi, and the juror replied in the negative, stating that he did not understand the terms, counsel is not entitled to explain it to him. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 346.

29. Prejudice against or in favor of counsel.—Where it did not appear there was any relationship between the jurors and counsel for the state, which would make them biased against accused, questions as to whether the jurors would favor the state because of the reputation of the state's counsel to the prejudice of the accused who was represented by counsel who had not lived in the locality for some time, and did not enjoy so much confidence, were properly excluded. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

30. Former law.—This subdivision was amended by Act of 1875, p. 81, and again amended by Act March 31, 1885, p. 90. The subdivision prior to said amendment was as follows:

That from hearsay, or otherwise, there is established in the mind of the juror such a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant as will influence him in his action in finding a verdict. For the purpose of ascertaining whether this cause of challenge exists, the juror shall be first asked whether, in his opinion, the conclusion so established will influence his verdict. If he answer in the affirmative, he shall be discharged; if he answer in the negative, he shall be further examined by the court, or under its direction, as to how that conclusion was formed, and the extent to which it will affect his action and if the court is not satisfied that he is impartial, the juror shall be discharged.

(*) Down to here it is the same as the new law.

31. Opinions of jurors in general.—Jurors are disqualified to try a person, having transactions against him, either civilly or criminally, against the same transactions against a co-defendant, though they state that they have not formed an opinion as to his guilt or innocence, and can try the case impartially. Sessions v. State, 37 App. 55, 38 S. W. 605; Gilmore v. State, 37 App. 51, 38 S. W. 157.
The better practice is to discharge a juror whose impartiality is questionable. Black v. State, 42 Tex. 377; Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 518; Dreyer v. State, 11 App. 631.

Light impressions, which may readily yield to the testimony and leave the mind open to its fair consideration, constitute no objection; but impressions which are upon an iota of the mind as will convey the im­ bati be force, constitute a valid objection. The investigation is addressed exclusively to the present condition of the juror's mind; and the mode by which he has reach, upon evidence or hearsay, is wholly immaterial, except as it may tend to illustrate the strength or weakness of the conclusion; and that the juror may say such conclusion will not affect his verdict, is not of potent significance. If the juror formed an opinion, at the time he first heard of the murdered perpetrator, which opinion remained unchanged for two years, up to the time of trial; had heard the case talked about a great deal, and believed what he had heard; and had frequently expressed the opinion that the accused was guilty, and would take his seat upon the jury prepared to act upon such opinion, in case he heard nothing to change it, he ought to be excluded for incompetency. And where the competency of the juror is doubtful, he should be excluded. Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519; Lyivar v. State, 26 App.

115; 440. An opinion previously entertained, of a temporary nature, does not disqualify, if it is not shown to exist at the time of trial. Grissom v. State, 8 App. 356. Even when the juror had heard the evidence on a former trial of the case. Shields v.
State, 8 App. 505. A juror who states that he heard the evidence on the trial of persons who were innocent of the defendant, and that he had formed an opinion in favor of the guilt of such persons, but had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, and could give defendant a fair trial, is competent. Pierson v. State, 21 App. 14, 17
S. W. 463.

Where, at the examination of jurors in a criminal cause, it appears that there had not been formed in their minds any such conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant as disqualified them from sitting as jurors, the overruling of defendant's challenge to such jurors was proper. McKinney v. State, 31 App. 553, 21 S.
W. 658.

In a case in which defendant was accused of shooting at his wife's brother, K., with intent to murder him, it appeared that more than a year after the assault, and two days before the trial, while the court was in session, defendant shot and killed K. on the courthouse square; that the jurors were in the courthouse, and were soon at the scene of the shooting, and heard the remarks of the district judge, and heard the matter discussed then and afterwards by the people. On their voire dire the court stated that they could give defendant a fair and impartial trial according to the testimony, and the law as given them by the court, and that they had no opinion on the case and no prejudice. Held, that the jurors were not disqualified. 37 S. W. 331. 440.

Jurors who have formed and expressed an opinion prior to their acceptance on the jury to the effect that accused is guilty are disqualified jurors. Slack v.
State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 107.

A juror who had read papers containing a report of the homicide, but who stated that he had no opinion as to the defendant's guilt or innocence, and another juror who had read nothing of the homicide, and knew nothing about it, except from some slight discussion, and had no formed opinion, and who would consider any bias shown by a witness for defendant in weighing his testimony, were competent.
Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1107.

32. Examination.—A party who accepts a juror after learning that he has formed an opinion, without pressing the inquiry further, cannot afterwards complain, though the juror was not fair and impartial. Kirk v. State (Cr. App.) 37
S. W. 440; 36 App. 76, 23 S. W. 671.

When the juror answers that the conclusion formed in his mind as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant will influence his verdict, he shall be discharged, and no further examination of such juror is legitimate. If, however, he answer that his conclusion will not influence his verdict, he shall be further examined as to how such conclusion was formed and the extent to which it may influence his verdict. This further examination is to satisfy the court of the juror's impar­tial ity, and if the court is not so satisfied it should be discharged without being challenged or not. No formula or general rule controls this further examination, but it should be restricted to the imputed disqualification; and the juror, unless contumacious, should not be subjected to the treatment of a refractory witness.

When a proposed juror answers that there is established in his mind a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused that will influence his verdict, he is disqualified as a juror in the case, and should be discharged without further examination. It is only when he answers the qualifying question in the negative that any further examination is required. Spear v. State, 16 App. 55; Rockkold v.
6, 49 S. W. 735.

It is not error in a murder case to refuse to permit defendant to ask the jurors whether, from hearsay or otherwise, they have an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but not to press the inquiry further, where the law of the state is that such person was the instigator of the conspiracy to murder decased, and defendant was in his employ, and in his company, immediately preceding the homicide. Pedy v. State, 31 App. 547, 21 S. W. 542.

All jurors, in a trial for murder, to ask a juror, before trial, if he believed him guilty and that he ought to be hung, when another juror had answered such questions in the affirmative. Randle v. State, 34 App, 43.
28 S. W. 653.
Upon application for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had expressed an opinion relative to the accusation against defendant, counsel's affiliation must show proper diligence in questioning such juror before he was sworn.

Where juror admits on voir dire that he has formed an opinion, defendant must press the investigation else he will be stopped from complaining of juror's disquillification. But if the juror answers that he has no opinion and it is discovered afterwards that he has, defendant is not put on notice and does not have to press investigation, and if it develops that he has a fixed opinion, new trial should be granted. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 565.

n a prosecution for betting at a pool table, where it does not appear that defendant attempted, before accepting a juror, to find if he was biased or prejudiced, or had expressed any opinion, the court on appeal cannot consider whether or not the juror had formed an opinion before the trial. Tinker v. State, 58 App, 321, 120 S. W. 890.

34. — Conversation with witness.—Where a juror has formed an opinion from-talking with witnesses, he is disqualified. Willerson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 961; Trotter v. State, 37 App, 468, 38 S. W. 278.

One who has formed an opinion of the guilt of accused, but states that he can try the case uninfluenced by his opinion, is not incompetent as a juror because he has talked with a witness; it not appearing that he got his opinion from talking

35. Evidence at former trial.—A juror is not disqualified by the mere fact that he has formed an opinion on a former trial of the case. To disqualify him there must be a conclusion established in his mind as to the guilt or

Whenever the opinion of the juror has been formed upon the evidence given at a former trial, or has been so deliberately entertained that it has become a fixed belief of the prisoner's guilt, it would be wrong to receive him. Grissom v. State, 4 App, 374.

A juror who had heard a portion of the evidence at the examining trial, but who did not have any opinion as to defendant's guilt is not incompetent. Shields v. State, 8 App, 427.

A proposed juror stated that he had heard all of the evidence in the preliminary examination of the case before a magistrate, but that he had neither formed nor expressed an opinion which would influence him in finding a verdict. Held, error to sustain the challenge of the state to such juror. Wade v. State, 12 App, 538.

A proposed juror stated on his voir dire that he heard the evidence in part on a habeas corpus trial, and at that time formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but that the opinion so formed would not now influence his verdict, but that he could render an impartial verdict according to the law and the

36. — Evidence in another case.—Where opinion of juror is formed from hearing the facts testified to by a witness in another case from the one in which he acted as juror, it is incompetent. Drye v. State, 4 App, 93; Black v. State, 42 Tex. 237; Goble v. State, 42 App, 501, 60 S. W. 965.

In the trial of a defendant charged as an accomplice, he may test the qualification by inquiring whether he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the party alleged to be the principal offender; and the juror's disqualifying opinion with respect to the principal constitutes cause for challenge on

That a proposed juror heard the trial of a codefendant of the accused for the same murder, and approved the verdict of conviction, does not dis-

A juror who had been told by his brother, who served as juror in a previous trial of the same indictment, that accused was guilty, is not disqualified where he stated that his brother's opinion would not influence him. Harris v. State (Cr.
App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

37. — Newspaper reports.—If a juror, some time before the trial, had read in the newspapers a statement of the evidence, and had then formed an opinion, which opinion he remembered, but not the evidence, and thought the opinion then formed would not influence his verdict; but if the testimony on the trial corresponded with the testimony he had read, his conclusion would be the same, and would require other evidence to change it, he is a competent juror. Grissom v.

Where jurors testified that though they had an opinion concerning defendant's guilt formed from newspaper accounts of the occurrence, which in the absence of Evidence would influence their action, they were nevertheless able to set aside such opinion completely on the evidence, the court erred in overruling a challenge for bias.

A juror who knew nothing of the homicide, except what he read in one newspaper, and who had never heard any remarks about the case, or expressed any opinion about it, and whose impression would not influence him, was compe-

The decisions draw a distinction between the formation of an opinion from mere information derived from original sources, held in the former case, and that the court can rightfully exercise its discretion. Keaton v. State, 40 App. 145, 49 S. W. 90.

A juror on his voir dire stated he had heard a person in whom he had confidence make a statement of the case, based, not upon his own knowledge, but upon hearsay, and thereupon, the juror, had formed a conclusion provided the statement was true, but had formed no conclusion as to whether or not it was true. Held, not a disqualifying conclusion. Bolding v. State, 23 App. 172, 4 S. W. 575.

A juror stated on his voir dire that he had formed an opinion in the case, that it would take evidence to remove: that his opinion was based upon hearsay: that he did not value hearsay evidence much; that he could render an impartial verdict upon the law as given by the court, and the testimony of the witnesses. Held, competent. Stengald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 711.

A juror who had heard people talking about the homicide since being sum­moned on the venue, and on several occasions while attending court, was properly discharged. Myer v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

39. Opinion in another case.—The opinion in a juror’s mind, to disqualify him, must involve the defendant on trial—not a co-defendant or a co-conspirator. Peabody v. State, 31 App. 547, 21 S. W. 512.

A juror was held for violating the local opinion law by illegally giving a prescription. Jurors are not disqualified because they believe that defendant has violated the law, when they have no opinion in regard to the particular case. West v. State, 35 App. 48, 30 S. W. 1069.

Where accused was charged with illegally selling intoxicating liquors, it was not error to deny his motion to discharge the regular jury of the week on the ground that it had already tried and convicted two other defendants for the same character of offense and on the testimony of two witnesses who would be the only witnesses having that the other defendant had been con­victed of running entirely different places, and there being no showing that either of the jurors who sat in the trial of accused were a part of the jury that tried either of the other cases. Ausbrook v. State, 70 App. 289, 166 S. W. 1177.

And see Arnold v. State, 38 App. 1, 40 S. W. 734; Segars v. State, 35 App. 45, 31 S. W. 370.

40. Fixity of opinion.—A juror stated that he had formed an opinion from general talk about the case, that the opinion had remained with him until the time of the trial two years later, and had been frequently expressed by him and that it would go into the jury box with him unless he heard something to change it, is not qualified though he stated that he would lay it aside and go by the evi­dence. Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519.

Where a juror stated that he had formed an opinion which it would require evidence to remove, but had never heard witnesses, or any one who pretended to know the facts, detail them; that such opinion was not fixed and definite, and he could render a verdict entirely free from any previous opinion, he was held competent. Post v. State, 10 App. 573.

A juror stated that from what he had heard he had formed an impression re­garding the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but that he had not heard the evidence, and could not say that he was certain of that. Held, no evidence should prove what he had heard, then he had an opinion, but that he did not know whether what he had heard was true, and had formed no conclusion that it was true. Held, that he was a competent juror. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 567.

A juror stated that when he first heard of the homicide he said the defendant ought to have killed the deceased, but denied that he had formed or entertained any opinion about the case. Held, that he was a competent juror. Lewis v. State, 15 App. 647. A juror stated that, although he had heard about the homicide, there was not established in his mind, from hearsay or otherwise, any conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, such as would influence his verdict. Held, competent. Sharp v. State, 17 App. 486.

The opinions of certain jurors held so fixed as to render them incompetent. Ward v. State, 19 App. 664.

On his voir dire a juror stated that, with respect to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, he had not formed nor expressed an opinion that would disqualify him for the case. That he had formed an opinion of the cause, but that Recorn did not remove, but he thought he could render a verdict according to the evidence. On further examination he stated that he “had not formed such opinion as would influence his verdict, and that he would be entirely governed by the law and evidence in court.” Held, that the juror was qualified. Livar v. State, 26 App. 115, 9 S. W. 552.

When the proposed juror states that he has formed a conclusion, the impor­tant question is, was the opinion so entertained as to become a fixed belief. Miller v. State, 22 App. 519, 20 S. W. 1163. See, also, May v. State, 35 App. 74, 24 S. W. 910.

Allowing a juror to sit in a murder trial, where he stated on his examination that he had an opinion in a jocular way, but that he could give defendant a fair trial, is not error, where he was not challenged for cause or otherwise, and defendant’s challenges for cause were not then or afterwards exhausted. Kugad­t v. State, 38 App. 631, 44 S. W. 995.
A juror who testifies that, from what he had heard and read about the homicide, he had a fixed opinion which it would take pretty strong evidence to remove, would properly excuse on challenge. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 1167.

41. False answer by juror.—A juror on his voir dire disclaimed bias or prejudice, or any conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but on motion for a new trial it was shown by the affidavit of two of the jurors that before the trial was fully impaneled, he said to them that "I am a poor juror for the defendant." Held, that for this ground the new trial should have been granted. Long v. State, 10 App. 186.

When a juror has fully qualified himself on his voir dire, and it afterward appears that at the time he was impaneled he had a positive and fixed opinion that the defendant was guilty, a new trial should have been granted. McWilliams v. State, 32 App. 269, 22 S. W. 970.

SUBD. 14

42. In general.—This subdivision disqualifies from jury service a person who, though able to read, is unable to write. Rainey v. State, 20 App. 473. The requirement is not satisfied by the ability of a person to write his name and nothing more. The requirement contemplates that he shall be able to express his ideas in writing. Johnson v. State, 21 App. 368, 17 S. W. 252. The ability to read and write has reference to the English language, and ability to read and write in some foreign language does not satisfy the requirement. Dunn v. State, 4 App. 166. This inability to read and write the English language is a ground for challenge, unless it be made to appear that the requisite number of jurors who can read and write that language cannot be found in the county of the forum, and a trial court is not authorized to dispense with this test under the general qualification of jurors. Garcia v. State, 12 App. 335; see also, Nolen v. State, 9 App. 415.

DECISIONS RELATING TO SUBJECT IN GENERAL

Chapter 75 of the Revised Statutes, unless otherwise provided, relates to the qualification and exemption of jurors as well in criminal as in civil trials. Dunn v. State, 7 App. 600.

That a proposed juror is exempt from jury service is not a cause for challenge, Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 618.

The defendant in this case was a wife and mother. A juror on his voir dire declared that such fact would influence his verdict. He was held incompetent. Withers v. State, 30 App. 383, 17 S. W. 566.

When the juror panel was quashed on motion of defendant, and the sheriff, as required by art. 715, post, summoned another jury, the fact that some of the jurors summoned had been summoned as jurors on the panel quashed by the court did not render them incompetent. Arnold v. State, 38 App. 1, 40 S. W. 734.

A juror that defendant's counsel had for challenge to a jury had been involved in litigation against him. Goodall v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 325.

Where accused challenged a juror, as did also the state, and he did not serve, the court held that the bill of exceptions did not show that any objectionable juror served, there was no error. Cole v. State, 72 App. 282, 152 S. W. 580.

A conviction will not be reversed on account of remarks by the trial judge addressed to the panel of jurors for the week cautioning them against laxity, where accused was tried by only four members of the panel, and though he had not exhausted his peremptory challenges, he accepted them. McCaughy v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 257.

A juror who, in answer to the question whether, after hearing the evidence and the opinion of the court, whether he believed that defendant should be acquitted, the fact that the other 11 jurors were for conviction would or might cause him to change his opinion and lead him to an agreement, answered, "I don't know; I cannot say; I am afraid and believe it might," was not subject to challenge for cause. Orange v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 297.

45. Previous service as juror.—Under the jury law of 1876 the provisions relating to jurors were the same for both criminal and civil cases, and under those provisions, one who had served as juror for six days during the preceding six months in the district court or during the preceding three months in the county court, was incompetent. Welsh v. State, 3 App. 414; Garcia v. State, 5 App. 337; Tuttle v. State, 6 App. 556; Myers v. State, 7 App. 640.

After the revision of the codes in 1879, by which separate provisions were made as to jurors in civil and criminal cases, it was held in Dunn v. State, that the provision disqualifying for former service still applied in criminal cases though not contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure. Dunn v. State, 7 App. 680, and for some time cases were decided on that ruling. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 513; Monk v. State, 27 App. 459, 11 S. W. 460. But in Hunter v. State, 30 App. 214, 17 S. W. 414, it was held that previous service as a juror did not disqualify for service in a criminal case, overruling Dunn v. State, 7 App. 680, and this case was approved and followed in Boston v. State, 52 App. 569, 167 S. W. 192.

46. Misnomer.—That a juror whose real name was "Andrews" was summoned under the name of "Andrew" did not require the court to sustain a challenge to a juror because his name was misspelled, made after the jury was impaneled, the complaint read, and part of the testimony adduced; since the objection adduc'd had not been made when the list was furnished. Tipton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 97.

47. Discrimination against race.—Negroes cannot be intentionally excluded from service on juries where a negro is on trial. Whitney v. State, 42 App. 283, 59 S. W. 896.

Where Federal question is raised on ground of intentionally excluding negroes from jury service, it is the duty of the court to probe the matter to determine whether or not the fourteenth amendment has been violated in the formation of the jury. Whitney v. State, 42 App. 283, 59 S. W. 896.

48. Deputy sheriff.—That a juror was a deputy sheriff did not disqualify him from serving. Mingo v. State, 61 App. 14, 133 S. W. 882.

A constable who had been deputy sheriff and had acted as bailiff during the term at which accused was tried, and had waited on the court and had charge of the jail, in a felony case at the same term, was not competent as a juror in accused's case. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 580.

49. Opinion as to insanity as defense.—In a murder trial accused's counsel, in stating the case to the jury on their voir dire examination, stated that insanity was in issue, and asked them if they recognized the mental condition known as insanity, and, if receiving an affirmative answer, would acquit if they believed that accused was insane when the offense was committed, and upon receiving an affirmative answer asked if they would give the benefit of any reasonable doubt on the question of insanity, whereupon the court instructed that the jury need not answer the last question because the doctrine of reasonable doubt did not apply to the issue of insanity, but that he would charge that if the jury believed from a preponderance of the evidence that accused was insane when the offense was committed they should acquit. Held, that the court's action was proper. Jones v. State, 60 App. 159, 131 S. W. 872.

A juror was disqualified to sit in a murder case in which the sole defense was insanity, who stated on his voir dire that he would require overwhelming proof of insanity before acquitting on that ground. Jones v. State, 60 App. 159, 131 S. W. 572.

A juror who testifies that he recognizes the defense of insanity and will not punish one for an offense committed while insane, and who further states, in answer to leading questions, that he will require accused to prove the defense beyond reasonable doubt, but who states on further inquiry that he will be governed by the charge, and that if the law does not require accused to prove the defense beyond a reasonable doubt he will not require it, is not disqualified. Maxey v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 982.

50. Examination of jurors.—The court can illustrate meaning of circumstantial evidence to venire men, when they have stated that they were opposed to conviction on circumstantial evidence. Morrison v. State, 40 App. 490, 51 S. W. 358.

The court can interrogate the Jurors as to their qualification. King v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 246, 246.

On a trial for rape, where a juror has testified that he served as juror in a criminal assault case, it is not error to exclude a question as to the verdict in that case; it having no tendency to prove bias. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 542.
Neither side may test jurors by showing that they would or would not give credence to the testimony of any witness for either side. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.)
164 S. W. 1010.

It was not for the court to refuse to permit defendant in a prosecution for violating the prohibitory law to examine jurors on their voir dire as to whether they would give the same weight and credence to the testimony of a witness employed in the sheriff's department as they would if he were not in such employment, as tending to commit the juror on the question of credibility before the witness had testified. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1016.

When it appeared that private prosecutors employed an assistant in the prosecution, and the court informed defendant that he could ask each member of the jury, he had had contributed to the prosecution, there was no error in refusing to defer the selection of a juror until defendant had been furnished with the names of all persons contributing to the prosecution. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 166
S. W. 1173.

Where accused, contrary to the requirements of Acts 33d Leg. c. 7, failed to file his application for a suspended sentence until after trial began, and four jurors had been selected, the court properly sustained the state's objection to questions propounded by him to the remaining eight jurors on their examination as to whether they had any prejudice against the suspended sentence law. Williamson

In a prosecution for statutory rape, it was not error to exclude, on the preliminary examination of the jurors, questions whether they would as readily believe the testimony of a woman who was not virtuous as one who was virtuous, where the court charged that the jury must find accused guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, regardless of the character of the witness. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.)
165 S. W. 536.

While counsel should not be permitted to fritter away the time of the court in asking useless questions of the jurors, accused's counsel was entitled to a list of the jurors and to ask each juror separately any question tending to show whether he had formed an opinion or had any bias or prejudice and should not have been required to address his questions to the jury as a whole. Barnes v. State (Cr.
App.) 165 S. W. 886.

In a prosecution for rape, where defendant at the trial was 23 years of age, refusal of a hypothetical question to jurors on their voir dire, as to whether they would have any bias against a 35 year old man having sexual intercourse with a 16 or 17 year old girl, was not reversible error. Merkel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S.
W. 738.

Where the court, in examining a juror who had said that he would not convent upon circumstantial evidence, stated two illustrations to which accused objected, but the juror was excused and the illustrations were not such as could have influenced the jurors selected in passing on the guilt or innocence of accused, there was no error. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 360.

51. Time to raise objection.—When it is discovered after the jury has been impaneled while the evidence is being admitted that a juror is disqualified, the jury should be discharged and another impaneled. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.)
69 S. W. 565.

An objection that negroes were excluded from the jury comes too late after verdict. It should have been in motion to quash or plea in abatement. Garnett
v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 765.

Where a challenge to any member of the petit jury exists in favor of defendant, he is not accorded the right at the time of its or-organization, it can be raised by him at the time he is called on to announce ready for trial. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 509.

52. Sufficiency of objection.—That a juror is "objectibnable" is not a sufficient cause. Sutton v. State, 31 App. 297, 20 W. C. App. 120; Aitrop v. State, 31 App. 467, 20 S. W. 989; Wyres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1150.

Merely that an objectionable juror sat upon the trial—the defendant having exhausted his peremptory challenges—is not an exception sufficient to raise the question of the juror's status on appeal. Hudson v. State, 28 App. 325, 12 S. W. 365; Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

53. New trial.—Under art. 837, post, specifying the only grounds on which a new trial can be granted, the fact that one of the jurors was disqualified does not entitle accused to a new trial unless it is shown to have injured him. Leeper v.
State, 29 App. 63, 14 S. W. 398, overruling Lester v. State, 2 App. 453; Armandares
v. State, 10 App. 44; Boren v. State, 28 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Brackenridge v. State, 27 App. 513, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. A. 366.

This ruling has been followed in Lane v. State, 29 App. 310, 15 S. W. 827; Wil-lamson v. State, 36 App. 225, 36 S. W. 444.

While disqualification of juror is raised for first time after a verdict, it must be shown that injury resulted from juror serving. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.)
87 S. W. 820. See, also, notes under art. 837.

54. Bill of exceptions.—See art. 744, and notes.

Art. 693. [674] Other evidence may be heard.—Upon a challenge for cause, the examination is not confined to the answers of the juror, but other evidence may be heard in support of or against the challenge. [O. C. 577.]

In general.—See Shaw v. State, 27 Tex. 750.

Art. 694. [675] Juror shall not be asked certain questions.—In examining a juror, he shall not be asked a question, the answer to which may show that he has been convicted of an offense which disqualifies him, or that he stands charged by indictment or other legal accusation with theft or any felony. [O. C. 577.]

In general.—See Sewell v. State, 15 App. 56.

Art. 695. [676] No juror shall be impaneled, when.—No juror shall be impaneled when it appears that he is subject either to the third, fourth or fifth clause of challenge in article 636, although both parties may consent.

In general.—See notes to article 692.

Only such jurors as are mentioned in subdivisions 3, 4, and 5, of art. 692, are ipso facto incompetent. All other grounds of challenge may be waived, and the court can not deprive the parties of the right of waiver. Greer v. State, 14 App. 179; see, also, Sewell v. State, 15 App. 56; Wood & Carson v. State, 28 App. 91, 13 S. W. 486.

One who has been convicted of theft or a felony and has not had his citizenship restored by a pardon is disqualified as a juror. Rice v. State, 52 App. 555, 107 S. W. 569.

Art. 696. [677] Names of persons summoned shall be called in their order.—In selecting the jury from the persons summoned, the names of such persons shall be called in the order in which they appear upon the list furnished the defendant; and each juror shall be tried and passed upon separately; and a person who has been summoned, but who is not present, may, upon his appearance before the jury is completed, be tried as to his qualifications and impaneled as a juror, unless challenged; but no cause shall be unreasonably delayed on account of the absence of such person. [O. C. 556-558.]

Absence of jurors.—When the names of the special venire were being called for the purpose of selecting the jury, five of the parties, whose names appeared upon the list, failed to appear, and the court refused to have them brought into the jury box to be passed upon as their names were called in the order in which they stood on the list furnished the defendant, though the defendant requested it. Said five persons were out as jurors in another felony case. The court ordered talesmen summoned to the jury having been exhausted without calling in the five absent persons aforesaid. Held, error. The impaneling of the jury should have been postponed until said five persons had been discharged from the other jury. Thuston v. State, 18 App. 36.

When the name of one C. was reached on the list, the sheriff informed the court that C. had not been summoned. Over objection of the defendant the court proceeded to complete the panel out of the remaining veniremen. Held, that this action of the court was without authority of law, and in derogation of valuable rights of the defendant. The court should have suspended the proceedings until C. was brought in, or a new venire should have been ordered, and a jury organized de novo. Osborne v. State, 25 App. 421, 5 S. W. 251.

Of sixty but fifty were summoned, and of the fifty but thirty-three responded at the trial. Defendant moved that before he be required to proceed in the selection of his jury be awarded process to compel the attendance of the seventeen absentees summoned, or for a postponement until their attendance could be had. The thirty-three were then tested and four jurors secured. Defendant again moved for compulsory process for the seventeen absentees. The motion was overruled. The thirty-three were sworn in and the remaining four excused. Held, that in each of these rulings the trial court erred. Cahn v. State, 27 App. 709, 11 S. W. 723. See, also, Hudson v. State, 28 App. 323, 13 S. W. 388; Habel v. State, 28 App. 588, 13 S. W. 1061; Jackson v. State, 30 App. 604, 18 S. W. 643.

Where the absent talesmen appeared before the jury was completed, or the additional jurors ordered, and were then examined and properly excused by the court, there was no error. Sinclair v. State, 35 App. 139, 32 S. W. 531; Sawyer v. State, 29 App. 557, 47 S. W. 650.

Delay.—Where attachment has been issued for veniremen, it is largely within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether it will unreasonably delay the case to wait for them before ordering talesmen to be summoned. Hudson v. State, 28 App. 323, 13 S. W. 388.

Where, on request attachments were issued for absent jurors, it was not error to refuse a postponement until the veniremen were brought in. Deon v. State, 37 App. 566; 40 S. W. 266; Shaw v. State, 32 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588; Stephens v. State, 31 App. 365, 29 S. W. 838; Jones v. State, 31 App. 117, 20 S. W. 554; Mitchell v. State, 27 App. 278, 18 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 486; Sawyer v. State, 28 App. 588, 36 S. W. 630; Jackson v. State, 30 App. 664, 18 S. W. 613; Habel v. State, 28 App. 588, 13 S. W. 1061.

The jurors summoned upon the special venire shall be called in the order in which they appear on the list furnished the defendant; and a person who has been summoned but is not present, may upon his appearance before the jury is completed be tested as to his qualifications, and impaneled unless challenged. But no cause shall be unreasonably delayed on account of absent juror. Greer v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1076.

Where some of the petit jurymen who had been summoned in a homicide case were absent, and attachment for them was issued on writ, as there was no right to bring them into court, the refusal of defendant's motion to postpone the case until they should be brought in was not erroneous. Giesecke v. State, 64 App. 531, 142 S. W. 1173.

On a bill of exceptions claiming that the court should have given defendant time to examine the veniremen for a continuance because only 15 of the 60 veniremen drawn were in attendance, and that he could not get a fair jury from the streets, there was no showing that defendant did not get a fair trial out of the 15 regular jurors, and it appeared that the remaining 45 were excused by the court or not found by the sheriff. Held, that the denial of time to prepare such motion was not error. Clausen v. State, To App. 607, 157 S. W. 477.

In a trial where seven of the venire were absent, the court on information that they were absent might proceed with the call of the venire if a waiting for the absentees would result in unnecessary delay. Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 861.

Exercise of challenges.—The names of the persons summoned as jurors shall be called in the order in which they appear on the list furnished the defendant. They must be called one at a time, seriatim, and be seated and passed upon, first by the state and then by the defendant. Taylor v. State, 3 App. 170; Wasson v. State, Id. 474; Girza v. State, Id. 286; Robles v. State, 5 App. 316; Drake v. State, Id. 649; Clark v. State, 8 App. 356; Horbach v. State, 42 Tex. 242; Mitchell v. State, Id., 612; Foster v. State, 38 App. 525; 43 S. W. 1099.

If the defendant desires to examine the proposed juror as to his qualifications, it is not objectionable practice to require him to make such examination before requiring the state to pass upon the juror. Hardin v. State, 4 App. 352; Grissom v. State, Id. 374; Ray v. State, Id. 450.

The defendant can not require a list of jurors challenged by the state before exercising his own right. Phillips v. State, 6 App. 44. Each juror shall be called and passed upon separately. Caldwell v. State, 13 App. 392.

Withdrawal of acceptance.—Neither party can peremptorily challenge a juror after he has been called and examined and accepted as a juror, whether the jury is drawn under the state or the陪审团. 43 Tex. 212; Drake v. State, 5 App. 649.

The state can withdraw its acceptance of a juror and peremptorily challenge him where it discovered after accepting him that he had expressed a design to get on the jury to convict defendant and impose the death sentence on him. Mitchell v. State, 43 Tex. 612.

A party cannot challenge a juror after accepting him without showing, in the application for leave to challenge, that it is for some cause not discoverable on the examination of the juror. Baker v. State, 3 App. 555, overruling Hubotter v. State, 32 Tex. 479 and Cooley v. State, 38 Tex. 630.

Where the court on defendant's motion and with the consent of the prosecuting attorney excluded a juror after the jury was sworn because it was then learned he had expressed a determination to hang accused, the court could select another juror and proceed with the case. Evans v. State, 6 App. 513.

Veniremen engaged on other case.—Where twelve of the special veniremen were on the jury and considering their verdict in another case, it was error for the court, after they had been called and accepted by the parties to discharge them for cause, and order the sheriff to summon additional jurors. Bates v. State, 19 Tex. 123.

Where five of the original veniremen were on the jury in another felony case, the trial should have been postponed until that jury was discharged, even though defendant made no request for such postponement. Truth v. State, 19 Tex. 123.

In Hudson v. State, 28 App. 322, 15 S. W. 388, it was held following Cahn v. State, 27 App. 709, 11 S. W. 723, that where the court directed the call of the regular jury for the week while some of the special venire were out on another case, but those examined before the sheriff was ordered to summon additional jurors, there was no error. But the holding of Cahn v. State that the regular jurors should be called was overruled by Weathersby v. State, 29 App. 278, 15 S. W. 832.

The refusal of the court to have two of the venire, then absent as jurors in another case, called in and qualified, or to have the trial postponed until that case was decided, is not reversible error where it is shown that before the jury was made up such two veniremen were discharged from the case they were considering, and were placed on the panel, and that one was challenged by the state and the other by defendant. Stephens v. State, 31 App. 365, 20 S. W. 826.

Exclusion of veniremen from courtroom.—An application to exclude veniremen from the courtroom during the selection of a jury should be granted where it is claimed their presence would prevent defendant from making his showing for fear of prejudicing the jury. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

Art. 697. [678] Judge shall decide qualifications of jurors, etc.

The court is the judge, after proper examination, of the qualifications of a juror, and shall decide all challenges without delay and without argument thereupon. [O. C. 579.]

In general.—See Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

In this case the district attorney asked the panel of jurors if they were biased in favor of or against accused, whereupon two of them answered that they were prejudiced, accused could not have been prejudiced by the court's action in asking such jurors if they were prejudiced against accused, it appearing that the court did not understand the question asked by the district attorney, and that such jurors did not serve in the case. Conatser v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 314.
Art. 698. [679] Oath to be administered to each juror.—As each juror is selected for the trial of the case, the following oath shall be administered to him by the court, or under its direction:

“You solemnly swear that in the case of the state of Texas against A B, the defendant, you will a true verdict render, according to the law and the evidence, so help you God.” [O. C. 563.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 918.

In general.—Cited, Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 897.

The oath prescribed by the preceding article should be administered to each juror separately as he is selected, but an objection that this requirement was not observed comes too late when made for the first time in a motion for a new trial. Caldwell v. State, 12 App. 392; Ellison v. State, 10 S. W. 557.

The court has no authority to excuse a juror after the oath has been administered to him as a juror. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557; Hill v. State, 10 S. W. 618; Sterling v. State, 15 App. 249; Heskew v. State, 17 App. 161. Nor can a peremptory challenge to a juror be entertained after he has sworn. Drake v. State, 5 App. 649; McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142. But, it seems, the court has discretion to entertain a challenge for cause after the juror has been impaneled. Drake v. State, 5 App. 649; Baker v. State, 3 App. 525; Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 242; Mitchell v. State, Id. 512; Evans v. State, 6 App. 513.

An attorney at law, who was a deputy district clerk, administered the oath to the jury. Held, that he was competent to administer the oath, it not appearing that he was an attorney in the case. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 693; Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

In a capital case, each juror, as selected, is sworn and impaneled, and once impaneled cannot be excused without consent of defendant, unless the entire panel is discharged. In non-capital cases, the jury is impaneled only when complete in number. In re Jones, 15 App. 29; Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

As each juror is required to take an oath he will be governed by the law given him in the charge of the court, it is improper to question him as to whether he would follow the court’s charge. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 945.

Record.—As to the necessity and sufficiency of a record showing that the oath was administered, see post, arts. 929, 938.

Art. 699. [680] Court may adjourn persons summoned, etc., but jurors, when sworn, shall not separate, unless, etc.—The court may adjourn persons summoned as jurors in a capital case to any day of the term; but when jurors have been sworn in a case, those who have been so sworn shall be kept together and not permitted to separate until a verdict has been rendered, or the jury finally discharged, unless by permission of the court, with the consent of the state and the defendant, and in charge of an officer. [O. C. 605.]

In general.—See, post, arts. 745 and 837, and notes thereto, as to separation of jury.

If more than twelve jurors are inadvertently impaneled, and the extra jurors can be identified, they may be discharged and the cause proceed, provided they have not yet retired to consider their verdict, but if more than the legal number are permitted to deliberate on the verdict, a new trial must be granted. Bullard v. State, 38 Tex. 504, 19 Am. Rep. 369.

Where a juror stricken by the defendant remained in the box during the taking of the testimony, when his presence was discovered and he was ordered to retire, which he did before the jurors had any opportunity to converse together, a conviction need not be reversed. Lyon v. State, 3 App. 636.

It is reversible error to permit jurors who have been selected and sworn in a murder case to separate and go to their homes, without being in charge of an officer, even if the defendant consents thereto. He cannot by his waiver do that which the statute prohibits. Grant v. State, 52 App. 284, 116 S. W. 803.

Accepted jurors in a felony case less than capital may separate when they have not been sworn to try the case. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 897.

Art. 700. [681] Persons not selected shall be discharged.—When a jury of twelve men has been completed, the other persons who may be in attendance under a summons to appear as jurors in the case shall be discharged from further attendance therein.

Art. 701. Persons summoned on special venire, challenged or excused, paid, when.—That all men summoned on special venire, and who shall have been challenged or excused from service on the trial, and who reside more than one mile distant from the court house of the county, shall be paid, out of the jury fund, one dollar for each day that he attends court on said summons; provided, further, no person shall receive pay as a special venireman and regular
OF THE FORMATION OF THE JURY IN CASES LESS THAN CAPITAL

Art. 702. Duty of clerk when parties are ready for trial.—When the parties have announced ready for trial in a criminal action less than capital, the clerk shall write the names of all the regular jurors entered of record for that week on separate slips of paper, as near the same size and appearance as may be, and shall place the slips in a box and mix them well. [Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 82, § 21.]

In general.—It is an improper practice for the clerk to prepare the lists before the parties have announced ready for trial, but such irregularity to be availed of must be promptly excepted to. McMahon v. State, 17 App. 321.

Where the court ordered the summoning of talesmen to complete a jury, it should have sustained defendant’s motion to instruct the clerk to place all the names on separate slips of paper as near the same size and appearance as might be, place them in a receptacle, and shuffle them, after which each slip should be drawn by the clerk, and the name placed on the jury list in the order in which they were drawn. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

Prejudice.—That the court failed to pursue the method of drawing talesmen prescribed by this article and arts. 702, 713, was not ground for reversal of a conviction, where it was not shown that any objectionable juror or one who was not fair and impartial was forced on accused thereby. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

Art. 703. Same subject.—The clerk shall draw from the box, in the presence of the court, the names of twenty-four jurors, if in the district court, or so many as there may be, if there be a less number in the box; and the names of twelve jurors, if in the county court, or so many as there may be, if there be a less number in the box, and write the names, as drawn, upon two slips of paper, and deliver one slip to the attorney for the state and the other to the defendant or his attorney. [Id., § 22.]

In general.—See notes to article 702.

Neither the sheriff nor his deputy is authorized to draw names of jurors from the box and make lists of same for counsel for State and defendant. This must be done by the clerk. Brogden v. State, 47 App. 121, 80 S. W. 378.

