Where evidence shows a killing in defense of another, the court should present this phase of the case distinctly in the charge to the jury. Ashworth v. State, 19 App. 162; Monson v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 649; Trevino v. State, 72 App. 91, 161 S. W. 108. If the trial court has a reasonable doubt as to the necessity of a charge on defense of another, he should resolve such doubt in favor of accused and charge them. Christian v. State, 71 App. 566, 161 S. W. 191. Defendant is not entitled to an instruction that, if the person whom he shot, or those with him, made an unlawful attack on defendant's daughter, he should be acquitted, where the evidence is that any such assault was unknown to him, and after he shot, Singleton v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 46. And see further, Kondall v. State, 8 App. 569; Butler v. State, 33 App. 232, 26 S. W. 201; Stanton v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 476; Martin v. State, 42 App. 144, 58 S. W. 112; Chambers v. State, 46 App. 61, 75 S. W. 647; Garza v. State, 45 App. 282, 55 S. W. 29; Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 229, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 763.

That the court in defining the offense charged told the jury what the penalty was and in submitting the issues also instructed them as to the penalty to be assessed, is not erroneous as making the punishment too prominent. Ulloa v. State, 73 App. 41, 163 S. W. 722.

Where several offenses are embraced in the same indictment, they must be treated as distinct offenses by the court in instructing the jury upon the penalty attached to each by law. Maul v. State, 25 Tex. 166. And see Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 497.

The court cannot charge with reference to the disposition or working of convicts. forty v. State, 40 App. 197, 49 S. W. 583.

In a rape trial, it is not error to refuse to instruct that the object of punishment is to suppress crime and reform the offender, and that punishment with another object is unauthorized. Hutcherson v. State, 62 App. 1, 136 S. W. 52.

Where accused fails to file his application for a suspended sentence until after trial began, and four jurors had been selected, the court need not submit to the jury the suspended sentence law. Williamson v. State, 72 App. 616, 163 S. W. 485. Unless there is evidence that accused is of good character, and has not been before convicted of a felony, a charge on the suspended sentence law is properly refused. Walker v. State, 73 App. 99, 164 S. W. 3.

In a misdemeanor case, it is improper for the court to charge the jury that the county attorney has waived a jail sentence. Love v. State, 71 App. 539, 153 S. W. 532.

Instructions as to punishment of youthful offenders, see Washington v. State, 28 App. 411, 13 S. W. 606; Duncan v. State, 29 App. 141, 15 S. W. 467; Sanchez v. State, 31 App. 484, 21 S. W. 361; Rocha v. State, 35 App. 69, 41 S. W. 611; Windham v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 613.

Instructions as to punishment held proper and correct. Champ v. State, 32 App. 87, 22 S. W. 677; Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 401; Boggs v. State, 35 S. W. 42, 82 S. W. 412; Elliott v. State, 33 App. 390, 125 S. W. 569.

75. Manner of arriving at verdict.—The court may tell the jury that they should not arrive at their verdict by lot. Driver v. State, 37 App. 160, 38 S. W. 462.
76. Form of verdict.—It is not essential, though proper, that the charge should instruct the jury in the forms of verdicts which may be rendered in the case; but where it should embrace every verdict which might be rendered in the case. Williams v. State, 24 App. 687, 7 S. W. 333; Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444. And see Beard v. State, 41 App. 173, 53 S. W. 345. Oral instructions as to form of verdict, see notes to article 775, ante.

76. Arguments of course.—It is error to argue to the jury that the law is not to consider any argument of the attorneys regarding the law of the case, so that to render the jury to disregard such remarks. Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 229.

Though, upon the trial of a prosecution for murder, counsel for the defendant stated that the defendant had produced a knife used in the flight in which the killing occurred, and challenged the state to produce the pistol which was shown to have been used by the deceased, argument by the state's counsel intimating that the defendant was suppressing evidence in not allowing the testimony of a witness in a former trial to be given to the jury was not germane thereto, and a charge taken from such improper argument from the jury is erroneously refused. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1174.

77. Time for giving instructions.—The instruction of the court to the jury, after they had returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, to find which persuasion of a former trial is a part of such an instruction, to the jury is erroneous refused. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 562.

It is not improper for the court to read to the jury his charge with reference to defendant not testifying on his trial for crime, after he had read his instructions, but before the jury had retired. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 715.

78. Written instructions.—See notes to art. 740, post.

79. Form and language in general.—The preliminary statement constitutes no part of the charge of the court proper. Wolfforth v. State, 31 App. 387, 20 S. W. 741.

No general charge applicable to any particular offense can be devised. Atkinson v. State, 20 Tex. 522. Substantial accuracy only is required. Alexander v. State, 12 Tex. 546; Ashlock v. State, 16 App. 13. A proper charge should suppose a state of facts shown to exist, and deduce the legal conclusions applicable to such facts. O'Connell v. State, 19 Tex. 344. It should not extend, beyond a plain statement of the law of the case, into philosophic dissertations upon the nature of evidence, the proper process of reasoning upon the facts, or the precautionary considerations to be borne in mind in coming to a proper conclusion. Brown v. State, 23 Tex. 195; Harrison v. State, 8 App. 183; Hodde v. State, Id. 383; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Sisk v. State, 9 App. 246. It should not attempt novel expositions of the law, in any which the principles have been fully stated. Early v. State, 7 App. render that the jury in the charge that their findings must be predicated alone upon the evidence adduced on the trial. Miles v. State, 14 App. 436. The instructions should be a persistent application of the law to the facts, and not merely a general definition of law. Rider v. State, 40 App. 19, 28 (Cr. App.) 112, W. 699. It is not error to underscore certain words and portions of the charge. Jackson v. State, 29 App. 108, 12 S. W. 501. It is not necessary for the court, in charging in a criminal case, to give all the law of the case in a single paragraph. Pinson v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 556. Paragraphs of a charge should be complete, and those relating to the same subject should be arranged in the charge and connected, that they can be readily understood by the jury as bearing upon the subject, and to be considered together with reference to such subject. Tillery v. State, 24 App. 251, 5 S. W. 412, 5 Am. St. Rep. 885; Smith v. State, 19 App. 95; Nolen v. State, 8 App. 555; Blair v. State, 26 App. 387, 9 S. W. 850; Bonner v. State, 29 App. 223, 15 S. W. 821; Williams v. State, 30 App. 429, 17 S. W. 1071; Moreland v. State, 29 App. 79, 15 S. W. 494; Wolfforth v. State, 31 App. 132, 20 S. W. 741. Where in a connected and manner, intelligent means the issues are submitted in succeeding paragraphs, properly limited, and constituting all together an intelligent and fair submission of the issues, this is sufficient. Hudson v. State, 38 App. 130, 123 S. W. 1152. The charge as to aider and abettor must be such as cannot and should not all be given in a single paragraph. Christian v. State, 71 App. 566, 161 S. W. 101; Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

The charge should always contain the instruction that if the jury do not believe the defendant guilty, they should acquit him. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 494, 3 S. W. 771.

There is no error shown from the fact that the court erased a portion of his charge before he read it to the jury. Lawrence v. State, 35 App. 114, 32 S. W. 530.

An instruction should be addressed to the jury as a body, and not to the jurors individually. Glover v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 465.

Where the precise terms of the statute are once used, and thereafter there is a slight departure from the literal words of the statute, the obvious equivalent being used, no reversible error is committed. Ward v. State, 58 App. 62, 196 S. W. 1145. A jury that finds certain facts, to-be evidence of the defendant guilty, "otherwise you will," is erroneous, as it leaves the jury no alternative but to convict. Sanders v. State, 17 App. 222. An instruction that if the jury have a reasonable doubt "as to whether the witness," naming him, "killed them," and instructing him to acquit "defendant," is error. Giles v. State, 44 App. 433, 71 S. W. 561.

A charge that the jury ought to consider the circumstances of the case from the standpoint of defendant, etc., is not bad because of the use of the word "ought" instead. Jackson v. State, 32 App. 192, 22 S. W. 53. An objection to a charge because it mentions, except in the style of the case, the name of defendant, and does not inform the jury who is meant by defendant, is without merit. State v. Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 398. A charge which merely informs the jury to convict defendant if they find him guilty as charged in the indictment is not erroneous. Pena v. State (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 311. The use of the words "in so" in an instruction is not objectionable on the ground that such words are Legal. 110, 61 S. W. 195, 11 App. 715. "Where," was shown that an offense occurred prior to the presentment of the indictment, an instruction using the language "at or about the time charged in the indictment," is not erroneous. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 85 S. W. 332. An instruction that evidence of contradictory statements might be considered to aid in determining the weight to be given the testimony of a witness, and his credibility or otherwise, is not bad because of the use of the word "otherwise." Marek v. State, 49 App. 222. - The use of the word "or motion submitting the evidence of the defendant" in the paragraph of a charge does not make the instruction objectionable in form. Lott v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 544. A contention, that an instruction that, under the hypothesized facts, the jury "may" find accused guilty of manslaughter, is erroneous for using the quoted word instead of "must," was hypercritical. Wilson v. State, 75 App. 126, 160 S. W. 83.

Where, on a trial for rape of a female under the age of 15 years, the prosecution referred to by a witness of accused and by accused's counsel as "the little girl," accused could not complain of a charge referring to her as "the little girl." Wofford v. State, 60 App. 264, 132 S. W. 929.

It is not essential that the charge submitting the question of murder in the first degree should state in any way accused's defense, such as self-defense, though it might be best in some cases; it is not being possible to charge all of the law in a single paragraph. Jackson v. State, 63 App. 101, 139 S. W. 1156.

Where an indictment charges a statutory offense conjunctively, an instruction correctly submits the question in the case in the disjunctive form. Cabiness v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 924.

After the trial judge had been out about an hour preparing his charge, he found on his return that some of the jury had become impatient at the delay, and in the course stated to the jury that it might appeal to the jury as a matter of fact, that it might not be a long time to prepare the charge, but that when it was considered that the court's charges were prepared with the view of being criticised by lawyers, and sometimes passed on by the higher courts, and that the court has to examine the special charges, perhaps the time taken was not so long as it might appear. Held, that the remarks were not reversible error in the absence of a showing that the jury had been affected thereby. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 571.

An error of an instruction of the jury should not consider any fact or circumstance not in evidence is not error where it did not appear that they did consider or discuss any fact or circumstance not admitted in evidence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 360.

90. - Inadvertent errors or omissions.-The omission from a charge of a word which an intelligent mind will supply, to make the mind complete, is not cause for a reversal, but the omission from a charge of a word which changes the meaning of the sentence, and which gives it a meaning highly injurious to accused. Goode v. State, 59 App. 652, 129 S. W. 624. And see Hill v. State, 11 App. 456; Arrington v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 97: Toler v. State, 44 App. 659, 56 S. W. 917: Jackson v. State (Cr. App.) 89 S. W. 83.

Where the court in its charge speaks of "express malice," intending to say "implied malice," there is material error. Pickett v. State, 12 App. 86.

62. Argumentative instructions.—The charge should not be argumentative, but such error is not necessarily bad, where not calculated to mislead the jury or excite the passions of the jury. Brown v. State, 23 Tex. 155; Cesure v. State, 1 App. 19; Stuckey v. State, 7 App. 174. An argumentative charge on the weight of the evidence is erroneous. Heine v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1062. Charges held not argumentative. Clark v. State, 61 App. 597, 138 S. W. 266; Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

63. Confused or misleading instructions.—Where an instruction in a homicide is incorrect, but is in favor of the defendant, but, when taken in connection with other instructions, tends to mislead the jury, it is ground for reversal. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 557.

A charge, on a trial for violating the local option law, that the law was in full force, is not misleading as misleading. Ellis v. State, 53 S. W. 330.

Where defendant, on prosecution for aggravated assault, pleads a former conviction of fighting in a public place, an instruction that, unless the jury believe that the offense charged in the case before them is the same offense charged in the former case, the plea of former conviction cannot avail, is misleading. Lawson v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 895.

An instruction on a trial for assault with intent to murder that accused, after being informed that prosecutor had insulted a female relative, did not have the right to interrogate the purpose of seeking any information, etc., in misleading as failing to state the offense accused was guilty of because he shot prosecutor without killing him. Cheatham v. State, 57 App. 442, 125 S. W. 566.

In a homicide in which a witness testified the deceased had fought in a room, and deceased held accused around the waist and appellant had his head under her arm, the court, in his charge on self-defense, stated that if the jury believed that some one other than accused stabbed deceased, or ladubious doubt therefore, they should acquit. Held, that the instruction was not misleading, for accused was not placed at the end of the charge on self-defense; nor did it give undue emphasis to the theory of self-defense, of which there was evidence, though accused claimed that another killed deceased. Banks v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 184.

Where, in the trial of one for giving intoxicating liquor to another in a certain town and precipit while an election was being held, an instruction that the jury should convict if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense charged at the time stated could not have been misleading, because it did not require the jury to find that the acts took place in the town and precipit charged in the information. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 313.

An instruction on a trial for theft of property wherein the value of property under the value of $50 is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail and by fine, or imprisonment without fine, and, if the jury believe that accused is guilty and liable doubt as to whether the value of the property taken in less than $50, the verdict must be guilty of theft of property under the value of $50, when read in connection with a charge that, before the jury can convict accused of a felony, the state must show beyond a reasonable doubt that $50 worth or more of property was taken at the same time, is not misleading. Wilson v. State, 76 App. 631, 158 S. W. 516.

In the following cases the instructions on self-defense were held to be confused and misleading: Novien v. State, 33 App. 141, 25 S. W. 774; Thornton v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1105; Aldridge v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 843; Andrews v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 918; Dodson v. State, 46 App. 571, 78 S. W. 940; Bearden v. State, 46 App. 134, 73 S. W. 37; Scott v. State, 46 App. 85, 79 S. W. 543; Burnam v. State (Cr. App.) 188 S. W. 757.

In the following cases the instructions on self-defense were held not to be confused or misleading: Yancey v. State, 48 App. 166, 87 S. W. 693; Brown v. State, 50 App. 79, 53 S. W. 120; Groschheim v. State, 57 App. 241, 121 S. W. 1113; Cheatham v. State, 57 App. 442, 125 S. W. 505; Gisecke v. State, 64 App. 531, 142 S. W. 1179.

85. Requests for instructions.—See notes to § 377, post.

86. Waiver of right to charge.—An accused can not be considered to have waived his right to a correct charge upon an issue raised by the evidence, because his requested charge was not as full as the law requires, nor is the trial court for such reason, relieved of its duty to give a full and correct charge. Bell v. State, 17 App. 689.

87. Examination of charge by counsel and objections thereto.—So much of this article as requires the filing of objections to the charge on submission to counsel for review.
and before it is read to the jury, which went into effect on July 1, 1913, applies to all prosecutions thereafter, though the offense was committed prior thereto.

James v. State, 72 App. 457, 163 S. W. 61; Wright v. State, 73 App. 175, 163 S. W. 976; Ybarra v. State, 73 App. 70, 164 S. W. 19; Manning v. State, 73 App. 72, 164 S. W. 11.

While in misdemeanor cases the court need not charge the jury, yet, if he does so, the charge should be submitted to counsel for inspection. Goode v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 714.

At the close of the testimony it is the court's duty to grant accused's application for examination of the court's proposed charge, in order that he may urge exceptions thereto before it is read to the jury. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 975.

88. Lost charge.—When a charge has been lost or destroyed it should be supplied in the trial court in the same manner as any other lost or destroyed record may be supplied. Lunsford v. State, 1 App. 448, 28 Am. Rep. 414.

II. DISCUSSION OF FACTS, WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE, AND SUMMING UP TESTIMONY

89. Weight of evidence in general.—Under this article the charge should be entirely free from intimating any opinion as to the weight of the evidence. The evidence must not be summed up. The measure of the law is not followed by more abstinence of the judge from any positive expression as to the weight of the evidence, but he should avoid even the appearance of any intimation as to the facts. Hoos v. State, 29 Tex. 490; Bishop v. State, 43 Tex. 590; Parrish v. State, 45 Tex. 282; Rhue v. State, 1 App. 13; M. Foster v. State, 1 App. 564; Hannah v. State, 1 App. 573; Johnson v. State, 1 App. 609; Chapman v. State, 1 App. 723; Caldwell v. State, 2 App. 10; Grant v. State, 2 App. 164; Merritt v. State, 2 App. 177; Butler v. State, 3 App. 48; Lovett v. State, 3 App. 214; Brown v. State, 3 App. 322; Rice v. State, 3 App. 351; Heefner v. State, 4 App. 251; Pharr v. State, 7 App. 472; Rojas v. State, 8 App. 49; Hodde v. State, 8 App. 383; Renfro v. State, 9 App. 442; Smith v. State, 9 App. 448; Stephens v. State, 10 App. 642; Stowers v. State, 11 App. 584; Maddox v. State, 12 App. 429; Stockton v. State, 24 App. 508, 7 S. W. 338; Hughes v. State, 32 App. 372, 23 S. W. 591; Kirk v. State, 53 App. 224, 52 S. W. 1014. The court should keep within the restrictions indicated by this section, should not advise the jury how to reason on the facts, or, by a dissertation, however shaped, instruct them on the weight and effect of evidence. Johnson v. State, 1 App. 609. A charge which is, in effect, a philosophic disquisition upon the force and nature of a particular species of evidence, amounts to an instruction of the province of the jury, and is error. Walker v. State, 152 Tex. 143, 255 S. W. 105, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Harrison v. State, 8 App. 183; Bouldin v. State, Id. 322; Hodde v. State, Id. 332; Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 361; Alonzo v. State, 15 App. 378, 49 App. 297. A charge on the weight of evidence favorable to accused is no more authorized than one favorable to the state. Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1128; Burns v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 356; Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 746; Minter v. State, 70 App. 554, 159 S. W. 288. Hence, in a rape trial, the court may say that, if accused had carnal intercourse with prosecutrix, her consent would be presumed until the state proved beyond reasonable doubt that she used all means to prevent it, and that prosecutrix's testimony that she did not consent would be no criterion, though some force was used, and that if she did not put every effort to resist, etc., accused should be acquitted, are properly refused. Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1128.

A sentence in the paragraph of a charge is not objectionable as upon the weight of the paragraph taken as a whole is not open to such objection. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273.

In a prosecution for fornication, a charge that testimony of eyewitnesses to the act is unnecessary, but that it is sufficient if the testimony or evidence would lead the jury to believe accused committed the act. Ledbetter v. State, 21 App. 344, 17 S. W. 427. A charge that if defendant left a stable and went to a restaurant to get supper, and stopped at saloons, drinking, he would not be a person traveling, within the statute, and would be guilty if he carried a pistol on his person, and it devolves on him to excuse or justify the act, is on the weight of the evidence. Ratigan v. State, 33 App. 301, 26 S. W. 497. A charge that where an instrument is shown to be a forger, and in the possession of some one than the person whose act it purports to be, such possession standing alone, is sufficient to warrant a conviction for the execution of the instrument, is on the weight of evidence. Millsap v. State, 38 App. 570, 43 S. W. 1015.

Where, on a trial for theft of cattle, defendant introduced a bill of sale, an instruction that the bill of sale was made by defendant as a sham to cover up the crime, they should consider the same with all the other facts in arriving at their verdict, is on the weight of evidence. Arismendi v. State, 41 App. 374, 54 S. W. 599. In a prosecution for violating the local option law, a charge that, in determining whether defendant acted as agent in making the sale, the jury would consider all testimony tending to show the business relation existing between defendant and the alleged principal, and testimony as to the number of cattle sent by defendant to such principal, except in the case, is on the weight of evidence. Sinclair v. State, 45 App. 487, 77 S. W. 621.

In a prosecution for theft of cotton in the open boat by a lessee from his lessor, a charge determining whether the cotton was stolen, whether the cotton was in value than the cotton defendant had approved, including a bale used to pay defendant's store account, then the jury should find that the cotton was the exclusive property of the lessor, otherwise not, is a charge on the weight of evidence; and as the ownership of the cotton was an issue in the case, on how equitably it should be divided, the charge grouping the facts and instructing the jury to determine the question by calculation is erroneous. Gibson v. State, 57 App. 220, 125 S. W. 557. In a prosecution for unlawfully altering the brand of a hog, an instruction that the weight of the evidence was for the defendant reasonable and consistent with his innocence when first accused about the hog, and that the same was probably true, the jury should acquit, unless they find that the weight of the evidence is "in the witness, evidence," is on the witness, 55 App. 545, 126 S. W. 588. Instructions on a trial for homicide that the evidence showed beyond controversy that deceased was a violent and dangerous man, and was such a man as might reasonably be expected to execute threats made by him, and these facts as establishing that defendant was entitled to being charged on the weight of evidence. Currier v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 746.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, a charge that the fact that the prosecuting witness had frequently had sexual intercourse with appellant after the first act, and her allowance of embracing, etc., from one to whom she had formerly been engaged, while she was between 13 and 15 years old, would show that she was unchaste, would have invaded the province of the jury as being a charge on the weight of the evidence. Blackburn v. State, 71 App. 625, 160 S. W. 657.