Appellant has a right to be present when the jury is drawn and the right to see that the list is drawn by the proper person and in accordance with law. The drawing of a list from a box to try any case that may be called up, before a case is called for trial, is reversible error. Adams v. State, 50 App. 556, 99 S. W. 1015.

Where defendant was furnished with a jury list of 20 names, the fact that 3 were stricken off was harmless, since he was entitled to but 24 from which to choose. Bratt v. State, 38 App. 121, 41 S. W. 824.

Where a regular panel of jurors was tested on their voir dire, only 22 qualified, and the court ordered 25 talesmen to be brought in to complete the list of 24 names from which the parties should select a jury, and 12 of the talesmen qualified, it was not error to refuse to have the names of the 22 jurors of the regular panel, and all of the talesmen who had qualified, placed in the box and drawn therefrom in the regular way, until the panel of 24 was completed, and to grant the request only so far as securing the names of 2 additional jurors from the list of talesmen, was concerned. Bailey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 128 S. W. 576.

Where the court ordered the summoning of talesmen to complete a jury, it should have sustained defendant's motion to instruct the clerk to place all the names on separate slips of paper as near the same size and appearance as might be, place them in a receptacle, and shuffle them, after which each slip should be drawn by the clerk, and the name placed on the jury list in the order in which they were drawn. Ex parte (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

The overruling of defendant's demand for a full panel of 32 names, before passing on the list which contained 27 names, was not error. James v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 727.

There is no law that requires the judge when a jury is to be impaneled in a felony case, not to summon other jurors, when there are more than 12 to select from in the panel. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 541.

Waiver of objection.—That the names of 26 jurors were drawn instead of 24, as required by statute, cannot be taken advantage of by a general objection to the manner of organizing the jury. The objection should be taken specifically. Jones v. State, 37 Cr. App. 453, 35 S. W. 975.

Where accused tried at one term accepted, without objection, the jury selected at the prior term, he could not after trial complain of the time of the selection of the jury. Kinch v. State, 70 App. 419, 106 S. W. 649.

Prejudice.—That the court failed to pursue the method of drawing talesmen prescribed by this article and arts. 702, 713, was not ground for conviction, where it was not shown that any objectionable juror or one who was not fair and impartial was forced upon thereby. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

Art. 704. [684] When other jurors to be summoned.—When there are not as many as twelve names drawn from the box, if in the district court, or, if in the county court, as many as six, the court shall direct the sheriff to summon such number of qualified persons as the court may deem necessary to complete the panel; and the names of the persons thus summoned shall be placed in the box and drawn and entered upon the slips as provided in the preceding articles.

In general.—See Davis v. State, 9 App. 634. Regular jurors should be made available if practicable, without resorting to talesmen. West v. State, 7 App. 150.

Error cannot be predicated of the fact that the names of less than 24 jurors were placed in the box when a jury was to be selected to try defendant; a number of the regular list of jurors being out, trying a case, at the time, and the names of the 16 regular jurors in attendance on the court when defendant's case was called being placed in the box, and, after 7 jurors were obtained therefrom, talesmen were summoned from whom the remainder of the jury were secured. Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 702-705. Thurmond v. State, 37 Cr. App. 422, 35 S. W. 965.

A panel is properly filled with talesmen, where all the regular jury except seven are trying another case and have been out considering it for a long time. Leslie v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 367.

If there were only six names in the box and they were placed upon the list this would be a sufficient compliance with the statute, and when these are exhausted the court can order six talesmen. Hacklemann v. State (Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 582.

Where regular jurors were drawn as provided by the wheel jury law for alternate weeks, and a felony case, not being reached on a week on which a jury had been ordered, was reset for the next week, there being no regular jury, the court could order the sheriff to procure talesmen to serve as jurors during that week. Martin v. State, 57 App. 595, 124 S. W. 681.

The court is not required to summon more than 24 regularly drawn jurors until after the challenges reduce the number to less than 12. Reynolds v. State, 71 App. 494, 160 S. W. 362.

Absence of regular jurors.—In the absence of any request for attachment of an absent juror or any suggestion of prejudice to defendant, there is no error in completing a jury with talesmen, where, after failure of some jurors to appear and others to excuse, only 23 of the jurors summoned were present, of whom only 5 were accepted. Gonzales v. State, 58 App. 237, 125 S. W. 335.

There was no error in overruling defendant's motion to require that all the regular jurors drawn for the week be brought into court by process before talesmen were summoned, it appearing that there were eight regular jurors in the box, and, in addition, that no injury was suffered from the court's action. Sweeney v. State, 59 App. 370, 128 S. W. 396.

Disqualification of sheriff.—In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling, trading, or dealing in intoxicating liquors, in selling, or dealing in the sale of which the defendant was called for trial stated to the sheriff that considering that he had just been elected after a heated campaign in which he had been accused of failing to enforce the local option law and with standing in with accused, he ought not to select the talesmen, and he, not an officer authorized to act as such, was permitted to select talesmen, who brought in extreme prohibitionists, although in the opinion of the court fair and impartial men, which fact was unknown to the defendant until after he had exhausted his peremptory challenges, and the jury had been selected. Held that, as the sheriff was not disqualified to summon jurors, the action of the court in appointing an unauthorized person to summon the jurors was reversible error. Todd v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 220.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, where the accused was a deputy sheriff and the victim also implicated, the court properly directed the constable of the precinct to summon the talesmen, and delivered the jury into the custody of the deputy constable. Stoner v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 336.

Art. 705. [685] Challenge for cause to be made, when.—When as many as twelve or more jurors, if in the district court, or six or more, if in the county court, are drawn, and the lists of their names delivered to the parties, if either party desire to challenge any juror for cause, the challenge shall now be made, and the proceedings in such case shall be the same as in capital cases.

In general.—Ante, art. 692 and notes; post, art. 706.

Art. 706. [686] When number is reduced, etc., by challenge, others to be drawn, etc.—If the number of jurors be reduced by challenge to less than twelve in the district court, or six in the county court, the court shall order other jurors to be drawn or summoned, as the case may be, and placed upon the lists in place of those who have been set aside for cause.

In general.—See Thurmond v. State, 37 App. 422, 35 S. W. 965.

Defendant may be required to pass upon those in the panel before filling it with talesmen. Speiden v. State, 3 App. 156, 30 Am. Rep. 126; West v. State, 7 App. 150.

A constitutional jury for the trial of causes in the district court consists of twelve persons. Jester v. State, 26 App. 369, 9 S. W. 618.

Where there were only seven jurors present and in the box in the county court, it was not error to require the defendant to proceed with the selection of a jury without furnishing a full panel of twelve jurors. Logan v. State, 55 App. 180, 110 S. W. 1193.

There was no error in overruling defendant’s motion to require that all the regular jurors drawn for the week be brought into court by process before talesmen were summoned; it appearing that there were eight regular jurors in the box and, in addition, that no injury was suffered from the court’s action. Sweeney v. State, 59 App. 370, 123 S. W. 390.

Art. 707. [687] Cause for challenge same as in capital cases, except, etc.—The challenges for cause in all criminal actions are the same as provided in capital cases in article 692, except cause 11 in said article, which is applicable to capital cases only.

Ante, art. 692, and notes.

Art. 708. [688] Peremptory challenge to be made, when.—When a juror has been challenged and set aside for cause, his name shall be erased from the lists furnished the parties, and when there are twelve names remaining on the lists not subject to challenge for cause, if in the district court, or six names, if in the county court, the parties shall proceed to make their peremptory challenges, if they desire to make any.

In general.—After the jury had been sworn in a criminal case, defendant discovered in the box a juror whom he had previously challenged, and thereupon asked the court to stand him aside. Held, that defendant showed want of diligence in making the discovery and where it was not shown that the juror so challenged was prejudiced against defendant, the refusal to exclude him was not reversible error. Munson v. State, 24 App. 498, 31 S. W. 387.

Art. 709. [689] In felonies not capital, number of challenges. —In prosecutions for felonies not capital, the defendant and state shall each be entitled to ten peremptory challenges; and, where more defendants than one are tried together, each defendant shall be entitled to five peremptory challenges, and the state to five, for each defendant. [O. C. 573; amended, Act 1897, p. 13.]

Art. 710. [690] In misdemeanors.—In misdemeanors tried in the district court, the state and defendant shall be each entitled to five peremptory challenges; if tried in the county court, the state and defendant shall be each entitled to three peremptory challenges; and, if there are more defendants than one tried together, each defendant shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges in either court. [O. C. 574.]

Art. 711. [691] Manner of making peremptory challenge.— The manner of making a peremptory challenge shall be as follows: The party desiring to challenge a juror or jurors peremptorily shall erase the name or names of such juror or jurors from the list furnished him by the clerk, and the party may erase any number of names not exceeding the number of peremptory challenges allowed him by law. [Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 82.]

In general.—Defendant is not entitled to a list of those challenged peremptorily by the state, before passing upon the jury. Phillips v. State, 6 App. 44. And he may consent himself, or by counsel, to impaneling the jury in some mode other than that prescribed by law. Grant v. State, 3 App. 1.

Art. 712. [692] Lists shall be returned to clerk, when.—When the parties have made their peremptory challenges, as provided in the preceding article, or when they decline to make any, they shall deliver their lists to the clerk; and the clerk shall, if the case be in the district court, call off the first twelve names on the lists that have not been erased; and, if the case be in the county court, he shall call off the first six names on the lists that have not been erased; and the persons whose names are called shall be sworn as jurors to try the case. [Id.]

In general.—A juror already accepted can not be challenged peremptorily by the party accepting him. McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142.

Challenges for cause to jurors will not be reviewed on appeal where it does not appear that appellant exhausted his peremptory challenges, and thereafter was forced to accept a juror subject to disqualification or challenge for cause. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 134 S. W. 705.

Art. 713. [693] When jury is left incomplete, court shall direct, etc.—When, by peremptory challenges, the jury is left incomplete, the court shall direct such number of other jurors to be drawn or summoned, as the case may be, as the court may consider sufficient to complete the jury; and the same proceedings shall be had in selecting and impaneling such other jurors as are had in the first instance.

In general.—See ante, art. 706, and notes.

Where the court ordered the summoning of talesmen to complete a jury, it should have sustained defendant's motion to instruct the clerk to place all the names on separate slips of paper as near the same size and appearance as might be, place them in a receptacle, and shuffle them, after which each slip should be drawn by the clerk, and the name placed on the jury list in the order in which they were drawn. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

That the court failed to pursue the method of drawing talesmen prescribed by arts. 702, 705, and this article, was not ground for reversal of a conviction, where it was not shown that any objectionable juror or one who was not fair and impartial was forced on accused thereby. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

The court is not required to summon more than 24 regularly drawn jurors until after the challenges reduce the number to less than 12. Reynolds v. State, 71 App. 454, 160 S. W. 362.

Record.—As to the necessity and sufficiency of showing by the record that the oath was administered, see post, arts. 929, 958, and notes.

Art. 714. [694] Oath to be administered to jurors.—When the jury has been selected, the following oath shall be administered to them by the court, or under its direction: “You, and each of you, solemnly swear that in the case of the state of Texas against A B, the defendant, you will a true verdict render according to the law and the evidence, so help you God.” [O. C. 563.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 919.

In general.—See, ante, art. 695, and notes. The oath is to be administered to the jury en masse, and not to each juror separately as in capital cases. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557; Rippey v. State, 29 App. 37, 14 S. W. 448. The jury must be sworn as prescribed in the preceding article. Stephens v. State, 33 App. 101, 28 S. W. 728.

Art. 715. [695] When there are no regular jurors, court shall order jurors to be summoned.—When, from any cause, there are no regular jurors for the week from whom to select a jury, the court shall order the sheriff to summon forthwith such number of qualified persons as it may deem sufficient; and, from those summoned, a jury shall be formed, as provided in the preceding articles of this chapter.

In general.—See ante, arts. 666, 667, and notes. Ekins v. State, 1 App. 532, and Shackleford v. State, 2 App. 385, were decided prior to the adoption of the Revised Code, and are not now applicable in so far as they require the appointment of jury commissioners. Williams v. State, 24 App. 32, 5 S. W. 658.

Where a case is called for trial after the regular jury for the week has been discharged, it is proper to order the sheriff to summon a jury to try such case. W.885. State, 39 App. 266, 42 S. W. 888.

When a jury has not been drawn for the term, it is competent for the court to order the sheriff to summon a jury for the week. Thomson v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 837.

It is not error, after certain jurors summoned for the week have disqualified themselves, to require defendant in a criminal case to select a jury from those remaining. Thomson v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 837.

When there was no jury for the week and the judge on the first day of the term, appointed three men as jury commissioners and they selected 24 jurors for the second week, and the jury was chosen from these, held, that while the proper practice would have been for the court to order the sheriff to summon the jurors, yet as no injury to defendant was shown by the means and manner of selecting the jury, there was not such error committed by the court as to require a reversal of the case. Lenert v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 584.

The jury commissioners, under the direction of the court, having selected jurors for three weeks, in which time the term was not completed, the court had the sheriff to select jurors for the fourth week, during which the defendant was tried. Held, the jury so summoned was a legal one. Green v. State, 53 App. 490, 110 S. W. 929, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 798.

The action of the court in appointing jury commissioners to draw the jury for the trial of a criminal prosecution at the term of court then in session was not error. Schuh v. State, 58 App. 165, 124 S. W. 908.

Under this article and Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5127, providing that the court, whenever it may deem it necessary, shall appoint jury commissioners, where they have not been appointed in time to select the jurors, and that these jury commissioners may draw for the term of court then in session, as well as the terms following, the action of the court in appointing jury commissioners to draw the jury for the trial of a criminal prosecution at the term of court then in session was not error. Schuh v. State, 58 App. 165, 124 S. W. 908.

Where all the criminal cases on the docket, including the prosecution against accused, were set for the first three days of the week beginning Monday, for which a regular jury had been selected, and the case against accused had been postponed at his request until Friday, the court, having inadvertently discharged the jury before that day, properly directed the sheriff to summon a jury to try his case. Kosmoroski v. State, 59 App. 296, 127 S. W. 1956.

Where defendant and his counsel agreed in open court that a jury might be summoned by the sheriff, accused could not object on appeal that the jury was not regularly drawn by a jury commissioner. Britton v. State, 61 App. 30, 133 S. W. 886.

The jury commission appointed at one term of court selected jurors for six weeks of the following term. At the expiration of that time, there still being a number on the docket, the trial judge appointed a new commission to draw jurors for four weeks longer. Held, that although he might have reassembled the old commission, if that were possible, or have directed the sheriff to summon jurors as provided by this article, the action taken by him was proper under Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, art. 5127, providing that if from any cause jury commissioners may fail to select jurors as required, the court shall proceed to supply a sufficient number of jurors, for that purpose may appoint commissioners when it may be deemed necessary. Columbo v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 919.

Where, owing to the death of the clerk of the court at a former term, no jury commissioners were appointed, and at the next term the panel of jurors was drawn by the sheriff, the panel cannot be quashed. Cox v. State, 71 App. 236, 158 S. W. 666.

It was not error to refuse defendant a continuance after a mistrial because there were no qualified regular jurors. Branch v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 605.

The court, excusing jurors for the week because they had heard the evidence in the trial of one indicted for the same offense, and were disqualified to try defendant, properly ordered a jury summoned by the sheriff. Bruce v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 301.

Constitutionality.—"Due course of law" does not entitle accused to a trial by a jury selected by jury commissioners, and one selected from talesmen summoned by the sheriff is legal. Sanchez v. State, 39 App. 385, 46 S. W. 249.

Cause of failure to select jury.—Where the county judge intentionally refuses to appoint jury commissioners to select jurors for the term, a substantial right is denied to a person who is tried by a jury selected by the sheriff, and a motion to quash the panel should have been sustained. White v. State, 45 App. 557, 78 S. W. 1067.

When through inadvertence or oversight, the jury commissioners have not selected the jurors of the ensuing term the court would be authorized under this article to have the sheriff to summon jurors for the disposition of cases pending in court. When the statute for the appointment of jury commissioners has been deliberately disregarded, it will be ground for reversal. Hurt v. State, 51 App. 338, 101 S. W. 897.

Jurors selected.—Where the jury panel was quashed on motion of defendant, and the sheriff, as required by this article, summoned another jury, the fact that some of the jurors summoned had been summoned as jurors on the panel quashed by the court did not render them incompetent. Arnold v. State, 38 App. 1, 48 S. W. 734.

Art. 716. [696] Array may be challenged as in capital cases.—The array of jurors may be challenged by either party for the causes and in the manner provided in capital cases, and the proceedings in such case shall be the same.

See ante, arts. 678-681, and notes.

CHAPTER FIVE OF THE TRIAL BEFORE THE JURY

Art.
717. Order of proceeding in trial.
718. Testimony allowed at any time before, etc., if, etc.
719. Witnesses placed under rule.
720. Witnesses under rule kept separate, etc.
721. A part of witnesses may be placed under rule.
722. When under rule witness shall be attended by an officer.
723. Shall be instructed by the court, etc.
724. Order of argument, how regulated.
725. In prosecutions for felony, two addresses on each side.
726. Defendant's right to sever on trial.
727. Same subject.
728. Defendants may agree upon the order in which they will be tried, etc.
729. May dismiss as to one who may be witness.
730. Where there is no evidence against a defendant jointly prosecuted.
731. Where it appears the court has no jurisdiction.
732. In such case the court may commit, when.
733. Defendant shall be discharged in all cases, when.
734. The jury are judges of the facts.
735. Charge of court to jury.
736. Charge shall not discuss the facts, etc.
737. Either party may ask written instructions.
737a. Correction of charge after objections thereto; no further charge after argument begins, except, etc.; review.
738. Charges shall be certified by judge.

Art.
739. No charge in misdemeanor, except, etc.
740. No verbal charge in any case, except, etc.
741. Judge shall read to jury only such charges as he gives.
742. Jury may take charge with them in their retirement, etc.
743. Judgment not to be reversed unless error prejudicial, etc.
744. Bill of exceptions.
745. Jury in felony case shall not separate until, unless, etc.
746. In misdemeanor case, court may permit jury to separate.
747. Sheriff shall provide jury with, etc.
748. No person shall be with jury or permitted to converse with them, except, etc.
749. Punishment for violation of preceding article.
750. Officer shall attend jury.
751. Court shall take papers in the case.
752. Foreman appointed.
753. Jury may communicate with court.
754. Jury may ask further instructions.
755. Jury may have witness re-examined, when.
756. Defendant shall be present, when.
757. If a juror become sick after retirement.
758. In misdemeanor case in district court.

759. Disagreement of jury.
760. Final adjournment of court discharges jury.
761. When jury has been discharged without a verdict cause may be again tried, etc.

Article 717. [697] Order of proceeding in trial.—A jury having been impaneled in any criminal action, the cause shall proceed to trial in the following order:

1. The indictment or information shall be read to the jury by the district or county attorney.
2. The special pleas, if any, shall be read by the defendant's counsel, and if the plea of not guilty is also relied upon, it shall also be stated.
3. The district attorney, or the counsel prosecuting in his absence, shall state to the jury the nature of the accusation and the facts which are expected to be proved by the state in support thereof.
4. The testimony on the part of the state shall be introduced.
5. The nature of the defenses relied upon shall be stated by the counsel of the defendant, and what are the facts expected to be proved in their support.
6. The testimony on the part of the defendant shall be offered.
7. Rebutting testimony may be offered on the part of the state and of the defendant. [O. C. 580.]

Conduct of Trial in General
13. In general.
15. Improper evidence subsequently withdrawn.
17. Conduct of judge.
18. Misconduct of prosecuting attorney.
19. — Improper questions.
20. — Prejudice.
22. Restrictions on defendant's counsel.
23. Consultation with adverse witness.

Subd. 1
1. In general.—The failure to read the indictment or information to the jury is an omission from which it must be apprehended that injury resulted to the defendant, and is reversible error, where it is made to appear affirmatively in the record on appeal. Wilkins v. State, 15 App. 429.

Where the omission or failure to read the indictment or information to the jury is not made to appear affirmatively in the record on appeal, the error is not reversible. Barbee v. State, 22 App. 170, 22 S. W. 402.

2. Cure of omission.—Where on a tardy reading of the indictment the state offers to reintroduce the evidence and defendant objects because it is already before the jury the reintroduction is waived and the omission cured. Hearde v. State, 13 S. W. 1009.

3. Judgment entry.—It is not required that the reading of the indictment be recited in the judgment but the proper practice is to make the judgment immediately preceding the plea set forth the fact of reading though it may be authenticated by the charge of the court. White v. State, 13 Tex. App. 57.

Subd. 3
4. In general.—This subdivision is merely directory, and its disregard is not cause for reversal unless there be cause to apprehend such disregard resulted injuriously to the rights of the defendant. In the conduct of trials, however, the directions prescribed by the statute should be strictly followed, and especially when those directions are insisted upon by the defendant. The legislative will should be observed and rigidly adhered to by the courts in matters of practice, as well as in all other respects. Holsey v. State, 24 App. 55, 5 S. W. 523. See also, Nalley v. State, 28 App. 387, 18 S. W. 672; Hendricks v. State, 28 App. 416, 18 S. W. 672; Malton v. State, 29 App. 527, 16 S. W. 425; Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 16 S. W. 757; McGrew v. State, 31 App. 336, 20 S. W. 740.

Where other attorneys in addition to the district attorney were employed to prosecute, it was not error to permit one of the attorneys for the state to make a preliminary statement of what the state expected to prove, as the state had a right, under the statute, to make such statement. Himmelfarb v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 586.

Subd. 4
5. In general.—In determining the propriety of recalling a witness who has testified on the trial, the trial court is vested with a wide discretion, and such discretion can not be defeated or controlled by any agreement entered into by counsel in the case. Pierson v. State, 18 App. 354. The state may anticipate defensive testimony upon a material issue, and may support its theory thereupon by its evidence in chief as well as by evidence in rebuttal. Gibson v. State, 23 App. 414, 5 S. W. 314.

The state cannot be required to produce every witness present at the trial. Wilford v. State, 36 App. 414, 37 S. W. 761.

The county attorney may put any witness on the stand he sees fit, and he need not call the prosecutor as a witness. Evans v. State, 57 App. 174, 122 S. W. 392.

The county attorney may, to explain why the prosecutor is not called as a witness, prove by a qualified witness that prosecutor is insane. Evans v. State, 57 App. 174, 122 S. W. 392.

6. Order of evidence.—The law does not prescribe the order in which testimony shall be introduced. The practice is to admit competent evidence at any convenient stage of the trial; and to admit evidence which may not appear to be material or relevant upon the material of counsel that it will be admitted by other evidence rendering it competent; but the better practice is, when practicable, to determine the competency of evidence when it is offered. Heard v. State, 9 App. 1; Davis v. State, Id. 353.

Where a witness testified to a certain statement, and on cross-examination was asked as to whether she had made a contradictory statement to a person named, and she denied making it, and on redirect examination it was proven that she had testified to the same facts at another time as sworn to by her, the supporting testimony was admissible in evidence, though introduced before the impeaching witness had been placed on the stand. Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 873.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, the admission of testimony that the prosecuting witness said in the absence of accused that he was sure of the parties, given after a predicate had been laid for the impeachment of the prosecuting witness, but before the impeaching testimony, was merely premature, and was rendered proper by the subsequent introduction of the impeaching evidence. Capius v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 267.

Reception of evidence out of its proper order is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which will not be reviewed unless abused. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 299.

It is not an abuse of the court’s discretion, as to the order in which the witnesses are introduced, to permit the prosecution to rest before the testimony of an adverse witness was heard and to permit the witness to testify on his appearance after the defense had begun its evidence. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 895.

Where, upon the record as a whole, evidence was admissible, the order of its introduction was immaterial. McCabe v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 289.

Where defendant’s direct evidence is in conflict with opinion testimony offered by the state, eyewitness being admissible, should be called to testify by the state. Thompson v. State, 30 App. 325, 17 S. W. 443.

SUBD. 5

8. In general.—It is not error for the court to refuse to require counsel for the state to make a statement to the jury of what he expects to prove, before he begins the introduction of evidence. Poole v. State, 45 App. 348, 76 S. W. 567.

It is not error to refuse to permit defendant’s attorney to make a statement to the jury after the plea of guilty and before the testimony of the State has been offered. The statute provides when the statement may be made. Owen v. State, 52 App. 60, 105 S. W. 513.

It is error to refuse permission to make the statement when application therefor is made at an apt time. House v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 296.

The fact that defendant had put two character witnesses on the stand before offering to make such statement does not defeat his right to make the statement. House v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 296.

SUBD. 6

9. Number of witnesses.—On a trial for homicide, where accused who had provoked the difficulty introduced 10 or 12 witnesses to testify that deceased was a vicious and dangerous man who would carry his threats into execution, and the prosecuting attorney stated that he would not contest this question, it was within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit any more witnesses to testify on this point. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 746.

10. Time for consultation.—Refusing to allow defendant’s counsel five minutes in which to consult with witnesses and each other at the close of the state’s case is not ground for reversal where counsel for the state had just previously been given 10 minutes in which to consult on their statement that they had only one more witness whose testimony would be short, and defendant’s first witness was not present, and 17 minutes were allowed to bring her in. Davis v. State, 57 App. 545, 124 S. W. 104.

SUBD. 7

11. In general.—Original testimony may be introduced which directly rebuts defendant’s theory and testimony as to an alibi. Pilot v. State, 38 App. 515, 43 S. W. 112, 1124.

Whether in rebuttal or not, evidence essential to the due administration of justice is admissible. Upton v. State, 33 App. 231, 46 S. W. 23.

12. Admissible rebuttal.—Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, alleged to have been committed by defendant on his stepdaughter, her mother testified that the witness for defendant that prosecutrux had never told her anything about it, it was permissible for prosecutrux to testify in rebuttal that she told her mother the first time she saw her after leaving the house about the occurrence in the presence of another woman. Grimes v. State, 64 App. 64, 141 S. W. 263.

In a trial for aggravated assault, prosecutrux’s testimony that accused placed his hands on her body was not rendered inadmissible because introduced in rebuttal, after accused denied that he had done so. Grantland v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 186.

In a trial for murder, permitting a witness for the state, after defendant had testified, to retentate in rebuttal a part of his testimony on a material point, was not such gross abuse of the trial court’s discretion as to require a reversal. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

In a prosecution for arson, where the state introduced evidence of several burnings, accused may introduce rebutting testimony as to all. Ward v. State, 71 App. 510, 133 S. W. 1158.

Evidence of a quarrel between deceased and accused as to their partnership books held admissible in rebuttal of accused’s evidence that decedent was the one who objected to the manner in which the books were kept, and first raised objection. State v. Corbitt, 72 App. 396, 182 S. W. 436.

Where accused, on cross-examination of a state’s witness, sought to show intense hostility by decedent toward him, and various acts of unkindness, the state was properly permitted to show that deceased had no ill will toward defendant, and that the alleged acts of hostility never occurred. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1158.

On a trial for false swearing in connection with the obtaining of a license, where accused filed a plea for a suspended sentence and testified as to his reasons for not delivering a license which he had previously obtained for the same parties, it was not error to permit the state to show that such license was not delivered for a different reason. Onstott v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 301.

CONDUCT OF TRIAL IN GENERAL

13. In general.—The aunt of the youthful prosecutrix was allowed to sit near the latter while testifying, but neither spoke to nor prompted her. Not error. Rodgers v. State, 30 App. 510, 17 S. W. 1077.

Recalling a witness to rescite his evidence is not error. Hays v. State, 36 App. 146, 35 S. W. 883.

That on a trial for murder of a school teacher, the public schools adjourned and teachers and scholars attended a part of the trial, will not reverse a conviction on the ground that the combined events were by concert or design to influence the jury. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

When accused applied for a continuance to procure an absent witness, the court stated that it would communicate with the sheriff of the county where such witness lived to see if attendance could be procured. Thereupon accused’s son-in-law communicated with the witness by phone, and, returning to the courtroom, stated to his wife, as claimed by the state, that a continuance would be granted because he had to attend. This statement was not to attend. This statement was not admitted as having been overruled before the motion for continuance was overruled. The court casually and without show of feeling requested him to remain in court until he was discharged, and he came and went in the courthouse throughout the trial; no one knowing until after the verdict was rendered that the court intended to punish him for contempt for interfering with witnesses. Every juror swore positively that the examination of accused’s son-in-law did not influence his verdict. Held, that the court’s action in requesting accused’s son-in-law to remain in court was not erroneous on the ground that it prevented accused from having an impartial trial by prejudicing the jury to believe that his son-in-law was trying to obstruct justice by interfering with witnesses. Lane v. State, 59 App. 595, 125 S. W. 534.

Where accused relied on insulting language by decedent concerning a female relative who had given birth to a child, and the female had charged that accused was the father of the child, and the court at the request of accused directed the female to bring the court into the courtroom when she was called as a witness, and the order was obeyed, but later she was recalled, when she came in with the child, the action of the court in permitting her to testify while having the child with her was not reversible error; no reference being made to the child during her testimony, nor by the attorneys during the argument. Redman v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 676.

In a criminal prosecution, where accused’s counsel was questioning one of the state’s witnesses as to what the sheriff and county attorney told him to say, it is highly improper for the sheriff to interfere in the cross-examination and tell accused’s counsel to sit down and keep his place, and the trial judge should suppress such conduct vigorously. Cober v. State, 72 App. 374, 162 S. W. 889.

A stipulation, entered into between accused’s counsel and the prosecutor as to preliminary matters of proof, which were also matters of record, cannot, where accused, who was present, acquiesced in the stipulation, be questioned after verdict. Eoff v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 707.

In a prosecution of four jointly indicted and tried for offering to bribe a witness, the fact that, at the close of the testimony, the court did not deem the evidence sufficient to authorize the conviction of one of the defendants, and withdrew a statement made by such defendant and admitted in evidence, did not show that the prosecutor’s attorney was guilty of improper conduct, where no damage was done to the defendant, and the court did not act in bad faith, and where he appeared to act in an earnest effort to produce evidence to convict all four defendants. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 790.

Where, in a prosecution for killing deceased by shooting through a window, the shot striking deceased in the back while sitting at the table near the window, it was sought to introduce by the wife his restatement statement that it was accused who shot the window, questions asked by the court in the presence of the jury, to determine the admissibility of the evidence as to whether room was lighted, the position of accused, and the time of the statement, were not leading, or calculated to impress the jury that the court thought deceased saw the assailant. Shamblin v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 718.
14. Argument to court.—In a criminal case, where a defendant fails to request that the jury be retired, he cannot complain that authorities upon which the state relied were read to the court in the presence of the jury. Germany v. State, 62 App. 276, 337 S. W. 130, Ann. Cas. 1933C, 477; Singh v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 894.

Pending discussion of the admissibility of evidence, the trial court is vested with discretion to retire the jury, and it should do so when the subject matter of the discussion might have an influence upon the jury. The exercise of this discretion is not properly reviewed on appeal. Allison v. State, 14 App. 492; White v. State, 10 App. 381; Bogen v. State, 39 App. 467, 17 S. W. 1087. And see Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

It is not error for State's counsel to read to the court in presence of jury a document or writing in instructing the jury as to law concerning defendant's failure to testify. Burks v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 825.

It is not proper to retire the jury while argument is being made to the court on the law of the case. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 560.

Evidence having been objected to as hearsay which was admissible, it was not error to permit the district attorney to state his reasons why he thought the testimony admissible. Robinson v. State, 65 App. 212, 139 S. W. 973.

The refusal of the trial court to permit counsel for defendant to read, in the presence and hearing of the jury, the opinion of the court in a certain case, when it appears from the statements of the court qualifying the exceptions that the court was familiar with the case sought to be read, was proper. Millican v. State (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 1335.

Where evidence is properly admissible, a discussion in the presence of the jury about admitting it is not error. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

15. Improper evidence subsequently withdrawn.—It is improper practice to permit incompetent and injurious evidence to go before the jury, and after it had been discussed on the court's own motion or at the suggestion of the prosecuting officer. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 118.

16. Reasons for ruling.—It was proper for the trial court to overrule an objection to offered evidence, without assigning reasons for its action, where it had assigned reasons for a similar ruling before, but accused cannot complain that the court stated its reasons, where accused's counsel requested such reasons. Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 159 S. W. 272.

17. Conduct of judge.—It is error for court to remark in hearing of the jury that evidence offered (which was highly material) was immaterial. Zysman v. State, 42 App. 432, 60 S. W. 676.

Where counsel for accused sought by certain remarks to get excluded evidence before the jury, it was proper for the court to state, in the jury's presence, that counsel's statement was improper, and he must not again make such statements. Durbin v. State (Cr. App.) 131 S. W. 315.

It was not error to punish defendant's counsel, in the jury's absence, on account of his repeatedly refusing to abide by the court's ruling excluding certain questions. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

If the court deems it necessary to criticise the conduct of counsel with respect to its rulings, it is better practice to first have the jury retire and then firmly and plainly inform counsel of the penalty for wilful disobedience of the court's rulings. Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 159 S. W. 272.

18. Misconduct of prosecuting attorney.—Statement made to other attorney in the presence of the jury has same effect as if made to the jury. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 88 S. W. 225.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state's counsel asked a witness if deceased was not lying in a perfect position of rest, and an objection was sustained, it was improper for counsel in the hearing of the jury to then state that the witness had so testified on a former hearing. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

In a homicide case, it was error to refuse to withdraw the remark by the prosecuting attorney in the hearing of the jury, "And this is the favor he gets in return," upon a witness having testified that decedent was friendly to him, and giving material testimony in accused's behalf. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 158 S. W. 1025.

After accused had laid a foundation for impeaching H., a state's witness, the prosecuting attorney questioned him relative to similar statements before the grand jury, to which objection was sustained. The prosecuting attorney then stated in the presence of the jury that a member of the grand jury had been summoned as a witness to corroborate H., but in view of the court's ruling would be excused. He read this statement, although improper, was not properly directed to accused, especially where H. was afterwards impeached, thus rendering the testimony of the member of the grand jury competent in corroboration. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 746.

A remark of counsel for the state to a witness that the witness was an extraordinary man was not reversible error. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 763.

Side remarks of the state's attorney in a burglary case did not constitute error where the court instructed the jury to disregard them. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

At the end of a hypothetical question the county attorney stated that as far as the state was concerned it did not desire to do accused anything but justice. Accused objected to the statement as gratuitous, whereupon the county attorney said: "Well, we will withdraw it then. We want to give him all the hell we can." The court at once instructed the jury not to consider the statement, and did so again in his instructions, and the attorney apologized to the court and jury for having used the expressions. Held, that the error was cured. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 677. 394.
Improper questions.—It is reprehensible to permit State's counsel to refresh witness's memory by reading his evidence before the jury to him on the stand in the presence of the petit jury. Spangler v. State, 41 App. 424, 55 S. W. 329.

Where, in a prosecution for perjury in a suit on certain notes alleged to have been executed by M. he was not a witness, and his counsel made no question was neither in issue nor material, repeated efforts by the district attorney to show that M. was a scoundrel, that he had been hanged in Oklahoma, and had a bad reputation, after the court had directed the attorney not to continue such line of examination, was error. Downs v. State, 61 App. 579, 61 Ark. 109.

In a prosecution for cattle theft, where the district attorney, in questioning a witness who was a relative of defendant, in answer to the witness' remark, "I have a right to ask your uncle, do you have a right to," and the court sustained an objection thereto, and instructed the jury not to consider such remark, defendant was not prejudiced. Roberts v. State, 64 App. 135, 141 S. W. 255.

It was improper for a county attorney to repeat an improper question after the court had ruled that it was incompetent. Grimes v. State, 64 App. 64, 141 S. W. 261.

In a trial for assault to murder, it was improper for the district attorney to ask accused's witness as to accused's character as a law-abiding citizen, where accused had not put his character in evidence. Hinton v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 617.

It was improper for the prosecuting attorney to ask a witness on cross-examination if he did not know that he was telling nothing but lies. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273.

It was highly improper for the county attorney to ask a witness on cross-examination, if you know you lied when you said he told you to get proper for counsel to call a witness a liar. Shed v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 125.

Where on a trial for manslaughter the state's attorney had no reason to believe that he could establish a conspiracy to kill between accused and his witnesses, it was improper to ask the witnesses concerning such a conspiracy. Clements v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1137.

The trial court has the power to restrain the prosecutor from asking improper questions merely for the purpose of getting before the jury incompetent evidence prejudicial to the accused and should severely punish prosecutor's attempt to do so. Vick v. State, 71 App. 50, 159 S. W. 50.

When the trial court rules that evidence is not admissible, counsel should respect such ruling, and not urge its admission. Ward v. State, 70 App. 396, 159 S. W. 272.

In a prosecution for alleged assault on defendant's stepdaughter, with intent to rape, the mother having testified for accused that her other daughters had left home and indicated to her, it was not prejudicial misconduct for the prosecuting attorney to ask her the reason why they had left home, creating an inference that accused had assaulted them also, where the court promptly sustained an objection to the question, did not permit the witness to answer, and instructed the prosecuting attorney not to ask the question again. Grimes v. State, 71 App. 614, 160 S. W. 639.

In a prosecution in a prohibition county, the action of the prosecutor in asking each of defendant's witnesses if they had not been drinking that day, and if they had not drunk with defendant, and, though they denied it, failing to follow it up by affirmative testimony, was improper as an effort to prejudice the jury against defendant and some of his material witnesses. Hodges v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 512.

The counsel for the state should never by his questions suggest an answer to a friendly witness. Carter v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 739.

A bill of exceptions complaining that during the trial the district attorney said, when cross-examining, the niece of the county, that accused objected to the remarks, when the district attorney replied that he "never said that he was the officers' pet," but said "he might be this officer's pet," qualified so as to show that the remarks were made during a colloquy between the district attorney and accused's counsel, and that the court directed the jury not to consider the remarks, and reprimanded the district attorney and accused's counsel, presents no error. McHenry v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1829.

Prejudice.—Defendant cannot complain where State's counsel has asked an improper question which was not allowed to be answered, and the court instructed the jury not to consider the question. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 59.

In a trial for murder, where the district attorney, after having been told that certain pictures were not admissible, offered them in evidence, but the jury were not permitted to see them, his conduct was harmless. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 706.

Where a witness was testifying to facts which would tend to reduce the offense to manslaughter when he was asked by the county attorney whether he did not know he lied when he made a certain statement, and accused was convicted of manslaughter and given the lowest penalty, the impropriety of such statement by the county attorney was not reversible error. Shed v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 125.

Where a question was promptly withdrawn, when objection was made, and the court instructed the jury not to consider it for any purpose, there was no error. Finley v. State, 72 App. 221, 102 S. W. 883.

The improper repetition of a question to which objection had been sustained in a different form is not prejudicial, where the question was not such as to tend in the least to show that the defendant had any connection with the crime. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 999.
That the county attorney persisted in asking questions that had been ruled out, when the witness was not ground for reversal in the absence of a showing of prejudice. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 708.

21. Restraint of accused.—The fact that defendant was arrested in another case pending against him during the time he was on trial was not ground for reversal. Nunez v. State, 70 App. 481, 156 S. W. 32.

In the trial for murder, where the sheriff on one occasion did not take the handcuffs off the accused until the jury were taking their seats, but it did not appear that the jury saw him take the handcuffs off accused, such custody or restraint of accused was not reversible error. Guerrero v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 731.

Where accused, as member of a company illegally organized in Texas to invade Mexico, was on trial for the killing of a deputy sheriff as an incident to the conspiracy to prevent discovery, and the other conspirators were only captured after having fired at the sheriff and another deputy and also attempting to resist the posse and a company of United States soldiers, defendant was not prejudiced because certain of the alleged co-conspirators were brought into the court room during the trial of accused named. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1153.

22. Restrictions on defendant's counsel.—Where the cross-examination of a state's witness proceeded on the theory that the district attorney and a justice of the peace had been guilty of improper conduct on an ex parte examination of witness, many questions without eliciting proper conduct, and informed accused's counsel that, if there was improper conduct, he would be given the widest opportunity to show it, and many more questions were asked on cross-examination, the remark of the court made on objection to cross-examination that, if counsel knew of any improper conduct, he could prove it, but he should not take the time of the court fishing around, was not erroneous. McKelvey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 932.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the action of the court in refusing to permit defendant to testify on one reason and upon his insisting, ordering him to sit down and thereafter ordering the sheriff to set him down, presents no error, where the bill shows that the same objections had been made to the testimony of other witnesses for reasons then stated, and the court qualified the bill by adding that the counsel gave him considerable trouble and would not stop talking when commanded to do so. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 115.

23. Consultation with adverse witness.—The court has no power to compel a person who has turned State's evidence to talk with the attorney of an accomplice who is on trial. Wilkerson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 958.

Art. 718. [698] Testimony allowed at any time before argument.—The court shall allow testimony to be introduced at any time before the argument of a cause is concluded, if it appear that it is necessary to a due administration of justice. [O. C. 581.]

This article embodies the practice followed before its adoption. Nutt v. State, 19 Tex. 316; Lawrence v. State, 31 App. 601, 21 S. W. 766.

Where it transpired during the argument that a witness who had testified had not been sworn, it was held not error to allow such witness to be recalled, sworn, and re-examined. Thomas v. State, 1 App. 289.

It is not error to refuse to allow a witness to testify after argument begins when the nature of the testimony is not stated to the court. Richards v. State, 34 App. 277, 20 S. W. 229.

1. The admission of testimony after the argument has begun and before it has closed is within the sound discretion of the court, and its action will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused. 2. This statute is an exception to the general rule and this exception marks the limit of the power of the court in this respect. 3. The language of the statute conveys the idea that evidence shall not be introduced after the close of the argument in as strong terms as if the legislature had said so in direct language. Williams v. State, 35 App. 158, 32 S. W. 893.

The refusal of defendant's application to introduce evidence after demurring to the state's evidence under a misapprehension of the testimony of a witness, held error. White v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 609.
It was within the discretion of the court to permit the reading of the minutes of the commissioners court showing the local option law to be in force when the defendant for the state requested a directed verdict because the minutes, though in evidence had not been read to the jury. Howard v. State, 72 App. 624, 163 S. W. 429.

The refusal of continuance for absence of witnesses cannot be complained of, they having arrived before conclusion of the trial, if not before conclusion of the testimony. Burnett v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 531.

In a prosecution for murder, it is proper for the state to reinroduce defendant for impeachment. Decker v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 552.

Exclusion of evidence.—The court has discretion to exclude proffered evidence after the evidence is closed, and it is only on the abuse of such discretion that the court's exclusion of the same will be revised. Dement v. State, 39 App. 271, 45 S. W. 917.

Time for receiving evidence.—Testimony can be introduced at any time before the conclusion of the argument. Pool v. State, 51 App. 596, 104 S. W. 892; Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 559; Whitley v. State, 59 App. 324, 128 S. W. 621.

But no testimony is allowable after argument is begun, unless essential to justice. Thomas v. State, 1 App. 289.

The court did not err in refusing to permit defendant to testify after the evidence in the case was closed and the argument begun. Warren v. State, 31 App. 575, 21 S. W. 680.

If the court permits evidence to be introduced after the argument has closed, the case will be reversed. Williams v. State, 35 App. 383, 32 S. W. 893.

It is not error to permit the recall of a witness after argument has begun. Daniels v. State, 35 App. 571, 34 S. W. 754.

Evidence cannot be introduced after close of argument, whether argument is made alone to court or to court and jury. Lockett v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 836.

Whether evidence shall be admitted while the district attorney is making his closing address is within the discretion of the court. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

The time of introduction of evidence is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 165.

It is not error to allow the prosecution to recall a witness, although the counsel for defendant had closed his argument and the state had made its opening argument and the leading counsel for defendant had left town, where it is not shown that the remaining counsel were not fully capable of cross-examining the witness. Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1013.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to admit evidence offered by the state to test an accusation introduced his testimony, instead of requiring that it be offered by the state at the time it puts in its first evidence. Corbitt v. State, 72 App. 396, 163 S. W. 436.

In a rape case, it was not error to permit the state's counsel after the state had made its opening argument, and while defendant's counsel was speaking, to recall the prosecuting witness to prove that she was not the wife of accused. Greenwood v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 109.

After the case has been submitted to the jury, evidence to show authority for the holding of court in a hotel during the building of a new courthouse was improperly received. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1065.

Evidence admissible.—The indictment alleged defendant's name to be Daniels. The evidence showed his name to be Daniel. The State was properly allowed to prove that the defendant was commonly called Daniels, although much evidence was introduced until after the State had rested her case. Pendy v. State, 34 App. 643, 31 S. W. 647.

On a trial for perjury after the evidence was closed, defendant demurred to the evidence as not being shown that the oath was administered by an authorized officer; held, no error to recall the officer and prove that he was a notary public. Powell v. State, 36 App. 377, 37 S. W. 322.

The exclusion of testimony by defendant's father and brother who had been present during the trial to supply gaps in an alibi testified to by a witness who did not reach the courthouse until after the state's opening argument, held not error. Williams v. State, 59 App. 347, 128 S. W. 1129.

The court, in refusing to reopen the case near the close of the argument of the state's attorney for the admission of the testimony of a physician who had already testified and been cross-examined, held not an abuse of its discretion. Bailey v. State, 63 App. 584, 141 S. W. 224.

Where a witness testified to the distances between the point where the homicide occurred and certain houses, it was not error to permit him, at his own request, to again take the stand the next day and correct his former testimony by accurately stating such distances as determined by him from having stepped them off in the interval. Mims v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 351.

It was not an abuse of discretion in a murder trial to permit the state, after the defense closed, to admit testimony that immediately after the shooting witness examined the ground over which decedent traveled to the point where he fell, looked about and did not find any traces of an undress decedent, as tending to show that decedent had no pistol. Decker v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 566.

Where the state rested without introducing the orders of the commissioners' court putting local option in force in the county, it was proper for the court to call attention of the state's attorney to the omission privately and to allow him to subsequently introduce the record of proceedings. Anderson v. State, 70 App. 250, 157 S. W. 156.
Where, in a prosecution for cattle theft, accused had put in evidence that he had seen the cattle on the farm where he had never seen them before he arrested him, it was held that such evidence was admissible to the court until he had heard the testimony of an officer who had been in the area.

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Art. 718

Where, in a prosecution for cattle theft, accused had put in evidence that he had seen the cattle on the farm where he had never seen them before he arrested him, it was held that such evidence was admissible to the court until he had heard the testimony of an officer who had been in the area.

Where, in a prosecution for perjury committed in a divorce suit by the plaintiff therein, in his testimony that his wife was afflicted with a natural and incurable impotency, accused failed to move for the appointment of a commission of physicians to make examination until after he had closed his evidence, such motion, being then too late, was properly denied. Edwards v. State, 71 App. 417, 160 S. W. 709, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

Material testimony may be admitted in rebuttal, even though properly admissible in chief. Graham v. State, 57 App. 161, 123 S. W. 691; Raleigh v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 1650; De Lerosa v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 211.

The common law rule with regard to the examination of witnesses is entirely abrogated by this article. Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 14 S. W. 757, and cases cited.

The court may recall the defendant after he has testified in his own behalf for the purpose of impeaching him. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 225.

The court, after defendant has closed his case, may permit the State to introduce evidence not strictly in rebuttal. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

Admitting evidence, though on rebuttal, on prosecution for seduction, that prosecution used ergot on defendant's prescription was not error. Beeson v. State, 60 App. 39, 120 S. W. 1008.

Where a person charged with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors has testified that he never sold intoxicating liquors to any one, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit evidence in rebuttal of sales not shown by the state's direct evidence. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 394.

This article abolished the common-law rule as to matters in rebuttal, and hence it was not error for the court to permit the state in rebuttal to introduce eyewitnesses of the crime and to permit them to testify as to the homicide generally. Montgomery v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 375.

The state has a right to recall a defendant, who took the stand in his own behalf, for further examination, as against the objection that he cannot be compelled to testify against himself. Flowers v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 925.

Where defendant sought to impeach a witness for the state, evidence to support him was properly admitted in rebuttal. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.

In a prosecution for selling liquor in prohibition territory, where accused denied the sale, it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to allow one of the persons claimed to have been present to testify in rebuttal that he saw accused sell and deliver the liquor. De Lerosa v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 312.

Art. 719. [699] Witnesses placed under rule.—At the request of either party, the witnesses on both sides may be sworn and placed in the custody of an officer and removed out of the court room to some place where they can not hear the testimony as delivered by any other witness in the cause. This is termed placing witnesses under rule. [O. C. 582.]

In general.—Paynt v. State, 26 App. 689, 9 S. W. 725; Trotter v. State, 37 App. 468, 26 S. W. 278; Heath v. State, 7 App. 484.

After the enforcement of the rule has been requested, the proper practice is not to relax it without the consent of the parties before the conclusion of the testimony in the case, but to enforce it, notwithstanding the particular witness may have been examined. The discretion of the judge is not an arbitrary one. Heath v. State, 7 App. 484.

Where defendant had invoked the rule, the exclusion of testimony by his father and brother who had been present during the trial to supply gaps in an alibi testified to by another witness after the state's opening argument, held not error. Williams v. State, 59 App. 347, 128 S. W. 113.

One who, before his severance, was jointly charged with accused with murder was properly allowed to remain in the courtroom during the trial; he not being competent as a witness for accused, and not having been summoned for the state. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 629, 143 S. W. 878.

The defendant is not limited to any particular time for making his demand that witnesses be placed under the rule but may do so at any time while evidence is being taken. Clary v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 219.

Where relatives of accused were present at the trial and heard the testimony of a witness for the state after the rule had been invoked, but the state's attorney at the time did not know that they knew anything about the case, but after adjournment of the first half day of trial had them sworn and placed under the rule, the trial court in permitting them to testify, did not abuse his discretion, so as to amount to error. Cooper v. State, 22 App. 256, 161 S. W. 1684.

In a trial for homicide, where the district attorney on his first appearance in the case stated that he desired one J., a witness summoned by defendant, to advise him about facts in the case, and would not use him as a witness against the state, and then if defendant desired to use him he might do so without objection, and where defendant said he did not expect to put J. on the stand, the court's action

Exemptions from rule.—Ordinarily, expert witnesses, witnesses who are attend­ in court, and whose names are not to testify to a witness's truth and veracity, are exempt from the rule. Johnson v. State, 10 App. 571; Powell v. State, 13 App. 244; Spear v. State, 16 App. 98; Leache v. State, 22 App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 58 Am. St. Rep. 635; Rouch v. State, 41 Tex. 261. A is an officer of the court and should not be placed under the rule. Bonners v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 669; Williams and Gordon v. State, 37 App. 147, 38 S. W. 999.

The court may permit the sheriff to remain in the courtroom and exclude him from the rule excluding the witnesses, and may permit him to testify. Siars v. State, 62 App. 567, 140 S. W. 777.

Where the sheriff was a witness, the refusal of the court to place him under the rule with the other witnesses was not an abuse of discretion, where accused made no showing of prejudice, and the court qualified the bill of exceptions by a statement that, knowing the high character of the witness, he was of the opinion that no harm was done to accused. Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

Discretion as to placing under rule.—It is discretionary with the court to permit one or more witnesses to remain in the courtroom during the trial of the accused. Ham v. State, 36 App. 47, 35 S. W. 391; Powell v. State, 36 App. 377, 37 S. W. 322; Cook v. State, 20 App. 697, 18 S. W. 412; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 194, 16 S. W. 597; Baldwin v. State, 30 App. 245, 45 S. W. 714; Rummel v. State, 25 App. 558, 3 S. W. 762; Thomas v. State, 33 App. 697, 28 S. W. 634; Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 296.

On any trial, at the request of either party, the witnesses may be placed under the rule, and those summoned for the prosecution may be kept separate from the accused, if the court sees proper to do so; and they may be placed in the custody of an officer or be allowed to go at large, under a like discretion. The trial judge is invested with a wide discretion in all matters relating to this procedure, and such discretion will not be revised on appeal unless it has been abused, but the right to have witnesses placed under the rule is a right given by law, and it should not be denied or substantially abridged at the arbitrary discretion of the judge. McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142; Walling v. State, Id. 625; Shields v. State, 8 App. 427; Estep v. State, 9 App. 365; Avery v. State, 10 App. 199; Johnson v. State, Id. 571; Hoy v. State, 11 App. 32; Cross v. State, Id. 84; Powell v. State, 13 App. 244; Walker v. State, 17 App. 18; Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 613; Bond v. State, 20 App. 421; Golgi v. State, 41 Tex. 354; Sher­ wood v. State, 42 Tex. 495; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 1119.

The putting of witnesses under the rule is a matter for the trial court's discre­ tion. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 142 S. W. 878.

The discretion granted the court by this article is not an arbitrary discretion. Chavez v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 919.

In the absence of anything showing an abuse of discretion, the refusal of the trial court to put some of the prosecuting witnesses under the rule will not be held erroneous. Smith v. State, 70 App. 66, 154 S. W. 645.

The court has a wide discretion under the statute in putting witness under the rule; and, where the state's counsel stated that the brother of deceased, summoned by defendant as a witness, was familiar with the facts, and would be of material aid to the state in presenting the case, it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in not putting such witness under the rule. Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 272.

In view of article 58 and Pen. Code 1911, arts. 10, 58, providing that words and phrases are to be taken in their usual acceptance, the placing of witnesses under the rule rests in the discretion of the trial court, the word "may" in this article being used in contradistinction to "shall" in art. 296, ante. Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

While only officers of the court necessary to the transaction of its business have a right to be excused from the rule, the court has a wide discretion, and may ex­ cuse officers such as county detectives. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 346.

Prejudice.—Failure to place under the rule two parties summoned as witnesses for the state was not error where neither was used as a witness. De Los Santos v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 238. Refusal to place witnesses under the rule was harmless error, where each witness testified only to independent facts, and in no way supported each other. Clary v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 919.

Testimony of witness violating the rule, or not under it.—It is in the discretion of the court to permit a witness to testify who has not been placed under the rule. King v. State, 34 App. 228, 29 S. W. 1056; Turner v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 700; Piles v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 529; Sherwood v. State, 42 Tex. 498; Ham v. State, 4 App. 645; Cordova v. State, 6 App. 397; Allen v. State, 62 App. 501, 37 S. W. 912; Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 672.

It is within the discretion of the court to permit a witness who had been under the rule, and who had been discharged, and had been at large, to be recalled to explain his testimony. Goins v. State, 41 Tex. 234. But on appeal the refusal of the trial court to permit such witness to be recalled will not be revised, unless it be shown that the fact sought to be proved was not known to the party calling him at the previous examination, or why such fact was not then elicited. Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 361.

A violation of the rule held to require the exclusion of the testimony of two witnesses for the state. Welhausen v. State, 30 App. 623, 18 S. W. 300.

Excluding a material witness because not placed under rule, held, error. Ashwood v. State, 37 App. 555, 40 S. W. 272.

It is error not to allow a witness to testify as to a material fact because the rule having been invoked witness had heard part of testimony of one witness, no intention of infraction of rule being shown. Caviness v. State, 42 App. 420, 60 S. W. 555.

Where a witness, although not sworn as a witness at the beginning of the trial and placed under the rule at that time with the other witnesses, was not present in court when accused testified, it was not improper to permit him to testify to statements by accused. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

Punishment for violation of the rule.—Violation of the rule by witnesses or the officer having them in charge, may be punished as contempt. Cross v. State, 11 App. 84; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 105, 15 S. W. 597; Cook v. State, 39 App. 697, 18 S. W. 412; Welhausen v. State, 30 App. 624, 18 S. W. 306.

A witness failing to leave the room when the witnesses are put under the rule may be punished for contempt of court. Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 170.

Art. 720. [700] Witnesses under rule kept separate, or, etc.—When witnesses are placed under rule, those summoned for the prosecution may be kept separate from those summoned for the defense, or they may all be kept together, as the court shall direct. [O. C. 583.]

In general.—Cited, Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

The enforcement of the rule sequestering witnesses at the request of either party, is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. They may be separated, state from defendant, allowed at large, or kept together under surveillance of the sheriff. Action of the court with regard to the rule will be revised only on abuse of discretion. McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142; Welhausen v. State, 30 App. 623, 18 S. W. 306.

Art. 721. [701] Part of witnesses may be placed under rule.—The party requesting the witnesses to be placed under rule may designate such as he desires placed under rule, and those not designated will be exempt from the rule, or the party may have all the witnesses in the case placed under rule.

In general.—Cited, Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

Certain witnesses were excused from the rule by consent of parties. When they were called to testify, objection was made by defendant that he had consented to excuse them from the rule only on condition that they remain out of the court room. This condition was not heard by the court, nor admitted by the state. Held, that it was not apparent that the court had erred in permitting the witnesses to testify. Davis v. State, 6 App. 196.

Where counsel for defendant exempts a witness from the rule, he cannot afterwards object that the witness was not under the rule. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 1171.

Art. 722. [702] When under rule, shall be attended by an officer.—Witnesses under rule shall be attended by an officer, and all their reasonable wants provided for, unless the court, in its discretion, directs that they be allowed to go at large; but in no case where the witnesses are under rule shall they be allowed to hear the testimony in the case, or any part thereof.

Cited, Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

Art. 723. [703] Shall be instructed by the court, etc.—Witnesses, when placed under rule, shall be instructed by the court that they are not to converse with each other or with any other person about the case, except by permission of the court, and that they are not to read any report of or comment upon the testimony in the case while under rule; and the officer who attends the witnesses shall report to the court at once any violation of its instructions; and the party violating the same shall be punished for contempt of court.

Conference with counsel.—Cited, Hahn v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 218.

The court, in considering that witnesses were invoked, it was not error to permit the district attorney to take the state's witnesses into his office and have them relate to him, in the presence of each other, what their testimony would be, to enables him to arrange the order of introducing the testimony. Jordan v. State, 62 App. 267, 137 S. W. 132; Girman v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1065.

A witness should not be called from the stand and conferred with by counsel. Williams v. State, 35 Tex. 555; Davis v. State, 6 App. 196.

The rule is provided simply to prevent the testimony of one witness from influencing another, and not to prevent counsel from conferring with the witnesses, with consent of the court. Jones v. State, 3 App. 150; McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142.

But attorneys should not be allowed unlimited license to converse with the witnesses, but an officer should be present at such conferences. Brown v. State, 3 App. 294.

A witness can not be contradicted by the testimony of an attorney who conferred with him while under the rule. Brown v. State, 3 App. 294; Blackwell v. State, 35 App. 165, 18 S. W. 507; Cook v. State, 30 App. 607, 18 S. W. 412; Wel­hhausen v. State, 30 App. 621, 18 S. W. 300.

The trial judge is authorized to prescribe the conditions under which a conference may be held. Holt v. State, 9 App. 571.

It is within the discretion of the court to permit the state’s counsel to confer with a witness who is under the rule, and such action of the court will not be reviewed, except where an abuse of such discretion is apparent. Dubose v. State, 13 App. 418; Davis v. State, 6 App. 196. The practice of permitting counsel to confer with witnesses under the rule is condemned, but will not be cause for reversal, unless it be manifest that the court has abused the discretion conferred to it. Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 618.

Where an attorney talks to witnesses placed under the rule it is proper for the court to reprimand him even in the presence of the jury. Marsee v. State (Cr. App.) 16 S. W. 98.

It was not error for the trial court, after the jury had been impaneled and the witnesses sworn, to permit the county attorney to confer for a minute with the only witness for the prosecution before putting him on the stand. Ross v. State, 71 App. 493, 150 S. W. 1063.

The action of the court in placing the witnesses under the rule in charge of an attorney, who will be a witness for the state, and in permitting the district attorney to interview the witnesses one by one in the presence of the officer, is within the discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed unless abused. Cole v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 929.

Art. 724. [704] Order of argument.—When a criminal cause is to be argued, the order of argument may be regulated by the presiding judge; but, in all cases, the state’s counsel shall have the right to make the concluding address to the jury. [O. C. 585.]

1. Limiting time.
2. Number of arguments.
3. Control by court.
4. Right to argue.
5. Scope of argument.
7. Illustrations.
8. Arguing law to jury.
9. Reading from books.
10. Matters outside of issues.
12. — Excluded evidence.
13. — Incorrect statement.
14. — Character of witness.
15. — Action by court.
17. — Deductions.
18. Witnesses.
19. Challenge to call witness.
20. Opinion as to guilt.
21. Conviction on former trial.

1. Limiting time.—On trial for theft, where more than twelve witnesses testified, and the defense is circumstantial, it was held reversible error for the court to limit the argument to forty-five minutes. Walker v. State, 32 App. 175, 23 S. W. 685.

The court erred in limiting the argument of counsel to fifteen minutes on each side. Hunty v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 929.

An order limiting defendant’s counsel to five minutes more in which to close; held, not prejudicial. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 276.

The court may limit the time of argument. Bailey v. State, 37 App. 579, 40 S. W. 231.

The time which will be allowed for argument is a matter for the trial judge’s discretion, and his ruling thereon will not be reviewed in the absence of abuse of such discretion. Bailey v. State, 37 App. 579, 40 S. W. 231; Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 236, 131 S. W. 542; King v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 234; Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 926.

Where the taking of evidence in a homicide case was closed on Friday night, allowing two days having been consumed in obtaining the evidence, and three counsel represented the state and five represented accused, a ruling limiting the time for argument to three hours on each side, in order to permit the jury to consider the case on Saturday, was not reversible error; such matters being left largely to the trial court's discretion, subject to the right of the parties to fully present the issues. Bradley v. State, 60 App. 298, 132 S. W. 484.

Where, after closing of the evidence, counsel for both sides, being asked by the court as to the amount of time desired for argument, announced that each side would require a certain time, there was no error in allowing the defendant, after the county attorney had made the opening argument, to use the remainder of the state's time in argument, though the defendant's counsel, at the close of the opening argument, announced that he did not wish to make an argument. Laughlin v. State, 62 App. 299, 156 S. W. 784.

Defendant on trial for a statutory offense used all of his time in arguing the law, and the court refused to hear him further on the law, but offered additional time to the jury, which right he expressly waived. State v. State, 31 App. 175, 22 S. W. 685; Tooko v. State, 23 App. 12, 5 S. W. 781; Hall v. State, 58 App. 312, 126 S. W. 573.

The trial judge is expressly empowered to regulate the order of argument, but the state's counsel is entitled to the concluding address. In his opening argument the state's counsel should fairly develop his case and give the law he relies on; and the trial court should see that he does so. But counsel for the defendant must anticipate the line of argument to which the evidence suggests the state's counsel may resort in his conclusion. Cross v. State, 11 App. 84. If the state's counsel should fail to fairly develop his case until in his concluding argument, the trial judge, in his discretion, would be authorized to allow the defendant's counsel to again address the jury, and then to allow the state's counsel to close the argument. Morales v. State, 1 App. 494, 28 Am. Rep. 419; Cross v. State, 11 App. 84; Smith v. State, 27 App. 56, 10 S. W. 751; Miller v. State, 27 App. 63, 10 S. W. 446.

The rules for the government of argument in the district court, should be strictly enforced. Laubach v. State, 12 App. 553.

When counsel after being reprimanded by the court persists in making improper arguments the court should impose upon him such fine as will restrain such conduct. Lancaster v. State, 36 App. 16, 25 S. W. 105.

Court should not restrict argument more than is necessary. Court's action restricting will not be reviewed unless abused. Whitley v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 70.

Where the court had determined not to submit the issue of self-defense, it was not improper to inform counsel for accused, arguing in support of the defense of self-defense, that the issue would not be submitted. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 805.

4. Right to argue.—An accused is entitled to the benefit of argument by his counsel upon any and all of the facts placed before the jury. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

Under Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that accused shall have the right of being heard by himself or counsel, accused has an absolute right to be so heard unless he waives it, so that it was reversible error to refuse the request of accused's counsel to be heard in argument on the law and facts, made immediately after the evidence was in, and to render judgment of conviction without argument. Anselin v. State, 72 App. 17, 169 S. W. 713.

Where the defendant in good faith desired to argue the matter after the court had withdrawn part of its charge delivered before the argument and substituted a different charge, the denial of a reasonable time for such argument deprived defendant of a valuable right, and was prejudicial. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

5. Scope of argument.—Zeal in behalf of their client, or desire for success, should never induce counsel to permit themselves to endeavor to obtain a verdict by arguments based upon any other than the facts in the case, and the conclusions legitimately deducible from the law applicable to them. Thompson v. State, 43 Tex. 110; Allison v. State, 15 App. 418, 24 Am. Rep. 763.

The statement by the state's counsel in his closing argument that good men had contributed to the employment of counsel to prosecute the defendant, and that he could have proved certain facts with regard to which the court excluded evidence had not the defendant objected, was held to be an abuse of the privilege of argument, which not only called for the condemnation of the trial judge, but which was such error as required a reversal of the conviction. Clark v. State, 23 App. 360, 5 S. W. 115.

A statement by the county attorney in his opening argument that he felt it proper to warn the jury not to discuss anything except the evidence while retired, as courts sometimes had to set aside verdicts because juries discussed improper matters in the jury room, was not improper, but rather commendable. Moray v. State (Cr. App.) 115 S. W. 592.

Counsel may legitimately discuss everything connected with the case, whether of law or fact; and, while the court should charge the law to the jury, and may instruct that the jury shall receive the law from the court, it should not instruct that it not consider the argument of counsel as to the law of the case. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 559.

6. Stating proceedings.—Statements to the jury, by the county attorney, in a prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicants, that accused, who applied for a continuance to procure witnesses, did not want his witnesses, but merely wanted a continuance for the purpose of reviewing his case, was not reversible error; the testimony of the witnesses who was sought to be impeached clearly showing guilt, if believed. Trinkle v. State, 50 App. 237, 127 S. W. 1660.

The wife of accused having been improperly required to produce a deed of trust that the state might introduce the same in evidence against her husband, the district attorney, as shown by the bill of exceptions, stated that the attorney for accused "gave the deed of trust" to the wife, and "she was brought into court and made to dig it up." The court qualified the bill by saying that the language used was, "We had a time getting possession of this deed of trust. They had it and would not give it up till the court got after them and made them dig it up." Held, that such remarks, whether made in accordance with the version of the attorneys or of the court, were highly improper. Downing v. State, 61 App. 509, 126 S. W. 471.

It was not prejudicial error for the prosecuting attorney, in his opening argument, to state that he abandoned a count charging assault with intent to rape, because the penalty was not as grave as that prescribed for burglary, upon which the state elected to rely. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 654.

Where, in a prosecution for violating the local option law, defendant claimed that he obtained the whisky from C. as prosecutor's agent, a statement, made by the prosecuting attorney in argument, that the facts were in the record, and that the jury were bound to find a verdict, and, if they found "this negro [defendant] not guilty, the attorney would have C. in jail just as soon as the verdict was returned, was improper, but was cured by an instruction directing the jury not to consider it. McElwee v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 227.

Where, in a homicide case, the defense was that deceased killed herself, it was not reversible error for the prosecuting attorney, in his argument, to brand the pistol to a juror and ask him if it were possible for deceased to have shot herself in the place where she was shot, although such practice should not be indulged in. Borders v. State, 12 App. 135, 161 S. W. 482.

Where counsel for accused in his argument dwelt on the fact that accused had a good reputation for peace, and therefore would not have committed the killing charged, the argument of the state's counsel, in reply, that he had known of a minister who had always borne an enviable reputation commit a helinous murder after he was 60 years old, was proper within the rule that circumstances of other cases, actual or hypothetical, may be used in illustrating argument, provided counsel does not present to the jury prejudicial facts not in evidence. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 227.

In a prosecution for murder, where state's counsel was arguing the question that the mode and use of a weapon must always be considered in passing on whether it is a deadly weapon, and whether death was intended, and stated that, if a pistol were thrown at a man, and not fired, it would not necessarily be a deadly weapon, the argument was legitimate. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 138 S. W. 533.

8. Arguing law to jury.—It was not improper for the prosecuting attorney in his argument to state that there are two kinds of burglary, burglary with intent to commit theft, and to state the proof required to establish each, though the prosecution was for burglary to commit theft. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 270.

It is a matter for the court's discretion whether the authorities on the legal questions raised shall be presented to the court in the jury's presence or absence, the exercise of which discretion will not be reviewed unless abused to accused's prejudice. Holmen v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 926.

Whether the state's counsel shall be permitted to read cases and discuss law to the trial court is within the court's sound discretion. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 312.

It is the discretion of the court to permit authorities to be read to the jury. Phillips v. State, 26 App. 216, 38 S. W. 768.

It is not error for court to refuse to allow counsel for defendant to read to jury facts in other insanity cases and opinions of judges in such cases. Cannon v. State, 41 App. 467, 56 S. W. 266.

In a prosecution of a militiaman for killing a citizen while doing guard duty during a visit of the President of the United States within a city at the call of the mayor, held, that reading a civil case asserting that a highway is primarily for transportation of goods and not for the use of the public was not an error, where the jurors might have been led to question the validity of the mayor's call for the militia at the time in question and his right to close the street. Manley v. State, 62 App. 392, 137 S. W. 1157.

Upon the trial of defendant for aggravated assault, the court's refusal to allow him to read and discuss the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeals in another case, where defendant had appealed from a conviction for an assault growing out of the same transaction, was within its proper discretion. Perkins v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 241.

10. Matters outside of issues.—C. and T. were jointly indicted for theft. They severed and C. was on trial. Counsel for the state in argument said, "They have severed and C. is put on trial, and you are told he is only a hired hand. They thus to clear this man and then he is to swear his confederate clear. I tell you this is the trick. Good men in this county and the best men in Gonzales county desire the conviction of this man and his partner." Held, that such remarks were improper, and that it was the duty of the court to have promptly suppressed them, and to have informed the jury that they should not be influenced by the wishes of good or bad men, but that they should try the defendant by the law and the evidence. Conn v. State, 11 App. 330.

An attorney appointed by the court to assist the prosecuting attorney, stated in his argument that he appeared, not as hired counsel, but upon the suggestion of the court, the state's attorney being worn out, held, that such remarks were calculated to impress the jury with the belief that the trial judge believed the defendant guilty and desired his conviction; and it was the duty of the court to stop the counsel and instruct the jury that such was not the purpose of the appointment. Brunet v. State, 12 App. 521.

For the district attorney to reply to the argument of the improbability of defendant having passed a check knowing it was forged, because of his having remarked with a week statement that only two days before a person was convicted of altering an order, though he had remained in the community within half a mile of the man whose order was altered, which fact would not be proper evidence, was reversible error. Rodriguez v. State, 68 App. 276, 125 S. W. 491.

A statement by the state's attorney in argument that accused was old, but that this was not the first time an aged defendant had been in the court, as one whom with age had been convicted within the year, was not a legitimate answer to accused's defense of old age and insanity and was improper. Lane v. State, 59 App. 565, 129 S. W. 525.

it is improper to permit the state's attorney to argue that there was a conspiracy to kidnap, when accused was not shown to have been involved in one. Clements v. State, 61 App. 161, 134 S. W. 728.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, where the state's evidence showed only the single sale for which accused was being prosecuted, statements in the county attorney's argument that accused was making his living by violating the local option law, and that the jury should stand by the county attorney in its enforcement, are highly improper. Harwell v. State, 71 App. 417, 190 S. W. 378.

The state having been excused, on claim of having been at war, was not proper for counsel for the prosecution to state, in his argument to the jury, that if he had testified the state could have thrown more light on the case. Stanfield v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 216.

Where the guilt of accused, charged with receiving stolen cattle with knowledge that they were stolen, was clearly established, the improper statement of the prosecuting attorney that the story of thievery, of which accused was the head, rivalled the stories of Robin Hood, that accused was the captain of cow thieves, and the head of an underground system from a pasture in one county down through another county, terminating in accused's pasture, where the cattle were found, and that cattle stealing must be broken up, was not ground for reversal. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 621.

Where the district attorney in the presence of the jury stated that he was willing for the jury to take with them a map drawn by a state's witness, and admitted to be incorrect, and which had not been admitted in evidence, an objection to such statement by accused, as prejudicial, and calculated to cause the jury to believe that he did not want them to have the map because it might bear witness or give evidence against him, is not ground for reversal, where the jury was not permitted to take the map, the district attorney's offer not having been accepted by either the court or accused, especially as the court, in qualifying the bill, expressly disapproved accused's contention as to the effect of the remark on the jury. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

In a prosecution for murder, where there was evidence as to the character of the knife, its depth, and that it penetrated the cavity, the state's counsel was authorized to argue as to the probable length of the blade of defendant's knife, despite defendant's contradictory testimony. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 553.

In a prosecution for murder, where there was evidence as to the character of the knife, its depth, and that it penetrated the cavity, the state's counsel was authorized to argue as to the probable length of the blade of defendant's knife, despite defendant's contradictory testimony. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 553.

Prosecuting counsel should not be permitted to assert, in argument to the jury, that the absent witness had been introduced he would have testified to certain facts, when adverse counsel had not invited such assertion. Greene v. State, 17 App. 355.

It is error for counsel in argument to state his personal knowledge of facts, and are not in evidence. He must keep within the record, confining his discussion to facts in proof. Tillery v. State, 21 App. 451, 6 S. W. 842. 5 Am. St. Rep. 852; Orman v. State, 24 App. 495, 6 S. W. 614.

A statement that defendant had bribed a witness to stay away, when unsupported by testimony, is cause for reversal. Butler v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 128.

Statements by the prosecuting attorney as to what he told the prosecutrix to do, and what she did, explained to the jury, and evidence may not have been allowed by the court. Bice v. State, 37 App. 38, 38 S. W. 805.

Where, on a trial for homicide, accused sought to show that H. had committed the offense, and, though evidence that H. had admitted shortly after the homicide that he had killed, that admission was excluded on objection by the state, the evidence introduced, while cross-examining H. as a witness, brought out a denial of the making of such statement, and then introduced witnesses who testified that H. did make the statement, the argument of the district attorney, that H. did not proclaim that he had killed decedent until he got on the witness stand after accused was indicted, was improper. Hardin v. State, 57 App. 461, 123 S. W. 611.

For the county attorney in his argument to state that to his knowledge defendant was a bootlegger, that he induced a witness for the state to leave the state, that he never did a decent thing, there being no evidence of the facts, and no evidence attacking his character, was, in the absence of correction by the court, reversible error. Harwell v. State, 61 App. 235, 134 S. W. 701.

Where there was no evidence to show that accused was "a big double-fisted nigger" or as to the amount of work he could do, it was improper for the county attorney to remark in his argument: "The idea of this double-fisted nigger, that can do more work than any man on this jury, laying around for a week." Majors v. State, 63 S. W. 1055.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house in which liquors were sold and kept for sale without a license, an argument of the county attorney that the defendant permitted certain named persons, who were drunkards, to hang around his place showed that he was keeping liquor for sale was improper, where there was no evidence in the record to sustain the characterization of such persons. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 306.

In a prosecution for wilfully breaking the windows of a schoolhouse, held, that the county attorney’s argument constituted prejudicial error as stating facts not sustained by evidence. Liner v. State, 70 App. 75, 156 S. W. 211.

Where the assistant prosecutor enumerated the witnesses who had testified, and asked the county attorney if any one else testified or defendant, he was improper for the county attorney to remark that there was no one else, if true, was not a remark out of the record. Link v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 987.

It was improper for counsel for the prosecution, in his argument to the jury, to tell them that a witness, excused on his claiming his privilege in their absence, was excused for the same offense; this fact not being in evidence. Stanford v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 216.

The action of the district attorney in stating to the jury that since the trial he had learned that the defendant was a bad hombre, that he had committed a crime in Mexico and had left to leave the country, and that they would like to get hold of him, was reversible error, where there was no evidence as to such matters in the record. Guseman v. State, 72 App. 258, 171 S. W. 779.

12. Excluded evidence.—In view of the facts that the character of the defendant was not put in issue by the evidence, and that the trial court rejected evidence to the effect that the defendant was once arrested for robbery, it was a palpable abuse of the privilege of argument on the part of counsel for the state to discuss the one and advert to the other. Stephens v. State, 29 App. 255.

It is improper for counsel in argument to state what the evidence would have been, had the court permitted the introduction of certain testimony, or to say that ‘you had as well burn up the law books and tear down the courthouses and let them all go free.’ If a certain rule of law be followed. Johnson v. State, 65 App. 50, 138 S. W. 1021.

Prosecuting attorneys should keep within the record in their arguments, and should not comment in argument upon objections made by accused to the introduction of remarks made by him to the officers when arrested; they being in fact incompetent. Beaver v. State, 63 App. 531, 142 S. W. 11.

In a prosecution for murder, where a statement in a dying declaration, that defendant had shot and killed his neighbor in the defendant’s house, was excluded, the county attorney’s statement to the jury: “He shot an unarmed man; shot him in the back, because he went there to collect a bill. ‘He ordered me out, and before I got out he shot me—’” was reversible error. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 328.

It is not proper for counsel, upon the exclusion of evidence offered, to state in the jury’s hearing what the witness’ evidence would have been had he been permitted to testify. Ward v. State, 76 App. 393, 159 S. W. 272.
In a prosecution for bigamy, where the court excluded letters claimed to have been written by defendant to the alleged former wife, who had delivered them to the district attorney, a statement by the district attorney to the jury that if he had been allowed to introduce them in evidence he would have shown defendant’s guilt was prejudicial. Harris v. State, 72 App. 117, 161 S. W. 125.