An instruction, in a prosecution for slander in imputing unchastity to a female, that the statement of a small number of persons as to reputation is insufficient to make a general reputation, especially if the small number testifying are influenced by the same principle of chance or skill, or both combined, is not on the weight of the testimony. McDonald v. State, 73 App. 125, 164 S. W. 533. An instruction informing the jury as to the law in case they found certain facts beyond a reasonable doubt is on the weight of the evidence. iPhones v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 725.

A charge that, if the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt the allegations of the indictment, they would find accused guilty, is not objectionable. State v. Delion, 58 App. 573, 140 S. W. 781.

A charge that: "If you believe W. knew when defendant put his hand in W.'s pocket, and took W.'s pocketbook in his hand, you will acquit him. If defendant had the pocketbook in his hand before W. knew it, W.'s subsequent discovery of the fact would make no difference, and defendant could not be guilty; but unless you should find that defendant did have the pocketbook in his hand before W. knew it, you should acquit him," is not a charge on the evidence. Philes v. State, 36 App. 290, 38 S. W. 99.

Where there was evidence that defendant was seen going through the pockets of a drunken man, asking him whether he put his hand out of the pockets, that he had certain coins in his hand, etc., a charge "that it is only necessary that the property stolen should have gone into the possession of the accused, the accused need not be carried away, nor need it be shown that the offense," is not on the weight of evidence. Newman v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 258.

A charge that the characteristics of a gaming table are, first, that it is a game, second that it has a keeper, dealer, or exhibitor, third, that it must be exhibited for the purpose of obtaining bets, and that each bet of betting makes the keeper guilty of an offense, though the table is one licensed by law, and that the legal meaning of the term "bet," is the mutual agreement and tender of a gift of something valuable, which is to belong to one of the contending parties, according to the result of chance or skill, or both combined, is not on the weight of evidence. Mayo v. State (Cr. App.) 82 S. W. 515.

A charge that, if the jury believed that the state introduced a witness who testified substantially that accused had told him that there was not a man with decedent's name that had nerve enough to use a knife, pistol, or anything with which to harm the defendant, he submitted to the jury whether such testimony had been introduced, and whether they should credit it as well as the weight they should give it, and is not a charge that is a matter of fact but testimony on the weight of the testimony. Day v. State. 61 App. 114, 124 S. W. 215.

In a trial for embezzlement, an instruction that, if the jury found from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant and the prosecuting witness agreed that the defendant was to run the store for the prosecuting witness, and receive for his services 20 per cent. of the net profits, the defendant was an agent and employee, and not a partner, is not upon the weight of testimony. O'Marrow v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 292.

An instruction on a trial for horse theft that if accused had delivered the horses to the prosecutor as a pledge for a debt, and if accused fraudulently took from the possession of the prosecutor the horses without his consent, and with the intent to deprive him of the value, he was guilty, is not objectionable as on the weight of the evidence. Haley v. State, 70 App. 29, 156 S. W. 657.

An instruction that a charge must be proved affirmatively, but may not be proved positively beyond a reasonable doubt, but may be proved by circumstantial evidence and that it is only necessary that from all the facts of the case the jury may reasonably conclude the offense was committed in the county alleged, and if from all facts the jury cannot reasonably conclude that the offense was committed in S. county, they should acquit, is not upon the weight of the evidence. Reynolds v. State, 71 App. 451, 160 S. W. 362.

Where certain testimony was given in the absence of the jury, to determine its admissibility, and then the testimony was taken in, the jury was returned, and during the examination the court suggested to the district attorney that, in order to connect it, "You might ask him the question I did while the jury was out," such suggestion is not objectionable, as the weight of the evidence. Belcher v. State, 71 App. 661, 160 S. W. 362.

For rape, an instruction that there was evidence that the prosecuting witness stated on the night of the crime, when accused was carried before her, that he was not guilty of the charge, and evidence that the following day she stated that he was not guilty, instruction that the latter statement was not to be considered in evidence tending to show accused's guilt, but might be considered for what the jury thought.
it worth in determining the weight to be given the testimony of the prosecuting without the weight of the evidence, is not erroneous. Hemphill v. State, 72 App. 628, 105 S. W. 402, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914. An instruction that if defendant did unlawfully and falsely assume and pretend to be a de­puty sheriff of F. county, and then and there take on himself to act as such officer, and did demand the arrest of M. and, while pretending to be such deputy sheriff, did demand that M. submit to arrest by him while falsely pretending to be such a deputy sheriff, and that in truth he was not a deputy sheriff, and was not authorized to make such arrest, to know that he was not a deputy sheriff, then the jury should find him guilty, etc., is not on the weight of the evidence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 714. In a prosecution for statutory rape, where accused, on a previous trial, had been acquitted under an indictment charging a different act, a charge that the jury could not be the act against accused, as he had been acquitted thereof, if on the weight of the evidence, is not prejudicial to accused. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 536.

In a prosecution for theft from the person, an instruction that if the jury found from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, that accused was guilty of an at­tempt to commit theft from the person—that is, that in the county and state named in the indictment, on or about the date named, before the presentment of the indictment, accused did attempt to unlawfully, fraudulently, and privately take from the person of the one named corporal, personal property without the know­ledge of such owner, and with an intent to deprive him of its value and appropriate it to his own use—then the jury could find accused guilty of an attempt to com­mit theft from the person, is not on the weight of the evidence. Bell v. State, 70 App. 466, 156 S. W. 1194.

90. Remarks and conduct of court in general.—Where, preceding defendant's trial for murder, wherein self-defense was alleged, the court, on several occasions, delivered a lecture to the petit jurors, in the absence of defendant, in which he severely criticized the law of self-defense and the doctrine of reasonable doubt, both of which he held up to ridicule and contempt, such action is violative of this article. Chapman v. State, 42 App. 135, 57 S. W. 966; Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 967.

91. Comments on facts or evidence in general.—An instruction that the jury could not consider a certain matter of accused's confession is prop­erly refused as commenting on the testimony, which may not be done against the state any more than against defendant. Harris v. State, 64 App. 594, 144 S. W. 322. An instruction in a prosecution for criminal assault upon a young girl that, whereas an injury is actually caused by the person injured, the intent to injure is presumed, is not a comment upon the evidence. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 635. In a prosecution for burglary, where the state introduced evidence of defendant's explanation of the possession of the stolen property, a charge that the evidence is contrary to the possession, if the property was pur­chased if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to his so purchasing it, is not a comment on the evidence. Coggins v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 311.

Where, in a prosecution for hog theft, a witness testified that he had followed the tracks of the hogs alleged to have been stolen, and his verdict did not alto­gether harmonize with that of other witnesses with reference to the tracks, he having testified that he drank egg-nog the morning he followed the tracks, it is er­ror for the court to impress on the jury this fact, as to its weight. State v. S. 94 App. 561.

92. Statements and review of evidence.—The court may state to the jury that the evidence of a particular fact, when relied on by a party as a condition to be true, is not evidence. Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713. And it is not error for the court to comment on the identical evidence given at the trial. Wright v. State, 97 Tex. 217. But the court may call the jury's attention to the fact that there is other evidence in the case tending to corroborate an accomplice, leaving the jury to give this evidence such weight as it sees fit.

In a prosecution for robbery an instruction detailing merely the facts charged in the indictment, and stating that such matters must be proved beyond a rea­sonable doubt to justify a conviction, is not error. Young v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 241.

93. Opinion or belief as to facts.—A charge is erroneous which in any way, and to any degree, conveys to the jury the impression of the judge on any of the evidence. Gibbs v. State, 1 App. 13; Hannah v. State, 1 App. 579; Grant v. State, 2 App. 164; Merritt v. State, 2 App. 177; Butler v. State, 3 App. 48; Brown v. State, 3 App. 68; Rice v. 3 App. 676; Stuckey v. State, 7 App. 179; Pharr v. State, 7 App. 472; Hodde v. State, 8 App. 282; Renfro v. State, 9 App. 289; Stephens v. State, 10 App. 129; Dobbs v. State, 11 App. 114; 100 S. W. 949; Simmons v. State, 15 App. 441, 117 S. W. 141. It is er­ror to permit to law involved so as to create an impression on the jurors' minds as to the court's opinion of the facts to which the principle is applicable. Ferrin v. State, 46 App. 560, 78 S. W. 930.

The charge should always contain the instruction that if the jury do not believe the defendant guilty they should acquit him. The omission of such instruction has a tendency to impress the jury with the belief that, in the opinion of the court, the defendant is not entitled to an acquittal. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 721.

A charge admonishing the jury against assessing the punishment by lot should be preceded by the clause, “if you find defendant guilty.” Hart v. State, 47 App. 156, 52 S. W. 652.

A charge that “an alibi is a species of defense often set up in criminal cases, and one which seems to figure in this case,” is erroneous, because calculated to impress upon the jury, that the court regarded the defense as a pretense. Walker v. State, 27 Tex. 357. Where the state introduced an application for continuance, as the only instruction by the defendant, the jury might “believe such of the allegations therein as incriminated defendant, and reject the others,” is erroneous, as an expression of the court’s opinion on the evidence. Rinfret v. State, 94 App. 259. On a poison that the court admitted evidence of the conversations and acts of four other persons as tending to show a conspiracy to murder defendant is erroneous, as indicating the belief of the court that the evidence proved a conspiracy. Nelson v. State, 43 App. 555, 67 S. W. 329. Where defendants were accused of wilfully making an obstruction on a railroad track, a charge that “the meaning of the term ‘wilfully’ is that the obstruction was, by defendants, placed upon said railroad track with an evil intent,” is erroneous, because apt to lead the jury to believe that the court thought danger to proceed on the track.

80 State v. Walker, 55 Tex. 415. The action of the court during the examination of a witness for accused in leaving the bench and walking to the witness, and asking her a question, and remarking after the answer by the witness, “That is all I want to know,” and going outside of the statute, is vitiated by the ground that the word “substantive,” as used, was calculated to mislead the jury to believe that the court believed that the evidence was sufficient to authorize a conviction without such evidence. Harvey v. State, 57 App. 5, 121 S. W. 691, 136 Am. St. Rep. 971. A charge stating the general character of jurors and as to what they should do, and embracing a statement that the law required the court to give instructions and the jury to observe them, and that to be guilty of disobedience or violation of such a rule, might cause a reversal of the case, is error, as not amounting to anything concerning disobedience of the instructions, involve the expression of an opinion by the court that accused was guilty. Ward v. State, 59 App. 62, 126 S. W. 1145. An instruction defining seduction as the leading of an unmarried female under 25 years of age away from the path of virtue, etc., is not erroneous as leading the jury to think that the court believed the female to be virtuous. Browning v. State, 64 App. 148, 142 S. W. 1.

94. Inferences from evidence.—On a trial for an unlawful marriage, an instruction that, when a petition was shown to have been living at a certain time, his continued existence for ten years thereafter is to be an inference of the province of the jury. Hull v. State, 7 App. 593. In a trial for horse theft an instruction that if the horses, prior to the theft, were last seen in the county where the theft was laid, the law presumed they were stolen, and the weight in on the weight of the evidence. Williams v. State, 11 App. 275. An instruction that the jury may presume an agency in a sale of liquor from the circumstances shown is on the weight of evidence. Brann v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 946. Where, in a prosecution for rape, other acts of intercourse are proven, it is error to instruct the jury that there is evidence to show that defendant raped prosecutrix at various other times. Owens v. State, 39 App. 391, 46 S. W. 240. Where the evidence showed that prosecutrix was brought to the office of the county attorney on two different days, and that she disclosed the facts on the second day, whereupon the county attorney reported them to the county attorney of another county, and there was also evidence that after the latter county attorney received the message prosecutrix and her mother were summoned before the grand jury, which evidence was introduced to corroborate the theory of the state to disprove the theory of the state, it is error to instruct in the event prosecution had been concert in malice, it is error to instruct that prosecutrix finally disclosed the name of defendant, such instruction being equivalent to saying that she did so reluctantly, and hence was the more to be believed by the jury. Denton v. State, 46 App. 135, 79 S. W. 560.

95. Intent.—A charge, in a prosecution for aggravated assault, that, where an injury is actually caused by violence to the person or to the feeling of a person, the intent to injure is presumed, and it rests with the person inflicting the injury to show the accident or innocent intention, and that the injury intended may be either bodily pain, constraint, a sense of shame, or other disagreeable emotions of the mind, is not on the weight of evidence. Stripling v. State, 47 App. 117, 80 S. W. 378.

96. Possession of stolen property and explanation thereof.—A charge authorizing a conviction on unexplained recent possession of property alleged to have been stolen is on the weight of the evidence. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 781. See, also, Martinez v. State, 41 Tex. 164; McFer v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 512; State v. Stein, 48 App. 113, 77 S. W. 693, 60 S. W. 563. A charge that possession of stolen property is not of itself, sufficient to authorize a conviction. 469.
May v. State (Cr. App.) 51 S. W. 342. So, also, is a charge that if the property was stolen, and recently, there was found in defendant's possession, and he made a reasonable explanation thereof, the jury could not convict unless satisfied of the falsity of his explanation. Hopperwood v. State, 23 App. 15, 44 S. W. 841. So, also, is a charge that the possession must have been recent, unexplained, personal, and furnished, a charge of possession of stolen property, Cleavinger v. State, 1 App. 563; Merritt v. State, 2 App. 177; Arispe v. State, 36 App. 581, 10 S. W. 111; Polkard v. State, 22 App. 197, 26 S. W. 79; Wheeler v. State, 31 App. 359, 59 S. W. 513; McCulloh v. State, 5 App. 522, 55 S. W. 986; Grande v. Jv. State, 37 App. 60, 23 S. W. 617; Berry v. State, 37 App. 51, 28 S. W. 812; Trail v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 92; Hallow v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 513; McCulloh v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 274; Dyer v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 566; Hurt v. State, 47 App. 160, 66 S. W. 622; Lee v. State, 47 App. 174, 122 S. W. 388; Harris v. State, 71 App. 403, 150 S. W. 447.

97. — Flight.—An instruction that the "flight of a person suspected of crime is a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending to prove a consciousness of guilt * * * not as a part of the doing of the act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind," and that at most it is but a circumstance tending to establish a consciousness of guilt in the person fleeing, is on the weight of the evidence. Cleavinger v. State, 43 App. 273, 65 S. W. 59. See, also, Seeley v. State, 43 App. 66, 63 S. W. 269.

98. Assumption as to facts.—An instruction assuming the existence of facts not proven is erroneous. White v. State, 13 Tex. 137; Harvin v. State, 13 App. 192; Brewer v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 139. It is improper to assume that any fact has been proved against accused, however strong the evidence may be. White v. State, Tex., 26 Tex. 203; Bergstrom v. State, 26 Tex. 606; Long v. State, 1 App. 466; Brown v. State, 2 App. 294; Baker v. State, 6 App. 344; Webb v. State, 8 App. 115; Ebb v. State, 8 App. 172; Kellogg v. State, 58 App. 52, 124 S. W. 558. But it is not error to use the form, "if it be proved so and so, then you will find," etc. McGaffey v. State, 4 Tex. 156. A witness having denied a certain conversation with the wife of accused, an instruction that the jury should disregard the conversation, save for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness, is erroneous, as assuming the fact of such conversation. Spivey v. State, 45 App. 496, 77 S. W. 444.

A statement in a charge that it was alleged in the indictment that a certain person was a servant of another is not tantamount to telling the jury such was the fact. Hanks v. State, 50 App. 135, 55 S. W. 164. In a prosecution for being an accomplice in a murder by agreeing to make horse tracks around decedent's house to divert suspicion from decedent's wife and another, alleged to have been principals, a charge that there was no direct evidence that accused agreed to make tracks to and from the house, evidence thereof being circumstantial, and that the jury would not be warranted in believing that accused made the tracks, unless the circumstances necessary to establish the fact were proved beyond reasonable doubt, and found consistent with the claim that he had agreed to make the tracks, and consistent with each other and with any other reasonable conclusion, and established beyond reasonable doubt that he so agreed, and if they had any reasonable doubt that he made the agreement to induce the commission of the offense and divert suspicion from decedent's wife and another, they could not consider the tracks proved made by him, and it was not error to conclude that he agreed to make them, is on the weight of evidence, since it singles out and assumes as a fact the agreement to make tracks, and that no witness testified directly to that fact, and instructed as to circumstantial evidence as to that fact. Malone, Beard v. State, 57 App. 232, 123 S. W. 70.

In a prosecution for horse theft, an instruction that if accused's statement when first questioned was unreasonable and contradictory, and did not account for his possession in a manner consistent with his innocence, the jury should find him guilty, is not fatally defective in the use of the words "and contradictory," though such words should be omitted as tending to mislead the jury to assume that the court was of the opinion that the statements of accused were contradictory and inculminating. Presley v. State, 69 App. 162, 151 S. W. 322.

99. Admitted or uncontroverted facts.—It is not error for the trial court to assume in its instruction a fact which is undisputed in evidence. Fainley v. State, 27 App. 146, 11 S. W. 105, 11 Am. St. Rep. 182; Strang v. State, 32 App. 219, 22 S. W. 686; Holliday v. State, 39 App. 155, 32 S. W. 658; Magazine v. State, 47 App. 66, 84 S. W. 622; Dugas v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 739; Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 226; Crane v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 153. Where deceased, an officer, was killed by defendant in attempting to rescue a prisoner, there being no question as to the legality of the arrest, the court is authorized in assuming that the arrest was legal. Sierra v. State, 27 App. 430, 35 S. W. 983. In a prosecution for robbery the court must not assume that prosecutor's ownership and want of consent to the taking of the property, and the commission of the crime itself, have been established unless there can be no controversy on those questions. Bradshaw v. State, 44 S. W. 777. In a prosecution for violating the local option law it was not error to charge that the law was in force in the territory where the offense was charged, there being no conflict as to the validity of the election. Williams v. State, 37 App. 258, 29 S. W. 604. See, also, Bell v. State, 55 S. W. 18; Brawley v. State, 47 App. (Cr. App.) 91 S. W. 573; Ellis v. State, 59 App. 669, 130 S. W. 171; Moreno v. State, 64 App. 660, 143 S. W. 156, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 865. On a prosecution for theft it is proper to assume in an instruction that accused took the property, where the only defense was that of taking care of it for the owner. Tanner v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 489. Where, in a prosecution for robbery, it was admitted that accused and another took the money from witness, and the only dispute was whether witness gave it to defendant in payment for clothing, or whether it was taken from him by force, the jury instructed that if the accused, or any accomplice, was found guilty of possessing stolen clothing from accused, such fact would not justify accused in assaulting witness and taking the money from him, but that such act would be robbery justifying a conviction of proper. Beard v. State, 44 App. 402, 71 S. W. 900. An instruction of an instruction, on self-defense, in which "required the jury to believe the threats were made," is without merit, where it was not disputed that such threats were made. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 394.

100. Facts established by testimony.—The rule which forbids the judge to charge the jury upon the weight of evidence does not bar the weight, as a matter of course, from being shown as true, by the language used in his charge, a fact clearly established, and as to which there is no conflict in the evidence. Wintz v. Morrison, 17 Tex. 273, 18 Am. 655; Denham v. Trinity County Lumber Co., 73 Tex. 78, 11 S. W. 161; O'Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 295; Mueley v. State, 31 App. 165, 18 S. W. 411, 19 S. W. 915. Where the value of stolen property is proven beyond doubt, it is not error to assume the value as proven. Nelson v. State, 35 App. 268, 22 S. W. 906. Where the testimony is unequivocal that a witness, an accomplice, actually saw the defendant, that he is such and that a conviction cannot be had on his testimony unless corroborated is not improper Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 825. See also, Winfield v. State, 44 App. 475, 72 S. W. 152; Espinoza v. State, 73 App. 287, 165 S. W. 119. Where the evidence clearly shows that two persons together in passing forged checks, one keeping watch, while his confederate is passing, or attempting to pass, such checks, accused is not prejudiced by an assumption that he is a principal offender. Mason v. State, 32 App. 95, 22 S. W. 144, 408. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor in a prohibited territory, where the orders of the commissioner's court had been introduced in evidence showing local option to be in force in the county in which the venue was laid, the court may assume that fact in its charge. Creed v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 891. Where two shots were fired at deceased, and the body showed that one bullet passed through his heart and would cause instant death, it was not error to assume that the last shot was the one which caused the death. Morgan v. State, 43 App. 545, 67 S. W. 429.