12. — Error in argument. — In argument for defeasance of statutory rape, where the state improperly attempted to show that one of accused’s attorneys, before he was engaged, had a conversation with the father of the prosecutrix, argument by the prosecutor that accused sent his, the prosecutrix’s, father, and that this showed a conscious act of guilt, was highly improper and prejudicial. Bradley v. State, 72 App. 287, 162 S. W. 515.

13. — Incorrect statement. — It was improper for the district attorney in his argument to say that a witness testified to the same facts during trial as on the final trial, where, as shown by the record, there was a difference in the testimony given on the two trials, since attorneys, in making statements of fact, should keep within the record. Sylvas v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 596.

14. — Argument by the prosecutor that accused had sent a witness to attempt to stop the prosecution was highly improper where the witness testified that he was acting on his own behalf. Bradley v. State, 72 App. 287, 162 S. W. 515.

15. — Action by court. — Where the county attorney in his argument dwells on facts the evidence to prove which has been withdrawn from the jury, the court should reprimand him and charge the jury to disregard the argument. Hart v. State, 57 App. 21, 121 S. W. 598.

The trial court in criminal cases has authority to and should prohibit improper argument by the district attorney not based on the evidence. Bradford v. State, 71 App. 113, 158 S. W. 541.

16. — Comment on evidence. — The argument should be restricted to a discussion of the facts in the case, and the conclusions legitimately deductible from the law, applicable to it. Thompson v. State, 45 Tex. 236.

In a trial for theft of hogs, prosecuting counsel asserted in his argument that “The defendant and Moore, with whom he is charged as principal, stole the hogs and divided them.” Held, that the statement was warranted by the evidence, and was not a rule governing argument. Reynolds v. State, 94 S. W. 127.

The issue on trial was whether the acids conveyed by defendant into the jail were useful to aid prisoners to escape. The district attorney in his argument suggested that “It was a common practice to throw vitriol into the eyes of persons and blind them.” Held, that, though reprehensible, it is not reversible error. Watson v. State, 32 App. 80, 22 S. W. 46.

Where testimony that accused had been threatening the witness was before the jury, in answer to a question why the witness waited so long before filing the complaint, the county attorney could comment on it in his argument. Jones v. State, 58 App. 313, 135 S. W. 914.

In a homicide case the state’s attorney asked in argument who in the case was such a man as would be liable to kill a man, and stated that accused testified that he was at deadly enmity, with his neighbor and with his father-in-law, and that bad feeling sprung up between him and decedent some time after the latter moved near accused, and that the evidence showed that he attempted to draw a gun on decedent, after which he asked whether the jury believed from such facts that accused was one who would waylay and assassinate a man. Held, that the remarks were not unreasonable nor unfair. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 430, 129 S. W. 125.

It was proper for the district attorney to comment on what accused did not do at the time of the killing, as well as on the affection of the deceased father for his daughter, and his dependence on her, etc., though not with reference to particular instances not shown by the record. Burnam v. State, 61 App. 616, 135 S. W. 1175.

Under the evidence held not error, in a rape trial, for the prosecuting attorney to say in his argument, “It seems that the defendant, in order to bring about the ruin and destruction of this child, called in the assistance of his paramour, after he had failed in his purpose to do the same thing by himself on a former occasion.” Hart v. State, 62 App. 1, 136 S. W. 56.

Where there was evidence that the alley near the window at which an entrance was attempted was white and chalky in places, and that defendant was barefooted when and that when arrested he had white dust on his hat, it was not improper for the prosecuting attorney to argue that the defendant had left his hat in the alley and had there got the white chalky dust on it; such argument being merely a deduction from the testimony. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 274.

Where the state introduced in evidence the clothes worn by accused at the time of the killing of decedent, and they were bloody, and the state claimed that the blood was that of decedent, and accused refused to put on the clothes during the trial, that the state's attorney, in argument, commenting on the refusal of accused to put on the clothes, was not improper. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 276.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, it was shown that defendant had sold his wife and children in their residence to decedent for $5.20, that she and decedent had thereafter lived together, and that she had subsequently secured a divorce from him, after which defendant killed decedent and sought to reduce the homicide to manslaughter in connection with decedent's relation to his former wife and because of his conduct toward her, it was error, with defendant on the night of the homicide, defendant was not prejudiced by an attack made by the prosecuting attorney on his character with reference to his conduct as a husband and father, etc., to charge the jury that they should disregard the argument with reference to the wife having secured a divorce on some statutory ground, as there was no evidence as to such ground, nor with reference to which of such grounds the divorce was granted. Clayton v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 119.

Argument of the prosecuting attorney in a criminal case is not improper where based on legitimate deductions from the testimony. Wrba v. State, 70 App. 211, 156 S. W. 1164.

Where, after a difficulty between accused and deceased had terminated and deceased was fleeing, accused pursued and killed him with an ax, and a third person carried deceased to a house to give him aid and ordered accused away, after which, while deceased was being carried to his home, accused approached and without provocation again struck deceased with an ax, killing him, a statement by the county attorney in argument, that if deceased and accused engaged in mutual combat and the combat was abandoned by deceased it would be in the same interest as the difficulty with accused at all, was not error. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 657.

Where the evidence showed that defendant had begun to have intercourse with his wife's niece when she was only 14 years old, but that the county attorney did not mention it until more than one year after the county attorney that defendant could and would have been prosecuted for rape if his crime had been detected before the statute of limitations had run was a comment on the evidence, and not error, especially where no special charge in regard thereto was requested. Bodkins v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 211.

On the trial of a person for testifying falsely before the grand jury that he had carnal intercourse with a girl claimed to have been seduced by another man, where there was evidence that defendant had visited at the home of the girl's father and of the disturbed of the district attorney in his argument that defendant voluntarily appeared before the grand jury after visiting the girl's family and tried to ruin her was not improper. Sutton v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 791.

17. — Deductions.—Prosecuting counsel has the right to deduce from the facts legitimately in evidence, a motive on the part of the accused to commit the crime for which he is on trial, and to urge it upon the jury. McInturf v. State, 20 App. 323.

An argument by the prosecuting attorney, consisting of deductions drawn from the evidence in the case, is not improper. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 263, 141 S. W. 989.

Where accused filed a statutory request that, if he be found guilty, and his punishment assessed at not more than five years, the sentence should be suspended and prosecutor could not argue that the filing did not argue showed a consciousness of guilt. Bradley v. State, 72 App. 287, 162 S. W. 515.

While on a criminal trial a witness for indictment accused for another offense was admissible to affect his credibility as a witness, it was highly improper for prosecution, in his argument, to state that such witness was a strong circumstance to show guilt. Whittfill v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 681.

18. — Witnesses.—In a prosecution of a negro for carrying a pistol, where three witnesses impeached the veracity of complaining witness and his wife, who testified, and one witness testified that accused's reputation was very good, and that he was one of the best negroes on the creek, and accused testified that he did not carry the pistol, argument of the county attorney that the jury should not turn accused loose because certain white men wanted him turned loose, that in nine-tenths of the cases defended in the county the juries were only asked to turn the defendants loose because some white man wanted them turned loose, and as long as they parade white men before the juries for that purpose counsel was going to tell the juries about it, was not ground for reversal, especially where there was no special charge requested to disregard the argument. Jones v. State, 58 App. 313, 126 S. W. 914.

Statements made by the district attorney in argument to the jury in a liquor prosecution, that they knew that the prosecuting witness would not have told that he got drinks from defendant unless he had to, and that defendant's witness S. had no regard for the law of the state, was not an improper comment on the testimony. Wright v. State, 63 App. 439, 140 S. W. 1165.

Held, in view of the facts, that the prosecution had the right to argue that a negro as a witness for the state, was the son of defendant's witness, a white man. Millican v. State, 65 App. 440, 140 S. W. 1156.

The argument of the district attorney, consisting of a comment on the evidence of a witness, and asserting that the witness perjured himself, is not improper. Owens v. State, 66 App. 638, 141 S. W. 530.

Where prosecutrix was the only witness for the state in a trial for aggravated assault, it was not improper for the state's attorney to tell the jury that, to acquit, the jury must believe that prosecutrix committed perjury. Grantland v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 196.
Where the credibility of a witness is to be passed on by the jury, the prosecuting attorney may discuss his testimony and argue to the jury that it was false.

19. Challenge to call witness.—Defendant having denied making a statement to C. as claimed by the state, C. was not placed on the stand, and defendant's counsel, having called attention to the fact that he was not made a witness, insisted that the statement must be true. Held, that it was error to permit a district attorney, in reply, to state that C. was present, and that he had no doubt counsel for defendant was fully advised as to what his testimony would be, and that he would give defendant 15 minutes in which to place C. on the stand, and, if he did not testify, in line with the questions asked defendant when he was the attorney, the state would join in a request for acquittal. Rushing v. State, 62 App. 909, 137 S. W. 372.

20. It is improper for the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument to challenge accused's counsel to bring the state's witness upon the stand to develop evidence which both parties had an opportunity to develop. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

21. Failure of defendant to testify or to produce witnesses.—See art. 730, post, and notes.

22. Failure of defendant to testify or to produce witnesses.—See art. 799, post, and notes.

23. Offenses other by accused.—In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, a statement by the prosecutor that the reason that accused's attorney had objected to a question asked accused as to whether he had been previously indicted in any county for a like offense was to have the facts, and that it was not the first time accused had been indicted in the county for carrying a pistol, was improper argument. Waterhouse v. State, 57 App. 586, 124 S. W. 623.

24. Appeal to sympathy or prejudice.—Public opinion, being subordinate to the law, should have nothing whatever to do with trials in courts of justice, and should not be invoked in appeals to the jury. Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 618; Grosse v. State, 11 App. 394; Conn v. State, 11 App. 390, which compare with Aud v. State, 28 App. 256, S. W. 671; Clerk v. State, 23 App. 200, 5 S. W. 115. Appeals to partisan feeling or to race prejudice are reprehensible, and should be promptly suppressed. Leater v. State, 2 App. 432.

In prosecuting for rape and other high crimes which arouse public indignation, and in which the public mind is a community what the guilty party, the court and counsel should especially be scrupulously cautious to accord to the defendant a fair and impartial trial, as free as possible from excitement or prejudice. There should be no claptrap or sharp practice made use of by counsel. No improper means should be resorted to for the prejudice of the jury against the defendant in the remotest degree. No testimony should be offered on the part of the prosecution that is known by the prosecution to be not relevant and legal. No remarks should be made by counsel for the state which are not fully warranted by the evidence. Matters not in evidence should not even be alluded to in argument, when such matters might possibly prejudice the defendant. Bryson v. State, 29 App. 566; Gazley v. State, 17 App. 267; Weatherford v. State, 21 App. 510, 21 S. W. 261, 37 Am. St. Rep. 226.

Inflammatory appeals to the passions of the jury are unwarranted and reprehensible. Exon v. State, 33 App. 461, 26 S. W. 1088.

The district attorney, in his argument to the jury, should keep himself within the record, and not so conduct himself as to subject himself to the criticism that he is seeking to arouse the passions of the jury by unfair methods. Ross v. State, 61 App. 12, 133 S. W. 688.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where the defense was insanity, a statement in argument of the prosecuting attorney that, if accused had been put on trial in the probate court on a complaint of insanity, his counsel would have been there as stoutly defending him against the charge, and asserting his sanity there as stoutly as he was asserting his insanity, at the trial, was not ground for reversal; it containing no appeal to any matter that would ordinarily affect the jury, and not being inflammatory or embracing a statement of facts touching the case or accused's guilt. Turner v. State, 61 App. 97, 133 S. W. 1052.

On a trial for seduction, it was improper for the prosecuting attorney to seek to wrench in the prejudice of the jury by reference to his outside the record, and to make an impassioned reference to the jurors' "loved ones at home and their "little flaxen haired girl, or the little girl with the black hair and the..." for the purpose of arousing the ascendency of the jury against the character of offense charged. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 446, 183 S. W. 424.

Where prosecutrix and her family were only in moderate circumstances, and... labored for a living, while the father of accused was well to do, and the witnesses testified accused were ministers, wives of ministers, or other people of equal standing, the argument of the prosecuting attorney that, where a family had plenty of money, that fact would enable accused to gather around him influential friends, as had been done in this case, and that it had been stated that money could beat any case, was prejudicial. Sorell v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 356.

The district attorney in his argument should not appeal to passion and prejudice, but should always confine his remarks to the evidence and legitimate deduction therefrom. Carter v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 729.

25. - Enforcement of law.—There being nothing indicating injury, a conviction will not be reversed because of the district attorney stating that he was endeavoring to enforce the laws, and calling on the jury to help him. Beeson v. State, 69 App. 29, 130 S. W. 1006. In a prosecution for homicide, a remark of the county attorney in argument that "it is time that murders were stopped in Dallas county" was improper. Wells v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 550.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the district attorney in his argument to the jury stated that human life was too cheap in C. county, that there were too many men going around the country with human blood dripping from their fingers, and that the way to stop murder was to convict men who were guilty of attempt to murder. The attorney proceeded by asking the reason why defendant shot prosecutor, and stated that it might have been because he was that type and character of a man that was walking around the country with a loaded pistol in his grip looking for some good citizen to kill. The reason why he asked certain questions concerning the jurors' qualifications in their examination on voir dire was because he had tried the case in another county in which there was no defense, but the jury found defendant not guilty, that he could not and that he intended an outrage and the man accepted by him on the jury of his oath and obligations to return a verdict according to law and the evidence in cases of that character. Held, that the remarks were improper. Daniels v. State, 71 App. 652, 160 S. W. 797.

26. - Effect of acquittal.—On a trial for murder the district attorney in his argument said: "Now, gentlemen, if you acquit this defendant you set free the foul murderer of an innocent young girl and the law can never lay its hands on him again; but if you should convict him and in doing so should by mistake convict an innocent man, then he has his right of appeal and the court of appeals will review the case and give the defendant a new trial and no injury will be done." Held highly improper. Crow v. State, 33 App. 264, 26 S. W. 299; Brazell v. State, 33 App. 333, 26 S. W. 723.

In a murder prosecution, in which the evidence indicated that accused and his brother were connected with the fight in which the killing occurred, and the brother had wounds on his head, the district attorney stated in argument that the defense insisted that accused did not cut decedent, but if the jury acquitted him, and his brother were indicted for the crime, they would say that he did not do it, and would have acquitted then swear that he committed the crime; that the jury knew accused committed the crime, and if he was not convicted now, he never would be; that the jury knew the history of the county, that it ran red with the blood of murders committed in it; and somebody should be punished for this crime. Held, that it was legitimate argument to urge accused's conviction, and, under the facts, to state what would happen if he was acquitted, but the remarks about the history of the county and the crimes committed therein were improper. Bues v. State, 57 App. 104, 123 S. W. 601.

The argument of the prosecuting attorney, on a trial for violating the local option law, that if the jury did not convict on the facts they could as well wipe out the local option statute, tear down the courthouse and turn bootleggers loose in the county, and that the jury should convict and that the jury should guilty, and teach him that bootleggers like him could not go around the county peddling out liquor, was improper, necessitating a new trial; the argument affecting the result. Furrell v. State, 62 App. 636, 138 S. W. 797.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, argument of the state's attorney that, "if you don't convict the defendant in this case, there is no use for the grand jury of your county to hereafter indict any man for the detestable crime of assault with intent to rape, committed in your country; in the absence of any special charge by defendant, and where the court instructed the jury not to consider such remark, was not reversible error. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1065.

A statement by the district attorney that, if the jury did not convict accused for this offense, "you will see that you will have to try him for a higher offense in the near future; the way to stop this is to send the defendant to the penitentiary"—was improper and calculated to prejudice accused. Brallford v. State, 71 App. 118, 138 S. W. 541.

A statement by the prosecutor in his argument that to turn the defendant loose would invite crime for all other criminals is legitimate. Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 793.

27. - Reference to mob violence.—On trial for rape the prosecuting attorney said: "The friends of the prosecutrix have not in their anger taken the law into their own hands and lynched or applied the torch to defendant; therefore the life of this demon should pay the penalty." Held, error. Thompson v. State, 33 App. 472, 26 S. W. 987.

In a prosecution for rape, a remark by the district attorney that there should be speedy trials and prompt convictions or mob law would result, while improper, does not require a reversal of the conviction. Valdez v. State, 71 App. 487, 160 S. W. 341.

On the trial of a negro for rape, the remarks of the district attorney, that the people had often taken the law in their own hands and mobbed persons committing such crime, that if the jury turned accused loose the people could not be blamed for taking the law in their own hands, and that it would be much worse than convicting an innocent man to turn him loose and then have him "attack his wife, sisters, or daughters." were improper and required a reversal. Hemphill v. State, 72 App. 638, 165 S. W. 462, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914.

The district attorney should not in any case be allowed to call the defendant a "Hyena" or use toward him other such scurrilous remarks. Kugndt v. State, 38 App. 681, 44 S. W. 599; Calliham v. (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 617.

See an instance of the use of abusive remarks, held to be sufficient error to cause a reversal of the judgment. Stone v. State, 22 App. 185, 2 S. W. 585.

Vulgar remarks of counsel towards defendant should not be permitted. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 500.

A remark to the jury by the county attorney that the defendant never did a decent act in his life was improper and erroneous. Paris v. State, 62 App. 354, 137 S. W. 598.

Where the evidence for defendant in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape was that prosecutrix spoke to him shortly after the alleged assault, which was denied by the state's witnesses, the prosecuting attorney had the right to ask the question of fact from the state's standpoint, and from the defendant as a libertine and a rapist, in view of general evidence against defendant, was not reversible error. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

In a prosecution for theft, a statement by the district attorney in argument that defendant admitted he was a married man, and that he was charged with seducing a little girl, and that a man who would commit that character of crime would commit theft, was erroneous and improper, in view of the presumption of innocence attaching to every person charged with crime. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 151.

A prosecuting officer under no circumstances should resort to vituperative and abusive language in arguing a case to the jury. Bishop v. State, 72 App. 1, 150 S. W. 765.

While a prosecuting attorney ought never to use epithets, yet it was not error for him, in his argument in a homicide case, to point his finger at accused and call him a "cold-blooded brute" and "an animal," as the record showed the murder had been very brutal, and there was no requested charge on the point. Borders v. State, 72 App. 135, 161 S. W. 483.

Accused having been charged as an accomplice to the murder of deceased on the theory that he desired deceased's wife, the prosecuting attorney in his argument accused his finger at her and called him "a poor, wretched woman, and everything else," and also referred to the presence of deceased's wife as brazen effrontery in that she had attended the trial, and defendant had not used her as a witness. He had not shown where her children were. He said, "She wished he could tell the jury the remarks of the principal who did the killing, that it was a pity for the state he could not tell the words that were said at the time the principal and deceased's wife met after the killing, and that it was a good thing for defendant that he could not. Held, that such statements were improper and prejudicial. Millner v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 348.

In a prosecution for murder, the argument of state's counsel referring to defendant as a culprit was not improper. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 533.

30. Request for death penalty.—On trial for murder in perpetration of robbery, held, not error for the district attorney to say in his argument: "The defendant murdered deceased while he was asleep in bed, and after brutally killing him with an ax robbed him of his money, his clothes, his horse, and his buggy; he should suffer the death penalty for his crime." Thomas alias Whitehead v. State, 23 App. 607, 28 S. W. 544.

While the state's attorney must stay within the record in his argument, and not use inflammatory language, he may insist upon the death penalty being imposed where the evidence justifies it. Jackson v. State, 63 App. 521, 139 S. W. 1165.

Where the prosecuting attorney in a trial for murder appealed to the jury to assess the death penalty and reminded them that laws were enforced for the protection of society, that the safety of human life was vouchsafed only by prompt infliction of severe punishment upon those guilty of crime, and that the object of the law prescribing the death penalty was not punishment or revenge, but example, there was no error in refusing to grant a new trial after conviction and assessment of the death penalty, because of the prosecuting attorney's language. Carrwright v. State, 63 App. 629, 114 S. W. 291.

31. Retaliatory remarks.—If counsel for the defendant provokes improper remarks to be made by counsel for the state, the defendant will not be heard to complain of such remarks. Baker v. State, 4 App. 523; Williams v. State, 24 App. 35, 5 S. W. 257; Pierson v. State, 19 App. 227; Pierson v. State, 21 App. 14, 17 S. W. 468; Smith v. State, 21 App. 271, 17 S. W. 471; McGill

When, though outside of the record, are only irrelevant to irrelevant remarks made by defendant's counsel, the case will not be reversed. Sinclair v. State, 35 App. 130, 32 S. W. 551; Washington v. State, 35 App. 154, 32 S. W. 693; Campbell v. State, 35 App. 160, 32 S. W. 774; Campbell v. State, 62 App. 561, 135 S. W. 297; 34 McFarland v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1670.

When an advocate grossly abuses his privilege to the manifest injury to the defendant, it is the duty of the court to stop him instanter. But a defendant, whose own outrageous conduct provoked such impropriety, is not entitled to complain of it. Caines v. State, 10 App. 421.

Accused's counsel, in his argument, after stating that children are usually truthful, stated that the Savior had said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." In reply, state's counsel commented: "The Gentleman who uttered the expression, 'Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of Heaven,' lived nearly 2,000 years ago, and did not know of the juvenile laws and courts of Texas, and of the small boys who have offended under that law." Held, that the state's counsel's retort did not constitute error. Bailey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

That defendant's counsel commented on an erroneous and illegal statement made by the state's counsel would not cure the latter's error; a previous opinion of Criminal Appeals in the same case having appeals in this at the Court of Criminal Appeals referred to by the state's counsel should not be commented on. Harville v. State, 57 App. 486, 123 S. W. 1109.

In a robbery case, accused's counsel called a prosecuting witness abusive names, and stated that he was in no shape, having taken at least two glasses of beer, to know what really happened, and that he was not entitled to consideration. Subsequently accused's attorney objected that the prosecuting attorney was calling accused's counsel, and the prosecuting attorney declared that he was quoting from accused's counsel's statement that the prosecuting witness was entitled to no more credit "than this vile wretch here," referring to accused. Accused's counsel denied using such term, claiming he had spoken of accused as a poor unfortunate. Held, that it appearing that the prosecuting attorney was answering the argument of accused's counsel, the matter was not ground for reversal. Martin v. State, 57 App. 505, 134 S. W. 651.

Exasperation by the district attorney on the same proposition of law announced by accused's counsel was not error. Edwards v. State, 58 App. 342, 135 S. W. 884.

Where counsel for accused commented on a previous acquittal of accused, notwithstanding the court warned him that the remarks were improper, and counsel for accused took the stand that the county attorney could have as wide a range in his argument as he desired, the remarks of the county attorney that the jury which acquitted accused were ashamed of the verdict, and that he had spoken to some of the jurors who voluntarily told him they were ashamed of it, were called for by defendant's counsel, and did not justify a reversal. Fluellen v. State, 59 App. 334, 129 S. W. 621.

Where counsel for accused, in his argument to the jury, commented on the failure of the state to impeach accused, the argument of the county attorney, in reply, said he could not put accused in the state in the dock, but that the state was willing to make an issue of his character, and that no one knew him better than accused himself and his counsel, was not ground for reversal. Roberts v. State, 60 App. 111, 131 S. W. 321.

Accused's counsel having argued that accused's testimony must be taken at full value because his character and his reputation had not been impeached, it was not reversible error for the county attorney to state that accused alone could put his character in issue, and that how did counsel know but the state had witnesses to show that accused had been "picking up little things around the country," if character should have been put in issue, etc. Hilcher v. State, 60 App. 189, 131 S. W. 592.

Where, on a trial for theft, counsel for accused had commented on the failure of the state to connect accused with certain cotton sold by him, an argument of the county attorney, calling attention of the jury to the fact that his inability and failure to do so was due to objections by the attorney for accused, was not ground for reversal. Wright v. State, 60 App. 385, 131 S. W. 1070.

Argument of the prosecuting attorney in his closing address in answer to argument made by counsel for the defense is proper. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

The counsel for one accused of murder having said in his argument that the testimony of a certain witness would have shown that decedent was armed when killed, it was not improper for the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument to invite to call that witness, and use her where decedent's pistol was when he was killed. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

Statement in the district attorney's argument to the jury why he did not testify was not improper, where it was made in response to defendant's counsel's argument asking the jury why the district attorney did not testify. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 598.

Where defendant's attorney argued at length concerning the history of defendant's family, defendant could not object that the prosecuting officer, in reply, stated he had known two other members of his family even since the officer had been in town, and that that was the reason they did not... attempt to prove that defendant had a good character, because they dared not do it. Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 324.

Where counsel for accused stated in the presence of the jury that he would have offered a witness if he had not known of the conviction of the witness, made after the court had sustained an objection to the state introducing the witness, the remark of the district attorney that the witness for accused, though improper, was occasioned by the improper remarks of accused’s counsel, and accused could not complain. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 865.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, the argument of the state’s attorney that if a witness subpoenaed in the case, but then dead, was alive and in court, he believed that he would say that defendant stated “that there were two cows here and I am going to have one of my neighbors,” explained by the court to the effect that it was in reply to remarks of defendant’s counsel, was not error. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1065.

Remarks of the county attorney, being but a legitimate reply to argument of defendant’s counsel on an issue he injected into the case, are not ground for complaint, even had there been no instruction to disregard them; much less where they were withdrawn, and an instruction to disregard them given. Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 324.

Where in a habeas corpus case, defendant’s attorneys in their argument stated that defendant had a good reputation, the state’s counsel was justified in referring to the fact that he could not attack such reputation unless defendant first made it an issue. Monley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1175.

A belief of exceptions to remarks of a prosecuting attorney, qualified by the judge’s statement, “Refused because in answer to argument of defendant’s counsel,” presents no error. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 136 S. W. 1173.

In argument of prosecuting attorney is not impropriety of error, where it was in reply to and admitted because of remarks by defendant’s counsel. Umer v. State, 71 App. 579, 160 S. W. 1188.

In a prosecution for rape on a girl under 15 years of age, where it appeared that defendant, from the time of his arrest, knew that she was under 15 years, and his own counsel in argument lamented the fact that the state had not brought neighbors to testify to her age, the remark of the prosecuting attorney, “Oh, you slick one, why didn’t you go and bring some good people from that neighborhood up there that would say that she was 15 years old, or that she was not born on the 2d day of January, 1901?” was not reversible error. Graham v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 726.

The statement of counsel for accused in his argument to the jury that the fact that the accused was rich should not be considered against accused did not justify the argument of the prosecuting attorney that, where a family had plenty of money, accused would be enabled to gather around him influential friends, and that money could beat any case, but that the jury should pass on the question of the guilt of accused as though he was the humblest citizen. Sorell v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 356.

On a trial for homicide, where accused placed his general reputation in issue by his plea of insufficiency of evidence and evidence in support thereof, accused was asked without objection if he had not killed a man in Louisiana, to which he replied that he had not. In his argument accused’s counsel charged the county attorney with acting unfairly in asking such question, called upon him to explain why he asked it, and stated that, if the state wanted to show that accused had been convicted in Louisiana, it knew it ought to do so by a certified copy of the judgment of conviction. The county attorney in reply stated that he asked the question because he had information which he considered reliable, that accused was subject to justice from Louisiana, and that he thought if he accused he would speak the truth about it. Held, that this remark of the county attorney was not error. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 862.

On a trial for homicide, accused’s counsel, in his argument referring to accused following the homicide, said there was nothing for him to flee from, as the indictment showed that he had not been indicted until shortly before the trial, nearly seven years after the killing. The county attorney having referred to this argument, accused’s counsel interrupted, stating that he knew what was coming and objected to any statement as to a previous indictment because there was no evidence of such indictment. The county attorney then stated that he intended to make no such statement, but that there was no evidence that a previous indictment was not found. Held, that the court’s refusal to admonish the county attorney that he could not refer at all to the argument of accused’s counsel about the indictment was not error, since, when counsel for defendant by their argument go out of the record and make comments or call upon the state’s counsel for an explanation, they cannot complain of matters thus brought out. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 862.

Where on a trial for keeping a bawdyhouse an inmate of accused’s house laughed at a remark of accused’s counsel in his argument, the prosecuting officer’s incidental reference to the fact that she laughed at such remark was not sufficient cause for a reversal. Farris v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 310.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide alleged to have been committed in furtherance of a conspiracy to organize in Texas an armed band to invade Mexico, defendant’s attorneys devoted almost exclusively historical sketches of conditions of the Mexican people and other revolutions, referring to the condition of the Mexican people and their struggle for liberty, comparing defendants to other revolutionists for liberty, and defended the Mexicans in their present struggle against their President, whom he dubbed a tyrant, argument of the district attorney in reply that defendant was a member of the faction in Mex-412
The principles of which were murder, rape, and plunder, etc., was proper. Gonzales v. State (App.) 171 S. W. 1149.

The statement of the district attorney that the law was made for negroes as well as the white people, called out by language of defendant's counsel, was not improper. McHenry v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1026.

32. Action by court.—A case will not be reversed on account of improper remarks made by the district attorney, when the jury is instructed to disregard them, unless it is shown that the jury was prejudiced by such remarks. Schroeder v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 94; Trotter v. State, 37 App. 486, 36 S. W. 274; Carver v. State, 36 App. 456, 36 S. W. 271; Wheeler v. State, 57 App. 414, 132 S. W. 152; Trotter v. State, 61 App. 170, 135 S. W. 121; Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572; Byrd v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1068; Fuller v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1021; McGregor v. State, 31 App. 604, 160 S. W. 711; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 714.

It is the duty of the court to check all assaults on the character, motives, or conduct of counsel, and to enforce decorum of argument by fine and imprisonment, if necessary. Shackleford v. State, 45 Tex. 135. On a trial for murder, the audience applauded the opening address of counsel for the state. Counsel for defendant were permitted to comment upon the occurrence. In reply counsel for the state, alluding to the demonstration made by the audience, said: "It was a spontaneous outburst of approval by the audience of this cause, after they had heard it truthfully represented by the state." Held, the court should have taken prompt and decisive action on the occasion, and should have endeavored by its condemnation of the proceeding, and its admonition to the jury, to prevent any prejudice to the defendant by such reprehensible conduct, and the remarks of counsel for the state alluding to the conduct of the audience should have been reproved by the court. Cartwright v. State, 16 App. 473, 49 Am. Rep. 826.

An improper remark of the district attorney, in argument, that defendant would be fired, had the limit, because, had negro's parents been of a different nationality, he would have been killed, was not ground for reversal: the court, on objection, having ordered counsel to confine himself to the facts, and having instructed the jury not to consider the remarks in arriving at a verdict. Groszoeohmigem v. State, 57 App. 241, 121 S. W. 1112.

Error in argument of a district attorney, who stated, "Let us now get rid of sloop that is always injected in a criminal trial by the defendant," was cured where, after objection by accused, the court charged the jury not to consider the argument, and at the conclusion thereof, at accused's request, gave a special charge to the same effect. Railey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

Error in the argument of state's counsel that accused had interposed technical objections from proving certain the state fremed where, after objection by accused thereto, the court instructed the jury not to consider the argument, and at the conclusion thereof gave a special charge again instructing them to the same effect. Railey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

The misconduct of the prosecuting attorney in stating to the jury that accused, who had objected to evidence, did not want the truth brought out, and that there was no better proof of his guilt than his objection to the evidence, was obviated by the charge of the court that the evidence was not admissible, and that accused could object to its introduction without being criticised therefor, and that the remarks of the prosecuting attorney should not be considered. Craft v. State, 57 App. 257, 122 S. W. 547.

The statement by the court, upon accused's objection to remarks by the state's attorney, requesting counsel to keep in the record and not discuss accused's character, must have been understood by the jury as sustaining accused's objection to the remarks to the extent that they should not infer that they were of no importance with reference to accused's character. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 125.

In a prosecution for assault, with intent to kill, where the county attorney in his argument stated that the court would charge on aggravated assault and simple assault, because there was a squint of testimony to raise such questions, and the court would be compelled to give the charge whether or not any other reasonable man would believe a word of such defenses, was not prejudicial, where the court gave a special charge instructing the jury not to consider such argument of the county attorney. Barrego v. State, 61 App. 625, 136 S. W. 41.

It was not error for counsel for the state in argument to accused was "a black negro, the exact image of Jack Johnson," and that accused thought he could fool this jury into turning him loose, on the ground that he was protecting his mulatto stepprother, who came on the stand and tried to talk like a Yankee," where all the parties interested were negroes, and the jury were in sympathy, to disregard the argument. Jordan v. State, 62 App. 157, 137 S. W. 123.

As the court may limit the argument of counsel to the evidence, and must so conduct the case as to keep from the jury all matters not in evidence, it may instruct the jury not to consider outside matters inadvertently or intentionally brought to their attention by counsel in argument. Campbell v. State, 62 App. 501, 135 S. W. 697.

In his closing argument the county attorney, in urging the jury to convict appellant, told the jury that it would be better for them to present in person an application for the pardons than to ignore the Governor's plea and argue that they were a part of the government, charged with the enforcement of the law, and that there is a governor and a board of pardons who have their duties to perform. The court at once instructed the jury to disregard this argument, made for further charge on the matter, and on a motion for new trial all the jurors testified that they were not affected by it. Held, that no error was committed. Farshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 759.

The improper argument of prosecuting attorneys in stating facts in another case and stating that juries were being criticized for not performing their duties held cures by the action of the parties and the court at the time. Leech v. State, 63 App. 339, 129 S. W. 1147.

In a trial for burglary, where defendant’s motion for continuance on the ground of absent witnesses had been overruled, the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument said “Davis had some testimony that he could have gotten, and that was Ernest Davis, because he testified that he met Ernest Davis as he went home,” and upon objection the court instructed the jury orally to disregard the remark, but did not direct the special charge relative to commenting on the view of the statute requiring that a charge be given in writing, that the remark was prejudicial. Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 111 S. W. 264.

It was not reversible error to refuse to instruct that counsel for the state should not, so far as he could, have called him a brute or a fiendish criminal, and that the jury should not consider such an argument where the trial judge did not hear the argument, having been engaged in preparing instructions, and where the prosecuting attorney denying having made the remarks attributed to him. S. v. White, 19, 131 App. 767.

Where accused had falsely uttered a receipt to defeat an action upon a note, held by a widow, the district attorney stated in his closing argument that they had tried to discredit and besmirch a widow in order to protect a high-criminal. The trial court orally admonished the jury not to consider the remark, and defendant requested no written charge withdrawing the remark from the jury. Held, that the error, if any, would not be considered by the appellate court. Lotifker v. State, 64 App. 89, 142 S. W. 592.

In a trial for murder, the district attorney said that he hoped that his right hand would shiver at his side before he would ever ask a jury to convict a man when the evidence did not show his guilt, never, never, and that he dismissed when convict a case held the evidence to convict with the court’s verbal instruction that the jury could not consider such remark, it was not error. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 705.

When a district attorney in his argument to the jury told them the substance of a conversation which the court had not allowed the defendant to introduce because it was hearsay, the court did not commit error by merely admonishing him to stay within the record. Yates v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1084.

In a prosecution by the county attorney in his argument to the jury told the substance of a conversation which the court had not allowed the defendant to introduce because it was hearsay, the court did not commit error by merely admonishing him to stay within the record. York v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 1084.

Where the jury were charged to disregard it, a reference by the district attorney to remarks which he had made in the record on the subject of the defendant’s face was harmless. Forward v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 725.

Where the court directed the jury to disregard remarks by the prosecutor that one of accused’s witnesses had testified to a previous difficulty with deceased had with crime, the remarks did not constitute reversible error, although the matter thus brought before the jury had been excluded when offered in evidence. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 733.

In a prosecution for larceny of turkeys, where, on objection by the defendant to the argument of the prosecuting attorney, the court told the jury that it was improper for the county attorney to refer to the defendant as “Turkey Tom” and as a “Gobbler,” and they should not consider it, and instructed the attorney to use only the defendant’s true name, the conviction will be affirmed. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1063.

Accused was being tried for homicide several miles from the jail where he was confined, and this fact was known to the court and all the officers and jurors serving on the case. The court, in adjourning until the following morning, stated in the presence of the jury that the sheriff might take accused “home, where he belonged.” Accused claimed that this remark was calculated to make the jury believe that the court thought accused should be in jail, but the court, in qualifying the opinion, did not approve this claim. Held, that the remark did not constitute reversible error. Geenan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

For the court, when defendant offered in evidence pending indictments for felonies against a state’s witness, to say to the jury, “You will not consider the burglary, laud, on objection,” to say, “You will not consider the remarks made by the court, but, if you can think of a more appropriate name for it, do so,” is improper. Crowder v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 501.

33. Erroneous instruction.—It is error to charge the jury not to consider the arguments in the case. Legitimate argument is proper for the consideration of the jury. Laubach v. State, 12 App. 593.

34. Prejudice.—However reprehensible, as a question of practice, may be a ruling of the court in a dispute over privilege of counsel in argument, if such ruling inures to the benefit of the defendant, he can not be heard to complain. White v. State, 10 App. 583.
Counsel for the state, when commenting upon the evidence in his closing address, directed by the defendant in person with the statement that if he had the absent witnesses he could show different. Said counsel, in reply to defendant's remark, stated to the jury that the brother of the absent witnesses told him that said witnesses, if present, would testify against the defendant. Held, that statement was immaterial and did not warrant the case, and was the assertion of a fact not in evidence, and was prejudicial to the defendant. Laubach v. State, 12 App. 553.

When counsel transcends the limits of legitimate argument to the jury, it is the right of opposing counsel to object, and to invoke the intervention of the court; but, though no objection be interposed, the purity of public justice demands that the court should suppress such abuses of the privilege of counsel. Crawford v. State, 15 App. 501.

A conviction will not be set aside because of alleged improper remarks made by counsel for the state in argument, unless it appears: (1) That the remarks were improper, and (2) that they were of a material character, and such, as under the circumstances, were calculated to injuriously affect the defendant's rights. House v. State, 19 App. 227; Pierson v. State, 18 App. 524; Bass v. State, 16 App. 62; Sutton v. State, Id. 490; Langford v. State, 17 App. 445; Young v. State, 19 App. 525; McConnell v. State, 22 App. 354, 3 S. W. 699, 58 Am. Rep. 647; Hardy v. State, 31 App. 289, 29 S. W. 561.

Objectionable remarks of the prosecuting attorney, if promptly withdrawn by the court with instructions to the jury to disregard and not consider them, will not prejudice error when it is shown to have resulted. King v. State, 32 App. 463, 24 S. W. 514; Boscow v. State, 33 App. 330, 26 S. W. 625.

Accused, in a trial for rape, was not shown to be injured by a remark of the district attorney in argument, "You have there that wretched wretch," there being no indication what connection of facts showing in what sense and whether it was justified or not. Hall v. State, 58 App. 512, 132 S. W. 755.