Purport and effect of evidence.—Where, on a trial for murder, accused introduces in evidence a contract between the state and two persons charged as his accomplices, stating the testimony they would give for the purpose of impeaching one of them, who had testified for the state, it is error to assume in the accused's favor the contract as original evidence against himself. Faulkner v. State, 43 App. 311, 65 S. W. 1093.

102. Confessions or admissions.—A charge that the state had introduced testimony to prove the confession of accused, made before the grand jury, and other confessions of accused, and that, although accused's confessions showed the commission of the offense, the jury should find accused not guilty unless the state had corroborated the confessions by other evidence, assumes that the statement made before the grand jury, as well as the other statements, were confessions of guilt. Barnes v. State, 46 App. 513, 81 S. W. 755. On a trial for complicity in a murder, an instruction that admissions, made before the grand jury, in the absence, have been admitted solely on the issue of the principal's guilt, and can not be considered for any other purpose, does not assume as true the controverted fact of the making of such admissions. Willkerson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 560.

103. Truth or weight of evidence.—An instruction that a certain witness is an accomplice, according to his own testimony, is erroneous, as it assumes that his testimony is true. So, also, is an instruction not to find accused guilty on the testimony of a certain witness unless his testimony has been corroborated, where the witness testified that he was an accomplice, for the same reason. Bell v. State, 39 App. 677, 47 S. W. 1010. See, also, Jones v. State, 44 App. 657, 73 S. W. 845; Hart v. State, 47 App. 156, 82 S. W. 652; Washington v. State, 47 App. 131, 82 S. W. 653; Garlas v. State, 48 App. 449, 88 S. W. 346; Barton v. State, 49 App. 121, 90 S. W. 877; Dixon v. State (Cr. App.) 90 S. W. 578; James v. State, 72 App. 155, 161 S. W. 472. But an instruction, in a prosecution for incest, that the jury believed certain facts, prosecutrix was an accomplice, and that her testimony would be sufficient to warrant a conviction, unless the jury would believe the same to be true, and unless she be corroborated by other testimony, does not assume the truth of the testimony of prosecutrix. Gillespie v. State, 49 App. 540, 93 S. W. 987. In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, it is error, in referring in its charge to testimony of defendant's witnesses to assume that such witnesses contradicted each other, and also to assume a contradiction between two witnesses, where none existed. Dina v. State, 46 App. 402, 78 S. W. 229; 100 S. W. 466. An accused was indicted for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, a charge that knowledge on the part of accused that the person to whom he sold the liquor was a minor was an essential element of the offense, and must be proved, but that such knowledge might be shown by circumstantial evidence, is not objectionable, as the facts adduced in support of such a positive evidence of accused's knowledge. Astin v. State (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 397.

104. Issues and theories of case.—The preliminary statement in the opening paragraph of the charge of the nature of the offense imputed by the indictment is objectionable to the objection that it is judicial assumption. Tuttle v. State, 31 App. 387, 20 S. W. 741; Hitting v. McGrew v. State, 31 App. 336, 29 S. W. 740. The charge that if the jury believed that after accused justifiably fired the first shot, 471.
deceased ran and accused pursued and killed him, though not believing himself in danger, defendant was guilty, does not assume that defendant, State, 48 App. 343, 88 S. W. 228. In a prosecution for rape, an instruction that if at the time prosecuted was "under the age of 15 years and was not the wife of the defendant, you will find the defendant guilty of rape as charged," does not assume that at time of 15 years, or that she and the defendant were not married. Haywood v. State, 61 App. 92, 134 S. W. 218. And a charge that if, at any time within one year before a certain date, accused had carnal knowledge of his wife, etc., is not based upon the plea, evidence, as assuming that prosecuted was a female and under the age of 15 years. Eckermann v. State, 57 App. 287, 123 S. W. 424. In a prosecution for assault to kill, a charge assuming as a fact that defendants, or one of them, were in the presence, beginning, and had assaulted the plaintiff, and had with unlawful intent, when such conduct on the part of defendants was a disputed issue, is erroneous. Young v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1046. Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault and battery arising out of the alleged poisoning of accused's chickens, the issue was sharply raised that prosecuting witness and not accused was the attacking party, an instruction that the jury might consider testimony as to poison being deposited on accused's premises for no other purpose than in mitigation of punishment, in the event that accused was found guilty, assumes therefor because of the influence of the chicken thereby eliminating the issue of self-defense. Parish v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 327.

105. — Insanity.—An instruction that mere weakness of mind is no defense to the accused, is not sufficient to restrain the jury from inferring the issue of the fact charged against him, and knew the difference between the right and wrong thereof, does not assume that accused was weak-minded. Cox v. State, 60 App. 471, 132 S. W. 125.

106. — Intent.—In a prosecution for forgery a charge that if defendant made the instrument in writing which was alleged to have been forged, and signed a certain name thereto, and when he did so intended to sign another name, and did so without authority from such person, to find defendant guilty, does not assume that defendant signed the instrument, and that when he did so believed that he was signing such name, is error. Kellogg v. State, 58 App. 334, 124 S. W. 315. In a prosecution for the theft of a steer, where it was shown that the animal owned by prosecutor and the one owned by defendant's father-in-law were very much alike, defendant claimed that he had taken the one owned by the latter, with his consent, a charge that if defendant took the animal in such a manner as to constitute theft, and that the consent of his father-in-law was used as a pretext, and that he took it with the fraudulent intent to deprive the owner of its value, and to his own use, the consent of the father-in-law did not justify defendant, is erroneous as an assumption of fact by the court. Hazlett v. State (Cr. App.) 96 S. W. 36.

107. — Time and place of offense.—Where prosecuteur and witness are uncertain as to the date of the offense, and only fix it by reference to other circumstances, the date on which is disputed, it is error to instruct the jury to find the offense connected with his will be to a particular date. Owens v. State, 39 App. 231, 46 S. W. 249. In a prosecution for practicing medicine without a license, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether defendant was a resident of the city, it is error for the court, on the request of the defendant for a statement of what constituted a resident and what did not, to inform the jury that the uncontradicted testimony in the case showed him to be a resident of B. county. Kellogg v. State, 58 App. 84, 124 S. W. 558.

108. — Facts connected with crime charged in general.—Where there is no evidence to prove facts essential to accused's conviction it is error for the court to instruct in such instructions the existence of such facts. Such a charge is erroneous unless the facts were proven. Berghstrom v. State, 36 Tex. 26. In the absence of evidence in regard to possession of recently stolen property, a charge thereon is erroneous as assuming a fact. Leonard v. State, 57 App. 254, 122 S. W. 549. Where stolen property was found about 30 days after the theft, in the possession of defendant's father, defendant not being present, nor shown to have been in the possession thereof at all, an instruction that the jury should convict, if such property was recently after its theft found in defendant's possession, under circumstances requiring of him an explanation of his possession, which he failed to make, and that his possession thereof was personal, and unexplained, is erroneous as assuming a fact which occurred a month subsequent to the alleged theft. Spillman v. State, 36 App. 607, 44 S. W. 146. An instruction that if defendant and a stranger, the third person, convinced together to make a sale to the witness for the purpose of evading the law, the transaction was a sale, is erroneous for assuming the fact of conci- nance, not shown by the evidence. Randall v. State, 49 App. 281, 96 S. W. 1021. Where defendant's father approached and struck deceased, who, a few moments before, had had trouble with another son, and deceased shot him whereupon defendant killed deceased, an instruction that the jury should convict defendant of murder in the second degree if they found that his father attacked deceased, and during the conflict, without deliberation, formed a design to kill deceased, immediately did so, and they should further find that at the time of the killing deceased had done nothing that caused defendant to believe that he intended his father's death, is improper, since it assumes that the attack made by defendant's father on deceased was unlawful, and that defendant knew it was unlawful. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 289. On a trial for pandering, an instruction, in response to an inquiry by the jury, that if accused, knowing the purpose for which it was to be used, secured a place for a woman in a house of prostitution the offense would be complete, and it was proper for the jury to consider her request to go there as meaning the same in law as
5. As has been pointed out, when defendant made the statement under oath he believed the facts therein stated to be true, he would not be guilty, does not tell the jury that the statement was false. Wilson v. State, 49 App. 496, 162 S. W. 1142. A charge stating that "where an injury is actually caused by violence," etc., following the words of the statute, is not an assumption that injury has been proved in the case. Stripling v. State, 47 App. 117, 89 S. W. 477. A charge that if it had been proved in the possession of another by virtue of a contract of hiring, and unlawfully converted the property to his own use, he was guilty, etc., does not assume that there was a contract. In Lawrence v. State, 48 App. 282, 57 S. W. 1005, the statement of a man for, in marrying his half-niece, where the indictment charged and the evidence shows that his wife is the only daughter of his half-sister, an instruction that if the jury believe defendant's wife is the daughter of a half-sister of defendant, he should be convicted, does not assert that the mother of defendant's wife is his half-sister.

Simon v. State, 31 App. 186, 20 S. W. 399, 716. Am. St. Rep. 802. An instruction that two sales of whisky would not of itself constitute the offense of selling intoxicating liquors, but that before any could be convicted who was engaged in such occupation the state must prove at least two sales, does not assume that accused was engaged in such business. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 555. The charge in bigamy, that if the jury find and believe from the evidence that on a certain date defendant married G., and there herself, and that said former marriage had been lawfully solemnized, does not assume as a fact the former marriage, leaving to the jury the question of it having been lawfully solemnized. Edwards v. State, 73 App. 330, 166 S. W. 547.

109. Character of article used in committing offense.—Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault, it was shown that accused fired at prosecutor with a double-barreled shotgun, and there was no question but that the assault was made with a gun, and that in the manner of its use it was a deadly weapon, the court, fact, and charge that a assault is aggravated when committed with a gun; the same being a deadly weapon. Kosmoski v. State, 59 App. 256, 127 S. W. 1056. An instruction that the means by which a homicide is committed should be considered in determining accused's intent, if the instrument by which the accused is not presumed to be of the weight of the evidence when considered with reference to accused, where he shot decedent with a pistol, and the evidence raised the issue of apparent intent, but did not show that deceased drew any weapon. Andrus v. State, 73 App. 325, 165 S. W. 189. An instruction that if accused killed deceased with a razor, and that said razor was a deadly weapon, to find defendant guilty, does not tell the jury that the razor was a deadly weapon. Spears v. State, 41 App. 66, 56 S. W. 347. Where the character of an assault made upon defendant's wife, as shown by the injuries inflicted on her, was such that the jury, in a prosecution of the husband for her murder, was authorized to find that he used a deadly weapon, instructions were properly given that, if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt the defendant with his hands or feet, or any instrument or object, or in any manner unlawfully killed the woman, and further believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the instrument or object used, if any, by the deceased, was deadly weapon, defendant could not be convicted, and, if not being on the weight of the evidence, Paschal v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1667.

110. Commission of offense.—A charge that "the jury are instructed to have the right to a Bringing the charged to a punishment upon an innocent party," is prejudicial, in assuming that the law has been violated. Bradford v. State, 25 App. 723, 9 S. W. 46. Where, on a charge that the trial for theft of a horse, defendant's counsel insisted that, as it was shown that defendant had executed a bill of sale to the horse, the sale could be proved only by the bill of sale, it is error to charge that "the sale of a stolen horse by a thief is not required to be evidenced by a bill of sale in order to his being criminally prosecuted for the theft of the horse," since such charge assumed that the horse was stolen, and that defendant was the thief. White v. State, 21 App. 173, 17 S. W. 727. Where, in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, the court, over defendant's objection, read the article of the Penal Code relating to keeping a disorderly house, and the punishment therefor, and then verbally instructed them that a reasonable doubt that defendant owned or leased "that house," they should find defendant guilty, the charge is on the weight of the evidence. Harkey v. State, 33 App. 160, 26 S. W. 291, 47 Am. St. Rep. 19. An instruction that, if deceased was killed, certain witnesses were accomplices in the crime, assumes that the killing was a crime, that such crime was committed. Barton v. State, 49 App. 121, 90 S. W. 877. A charge on circumstantial evidence concluding "and produces in your minds a reasonable and moral certainty that accused was present at the time of the commission of the crime, and did commit the offense charged against him," assumes that the offense was committed. Beaver v. State (Cr. App.) 86 S. W. 1020. In a murder trial, an instruction that, if accused did not engage in any shooting between decedent and his deputy, on the other, nor participate in the defendant's act as a principal offender, until after being fired upon by defendant or his deputy, and then procured a weapon and fired or attempted to fire at or on his deputy and his deputy was not guilty is erroneous, as a charge upon the evidence. Thomas v. State, 62 App. 815, 84 S. W. 234. An instruction on a trial for seduction that, if prosecutrix had carnal intercourse... with some other person before she had intercourse with accused, he must be acquitted and not found guilty. Condon v. State, 43 Ala. 345, 18 S. W. 594. An instruction that a state witness, who had pleaded guilty was "an accomplice with the defendant," is erroneous, as withdrawing the question of defendant's guilt from the jury. Spears v. State, 24 Tex. App. 537, 7 S. W. 245. An instruction to the jury that, "if they believe from the evidence that the defendant did assault the said B. with a knife, under circumstances not amounting to an intent to murder as hereinafter explained, they will, if they so believe from the evidence, find the defendant guilty of an aggravated assault," assumes the defendant to be guilty of one or other of the offenses named, and invades the province of the jury by instructing them to find the defendant guilty, at any rate, of the lesser grade of offense. Warren v. State, 22 Tex. App. 383, 3 S. W. 245. In a prosecution for aggravated assault a charge that if defendant "an adult male," did commit an assault," on prosecution and been defined as an assault by defendant of an aggravated assault, is bad as assuming that defendant was an adult male, and committed the assault. Holliday v. State, 35 Tex. App. 333, 32 S. W. 245. A charge that the defendant guilty of murdering, a charge for the evidence as to whether accused is guilty as a principal, accused's guilt must not be assumed, and so charged, but the charge should be framed in accordance with the

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

(Title 8)

An instruction that the facts proved should not only be consistent with the guilt of accused, but inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis, and producing a result which is unreasonable and a reasonable doubt to arise in the defendant's mind as a result of the charge, is erroneous in assuming that the entry was false. Pope v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 150. An instruction that the facts proved should not only be consistent with the guilt of accused, but inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis, and producing a result which is unreasonable and a reasonable doubt to arise in the defendant's mind as a result of the charge, is erroneous in assuming that the entry was false. Pope v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 150.
5) his with the defendant's guilt," in the statement in a charge, "These necessary facts must be consistent with each other and with the other facts sought to be established. If, as defendant's assault, State, murder with water, and the facts are taken together, must be of a conclusive nature leading on the witness" etc., no make the charge one on the weight of evidence. If not being thereby assumed or charged that defendant is guilty. Gordon v. State, 62 App. 616, 128 S. W. 745. An instruction to the jury that you have a reasonable doubt as to the facts will acquit him, and say, by your verdict, 'Not guilty,'" does not assume the guilt of defendant. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 560. A charge that, "in this case, the state's witness C is an accomplice to the offense charged" is not tantamount to telling the jury that defendant was guilty of the offense, or that C was an accomplice with defendant, and is not objectionable there being no question as to the fact of C's connection with the affair. Hudson v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 452. Where the testimony shows that a witness was an accomplice, the fact that the court informed the jury that the witness was to be regarded as an accomplice, and hence needed corroborated, is not erroneous, as being equivalent to telling the jury that accused was guilty, since the witness could be an accomplice regardless of accused's participation in the crime. Hatcher v. State, 65 S. W. 95. After having instructed the court instructed the jury that, if they have a reasonable doubt of such murder being of the first degree, they should acquit defendant of this degree of murder, "and then further consider the next degree of murder, and if from the evidence you believe that such murder as the doubt the construction of murder with 'implied malice' as that kind of malice is explained to you in this charge, you will find him guilty of murder in the second degree." The charge is not objectionable as assuming that defendant committed the murder in question, or that any murder was committed by any person, the defendant was guilty of same. Mass v. State, 59 App. 338, 128 S. W. 394. In a trial for cattle theft, an instruction that if the cattle were fraudulently taken, and accused and another, and acted together in taking the cattle, if they were taken, etc., is not upon the weight of the evidence. Ellington v. State, 65 App. 627, 140 S. W. 1101. In a prosecution for seduction say that the accused's alibi for which the court instructions, tells the jury that a woman can beifed but once, "and you cannot convict the defendant for seduction in this case by reason of intercourse with her" subsequent to their first act of copulation, if any there was, is not objectionable as assuming that defendant seduced prosecutrix. Knight v. State, 61 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967. An instruction that "if there be no reasonable doubt that the defendant in a sudden transport of passion aroused by an adequate cause, either alone, or acting with W., under such circumstances as to constitute him a principal, killed deceased, you will find him guilty of manslaughter, and if you believe W. killed deceased, you have a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant acted as a principal, you cannot hold him responsible for W.'s acts," is not objectionable as assuming that defendant acted either alone or as a principal in the commission of a homicide. Cukierski v. State (Cr. App.) 213 S. W. 205. An instruction that the defendant killed and injured, and second degree and manslaughter, that if accused killed deceased by any means, he should be found guilty, does not assume that deceased was dead and that accused killed him. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 949. A charge that if accused mingled a noxious poison with water with intent to kill his wife, and if the noxious poison was strychnine, and that after so mingling said strychnine with water, he, with intent to kill, caused her to drink the water with which the noxious poison had been mingled, then she should find him guilty, does not assume that accused mingled strychnine with water. Ellington v. State, 48 App. 160, 87 S. W. 153. An instruction that, if accused made the assault charged and his codefendant was present, etc., the codefendant was guilty, does not assume that accused made an assault. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 140, 184 S. W. 348. On a trial for the larceny of a cow, an instruction that if the jury believed that accused stole the cow, and that it was the property of a prosecutor, and that accused fraudulently took the cow, if he did take it, with intent to deprive the owner thereof, etc., accused was guilty, does not assume that the cow was taken by accused. Richards v. State, 59 App. 143, 127 S. W. 823. A charge on the defense of insanity, which states under what circumstances the jury should acquit accused, if they found he did commit the act of burglary does not assume the guilt of accused. Smith v. State, 61 App. 22, 135 S. W. 623. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, an instruction that if accused cut the prosecuting witness, and if a minute or two before a blacksmith shop witness had made one or more assaults upon the accused, which caused pain or bloodshed, such facts were sufficient in law to reduce the offense, if any, from assault with intent to murder to aggravated assault, and if the jury believed that accused's mind was thereby rendered incapable of cool reflection, and that it was not sufficient to convict the blacksmith shop witness at the moment the accused attacked to the house charged, etc., defendant would only be guilty of aggravated assault, does not charge as a matter of law that accused was guilty of assault with intent to kill. Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 183, 157 S. W. 187. Where in a prosecution for arson, and, to convict the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused attempted to burn the house charged, and further instructed that alibi was a defense, and the jury should find for defendant if the evidence raised a reasonable doubt as to his presence at the place of the offense when it was committed or a defense, and that it was also a circumstance that there existed at the very time of the commission of the offense and that if they believed that accused was, at the time of the commission of the offense, as charged, insane, the jury should acquit and if at the time of the commission of the offense, if the accused did not know right from wrong as to that particular act, the jury should acquit, as not being accused committed, or participated in the commission of, the offense of arson, or in assuming any other offense of which the accused was not guilty.

112.—— Commission of other or related offenses.—In a prosecution for receiving stolen property, an instruction assuming contemporaneous thefts is erroneous. Brewer v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 139. A charge on a trial for theft that if the jury find that defendant and one H., "when they were guilty of acting together in the theft of any of the offense so as to make them principals, if the accused took from the possession of H. two cattle," they would be guilty, is erroneous, where it is an issue in the case as to whether defendant had acted with H. at all. Milligan v. State (Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 414. A charge assuming that defendant had previously burglariously entered the house is on the weight of the evidence. Glenn v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 557. An instruction that the contemporaneous taking and recovery of any other animal or animals adduced in the evidence was not admitted to show the guilt or innocence of accused, but solely to show criminal intent, if any, is erroneous for telling the jury that other animals had been stolen. Glover v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 465. Where, on a prosecution for theft of a horse and a mule the evidence introduced with reference to a mare said to have been found on the same estate at the time of the offense as the one accused, and there was no testimony showing accused had possession of any stolen property other than the mule, that instruction that the State had introduced evidence tending to prove the theft of other property than that alleged in the indictment, that none, and that the accused was not guilty of such testimony, is erroneous as assuming that accused had possession of stolen property other than the mule. Homer v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 371. An assumption in the charge, on a trial for the theft of liquor, that the proviso of the law of there being evidence that accused was charged with other sales, when there was no such evidence is error. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.) 52 S. W. 266. An instruction that evidence that accused had influence a witness to leave the state should be considered only for a certain purpose, is objectionable as assuming that he so influenced the witness. Rice v. State, 49 App. 968, 94 S. W. 1024.

113.—— Failure to prove defense.—An instruction that the failure or inability of defendant to show his innocence does not lend any additional probative force to the incriminating evidence. If any, shown by the State, or a charge that the commission of guilt against defendant, is error, as conveying the impression that, in the opinion of the court, defendant had failed to show his innocence. Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 161, 11 S. W. 106. On a trial for murder, a charge that: "If, therefore, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from the testimony adduced, that the means used by the defendant were likely to kill or do great bodily harm, the jury will return their verdict for murder in the first degree," the defense relying on an alibi, indicates the opinion of the judge as plainly, and much more injuriously, than if it had been directly expressed, and is error. Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 560.

114.—— Truth of evidence.—A charge is erroneous which assumes the truth of any exculpatory evidence adduced by the State. Webb v. State, 3 Tex. App. 115.

115.— Grade or degree of offense.—When the defendant is on trial for an offense of degrees, the charge should not assume or intimate that the defendant is guilty of any particular degree instructed upon. Haynes v. State, 2 App. 84; Williams v. State, 1 id. 271.

116. Comments on conduct or character of accused.—A charge as to the consideration the jury should accord to evidence of accused's general good character in that aspect which is impugned by the accusation, is on the weight of the evidence. Lockhart v. State, 3 Tex. App. 567.

A charge that mere silence of accused at the time of being arrested should not be considered a circumstance against him, would be on the weight of the evidence. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 857.

117. Reference to evidence as tending to prove.—Generally it has been held that a charge which states that evidence has been introduced tending to prove the commission of a crime, or facts connected therewith, is erroneous as being on the weight of the evidence. Santee v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 456; Reese v. State, 44 App. 34, 68 S. W. 268; Reese v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 424; Hollar v. State (Cr. App.) 73 S. W. 961; Cortex v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 967; Cavaness v. State, 45 App. 209, 74 S. W. 968.

118. Directing verdict or declaring law if jury believe the evidence.—A charge that the jury, if believing the testimony of named witnesses, should either convict or acquit, is on the weight of the testimony. Gren v. State, 69 App. 550, 132 S. W. 506. An instruction that, if the jury believe from the evidence the defendant confessed, to a person named, he was guilty, the jury may find him guilty as charged, is on the weight of the evidence. Long v. State, 1 Tex. App. 466. Where on an indictment for a misdemeanor, preliminary for a years after the commission of an offense, it appears that, shortly after its commission, the accused left the state, an instruction that, if the jury believed that accused was guilty, they should acquit him as the offense was barred by limitation, is on the weight of the evidence. Whiteside v. State, 13 Tex. App. 467.

In a prosecution for burglary, an instruction that if the jury, bearing in mind a definition given, believed from the evidence that defendant with another, on or about a certain date, forcibly entered a house with intent to commit the crime of theft; he would be guilty, is not on the weight of the evidence. Lewis v. State, 72 App. 377, 163 S. W. 906.

119. Directing verdict, or declaring law, if certain facts are found.—A charge which submits the facts to the jury, and informs them that, if these facts are true, the defendant, if proved, is guilty, is properly the exception. Crook v. State, 39 App. 262, 45 S. W. 779; Still v. State (Cr. App.) 50 S. W. 355.

An instruction, in a prosecution for the larceny of a horse by the bailee thereof, that the defendant borrowed the horse, and did not return it, and did not do so, but took it to another town, and it was taken from him, such will be a fraudulent appropriation, and you will find defendant guilty," is on the weight of the evidence. James v. State, 33 App. 475, 24 S. W. 297. Where the evidence presented the conflicting weights of testimony at him, by elevating her arm, and the pistol was fired in the air, a charge on self-defense that if the jury believed that the prosecuting witness assaulted accused by "shooting at" him, with a pistol, and accused then shot, etc., they should acquit him, is erroneous, as is weighing of the evidence. Hall v. State, 44 App. 444, 60 S. W. 769. Where deceased's death was caused by setting on fire gasoline and turpentine which had been poured on his clothing, a charge that if the jury were satisfied that turpentine was poured on deceased, and accused knew or did not, and that he procured part of the turpentine, and that deceased was set on fire, and that at the time or just before the match was lighted defendant, with a deliberate design, poured turpentine on deceased, and was present with the others, leaning over the body, when the match was lighted, and that accused reasonably knew or believed he was furnished with the poison, and therefore, if death might result, he would be guilty as a principal, is on the weight of the evidence. Messer v. State, 43 App. 97, 68 S. W. 643. In a prosecution for assault to commit rape, an instruction that if defendant put his hand on Mrs. R., threw her down, and pulled up her dress, without her consent, the jury should convict, is not on the weight of evidence. Vallas v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 598. An instruction on a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquors that if the jury believed that defendant, on or about a specified date, or at any time within two years of a specified date, sold intoxicating liquor, and defendant was convicted, is not on the weight of evidence. Williams v. State, 45 App. 477, 77 S. W. 215. In a prosecution for aggravated assault, an instruction that if the jury found from the evidence that defendant was engaged in the doing of an unlawful act towards the prosecuting witness and the witness was entitled to self-defense, and if it was necessary to protect himself, then defendant could not justify on the ground of self-defense, is not on the weight of evidence, telling the jury that defendant was engaged in unlawful acts toward the prosecuting witness. Fuce v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 531.

Where, in a prosecution for disclosing the secrets of the grand jury, the court, after defining the offense in the language of Pen. Code 1905, art. 213, charged that, if the jury believed from the evidence that defendant disclosed to S. the matter about which he had been interrogated before the jury, without first being asked if he wished to be interrogated about, they should find him guilty, such charge is not on the weight of the evidence. Higdon v. State, 46 App. 198, 79 S. W. 546. An instruction that if the jury were satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant, within the six years prior to the filing of the indictment of the State of Texas, with a deadly weapon or instrument, reasonably calculated or likely to produce death or serious bodily injury from the manner in which it was used, and with malice aforethought, had assaulted G. with intent then and there to kill and murder her, defendant was guilty, is not on the weight of the evidence. Lozano v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 37. An instruction that if the jury believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did, as charged in the indictment, with express malice aforethought, with his fist, it being an instrument well calculated and likely to produce death, by the manner in which it was used, with a sedate and deliberate mind and formal design to kill, unlawfully strike with his fist the infant child, and thereby kill said infant child, they will find him guilty of murder in the first degree, is not on the weight of the evidence. Tunn v. State, 49 App. 415, 94 S. W. 251. On a prosecution for robbery, an instruction that if defendant took one or more of the bills, which prosecutor testified had been taken from him, under circumstances defendant should constitute robbery guilty, is on the weight of the evidence. Chancey v. State, 50 App. 85, 96 S. W. 12.

120. Conflicting evidence.—The court must not in the charge undertake to decide conflicts of evidence. That is the exclusive province of the jury. Wasson v. State, 3 App. 474. An instruction, in a criminal case, that, if there was a conflict in the evidence, the jury should reconcile it, if it could be done, or, if the evidence could not be reconciled, then the jury, after considering all the facts before them, should give credit to such witness, or set of witnesses, as appeared to them most worthy of belief, is erroneous, because, to adopt one of two witnesses, the jury must disbelieve a witness, or set of witnesses. Jackson v. State, 7 App. 362. And see Means v. State, 10 App. 16, 38 Am. Rep. 610. Where prosecutor and his brother had accused defendant of sending a scurrilous valentine, which mentioned their manner, and, in the quarrel ensuing, the paper which the cutout was wounded and his brother killed,—the evidence being conflicting as to defendant's connection with the valentine,—an instruction that the valentine could not be considered by the jury against defendant, unless they found beyond reasonable doubt that he was connected with its production, was erroneous, since it is on the weight of evidence, and authorized the jury to take the valence as a criminating fact against defendant. Kelley v. State, 43 App. 49, 62 S. W. 915.

An instruction to the effect that, if the evidence could not be reconciled, the jury should decide which of the witnesses were entitled to the witnesses' credibility, is not upon the weight of the evidence. Rideus v. State, 41 Tex. 199.

121. Confining jury to consideration of part of evidence.—On a prosecution for homicide, where the facts that deceased had followed contestant and had whistled at him, but two of the facts which led the court to take the trouble, a charge on self-defense that specially mentioned those facts as not justifying defendant in taking the life of deceased is erroneous. Craig v. State, 48 App. 500, 83 S. W. 208.

Where, after charging on manslaughter, a court charged that the jury were to determine the state of mind of the defendant when he killed the deceased (if he did so), and, in that connection, threats (if any) made by the deceased regarding the defendant, the reputation of the deceased (if such it was) as a violent and dangerous man, the defendant's personal knowledge (if such he had) that the deceased was a violent and dangerous man, the relative strength of deceased and the defendant, and all other facts in the case that might shed any light upon such state of mind, is not on the weight of the evidence. Clark v. State, 45 App. 456, 76 S. W. 572.

121 1/2. Affirmative and negative testimony.—Where, on a trial for unlawfully carrying a pistol, two witnesses testified that they saw on the defendant what they "took to be the handle of a pistol," and two testified that their opportunities were as good, and that, in that sense, they saw nothing to which equal opportunities, the testimony of an affirmative witness was preferable to that of one who failed to observe the fact, is erroneous. Haskew v. State, 7 Tex. App. 197.

122. Purpose and effect of evidence.—An instruction, on a trial for murder, that certain testimony was to be given such weight as, upon a consideration of the entire testimony, the jury might deem the same entitled to, in determining whether or not defendant had a motive for the killing, and for no other purpose whatever, and under no circumstances should affect defendant's right of self-defense, is a charge on the weight of the evidence, where the testimony referred to was a part of the res gestae. Terry v. State, 45 App. 261, 76 S. W. 928. An instruction in a prosecution for cattle theft that the certain brand was only admitted in evidence as proving ownership of the cow claimed to be the mother of the stolen calf, and that the brands on the calf placed on the calf by the owner after its recovery can only be considered, in connection with the other evidence, for the purpose of identifying the calf, is a charge on the weight of the evidence. Wallace v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 1102.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, an instruction that all advertisements and cards of defendant published in a newspaper, the occupation license issued to defendant, together with the tax collector's record of the occupation tax paid by the defendant in L. county, introduced in evidence, could be considered by the jury for no other purpose than to show whether the defendant at the time of the sale was engaged or interested in the sale of intoxicating liquors in L. county, is a charge on the weight of evidence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 124.

A charge in a prosecution for perjury as to why the pleadings and judgment in the action in which the perjury was charged to have been committed were introduced, and for the purpose for which they could be considered for which they were so given, is a charge on the weight of the evidence. Spearman v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 915, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245. In a prosecution for receiving or concealing stolen goods, an instruction that the confession of the original thief, and the verdict and judgment against him, were not original against the accused, and could not be considered for that purpose but only to show that the accused was guilty of stealing the property described in the indictment, and that the jury could not convict accused unless they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the thief fraudulently took the property from the owners without their consent with intent to deprive them of its value and appropriate it to his own use, and that accused knew that the property had been stolen and received and concealed it, is not on the weight of evidence. Meek v. State, 71 App. 423, 160 S. W. 858.

In a prosecution for offering to bribe a witness, where evidence as to defendant's tampering with a witness after his indictment was admissible on the issue of his guilt, it was not proper for the court to limit the evidence by its charge, since that would have been a charge on the weight of the evidence. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 739.

123. — Implicating evidence.—In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that implicating testimony was admitted solely for the purpose of aiding the jury in determining the credibility of the witnesses, and in charge of the weight to be attached to their evidence, is not a charge on the weight of the testimony. Messer v. State, 43 App. 97, 63 S. W. 643; Kipper v. State, 45 App. 377, 77 S. W. 611. But see Ball v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 448, holding that an instruction that singles out the credibility of the evidence received to impeach a witness, and tells the jury, in effect, that it should go to the witness' credibility, is on the weight of the evidence; McCleary v. State, 57 App. 335, 122 S. W. 26, holding that an instruction declaring to the jury "there was evidence to impeach the testimony which could be considered, if at all, for impingement purposes only, is erroneous, as on the weight of evidence; Stull v. State, 47 App. 547, 84 S. W. 1059, holding that a charge that certain evidence was admitted "only for the purpose of going to the credibility of the defendant as a witness" is upon the weight of the evidence; Holloway v. State, 45 App. 303, 77 S. W. 14, holding that an instruction in a prosecution for homicide where the evidence relative to defendant having served 478 in the penitentiary, which evidence was brought out on the cross-examination of defendant to prove his good character, could not be considered as affecting his reputation as a good citizen, and for no other purpose whatever, is on the weight of the evidence. A charge that if the jury believed that the state introduced at former trials of the case "the following testimony of accused, taken by the reporter substantially as follows" (setting it out by question and answer), etc., did not invade the province of the jury by charging on the weight of testimony; it being necessary in limiting impeaching testimony to state the substance thereof. Dutch v. State, 61 App. 144, 32 S. W. 993. To prove the defense the prosecutrix had offered evidence as to contradictory statements made by her as to the number of times the defendant had intercourse with her, and for the purpose of corroborating the state was allowed to prove by the prosecutrix to the contrary. Whitehead v. State, 53 S. W. 906. A charge reciting those facts and charging the jury that this evidence should not be considered unless belied to corroborate her other testimony, and only for purposes of corroborating or exonerating as upon the weight of the evidence or leading to the jury. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 558, 137 S. W. 356. Where contradictory statements by the prosecuting witness were proved by accused for purposes of impeachment, and the state was then permitted to corroborate such witness by proof of statements similar to her testimony, the failure to charge as to the effect of this supporting testimony was not error, as such a charge would have been on the weight of the evidence. Gradigton v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 210.

Where, in a prosecution for the theft of horses, evidence was admitted of the corroborating witnesses to other horses than those described in the charge, no instruction that the jury should only consider such evidence to establish the identity of the transaction or as developing the res gestae of the alleged offense, and to aid in proving guilt by circumstances connected with the offense is not upon the weight of the evidence. Board v. State, 49 App. 279, 93 S. W. 539. And see Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1001. And where the testimony shows that the theft of a saddle was contemporaneous with the theft of a horse, a charge that the court might use the testimony concerning the theft of the saddle only in judging of the intent of the accused as to the theft of the horse is not on the weight of evidence. Hammock v. State, 49 App. 471, 93 S. W. 540. But where, on a trial for embezzlement, the state introduced evidence tending to prove the embezzlement of belonging to the prosecuting witness, and defendant claimed that he borrowed the money, an instruction that the state had introduced evidence tending to prove the embezzlement of other money belonging to the prosecuting witness, which evidence could only be considered on the question of intent, is on the weight of the evidence. Leach v. State, 46 App. 507, 91 S. W. 733.

In a prosecution for murder, in which it appeared that defendant's wife was killed while defendant and another were engaged in a shooting affray, a charge that evidence tending to show that defendant shot at the other person engaged in the affray could not be considered as any evidence of the guilt of the defendant, but that if the jury believed defendant killed deceased they might consider such evidence as showing the condition of defendant's mind at the time he fired and so, is on the weight of the evidence. Blocker v. State, 150 S. W. 314.

Neal v. State, 70 App. 584, 157 S. W. 1193; Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 534; Bellard v. State, 71 App. 557, 160 S. W. 716; Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 825; Cunningham v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 519; De Rossett v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 531; Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345. The charge should not give undue prominence to any fact, theory, or evidence to the prejudice of the accused. Nutt v. State, 59 App. 364, 129 S. W. 1115; Requeore v. State, 59 App. 568, 129 S. W. 1120. A charge may be erroneous by giving undue influence to collateral facts or by laying too much stress on comparatively immaterial considerations so as to divert the jury from the main issue. Long v. State, 1 App. 799. Where the trial court in a prosecution for larceny makes various repetitions of the law in regard to principals so as to have impressed the jury that defendant in his judgment was connected with the taking, there is prejudicial error. Newton v. State, 62 App. 760. If certain portions of the testimony are for the jury, it is sufficient to tell them to acquit if they believe such issue, or if they have reasonable doubt as to whether it is true or not. Lockett v. State, 59 App. 341, 129 S. W. 827. It is error to instruct the jury to convict if they believe certain indicatory evidence to be true, ignoring other evidence of an exculpatory or extenuating nature. Howard v. State, 18 App. 348; McFarlin v. State, 41 Tex. 23. In a murder case, a charge to the jury to find accused guilty if they believed from the evidence that deceased was killed under the circumstances detailed by a designated witness, is a charge on the weight of the evidence. Rice v. State, 3 App. 461. While, in a theft prosecution, the fact that accused forfeited his bail bond and his flight, as well as his explanation of such facts, were admissible in evidence, the court should not refer to either the ineradicable or explanatory evidence in its charge. Brown v. State, 57 App. 570, 124 S. W. 101. In a prosecution for theft, a charge that the jury would not consider defendant's guilt because he had the money alleged to have been taken, makes the burden of proof on defendant and had promised to repay the same, singles out a particular fact and eliminates it from the jury's consideration. Hawkins v. State, 58 App. 497, 126 S. W. 265, 137 Am. St. Rep. 770. Where accused contended that the prosecution was the result of a scheme to defraud the court, it was improper for the court to instruct the jury to charge that if the prosecution was the result of conspiracy, and the jury had reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, they should acquit. Walton v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 375.

127. Circumstantial evidence.—An instruction, in effect announcing to the jury that they need not be alarmed at the idea of finding one guilty on circumstantial evidence, because it was not only legal and competent but frequently more convincing than positive testimony, even though the facts constituting the chain were testified to by witnesses of doubtful credibility, and that they were as likely to make a mistake and convict an innocent man on positive testimony as on circumstantial, is on the weight of the evidence. Harrison v. State, 8 App. 183; Harrison v. State, 9 App. 491. A charge that "circumstantial evidence, when fully and clearly made out, is sufficient to sustain a conviction for guilt, the circumstances must not be of a vague, indefinite, shadowy character, and the facts constituting the chain must be clearly defined." * * * In cases depending upon circumstantial evidence, the mind seeks to explore every possible source from which it may be derived; and it is in such, that the court must direct the jury as to which of the circumstances the jury should have before them every fact and circumstance, however slight, "* * * is on the weight of the evidence." McCleskey v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 997.

In a prosecution for an illegal sale of liquor, an instruction that certain circumstances purporting to be applicable to the facts in the case are not a violation of the local option law, is on the weight of the evidence. Bennett v. State, 49 App. 415, 50 S. W. 946.

A charge that when the evidence "is wholly circumstantial, as in the case here," the absence of all evidence of a motive affords itself, a strong presumption of innocence, and that the failure of the evidence to show any other criminal agent than accused is not a circumstance which may be considered by the jury in determining guilt is on the weight of the evidence. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 132 S. W. 345.

A charge, on a trial for larceny, that possession of recently stolen property may be proved by circumstantial evidence under the laws governing circumstantial evidence, is not on the weight of the evidence. Suggs v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 136. An instruction that the truth or falsity of the statements or declarations of accused might be shown by circumstantial evidence, and that it was not necessary for the state to disprove them by positive testimony, is not on the weight of the evidence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437. An instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence that prosecutor did not see accused at the time of commission of the offense, lie testified to by prosecutor, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt thereof, the state must rely on circumstantial evidence to convict, is not a charge on the weight of the evidence. Terrell v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1088.

128. Reasonable doubt.—A charge that the jury must find enumerated facts beyond a reasonable doubt before they may convict accused is on the weight of the testimony. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 693; Chenault v. State, 450.
129. Accomplices and testimony thereof.—A charge, in a prosecution for larceny, that another was an accomplice if any offense was committed, and the jury could not find accused guilty upon the accomplice's testimony unless they believed it to be true and that it showed accused guilty as charged, and could not convict evidence, or they believed evidence of the accomplice's tending to connect accused with the offense charged, and believed beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence that accused was guilty, is not upon the weight of the evidence. Brown v. State, 57 App. 376, 124 S. W. 101.