In the prosecution of a negro for carrying weapons, remarks of counsel that negroes as a race are about all alike, they are unreliable, and that whenever they got in bed and slept over it, they would not do anything with them, are not of sufficient importance to require a reversal, especially in the absence of requested instructions in regard to the matter. Johnson v. State, 59 App. 11, 127 S. W. 559.

After the sustaining of an objection to the course of a district attorney, he remarked to defendant's counsel and in discussing the matter before the court, "If you want to shroud this in darkness and refuse to turn on the light, I can't help you, the whole transaction to the jury, and have all the light thereon that can be had." Held, that the remarks were not of such a prejudicial character as to authorize reversal of a conviction. Boswell v. State, 59 App. 161, 127 S. W. 820.

The court on appeal will not interfere unless there has been such a gross violation of the right of legitimate argument as is calculated to impair accused's rights. Hickey v. State, 62 App. 568, 138 S. W. 1061.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, the district attorney, in his argument, stated that counsel for defendant had tried to discredit the prosecuting witnesses because of the poverty of their family, and had said that they were not worthy of belief because of their poverty and conditions of life, and it was also shown that in the deliberation there was mentioned that the prosecutrix was a poor girl while defendant was a man of prominence and wealth, although there was testimony that this did not influence the jury. Held, that, considered with the unsatisfactory evidence in the case, the argument was ground for reversal. Logan v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 715.

Where, though witnesses were present at the time it was alleged that defendant killed his wife by cutting her in the neck, none saw how or by whom the wound was inflicted, the remark by counsel that "the court will have to charge you with an intentional, but as a matter of fact it is not," standing alone, could not have been harmful to defendant. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 550.

Where defendant was accused of killing his wife by cutting her in the neck, as they were walking with others along a road, argument by prosecuting counsel that defendant's counsel were claiming there was no motive shown, and in saying, "How do you know but that as defendant and his wife were walking along she accused him of being too intimate with some other woman, and you have a right to presume that she did," was not of such a harmful nature as to require reversal. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 550.

In absence of a request for instructions on the right of the state's attorney to comment on the evidence of a witness who testified that he had engaged in the making of certain statements as to accused's guilt, the comments of the state's attorney on her credibility would not present reversible error, especially where her testimony was favorable to the state rather than to accused. Thompson v. State, 72 App. 659, 103 S. W. 979.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, a remark of the prosecuting attorney directing the attention of the jury to the diamonds worn by accused and asking if they knew that every glitter therefrom denoted a lost soul was not reversible error. Held, it did not appear that she was testifying. It was not shown how this could injuriously affect her in the trial of the case. Hearne v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 596.

Where certain argument of the county attorney was not improper in itself, but, on objection being made, the court instructed the jury not to consider it for any purpose, and no injury could or did occur to accused by reason thereof, it was not available for error. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 411.

An abundant showing of evidence to show that the deceased had in his possession a considerable sum of money, the act of the prosecutor in stating to the jury that memoranda found with the body of deceased showed that he was hard-working and had money in his possession was harmless. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

Where appellant's bills objecting to misconduct of a county attorney in argument for the argument, or as the occasion for the argument, therewith as a statement of facts approved by the judge to show the surrounding circumstances, the jury having assessed the lowest penalty, the argument, though improper, would not be held prejudicial. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 706.

For a prosecuting attorney to say of a witness who had testified at the examining trial, but not at the trial itself, that he did not believe his testimony, and that he wanted the witness at the trial, is improper but not prejudicial, where the testimony of the witness went before the jury. Echols v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 756.

In a prosecution for homicide, the language of the district attorney in his closing argument, to the effect that the state had proved the facts and his story as to the actual killing, and that he had other witnesses by whom he could have proved the facts if necessary, was harmless, where there was no controversy that defendant killed deceased, he having so testified, and where defendant asked no written instructions as to such remarks. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

Argument of the prosecuting attorney held not prejudicial under the rule that, to justify a reversal because of remarks of the prosecuting counsel, it must appear that they were improper, of a material character, and such as under the circumstances were calculated to injuriously affect accused's rights. Himmelfarb v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 586.

In a prosecution for murder, where accused did not put in issue his reputation for peace and quiet, argument by the state that, had accused dared to place his reputation for peace and quiet in issue, it could have been shown that it was bad, was prejudicial. Marshall v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 154.

Appellant will not reverse a conviction because of improper argument of the prosecuting attorney, unless it very clearly appears that the rights of accused were prejudiced thereby. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 52.

On a trial for forgery and passing a forged instrument, by introducing it in evidence in the justice court, a remark of the district attorney that accused committed perjury in the justice court was not ground for reversal, where upon objection he withdrew the remark and stated to the jury that he meant forgery. Dunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 705.

35. — Cure by verdict.—In a murder case, where there was no issue of self-defense, and the evidence showed that accused shot and killed decedent, the comment of the county attorney on evidence that accused had kept a negro house of ill fame and a gambling house, which evidence had been excluded as incompetent, was harmless, for reversal, where the jury gave the minimum punishment for manslaughter. Hart v. State, 37 App. 21, 121 S. W. 508.

Where a robust son assaulted his old and decrepit father, and the evidence showed that accused's mother was in sympathy with accused on the trial, the argument of the prosecuting attorney that he did not want the jury to punish accused by a pecuniary fine, and that that would not be a punishment to him, as his mother would pay the fine, was not error; the punishment assessed not being excessive, in view of the facts. Davis v. State, 58 App. 161, 126 S. W. 632.

The argument of the prosecutor in a trial of a negro for murder in a trial of a death sentence were harmless where the jury assessed only a life sentence. Willican v. State, 63 App. 440, 140 S. W. 1136.

A remark of the prosecuting attorney in a trial for murder, "that they ought to hang the defendant. If they did not do so, and sent him to the penitentiary, the Governor, on some flimsy pretext, would pardon him, and he would assassinate some other citizens of the state"—while improper, was not reversible error, where the jury had found the death penalty. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 677.

Improper remarks of the state's attorneys do not constitute reversible error where no instruction to disregard was requested, especially where the jury fixed the lowest penalty and it does not appear in what connection such remarks were made. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 930.

36. — Restricting defendant's argument.—In a homicide case, where accused's counsel were improperly refused the right to comment upon the pipe with which deceased was armed at the time of the homicide, the court proceeding upon the theory that it had not been identified in evidence, the error was reversible in view of the argument by the counsel for the state that the pipe was slipped into the courtroom to bolster up defendant's story. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

37. Necessity of objections or exceptions.—See post, art. 744.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape defendant's stepdaughter, the county attorney, after unsuccessfully attempting to show other assaults on prose-cutrix's sisters, in his closing argument stated to the jury that they left home because they were compelled to slave for defendant and because he tried to deluch them. He characterized defendant as a "slave," and, on this being objected to, reiterated that defendant was a "brute of the vilest kind," that he did not dare put his character in issue, because the state had a dozen, witnesses to show how other girls were treated and how they had to slave for defendant and were never allowed to go to school. Held, that such argument constituted misconduct sufficient to require a reversal on proper bills of exception being reserved, though no special charges in regard thereto were requested. Grimes v. State, 64 App. 64, 141 S. W. 261.

In the absence of a requested charge on improper remarks of the district attorney in his argument to the jury, the court on appeal will not review the remarks, unless they were granting abusive or improper. Owens v. State, 63 App. 833, 141 S. W. 559.

That the district attorney argued to the jury that the letter of deceased to defendant's sister-in-law was not genuine but was fixed up by defendant, as to which letter defendant had testified, thought, was not a reversible error: no special charge in regard thereto having been requested by defendant. Strickland v. State, 71 App. 582, 161 S. W. 118.

In the absence of any request for a special charge, error cannot be predicated on the district attorney to the jury, the court, in approving the bill of exceptions, stating that, when objection was made, the district attorney corrected the statement, and the court instructed the jury not to consider it. Miller v. State, 72 App. 180, 161 S. W. 128.

Accused, objecting to the statement of the prosecuting attorney, should, in addition to a making of an oral request for a charge directing the jury to disregard the argument, present a special charge on the subject, though, where the argument is very harmful, the error may be presented when only the oral request has been made. Sorell v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 356.

In a prosecution for driving cattle across a quarantine line without having them dipped or inspected as required, argument of counsel that a small fine would not be complained of accused with his big farms is not error, as no special charge instructing the jury to disregard such remarks was requested and the evidence showed that accused was the owner of more than one farm. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 522.

Where at the time the county attorney stated to the jury in his argument that an indictment against accused for another offense was a strong circumstance to show guilt, accused's counsel approached the judge and asked that an exception be reserved, but on being told by the judge, who had not heard the remark, to make his objection only in court, declined to do so, and asked no special charge, he could not complain of such argument, especially where the court did charge that, if the jury believed that accused was under indictment for another offense, they could consider that only for the purpose of aiding in determining the credibility of accused as a witness, and must consider it for no other purpose. Whittfill v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 631.

Accused cannot object on appeal to alleged misconduct of the district attorney in argument where no exception was reserved thereto at the time, or application made to the court to correct the error either by instruction or by granting accused a venire de novo, and this though the misconduct was such that it could not be cured by instruction. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1128.

Though it was improper for the district attorney, in presenting the case, to say that the filing by defendant of a plea for suspended sentence in case of conviction was a baby act, and equivalent to an admission of guilt, and that the suspended sentence did not apply to old men, was improper, yet, it not being such error that an instruction would not have cured it, it cannot be complained of, in the absence of exception thereto, and request for, and refusal of, an instruction to disregard it. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

Art. 725. [705] In prosecutions for felony.—In prosecutions for felony, the court shall never restrict the argument to a less number of addresses than two on each side. [O. C. 586.]

Number of arguments.—This article cannot be construed to entitle a defendant's one counsel to two speeches. Morales v. State, 1 App. 499, 28 Am. Rep. 419. Where the defendant's counsel declined to address the jury, the permission of 2 CODE CR.PROC.TEX.—27 417
Art. 725  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Two arguments in behalf of the state was not error: the matter being in the discretion of the trial court. Walker v. State, 64 App. 79, 141 S. W. 242.

Limitation of time.—This article does not limit the time which shall be occupied by counsel in the argument of the case, regulation of which is within the discretion of the presiding Judge. Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 236, 131 S. W. 542.

29. There are few and not complicated and the testimony short, limiting each side to 45 minutes for argument is not an abuse of discretion. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Argument of counsel in general.—See notes under art. 724, ante.

Art. 726. [706] Defendant's right to sever on trial.—When two or more defendants are jointly prosecuted, they may sever in the trial upon the request of either. [O. C. 587.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 920.

Former law.—This article and what is now article 728, before being amended by Act of March 16, 1874, p. 28, and Act of Feb. 12, 1883, p. 9, were as follows:

Where two or more defendants are jointly prosecuted, they may sever in the trial at the request of either, and if the defendant upon whose application the severance is allowed shall file his affidavit in writing, stating that a severance is requested for the purpose of obtaining the evidence of one or more of the persons jointly indicted with him; that such evidence is material to his defense; and that he verily believes that there is no evidence against the person or persons whose evidence is desired, such person or persons shall be first tried.

Where a severance is claimed, but no affidavit is filed as is provided in the preceding article, the attorney representing the state shall be entitled to elect which defendant shall be first tried.

For decisions made under said former provisions, see the following: Allison v. State, 14 App. 402; Myers v. State, 7 App. 460; Rucker v. State, Id. 549; Shawson v. State, Id. 63; Reed v. State, 11 App. 599, 49 Am. Rep. 730; Conn v. State, Id. 300; State, 8 App. 542; Berry v. State, 4 App. 202; Booth v. State, Id. 292; Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Blybee v. State, 36 Tex. 566.

40. A third person were jointly indicted for the murder of G. They were also jointly indicted for the murder of E. The two killings grew out of the same transaction. Held that on proper application, defendant before being tried for the murder of G. wins entitled to have the third person tried for the murder of E. though the third person had been tried for and acquitted of the murder of G. Terry v. State, 45 App. 264, 76 S. W. 229.

Opposition to severance.—A defendant will not be heard in opposition to severance asked by his co-defendant. Berry v. State, 4 App. 495.

Severance resulting in continuance.—Appeal of the party first tried will not operate a continuance for the co-defendant pending action of the appellate court. Krebs v. State, 8 App. 1, and cases cited.

On the application for severance, the party first to be tried must be in court and ready for trial; if at large, severance must be denied. Anderson v. State, 8 App. 542.

One of plural defendants is not entitled to a continuance in order that his co-defendant may be tried first and that he may have the benefit of her testimony in case she is acquitted. Slouard v. State, 27 App. 1, 19 S. W. 442; Williams v. State, 27 App. 466, 11 S. W. 481.

Defendant is not entitled to a severance on first trial when the severance would necessarily work a continuance of the case. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 626.

Defendant's motion for a continuance until his fugitive partner in the homicide, who had been jointly indicted with him, should be apprehended and placed on trial or until they could have an opportunity to agree upon a severance of the case was properly refused. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1066.

The right to a severance is mandatory, but, where the court granted a severance, it was under no obligation to wait an unreasonable time for the jury to return a verdict in the cases tried before proceeding to the trial of the others. Bruce v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 361.

Continuance to avoid severance.—In awarding a severance, then continuing the case of the joint defendant, and then forcing the first to trial, the court deprived him of his legal rights and erred. Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348.

The state can not defeat defendant's right of severance by a continuance. For­cey v. State, 29 App. 408, 16 S. W. 261; Davis v. State, 33 App. 344, 29 S. W. 410.

Accessories.—Since under Pen. Code, art. 99, the principal must be tried before his accessory, a motion of the principal that the person charged as accessory be first put on trial is properly overruled. Williams v. State, 27 App. 466, 11 S. W. 481.

A defendant's right to grant defendant a trial separate from that of parties charged as accessories was proper. Sewall v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 569.

Application.—When application for severance is filed, two alternatives are open—grant the request or dismiss the prosecution, so defendant can secure the testimony. But there must not be coupled with the dismissal a contract not under any circumstances to reindict the person whose case is dismissed. Brown v. State, 43 App. 176, 58 S. W. 123.
Motion to sever is properly overruled where it is not made to obtain evidence of co-defendants. Bailey v. State, 42 App. 239, 59 S. W. 940.

Severance is granted for the trial. Upon subsequent trials the parties have the right to change the order of trial if they think it is to their interest, and the doctrine of res adjudicata does not apply. Brooks v. State, 42 App. 347, 60 S. W. 65.

When the defendant makes application for severance, and the defendant tried first, the court's action in dismissing the codefendant on motion of the district attorney, and not requiring him to be tried first, is error, as it deprived affiant of the right guaranteed by the statute to have the party tried, that he might not be deprived of his testimony. Minor v. State, 45 App. 570, 77 S. W. 782.

An application by one of two joint defendants for a severance, not made until after the jury had been impaneled and sworn, and the indictment had been read to the jury, will not be granted. Hooper v. State, 72 App. 85, 109 S. W. 1187.

Instruction.—Cited, Price v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 640. That the charge of the court recited the case as against joint defendants is immaterial where the court stated in the first paragraph of the charge that a severance had been granted. Lowe v. State, 11 App. 253.

Art. 727. [707] Same subject.—Where two or more defendants are prosecuted for an offense growing out of the same transaction, by separate indictments, either defendant may file his affidavit in writing that one or more parties are indicted for an offense growing out of the same transaction for which he is indicted, and that the evidence of such party or parties is material for the defense of the defendant, and that the affiant verily believes that there is not sufficient evidence against the party or parties whose evidence is desired to secure his or her conviction, such party or parties for whose evidence said affidavit is made shall first be tried; and, in the event that two or more defendants make such affidavit and can not agree as to their order of trial, then the presiding judge shall direct the order in which the defendants shall be tried; provided, that the making of such affidavit does not, without other sufficient cause, operate as a continuance to either party. [Act March 21, 1887, p. 33.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 920, 920a.

Joint defendants.—See ante, art. 726, and notes.

Order of trial.—See art. 728, post, and notes.

Right to severance.—See Price v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 596. The statutes affecting severance are mandatory, and refusal of continuance will not defeat a defendant’s right to severance and the prior trial of his co-defendant. Dodson v. State, 22 App. 529, 24 S. W. 899.

Defendant desiring the testimony of a person under indictment should move to have such person tried first. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 618. All provisions of the code of procedure must be construed together and articles 37 and 729 must be construed with this article. Brown v. State, 42 App. 176, 58 S. W. 132.

Where accused insists that a witness has been indicted for the same offense to prevent him from testifying, he must proceed in the manner prescribed by this article to obtain the testimony of the witness. Day v. State, 62 App. 527, 138 S. W. 123.

An affidavit that a joint defendant moving for a separate trial believes there is not sufficient evidence against his co-defendant to secure his conviction is only necessary to authorize such defendant to move for a separate trial when he desires the evidence of the other defendant, and that he be tried first. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 626, 142 S. W. 878.

Where accused, when he announced ready for trial for theft, knew that another was charged in another county with participation in the same theft, so that he could not be a witness for accused under art. 731, post, providing that persons charged as principals or accessories, whether in the same or different indictments, cannot be witnesses for one another, and it was not claimed that accused was surprised by any state's evidence, accused cannot complain that the court, upon excluding the other person charged as a witness for accused, refused to permit accused to withdraw his announcement of ready for trial, so that he might move to have the other person tried first, pursuant to this article. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 186.

Where two defendants, separately indicted as accomplices to the commission of the same crime, each filed affidavits asking that the other be tried first, it was in the court's discretion to direct which one should be tried first. Milliner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

Same transaction.—In reply to motion to sever, state can set up and show the real facts, and if it appears that the transactions are not the same, the motion should be overruled. Grooms v. State, 40 App. 328, 59 S. W. 279.

If by using the term “transaction” means the same offense then the accessory would not come within its purview, because the accessory is not connected with the crime, but with the offender, severance will not apply to an accessory. Ray v. State, 45 App. 224, 41 S. W. 1697.
Where two persons are indicted separately for perjury for making practically the same statements, there can be no severance as provided by this article so as to entitle one to have the other tried first in order in case of acquittal to get the benefit of his testimony. Anderson v. State, 56 App. 350, 120 S. W. 466.

Affidavit.—That affiant "verily believes there is no evidence against the co-defendant," as held sufficient in In re v. State, 11 App. 350, 40 Am. Rep. 735. Affidavit for severance based upon "belief" that the testimony of a co-defendant is material is insufficient. Shaw v. State, 29 App. 161, 45 S. W. 597.

The essential element of this affidavit is that the testimony of the party who is sought not to be tried first is material to the defense of affiant. If this be not the case then the application for severance is not good. Rocha v. State, 43 App. 189, 63 S. W. 1019.

A motion for a separate trial of two defendants charged with the same offense, made by one of them to be used in the trial of the other, which was not sworn to by either defendant, and which did not state that the desired testimony was material, was not sufficient. Wilson v. State, 71 App. 320, 158 S. W. 1114.

Continuance.—Where by reason of a change of venue, it would cause a continuance to try the co-defendant first, the application therefor was properly denied. Locklin v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 305.

Dismissal of co-defendant.—See art. 729, post. The State has the right to dismiss prosecution against one or more joint defendants, not contacted, and whom it did not subsequently try as state witnesses; and the remaining co-defendant will not be heard to complain of refusal of severance and their first trial to render their evidence available. Hobbs v. State, 53 App. 71, 112 S. W. 308, overruling on the point, Furry's case, 50 App. 253, 88 S. W. 353. The effect of this decision is to overrule the point沃尔夫's case, 46 App. 231, 78 S. W. 529, and Follick's case, 46 App. 269, 78 S. W. 1688, followed in Furry's case; and revive the decision in Brown's case, 42 App. 176, 58 S. W. 151, specifically overruled in Furry's case.

Any error in overruling a motion for a severance as to two persons claimed to be accessories to accused could not have prejudiced him, where the cases were dismissed against both of such persons, and one of them testified for accused, and the other was available. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 132.

This article applies to defendants separately indicted, some as principals and others as accomplices or accessories. King v. State, 35 App. 473, 34 S. W. 252, which compare with Williams v. State, 27 App. 466, 11 S. W. 481. Accused and two others were indicted separately, the latter as accessories, and when the case was called, they agreed that accused should be tried last, whereupon accused moved for a "severance" as to the accessories, which motion was overruled and the cases against the accessories dismissed. Held, that the procedure was not erroneous. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 902.

Any error in overruling a motion for a severance as to two persons claimed to be accessories to accused could not have prejudiced him, where the cases were dismissed against both of such persons, and one of them testified for accused, and the other was available. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 132.

Art. 728. [708] Order in which they will be tried, etc.—When a severance is claimed, the defendants may agree upon the order in which they are to be tried, but, in case of their failure to agree, the court shall direct the order of trial.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 926.

See ante, art. 726, and notes.

In general.—Defendants jointly indicted and prosecuted are entitled as a matter of right, not only to sever, but by agreement to fix and indicate the order in which they will be tried. Teisman v. State, 39 App. 164, 12 S. W. 745.

Where defendants can not agree, it is the duty of the court to direct the order of their trial. Chumley v. State, 32 App. 255, 26 S. W. 408; Parker v. State, 33 App. 111, 21 S. W. 604, 25 S. W. 967.

Where a severance is requested by one of several jointly indicted, and no affidavit is filed, stating that affiant believes there is not sufficient evidence against his codefendant to secure a conviction, it is a matter for the court's discretion which defendant shall be first tried. Ryan v. State, 66 App. 628, 142 S. W. 878.

Accessories.—Where accused was indicted as accomplice and accessory to a murder, and deceased's wife was also indicted by the same grand jury as an accomplice, and both moved for separate trials, but could not agree which should be tried first, the court did not err in directing that accused be first tried. Milliner v. State, 72 App. 14, 102 S. W. 948.

Art. 729. [709] May dismiss as to one who may be witness.—The attorney representing the state may, at any time, under the rules provided in article 37, dismiss a prosecution as to one or more defendants jointly indicted with others; and the person so discharged may be introduced as a witness by either party. [O. C. 588.]

See ante, arts. 4, 37, 643, and notes.

Art. 730. [710] Where there is no evidence against a defendant jointly prosecuted.—When it is apparent that there is no evidence against a defendant in any case where he is jointly prosecuted with others, the jury may be directed to find a verdict as to such defendant; and, if they acquit, he may be introduced as a witness in the case. [O. C. 589.]

Instruction.—Cited, Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 541, 163 S. W. 29.

If, upon a joint trial, there be no evidence tending to implicate one of the defendants, the court should require the jury to pass upon his case before the other defendant opens his defense. In such case the jury should be instructed to consider the case as to the defendants as wholly disconnected, and to return a general verdict as to the defendant whose case is thus submitted to them. Lyles v. State, 41 Tex. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 38; Bybee v. State, 36 Tex. 366; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 165, 62 Am. Dec. 850.

Art. 731. [711] Where it appears the court has no jurisdiction.—Where it appears in the course of a trial that the court has no jurisdiction of the offense, or that the facts charged in the indictment do not constitute an offense, the jury shall be discharged. [O. C. 590.]

Art. 732. [712] In such case court may commit, when.—If the want of jurisdiction arises from the fact that the defendant is not liable to prosecution in the county where the indictment was presented, the court may, in cases of felony, order the defendant into custody for a reasonable length of time to await a warrant for his arrest from the proper county; or, if the offense be bailable, may require the defendant to enter into recognizance to answer before the proper court; in which case, a certified copy of the recognizance shall be transmitted forthwith to the clerk of the proper court, to be enforced by that court in case of forfeiture as in other cases. [O. C. 591.]

See ante, arts. 592–596, and notes.

Art. 733. [713] Defendant shall be discharged in all cases, when.—In all cases where it appears that the facts charged in the indictment or information do not constitute an offense, and in all cases of misdemeanor where it appears that the court has no jurisdiction of the same, and the jury is discharged, as provided in article 731, the defendant shall also be discharged; but such discharge shall be no bar in any case to a prosecution before the proper court for any offense against the law. [O. C. 590–592.]

See ante, arts. 592–595, and notes.

Art. 734. [714] The jury are judges of fact.—The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts in every criminal cause, but not of the law in any case. They are bound to receive the law from the court and be governed thereby. [O. C. 593.]

In general.—See post, art. 788, and notes.

It is the province of the court to determine as matter of law, what games are within the inhibition of the statute. Stearnes v. State, 21 Tex. 692.

Unless the general charge embodies the substance of this article, it would be error to refuse a correct requested charge, including also the reasonable doubt. Lending v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 572.

Under this article and arts. 738, 740, 741, requiring the jury to receive the law from the court, providing that the general charge and the charges given or refused at the request of either party shall be certified by the judge and filed, and that when charges are asked the judge shall read to the jury only such as he gives, etc., the action of the county attorney in writing in certain words in the charge on the jury coming into court for information was ground for reversal, where after the charge was made the charge was not read to the jury, but was handed to it. Christensen v. State, 59 App. 278, 125 S. W. 616.

It is the duty of the court to inform the jury as to the law applicable to a given state of facts, but for the jury to determine the facts, and whether testimony, or against a defendant, the credibility of witnesses and the weight of evidence. Newton v. State, 62 App. 632, 138 S. W. 709.

While the jurors in a criminal case are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight of the testimony, they are bound by the trial court's instructions on the law. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 229.

Questions of law and fact.—In perjury, the materiality of the matter assigned as perjury is determinable by the court, and should not be submitted to the jury. Davidson v. State, 22 App. 372, 12 S. W. 677; Jackson v. State, 15 App. 579; Donoho v. State, 14 App. 623; Speer v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 916, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, whether the accused was traveling was a question for the jury. Campbell v. State, 58 App. 349, 125 S. W. 995; 21 Ann. Cas. 447; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 1154.

Where defendant carried a pistol to a picnic in a wagon, and while at the picnic took the pistol from the wagon to a point distant about 100 yards, to where certain persons were camping, and, after holding it for a time handed it to his friend, he was not entitled to an acquittal of unlawfully carrying a weapon about his person as matter of law. Pickett v. State, 51 App. 230, 121 S. W. 131.

Where a statute declared that insulting language applicable to a female relative constituted an assault, the court, in a prosecution for assault alleged to have resulted from insulting remarks by prosecutor concerning defendant's wife, should determine as a matter of law whether they were insulting, and, if so found, should have charged that the use of the words constituted adequate basis for conviction. Morgan v. State, 61 App. 227, 135 S. W. 561.

It was error, in a prosecution for assault to murder, in which it appeared that the assaulted party was beaten considerably in the face, to leave it to the jury to determine what was adequate cause, and whether the pain caused by the assault procured as would reduce it to manslaughter had killing occurred, or, in the absence of death, to aggravated assault, when the statute expressly provides that an assault causing pain or bloodshed will be adequate cause. Luttrell v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 628.

Evidence that a private detective did not himself suggest the commission of burglary, but, when it was suggested to him, he seemingly assented thereto, and that during the commission of the crime he stood outside the building, and thereupon received a part of the stolen money, which he promptly turned over to the police, warrants submitting to the jury the question whether the detective was an accomplice, instead of instructing, as a matter of law, that he was an accomplice. Hyde v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 190.

Admissibility of evidence.—It is the province of the court, and not the jury, to determine the competency of evidence, and the jury are not the judges of the evidence in the case, but may receive the evidence from the facts alone from the evidence, under the instructions received from the court. Fore v. State, 5 App. 251; Johnson v. State, Id. 425; Taylor v. State, 3 App. 387; Nelson v. State, 2 Tex. 280; Wharton v. State, 45 Tex. 2; Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 286; Carter v. State, 37 Tex. 392; Newton v. State, 62 App. 392; 135 S. W. 298.

The competency of an expert witness to prove handwriting by comparison is a question for the court. Heacock v. State, 13 App. 97.

It is proper to submit to the jury the question as to whether a proper predicate has been proved for the admission of dying declarations. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 58.

Admissibility of confession.—Whether a confession is admissible is a question of law for the court; it being only when the voluntary character of the confession is contested or the making thereof denied that the court is required to submit such issue to the jury. Helscher v. State, 71 App. 446, 181 S. W. 459; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387; Speer v. State, 4 App. 474; Nolen v. State, 8 App. 585; Carter v. State, 27 Tex. 382; Hauck v. State, 1 App. 357; Raina v. State, 32 App. 294, 28 S. W. 388; Blocker v. State, 61 App. 349, 135 S. W. 190; Campbell v. State, 62 App. 505, 141 S. W. 232, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 885; Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 315. See also, Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 809.

Review.—See post, art. 539, and notes.

This article and art. 786, prohibit the Court of Criminal Appeals from passing on the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony on appeal from a conviction. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 396.

Art. 735. [715] Charge of court to the jury.—In all felony cases the judge shall, before the argument begins, deliver to the jury, a written charge, in which he shall distinctly set forth the law applicable to the case; but he shall not express any opinion as to the weight of the evidence nor shall he sum up the testimony. Before said charge is read to the jury, the defendant or his counsel shall have a reasonable time to examine the same and he shall present his objections thereto in writing, distinctly specifying each ground of objection. [O. C. 594; Act 1913, p. 278, ch. 138, § 1, amending art. 735, revised C. C. P.]

I. NECESSITY, NATURE, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY OF CHARGE

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Art. 735

In support of the presumption of innocence, every theory of the crime which the evidence suggests should be charged upon accused's request. Martin v. State, 57 App, 261, 122 S. W. 568.

A request having basis in the evidence, and also predicated on matters not raised, is, where the matters are conmouflaged, properly refused. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.), 178 S. W. 523.

2. General considerations in giving charge.—Defendants being indicted for violating one phase of a law, the charge of the court should confine the jury to that phase, and in submitting others error is committed. Whitcomb v. State, 30 App, 269, 17 S. W. 258. The charge is controlled absolutely by the evidence adduced on the trial, and only to the extent of such evidence. In re Mitigation of the offense, as to reasonably demand a charge, are questions primarily committed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. If its force is deemed very weak, trivial, light, and its application remote, the court should not charge upon it. If the charge is so bombastic and so expected to influence the jury so reaching a verdict, the court should so charge as to furnish them with the appropriate rule of law, with reference to it. Bishop v. State, 45 App, 24.

It is measurable and need not transcend the legitimate deductions therefrom, and it is not incumbent on the judge to give in charge the law applicable to a deduction which the jury could not reasonably draw from the evidence. Williams v. State, 11 App, 65; Lum v. State, 6 App, 499, 140 S. W. 455.

The court need not single out each of the different facts tending to connect accused with the crime, and charge on each separately. Pink v. State, 49 App, 25, 48 S. W. 171.

Where there are two theories in a case, one favorable and the other unfavorable, and the unfavorable theory is given, the favorable theory should also be given. Walker v. State, 65 App, 499, 140 S. W. 455.

In determining whether an issue favorable to accused should be submitted, the court must take the testimony of accused as true, and, where it raises an issue, it must submit the evidence to the jury. Fifer v. State, 94 App, 294, 140 S. W. 317.

If the charge is to facts contrary to those established by or to evidence, the issue does not require that the issues so made be submitted upon the theory that accused's evidence is true. Scott v. State, 70 App, 57, 153 S. W. 571.

3. Determination of questions of law.—In a prosecution for following the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, the trial judge may charge, that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Misher v. State (Cr. App.), 152 S. W. 1049. So, also, as to whisky. Hambright v. State, 60 App, 256, 131 S. W. 1123.

Evidence tended to show that previous to the homicide the accused repeatedly declared his intention to kill the deceased, and that, on the evening of, but before, the killing, he went to the house of the deceased and told deceased's family to tell him that he and George Nixon, Aaron Nixon, and Bill Evans were coming to his house that night to kill him; that at about dark on that night the deceased and the said Nixons and the said Evans met at a certain house where they prepared arms and ammunition, and whence they went in the direction of the house of the death. 420 deceased; that, just before the killing, George Nixon called the deceased from his home; that the facts, and while they were talking at the usual time each defenand said Evans and one Rule, each having a gun, passed and stopped at a point forty yards distant, to which point the defendant called the deceased, and that when the deceased started for that point one or the other of the said parties fired a shot; and, he the deceased, Rule, testifying for the defense, admitted that he and the defendant passed the house of the deceased on the night of the homicide, and saw several negroes there, but denied that he or defendant stopped at or near the said house and witnessed the killing, or that they spoke to the deceased there. He testified further that defendant went to Wagoner's house, six miles distant, without stopping; that he did not hear the fatal shot fired, and was not informed of the homicide until the next morning. Held, that the evidence clearly raised the issue of conspiracy, and of the defendant and defendant, as a principal offender, and authorized the court on the court on that issue, which, conforming to the rules above stated, was cor-

The court may, before giving his instructions proper, state to the jury the nature of the charge against defendant, and state that "in determining defendant's or innocence of said charge, I give you the following instructions as the law applicable to the case, and by which you must be governed. Wolfthor v. State, 21 App. 397, 20 S. W. 741.

On a trial for manslaughter, a charge that defendant had, at a former trial been acquitted of murder, and could not again be tried for said offense, is sufficient to protect defendant's rights in connection with such former acquittal. Abrams
v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 798.

Where an election resulting in prohibition, not contested within the time specified, becomes effective as a matter of law, the court, after proof by the introduction of the proper orders, etc., can charge, as a matter of law, that prohibition is in

An instruction that the jury are the exclusive judges of the facts and the credibility of the witnesses, but that the law must be received from the court, and that they are bound thereby, sufficiently charges that the jury must receive the law from the court in its instructions. Jefferson v. State, 71 App. 129, 158 S. W.
529.

4. Application of law to facts.—The court may, in its charge, call attention to the facts, or a particular fact, if it be controverted, to direct the jury to the rules of law that must govern in arriving at the truth; if it be uncontroverted, to apply the law to it. All that is required of the judge is that he should neither decide 147; Douglas v. State, 8 App. 529; Carroll v. State (Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 294.

The court should, in its instruction, furnish the jury with the appropriate rules of law as to all the issues or defenses raised by the evidence. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1006.

5. Duties of jury.—A charge, which instructs or advises the jury as to the proper process of reasoning on the facts, is erroneous. Brown v. State, 23 Tex.
198.

The action of the court in telling the jury "pass on the case as soon as you can, as you are on the special venire in the case that will come up next," afterwards explained by saying, "I mean I want you to commence on your deliberations as soon after you get your dinner as you can," is not ground for reversal, unless it appears to have unduly influenced the jury. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S.
W. 290.

An instruction that the jury in deliberating on the case should not refer to any matter or issue not in evidence, nor separate from each other, nor talk with any one of the jury, and that violation of the injunction would be punished severely by the court, is not improper as a threat calculated to mislead and prejudice

In an address to the regular jury panel for the week, the trial judge told them that a verdict was the agreed consensus of opinion of each and all 12 men; that it was a mistake for a juror to think that because the rest did not think exactly as he that there was no chance to agree, but they ought to discuss the matter and get each other's viewpoint, as it was always possible to agree, etc.: that a hung jury was a detriment to the state and to the defendant, etc. Held, that the remarks did not have a tendency to coerce jurors to reach a verdict in any improper manner, and hence was not injurious to a defendant whose case was tried during the week. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 541.

He is not entitled to a new trial for a mistrial; if the jurors were improperly instructed by the court, or by the evidence, or both; that the jury should disregard what they had heard of the case, or knew of the character of any of the witnesses, and confine themselves to the evidence alone on the trial, not informing fellow jurors of their knowledge, is not Fixed punishment.—An instruction that, if the jury have a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, they must acquit, and not resolve the doubt by a mitigation of the punishment, is error, as tending to influence the jury to inflict the death penalty, rather than milder punishment. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 163,

31 S. W. 186.

Where the punishment for an offense has been changed from time to time,
It is erroneous for the court to charge the jury as to what statute they are to assess the punishment under, as it is within their province to determine the time when the crime was committed, and assess the punishment under the statute in existence at that time. Martin v. State, 24 Tex. 61.
7. Definition of offense.—The charge should give the statutory definition of the offense for which the defendant is on trial, or failing to do this, the nature and ingredients of such offense. Hilliard v. State, 37 Tex. 355; Smith v. State, 1 App. 517; Cady v. State, 4 App. 228; Gose v. State, 6 App. 121; Lindsey v. State, 5 App. 445; Johnson v. State, 13 App. 378; Blocker v. State, 27 App. 169; Britton v. State, 37 App. 12, 11 S. W. 132; see also, Gentry v. State, 38 S. W. 669. See, also, Hargrave v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 444; Simons v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 619. A reference to the indictment for a specification of the offense, or some of its descriptive ingredients, is not objectionable. Tincher v. State, 53 S. W. 30. The charge need not be in language of such kind as it is sufficient to state the constituent elements of the crime. Adkins v. State, 41 App. 577, 56 S. W. 64. See, also, Davis v. State, 10 App. 31. Where the court in its instructions properly applied to the facts of the Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure, without quoting any of the articles charging the offense, or the charges in the language of the Codes is not erroneous. Gentry v. State, 61 App. 615, 125 S. W. 50. The charge may be defective, though in the language of the statute, if it fails to apply the law to the facts. Francis v. State, 7 App. 591.

In a misdemeanor case, where no charge is requested by either party, the court may instruct the jury by simply reading from the Code the necessary provisions in regard to the crime. Holmes v. State, 7 App. 117.

The court may in its instructions state what the charge preferred in the indictment is, and may then charge the jury that they must believe every essential fact necessary to show guilt before they can convict, and need not tell the jury what the statute is and lay down general principles of law. Ritter v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 727.

8. Offenses or counts thereof alleged.—When an indictment contains more than one count, the charge should submit the law pertinently as applicable to each count upon which the trial is had. Pollard v. State, 23 App. 157, 26 S. W. 70; Elder v. State, 20 App. 281, S. W. 590. Where the indictment charges several offenses, and there is evidence to support both, the jury should be instructed as to the law covering both offenses. Struckman v. State, 7 App. 531. Where there is no evidence supporting one or more counts of the indictment the court need not submit counts to the jury. Parks v. State, 29 App. 607, 15 S. W. 521. And where one of the counts is bad a charge thereon is error. McMurtry v. State, 38 App. 521, 43 S. W. 1010. If a nolle prosequi has been entered upon one or two counts charging different grades of an offense, it is error to give an instruction upon offense charged in such count. Strickland v. State, 33 S. W. 784. Where only one count of an indictment is submitted to the jury, requested instructions that if the jury should believe defendant guilty of a violation of the law, but be unable to ascertain on which charge of the indictment he was guilty, they should find him not guilty, is properly refused. Manovitch v. State, 50 App. 650, 96 S. W. 1. Where one species of aggravated assault is alleged, it is error to charge in relation to another species not alleged. Stanfield v. State, 43 Tex. 167; Coney v. State, 43 Tex. 414; Kouns v. State, 3 App. 15; Ferguson v. State, 4 App. 156; McGee v. State, 5 App. 492; Anderson v. State, 16 App. 152. Where one species of burglary is alleged, it is error to charge as to charge not alleged. Mace v. State, 9 App. 110; Sullivan v. State, 13 App. 462; Weeks v. State, 13 App. 460; Durbin v. State, 15 App. 485; Strickland v. State, 15 App. 343. Or to charge as to a species to which there is no evidence. Nelderuck v. State, 23 App. 38, 3 S. W. 573. See, also, Jones v. State, 22 App. 680, 3 S. W. 478; Melton v. State, 24 App. 287, 6 S. W. 303; Fernandez v. State, 25 App. 533, 8 S. W. 667; see also, Otero v. State, 27 App. 128, 9 S. W. 46; McElhinney v. State, 28 App. 419, 9 S. W. 660; Surrell v. State, 29 App. 231, 15 S. W. 815; Otero v. State, 36 App. 459, 17 S. W. 1081. Where one species of rape is alleged, it is error to charge as to another species not alleged. Cooper v. State, 25 App. 419, 3 S. W. 341; Serio v. State, 22 App. 653, 3 S. W. 784. See, also, Taylor v. State, 24 App. 389, 6 S. W. 42. Where, on a prosecution for rape the indictment contained a count charging rape on a girl under 15 years of age, and one charging rape by force, threats, and fraud, and only the first count was submitted, a charge with reference to the second count is properly refused. Hicks v. State, 48 App. 229, 87 S. W. 345. Where the offense charged was conveying into a jail articles useful to aid prisoners in escaping, it is error to instruct as to the law against aiding a prisoner to escape from one officer. Mason v. State, 7 App. 625. The submission to the jury by the court that the counts in the indictment are equivalent to the conviction by the state to claim conviction on that count alone. Parks v. State, 29 App. 557, 16 S. W. 552; Moore v. State, 37 App. 552, 40 S. W. 257.

Accused was charged in an indictment with cursing and swearing at a public place, that he cursed and abused a certain person under circumstances reasonably calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. After the evidence had been introduced, the county attorney elected to prosecute on the first count only. Held, error to instruct as to both counts, and authorize a conviction under either one of such counts. Cooper v. State, 48 S. W. 687; see also, State v. 625, 124 S. W. 637.

Where the information charged intimidation by threatening words and acts of violence, and by the firing of guns, a charge as to the use of threatening words is not necessary for the information charged that theOSE. was committed by the firing of guns alone. Oliver v. State, 58 App. 50, 124 S. W. 637.

Where, in a prosecution for theft, the court refused to submit the question of the jury, a request to charge that, if the false pretense was a promise to do the future, it would not constitute a crime, it is not properly refused. Hawkins v. State, 65 App. 467, 126 S. W. 268, 137 Am. St. Rep. 970.
On a trial under an indictment charging that accused owned and kept a house as a house of prostitution, the instruction to the jury that the owner kept, was concerned in keeping, or knowingly permitted such house to be kept as a house of prostitution, is erroneous, as it authorized a conviction on matters not set up in the indictment. Bowman v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 846.

It is not error, in a prosecution for violating a statute, to refuse to define a word used in the statute, when such word is used in its ordinary sense, and it is easily comprehended by every one. Humphreys v. State, 34 App. 434, 50 S. W. 1066. In a prosecution for a violation of a statute it is not error to refuse an instruction defining a word used in the statute, when such word is used in its ordinary sense, and is easily comprehended by every one. Humphreys v. State, 34 App. 434, 50 S. W. 1066.

10. Matters not in dispute.—It is not error to omit to submit an issue on a matter as to which the evidence is undisputed. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 536. Where it is admitted that defendant obtained the property alleged to have been stolen with the consent of the owner, an instruction which authorizes the jury to convict if defendant obtained it without the consent of the owner, is erroneous. Sanders v. State, 38 App. 345, 42 S. W. 983. Where, in a prosecution for swindling by obtaining clothes in exchange for a worthless check, there was no dispute that the check was delivered to prosecutor's clerk, it is not error to refuse to charge that the state was bound to prove that the check was delivered to person alleged in the indictment. Glover v. State, 57 App. 268, 122 S. W. 396. Where the unequivocal evidence tended to show that the death was occasioned by arsenic, it is not error for the court to refuse to submit the issue whether death was occasioned by arsenic. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 290. In a trial for unlawfully disposing of a mortgaged chattel, it is not error to omit to submit an issue whether there was a trade between the parties where it was undisputed that accused bought the property from the mortgagee, and agreed to give a mortgage thereon, which he did. Loggins v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 176. Where, on a trial for burglary, the evidence showed that prosecutors were in the sole possession and control of the house burglarized, and no question was raised as to the actual ownership thereof, the refusal to direct an acquittal, unless the jury found who actually owned the house, is proper. Smith v. State, 61 App. 225, 125 S. W. 533. Where the evidence showed that accused had the exclusive possession of the bay horse, alleged to have been stolen, when he swapped it for a sorrel horse, a charge that unless the jury believed that accused was in the exclusive possession of the horse claimed to have been stolen, and further find that he stole it, they should acquit, is properly refused. Johnson v. State, 57 App. 603, 124 S. W. 664.

Where, in a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquor in local option territory, there is no evidence raising the issue that the article sold, which was beer, was not intoxicating, but the case was tried on the theory that it was intoxicating and prohibited, there was no error in refusing an instruction based on the theory that there was not an intoxicating Cal. Stat. 1st Leg. c. 17, defining "intoxicating liquors" as including fermented liquor, the courts will take judicial knowledge that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Moreno v. State, 580, 143 S. W. 156, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 652.

11. Matters of common knowledge.—As to matters of common knowledge, of which jurors are supposed to possess competent knowledge, the court is not required to instruct. Flournoy v. State, 16 Tex. 31.
12. Presumptions, burden of proof, and reasonable doubt.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 335, 336.
See notes to Pen. Code, art. 51, and C. C. P. art. 785, post.
Where it does not appear that it was an insistence before the jury that the indictment should be regarded by them as evidence of guilt, it is not error to refuse a charge that the indictment is no evidence of guilt. Crane v. State, 57 App.
476, 123 S. W. 422.

Presumptions of law that are against accused should not ordinarily be given in the charge, but, where applicable, presumptions of law favorable to accused should

13. Elements and incidents of offenses and defenses in general.—See notes to Penal Code articles dealing with specific offenses.
Where an information charged an offense by striking with the hands, the instructions should have been confined to the means alleged, and not have permitted a conviction for an assault with a stick, knife, or anything else capable of inflict-

Where, on a trial for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, the only issue was whether accused made the sale to prosecutor for himself or another owning the property, or whether he acted as agent for the prosecutor, and as such bought the liquor for prosecutor, it is immaterial that the instructions did not define a sale.

Where, on a trial for seduction, prosecutor fixed the time of the promise of marriage and accompanying act of intercourse as April, 1908, and accused proved prior misconduct of prosecutrix and her general reputation for want of chastity prior to the time fixed by her, the refusal to charge that if prosecutrix was unchaste at the time fixed by her accused must be acquitted is reversible error.
Humphrey v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 641.

Charges must be given on every issue favorable to the defendant from which the jury might infer absence of guilt or give him the benefit of doubt, especially in cases where the defendant forms an element of the offense charged, or is entitled to charges submitting all circumstances tending to mitigate the offense or in extenuation. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 929.

Where, on a trial for the murder of a child by arsenic poisoning, the evidence showed that arsenic was found in cheap candy, and that the child had eaten candy just before she was taken sick, and that she had been sick more or less for some time, as evidenced by vomiting and complaints, and the theory of the state was that accused placed arsenic in coffee given to the child, the refusal to charge the theory of the defense of the possibility of the poison having been received acdentally is reversible error. Orner v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 925.

In a prosecution for homicide, a charge that if arsenic was placed in the coffee which deceased drank on the day of his death, and if Mrs. B., or any other person than accused, mixed and mingled the arsenic with the coffee, then accused should be acquitted, is not where there was no other Mrs. B. mentioned in the record, erroneous as failing to identify her as the wife of accused. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house where spirituous liquors were kept and sold without a license, where defendant testified that the beer found at his place belonged to his son, and was kept there for his individual use, and that he had never made a sale of liquor to any one, and where liquor was shown to have been at defendant's place on any other occasion, and no sale to any one was shown, a refusal of an instruction submitting defendant's defensive theory that the keeping of beer for his own use, or for the use of his stepson, was not a violation of law, where in a prosecution reasonable doubt as to whether such liquor was kept for sale defendant should be acquitted, is reversible error. Williams v. State (Cr. App.)
148 S. W. 206.

Where accused, charged with carrying a pistol, testified that he came to Texas about four years before, and went to live with his uncle, and made a crop there eyear until 1911, that during 1911 he went to another place and did some work.
but frequently visited the home of his uncle, and considered that his home, and that his uncle’s home was at the time he carried the tool to the barn on the issue as to whether his home was at the home of his uncle is reversible error.  McCollum v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 430.

Where, on a trial for keeping a gambling room, the testimony of the prosecution that accused was running a gambling house was made to show that case playing took place constantly, a requested charge that it was no offense for accused to have occasional games among his friends in his room is properly refused, as presenting an issue not raised by the evidence.  Boswell v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 432.

In a criminal prosecution for being the owner, lessee, or tenant of a disorderly house, where there was proof for the defense that the owner of the premises had rented them to other parties and made no connection between defendant and the owner or lessee of the building, a requested charge that defendant could not be convicted unless defendant was either the owner, a lessee, or a tenant of such house, should have been given. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 890.

Where, in a prosecution for engaging in the business of selling intoxicants in a dry county, accused claimed that he collected the money from the parties for whom he ordered, before the liquor was ordered, which the state controverted, an instruction that, if accused ordered liquor for the accommodation of others and collected the money from them before the order was made, he would not be guilty, is not objectionable for requiring the jury to believe that he collected the money from such others before the order was made. And such instruction is not objectionable on the ground that accused would not be guilty whether he ordered the liquor as an accommodation or not, but presented accused’s contention under the evidence. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 571.

Where, in a prosecution for hog theft, defendant denied that he had anything to do with prosecutor’s hogs, claimed that he was absent on the day of the taking, buying hogs in another direction, and that the hog meat found in his smokehouse was the product of the hogs so purchased, it is error for the court to instruct on charge on the defensive matter so presented. Matthews v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 228.

In a prosecution for disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship, where the information did not allege that the parties who committed the offense were riding on horses, or that they were riding at all, and nutrition testified that they were riding horses, accused cannot predicate his conviction upon whether or not he was riding a horse or a mule; and a charge that if the parties, or either of them, were riding mules, accused should be acquitted, is properly refused. Larter v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 296.

Where accused assaulted decedent several times during the night of the killing, and at one time threw a water pitcher at her, and decedent’s body was badly bruised, though no one was present when she was slain, the court properly submitted to the jury the issue whether accused killed her by beating and bruising her with an unknown weapon. Lucas v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 527.

In a prosecution for the business or occupation of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory, the court charged the statute that any person who pursues the occupation of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory shall be punished, and that, to constitute the prosecution of the business of selling intoxicants, the state must prove that accused made at least two sales, and further instructed that the jury must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was not selling intoxicants upon her premises, but must believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that she actually made sales of intoxicants in pursuit of the business of selling intoxicants, and that she was engaged in the business of selling intoxicants, and, if the jury did not find beyond a reasonable doubt that she sold, they should acquit such the belief that one of the elements was proven. Held, that the instruction was not objectionable upon the ground that it permitted of conviction on proofs of two separate and distinct sales. Hightower v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 184.

On a trial for stealing a horse and buggy, accused’s counsel charged the jury that accused was not a party to the original theft is fairly submitted by an instruction that if N. left accused and went off and himself hired or took the property without the knowledge or consent of the owner, and if accused was not present, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether this was true, to find accused not guilty. Moran v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 161.

Where in a prosecution for wife murder, defendant claimed that another that himself killed deceased, but there was no evidence raising such issue except the testimony, declarations, and statements of accused, and the court properly and sufficiently charged, as to such statements and declarations that the burden was on the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that if were false, the court did not err in omitting to otherwise present defendant’s claim that another killed deceased as an affirmative defense. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state did not rely on a conspiracy to kill decedent, it claimed that decedent was killed incident to the furtherance of a conspiracy to illegally organize in Texas a company to invade Mexico, the court properly refused to charge on conspiracy to kill decedent. And the court did not err in omitting to define conspiracy. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1132.

A reliance on a plea of not guilty, and the fact that the state does not prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, does not call for any other or different affirmative presumption of innocence, or reasonable doubt. It is only where the evidence presents an affirmative defense that an affirmative charge to acquit, if the facts are consistent with defendant’s innocence, is called for. Orange v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 297.

14. Time and place of offense.—Where the evidence raises the issue, an instruction that defendant cannot be convicted unless it appears where the alleged of. fense did not occur in the county charged in the information should have been given the district attorney. 50 S. W. 576. Where there was no issue as to the question of venue, a charge that, if the jury believed from the evidence that defendant committed the offense as charged, they should find him guilty, is a sufficient charge on that subject. Meyer v. State (Cr. App. 49 S. W. 500). It is not erroneous, however, to charge that, if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense within two years before the filing of the indictment, they could convict. Willlumgham v. State, 62 App. 769. In a prosecution for kidnapping, a prosecurator for kidnapping, the offense was in issue, and where there was no proof that the channel of the Rio Grande had suddenly changed, there is no error in refusing defendant's request that the jury should be instructed that the river had suddenly changed its course into a new channel. State v. 581, 105 S. W. 939. A prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicants, where the state's witnesses fixed the day of the sale as the 15th, and the court permitted an amendment of the indictment to the 12th, it was proper for the court to refuse a special charge, the whole issue to whether there was a sale on the 15th, and whether the sale on the 12th, was made on Saturday, March 10th. De Lereosa v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 121.

Where the indictment charging a violation of the local option law was returned on December 12, 1908, and the state was not required to elect on which transaction a conviction would be sought, an instruction that if, at any time during 1909, and before December 11, accused sold intoxicating liquors, they should render a verdict of guilty, is not objectionable, in that it did not correctly state the law as to the time within which accused might or might not be convicted. Matthews v. State, 57 App. 328, 122 S. W. 648.

In a prosecution for robbery, upon an indictment found January 12, 1911, charging the offense to have been committed on or about May 1, 1910, and in which all of the thefts were committed as to the same transaction, May 1, 1910, a charge that if defendant on or about the 1st day of May, 1910, etc., is not objectionable for failing to charge that the jury must find offense to have been committed before the filing of the indictment. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 393. A charge for forgery of a mortgage note, and forgery of a bond as a defendant signed and executed the note in J. county, he should be acquitted, although the signing and execution of the note was a forgery, that the burden of proof was on the prosecution to prove it. De La Torre v. State, 163 S. W. 141. Where an indictment found in W. county charged that cattle were stolen and were received and concealed by accused in W. county, an instruction that, assumed that the accused in W. county, to find him guilty is erroneous, as it authorized a conviction upon a state of facts which would not have been provable. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 822.

15. Intent or motive.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 921-924, 923, 924.

Where the state's evidence does not raise the issue of fraudulent intent, and accused denies any connection with the crime, a charge on fraudulent intent is not required. Taylor v. State, 38 App. 241, 42 S. W. 385; Chessen v. State (Cr. App.) 42 S. W. 246. A charge for prosecution for injuring a fence, it is a charge with respect to the failure to return the fence. Wilson v. State, 59 App. 129 S. W. 826. A charge directing a conviction if defendant took property in question in a state of fraudulent intent as a center, and committed the offense. Wilson v. State, 59 App. 129 S. W. 826. In a prosecution for forgery in the signing of the name of another to a note as surety, where accused claimed that he signed such person's name relying upon the fact of their long-standing friendship, and thinking that it would make no difference with such person, and it appeared that accused in fact had no authority to sign such name, and that he did the company, being captured in another state and brought back for trial, failure to charge that, if he did not intend to defraud the person whose name he signed, he should be acquitted, is not error. Carlson v. State, 60 App. 584, 132 S. W. 775.

Where an indictment charged that accused mingled poison with coffee with the intent to injure and kill two persons named, the court could submit the question of the intent of accused to injure and kill one of such persons. Terry v. State, 62 App. 135 S. W. 485. In a trial for aggravated assault claimed to have been committed by accused forcing a door in a house to which prosecuting witness flet, it is error to refuse to submit an issue of accident and mistake where accused had testified in prosecution for assault on persons in the vicinity. State v. DeCecco, 62 App. 419, 135 S. W. 125. Where there was evidence tending to show that one prosecuted for an aggravated assault in driving over a young girl was intoxicated and the horse was either racing with another or his horse was running away with the alleged assault took place, an instruction that if the defendant was not actuated by a criminal intent, he is not guilty, should have been given, the question of intent being presented by the evidence. Perkins v. State, 62 App. 508, 135 S. W. 135. In a prosecution for disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship, where the evidence clearly showed the injuring the persons in the same, or if they were assembled there to hear preaching, a charge that if the church was not lighted, and no services were going on, there was nothing to put accused on notice that they were holding religious services, then he was not guilty, is properly refused, being without support in the evidence. Laird v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S.W. 260. Where witnesses in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house testified to acts tending to show defendant's knowledge of the character and conduct of the inmates of the house, but defendant testified positively that she did not know that any of the inmates were prostitutes or had been guilty of improper conduct, the knowledge of defendant was in issue, and the refusal of a requested instruction that unless they found that appellant had knowledge that the women in question were not plying their vocations and no such act was error. Hitchings v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S.W. 1164. Where there was no evidence tending to show consent by the prosecutor to taking of property by accused, a charge on such theory is properly refused. Stokes v. State (Ct. Cr. App.) 70 S.W. 95.

Sec. 14.-Where an accused conveyed a horse and a cow, the court may send an officer to unfasten the horse and bring it in to court, and if after attempting to unfasten it, the horse should jump, he is guilty of an assault, and the court may then render judgment, as if the horse had been unfastened by the accused. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S.W. 512.

Where there was no testimony raising the issue that defendant in prosecution for conversion might have thought he had authority or permission of the owner to sell the cow in question, the charge on refusal of a requested charge raising a reason, 220 S. 449, 109 S.W. 458. A charge, that the law of bigamy should not extend to any person whose wife shall have been continually remaining out of the state, or shall have voluntarily withdrawn from the husband and remained absent for five years, the person marrying again not knowing his wife to be living within that time, so that, should the jury find that accused's former wife had voluntarily aban­ doned him and remained continually absent for five years before his second marriage, they should acquit, is properly refused, in view of evidence by accused not before his second marriage his son told him that his first wife was living, and asked him to see about it before remarrying. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S.W. 144.

Generally the guilt of one aiding a homicide is measured by the intent of the one actually committing the offense, and it is only when the evidence suggests a different condition of mind or motive that the court need present the theory that accused is to be tried according to the intent with which he may have participated. Cohen v. State, 62 App. 485, 138 S.W. 884.

Where accused, in a prosecution for maintaining a place where gaming was conducted, testified that any gaming conducted therein was without his knowledge and consent, it was not error in refusing a requested charge that, to constitute an assault, with intent to rape, the assault must be made with the specific intent to have intercourse with prosecutrix without her consent, and that if defendant assaulted the prosecutrix, intending to have intercourse with her, provided she would consent, and not intending to have intercourse without her consent, or if her consent was not given, he would not be guilty of the offense charged, is error. Taff v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S.W. 1156.

Where the evidence, in a prosecution for disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship, showed that the people were assembled in the church for worship, that accused saw them there, and that some one threw a jug through the window, an instruction that the jury should acquit if they should believe that accusation the jury not knowing the people were assembled for worship, is properly refused. Haynes v. State, 71 App. 31, 159 S.W. 1059.

16. Cause of death.—It is error to submit, as a predicate for conviction on a prosecution for murder of defendant's child, that he whipped her with a belt; the evidence being that he had not whipped her therewith for two months, and all the evidence excluding the idea that her death was caused thereby. Betts v. State, 57 App. 389, 124 S.W. 424.

18. Force used.—Where the evidence does not raise the issue of excessive force in a prosecution for aggravated assault, it is error to charge thereon. Corley v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S.W. 227.

An instruction in a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory September 12, 1912, that if defendant about that time and subsequent to the 1st day of August, 1909, unlawfully pursued such business, he should be found guilty, is erroneous because it is an instruction of an offense that might have been committed more than three years prior to the time the indictment was presented in court. Todd v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S.W. 220.

20. Insanity or intoxication.—See Wilison's Cr. Forms, 929-932.

See also Penal Code, §§ 39, 41.

Where accused was shown to have been intoxicated at the time of an assault, an instruction on the law of drunkenness is proper. Upchurch v. State (Cr. 2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—28 433 App.) 39 S. W. 371. Where the evidence raises the question, the court should instruct the jury that, "temporarily insane from the use of intoxicating liquor or other drug, the instruction should be given irrespective of the strength or weakness of the testimony. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 589; Hierhalzer v. State, 47 App. 159, 85 S. W. 336; Miller v. State, 52 App. 72, 105 S. W. 562; Lawrence v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 636; Lawrence v. State, 70 App. 506, 172 S. W. 480. But see Wright v. State, 37 App. 627, 40 S. W. 491; Lucas v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 527. See, also, Holloway v. State, 45 App. 302, 77 S. W. 14. But where the evidence does not make the issue the instruction need not be given. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 527. Though there was some evidence tending to show that defendant was intoxicated at the time he committed the offense, but the question of temporary insanity was not raised, such testimony does not require a charge by the court. Vallereal v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 557. Where accused did not claim as a defense that he was insane or delirious at the time of the offense, the evidence of intoxication was held harmless.chedules v. State, 25 S. W. 306, 31 S. W. 306. Where the evidence was not sufficient to show intoxication, the defense of insanity was held not made out. Hinman v. State, 142 S. W. 161. See, also, lignin v. State, 37 App. 393, 40 S. W. 634. Where the evidence did not show an intoxicating liquor or drug to be present in the system of accused, the charge was erroneous. Armstrong v. State, 22 S. W. 633. Where evidence of intoxicating liquor was admitted, but evidence of mental derangement and weakness was lacking, the charge was error because it was not limited to a voluntary intoxication. Cuff v. State, 22 S. W. 635. Where it was shown that accused was, at the time of killing, insane because of ordinary delirium tremens, the charge was erroneous. Morgan v. State, 74 S. W. 352. Where the evidence was insufficient to show intoxication, the charge was erroneous. Knecht v. State, 54 S. W. 242. Where accused was acquitted of an offense of temporary insanity and the error was not prejudicial to the accused, the error was harmless. Rundles v. State, 46 S. W. 266; Brown v. State, 23 S. W. 20; Hemphill v. State, 33 S. W. 430; Watson v. State, 33 S. W. 49; Smith v. State, 16 S. W. 217; Allison v. State, 24 S. W. 217; Jones v. State, 142 S. W. 161; Smith v. State, 20 App. 577, 153 S. W. 871; Cook v. State, 71 App. 542, 160 S. W. 466. Where the evidence showed that accused was insane at all the time, and there was no evidence of delirium tremens, the charge was not erroneous. Foster v. State, 24 S. W. 466. Where evidence was introduced to show the condition of accused at the time of the trial, the charge that accused was temporarily insane was held erroneous. Morgan v. State, 74 S. W. 352. Where the evidence was insufficient to show intoxicating liquor, the charge was erroneous. McCann v. State, 22 S. W. 634. Where the evidence was insufficient to show the accused was temporarily insane, the charge was error. Galloway v. State, 70 App. 577, 153 S. W. 871; Smith v. State, 20 App. 577, 153 S. W. 871; Cowley v. State, 72 App. 173, 161 S. W. 471; Shepherd v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 609.

22. Alibi.—See Willson's Cr. Forms, 925, 926.

In the following cases the charges on alibi were held to be correct and sufficient:

An instruction that alibi is a special plea, independent of a plea of not guilty, is proper.

Young v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 34.

Where, however, the evidence alone was relied on to show that accused killed decedent, and accused proved an alibi, and showed that a third person committed the offense, the failure to charge affirmatively that if another committed the offense there was reasonable doubt thereof, the jury should acquit, is erroneous, though the court charged on reasonable doubt, alibi, and circumstantial evidence.

Wheeler v. State, 56 App. 547, 121 S. W. 166.

In the following cases the charges on alibi were held to be correct and sufficient:

An instruction that alibi is a special plea, independent of a plea of not guilty, is proper.

Young v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 34.

Where, however, the evidence alone was relied on to show that accused killed decedent, and accused proved an alibi, and showed that a third person committed the offense, the failure to charge affirmatively that if another committed the offense there was reasonable doubt thereof, the jury should acquit, is erroneous, though the court charged on reasonable doubt, alibi, and circumstantial evidence.

Wheeler v. State, 56 App. 547, 121 S. W. 166.

In the following cases the charges on alibi were held to be correct and sufficient:

An instruction that alibi is a special plea, independent of a plea of not guilty, is proper.

Young v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 34.

Where, however, the evidence alone was relied on to show that accused killed decedent, and accused proved an alibi, and showed that a third person committed the offense, the failure to charge affirmatively that if another committed the offense there was reasonable doubt thereof, the jury should acquit, is erroneous, though the court charged on reasonable doubt, alibi, and circumstantial evidence.

Wheeler v. State, 56 App. 547, 121 S. W. 166.
struct in regard to it, when there is no evidence raising the issue. Hardin v. State, 4 App. 355; Gose v. State, 6 App. 121; Heard v. State, 9 App. 1; Pharr v. State, 9 App. 129.

241. Possession of stolen property and explanation thereof.—A charge on the explanation of the possession of recently stolen property is properly refused, where no explanation of the stolen property or any part thereof is given by the accused. Grande v. State, 37 App. 51, 38 S. W. 612; Carson v. State, 48 App. 157, 86 S. W. 1911; Spencer v. State, 61 App. 60, 132 S. W. 1049; Holland v. State, 61 App. 261, 134 S. W. 633; Kinkaid v. State, 61 App. 651, 135 S. W. 572; Frazier v. State, 160, 139 S. W. 639; Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 46; Gee v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 246; Stanfield v. State (Cr. App.) 105 S. W. 216. But where accused offers an explanation of his possession the instruction should be given. White v. State, 60 App. 519, 132 S. W. 772; Coleburn v. State, 61 App. 500, 132 S. W. 479; McDavid v. State, 76 App. 145, 108 S. W. 651; see also Dobbs v. State, 57 App. 55, 151 S. W. 882; Jones v. State, 69 App. 455, 132 S. W. 475. The evidence showing the defendant's explanation of his possession of stolen property to be false, and the evidence analogous raising the issue of an honest and legal possession, that issue should also be submitted to the jury. James v. State, 32 App. 599, 24 S. W. 642; Pollard v. State, 33 App. 197, 26 S. W. 70. Testimony of accused that he purchased stolen articles, and of the prosecuting witness that he had left them in his house when he went away, and when he returned found them in possession of accused, who claimed to have purchased them, strongly suggested an issue as to the purchase thereof in good faith, so that it is error not to submit it to the jury by an instruction requested by accused. Wilson v. State, 59 App. 635, 135 S. W. 536. In a prosecution for the burglary of shoes from a box car, a charge should be given that, if the accused did not have possession of their possession of the goods when first accused was reasonable and probably true, then accused should be acquitted, was properly refused in view of the evidence by an officer that, when he was accused with the sacks in his hands, he inquired as to "what papers," and that he then looked into them and found shoes, and, on inquiring as to where they obtained them, they replied "at the smelter," evidence which was not controverted by accused on the stand; but thereby appearing that accused had offered no explanation of his acts. Vargas v. State, 60 App. 196, 131 S. W. 594. In a prosecution for theft, where accused claimed that the heifer in question had been purchased by his daughter from a certain person, a charge that, if the heifer had been purchased, accused should acquit, was properly refused in view of the evidence that accused had offered no explanation of his acts. Vargas v. State, 60 App. 196, 131 S. W. 594. In a prosecution for theft, where accused claimed that the heifer in question had been purchased by his daughter from a certain person, a charge that, if the heifer had been purchased, accused should acquit, was properly refused in view of the evidence that accused had offered no explanation of his acts. Vargas v. State, 60 App. 196, 131 S. W. 594.

25. Rules of evidence in general.—The jury in a felony case should always be instructed that they are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight of the testimony. Barbee v. State, 470, 3 S. W. 806. See also, Jackson v. State, 72 App. 442, 3 S. W. 111. A conviction will be reversed for a failure to instruct that it can only be had on the testimony of two witnesses.
or of one witness supported by evidence, when the facts justify such instruction. Gartman v. State, 16 App. 215.

Remarks by the trial judge to the regular jury panel for the week, telling them in effect that they must forget the standing of the parties, their names, and who they are, but they must try the case according to the evidence and the law, could not be expected to mean that the jury was not to consider the defendant's general reputation as a peaceable and law-abiding man, etc. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 388 S. W. 541.

26. Acts and declarations of conspirators and co-defendants.—Where testimony as to statements made by an alleged co-conspirator has been admitted, the court should instruct the jury that, unless they find that the conspiracy did exist independent of the statements of such alleged co-conspirator, then they should disregard the testimony entirely. Luttrell v. State, 51 App. 495, 21 S. W. 248; Parr v. State (Cr. App.) 495; Brooks v. State, 136 S. W. 93; Casner v. State, 42 App. 118, 57 S. W. 831; Segrest v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 815; Graham v. State (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 711; Renner v. State, 43 App. 347, 65 S. W. 1192; Steele v. State, 43 App. 567, 67 S. W. 228; Kees v. State, 44 App. 541; W. 487, 75 S. W. 477; Wallace v. State, 46 App. 341, 81 S. W. 966; Nelson v. State, 48 Tex. R. 274, 87 S. W. 145; Cooper v. State, 48 App. 608, 89 S. W. 816; Delaney v. State, 48 Tex. R. 591, 90 S. W. 612; Wesley v. State, 66 App. 299, 131 S. W. 1167; Wilson v. State, 70 App. 2, 155 S. W. 212.

Where accused and his father were charged with intent to murder, and both participated in the difficulty with prosecutor, and the state did not prove to the jury that they were either co-conspirators or accomplices, the jury excluded the idea of such agreement, a charge authorizing a conviction on the theory that accused and his father agreed to assault prosecutor is erroneous, as authorizing a conviction on facts not proved. Day v. State, 62 App. 413, 138 S. W. 177.

Where defendant admitted that, when the first altercation between himself and deceased occurred, deceased's father, instead of being in a conspiracy to kill defendant, or do him any harm, caused deceased to leave, and thereafter had a pleasant conversation with defendant, the evidence did not raise the issue of conspiracy to injure defendant, so as to require an instruction on that subject. Tyler v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1086.

Where, in a prosecution for assault to kill, it appeared that defendant and two others conspired to give the prosecutor a whipping, but that they went unarmed, and were joined by another who shot prosecutor without defendant's knowledge or consent, and not in furtherance of any design to which defendant was a party, defendant was entitled to an instruction that if defendant conspired only to assault prosecutor, and he was shot by another without defendant's connivance or consent, defendant would be guilty of no greater offense than that within the original contemplation of the prosecution. Wilson v. State, 70 App. 3, 155 S. W. 245. In a conspiracy, after his sister at night to the home of decedent to lake, by force or stealth, the sister's daughter, who had eloped with and married decedent's son, and accused shot decedent while attempting to enter the home, and he claimed that the killing was accidental, the court, in submitting the issue of negligent homicide, properly charged on conspiracy by defining a conspiracy, and stating that each party to a conspiracy was responsible for any offense committed in furtherance of the common purpose. Chant v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 512.

Where accused, tried for murder on the theory that it was committed by his co-conspirators in pursuance of a common design, testified that the co-conspirators acted independently in killing decedent, and that the killing was not incidental to the common design, failure to submit accused's theory is reversible error. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1160.

27. Accomplices and testimony thereof.—See Willson's Cr. Forms, 928.

State, 34 App. 45, 22 S. W. 15; Clark v. State, 29 App. 175, 23 S. W. 576, 73 Am. St. Rep. 918; Bell v. State, 39 App. 677, 47 S. W. 1019; Johnson v. State, 58 App. 214, 135 S. W. 18; Polk v. State, 121 S. W. 330; Stone v. State, 58 App. 214, 135 S. W. 18; and in Missouri, relying on cases where the evidence is not such as to clearly implicate witnesses for the state in the commission of the offense, the charge need not be given. Dubose v. State, 12 App. 418; Kerrigan v. State, 21 App. 487, 2 S. W. 760; May v. State, 22 App. 555, 3 S. W. 781; Pilmer v. State, 25 App. 495; Trent v. State, 21 App. 251, 29 S. W. 1076; Schubert v. State, 24 S. W. 619; Robbins v. State, 33 App. 572, 28 S. W. 473; Mathis v. State, 33 App. 665, 28 S. W. 556; Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 21 S. W. 475; Stanley v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 292; La Gome v. State, 61 App. 170, 155 S. W. 121; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 355, 83 S. W. 277; Coker v. State, 71 App. 564, 169 S. W. 366. Where the counts in the indictment charging accused as an accomplice and necessary of an accomplice, the proof properly declined to define accomplice and necessary. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345. While the court could charge that where the accused was accomplice, where that fact was concealed, or the evidence clearly showed it, it was erroneous to charge, when there was no evidence whatever, implicated in committing the offense. Snelling v. State (Cr. App.) 123 S. W. 610. While in some cases it may be proper for the court to assume that a particular witness is an accomplice, and so instruct the jury, ordinarily the better and safer practice is to submit the question to the jury itself. Only as to what will constitute an accomplice. Zollcoffer v. State, 16 App. 312. See also, Williams v. State, 23 App. 125, 25 S. W. 629, 28 S. W. 558, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21; Preston v. State, 40 App. 72, 48 S. W. 831; Valls v. State, 60 App. 348, 125 S. W. 103. The evidence conclusively shows without doubt that the witness was an accomplice, the court must submit that question to the jury. Jones v. State, 63 App. 391, 111 S. W. 553. Whether a witness was an accomplice is a question of fact for the jury; when his testimony does not clearly show, but merely indicates, that he might have been an accomplice. Franklin v. State, 63 App. 438, 140 S. W. 1001. To require or warrant an instruction on accomplice testimony, there must be some evidence of a witness's complicity in the crime for which defendant is tried. Moreover, the witness that defendant is accomplice to a crime should not be called for such instruction. Smith v. State, 28 App. 369, 12 S. W. 1104. Where, in a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory, a witness testified that he was under indictment for making the identical sale for which the defendant was convicted, a charge on accomplice testimony should be submitted. Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 263. A charge on accomplice testimony and necessary corroboration is not authorized, where an accomplice was not tested not testify on the trial. Gracy v. State, 57 App. 68, 121 S. W. 766. Where an accomplice refuses to testify the instruction need not be given. Waggner v. State, 35 App. 199, 32 S. W. 896; Wyres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1159. See also, Lawrence v. State, 35 App. 114, 32 S. W. 599. The court need not affirmatively charge that a witness is an accomplice. Dill v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 950. Where the court instructs that a certain witness, who is the only one claimed to be an accomplice, is such, a failure to charge what constitutes an accomplice is not error. Bird v. State, 59 S. W. 355; Windfield v. State, 59 S. W. 348. In many cases, an accomplice, who was a witness for the state was indicted for the offense for which defendant was tried, but that the indictment had been dismissed, without any evidence that it had been dismissed for the purpose of securing his testimony, or that he was acting in any way with defendant in the commission of the offense, does not require the court to instruct the jury on the law relating to the testimony of an accomplice. Castillo v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 788. In a trial for being an accomplice to theft of a horse. It is not necessary to charge on the necessity for corroboration of his accomplice in another theft. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 556. On trial for abortion when the injured female testifies the court is not necessarily required to instruct on the law of accomplice. Willingham v. State, 33 App. 114, 25 S. W. 345. When testimony as to confessed accomplice the court should instruct the jury that the corroborative evidence must tend to connect defendant with the crime. Conway v. State, 33 App. 267, 26 S. W. 401. Where an accomplice is a witness for defendant, the court should charge on the necessity of corroboration. Josef v. State, 40 App. 14, 41 S. W. 1067. The charge on accomplice testimony should include all witnesses connected with the transaction, and if there is a doubt as to whether a witness is so connected the issue should be submitted to the jury. Powell v. State, 42 App. 12, 27 S. W. 95. In the following cases it was held that the instruction on accomplice testimony should have been given. Kelly v. State, 1 App. 628; Watson v. State, 9 App. 237; Snelling v. State, 13 App. 487; Coffelt v. State, 19 App. 487; Coten v. State, 22 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Hamilton v. State, 26 App. 266, 9 S. W. 687; Hines v. State, 27 App. 104, 30 S. W. 448; Shulze v. State, 28 App. 316, 12 S. W. 1054; Kelley v. State, 34 App. 412, 31 S. W. 174; Trueove v. State, 44 App. 386, 71 S. W. 601; Sapp v. State, 45 App. 246; Clark v. State, 46 S. W. 704, 70 S. W. 284, 190 Am. St. Rep. 953; Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 149.
In the following cases it was held that the instruction on accomplice testimony was error because the v. in instructing the jury to disregard the confession if they believe the theory which renders it inadmissible. Ruines v. State, 33 App. 294, 26 S. W. 268; Sparks v. State, 34 App. 86, 29 S. W. 264. See, also, Zwicker v. State, 31 S. W. 633. Where the defendant made voluntarily the court should instruct the jury to disregard it, if they believe that it was not voluntary. Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387; Paris v. State, 35 App. 82, 31 S. W. 855; Sullivan v. State, 49 App. 633, 51 S. W. 375; Bailey v. State, 43 App. 289, 29 S. W. 900; Johnson v. State, 44 App. 433, 88 S. W. 722. But where a proper predicate has been laid, and there is no evidence impeaching the predicate, the charge need not be given. Williams v. State, 37 App. 147, 28 S. W. 999. And where there is no evidence as to whether or not the confession was voluntarily made the charge should not be given. Pinckard v. State, 62 App. 602, 138 S. W. 691; Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 953. When a witness testifying to an alibi for accused, and not indicted himself, is attempted to be impeached by putting in evidence a confession of his participation in the crime, it is not necessary that the confession should not be considered improper because it would be necessary if the confession were accused's. Wingate v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1675.