And that a witness was a accomplice where sustained by the evidence, and is not a charge on the weight of the evidence. Sheppard v. State, 63 App. 569, 140 S. W. 1690.

Collins v. State, 39 App. 441, 46 S. W. 933.

A charge that, unless the jury believed the evidence of one of accused's witnesses was wholly false, they should acquit, is properly refused as on the weight of evidence. Collins v. State, (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 236.

131. Co-defendants.—Where one, who was jointly indicted with defendant, has been allowed to testify for the state, an instruction to give his evidence such credit as the jury believe it entitled to, and that the presumption is that all the witnesses testified correctly, is not erroneous. Morgan v. State, 44 Tex. 611.

132. Interest or bias.—A charge that in determining the truth of the testimony the jury are to consider the intelligence, interest, and apparent bias or prejudice of the witnesses is on the weight of the testimony. Harrell v. State, 37 App. 612, 40 S. W. 799; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 801; Isham v. State, 51 W. 528; Penny v. State (Cr. App.) 297; Daggett v. State, 39 App. 5, 44 S. W. 148, 842, overruling Brown v. State, 2 App. 115; Adam v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 548; Cockerell v. State, 32 App. 555, 25 S. W. 421; McGrath v. State, 35 App. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941.

133. Credibility of accused.—A charge which intimates an opinion on the credibility of statement made by accused in evidence. Ross v. State, 29 Tex. 489. Where accused has testified, an instruction that, in determining the credibility of the witnesses, the jury may consider their interest in the case, is on the weight of the testimony. Cockerell v. State, 32 App. 555, 25 S. W. 421; Harrell v. State, 37 App. 612, 40 S. W. 799; Penny v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 297; Oliver v. State (Cr. App.) 42 S. W. 554; Shields v. State, 39 App. 13, 44 S. W. 844. But see McGrath v. State, 35 App. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941. And a charge that the jury are the sole judges of the credibility of accused's testimony, and that they should judge and weight it as they would that of other witnesses, coupled with a statement that the jury should consider accused's interest, is also erroneous. Muey v. State, 31 App. 155, 19 S. W. 915, reversing 13 S. W. 411. So, also, is a charge that the jury in weighing accused's evidence should treat him as any other witness, judging his demeanor, or his words, by the same standard as any other witness whose testimony has not been attacked, nor his credibility been assailed, but evidence was admitted of his intoxication, a charge that evidence of his having been intoxicated might weaken his testimony and affect his credibility as a witness, is on the weight of the testimony. Tully v. State, 45 App. 474, 48 S. W. 539.

In a prosecution for the theft of hogs, where accused has testified that he never claimed interest in the hogs, that he had stated to the prosecutor that they were not his, and that he had merely assisted a relative in driving them, believing that the man owning them, an instruction authorizing them to believe that they had a reasonable doubt on the question whether the hogs were the property of prosecutor, or of accused or his relative, is erroneous as conveying the idea that the court believed accused's testimony was false. Johnson v. State, 49 App. 106, 90 S. W. 633. A charge which says that the jury may consider that a hired detective and the defendant are witnesses in arriving at their verdict, and to test their credibility, is a charge upon the weight of evidence. Ross v. State, 53 Ala. 293, 106 S. W. 152.

134. Corroboration of witness.—A charge that, while prosecutrix in a rape case need not be corroborated, still the jury should carefully consider her testimony, is tantamount to casting upon the accused a burden that the State has no duty to carry, for the jury to determine; that, if her testimony is unsupported by other evidence, her credit would thereby be weakened; that, when a conviction might be had on her uncorroborated statement, special scrutiny of the facts is demanded, and that, in the absence of corroborating circumstances, the jury should acquit. Gonzales v. State, 32 Ala. 611, 25 S. W. 781. In a prosecution for theft, where the court gave defendant's requested instructions on accomplice testimony, and further instructed that, if the jury found that there was any evidence, "either in the form of his or her testimony," that they thought corroborated a certain offense, and that the defendant was an accomplice, they might convict, such instruction is on the weight of evidence. Dickinson v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 529. On a trial for seduction, where there was no evidence except the testimony of prosecutrix to show that letters purporting to have been written by accused came from him, an instruction as to corroboration is erroneous as on the weight of the evidence. James v. State, 72 Ala. 155, 161 S. W. 472. It is error, in a prosecution for killing a newborn infant, to charge that if the jury believed that the child's neck was broken, as alleged in the indictment, that would not be sufficient to corroborate the evidence of the child's mother, as the fact of her corroboration should have been left for the jury's determination. Jones v. State, 63 Ala. 394, 141 S. W. 953. An instruction in the proposition that the female voluntarily joined in, that, with the same intent as defendant, participated in the alleged commission of the offense, she would be an accomplice, and her testimony would not be sufficient to warrant a conviction unless she be corroborated by other credible testimony tending to connect her with the commission of the alleged offense, was error. Schoenfeldt v. State, 30 Ala. 495, 13 S. W. 640. But, where, coupled with such an instruction, the court also charges that if the evidence shows that she was the victim of force or undue influence, so that she did not act voluntarily, and a conviction may stand on her uncorroborated evidence, such a charge, though a correct proposition of law, is on the weight of the evidence. Tipton v. State, 36 Ala. 530, 17 S. W. 1097.

135. Failure of accused to testify.—After the jury have retired, answers in the affirmative to the inquiries whether an opposing party or accused defendant, personally or otherwise, to rebut the contents of a letter from him to another, are erroneous, as on the weight of evidence, and tantamount to referring to defendant's failure to testify, although the court, in its original instructions charged the jury not to discuss defendant's failure to testify, etc. Parker v. State, 43 Ala. 526, 67 S. W. 121.

136. Character evidence.—To instruct as to the consideration the jury should give evidence of good character would be on the weight of the evidence. Lockhart v. State, 2 App. 567.

137. Character of witness.—Where a witness testified that the reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity was good, but on cross-examination he said he had never heard her reputation questioned, and the court, in refusing a request to exclude the testimony remarked, "there is no higher evidence of good character of a person than that it is never discussed," such remark is erroneous as upon the weight of the evidence. McCullar v. State, 36 Ala. 213, 36 S. W. 585, 61 Am. St. Rep. 847.

138. Confessions, admissions and declarations.—The court should not instruct as to the weight to be given to a confession. Harris v. State, 1 App. 74. A confession of the most weighty nature is in evidence, on the weight of the evidence. Morrison v. State, 41 Tex. 518; Harris v. State, 1 App. 74; Ledbetter v. State, 21 App. 344, 17 S. W. 427.

Where a party accused of burglary made an extrajudicial confession, and on trial the court charged that the jury should find from the evidence whether accused confessed after being properly warned, and, if they so found, convict defendant, such charge is on the weight of the evidence. Veigh v. State, 43 Ala. 17, 62 S. W. 757. A charge that, if confessions were so contradictory in themselves that they could not be reconciled, they might be disregarded is on the weight of evidence, since the fact that they were contradictory would not affect their admissibility, but would only go to their weight as evidence. Goode v. State, 57 Ala. 229, 123 S. W. 725. So that, if the jury found confessions, and it was necessary for the jury to determine, whether the defendant should acquit, unless they believed from the other evidence that the defendant's guilt had been established beyond a reasonable doubt, is not on the weight of evidence. Morris v. State, 89 Ala. 371, 16 S. W. 253. A charge that "the confession of the defendant may be used in evidence against him if it appears that the same was freely made without compulsion or persuasion, * * * the court charges you to wholly disregard the alleged confession of defendant, unless you believe from the evidence that the same, if any, was freely and voluntarily made, if you believe from the evidence that the confession, if any, was made on compulsion or promise on the part of the officer or officers in question you will wholly disregard the alleged confession, the only way in which you can consider the confession, if any, in evidence, is for you to believe from the evidence that the confession, if any, was freely and voluntarily made," is not subject to the criticism that it is on the weight of the evidence. Griffin v. State, 49 Ala. 440, 95 S. W. 732.

An instruction that admissions of defendant against himself are to be taken as is on the weight of the evidence, or Grant v. State, 2 App. 164.

On the trial of a perjury case, an instruction to the jury to convict on the state's case as made by a letter in evidence, in which defendant admitted his guilt, and the evidence of a certain witness, unless it is overcome by other evidence, is on the weight of evidence. Hughes v. State, 32 S. W. 391, and the jury might consider, "as evidence against," a defendant, any statement made by him, as a charge on the weight of the testimony, where the only statement shown to have been made was neither a confession of guilt nor an unequivocal admission of guiltive fact, but might but for such charge, be considered by the jury in connection with the other facts and circumstances as favorable to the defendant. Martin v. State, 38 App. 285, 43 S. W. 91. An instruction in a criminal case that the whole of admissions made by defendant, which are introduced by the state, are to be taken together, and considered as evidence, unless they are shown to be false, and that such admissions are to be taken into consideration as evidence in connection with all the other facts and evidence, is a charge of the weight of the evidence; and erroneous. Arndt v. State, 66 S. W. 1102. Defendant on a trial for larceny of sugar is not entitled to a charge that he could not consider against him his statements as to how he got the sugar he had in his possession, unless they believed it was the sugar taken from prosecutor; that being on the weight of evidence. Smotherman v. State, 47 App. 309, 53 S. W. 535. A charge that the state having introduced in evidence the testimony of accused given before the grand jury is bound by all of it, and that the whole of such statement must be taken together, unless shown to be untrue, is not on the weight of the evidence. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

139. Dying declarations.—A charge that dying declarations are "worthy of the same credit as other evidence" is a charge upon the weight of evidence. Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 360.

140. Principals and accessories.—A charge that the jury are to judge whether defendant, if present at the killing, acted as principal, "from the surrounding circumstances in proof, such as companionship of the parties and the conduct of defendant at, before, and after the commission of the offense," is not on the weight of evidence. Thistle v. State, 28 App. 35, 12 S. W. 497.

A requested charge that the mere presence of a person at the committing of an offense, or his mere knowledge that an offense is about to be committed, will not make him a principal, nor will his failure to give alarm or supposed concealment of the offense and make him such, but to constitute one a principal with others in the commission of a crime, there must be a combination of both acts and intent, and he must act together with the others in the commission of the offense, knowing their unlawful intent, and that, unless the jury believe beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was present when decedent was killed, and knew both of the act of the killing and of the intent of the person who committed the act, and did some overt act in connection with such person, and had a guilty knowledge and conspired with the person doing the killing before the act was done, the mere presence at decedent's house on the night of the killing, and the mere fact that she may have falsified and may have concealed those who killed decedent, will not render her a principal, is on the weight of the evidence. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 507.

Defendant, having been acquitted of burglary from a railroad car from which lard had been thrown onto the right of way, was then indicted for theft; the evidence showing that he was apprehended while in the act of loading a part of the lard into a wagon on the night that it was taken from the car. He requested the court to charge that, if another person threw the lard from the car, then the fact that defendant took the same from the right of way would not constitute theft, which the court refused to give. Unless the jury believed that defendant himself was connected with another in connection with the property with the intent at the time of defrauding the owner, and appropriating the same to his own use. Held that, though the charge as requested was not in the law of the case, the amendment was in effect a peremptory instruction to find defendant not guilty. Roman v. State, 94 S. W. 109.

141. Elements of offense.—In a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory, a charge which sets out the elements of the offense as defined by the statute, naming the persons to whom the sales were alleged to have been made, is not on the weight of the testimony. Clark v. State, 51 App. 597, 136 S. W. 266; Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 914; Misher v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1949; Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 571.

In a prosecution for burglary, a charge that, if the owner of the house sent defendant to the house to get the goods which were stolen, and defendant afterward stole the goods, she was not guilty, is not on the weight of the evidence. Monceveis v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 94. Where, on a trial for burglary, the prosecutor positively testified that accused was inside the house, and that he could not have entered without opening a door, and accused denied entering the house and testified that he only went on its steps, a charge that a burglary is committed by entering a house by force with intent to commit theft, and that the entry must be made with actual force, but that the slightest force is sufficient to constitute a breaking, such as the opening of a door that is shut, is not objectionable as on the weight of the testimony. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1895.

On the trial of an indictment for obstructing a public road which had been changed by the commissioners' court, an instruction that if the line of travel, after the change, was adopted by the public, and a plainly beaten roadway was established by the traveling public, which was recognized by the overseers, then that such public roadway was a public road, is erroneous, as the jury on the weight of the evidence; it being a material question, made by the evidence, whether the obstruction built by defendant was across the public road as changed. Hall v. State, 13 App. 269.

In a prosecution for disturbance of the peace wherein it is the province of the jury to decide whether the words used were calculated to disturb a charge of the court which invaded this province of the jury is erroneous, and upon the weight of the evidence, McDaniel v. State, 21 App. 411, 3 S. W. 811.

142. Conspiracy.—Though the evidence raised the question of whether accused was the victim of conspiracy, a charge on such evidence would be on the weight of the testimony. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 145.

143. Intent or malice.—A charge which tells the jury they can look to appellant at the time of the homicide and before and after that time to arrive at his intent is not an actual charge upon the evidence. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 78.

A charge that, if the jury found certain facts or circumstances from the evidence to exist, it would be express malice, is not on the weight of the evidence. Cameron v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 887. An instruction that express malice might be established by proof of the cool deportment and bearing of the party when the killing was done, immediately preceding and subsequent thereto, his apparent freedom from passion or excitement, the absence of any known cause to disturb his mind or cause his passion, is not a charge on the weight of the testimony. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 77. An instruction that, if the jury believe from the evidence that a previous difficulty occurred between deceased and defendant anterior to the fatal encounter, it will not be presumed that the killing was upon the antecedent malice, and it devolves upon the state to prove that defendant acted upon such antecedent malice, and not upon fresh provocation at the time of the killing, is on the effect and weight of the evidence. Drake v. State, 29 App. 265, 35 S. W. 725. A charge that implied malice is what the law infers from or imputes to certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and the facts do not establish express malice beyond reasonable doubt, the cause, or tend to fact, upon which the law implies malice and the murder is in the second degree, is not upon the weight of the evidence. Carlson v. State, 57 App. 394, 123 S. W. 590, 136 Am. St. 981. An instruction that "if a homicide is established, and the instrument used was reasonably calculated to produce that result, the law presumes that such was the design; if, however, the instrument used was not likely to produce death, it is not to be presumed that death was designed, unless from the manner in which it was used such intention evidently appears"—is on the weight of evidence, and in so telling the jury to presume that defendant intended to kill deceased when he struck the blow. Thomas v. State, 57 App. 462, 125 S. W. 35. Where the state, in a prosecution for homicide, introduced threats by defendant to kill deceased, an instruction that if such threats were made with no intention of taking the life of deceased, or were made in a jocular manner, they should not be considered in reaching the verdict, is on the weight of the evidence. Brock v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 501. An instruction, in a murder case, that the means used by defendant in the commission of the offense, if believed to have been committed, should be taken into consideration, and, if they were not such as would be reasonably calculated to cause the death of the deceased by the way in which they were used, that no intent to kill should be presumed from their use, is not objectionable as being upon the weight of evidence. Ford v. State, 64 App. 14, 142 S. W. 6.

A charge that the jury are the judges whether or not a purchase of the alleged stolen property was in fact a bona fide purchase, or whether or not it was a deception and sham, is not calculated to influence the jury to believe the purchase was a sham. Bowers v. State (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 281.

An instruction, on a prosecution for violating the local option law, where defendant claimed that the sale was made for sacramental purposes, that, if defendant had made the sale in good faith, he could not be convicted, though he entered into no extended investigation of the purpose of the purchaser, and though the purchaser was a stranger to defendant, is on the weight of the testimony. White v. State, 45 App. 602, 78 S. W. 523.

144. Evidence to prove conspiracy.—A charge stating that the acts and declarations of witnesses were admitted on the ground that they were conspirators with the defendant, and that the admission only meant that sufficient evidence of the conspiracy was offered to permit, the case to go to the jury to determine from all the evidence whether there was such a conspiracy, is on the weight of evidence. Hudson v. State, 45 App. 420, 60 S. W. 665; Moore v. State, 44 App. 45, 68 S. W. 279.

A charge as to the testimony of a witness in a prosecution for the theft of cotton, relating to declarations of defendant's brother as to ownership of some cotton to prove in the presence of the defendant, and not showing any conspiracy to which defendant was a party, that if defendant's brother and others formed a common purpose to steal the cotton, and the defendant entered into such purpose, then the acts and declarations of the conspirators in pursuance of a common design, and prior to the theft, could be used by the jury "against" the defendant, is on the weight of the evidence. Newton v. State, 62 App. 622, 128 S. W. 768. In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that the fact that S. was indicted for the federal court, and that deceased was a witness in that case, and that testimony as to said case and as to the acts, conduct, or declaration of S., or of any other person except accused, could not be considered by the jury except to assist them in arriving at a possible motive of the person or persons who killed deceased in connection with the charge that the acts of deceased were used as a basis of conspiracy between the parties to take the life of deceased is on the weight of the evidence. Figueroa v. State, 55 App. 611, 127 S. W. 192.
In a prosecution for assault committed in pursuance of a conspiracy, a charge and declarations to that effect are not admissible against the defendant. If such acts and declarations were in furtherance of the common purpose and during the pendency of the conspiracy, if such conspiracy existed, is not a charge on the weight of the testimony on the subject of conspiracy. Flanagan v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. App. 114, denying rehearing (Cr. App. 111). An instruction that, before the jury could consider certain acts and declarations of defendant's companions who were present at the killing against defendant, the jury must first believe beyond a reasonable doubt that such acts were done and declarations made during and in pursuance of a conspiracy and that defendant and his companions to take the life of decedent or her husband, is not objectionable as a charge on the weight of the evidence, nor as intimating that a conspiracy existed. Deneaner v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. App. 624, 127 S. W. 293.

145. Charge that alcohol is intoxicating—A charge that alcohol is intoxicating is not on the weight of evidence. Sebastian v. State, 44 App. 668, 72 S. W. 849; Mayo v. State, 62 App. 110, 133 S. W. 790. Where the issue was whether beer sold by accused in prohibition territory would produce intoxication, an instruction that beer is a fermented liquor, and that all fermented liquors are intoxicating, is erroneous for failing to leave the issue to the jury. Jones v. State, 70 App. 343, 156 S. W. 1191.

146. Ownership of property.—A charge in a prosecution for the theft of a hog that, if neither of the hogs found in the pen of defendant belonged to the owner alleged in the indictment, the defendant would not be guilty, and that, if there was a reasonable doubt whether the hogs in defendant's pen were the property of such owner, defendant was not guilty, taken as a whole, is not objectionable as being upon the weight of the evidence. Holloway v. State, 63 Tex. Cr. App. 593, 140 S. W. 453.

147. Degree of crime.—Where the charge of the court makes the circumstances of the case necessarily convict defendant of assault with intent to murder, and the facts in the case, as shown by the court in other portions of the charge, justify the jury in finding defendant guilty of aggravated assault, the first instruction is a correct one. Brown v. State (Cr. App. 65 S. W. 629). Where there were no declarations of murder, defendant did not avow the killing and claim accident, but disavowed all knowledge of the homicide, stating that he believed deceased was shot by some one else accidentally with a stray bullet, and there was no testimony tending to show that defendant may have shot deceased accidentally, a charge on negligent homicide is properly refused, since it would be a suggestion on the part of the court that he might have done so accidentally, and thus be a charge on the evidence. Morton v. State, 45 App. 523, 67 S. W. 115.

148. Charge for assault with intent to rape—Defendant's attorney stated, in argument, that the court would charge an aggravated assault, which would indicate that thought defendant guilty of no greater offense, a reply by the court that the charge would be given only indicated that there was evidence to support a conviction of aggravated assault, is not on the weight of the evidence. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 750. A charge that where an unlawful killing is established, the condition of the mind of the party killing, at the time, just before, and just after the killing, is an important consideration in determining the grade of the homicide, is not on the weight of evidence. Alexander v. State, 40 App. 295, 49 S. W. 229, 50 S. W. 716. A charge that if the jury believed that accused was guilty of an assault, or an assault and battery, had a reasonable doubt whether it was an aggravated assault or assault and battery, they should acquit of an aggravated battery and convict only of simple assault, is not on the weight of the evidence. Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 465, 332 S. W. 153. An instruction that the law does not further define murder in the second degree if the killing be shown to be unlawful, and must rely on the evidence on the one hand showing express malice, and on the other hand nothing that will reduce the killing below the grade of murder, then the law implies malice, and the homicide is murder in the second degree, is not upon the weight of evidence. Hendricks v. State (Cr. App.) 1 S. W. 195. An instruction, that where one person intentionally kills another it depends on the circumstances whether the act is justifiable, or, if not justifiable, the degree of guilt, forming a part of the charge defining murder and not a part submitting the issues to the jury, is not on the weight of the evidence. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 277.

149. Defense in general.—On a trial for the theft of a gelding belonging to C., a charge to the jury that, "if C. did not give defendant authority in person, or authorize any one for him to deliver the gelding to defendant, and he testifies that he did not give such consent, this would affirmatively show want of consent, if you believe him" is an improper comment on the evidence, and error. Smith v. State, 43 Tex. 108.

In a prosecution for forgery, an instruction that the payment of other unauthorized checks by the father of defendant would not be a defense to the present action, if the jury believed that the present check was unauthorized, is not improper as a charge on the weight of the evidence. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 175.

150. Alibi.—An instruction that alibi is a perfectly legitimate defense is an improper comment on the weight of testimony. Payne v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 694. And see Johnson v. State, 1 App. 696. Where an alibi is relied upon, it is not improper for the court in its charge, to state that fact. Such a charge is not upon the evidence. Powell v. State, 12 App. 244. A charge which assumes that no evidence of alibi can avail the defendant, unless it produces conviction upon the minds of the jury that defendant was not present at the commission of the offense, but was elsewhere, is erroneous. Walker v. State, 43 Tex. 361. And see Walker v. State, 57 Tex. 286. 455
150. Defense of Insanity.—Where the defense was insanity, and it appeared that the defendant was of very weak mind, or was in the early stages of a disease of the brain, the fact that the defendant had killed a man, and the question of your determination is not whether defendant is a man of weak or strong mind,” etc., is on the weight of the evidence. Angel v. State, 45 App. 135, 74 S. W. 533. A charge on the defense of insanity, which states that the defendant was delusional or that he was not in his right mind at the time of the killing, is not on the weight of the evidence. Smith v. State, 61 App. 225, 135 S. W. 533. In a trial for horse theft, an instruction that if accused took the horse, but at the time was laboring under a disease of the mind to such an extent that he did not know right from wrong, and did not know that the horse was his, if he did take it, was wrong, he should be acquitted, is not objectionable on the weight of the evidence. Lester v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 554.

151. Self defense.—An expression by the court in an instruction on self-defense that the defense of self-defense is not an affirmative defense, but is limited to prevention and necessity,” is on the weight of the evidence. Coker v. State, 59 App. 211, 128 S. W. 137. A charge that if defendant was struck by W., and cut and stabbed him with a knife to protect himself from such assault, then the cutting would be justified as in self-defense, unless defendant had deprived himself of the right of self-defense by having provoked the difficulty with W., with the apparent intention of killing W. or doing him some bodily harm, and that if W. and defendant met on the sidewalk, and W. asked defendant not to approach nearer him, indicating to defendant that he (W.) was apprehensive that defendant would assault him with a knife, and defendant, notwithstanding such request of W. persisted in coming nearer under circumstances reasonably calculated to induce the apprehension that defendant designed and was prepared to cut W. with a knife, in such case defendant’s right to the allocation and use of self-defense was not properly calculated to produce death or serious bodily injury, then the law presumes that they intended to kill or inflict serious bodily injury upon defendant, and the conflict of the evidence. Guy v. State, 58 App. 472, 125 S. W. 856.

A charge that if decedent before the killing had threatened to take accused’s life or do him serious bodily injury, and such threats had been communicated to accused, and if decedent, by some act at the time of the killing, caused accused to believe that it was about to execute his threat, and, acting upon such belief, accused killed him, the jury should acquit without regard to whether decedent was a dangerous man, or whether the threats were made seriously if accused believed them to have been seriously made, or whether decedent was intending to execute them, is objectionable as being too strongly calculated to produce death or serious bodily injury upon the weight of the evidence. Bradley v. State, 60 App. 258, 132 S. W. 484.

152. Instructions in response to request.—Defendant cannot complain of an instruction, which he requested, in relation to the conclusion to be drawn from a given state of facts in the case, on the ground that it is on the weight of evidence. Needham v. State, 19 Tex. 332.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CHARGE

153. Construction of Instructions given.—A charge and the language thereof must be given a reasonable and not a strained construction, and the jury must be considered to be such reasonably intelligent and capable men as to put such reasonable construction on the charge. Christian v. State, 71 App. 556, 161 S. W. 101; 163 S. W. 726; Coffman v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 726. The language of a charge must be interpreted with reference to the evidence which elicited it. Peck v. State, 9 App. 70.

On a trial for murder, the statement by the court, preliminary to the charge, that defendant stands charged by the indictment with the offense of murder in the first degree, but is now on trial for murder in the second degree only, is not objectionable as a charge on murder in the first degree, but is a mere statement of the fact of the indictment. Worthan v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 526.

In a prosecution for theft, an instruction that, if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant is the identical person who killed the animals to a witness, they should acquit, is not objectionable as permitting the jury to arrive at a belief that defendant was such identical person from sources other than the evidence. Ellision v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 158.

Where, in a prosecution for killing her child, it appeared that it was killed either by defendant or W., and the court properly charged the law as to the killing, and instructed, “Do the facts and the instruction, ‘or the case at the time of the killing and before and after that time, having connection with or relation to it, furnish satisfactory evidence of a sedate and deliberate mind on the part of the person killing at the time he or she does act,’” is not objectionable to defendant inquiring that defendant might be responsible for the acts of W. Becknell v. State, 47 App. 216, 82 S. W. 1603.

An instruction that, if defendant seduced prosecutrix, he could not escape by proving her subsequent misconduct, is proper; it not being open for the jury to infer that her subsequent behavior was not to be considered in testing her credibility. Beezen v. State, 69 App. 39, 130 S. W. 1606.

The court having charged that if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of some grade of assault, but had reasonable doubt whether defendant had some intent to murder with assault and battery, they should convict him of no higher offense than aggravated assault and battery, or if they have a reasonable doubt whether he was guilty of an aggravated assault and battery or simple assault and battery, they should only consist of, and if they had a result of assault and battery, and if they be guilty, they should acquit, as he was presumed to be innocent until his guilt was established by legal evidence, a further instruction, that if the jury believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant with the intent to kill the deceased really intended to kill, then, if the jury found the defendant had a specific intent to kill, the prosecution, if then the jury found that defendant was not guilty of aggravated assault and battery, or simple assault and battery, under the instructions given, they should find defendant guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon as requiring no further effort to find the defendant guilty of some offense. Waters v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 766.

Where a previous portion of the instructions correctly defined an act as malice aforethought, and instructed that defendant with a deadly weapon shot and killed deceased, and such shooting was not under the influence of sudden passion, was an unlawful act, this is not an over-instruction, requiring the existence of malice aforethought, 545, 124 S. W. 104. A charge that, to constitute theft, the taking must be wrongful, so that, if the property came into the possession of the accused by lawful means, the subsequent appropriation of it would not be theft, if the taking, though over-instruction, was obtained by false pretext, or for any other unlawful use, property is so appropriated, the offense of theft is complete, is not prejudicial, because not explaining the meaning of possession, where the jury must be charged that the jury must be charged that the jury must establish possession of the property alleged to have been stolen, if he did obtain possession thereof, etc., and the making of a statement to the owner's wife, if any were made, accused had formed the intent to appropriate the property to his own use, and that the statement, if any, made to the wife of the owner, was a factor in obtaining possession of it. Jordan v. State, 125 S. W. 145. As to whether the charge on self-defense presented the view that the circumstances must be viewed from defendant's standpoint, the whole paragraph on the subject must be considered. La Grone v. State, 61 App. 179. 135 S. W. 151. That instruction that, where a fire is communicated to a house by means of setting fire to some combustible material which was close enough to communicate therewith, etc., is not objectionable as intimating that the burning might be sufficient, though not wilfully done, where the whole charge taken together presented arson as the wilful burning of a building. Wigfall v. State, 57 App. 639, 124 S. W. 649. Where the charge as a whole, when applying the law to the facts, presents fully what it takes to constitute murder in the first degree, the word "express" in the definition of the word murder, in the definition of murder in the first degree, is not error. Johnson v. State, 63 App. 50, 138 S. W. 1021. Where, in a prosecution for uttering a false affidavit, the court charged on the question of insanity, informing them that, if accused was of unsound mind and not cognizant of the facts stated in the affidavit, it could not have been wilfully, deliberately, and corruptly made, the giving of another charge informing them that the affidavit was sufficient if its falsity was legally proved to warrant a conviction was not prejudicial error. Welch v. State, 71 App. 177, 157 S. W. 546. A charge in a murder case that, to warrant a conviction of murder in the first degree, the jury must be satisfied by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, before the fact, deliberately formed the design with a calm and sedate mind to kill deceased, that he selected and used the weapon with intent thereto as sufficient to accomplish the death by the manner and manner of its use, and that the killing was unlawful, but the act must not result from a mere sudden, rash, and immediate design, springing from an inordinate impulse, passion, or interest not connected to the defendant. Leech v. State, 63 App. 429, 129 S. W. 1147. Read as a whole, the charge on manslaughter, in a case in which the only attempt of defendant was to reduce the offense to manslaughter, based on the testimony of his wife that deceased told her she had fully and fairly presented that issue. Cameron v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 867. Where, in a prosecution for arson on the ground of insanity, the charge of the court defined arson, defined a building, and the meaning of the term "wilful," charged that, if defendant wilfully burned the gin, he would be guilty, as charged, that no acts done by an insane person were punishable as a crime, and on the presumption of innocence and burden of proof, the charge, taken as a whole, was not objectionable as authorizing a conviction, though the defendant was insane, and did not have his sense of wrong doing an unlawful act. Rogers v. State, 120 S. W. 59, 102 App. 40. An instruction that, if the jury found that accused unlawfully carried a pistol about his person as alleged, they should find him guilty is not erroneous for not adding, "Unless they found him not guilty under some other paragraph of the charge," where the succeeding paragraph charged he would not be guilty if the pistol was out of repair, etc. An instruction that, while it was not an offense to carry a pistol to have it repaired, accused was not entitled to rely on that defense if he stopped over on his way to the repair shop and engaged in business or pleasure is not erroneous, because the court did instruct in connection therewith that carrying the pistol would not be an offense if it could not be fired, having already so instructed in another paragraph. Rushberry v. State, 72 App. 123, 100 S. W. 704. The instruction on trial for embezzlement, that defendant's agency, whereby he was charged with the duty of receiving the property in question, the receipt of the property, its receipt by virtue of his agency, and the fraudulent conversion or misapplication of the property by him, were required. It further charged that the agent of J., and came into possession of the property, the property of J., as agent or attorney in fact, and if he did "fraudulently embezzle, misapply, or convert to his own use without the consent of the said J. and if each of the four essential requisites have been established beyond what had been established to find him guilty of embezzlement. Hold that, taking the charge in its entirety, the failure of the instruction last mentioned to state that accused must fraudulently embezzle, misapply, and convert to his own use the property in question could not have misled the jury. Thompson v. State, 72 App. 24, 100 S. W. 784. Where the defendant claimed justifiable homicide on the ground that deceased was attempting to robb him, and also on the ground of self-defense, a charge, one paragraph of which seemed to require the jury to believe both grounds of justification, is not erroneous because they could acquit the defendant as a whole, was not susceptible of that construction. Swiley v. State, 73 App. 619, 66 S. W. 735. Instructions defining murder in the second degree, and its elements, were not erroneous because they ignored the issue of insanity, where such issue was fully and correctly presented in other instructions. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 229.

An instruction on homicide, requiring provocation of accused to have arisen at the time of the homicide, is not reversible error, where other instructions extended his right to act on provocation, previously given. Jordan v. State, 62 App. 350, 137 S. W. 133. An instruction, In a prosecution for the business of selling intoxicating liquor, accused on about five times or about four or five days or dates," unlawfully engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, and if he also on those dates sold liquors to persons named, or made any two of such sales, to find him guilty as charged, did not authorize a conviction for a single person might better be calculated, as when read as a whole it required the jury to find that he engaged in the business and made at least two sales. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.
135. Correction of instructions, and error in instructions cured by other instructions.— A charge may be corrected before it is rendered to the jury, and the charge corrected after the jury has retired to deliberate, by the giving of other instructions, so that the jury will be left with a correct understanding of the law of the case.

Baker v. State, 7 App. 622. But after the charge has been read and filed it constitutes part of the record in the cause, and its alteration or amendment then, without the consent of the defendant, is such error as will necessitate a reversal of the conviction. Granger v. State, 11 App. 481, 41 Tex. 251.

It is not error to correct a charge on suggestion made after it has been read to the jury and before its delivery to them. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 982.

When a trial judge believes that instructions given are wrong, he can recall the jury and correct them.

Lott v. State, 60 App. 183, 131 S. W. 658.

Under this article it is proper for the court to submit his charge to the attorneys, and, after they have filed exceptions thereto, to make such changes as he thinks advisable. Link v. State, 73 App. 82, 164 S. W. 887.

This it not error to correct an error in one portion of a charge may be cured by another portion. Hodges v. State, 22 App. 415, 3 S. W. 739. And see Woodson v. State, 24 App. 153, 6 S. W. 184.

An instruction on self-defense contained the expression "expectation or fear of death or serious bodily injury." After being so written, the "t" in "or" was over-written by "f" in pencil so as to make the phrase read "expectation of fear." The court explained that the change was made without the knowledge or consent, and that the change was read to the jury as originally written. Held, that an objection to the inclusion of the instruction was proper.

Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 133 S. W. 887.

156. Withdrawal of instructions.—Where an instruction on declarations of accused as to recent possession of stolen property is withdrawn, because there was no evidence to support it, and a proper instruction was given previous thereto, such withdrawal is not error. Shackelford v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 884.

Art. 736. [716] Charge shall not discuss the facts, etc.—It is beyond the province of a judge sitting in criminal causes to discuss the facts or use any argument in his charge calculated to rouse the sympathy or excite the passion of a jury. It is his duty to state plainly the law of the case. [O. C. 595.]

In general.—See arts. 787, 842, post.

This article does not prohibit proper argumentation in the charge, but limits the judge in the "use of any argument calculated to arouse the sympathy or influence the passion of the jury." Cesure v. State, 1 App. 19. And see in illustration Stucky v. State, 7 App. 174; Brown v. State, 22 Tex. 156; Bryant v. State, 35 Tex. 204, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 79.

On a trial for bribing a policeman not to arrest, report, and file a complaint against, accused for keeping a place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, and to not come in on him unawares, but to let him know in advance, so he could have parties in his place scatter and get out, and so that things would apparently be all right when the officer arrived, where there was evidence that in this connection accused also said, "I expect you to do your duty," it was not error to refuse to charge that the jury must take this to mean literally what it apparently expressed; since this would have been on the weight of the evidence. Minter v. State, 70 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

Weight of evidence.—See ante, art. 736, and notes.

Art. 737. [717] Either party may ask written instructions.— Before the court reads his charge to the jury, counsel on both sides shall have a reasonable time to present written instructions and ask that they be given to the jury. The court shall give or refuse these charges with or without modification, and certify thereto; and, when the court shall modify a charge it shall be done in writing and in such manner as to clearly show what the modification is. [O. C. 596; Act 1913, p. 278, ch. 138, § 2, amending art. 737 revised C. C. P.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 942; Davis v. State of Texas, 159 U. S. 651, 11 Sup. Ct. 675, 35 L. Ed. 300.

1. In general. 11. Time for request.
5. Defenses. 15. Singling out evidence.
10. Sufficiency of erroneous request to call for correct charge.

1. In general.—If requested instructions are “given” or “refused” they must be authenticated by the judge’s signature; and where nothing indicates they were on appeal, that they were approved, on appeal, they are not requested. Johnson v. State, 7 App. 210; Seal v. State, 28 Tex. 491; Jeffries v. State, 9 App. 509.

If a requested instruction is given, it should be signed by the judge, filed and read to the jury. If refused it should be certified as refused and filed, and the jury should not be allowed to take a refused charge with them in their retirement. Irvine v. State, 18 App. 51; Hildreth v. State, 19 App. 195. It is no reason for refusing a special instruction that it was not filed before it was presented. Lawrence v. State, 11 App. 206.

Instructions requested at a previous trial must be again requested on second trial, else they will be considered as waived on second trial, and will form no part of the record of the last trial. Bracken v. State, 29 App. 362, 16 S. W. 392.

Where a special charge was not marked “Refused” or “Given,” the appellate court will presume that it was given. Hambright v. State, 60 App. 253, 131 S. W. 1123.

Where evidence was admitted without objection, and no motion was made to strike it out, a requested special charge that the jury be instructed not to consider such evidence, which assigned no reasons as to why the evidence was not admissible, was insufficient to present the question of the admissibility of such evidence for review; for the appellate court cannot search the record to judge whether it was properly admitted. Berg v. State, 64 App. 612, 142 S. W. 884.

Under this act and arts. 735, 743 the court in misdemeanor cases will not consider complaints of the charge given and the refusal of special charges unless a bill of exceptions is taken at the time, giving in the bill the specific reasons why the court erred in giving the charge complained of, or in refusing the requested charge. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 317.

That trial court led accused to believe that a requested charge would be given which the court failed to give, and accused argued before the court that that was the law, while the prosecution insisted it was not, was not ground for reversal, where the instruction was one that there was no error in refusing. Haynes v. State, 71 App. 31, 150 S. W. 1065.

While the statute requiring the charge to be submitted to the attorneys, and requiring the attorneys to make their objections thereto before the charge is read to the jury, does not require special charges to be asked, the requesting of special charges is the better practice and to be commended. Goldstein v. State, 72 App. 558, 166 S. W. 149.

2. Application of amendatory act.—This section as amended applies to trials subsequent to the taking effect of that chapter for offenses committed prior to its taking effect. Wright v. State, 79 App. 178, 163 S. W. 976; Ybarra v. State, 73 App. 70, 161 S. W. 16.

Where on a trial for an offense committed prior to the taking effect of the amendatory chapter the trial court submitted the charge to accused’s counsel for criticism and objection, and alleged him a reasonable time to examine it, and he failed to object thereto or to suggest amendments, objections to the charge could not be made in the motion for a new trial, though the trial judge at the opening of the trial announced that accused would be tried under the law and procedure in force at the time of the commission of the offense, unless accused filed a written request that he be tried under the law and procedure in force at the time of the trial. Wright v. State, 73 App. 178, 163 S. W. 976.

3. Necessity for request.—Necessity of request for charge to present on appeal the failure of the court to charge as to an issue, see notes to art. 724, ante.

Necessity of request for written charge to present on appeal objections to argument, see notes to art. 724, ante.

The whole of a charge must be taken into consideration in determining complaints against any part thereof, and, if the charge as a whole is substantially correct and no special charges have been requested, it will be held sufficient. Conger v. State, 63 App. 612, 140 S. W. 1112; Gentry v. State, 61 App. 615, 126 S. W. 50. This charge may be inaccurate, yet in misdemeanor cases appellate court cannot reverse unless there is special exception and special charge asked covering defect. Abbott v. State, 42 App. 8, 57 S. W. 98.
Where, in a prosecution for assault to murder, the court instructed as to the degree of assault, to the different degrees of assault, and up on the whole case, in absence of requested charges, it was not bound to instruct on reasonable doubt in the part of the charge defining aggravated assault. McDaniel
v. State, 63 App. 359, 139 S. W. 1154.

As a general rule it is necessary that an appellee ask written instructions in respect to the remarks and comment of opposing counsel, if he desires such instructions. Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 311 S. W. 261.

Where the court instructed that the burden was upon the state to establish guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, that accused was presumed innocent until his guilt was so established, and if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to his guilt they should acquit, failure to instruct on reasonable doubt as to each issue except the request was not reversible error in the absence of a request for such instruction. Hamilton v. State, 64 App. 175, 141 S. W. 966.

Where defendant in a homicide case requested and secured instructions that the burden was on the state to prove defendant's sanity at the time of the killing, and that he then knew the character of his act and its consequences and had sufficient will power to refrain therefrom, and that if he entertained the insane delusion that deceased had an immediate design on his life, or the life of his mother or brother, and acted thereon, he should be acquitted, the failure of the court to charge on manslaughter, without request, was not error. Willy v. State (Cr. App.)
171 S. W. 229.

Under the act of April 5, 1913 (Acts 53d Leg. c. 158), accused cannot complain of an omission in the charges given where she requested no charges. Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 337.