Where there are no statements in a confession tending to show innocence, an instruction that such statements are presumed to be true, etc., is properly refused. McDonald v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1061; Lonn v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 305, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844; Anderson v. State, 71 App. 27, 159 S. W. 847. Where the state relies for conviction only upon a confession which contains exculpatory matters, the court should charge that the state must prove such matters to be false in order to authorize a conviction based upon the confession, but need not so charge where the state does not rely solely upon the confession. Cook v. State, 71 App. 852, 169 S. W. 465; Belcher v. State, 71 App. 464, 161 S. W. 159. Where the evidence consists almost entirely of confessions of accused, which contain statements in his favor not proved to be false, it is error to refuse to instruct that the state is bound by such statements, unless they are shown by the evidence to be untrue. Jones v. State, 43 App. 719, 96 S. W. 715. See further as to necessity of instructions as to binding effect on state of statements in confessions. Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 762; Trevenio v. State, 44 App. 207, 57 S. W. 1162; Million v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 348; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 600. Where there is abundant testimony outside an alleged confession, the jury need not be charged that they can not convict on confessions alone. Willard v. State, 37 App. 286, 11 S. W. 453, 11 Am. St. Rep. 197; Slade v. State, 39 App. 381, 16 S. W. 265; Franke v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 1013; Tidwell v. State, 40 App. 38, 47 S. W. 469 (rehearing denied 48 S. W. 184); Bailey v. State, 42 App. 289, 59 S. W. 900; Nelson v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 95; Murphy v. State, 43 App. 515, 67 S. W. 168; Ellington v. State, 48 App. 160, 87 S. W. 153; Griffin v. State, 49 App. 448, 93 S. W. 712. The court, in admitting the confession, should charge the jury fully as to their duty to consider or reject it, and in this connection should charge on the issue of defendant's sanity and its effect as to their consideration of the confession. Berry v. State. An instruction that the state is bound by its own confession unless it is corroborated by other evidence, and whether there is such evidence is for the jury, is sufficient, in the absence of a request for special instructions. Attaway v. State, 35 App. 168, 34 S. W. 112. A charge that where the state puts a confession in evidence, the whole of it is to be taken together, and the state bound by it, unless it is shown to be untrue in whole or in part, is in proper form. McKinney v. State, 48 App. 402, 58 S. W. 1012. Where the jury have been instructed not to consider a confession unless they believe voluntarily made, the failure to add to an instruction not to consider the confession if they believed that it was induced by duress, threats, or coercion, the words "or other improper influence," is not error. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 551. An instruction that unless the statements were induced by threats or promises, and not induced by the court to consider them in the case, is sufficient though the word freely was not used in the charge. Cross v. State (Cr. App.) 101 S. W. 213, 214. Where the state introduced evidence of accused's statements immediately after the killing and of other charge that declarations, made just after the killing, should be considered together, and that the state was bound thereby, is not improper as allowing the jury to consider together the statements made just after the death with those made a few hours later, which were not res gestae. Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 939.

An instruction that a confession should be considered in evidence if the defendant therein had made statements that were otherwise found to be true is improper, where the evidence shows no fact connected with the crime that was discovered through the confession. Gentry v. State, the confession of the accused. Van v. State, 160, 5 S. W. 493. And see Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 363; Ewing v. State, 29 App. 434, 16 S. W. 155.

In the following cases the charges on confessions were held proper and suffi-
It is proper not to charge on the law of confessions when there is no proof that a confession was made. Fox v. State, 57 S. W. 157; Johnson v. State, 57 App. 505, 123 S. W. 661.

It is error to instruct the jury that a material allegation of the indictment is admitted by counsel for the defendant. No such admissions by a defendant's counsel are evidence against him, and are not a proper matter for the consideration of the jury. Clay v. State, 4 App. 515.

Accused is not entitled to a charge on the competency of a confession elicited by himself on cross-examination of the state's witnesses, without objection by the state. Luna v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 636.

The fact that accused conveys the confession made by him, does not require an instruction that if he did not admit the taking, the confession should be disregarded. Whitehead v. State, 49 App. 123, 90 S. W. 876.

A requested instruction on the effect of a confession of the accused is properly refused where the confession was not taken at the time and place mentioned therein. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 672.

The statement of defendant that he was not at the place of the crime at the time of its commission, introduced with evidence of its falsity, being entirely exculpatory, does not call for a charge on admission or confessions. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1082.

Where the admissibility of testimony depends on defendant having made a certain statement, as to which the evidence is conflicting, the jury should be instructed that, unless they find he did make it, they should not consider such testimony. Kaufman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 133.

Where a written statement as to the crime made by one of accused's witnesses was introduced in evidence, although the witness was impeached by proof of the falsity of his testimony that he did not sign it, the court need not charge that the jury should not consider the statement. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 342.

In a prosecution for homicide, where the state introduced in evidence statements made by accused at the time he was arrested, accused, though the record would amply support a finding that his exculpatory statement was false, is entitled to have the jury charged that, unless the state show the falsity of such statement, he should be acquitted. Cline v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 342.

29. Purpose and effect of evidence.—Evidence of flight after a preliminary examination having been admitted, it is not necessary to charge with reference to the purpose in admitting it. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 375.

Failure of the court to limit the effect of testimony not admitted for any particular purpose is not error. Neal v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 866.

The testimony of expert witnesses need not be limited. Turner v. State, 48 App. 585, 59 S. W. 375.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, a witness testified that after the killing accused dragged the body of deceased away from the place of the homicide, it is not necessary for the court in its instructions to limit the effect of such testimony. Canon v. State, 59 App. 395, 128 S. W. 141.

Whether there was a conflict in the evidence on the issue as to whether accused had attempted to induce a witness to give false testimony, the court should control in its charge the purpose for which evidence was admitted, to show that accused had tried to induce the giving of false testimony. Day v. State, 62 App. 448, 138 S. W. 120.

A requested charge, in a prosecution for habitually associating with prostitutes, that the jury should only consider such testimony as bore upon accused's status at the time the complaint was filed, is properly refused as inapplicable, where the evidence established but one status during the time to which the testimony related, which was that charged in the information. Lingenfelter v. State (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 981.

In a trial for homicide, the district clerk of the county in which accused was tried attached his record which stated: "This is a case wherein Albert Bazanno is the defendant. It is found on page 58 of Book G, which reads as follows: 'State of Texas v. Albert Bazanno. Orange County. July 1st, 1905,' etc. For copy of said record, see exhibit attached hereto, marked 'A.' and made a part of this record." In addition to the fact that accused had been in an asylum for the insane and had been discharged. Held not such evidence of a judgment of insanity rendered against the accused as to require the court to charge the jury with respect to the effect of the judgment. Bazanno v. State, 60 App. 607, 132 S. W. 777.

Where, in a trial for shooting at an officer, it developed on cross-examination by defendant that on a prior occasion the officer shot his horse from under him, the court did not err in failing to limit the effect of such testimony. Boyd v. State (Cr. App.) 128 S. W. 612.

Where evidence is admissible, a requested instruction, excluding the jury from considering it for any purpose as against defendant is properly refused. Qualls v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 202.

While the evidence of the first offense of rape on a girl under 15 should have been stricken, in a prosecution in which the state elected to rely on a second offense, the court should have instructed the jury that the defendant was not on trial for the offense committed on the former date. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 729.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, it appeared that prosecutor left the state company with two men, and the state claimed that this was done to prevent her testifying against accused, and that she was induced by others and returned to Texas, but defendant denied all knowledge of her flight from the state, the court should have charged, at his request, that, if such flight was not done at defendant's suggestion, solicitation, or connivance, it should not be considered against him for any purpose. Where, shortly after the alleged offense, accused left the state with a view to attending school elsewhere at his mother's request or command, and there was evidence that at this time he had no knowledge that an indictment had been returned against him or that process had been served, the court should have charged, at his request, that, if he relied on such testimony when he left the state, the fact of his leaving could not be considered against him at all. Caples v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 739.

Where evidence that a witness had made prior statements out of court different from his testimony in court is admitted, not for the purpose of establishing the verity of the previous statements, but to discredit the witness' testimony in court, it is considered as to the purpose for which it was admitted. Hernandez v. State, 1 App. 423; Rogers v. State, 26 App. 404, 9 S. W. 783; Foster v. State, 28 App. 45, 11 S. W. 832; Thompson v. State, 29 App. 208, 15 S. W. 296; Dickey v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 110; Gatlion v. State, 40 App. 118, 19 S. W. 87; Winn v. State, 42 App. 911; Guinn v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 276; Supp v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 456; Dunek v. State, 48 App. 519, 89 S. W. 271; Keith v. State, 50 App. 63, 94 S. W. 1044; Phillips v. State, 50 App. 127, 94 S. W. 1061; Benjamin v. State, 57 App. 291, 122 S. W. 542; Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 154 App. 211; Lott v. State, 79 A. 75, 73 S. W. 1061; 160 S. W. 1184; Hiles v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 717. But see Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 796. And this rule applies to evidence of statements made before a grand jury. Finley v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 1015; McGill v. State, 60 App. 513, 122 S. W. 941; Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 827. But see Cain v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 117. Where evidence of prior statements or former testimony of a witness is introduced for the sole purpose of showing the falsity of his testimony given in the trial of a cause, a charge that such evidence is admitted, not for the purpose of proving what the witness swears to at the trial is untrue, but to show his unworthiness of belief, is bad. Howard v. State, 25 App. 686, 8 S. W. 929; Cline v. State, 33 App. 482, 27 S. W. 125; Winn v. State, 34 App. 77, 26 S. W. 897; Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655 Where the state in cross-examining several witnesses asked them if they had not testified directly on a former trial, but did not follow up the evidence by offering any testimony to impeach them, the court is not required to charge that such testimony could not be considered by the jury in weighing Fug's testimony v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 546. Where there is no material difference in the statements of defendant's witness and the state's witness, whose testimony was introduced to contradict the evidence of defendant's witness, an instruction limiting such contrary evidence to unnecessary. Messingill v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 212. Where accused, testifying in her own behalf, is cross-examined as to facts affecting her credibility, failure to limit the purpose for which the evidence was received is not error. Brittain v. State, 47 App. 597, 85 S. W. 278. Where the court fails to limit the impeaching testimony of certain state's witnesses, having limited such testimony as to other such witnesses, such failure is error. Borden v. State, 42 App. 646, 62 S. W. 1064. Where the mother of accused was a material witness for both sides was not connected with the accused's brother and a friend, an instruction, that the evidence that accused's brother and friend had been convicted of simple assaults on decedent was admitted to enable the jury to pass on the credibility of accused's brother and friend and the mother as witnesses, is erroneous. Hardin v. State, 57 App. 401, 123 S. W. 613. In a prosecution for homicide growing out of the alleged undue intimacy of deceased with defendant's wife, where the testimony only raised a suspicion as to defendant's alleged intimacy with the wife of another, it is error for the court in limiting impeaching testimony to assume that defendant was guilty in such matter. Ballard v. State, 71 App. 587, 160 S. W. 716.

In a prosecution for homicide, where some of the state's witnesses gave testimony purporting, by accused, different from that at trial, a charge that the jury might consider the contradiction, which did not specifically name the witnesses, is not improper for that reason. Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 929. The court need not give special instructions relative to the impeachment of one witness by another, where such witnesses merely contradicted each other in their original testimony as to certain facts. Kipper v. State, 45 App. 377, 77 S. W. 611.

A statement by the judge made on the admission of impeaching evidence limiting its scope is not equivalent to an instruction to that effect, and the failure to give such instruction is ground for reversal. Thompson v. State, 29 App. 208, 15 S. W. 206. Where evidence is introduced to impeach a witness, a charge that impeaching evidence is to be considered for the sole purpose of enabling the jury to judge of the weight to be given the testimony of the witness impeached, and failing to state that it is to be considered in determining the witness' credibility, is erroneous. Dean v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 803; Elkins v. State, 48 App. 205, 87 S. W. 149; Pratt v. State, 50 App. 227, 96 S. W. 6; Coffman v. State, 62 App. 88, 138 S. W. 778. Where evidence impeaching witnesses for contradictory statements, instructions that the testimony of the impeaching witnesses could only be considered to affect the credibility of the witnesses impeached, that the testimony of contradictory statements could be considered only to affect the credibility of the witnesses and for no other purpose, error. And for the reasons that the jury must determine whether the impeaching statements were made and if made to consider them only as impeaching the witnesses, Pratt v. State, 59 App. 635, 125 S. W. 354. And see Gentry v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 655. Where the court, in limiting the application of testimony to the impeachment of witnesses, charged that such evidence was admitted, "not for the purpose of affecting the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but only admitted for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witnesses," such instruction is properly worded. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 533.

32. — Limiting effect of evidence competent only as against one of several defendants.—In a trial of two joint defendants, if a confession or declaration of one of them is admitted, the jury must be instructed to consider it only as against him. State v. McCall, 24 App. 141, 3 S. W. 333; Rice v. State, 38 S. W. 669; Short v. State (Cr. App.), 29 S. W. 1672. See also as to threats made by one of two joint defendants. Barron v. State, 23 App. 462, 5 S. W. 237. When acts and declarations of a principal tending to criminate an accomplice are admitted in evidence, the court should instruct the evidence can only be considered in reference to the guilt of the principal. Armstrong v. State, 33 App. 417, 26 S. W. 829. Evidence admissible to show the guilt of a principal, introduced in the trial of an accomplice or accessory, should be limited to that purpose. Wood v. Thomas v. State, 43 App. 241; Thomas v. State, 43 App. 240, 62 S. W. 919, 96 Am. St. Rep. 824. Where, on a trial of two defendants, the testimony of one of them given at their former trial was received in evidence without objection, it is proper to charge that such testimony could not be considered for any purpose as to the codefendant. Jones v. State, 64 App. 518, 143 S. W. 621.

33. — Limiting proof of other offense.—Where evidence is introduced tending to show an independent offense by defendant, or a conviction of another offense, it is error for the court to neglect to charge the jury to the limiting effect of the evidence of such independent offense. Long v. State, 11 App. 581; Tyler v. State, 13 App. 205; McCall v. State, 14 App. 353; Alexander v. State, 21 App. 496, 17 S. W. 159, 57 Am. Rep. 617; Harwell v. State, 22 App. 254, 2 S. W. 394; Harvey v. State, 57 App. 5, 121 S. W. 501, 136 Am. St. Rep. 971; Goobly v. State, 59 App. 628, 129 S. W. 624; Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 389; Dettie v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 677; Gradington v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 210. As to what is a separate offense, see the cases cited in 32. Now that evidence may be given of other offenses to enhance the criminal tendency of the defendant, and other offenses may be tried on a separate theory from that of the principal offense, it is necessary for the court to charge limiting the purpose for which such evidence is admissible. Carroll v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 340; Bulley v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 259. And see Hudspeth v. State, 23 App. 624; Kennedy v. State, 29 App. 1, 13 S. W. 993; Leapier v. State, 29 App. 63, 14 S. W. 398; Moseley v. State, 36 App. 578, 37 S. W. 736, 38 S. W. 197; Pilot v. State, 38 App. 153, 43 S. W. 112, 1024; Hamblin v. State, 41 App. 135, 50 S. W. 1019, 51 S. W. 1111; Brown v. W. 159; Franklin v. State (Cr. App.) 87 S. V. P. 375; Price v. State, 49 App. 569, 94 S. W. 1024; Gilbert v. State, 57 App. 85, 121 S. W. 1126. And where accused is not connected with the commission of the commission of such other offense the charge is unnecessary. Brown v. State, 41 App. 252, 53 S. W. 886. The rule that when a defendant takes the stand as a witness, and the state proves other indictments against him, a failure to charge as to the object of such evidence is reversible error, does not apply to proof of former indictments of a witness who is not a defendant. Matkins v. State, 35 App. 686, 28 S. W. 358; Eeletor v. State, 35 App. 133, 32 S. W. 366. Where, in a prosecution for passing a forged check or draft, the court properly and fully limited the use of evidence of the finding of two other forged checks in defendant's possession when arrested, and told the jury that they were not evidence of the finding beyond a reasonable doubt that such other checks were forgeries, and were found in defendant's possession, and that he knew them to be forgeries, then they could consider such testimony only to aid them, if it did, in passing on the identity of defendant, his system and methods, if any, in passing the check of which he was on trial, there was no error in omitting to charge on testimony of a witness when arrested that he had won the forged checks which were found on his person. Dugat v. State, 22 App. 219, 169 S. W. 376. Instructing the jury to regard the evidence of other crimes for no purpose whatever that of affecting defendant's credibility properly limits it. Roberts v. State, 44 App. 267, 70 S. W. 432.

34. Determination of sufficiency of evidence in general.—It is the duty of the trial judge to measure his charge by the evidence adduced, and give instructions to the jury as to every legitimate deduction to be drawn from the evidence; but when he has done this the law's demands are satisfied. Smith v. State, 15 App. 139.

A requested instruction that the state is required to prove its case by positive evidence is properly refused. Dodd v. State (Cr. App.) 62 S. W. 516.

To a prosecution for an attempt to bribe an officer, or for an offense of an alleged other attempt to bribe a prospective juror was offered to prove intent, it is error for the court to omit the charge that, before the jury should consider such evidence, they must find the same to be true, and to constitute an offense. Carden v. State, 136 S. W. 506. In a prosecution for an instruction that accused could not be found guilty upon the testimony of prosecutrix unless the jury believed her testimony was true and that it "showed, or tended to show," that accused is guilty as charged is erroneous, for the jury should be required to find that the evidence of the prosecutrix was true and showed the guilt of accused, Blulck v. State, 72 App. 375, 162 S. W. 865.

Where, on a trial for seduction, prosecutrix fixed the time of the promise of marriage and accompanying act of intercourse as in April, 1908, and the evidence showed that in the early part of 1908 accused married another woman, and that while in another town he wrote letters to prosecutrix containing expressions of endearment, and telling her that when he obtained a divorce from his wife he would marry her, and that on his return he renewed the illicit relations with prosecutrix, a charge that a conviction could not be based on a promise of marriage made by a married man to a single woman, and that, unless the letters and the evidence of acts and intercourse, and other evidence by which his relations explained the relations of the parties at the time of the first act, they should not be considered, is erroneous for failing to specifically state how such facts could explain the relations of the parties. Humphrey v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 641.

In no murder, a neighbor who had been with the deceased, a neighbor who on her death testified that she had stated on Saturday that medicine could do her no good: that she was all kicked to pieces. Later a physician testified that the wife had begun to be delirious or irrational on Thursday or Friday. The court gave defendant's counsel his charge, and a number of special charges were prepared covering every one of the exceptions or objections to the general charge, but none on the question whether testimony of the neighbor should be considered by the jury. Held that, although it would have been proper for the court to have considered that such testimony should not be considered unless the jury found that the deceased was rational when she made the declaration, nevertheless the neighbor being very positive that deceased was sane and conscious of approaching death, and the doctor not having been present and not being very positive as to the exact time when deceased became irrational, in the absence of any objection or special charge of defendants, the failure of the court to instruct on the point was not reversible error. Paschal v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1067.

35. Excluding evidence from consideration.—A charge excluding from the jury the very fact in issue is erroneous. Sinclair v. State, 45 App. 497, 77 S. W. 621.

Requested charges requiring the court to single out certain evidence and by a process of reasoning eliminate it from the jury's consideration were properly refused. Zenas v. State, 59 App. 289, 125 S. W. 418.

Where testimony is erroneously admitted the court should direct the jury to disregard it. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 105; Wilson v. State, 41 App. 115, 51 S. W. 916; Hollins v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 594; Bradley v. State, 69 S. W. 396; State v. State (C. Cr. S.) 132 S. W. 484; Owen v. State (St. S.) It is not good practice to allow the admission of improper testimony and then instruct the jury to disregard it. The better practice would be to have the jury retire, let the witness give the whole of the testimony, and then direct what shall be admissible. State v. State, 58 App. 261, 125 S. W. 405.

Where testimony is admitted on a predicate of issuable facts, the court should submit it to the jury, with an instruction that, if they believe the predicate, they may consider the testimony based upon it, while, if they fail to believe it, they shall disregard such testimony. Currough v. State, 49 App. 452, 93 S. W. 788.

Where the court charges the jury to disregard certain evidence it should sufficiently indicate the evidence to be disregarded. Hall v. State, 43 App. 472, 65 S. W. 783. Defendant in a criminal prosecution may request the court to withdraw evidence from the jury, even after the evidence has been argued. Cox v. State, 63 App. 494, 110 S. W. 445.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, the error in requiring defendant to testify that he had previously been convicted of violating the local option law is not cured by an instruction, given at the request of the state, after the argument was over and the charge given, withdrawing this evidence from the consideration of the jury, as the state had already received the full benefit of the testimony of the argument. Haney v. State, 57 App. 153, 84 S. W. 222.

In a prosecution for theft of horses shipped by accused, it is not error to refuse to charge excluding all testimony as to the contents of the bill of lading, including the name of shipper, "sought to be introduced in evidence." Crane v. State, 57 App. 472, 129 S. W. 242.

In a murder trial, it is proper to refuse to instruct that, if one of the first three shots fired by accused was fatal, the firing of subsequent shots was immaterial in sustaining accused's guilt. Decker v. State, 60 S. W. 560.

Where no objection was made to questions asked by the county attorney during the trial, the court did not err in refusing a special charge that the jury should not consider the questions as any evidence of defendant's guilt. Swafford v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 225.

Bonner v. State, 58 App. 195, 125 S. W. 22; Broadmax v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1168; W. 179, 180 S. W. 98; Harris v. State, 58 S. W. 125. Especially where accused has requested the charge. Bonner v. State, 58 App. 195, 125 S. W. 22. And where one fact is proved from which another fact is to be inferred, the charge must be given. Gentry v. State, 41 App. 497, 58 S. W. 68. Where the circumstantial evidence should be given, that evidence depends on circumstantial evidence as to the original taking. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 791. Where, in a prosecution for the theft of two hogs, accused's defense was that he took up a number of hogs that had been getting in his pen, and all went out but two, which he subsequently concluded to be hog and appropriate, and the state's case depended mainly on circumstantial evidence, a charge thereon should be given. Veesly v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 274. Where, on the theory that the evidence showed the defendant had entered the money in a drawer in an office, which was locked, that accused asked for the key to the office to procure clothing therein, that prosecutor gave him a bunch of keys containing the key to the office and to the drawer, that accused left on the next train after going into the office, that prosecutor on going into the office missed the money, a ragged $5 bill, that he wired the conductor of the train on which the accused was riding, and that the conductor secured a ragged $5 bill from accused, identified by prosecutor, a charge on circumstantial evidence is warranted. Sugis v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 186. Where accused was indicted in three counts, the first for larceny, and the third for stealing the written property, the second count being quashed, and the evidence to support the other two being circumstantial, and the court charged on circumstantial evidence as to the first count, and then instructed that, if the jury found defendant not guilty on the first count, they might consider the third, and thereupon defined the offense of concealing and receiving stolen property, but gave no charge on circumstantial evidence as affecting such failure, and the defense was erroneous in attempting to charge the court that there was direct evidence of guilt of the offense of receiving. Rupe v. State, 57 App. 688, 124 S. W. 655.

Where the evidence in a prosecution for violating the local option law showed that a person went into accused's place of business and asked for "cheese," that accused took the money and went into another room, and that upon his return the other party went into that room and found a bottle of whisky wrapped in paper, a charge concerning circumstantial evidence is justified. Columbus v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 189. Where there was no positive testimony of a bottle of liquor in violation of the prohibition law, and there was positive testimony of a gift, and the state sought to overcome it by circumstantial evidence, the court must, on the request of the accused, submit the issues of sale or gift and charge on circumstantial evidence. Eby v. State, 71 App. 211, 158 S. W. 906.

Where all the evidence in relation to the breaking and entering is circumstantial, a charge on circumstantial evidence should be given, and the fact that accused denied guilt of the theft of a bill, which plea is introduced in evidence, does not dispense with the necessity of the charge on circumstantial evidence. Beason v. State, 43 App. 442, 67 S. W. 96, 69 L. R. A. 126.

On a trial for robbery, where the prosecuting witness identified accused as the thief, a requested instruction to disregard the court's remark, in the presence of the jury, that he could not charge on circumstantial evidence, because there was an issue, should have been given; the remark being improper and calculated to impress the jury that the testimony of the prosecuting witness was true and his identification sufficient to justify a conviction. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 1190.

Where, in a prosecution for forgery in raising the amount of a check, the prosecuting witness testified that the check called for $8.25 when he signed and delivered it, and that when it came back to his hands, after having been cashed, it called for $125, accused is entitled to a charge on circumstantial evidence, the connection with the altering being merely circumstantial. Dysart v. State, 46 App. 52, 78 S. W. 534.

Where it appeared in a prosecution for murder that there had been no difficulty between defendant and deceased, that deceased approached a crowd, and that defendant in a general fight struck twice at deceased, but it was not shown who the others in the fight were or what kind of an instrument made the wound, or how the fighting came about, a failure to submit a charge on circumstantial evidence is error. Huddleston v. State, 70 App. 260, 105 S. W. 1168.

Where an issue whether defendant advised or agreed to the commission of an offense is raised, and this is shown by circumstantial evidence alone, it is proper for the court to charge on circumstantial evidence on that particular issue. Bunnin v. State, 61 App. 616, 135 S. W. 1175; And see Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 171; Blackshear v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 564.

Where, in a larceny case, accused relies on a claim of ownership, a charge on circumstantial evidence should be given. Smith v. State, 43 App. 117, not be 244, 136 S. W. 481. Where, in a prosecution for theft of a deed, a witness testified that he saw accused pick up a paper at the place where the deed was placed and take it with him, and the evidence showed that the deed stolen was filed for record, and that accused saw the same deed for the same land, a request for a charge on circumstantial evidence is properly refused. Roberts v. State, 61 App. 434, 135 S. W. 144. Testimony, in a trial for theft of an estray horse, that accused bought the horse off the range, and took a bill of sale for it, and that he took the bill and disposed of it as his own, does not present a case of circumstantial evidence, requiring a charge thereon. Baxter v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 87.

Where, in a prosecution for larceny of diamond rings, the only conflict in the testimony was authorized by the defendant was witnessed to procure them as he did, a charge on circumstantial evidence need not be given. Green v. State, 71 App. 9, 158 S. W. 268. On a trial for theft, testimony that, while the prosecuting witness was in bed, accused took his pocketbook from his pants, which were on the bed, justified the refusal of the instruction on circumstantial evidence. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 345.

In a prosecution for homicide, where dying declarations of deceased, as well as the testimony of eyewitnesses, showed that accused committed the crime, there was no charge on circumstantial evidence. Cross v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 818. Where the act of the killing by three persons and of accused conspiring with them was shown by positive testimony, and a witness testified to accused's presence at the time of the killing, the refusal to charge on circumstantial evidence is proper. Bass v. State, 59 App. 156, 127 S. W. 1029. Where the evidence for the state and for accused all showed that accused fired the fatal shot, an instruction on circumstantial evidence is unnecessary, even though it was the theory that accused, in seeking the difficulty, had conspired with another. Coulter v. State, 72 App. 602, 162 S. W. 585. Where all were together pursuant to a common unlawful design, all were guilty, regardless of who fired the fatal shot and hence an instruction on circumstantial evidence is not warranted. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 978.

In a prosecution for disturbing a religious congregation where numbers of witnesses testified that they saw accused within a few feet of a window, riding by, and just at that time a jug was thrown in, a charge on circumstantial evidence is unnecessary. Laird v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 260.

37. — Misdemeanor cases.—Failure to charge on circumstantial evidence in a misdemeanor case is not reversible error, unless a requested instruction on the subject was refused and excepted reserved. Lucido v. State, 35 App. 326, 33 S. W. 254; Martin v. State, 32 App. 241, 24 S. W. 512.

That, accused, charged with burglarizing an old house, in which corn was stored, the doors of which were held closed by rocks, sticks, etc., and the windows gone, pleaded guilty to the theft of the corn, is not sufficient to make the charge of burglary a case of positive evidence, as the corn may have been stolen and no burglary committed. Beason v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 633.

A witness testified that he saw a shot fired and decedent fall, and that accused fired the shot, and other witnesses showed that decedent was shot in the back, and that accused was in the rear of him, while the only other person who fired shots on the occasion of the killing was in front of decedent, there was direct testimony that accused fired the fatal shot, and an instruction on circumstantial evidence is not required. Egbert v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 560.

40. — Testimony of accomplices.—Where the evidence against accused is positive, although it is that of an accomplice, a charge on circumstantial evidence is not necessary. Kidwell v. State, 35 App. 264, 33 S. W. 342; Rice v. State, 39 App. 9, 49 S. W. 937; Harris v. State, 40 App. 8, 49 S. W. 937; Tate v. State, 49 App. 445, 94 S. W. 231; Martin v. State, 61 App. 29, 133 S. W. 881; Johnson v. State, 72 App. 387, 162 S. W. 512.

41. — Venue.—The court is not required to charge on wholly circumstantial evidence as to venue. Steadham v. State, 40 App. 43, 48 S. W. 177; Frye v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 222.
43. Identity of accused.—When there is direct evidence showing that accused is the person who committed the crime, the charge on circumstantial evidence is not required. Given v. State, 35 App. 562, 34 S. W. 626; Jenkins v. State, 49 App. 457, 58 S. W. 726, 122 Am. St. Rep. 315; Vela v. State, 62 App. 361, 137 S. W. 1289; Williams v. State, 88 App. 348, 106 S. W. 1256; Coop v. State, 146 S. W. 715; Robinson v. 229, 59 Pullen who are showing circumstantial evidence. Hernandez v. State, 71 App. 21, 159 S. W. 1603; Barrow v. State, 71 App. 543, 160 S. W. 455; Herrera v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 719; Terrell v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1089. Want of exact certainty in the identification of accused as the thief, witness testifying that he had not seen him since the theft, five years before, but that he believed him to be the same man, does not call for a charge on circumstantial evidence. Monk v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1101. Statements of deceased immediately after the occurrence and in contemplation of death, positively identifying defendant as the guilty party, whether rendered as declaratory or restated, render a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary. Hernandez v. State, 47 App. 29, 81 S. W. 1210.

44. Possession of property and explanation thereof.—Where there is no direct evidence of the taking, in a prosecution for theft, and possession of the property taken is to have been taken in possession, an instruction on circumstantial evidence should be given. Taylor v. State, 27 App. 463, 11 S. W. 462; Lee v. State, 27 App. 475, 11 S. W. 483; Hyde v. State, 31 App. 401, 20 S. W. 764; Robertson v. State, 33 App. 396, 26 S. W. 508; Hodges v. State, 41 App. 229, 54 S. W. 495; Wallace v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 110; Vela v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 907; Armstead v. State, 48 App. 204, 87 S. W. 524. Other illustrations of when charge is necessary, see York v. State, 42 App. 526, 61 S. W. 526; Hanks v. State, 45 App. 133, 74 S. W. 544; Guerrero v. State, 46 App. 445, 88 S. W. 1001. When charge is not necessary, see Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1103; Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 531; Ballard v. State, 71 App. 168, 100 S. W. 53; Law v. State, 71 App. 179, 100 S. W. 93; but where the property is found in accused's possession and is confessed to be his it is necessary to charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary. Wrigit v. State, 63 App. 664, 141 S. W. 228.

45. Sufficiency of charge.—There is no prescribed formula for a charge on circumstantial evidence, the charge being sufficient if the ideas conveyed are correct, and are so expressed as to be comprehended by the jury. Brown v. State, 25 Tex. 152; Rye v. State, 8 App. 152; Sinna v. State, 8 App. 229; Loggins v. State, 8 App. 473; Hulbry v. State, 8 App. 557; Hardin v. State, 8 App. 652; Taylor v. State, 9 App. 109; Chittister v. State, 33 App. 635, 28 S. W. 683; Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 105 S. W. 929. It is not erroneous merely because it does not follow approved forms. Galloway v. State, 44 App. 239, 70 S. W. 211. But the trial court should not charge charges which have been approved by the appellate court. Melver v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 50. It need not state that the circumstantial evidence is sufficient; it need only state that the evidence as a whole is sufficient to establish the guilt of accused must be proved by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and the facts and circumstances proved should not only be consistent with the guilt of the accused, but inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis or conclusion than that of his guilt, and producing in the minds of the jury a reasonable certainty that it is proved and moral certainty of the offense. Reeseman v. State, 50 App. 430, 128 S. W. 1126. For other cases holding that charges on circumstantial evidence similar to the one above stated were sufficient, see Gallaher v. State, 28 App. 247, 12 S. W. 1057; Good v. State, 59 App. 576, 89 S. W. 167; Loggins v. State, 44 App. 324, 24 S. W. 583; Williams v. State, 22 App. 579, 47 S. W. 706; Bennett v. State, 39 App. 639, 48 S. W. 61; Areola v. State, 48 App. 51, 48 S. W. 195; Galloway v. State, 44 App. 239, 70 S. W. 211; Mas v. State, 49 App. 306, 128 S. W. 394; Wheeler v. State, 61 App. 567, 136 S. W. 93; Hardin v. State, 74 S. W. 1074; McGe v. State (Cr. App.) 105 S. W. 155; Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 939. In a case where the evidence is circumstantial, and there is no question that the offense was committed, a charge that the evidence is consistent with each other and with the guilt of the accused, and, taken together, must be of a conclusive nature, producing a reasonable and moral certainty that defendant, and "no other person committed the offense charged." is sufficient. Crow v. State, 37 App. 295, 39 S. W. 574. See also, Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 593; Crutchfield v. State, 7 App. 65; Irvin v. State, 7 App. 109; Smith v. State, 8 App. 111; Bouldin v. State, 8 App. 322; Hubby v. State, 8 App. 657; Harrison v. State, 9 App. 467; Early v. State, 9 App. 476; Campbell v. State, 10 App. 560; Post v. State, 10 App. 573; Bryant v. State, 16 App. 856; Nolin v. State, 17 App. 285; Hill v. State, 37 App. 415, 35 S. W. 660; Baldez v. State, 37 App. 413, 35 S. W. 661. And a charge that it is not sufficient that the jury may be satisfied, the guilt of defendant, if true, exclusive to a moral certainty every other reasonable hypothesis, is not prejudicial. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 667. See also, McCoY v. State (Cr. App.) 73 S. W. 1067; Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 19; Henderson v. State, 59 App. 199, 95 S. W. 78; Bledsoe v. State, 59 App. 107; Bledsoe v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437. A charge that the crime may be established by circumstances, if they are sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that accused committed the crime charged is insufficient. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 388, 55 S. W. 983, 98 App. 14, 89 S. W. 219. A charge that to justify an conviction upon circumstantial evidence alone the facts relied upon must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt, is erroneous, since it furnishes no aid to the jury in determining what weight should be given to such testimony, and on what hypothesis they should convict. Williamson v. State, 30 App. 328, 37 S. W. 725. A charge, as to circumstantial evidence, that the jury must believe accused committed the offense, is not erroneous because the words "and no other person" are omitted. Ramirez v. State, 42 App. 453, 66 S. W. 1101. See, also, Bennett v. State, 39 App. 639, 48 S. W. 61; Boersch v. State (Cr. App.) 62 S. W. 1096; Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 24; Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 368, Where accused is charged with having committed a crime and taking certain act, the fact that the court used the term "others," instead of specifically naming the others is immaterial. Reid v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 662. It is not permissible to single out facts and charge upon them in cases of circumstantial evidence. Beard v. State, 57 App. 323, 123 S. W. 147; Moore v. State, 55 App. 361, 128 S. W. 1118.

46. Credibility of witnesses.—A charge that the jury are the "exclusive judges of the facts of the case and the weight of the testimony and the weight of the evidence, that they are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses," Allison v. State, 14 App. 402. A charge to the jury that they are "the exclusive judges of the credibility, of the weight of the evidence, and all the facts proved," is not erroneous, if the jury believe accused committed the offense, the "exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses." Binyon v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 339. An instruction that, if the jury cannot reconcile conflicting testimony, they must decide which of said testimony is entitled to the greater weight and credibility, and, in so doing, consider the intelligence, interest, and apparent bias or prejudice of any of the witnesses, as well as their manner of testifying, is correct. Adam v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 548; Lancaster v. State, 36 App. 16, 35 S. W. 152. It is proper to instruct the jury that the credibility of the witnesses is exclusively with them, and to refuse to instruct that if the jury found that a witness has sworn falsely then such witness is not a credible witness, and they would not be authorized to convict upon the testimony of such witness alone. Stayton v. State, 58 App. 361, 106 S. W. 901. See, also, Tindol v. State, 48 Tex. 511; Brown v. State, 2 App. 115; Mason v. State, 2 App. 192; Allison v. State, 14 App. 402. But it is error to instruct the jury that they must discard from their consideration any part or the whole of the testimony of any witness that they believe, with such weight or such weight as they may regard as true and worthy of credit. Bishop v. State, 45 Tex. 390; Kelly v. State, 1 App. 673; Chestor v. State, Id. 702; Butler v. State, 3 App. 48; Leverett v. State, Id. 213; Johnson v. State, 2 App. 558; Litman v. State, Id. 461. An instruction is erroneous which allows the jury arbitrarily to believe or disbelieve any witness or set of witnesses; the jury should be left free to weigh the evidence. Jackson v. State, 7 App. 363; Williams v. State, 10 App. 8; Wilbanks v. State, Id. 642; Johnson v. State, 5 App. 59. It is not error to omit entirely a charge to the effect that the jury are the judges of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, unless there is a suspicion as to the credibility of the weight of the testimony. Whitehead v. State, 49 App. 125, 50 S. W. 876. But see Lanning v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 752. The only time a witness has been impeached as to his truth and veracity that it is proper for the court to instruct the jury with reference thereto. Rider v. State, 26 App. 334, 9 S. W. 688. It is proper to refuse to charge that the jury may consider the fact that the state's witnesses "were paid and hired to catch the defendant." Though such witnesses testified that they had been employed by the sheriff as detectives. Copeland v. State, 36 App. 575, 33 S. W. 210. It is not error to refuse to charge that the evidence that prosecutrix told witness she would be well paid if she would swear that she saw defendant strike prosecutrix can be considered only as going to the credibility of prosecutrix. Druse v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 503. A request to charge that, if the prosecuting witness had been impeached on a material issue in the case, the jury could not consider his testimony for any purpose is properly refused. Brown v. State, 72 App. 33, 100 S. W. 374. Where, in a prosecution for rape, defendant claimed that prosecutrix was afflicted with nymphomania, a court charge that if she was laboring under a disease incapable of receiving a mental impression of the transaction, regarding which she testified, or if she had capacity to receive such mental impression as would render it impossible for her to retain and impart such an impression correctly, or was laboring under such defect of reason as would prevent her from understanding the nature of the charge against her, she was incompetent to testify, but that if defendant had not so established, by preponderance of the testimony, that she was laboring under such disease, etc., then the jury could consider her testimony, the jury being the exclusive judge of the weight of her testimony, is correct. Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 236, 131 S. W. 512.