4. — Definitions.—In a prosecution for fighting in a public place, the court charged that the law defines a public place as any place at which people are assembled for the purpose of business, amusement, recreation, or other lawful purposes, or a private residence cannot be made public by being open to the public; that a place may be public at one time and private at another; that if the jury find that the house at which accused was charged with fighting was a public place, and that accused fought there with other people, that it should be considered a public place at that time, and that the instruction.
In the proposition that if people were assembled at a house by special invitation, and the public generally not invited, the place was not a public one, in a request for a more specific charge. Austin v. State, 57 App. 638, 121 S. W. 439.

Where accused requested no special charge, the trial court did not err in failing to define the words, "prima facie evidence," used in its charge. Fagnani v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 542.

In a trial for burglary of a dwelling, it was not reversible error to omit the word "actually" in instructing that the jury must find that the house was occupied by the owner, in the absence of a request for a special instruction. Payne v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 694.

Failure of the court to define a credible witness was not error, where no objection was made to the court's charge at the trial, and no special instruction on the subject was requested. Miles v. State, 75 App. 493, 165 S. W. 561.

5. — Defenses.—Failure of the court to charge on alibi did not present er-or where there was no exception taken or charge thereon requested. Williams v.
State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 571; Hernandez v. State, 64 App. 75, 141 S. W. 268.

Where the evidence raises the issue the court should charge on temporary insanity from the recent use of intoxicating liquors whether requested to do so or not.

In a criminal prosecution, where the court charged on the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the failure to charge on the question of alibi, though there was evidence tending to prove accused's alibi, is not error, in the absence of a special request or exception reserved at the time of the giving of the charge. Harris v. State (Cr.
App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

Even if the trial court might have properly submitted an issue as to accused's insanity at the time of the trial apart from an issue as to insanity when the offense was committed, it was not reversible error to omit to do so, where accused did not request such submission, and no statutory affidavit was filed asking that the issue be specially tried. Lester v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 564.

In the absence of a requested charge presenting the law of provoking difficulty, the court, in a homicide case, need not charge on that subject. Harrelson v.
State, 68 App. 244, 152 S. W. 752.

In a criminal prosecution, where the court charged on the doctrine of reasonable doubt, the failure to charge on the question of alibi, though there was evidence tending to prove accused's alibi, is not error, in the absence of a special request or exception reserved at the time of the giving of the charge. Harris v. State (Cr.
App.) 155 S. W. 265.

6. — Admissibility and effect of evidence.—A charge on the effect of a confusion held sufficient, in the absence of a request for a more specific application

In a prosecution for burglary, where evidence of explanations made by defendant as to his possession of the alleged stolen property was not objected to when presented, and no made subject of a motion to strike, a charge on the issue of whether at the time he made the explanation was unnecessary; no special charge having been requested. Coggins v. State (Cr. App.)
151 S. W. 311.

Failure to instruct on the failure of accused to testify was not error, where no request was made for such Instruction. Bosley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 875.

When the trial court admitted a map or plat, but thereafter withdrew it from the jury, and orally instructed them not to consider it, his failure in the written charge so instructed the jury was not error, in the absence of any request for such instruction. Illies v. State, 73 App. 17, 163 S. W. 717.

Failure to instruct that if the jury did not find defendant's wife was acting with, aiding, and abetting him, they should not consider her acts or declarations, cannot be considered, of no such instruction having been requested, but defendant having relied solely on his objection that the testimony was inadmissible. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

7. Limiting evidence to purpose.—Where the general charge fails to limit the general effect of testimony going to establish motive only, exceptions should be taken, and upon charges asked during the omission, and especially so when it cannot be readily seen how the defendant could have been injured by the omission, Sullivan v. State, 31 App. 486, 20 S. W. 927, 37 Am. St. Rep. 826.

Where in a prosecution for homicide, defendant introduced for evidence of other assaults made by him on other persons, and the attending circumstances as bearing on the plea of insanity, it was not error for the court, in the absence of a request, to omit to limit the purpose and effect of such evidence. Montgomery v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 813.

In a prosecution for unlawfully tearing down a fence, failure to instruct that certain evidence was admissible only to refute plaintiff's contention that he acted under a belief that, as owner of the land, he had a right to tear down the fence, was not error, in the absence of a request for such instruction. Johns v. State, (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 610.

8. Fuller instructions.—An objection that an instruction on the defense of alibi failed to recite defendant's testimony as to his whereabouts at the time of the homicide is not available on appeal, where defendant failed to request a more particular instruction. Mass v. State, 69 App. 359, 124 S. W. 242.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicants in a local option county, the court instructed that the state must prove that accused unlawfully engaged in and followed the occupation and business of procuring, selling, or furnishing intoxicating liquors, and that he had made at least as many as two or more sales of intoxicants in the county prior to the date of the indictment, and that by the term "occupation and business" was meant vocation; calling; trade; the business which one engages in to procure living or obtain wealth. Held, that the charge was not prejudicial error, in the absence of a request for a fuller charge on the subject. Dozier v. State, 62 App. 258, 137 S. W. 679.

Where the charge has submitted the law applicable to the case, as required by art. 658, and a defendant who desires a more specific presentation of any issue should request special instructions thereon, otherwise the court will not reverse unless the charge was calculated to injure the right of the defendant within art. 743. Dowling v. State, 63 App. 365, 140 S. W. 824.

In a prosecution for theft, the court charged that the jury should not consider any testimony with reference to any thefts committed by defendant other than the one alleged in the information. Held, that evidence as to such other thefts having been introduced by defendant on cross-examination of the state's witnesses, if defendant desired a more explicit charge with reference thereto, it was defendant's duty to request a special charge; and, not having done so, he could not object that the charge given was insufficient. Gowans v. State, 64 App. 401, 153 S. W. 614.

When the court properly submits a question to the jury in general terms, without exception and a request for a special charge submitting it more fully, there is no reversible error in not giving such a special charge. Tyler v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 782.

That a charge on circumstantial evidence was not full enough cannot be assigned as error by accused where he did not request a fuller charge. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 182 S. W. 901.

Where the court clearly required the jury to believe that to convict of either first or second degree murder they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant did not kill deceased in self-defense, but with express malice aforesaid, it was incumbent upon defendant, if he desired any further charge on the subject to request it. Powdrill v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 251.

Where instructions defining terms were correct, it was the duty of accused, if he desired more full and ample definitions, to request that they be given before the return of the verdict. Brown v. State, 71 App. 353, 162 S. W. 329.

Where the court did not submit the offenses of manslaughter or aggravated assault as fully as accused desired, it was his duty to request further instructions. Girtman v. State, 73 App. 158, 164 S. W. 1098.

That a conviction in a prosecution that a credible witness was one who, being competent to give testimony, is worthy of belief was sufficient, in the absence of a requested charge further defining the words "credible witness." Hart v. State, 73 App. 352, 166 S. W. 152.

9. Request unnecessary.—Where an accomplice testified for the state, it is error not to instruct as to such testimony, though no special charge was requested. Castillo v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 788.

10. Sufficiency of erroneous request to call for correct charge.—A requested charge in a criminal case which, though not technically correct in form, suggests
5. A correct proposition of law to which accused is entitled, requires the giving of a correction of the evidence or the court should have had a reasonable time to examine it: that he shall present his objections in writing; that counsel on both sides shall have a reasonable time to present written instructions; that the Judge, after receiving such objections and special charges, may make such changes as in his main charge as he may deem proper; that accused shall have the opportunity to present objections there to; and that objections to the charge and to the refusal or modification of special charges shall be made at the time of the trial. Held, that the refusal of instructions not presented until after the court had given his main charge could not be considered reviewed Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

12. Correct requested charges. Requested instructions, when correct in principle and applicable to the case, and when not embraced in the general charge, should be given. See the following cases for instances in which it was held er-

Error to refuse charge on issue raised by evidence and insufficiently covered in general language. Porter v. State, 48 App. 304, 58 S. W. 355.

It was error to refuse requested charges that the gist of the offense of theft was the original taking of the property, and unless the jury were satisfied from the evidence, he could not be guilty of theft. If the hog was taken, or had some connection therewith, he would not be guilty, and any subsequent connection by him with the property would not constitute theft, as the motion was not in issue. Thompson v. State, 59 App. 269, 3 S. W. 526.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law by selling whiskey, it was reversible error to refuse a requested charge on accused's theory that if the alleged purchaser gave accused $1 to purchase whiskey for him in another county, and he purchased it and delivered it to such person, he should be acquitted, as well as a charge on the effect of testimony as to the effect that the money paid accused was for human, and not whiskey. Spain v. State, 59 App. 538, 128 S. W. 959.

The court having charged on provoking a difficulty, as limiting the right of self-defense and as bearing on the question of manslaughter, and defendant's evidence, at least, having excluded the idea of provoking a difficulty, and shown that a former difficulty between him and deceased was abandoned, the court should have given his requested instruction as to the law in such case. Edwards v. State, 69 App. 323, 131 S. W. 1078.

Where the evidence suggests a defense, the court may refuse to give accused a special charge which does not correctly state the law. Herrington v. State, 73 App. 166, 166 S. W. 721.

Where the county attorney produced a book, and opened it, and pointed to the book when asking questions of accused, testifying in his own behalf, but the book was not offered in evidence, nor shown to the jury, the refusal to charge that the jury should not consider the book in evidence was not erroneous. Ellis v. State, 29 App. 639, 150 S. W. 171.

The evidence in a homicide case showed that accused was ignorant and illiterate, and in his youth had attacks like epilepsy, and he testified that he had some way on the day of the killing, but did not know of any part of the killing under any mental imbecility, or did not understand anything then said or done; and he testified in detail to a long conversation between himself and deceased, and attempted to justify the killing as in self-defense, and the evidence did not tend to raise the question of insanity. Heid, that the court did not err in refusing to charge on the defense of insanity. Coffey v. State, 69 App. 78, 131 S. W. 216.

Where a state's witness testified that he bought whiskey of accused and paid him for it, and accused denied that he had ever made a sale or delivery of whiskey to the witness or that he had ever seen him before, and the court charged that if the jury found that accused made a sale to the witness they should convict, the refusal to give a charge defining the sale in law was not erroneous; the question as to what constituted a sale not being in issue. Trinkle v. State, 69 App. 187, 131 S. W. 583.

It is not error to refuse a request to charge on an issue not raised by the evidence. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 554, 5 S. W. 1910.

Where the record showed no reason or necessity for special instructions, and the instructions given substantially and fully covered everything necessary or proper on the subject, error in refusing such instruction was not shown. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Defendant was not entitled to have given his requested charge that, if it reasonably appeared to him that deceased or P. was about to shoot him, he was justified in staying deceased; his own testimony showing that he feared no assault from deceased, that he was not in danger from P., or at least thought he was not. Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 265.

The case being one, partly at least, depending on circumstantial evidence, refusal to defendant, on a trial for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, of an instruction to acquit unless the jury found that be kept in his possession intoxicating liquors for sale, was not error. Robertson v. State. (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 139.

15. — Singing out evidence.—Where the court charged that the jury were the judges of the credibility of the witnesses and that if they had a reasonable doubt of the guilt of accused they should acquit, a requested charge that if accused successfully contradicted the testimony of the accused should acquit, or if the evidence on the question of impeachment raised a reasonable doubt as to accused’s guilt he must be acquitted, was properly refused because singling out one issue of the case. Trinkle v. State, 60 App. 187, 101 S. W. 583.

As in charge of manslaughter did not charge the provocation to the time of the killing, but directed the jury to consider all the facts in evidence in determining whether accused’s mind was moved by that degree of anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror, as to render him incapable of cool reflection, is properly refused to specially charge that to specially consider the threats made by decedent against accused, and thus select out of a large number of circumstances detailed in evidence a particular circumstance. Gillespie v. State, 60 App. 456, 132 S. W. 359.

Where there was other evidence connecting accused with the offense, besides the comparison of the tracks made by him and his confederate and by the horse they drove, the refusal of a special charge that evidence of footprints is not sufficient to support a conviction was proper because singlet out a particular circumstance in the evidence. Hahn v. State, 75 App. 409, 165 S. W. 218.

A requested charge that the jury should not find that there was a promise of marriage on the testimony of prosecutrix alone, but under the law her evidence as to the promise of marriage under which she claims she has been induced must be corroborated (i.e., by direct and positive testimony, or by circumstances of such character as to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that her testimony in that respect is true), was properly refused as singling out a particular fact and attempting to charge thereon. Gillespie v. State, 72 App. 585, 106 S. W. 135.

16. — Weight of evidence.—In a prosecution for the burglary of a box car, a charge that the evidence tending to connect defendant with another and previous burglary could only be considered by the jury in connection with defendant’s explanation of his possession of stolen goods was true, and that defendant could not be convicted of the breaking of any other car than that charged, was erroneous, as being a charge on the weight of the evidence. Nowlin v. State. (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

17. Modification of requests.—The court is not bound to modify an erroneous instruction, but may refuse it. Perkins v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 241; Mealer v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 353.

It is the duty of the court to give charges asked, with or without modification, or to refuse them. When they are modified, the modification must be in writing. McMahon v. State, 1 App. 102; Jones v. State, 22 App. 680, 3 S. W. 478; Sparks v. State, 28 App. 447, 5 S. W. 115.

A requested instruction should be presented in the very language desired. Heilbron v. State, 2 App. 537.

It was not a proper error to add to the defendant’s requested instruction to not consider the testimony of a certain witness for any purpose the words, “save as to impeachment if it does so impeach,” where the defendant accepted the instruction with this qualification. Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 191.

ence being sufficient to prevent the jury from erring in the matter. Beeson v. State, 68 App. 39, 130 S. W. 1906.

Where, in a prosecution for assault to murder, accused requested a special charge, on the rule that, if the jury had any doubt as to whether the assault was aggravated or simple, they should give accused the benefit thereof, the court should have given such proper charge on the subject, where the evidence required it, though the requested charge might not have been properly worded. King v. State, 61 App. 148, 144 S. W. 687.

Where the main charge covered accused's right to defend himself in a more favorable light than his requested instructions, such instructions were properly refused. McDaniell v. State, 65 App. 359, 139 S. W. 1154.

Where accused, relying on an alibi, presented no requested instructions on the subject, he could not complain of the charge that, if the jury did not believe that accused was present at the time and place of the commission of the offense, and that he was at some other or different place, or if there was a reasonable doubt on the question, accused must be acquitted, and that accused was presumed to be innocent until his guilt was proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Powlar v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 516.

19. Repetition of special requests already given.—Where the court charged for accused that among other evidence relied on by the state was evidence to show accused in possession of alleged stolen property, and that if the jury believed that accused found such property, or came into possession of it in any other way than by the alleged burglary of the house, he should be acquitted, it was not error to refuse an additional request to charge that if accused found the property, or came into possession of it in any other way than by the alleged burglary, it would be no evidence of his guilt, and that if the jury had a reasonable doubt that such property was actually stolen, or that accused found it, and it thereby came into his possession, they should disregard his possession thereof, as being no evidence of guilt; if being sufficiently covered by the former charge given. Mayo v. State, 58 App. 621, 127 S. W. 646.

Where, in a prosecution for the theft of seed cotton, the court properly instructed on reasonable doubt, and, at defendant's request, specifically instructed the jury that if they believed someone else, and not defendant, stole the cotton, or had a reasonable doubt thereof, it was not error to refuse defendant's requested instructions that the jury should acquit if they believed that the defendant loaded his wagon, and went to bed and stayed in his room, and did not go and steal the cotton, and that he was at home at the time the cotton was stolen. Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 100.

20. Argument of counsel.—See ante, art. 724, and notes.

Art. 737a. Correction of charge after objections thereto; no further charge after argument begins, except, etc.; review.—After the judge shall have received the objections to his main charge, together with any special charges offered he may make such changes in his main charge as he may deem proper, and the defendant or his counsel shall have the opportunity to present their objections thereto and in the same manner as is provided in Article 735, and thereupon the judge shall read his charge to the jury as finally written, together with any special charges given. After the argument begins no further charge shall be given to the jury unless required by the improper argument of counsel or the request of the jury, or unless the judge shall in his discretion, permit the introduction of other testimony, and in the event of such further charge the defendant or his counsel shall have the right to present objections in the same manner as is prescribed in Article 735. Provided that the failure of the court to give the defendant or his counsel a reasonable time to examine the charge and specify the ground of objection shall be subject to review either in the trial court or in the Appellate Court. [Act 1913, p. 278, ch. 138, § 3, amending Tit. 8, ch. 5, C. C. P. by adding art. 737a.]

In general.—The trial court may recall its charge at any time before its final delivery to, and the retirement of, the jury, and change it as to the submission of counts. Holt v. State, 39 App. 282, 45 S. W. 1016, 46 S. W. 829.

Although the homicide for which accused was tried was committed before the act of 1915 became effective, such changes in procedure must be followed where the trial was not had until after the statute went into effect. Ybarra v. State, 72 App. 76, 164 S. W. 10.

Under Acts 242 and 443, amending this article and arts. 735, 737, ante and 745, post, an objection to a charge on self-defense and to the refusal to give specially requested charge not made until motion for new trial was filed, was insufficient, and assignments of error thereto could not be considered by the Court of Criminal Appeals. Crockett v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 548.

Under this article, and in view of its purpose, the court, if convinced that an erroneous charge has been given, may withdraw and correct it before the verdict. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1079.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—32 497
Art. 737a  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS  (Title 8)

Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 735, as amended by Acts 23d Leg. c. 135, makes it the duty of the judge, before reading his charge to the jury, to submit it to the defendant, who shall have a reasonable time to present his objections thereto. Article 737a provides that failure to give defendant a reasonable time to do this gives him the right to make his objections for the first time in a motion for new trial and for a new trial or a hearing therefor. In a trial where the judge failed to submit the charge to accused and to submit to the jury the issue as to whether the accused owned the horse, and proper complaint was made in the motion for a new trial, held, reversal error. Abrigo v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 518.

Art. 738.  [718] Charges shall be certified by judge.—The general charge given by the court, as well as those given or refused at the request of either party, shall be certified by the judge, and filed among the papers in the cause, and shall constitute a part of the record of the cause. [O. C. 595.]

Authentication in general.—The general charge and special instructions, given or refused at the request of either party, must be certified by the judge. The official signature of the judge is all the certificate or authentication required. Jef­fries v. State, 9 App. 598; Roberts v. State, 5 App. 141; Carr v. State, Id. 153; Henderson v. State, Id. 134; Williams v. State, 18 App. 499; Hildreth v. State, 19 App. 158; McLain v. State, 20 App. 482, 17 S. W. 1062, 28 Am. St. Rep. 934.

When the court's charge is not signed by the judge except thereto can be taken in motion for new trial as well as by bill of exception. Jones v. State, 4 App. 22, 55 S. W. 1076.

This article requiring a judge to sign a charge to the jury is mandatory. Altherson v. State, 54 App. 8, 111 S. W. 413.

Under article 742, post, failure of the court to certify his charge, as required by this article, produces no prejudice. Where it resulted from mere inadvertence, and where the charge in the record was the only charge given to the jury, or upon which they acted. Shetters v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 582.

Filing and authentication thereof.—That the charge bears the file mark in another case is not material. Austin v. State, 42 Tex. 355.

An appeal or motion for new trial in the body of the record, and not in the margin merely. Smith v. State, 1 App. 408.

The main charge, as well as all requested charges given or refused, must be filed in the clerk of the trial court, and the filing must be authenticated by the official signature of the clerk. The proper practice is to require the clerk to place his file mark on the charge as soon as it is read, and before it is delivered to the clerk. In a felony case, on appeal, the conviction will be set aside, unless the transcript contains a charge duly authenticated by the signature of the judge and his file mark of the clerk. Haynie v. State, 3 App. 223; Parchman v. State, Id. 231; Krebs v. State, Id. 348; Richards v. State, Id. 423; Clambitt v. State, Id. 638; Thompson v. State, 4 App. 44; Hunt v. State, Id. 53; Long v. State, Id. 81; Doyle v. State, Id. 253; Richarte v. State, 5 App. 369; Hill v. State, 4 App. 559; Williams v. State, 18 App. 409.

The file marking may be entered nunc pro tunc, even at a subsequent term, but not after an appeal has been taken, and it is immaterial that the order to file nunc pro tunc was made by the successor in office of the judge before whom the trial was had. Nettles v. State, 4 App. 357; Hill v. State, Id. 559.

But where the record showed that the charge was authenticated by the official signature of the judge, and had been filed by the clerk, but not filed until one day after the trial, it was held that it had not been filed at the proper time if it could not be entertained when presented for the first time on appeal. Lowe v. State, 11 App. 253.