It is not error to give only a portion of article 790 in the charge. Leslie v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 73; Anderson v. State, 53 App. 341, 130 S. W. 55. The court should tell the jury not to consider or discuss defendant's failure to testify. Fine v. State, 45 App. 290, 77 S. W. 806. A charge in the language of the statute that the failure of accused to testify shall not be taken as a circumstance against him, and that the jury must not allude to, comment on, or discuss it on their retirement, is not erroneous. Guinn v. State, 29 App. 257, 45 S. W. 694; Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 718; Doughtery v. State, 59 App. 456, 125 S. W. 398; Kinkead v. State, 61 App. 551, 135 S. W. 573; Willingham v. State, 62 App. 55, 136 S. W. 479. An instruction that the law allows a defendant to testify in his own behalf, but a failure to do so is not even a circumstance against him, and no presumption of guilt can be indulged in by the jury on account of such failure on his part, to consider, discuss, or even refer to that defendant failed to testify, was proper. O'Farara v. State, 57 App. 557, 124 S. W. 96; Singleton v. State, 57 App. 560, 124 S. W. 92. It is not improper for the trial judge to state, on impaneling a jury for the week, that an accused person may testify, but failure to do so is not even a circumstance against him; that whether he shall testify is in his attorney's discretion; that a lawyer might have good reason, consistent with innocence of his client, for not placing him on the stand, and that, if the jury should be chosen in a criminal case where accused did not testify, they must not only not consider such failure, but could not even mention it, for other reasons. Nor v. State (Cr. App.) 481 (Cr. App.) 182; State v. Adcock, 81 S. W. 638, 136 S. W. 474.

48. Failure to call witness or produce evidence.—Where the state introduced only circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt, eyewitnesses to the commission of the crime, being present in court, but unfriendly to the State, a charge that the State was required to introduce the best evidence obtainable, and that, if it was not possible that there were eyewitnesses present, that the act of killing, it was the duty of the state to produce such evidence, and that, if it did not do so, defendant could not be convicted on circumstantial evidence, is properly refused. McCandless v. State, 42 App. 665, 52 S. W. 146.

49. Co-defendants.—Where two defendants are jointly tried, the charge should instruct that the jury may acquit one and convict the other. Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154. And see Halmes v. State, 9 App. 313; Hays v. State, 39 App. 472, 17 S. W. 1063; Ragdale v. State, 61 App. 145, 134 S. W. 234; Sellers v. State, 61 App. 149, 134 S. W. 448.

50. Commission of other offenses.—An answer by defendant, to a question asking whether he had ever been charged with subornation of perjury, that he did not know what that meant, but that some negroes trumped up a charge against him, about which nothing was ever done, was not such an admission of a criminal character as to authorize the circuit court to instruct in the jury's charge that there was testimony before the jury as to defendant having been charged with some other crime. Stull v. State, 47 App. 547, 54 S. W. 1691.

In a prosecution for unlawfully altering the brand of a hog, where there was no evidence that the brand of any other hogs of the prosecutor had been altered by defendant, it is error, in instructing the jury, to refer to the re-marking of other hogs. Cox v. State, 58 App. 545, 126 S. W. 886.

A charge, on a trial for the theft of a skirt from a store, as to other thefts of goods found at the home of a third person with whom accused spent a part of his time is erroneous, in the absence of evidence connecting accused with such thefts. Morgan v. State, 62 App. 120, 126 S. W. 1065.

Where the evidence does not raise the question of principal and accessory a charge thereon is not warranted. Adcock v. State, 41 App. 283, 53 S. W. 484; Arismendi v. State, 54 S. W. 374; Steed v. State, 55 S. W. 428; Bird v. State, 48 App. 155, 87 S. W. 144; Armstrong v. State, 48 App. 304, 87 S. W. 824; Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 944. See, also, Phillips v. State, 26 App. 228, 9 S. W. 557; 8 Am. St. Rep. 471. Where the court charged that, before the verdict defendant they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that she was a principal, a failure to charge that, if she were an accomplice or an accessory, they must acquit her, is without prejudice, where the evidence shows that, if guilty at all, she was guilty as a principal. Harris v. State, 37 App. 441, 26 S. W. 83.

52. Grade or degree of offense.—See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 926.

It is not indispensable that the court should charge as to the different degrees of the offense charged, unless, in its judgment, the evidence to be passed upon by the jury renders such charge necessary in order that the jury may understand the application of the facts to the law governing the different degrees of the offense. If, after hearing the evidence, the court is in doubt, then the law as to the lesser offenses tends to be charged. Where an offense of less degree than that charged, the difference between the different degrees should be explained to the jury by instructions. But where the evidence tends to prove only the greater offense an instruction on a lower offense need not be given. Daniels v. State, 23 Tex. App., 137, 714. Moreover, the evidence is insufficient to support a conviction of the lesser offense for defendant. Jones v. State, 154 S. W. 1918.

Where, in a prosecution of two defendants for murder, the court charged with reference to both parties as principals, it should have also charged that they could not convict defendant "T." if he did not act as principal: the evidence raising the issue that he was an innocent bystander. Jenkins v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 205.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, where it was in issue whether defendants went on the cattle with the original taking, the court should have been appropriately instructed thereon. McKnight v. State, 79 App. 470, 150 S. W. 1188.
ed, for the court to so inform the jury, and to instruct them that they should not consider a high grade of offense. Pharr v. State, 142 S. W. 393. The jury should not be informed that on a former trial the defendant was convicted of any grade of the offense. West v. State, 7 App. 150. Where the testimony of prosecuting witness showed that accused was guilty of an assault with intent to rape, and accused rested his defense on the lesser degree of charge the jury should acquit. Fowler v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 575. The conduct and testimony of accused require the presentation of his theory, that if he put the child where it was found without any intent to kill it, but to prevent the exposure of his sister-in-law's shame and his connection with its paternity, he must have found guilty of a lesser degree of assault or acquitted. Martin v. State, 57 App. 264, 122 S. W. 568.

In determining whether the evidence requires the submission of issues as to lesser grades of homicide than that for which accused is being tried, all doubts must be resolved in favor of accused and not against him. Menefee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 138.

Where, in a prosecution for assault on defendant's stepdaughter, the evidence showed that if accused assaulted her at all it was with intent to rape, a request to charge that, if accused penetrated the rectum of prosecuting witness, the jury should acquit, is properly refused. Grimes v. State, 71 App. 614, 160 S. W. 659.

53. — Felony or misdemeanor.—In a prosecution for receiving and concealing stolen property, it was error, in instructing that, if accused received the goods, he was guilty of a felony, to omit to submit an issue whether the offense was a misdemeanor, where, though the evidence for the state showed that the goods were valued at more than $50, there was evidence for accused tending to show that they were of less value. Warden v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 224. In a prosecution for horse theft, where there was no evidence to indicate that the appropriation was but temporary, an instruction that if defendant only intended to use the horse temporarily, and did not intend permanent appropriation, he would only be guilty of a misdemeanor, and the jury should acquit, and they refused. Hartley v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 603. In a prosecution for theft, evidence examined and held not to show misdemeanor theft, and hence to justify the court in refusing to charge on that subject. Sanford v. State, 64 App. 607, 143 S. W. 1172.

55. — Degrees of murder.—Where there is no evidence to support an allegation of murder in the first degree, an instruction on that subject should not be given. Borger v. State, 49 App. 125, 129 S. W. 25.

In a prosecution for murder in the second degree, it is not error to charge on the first degree in giving a complete exposition of the elements of murder in the first degree. Godwin v. State, 30 App. 404, 46 S. W. 226; White v. State, 44 App. 346, 72 S. W. 173, 62 L. R. A. 660.

Where accused has been acquitted of murder in the first degree by a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, and is granted a new trial on the second trial to instruct on the first degree, or not to instruct, where the jury may be in doubt as to the degree of murder, in giving the first degree, the jury may acquit, and on the second degree murder need not be given. O'Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 343; Jones v. State, 40 Tex. 158; Taylor v. State, 13 App. 184; Smith v. State, 15 App. 139; May v. State, 22 App. 655, 3 S. W. 781; Caldwell v. State, 28 App. 666, 14 S. W. 122; Williams v. State, 30 App. 354, 37 S. W. 498; White v. State, 30 App. 652, 18 S. W. 462; Ringo v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 73; Henry v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 802; Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 225; Swan v. State, 39 App. 551, 47 S. W. 435; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 556; Krippel v. State, 57 App. 321, 77 S. W. 613; Jenkins v. State, 40 App. 457, 92 S. W. 726; 122 Am. St. Rep. 812; Tune v. State, 49 App. 445, 94 S. W. 231; Wynne v. State, 59 App. 126, 127 S. W. 233. See, also, Worthen v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 526. Where the evidence tenably shows the killing was done with express malice, a charge on murder in the second degree is properly refused. Leslie v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 73. Where the evidence shows that the offense is either murder in the first or a killing in self-defense, an instruction on murder in the second degree is not required. Henning v. State, 24 App. 315, 6 S. W. 157. Where the evidence for the state shows a murder by lying in wait, and the evidence for the defense a justifiable homicide, an instruction on murder in the second degree is unnecessary. Green v. State, 27 App. 344, 11 S. W. 114. Where the evidence indicated that accused killed in the perpetration of a robbery, or, if the murder was not committed in the perpetration of a robbery, that it was a plain case of cold-blooded and unprovoked murder, the court did not err in omitting to charge the law on murder in the second degree. King v. State, 57 App. 365, 125 S. W. 135. See, also, Parker v. State, 40 App. 361, 15 S. W. 39; Turner v. State, 48 App. 585, 89 S. W. 757. Where deceased, after having retired for the night, was awakened by some one halloowing at the gate, and on arising was informed that he was wanted at the long-distance phone about a mile and a half from his house, and he prepared to go, and as he went into the yard was fired on and killed, defendant admitted the killing, but testified that he was forced to do so by one who was with him, because of certain prosecutions which deceased had instituted, or was about to institute, against H. and accused. A charge on murder in the second degree is not required. Cain v. State, 63 App. 87, 138 S. W. 468. Where accused is on trial for manslaughter, it is error to instruct the jury in regard to the crime of murder in the first and second degrees, especially if they are told if they find accused guilty of murder in the first or second degree to return a verdict for manslaughter. Parker v. State, 22 App. 165, 7 S. W. 100. Where decedent insulted the wife of accused, and the insult was the only cause that led accused to kill decedent, the court properly submitted the issue of murder in the second degree, for, if accused’s mind was not aroused, he could not be convicted of murder in the second degree. Davis v. State, 70 App. 563, 44 S. W. 582. Though the evidence is circumstantial, a charge on murder in the second degree is not necessary, where the evidence discloses express malice, or a cool, calm deliberate design to kill. Morgan v. State, 41 App. 102, 61 S. W. 902; Beard v. State, 173, 53 S. W. 348; S. W. 321; Johnson v. State, 49 App. 314, 94 S. W. 224. But where such circumstantial evidence does not clearly show murder in the first degree the charge on murder in the second degree should be given. Bennett v. State, 39 App. 633, 48 S. W. 61. And State, 47 App. 127, 74 S. W. 545.

To instruct as to murder in the second degree, where the testimony shows a case of first degree, is not error. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 991. Where, after a plea of guilty to murder the evidence excludes murder in the second degree a charge on murder in the second degree need not be given. Murray v. State, 46 App. 400, 78 S. W. 927.

In the following cases it was held that instructions on murder in the first degree were authorized by the evidence. Greer v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 12; Ghone v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 908; Hicks v. State, 48 App. 264, 97 S. W. 1066; King v. State, 57 App. 303, 123 S. W. 135.

In the following cases it was held that instructions on murder in the first degree were improper as not being within the issues made by the evidence. Guerrero v. State, 39 App. 692, 47 S. W. 656; Honeycutt v. State, 42 App. 159, 57 S. W. 806; 96 Am. St. Rep. 707; Knipper v. State, 42 App. 613, 62 S. W. 420.

an overt act, in connection with other circumstances, is sufficient to excite in the mind of ordinary passion, the deadly temper sufficient to produce adequate cause; and the mind incapable of adequate cause, adequate cause is produced sufficient to raise the issue of manslaughter, so as to require a charge thereon. Roquemore v. State, 59 App. 568, 129 S. W. 1120.

Where, under the evidence, accused is guilty of murder, or of no offense, a charge on manslaughter is unnecessary. Neyland v. State, 13 App. 556; Coffee v. State, 13 App. 589; Esher v. State, 15 App. 607; Flournoy v. State (Cr. App.) 42 S. W. 1854; 47 S. W. 983; Darby v. State, 20 App. 334; 39 S. W. 375; Hedrick v. State, 40 App. 522, 51 S. W. 252; Cannon v. State, 41 App. 467, 56 S. W. 321; Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 855; Randell v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 255. Where the evidence shows that the offense is either murder or manslaughter, an instruction in self-defense, or justifiable homicide, is not required. Henning v. State, 24 App. 315, 6 S. W. 137; Reddick v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 953; Solomon v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 955; Greer v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1975; Flynn v. State, 44 App. 407, 68 S. W. 551; Davis v. State, 47 App. 418, 63 S. W. 1112; Lentz v. State, 3 App. 2, 85 S. W. 1063; Powdrell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 231. And see Spangler v. State, 42 App. 235, 61 S. W. 314; Jennings v. State, 60 App. 421, 322 S. W. 413. Where the evidence shows murder unless the homicide was justifiable, an instruction on manslaughter is unnecessary. Myers v. State, 33 Tex. 525; Evans v. State, 13 App. 237; Green v. State, 27 App. 214, 11 S. W. 114; Self v. State, 29 App. 358, 13 S. W. 602; Angus v. State, 29 App. 55, 14 S. W. 443; Maxwell v. State, 31 App. 119, 19 S. W. 914; Franklin v. State, 34 App. 622; Armstrong v. State, 35 App. 445. Where the evidence in defendant's trial for the murder of his son showed that the homicide was due to express malice and was not committed as the result of sudden passion, a charge on manslaughter is not called for. Powdrell v. State (Cr. App.) 291. A charge on manslaughter on the theory that deceased's battery by deceased, causing pain or bloodshed, is erroneous, where there was no evidence that deceased struck plaintiff or caused him any pain or bloodshed. Blocker v. State, 61 App. 135, 135 S. W. 199. Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the defendant further showed that the result was the natural and probable result of a long-standing grudge, it is not error to refuse to submit the issue of manslaughter to the jury. Canon v. State, 59 App. 395, 125 S. W. 141.

Where having married deceased's youngest daughter, defendant killed his wife, deceased threatened to take defendant's life and to separate him from his wife. Deceased carried a gun wherever he went, and, having come to town fully armed where defendant was at work, defendant, on being informed that deceased had come to kill him, left his work, secured a gun, and went looking towards defendant with a gun in his hands. Held, that such facts did not call for a charge on manslaughter. Jennings v. State, 60 App. 421, 322 S. W. 473.

Where accused, shooting decedent and a third person at the same time, testified that he did not know what he was doing at the time, and there was no evidence of any act done by the third person, a charge on provocation, reducing the homicide to manslaughter, is not objectionable for omitting references to acts of the third person. Alexander v. State, 63 App. 102, 138 S. W. 721.

Where there was no evidence of antecedent menaces, quarrels, or threats or anything else tending to reduce the shooting to manslaughter, the denial of an instruction that issue was proper. Beckham v. State, 17 App. 200, 69 S. W. 564.

In every case where it becomes a question whether or not there was an intention to kill, suggested by the character of the weapon not being deadly the court should submit the issue of manslaughter. Johnson v. State, 42 App. 377, 69 S. W. 485; duplex v. State, 44 App. 105, 69 S. W. 159.

In view of the statute making an assault causing pain "adequate cause," the court in a case where defendant's testimony shows such adequate cause should instruct that an assault causing pain would in law be adequate cause, and that, if the defendant produced such a degree of reasons as to render the mind incapable of cool reflection, the offense would be of no higher grade than manslaughter, and it is reversible error not to do so. Rodriguez v. State, 70 App. 77, 155 S. W. 540.

Where accused and his sister went at night, armed, to the home of the decedent, with the intent to take by force or steal a daughter of the sister, who had eloped with and married a son of decedent, and during the difficulty accused shot decedent, and accused insisted that the killing was accidental, the issue of manslaughter is not raised, but the question was whether accused was guilty of murder in either degree, or of negligent or accidental homicide. Chant v. State (Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 518.

57. Accidental homicide.—In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, where accused contended that the prosecuting witnesses attacked him in pursuance of a murderous conspiracy, and the prosecuting witnesses claimed that accused wantonly attacked them, a charge submitting the question of accidental homicide to the jury, but not being supported by the evidence, Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 944. See, also, Powell v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 218.

Evidence that deceased had a knife in her hand, and that in the scuffle between her and defendant over a purse, which she had taken from him, he deliberately cut her, does not raise an issue of negligent homicide, but merely of accidental killing. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1161.

59. Assault with intent to kill.—Where, on a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, there was evidence tending to show a lesser degree of such crime than the one charged, and the defendant entered a plea of guilty, it is the duty of the court to instruct on the lesser degree. Jackson v. State, 45 App. 373, 88 S. W. 239.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, was convicted of aggravated assault and the court properly charged on aggravated assault, instructions on assault with intent to kill were immaterial. Hughes v. State, 62 App. 238, 136 S. W. 1068.

Evidence showing that an assault was committed with a knife, and that the wounds, which were described, were severe, and aimed at vital parts, causing prosecutor to be confined for three weeks, justifies an instruction on assault with intent to murder without further proof as to the kind and character of the knife. Thomas v. State, 44 App. 344, 72 S. W. 178. Where a man stabbed a woman and cut her throat in two places, but her injuries did not necessitate her going to bed, and she lived for five days and was able to do business, and finally died because of the bursting of a blood clot on the brain, an instruction upon the point of assault with intent to kill must be given. Ex parte Pettis, 60 App. 288, 131 S. W. 1068.

Where the killing is perpetrated in the furtherance of a conspiracy to release certain persons from jail an instruction on assault with intent to murder is not justified. Kipper v. State, 45 App. 577, 77 S. W. 611.

In the following cases the evidence was held to be sufficient to justify an instruction on assault with intent to murder proper. Loyd v. State, 46 App. 530, 81 S. W. 293; Bruster v. State, 50 App. 147, 95 S. W. 1066.

60. Aggravated assault.—Where the evidence does not justify a conviction for assault with intent to kill, an instruction as to aggravated assault should be given. State v. State (Cr. App.) 88 S. W. 247.

Where the evidence shows that the assault was one with intent to murder a charge on aggravated assault is unnecessary. Barbee v. State, 34 App. 139, 29 S. W. 778.

If the evidence makes a case either of assault to murder or shows that accused is guilty of no offense, it is not error not to charge on aggravated assault. Moore v. State, 21 App. 234, 30 S. W. 553; Boudin v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 967; Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 904. Nor where the evidence makes a case of assault with intent to murder, or of self-defense. Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 86; Barnes v. State, 39 App. 154, 45 S. W. 465; Duval v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 613; Turner v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 157; Worrley v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 994. Nor where the evidence makes a case of murder, and not of manslaughter. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 642. Nor where the evidence shows that the killing was at least manslaughter, if not in self-defense. Estep v. State, 135 S. W. 966.

Where accused killed deceased with a knife, and there was no evidence that it was not a deadly weapon, an instruction on aggravated assault is not required. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 58. And where the evidence shows that accused cut prosecuting witnesses' throat with a razor, the charge need not be given. Ford v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 338.

In the following cases it was held that the issue of aggravated assault was not presented, and that a charge thereon was not necessary. Roys v. State, 48 App. 316, 88 S. W. 245; Moody v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 894; Duffy v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 844; Manger v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 145; Wilson v. State, 45 App. 81, 72 S. W. 364; Morris v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 472; Palmer v. State, 48 App. 595, 89 S. W. 336; Wilson v. State, 49 App. 596, 115 S. W. 1190; Thompson v. State, 69 App. 84, 131 S. W. 314; Burr v. State, 64 App. 405, 145 S. W. 191; Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 131 S. W. 618; Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1053; Fuller v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1021; Hooper v. State, 72 App. 52, 160 S. W. 1187.

61. — Simple assault. — Where, in a prosecution for assault to murder, defendant's testimony would only make him guilty of a simple assault, the court should have affirmatively submitted to the jury the question of simple assault. Bean v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 294; Pasteur v. State, 45 S. W. 317; Ivory v. State, 45 S. W. 317, 48 S. W. 317. Where the evidence did not raise simple assault, but showed accused to be guilty of an assault with intent to murder, the refusal of a charge on simple assault is proper. Carter v. State (Cr. App.) 185 S. W. 299. Where accused, charged with biting off an ear, was convicted of simple assault, failure to submit the issue of simple assault is not prejudicial error. Pool v. State, 59 App. 482, 129 S. W. 1135.

In the following cases the evidence was held to raise the issue of simple assault, requiring an instruction thereon. Catling v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 583; Roys v. State, 48 App. 346, 88 S. W. 245.

In the following cases the evidence was held not to raise the issue of simple assault. Catling v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 583; Roys v. State, 48 App. 346, 88 S. W. 245.

62. — Assault and battery. — Under the statute making assault and battery a cause of action as a cause of action in this, it is not necessary to define "assault and battery" in a charge on manslaughter. Bearden v. State, 44 App. 573, 73 S. W. 17.

Under an information charging only assault, the case should not be submitted to the jury as assault and battery. Shuffield v. State, 62 App. 556, 138 S. W. 404.

Embezzlement. — Where the employment and all the transactions were continuous, and there was no issue of embezzlement except one of the amount, it was sufficient to charge the jury that the accused could be convicted of felony if the embezzled was in excess of $50, without also charging that before the jury could return a verdict of embezzlement at "one time" of a sum exceeding $50. Lawshe v. State, 57 App. 32, 121 S. W. 865.

Where accused charged with embezzlement appropriated to his own use at least $150 of the money of a prosecution, the refusal to charge on embezzlement of a sum less than $50 was not erroneous. Irby v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 444.

64. — Burglary or theft. — Though defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen property, testified to receiving property on his prior trial for burglary, where-was sufficient to convict, it was a reversible error to refuse an instruction in his favor based on the testimony of a witness for the state who testified, as he also did in the burglary case, to facts showing defendant guilty of theft only. Allen v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 790.

Whenever the court by his charge proposes to deprive a defendant of his right of self-defense he must be enabled to lay his hand on the facts which justify him in doing so, and unless he can do so he should not give a charge of this character. Moon v. State, 48 App. 58, 57 S. W. 675.

A charge fully submitting self-defense under the evidence is not erroneous, although the law could have been more pertinently applied to the evidence, where no simplified charge was requested. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

The charge on self-defense should not be mixed with other matters. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 310.

Where there were no eyewitnesses to a homicide, and accused did not testify, but pleaded that immediately following the homicide, he voluntarily sought the city marshal and made a statement concerning the matter, claiming to have acted in self-defense, accused was entitled to an instruction that there could be no conviction, unless the state disproved such statement. De Leon v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 247.

Accused is entitled to an instruction on self-defense though such defense is supported solely by his own testimony. Bedford v. State, 36 App. 477, 38 S. W. 210.

A charge on mutual combat is a limitation on the right of self-defense, and should be given only where there is no evidence authorizing it. Schott v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 272; Reese v. State, 49 App. 245, 91 S. W. 523. When it is given, however, the converse should be given. Christian v. State, 46 App. 47, 79 S. W. 562. When the evidence shows that defendant was forced into the fight, and acted in self-defense, it is error to charge mutual combat. Maines v. State, 35 App. 105, 31 S. W. 667. A charge that if the parties willingly rushed at each other to fight, and "in pursuance of such agreement" defendant fired the shot, then the law of self-defense does not apply, is erroneous, as tending to impress the jury that he was a felon who immediately followed the act of self-defense. Escajeda v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 791; Walters v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 794; Burns v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 784. In the following cases the evidence was held to raise the issue of mutual combat so as to require instructions thereon. Koller v. State, 44 S. W. 44; Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 791; Walters v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 794; Burns v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 784. In the following cases the evidence was held not to warrant instructions on mutual combat, or to make instructions given improper. Roshbourne v. State, 21 App. 672, 1 S. W. 459; Burns v. State, 58 App. 463, 125 S. W. 901; Newton v. State, 55 App. 316, 125 S. W. 905.

An instruction that accused was not deprived of his right of self defense be-he had previously threatened the life of deceased, is erroneous, in the ab­ of evidence that accused had ever made any such threats.

Lankster v. State,
41 App. 603, 56 S. W. 65.
Where accused's sale defense was that he neither committed the offense nor attempted to do so, failure to charge on self defense is not error. Hooper v. State, That the court, after fully instructing on self-defense, in undertaking to instruct with reference to issues made by the state's evidence, which, if sustained by the proof, would or might deny him the benefit of his plea of self-defense, such as mutual combat, defendant's provoking the difficulty, and deceased's abandonment of the difficulty, instructed requiring these facts to be found true beyond a reasonable doubt, in order to abridge his right of self-defense, does not shift the burden of proof to defendant.
Where accused, on returning from a hunting expedition armed with a gun, met decedent on a railroad right of way and there engaged in an altercation with decedent and shot him, the court did not err in omitting to charge that, when accused saw decedent on the railroad right of way, he had the right under the law to arm himself and go and demand an explanation of decedent's prior threats, etc.

Where the evidence was that deceased was standing on a sidewalk in a city and defendant approached and fired one shot, the contention of the state being that defendant walked up to deceased and shot him, and that of defendant being that, as he approached, deceased ran his hand in his pocket, it is error to instruct upon the cessation of the right of self-defense.

65. Provoking difficulty.—Where the evidence calls for it, the rules relating to the provoking of the contest by the defendant should be fully and clearly explained in the charge in so far as they may be applicable to the evidence. See the following: Gile thunder v. State, 41 Tex. 556; Reed v. State, 11 App. 539, 40 Am. Rep. 758; Green v. State, 13 App. 445; King v. State, 13 App. 277; Cartwright v. State, 36 Tex. C. 878; Smith v. State, 15 App. 253, 20 Tex. C. 892; Jones v. State, Id. 602; Arto v. State, 19 App. 126; Lily v. State, 20 App. 1; Thuston v. State, 21 App. 245, 17 S. W. 474; Roach v. State, 21 App. 249, 17 S. W. 469; White v. State, 23 App. 154, 2 S. W. 710. Where the evidence shows, or tends to show, a perfect self-defense, unattended by circumstances which would indicate that accused provoked the difficulty, accused is entitled to a charge on self defense containing no restrictions as to the law on provoking the difficulty. Clark v. State, 151 S. W. 581; How v. State, 38 App. 877; Smith v. State, 15 App. 253, 20 Tex. C. 892; Williford v. State, 38 App. 395, 42 S. W. 972; Vance v. State, 45 App. 424, 77 S. W. 813; Sprinkle v. State, 49 App. 224, 91 S. W. 787; Leito v. State, 49 App. 390, 32 S. W. 418; Culp v. State, 58 App. 74, 124 S. W. 946; McMillan v. State, 58 App. 625, 126 S. W. 875; Irving v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 946; Robbins v. State, 70 App. 82, 156 S. W. 926; Finch v. State, 71 App. 325, 158 S. W. 510; Strickland v. State, 71 App. 582, 161 S. W. 110. When the evidence is such as is calculated to raise a question as to the character of the intent with which the difficulty was provoked by the accused, it becomes the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury fully as to the distinction between perfect and imperfect self-defense. Meuly v. State, 26 App. 747, 9 S. W. 563, 8 Am. St. Rep. 477. The court is only authorized to charge on provoking the difficulty, where accused or his agent provoked the difficulty, where accused or his agent did some act or used some language with the intent and calculated to provoke a difficulty, and that he was assaulted by decedent, and that he then killed decedent. McHanon v. State, 46 App. 548, 51 S. W. 290; Renew v. State, 49 App. 251, 92 S. W. 891.

Where a charge on the law of provoking the difficulty is given, and is justified by the evidence, accused is entitled to a charge as to the character of the provoking difficulty, that if his evidence shows that he did not provoke the difficulty, he was charged on the issue of provoking the difficulty as a limitation upon self-defense, but accused's evidence showed that decedent was the aggressor, the court should also have charged that the fact that decedent provoked the difficulty and followed it up would not be a limitation upon the right of self-defense. Ware v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1074; Ponder v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 244.

Where the evidence was that accused and deceased agreed to meet unarmed, a charge that accused had the right to bear arms should not be given. Where there was no limitation, a charge upon the right to take arms with him to the place of the affray is unnecessary. Finch v. State, 71 App. 325, 158 S. W. 510.

In a homicide case, the court charged that a perfect right of self-defense exists only where accused acted from necessity, and was not himself in the wrong, and where his conduct was not intended or reasonably calculated to produce the necessity which required his action, and that if he was in the wrong, or was violating the law, and because of his own wrong, and with malicious intent to bring on the difficulty, he was thereby placed in a position where it became necessary for him to defend himself from attack, the law limits his right of self-defense according to the degree of his own wrong, and if accused sought decedent, armed with a dangerous weapon, to kill him or inflict serious injury upon him, and by acts done or words used with intent to provoke a difficulty with decedent, and reasonably calculated to provoke decedent to attack him, and decedent did attack him or made a demonstration reasonably indicating to accused, viewed from his point of view, that he was in danger of death or serious bodily harm, accused could justify the killing of decedent under circumstances, he would be guilty of first or second degree murder. Held, that the charge did not cast the burden upon accused of proving that he did not intend to provoke the difficulty. Keeton v. State, 59 App. 315, 128 S. W. 694.

In the following cases it was held that the evidence presented the issue of provoking the difficulty so as to require or justify a charge thereon, or that the charges given were applicable to the evidence. Meuly v. State, 26 App. 274, 9 S. W. 563, 8 Am. St. Rep. 477; Williams v. State, 39 App. 429, 17 S. W. 1071; Maxwell v. State, 31 App. 119, 19 S. W. 914; Carter v. State, 37 App. 403, 15 S. W. 378; Longacre v. State (Cr. App.) 41 S. W. 629; Godwin v. State, 38 App. 465, 45 S. W. 336; Chism v. State, 40 App. 1487, 44 S. W. 949; Stone v. State, 41 App. 325, 35 S. W. 602; Batson v. State, 46 App. 122, 50 S. W. 677; Metz v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 712; Tardy v. State, 47 App. 444, 35 S. W. 1128; Stacey v. State, 48 App. 95, 86 S. W. 327; Best v. State, 53 App. 327, 125 S. W. 909; Borelli v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 299.

In the following cases it was held that the evidence raised the issue of provoking the difficulty so as to require or justify a charge thereon, or that the charges given were applicable to the evidence. Chester v. State, 4 App. 444; Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 821; Morgan v. State, 34 App. 222, 29 S. W. 1023; Walters v. State, 37 App. 388, 35 S. W. 652; Winters v. W. 983; Drake v. State, 45 App. 273, 77 S. W. 7; Dent v. State, 16 App. 168, 79 S. W. 658; Beard v. State, 47 App. 50, 81 S. W. 1901; Wilson v. State, 46 App. 223, 311 S. W. 678; Woodman v. State, 47 App. 388, 83 S. W. 196; Carr v. State, 48 App. 237, 87 S. W. 346;
67. — Threats.—Where the evidence raises the question of threats by defendant against accused a charge on threats should be given. Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 623; Horning v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 562; Fielding v. State, 48 App. 334, 87 S. W. 1044; Lara v. State, 48 App. 505, 96 S. W. 84; Thomas v. State, 58 App. 281, 111 S. W. 111; Carden v. State, 58 App. 501, 129 S. W. 362; Reinhart v. State, 60 App. 662, 133 S. W. 265; Jackson v. State, 63 App. 131, 139 S. W. 1165; Lyons v. State, 71 App. 139, 159 S. W. 1970; Masters v. State, 71 App. 180, 159 S. W. 1970; Rutherford v. State, 73 App. 692; and the charge should be given affirmatively, and favorably to accused, rather than in the negative form. Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 623; Watson v. State, 50 App. 171, 56 S. W. 113; Pratt v. State, 50 App. 227, 96 S. W. 8; Mitchell v. State, 50 App. 190, 96 S. W. 45. But where there is no evidence of such threats the charge should not be given. Chalk v. State, 35 App. 116, 92 S. W. 631; Norris v. State, 43 App. 555, 61 S. W. 453; Leito v. State, 49 App. 309, 122 S. W. 413; Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 1163; Jackson v. State, 71 App. 297, 158 S. W. 813; Ferales v. State, 72 App. 176, 161 S. W. 485; Collier v. State, 72 App. 692, 162 S. W. 886. Where there was no evidence of threats by deceased which were communicated to accused, an instruction regarding uncommunicated threats is uncalled for. Salmon v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1923. An instruction on uncommunicated threats in the case for when the evidence shows that all the threats communicated to accused were actually uttered, was proper. Salmon v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1923. Evidence of uncommunicated threats, introduced only to assist the jury on the issue of premeditation, does not require the instruction on self defense. Askew v. State, 47 App. 562, 82 S. W. 706. Where the evidence shows that threats by decedent toward accused were communicated to accused, he was entitled to a charge on threats from his viewpoint, whether they were actually made or not. Leito v. State, 71 App. 183, 159 S. W. 1970. An instruction on the right to seek decedent respecting threats made by decedent was improper, where the evidence showed that decedent sought accused. Duke v. State, 61 App. 19, 133 S. W. 432. A charge that the language used by deceased, in connection with his acts, should be considered on the question of self defense, is unnecessary, where the only evidence of language used was that deceased said some time prior to any hostile act or demonstration that he could whip defendant. Driver v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 538. Where there was evidence of threats by deceased, a charge in the terms of the statute, on the subject of the statute in this jurisdiction, sufficiently required the jury to consider the threats in view of all the facts and circumstances of evidence from defendant's standpoint. Newman v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 523. There was no evidence of threats by deceased, upon the subject of the statute in this jurisdiction, sufficiently submitted the issue of threats. Pratt v. State, 59 App. 635, 139 S. W. 364. In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction on the law of threats is not objectionable for failure to include serious bodily injury, as well as the taking of life, where the only threats testified to were directed exclusively to killing defendant by "shooting it out with him." Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 133 S. W. 887.

68. — Character, etc., of deceased.—Where there is no evidence as to deceased's character and disposition or of accused's knowledge thereof, or of the relative strength of the parties, a charge as to such matters is uncalled for. Andrews v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 918; Hickey v. State, 45 App. 297, 76 S. W. 920; Hickey v. State, 62 App. 560, 158 S. W. 1061; Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 280; Jackson v. State, 71 App. 297, 158 S. W. 813; Lyons v. State, 71 App. 351, 158 S. W. 813; Vann v. State, 71 App. 352; Carden v. State, 63 App. 102, 138 S. W. 721; Sanchez v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 124; Robbins v. State, 70 App. 52, 155 S. W. 936. But where there is evidence of deceased's strength or dangerous character, a charge on the relative strength of the parties is proper. Bearden v. State, 46 App. 144, 79 S. W. 97; Munos v. State, 58 App. 147, 124 S. W. 941.

69. — Attack, and danger of injury or bodily harm, or apprehension thereof.—Where the evidence tends to show that defendant was in apparent danger because of the conduct of decedent, it is the duty of the court to charge that defendant was about to make an attack on him; he would have the right of self-defense. Terry v. State, 45 App. 261, 76 S. W. 925. Where the question is one not of real, but of apparent, danger, the court should instruct on apparent danger, in such terms as: "White v. State, 33 App. 154, 3 S. W. 281, 284; Collier v. State, 49 App. 216, 6 S. W. 187; Chism v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 949; Duke v. State, 61 App. 19, 133 S. W. 432; Carden v. State, 62 App. 667, 138 S. W. 296; Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 205; Arias v. State, 73 App. 329, 165 S. W. 159. But where the evidence appears to be actual, not apparent, danger should not be given. Bowman v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 556; Cavil v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 628; Stacey v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 348.

In charging on self-defense, and in that connection, on threats made by deceased against accused, the criterion of apparent danger is as the situation is viewed from the standpoint of accused, and not as to the belief of danger by the jury. Adams v. State, 47 App. 44, 84 S. W. 201; Brownlee v. State, 48 App. 468, 87 S. W. 1155.

The right of accused to carry weapon on belief of trouble with decedent, see Nix v. State, 45 App. 504, 78 S. W. 227.

70. — Force used.—On the question of instructions as to force used as applicable to, or called for by, the evidence, see Spangler v. State, 42 App. 233, 61 S. W. 314; Scott v. State, 46 App. 365, 81 S. W. 969; Thurman v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 1014; Newcomb v. State, 49 App. 555, 55 S. W. 1084; Munos v. State, 58 App. 197, 63 S. W. 583; Maycock v. State, 61 App. 9, 132 S. W. 663; Maycock v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 239, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671; Castro v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 553; Ward v. State, 70 App. 395, 159 S. W. 372; Lyons v. State, 71 App. 139, 159 S. W. 1070.

71. — Abandonment of difficulty or use of means to avoid injury.—Where there is evidence that accused has, in good faith, abandoned the original difficulty, he is entitled to an instruction on the law of abandoning the difficulty. Jackson v. State, 28 App. 198, 12 S. W. 591. A homicide case presents the issue of abandoning the difficulty though deceased abandoned it at the instance of a third person. Chambers v. State (Cr. App.) 86 S. W. 755.

Where the difficulty was shown to be a continuous fight from its inception to its close, a charge on abandonment of the difficulty is called for. Wilson v. State, 50 App. 423, 51 S. W. 24; Coker v. State, 50 App. 241, 128 S. W. 137.

In the following cases charges on abandoning the difficulty were held for by the evidence, or applicable to the evidence. Burns v. State, 58 App. 483, 125 S. W. 801; Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 294; Ware v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1074.

In the following cases charges on abandoning the difficulty held unnecessary or improper as not called for by the evidence. Highsmith v. State, 41 App. 32, 50 S. W. 733, 51 S. W. 193; Queiroz v. State, 41 App. 161, 53 S. W. 119; Connell v. State, 42 S. W. 592; Crook v. State, 46 App. 80, 58 S. W. 1147; Renow v. State, 49 App. 281, 92 S. W. 801; Duke v. State, 61 App. 19, 133 S. W. 432.

72. — Retreat.—Wherever the question of justifiable homicide is raised by the evidence, the court should instruct the jury on the law of retreat, but the doctrine of retreat is not applicable to cases of imperfect right of self-defense.

In charging on the right of one whose life is being threatened to kill in self-defense, it should be told that the issued party should, if possible, return when the facts make the instruction of importance. Bell v. State, 17 App. 583; May v. State, 23 App. 146, 4 S. W. 591. An instruction that accused is not bound to retreat to avoid the necessity of killing his assailant should be made applicable to the law of self defense, and it is improper to restrict it to the law of threats. Gonzales v. State, 28 App. 120, 12 S. W. 732.

In the following cases it was held that the evidence was sufficient to require an instruction on retreat, or that the instructions thereon were applicable to the evidence. Young v. State, 69 S. W. 149; 41 App. 175; Darnell v. State, 45 App. 142, 75 S. W. 512; Glessocks v. State, 64 App. 531, 122 S. W. 1179.

In the following cases it was held that the charges on retreat were not required by the evidence, or were inapplicable to the evidence. May v. State, 23 App. 146, 4 S. W. 501; Moody v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 894; Hughes v. State, 47 App. 216, 82 S. W. 1937.