Record.—It was held in one case that where the judgment recited that the jury received the charge of the court, the mere absence from the record of the charge would not be cause for reversal, but it would be presumed that the clerk, in making up the transcript, had omitted the charge. TuUis v. State, 41 Tex. 598. This decision does not appear to be in harmony with more recent decisions cited above.

Alteration of charge.—Under arts. 734, 740, 741, and this article, and the action of the county attorney in writing in certain words in the charge in the horse theft, on the jury coming into court for information was ground for reversal, where after the additions had been made the charge was not read to the jury, but was handed to it. Christensen v. State, 59 App. 278, 128 S. W. 816.

Agreement of counsel.—An agreement of counsel, in the transcript, as to what the charge was, will not be considered on appeal. Lockett v. State, 40 Tex. 4. Nor will a paper purporting to be the charge, but which is not signed by the judge otherwise authenticated. Wheelock v. State, 15 Tex. 286; Smith v. State, 1 App. 688; Lindsay v. State, Id. 584; West v. State, 2 App. 239; Hubbard v. State, Id. 606.

Requested charges.—Special instructions, whether given or refused, must be authenticated by the signature of the trial judge to be reviewable on appeal. Porter v. State, 60 App. 686, 122 S. W. 926; Britton v. State, 61 App. 33, 153 S. W. 805; Baker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 607.

Where requested charges are not copied in the transcript, the refusal thereof cannot be reviewed on appeal. Cruz v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 564.

Art. 739.  [719] No charge in misdemeanor, except, etc.—In criminal actions for misdemeanor, the court is not required to charge the jury, except at the request of the counsel on either side: but, when so requested, shall give or refuse such charges, with or without modification, as are asked in writing. [O. C. 598.]

Necessity of written charge.—See post, art. 749, and notes.

Necessity of requests.—The court is not required to give instructions in a misdemeanor case unless requested to do so. Lutrell v. State, 61 App. 411, 142 S. W. 589; Bill v. State, 34 App. 297, 50 S. W. 444, 880; Dub v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 556; Stubbs v. State, 71 App. 390, 106 S. W. 87; Robey v. State, 73 App. 6, 163 S. W. 713; Goode v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 714.

It is error to refuse an appropriate instruction when properly requested. Ross v. Brown, App. 914. And when charges are requested they must be given with or without modification, or must be refused. Melton v. State, 12 App. 488.

Requested charges in misdemeanor cases, unlike those in felony cases, must state pointedly the law applicable to the case. Brent v. State, 57 App. 411, 127 S. W. 555.

Where the instructions submitted the issues in a misdemeanor case in substantial fairness, accused, desiring more accurate charges, must ask special charges.

In a prosecution for a misdemeanor, failure of the court to submit an issue as specifically as possible is not reversible error, in the absence of a request for a more specific presentation. Diggs v. State, 64 App. 122, 141 S. W. 100.

The court, on a prosecution for sale of liquor, there being evidence of three separate sales, one of a bottle of whisky, and two of single drinks, was not required to correct, and as corrected the court acquit acquit if defendant did not accept the bottle of the whisky. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 914.

A defendant need not charge the jury in a misdemeanor charge the jury in requested to do so, if he does give an erroneous charge, it will require a reversal, if it is excepted to and a correct charge requested. Buckley v. State, 70 App. 550, 167 S. W. 765.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, where one paragraph of a requested instruction was improper, the court was under no obligation to modify it by striking out such paragraph, and giving the other, even if the other paragraph was proper. Cunningham v. State, 73 App. 565, 166 S. W. 519.

On a trial for playing cards and going into and remaining in a place where cards were being played, the court was not bound to charge that an admission by one of the defendants subsequent to the offense could not be considered in passing on the guilt of the other defendants, where no such charge was requested. Sloan v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 156.

In a misdemeanor case, where the court charged the jury as to the purpose for which evidence could be considered, accused, if desires of more explicit instructions, should request them. Noddleman v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 710.

Necessity of written request.—The court may refuse to give requested instructions where they are not presented in writing. Murray v. State, 58 App. 677, 44 S. W. 529.

A misdemeanor case will not be reversed for failure of the trial court to charge all the law applicable, in the absence of requests for special instructions covering the point and bills of exception to the refusal to give such special instructions. Robbins v. State, 69 App. 551, 152 S. W. 770.

Under this article, a conviction will not be reversed for failure to properly charge the law on the point in controversy. Williams v. State, 62 App. 55, 126 S. W. 470.

In a prosecution for assault, accused objected to the charge that the use of any dangerous weapon in an angry or threatening manner, with intent to harm another and under circumstances to effect that object was an assault, on the ground that this charge was not applicable to the evidence. He also objected to that charge upon the ground that the court should have charged the jury that the conduct above detailed amounted to no more than a simple assault, but in neither case did he request special charges. Held, that under this article and art. 742, the objections to this charge presented no reversible error. Nolan v. State, 63 App. 276, 140 S. W. 100.

The court in misdemeanor cases will not consider complaints of the charge given and the refusal of special charges unless a bill of exceptions is taken at the time, giving in the bill the specific reasons why the court erred in giving the charge complained of, or in refusing the requested charge. Gies v. State (Cr. App.) 118 S. W. 217.

Under arts. 737, 743, and this article the giving and refusal of instructions cannot be considered, unless bills of exceptions are taken at the time in which the specific reasons why the court erred are given. Brown v. State, 73 App. 571, 166 S. W. 568.
Art. 740. [720] No verbal charge, except, etc.—No verbal charge shall be given in any case whatever, except in cases of misdemeanor, and then only by consent of the parties.

An admonition to the jury to pay particular attention to the charge need not be in writing. Sargent v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 364. A bare statement to the jury of the penalty authorized by statute is not a charge so as to make it necessary to put it in writing. Bush v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 550. After giving a charge in writing it is not error to verbally instruct the jury to disregard certain testimony. Winfield v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 684. Remarks or an address by the trial judge to the regular jury panel for the week, made when administering the oath of the jurors for the purpose of their duties, are not required to be in writing. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 341. Requested instructions must be in writing. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 54. The court may charge in writing though not requested. Hunt v. State, 9 App. 404.

Reading law to the jury is a verbal and not a written charge, and is reversible error if excepted to at the time. Wilson v. State, 35 App. 591; Carr v. State, 41 Tex. 543. But in Hobbs v. State, 7 App. 117, it was held that the judge may read from the statutes such portions thereof as are necessary to inform the jury of the nature, definition, and punishment of the offense. It will be seen that the last cited decision is in conflict with the two decisions before cited. It, in effect, overrules Carr v. State, supra, and is itself, in effect, overruled by Wilson v. State, supra.

Where the general charge has been signed and additional charges are given to supply omissions in the former, these also must be signed. Logan v. State, 49 App. 85, 48 S. W. 676.

Under this article and arts. 734, 738, 741, the action of the county attorney in writing certain words in the charge on the jury coming into court for information and reversal, where after the additions had been made the charge was not read to the jury, but was handed to it. Christensen v. State, 59 App. 278, 128 S. W. 616. The court should read the charge to the jury in the precise words in which it is written in a criminal case, as well as in a civil case, though the only statute so requiring, Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 1971, refers to civil actions. Coley v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 789.

Art. 741. [721] Judge shall read to jury, what.—When charges are asked, the judge shall read to the jury only such as he gives. [O. C. 600.]

In general.—Irvine v. State, 18 App. 61; Brucken v. State, 29 App. 362, 16 S. W. 192.

Under this article and arts. 734, 735, 740, the action of the county attorney in writing in certain words in the charge on the jury coming into court for information was ground for reversal, where after the additions had been made the charge was not read to the jury, but was handed to it. Christensen v. State, 59 App. 278, 128 S. W. 616.

Art. 742. [722] Jury may take charge with them.—The jury may take with them, in their retirement, the charges given by the court after the same have been filed; but they shall not be permitted to take with them any charge, or portion of a charge, that has been asked of the court and which the court has refused to give. [O. C. 601.]

That the jury inadvertently failed to take one of accused's special charges, which had been approved and read to them, in the jury room, when they retired was not reversible error. Thomason v. State, 71 App. 459, 156 S. W. 359.
Art. 743. [723] Judgment not to be reversed unless error prejudicial, etc.—Whenever it appears by the record in any criminal action upon appeal of the defendant that any of the requirements of the nine preceding articles [arts. 735–742] have been disregarded, the judgment shall not be reversed unless the error appearing from the record was calculated to injure the rights of the defendant, or unless it appears from the record that the defendant has not had a fair and impartial trial, and all objections to the charge, and on account of refusal or modification of special charges shall be made at the time of the trial. [O. C. 602: Act 1897, p. 17; Act 1913, p. 278, ch. 138, § 4, amending art. 743, revised C. C. P.]

1. Explanatory.—Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 723, read as follows: “Whenever it appears by the record in any criminal action, upon appeal of the defendant, that any of the requirements of the eight preceding articles have been disregarded, the judgment shall be reversed; provided, the error is excepted to at the time of the trial.”

It was amended by Act of 1897, p. 17, to read as follows: “Whenever it appears by the record in any criminal action, upon appeal of the defendant, that any of the requirements of the eight preceding articles have been disregarded, the judgment shall not be reversed, unless the error appearing from the record was calculated to injure the rights of the defendant, which error shall be excepted to at the time of the trial, or on a motion for a new trial.”

II. IN GENERAL

2. Validity. — The wisdom of this statute is of no concern to the courts. Chance v. State, 63 App. 692, 161 S. W. 113.

This article as amended by Acts 33d Leg. c. 135 is valid and binding on the Court of Criminal Appeals, since the Constitution gives the right of appeal only under such conditions and restrictions as may be provided by law. Wright v. State, 73 App. 178, 163 S. W. 976.

3. Subsequent trial for offenses before amendment. — This section as so amended applies to trials subsequent to the taking effect of the amendment for offenses committed prior to its taking effect, since they relate to mere matters of procedure which are governed by the law in force at the time of the trial. Wright v. State, 73 App. 178, 163 S. W. 976.

Although the homicide for which accused was tried was committed before the act of 1911 became effective, the changes in procedure must be followed where the trial was not final until after the statute went into effect. Ybarra v. State, 72 App. 70, 164 S. W. 10.

II. HARMLESS ERROR

4. Decisions under former statute. — If the error be not excepted to at the proper time, the next point at which it should be objected to is in a motion for a new trial. If motion is presented for such a new trial, it is subject to another and a very different rule than when it is presented by proper bill of exception, which rule is, that if under all the circumstances as exhibited in the record the error was "calculated to injure the rights of the defendant," the conviction will be set aside; but if it shall be deemed immaterial, and the conviction will not be disturbed because of it. If the objection be still further delayed, and made for the first time on appeal, the error will not be disturbed because of the error unless it be one of a fundamental nature; that is, if the error be a material misdirection of the law applicable to the case, or be a failure to give in charge the law required by the evidence in the case, and such affirmative error, or such error of omission, is calculated to injure the defendant, the conviction will be set aside. (A) Instructions Given

Because a charge given was not required will not necessarily require the reversal of a conviction. It may be harmless or even inure to the benefit of accused. Surrell v. State, 29 App. 321, 15 S. W. 816. But see McSpattion v. State, 30 App. 616, 15 S. W. 295.

The court will not reverse for error in a charge, where, considering the charge as a whole, accused could not have been injured thereby. Coffey v. State, 60 App. 73, 131 S. W. 216.

Where an instruction on aggravated assault submitted what occurred at the time, just before the shooting, and after instructing on general cause and cooling time the court further instructed that whether such adequate cause existed for such sudden passion, if any there was, was for the jury to determine, from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances in evidence in the case, it left the jury to decide whether the prior one cause, so that the rights of the defendant were not injured. Mosley v. State, 61 App. 294, 135 S. W. 148.

Where the court, on the trial of accused for the theft of a mule, correctly charged the law applicable to the facts, showing a theft of two mules at the same time and place, the act of the court in charging, on the jury asking for further instructions, that the state could demand a conviction for the theft of one mule, as charged in the indictment, was not prejudicial to accused. Miller v. State, 62 App. 507, 138 S. W. 113.

An instruction at the end of the charge on manslaughter, that if accused was at a different place than where the killing occurred he should be acquitted, was not harmful error, on the ground that it commingled a charge on alibi with a charge on manslaughter, since the subjects were not commingled, and a special charge on alibi was not required, in the absence of a request. Banks v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 184.

It was not shown that the court erred in giving a charge which tended to emphasize another portion of the charge, where it did not appear how this could have injured accused, and it was not in fact urged that it did injure him, especially where the evidence was not in the record, and did not accompany the record. Chilton v. State, 70 App. 348, 156 S. W. 1170.

Any error in refusing requested charges by accused, or in particular expressions in the charges given, was harmless, where the charges given were substantially correct upon every issue. Hunter v. State, 73 App. 459, 166 S. W. 164.

A failure of showing prejudice.—In the absence of a statement of facts, the appellate court cannot determine that an erroneous instruction was prejudicial to the rights of accused. Burton v. State, 62 App. 648, 138 S. W. 1019.

7. Errors in form.—Since under art. 773, post, the court could have orally called the jury's attention to the informality of a verdict brought in, and instructed them orally as to the correct form, or had it changed with their consent, it was not reversible error to orally instruct as to the form of their verdict in the first instance. Ragsdale v. State, 61 App. 146, 134 S. W. 224.

The trial court in charging used a paper containing the instructions given on the former trial, erasing with ink the part of those instructions held error by the appellate court, and submitting the original paper to the jury. Held, that the court was not prejudicial to accused. Arnold v. State, 61 App. 348, 156 S. W. 1170.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, there was no evidence of self-defense, the fact that the court struck out with a pen a part of an instruction with reference to the law of self-defense, and permitted the same to go to the jury with the part stricken, was not prejudicial to accused. Zunago v. State, 63 App. 58, 138 S. W. 718, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 665.

The failure of the court to certify his charge, as required by art. 779 ante, was harmless as the result from mere chance in the original record was the only charge given to the jury, or upon which they acted. Shetters v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 582.

In a prosecution for unlawfully disposing of mortgaged property, instructions submitting the question whether accused had disposed of the mortgaged property, as originally drawn, used the words "without the consent of the said C. and W."
the accused, the instructions to the jury. The trial court having instructed at accused's request that the second count in the indictment was withdrawn, accused cannot complain on appeal of any error in failing to instruct on it. Ellington v. State, 63 App. 124, 146 S. W. 1190.

Where accused, in a prosecution for murder, requested a charge on the right of self-defense, he could not complain of the giving of a charge conveying the same thought in practically the same words to the jury. Reinh v. State, 64 App. 655, 145 S. W. 167.

Accused, having requested the court to charge that, even though the jury believed the evidence that defendant's son stated that defendant did not speak after the son appeared, they could consider such evidence only for impeachment, and not as any evidence that defendant did not in fact speak after the son was struck, was entitled to the instruction that if the jury believed the son told B. that his mother did speak, they could consider B.'s testimony to that effect in support of the son, on the ground that it was on the weight of the evidence. Reynolds v. State, 63 App. 199, 139 S. W. 437.

Where accused himself requested a charge on alibi, he cannot complain that the court charged on that question; the error, if any, having been invited. De Lerossa v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 312.

9. Clerical errors.—Verbal inaccuracies in a charge, where it correctly and fairly presented the law as a whole, are not ground for reversal. Cue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 250; Coleman v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1177.

If there was error in the court substituting the name of a wrong party as to contradictory statements, yet it was not injurious to rights of defendant and therefore not cause for reversal. Jackson v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 928.

In a rape case, where the offense was alleged to have been committed on or about March 24, 1909, a charge that if accused, as charged, on or about the 23d day of March, 1909, as had carnal knowledge, etc., was not reversible error, where there was no question of limitation. Munger v. State, 57 App. 384, 125 S. W. 574.

At a trial for assault with intent to murder, where no one except the defendant and the person injured, who was a witness, were present at the assault, in instructing on the presumption arising from the use of a deadly weapon, which referred to the injured party as "the deceased," while erroneous, is harmless, in view of the evidence. Hartfield v. State, 61 App. 515, 134 S. W. 1186.

Where an indictment for forgery charged that the offense was committed April 15, 1910, and the testimony of another date, and the forgery instrument showed that April 15, 1909, was the date of the offense, the error in an instruction, stating that the offense was committed on or about April 15, 1910, was not prejudicial, and the court must, as required by this article, disregard it. White v. State, 61 App. 480, 135 S. W. 562.

In a prosecution for theft, error in the caption of the court's charge in stating that the case was tried in a county other than that where it was actually tried, and in failing to state the offense the defendant was accused of, or when or where it was committed, or that defendant pleaded not guilty, was not prejudicial, as the jury must have known where the trial was held and what crime accused was charged and that he had pleaded not guilty. Franklin v. State, 65 App. 438, 146 S. W. 1093.

Where the indictment in a prosecution for murder charged that the offense was committed by striking deceased with a piece of board, a charge, which in submitting the cause to the jury used the word "board" in every place therein but one, where the words were "piece of wood," the words were practically synonymous, and could not have misled the jury. Johnson v. State, 64 App. 399, 142 S. W. 583.

An instruction that, before the jury could "not" convict accused, they must find facts which would, in law, establish accused's guilt, was not reversible error; the presence of the word "not" being obviously a clerical error. McWhirter v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 189.

The evident mistake of the court in charging, on a prosecution for assault to murder, to find defendant not guilty if he, or B., or both, did the shooting, whereas another through the charge, it had instructed, if he did the shooting with malice aforethought, he would be guilty, was harmless; the state's theory being that defendant did the shooting, it being clear that, if he did, it was to kill, and defendant's case and evidence being that he did not fire at all, and had nothing to do with the shooting. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 907.

The use twice in instructions in a homicide case of the word "defendant" when "deceased" was intended to be used was a mere clerical error, and not reversible, where the whole instruction showed that it was not misleading. Bonds v. State, 71 App. 468, 120 S. W. 100.

Where a charge on self-defense, relating to the manifest intention of the deceased to execute threats previously made, through inadvertence used the word "execute" instead of "execute," but it appeared that the word was read "execute" by all the attorneys and by the judge, the error was not prejudicial. Carey v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 366.

10. Inapplicability to issue.—On a trial for theft the court through mistake instructed the jury that defendant was charged with robbery, but in subsequent paragraphs correctly charged the law in regard to theft. Held that the error was harmless. Oxford v. State, 32 App. 272, 22 S. W. 971.

Under an indictment charging embezzlement of money in accused’s possession “borrowed” for counting, an instruction, authorizing conviction if the money was being “in any other manner borrowed or obtained,” in the absence of a statement of facts showing prejudice to accused. Shrewder v. State, 62 App. 460, 136 S. W. 461, 1200.

Where a portion of a charge complained of, though not in the language of the indictment, was correctly given to the jury of what the law in the case was, substantially quoted the article of the statute under which the prosecution was had, the defendant was not injured by the charge and cannot complain. Baumgarn v. State, 64 App. 145, 142 S. W. 4.

Where the undisputed evidence showed that decedent was killed by blows on his head with a stone, as charged in the indictment, in which was another charge, charging the killing while accused was unlawfully engaged in committing a robbery, an instruction, rectifying the charging part of the two counts, without limiting the jury to either, was not prejudicial to accused. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 276.

Where the information charging the practicing of medicine by accused without license, did not allege a specified time of the commission of the offense, but embraced the whole period on and prior to a designated date within the period of limitation, and the evidence, without contradiction, showed that accused practiced medicine on and before the designated date, a charge, authorizing a conviction on a happening prior to the designated date, was erroneous, and it was not prejudicial to accused, on the ground that each day of practice was a separate offense, since a conviction barred any offenses committed in the county within the period of limitation on and prior to the designated date. Stiles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 329.

In a prosecution for carrying a pistol, where the court properly stated the law as to unlawfully carrying a pistol, an instruction that, if accused did unlawfully “have on or about his person a pistol as charged, he should be found guilty, did not prejudice accused, because of the use of the word “have,” instead of “carry.” McCravy v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 812.

The words “religious purposes” are so analogous to “religious worship” that in a prosecution for disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship a charge using the term “religious purposes” is an immaterial variance. Laird v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 260.

11. Omission of elements of offense.—When the defendant had no claim to the money which he took from the prosecutor, and the evidence shows that he took it with a fraudulent intent, the omission of the word “fraudulent” in the definition of the offense contained in the charge was not calculated to injure defendant and court will not reverse on account of such omission. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 67 S. W. 109.

In the charge of murder of second degree the court omitted to state that the killing must be unlawful, and that it must be done on malice aforethought, and while under this article it might be doubtful whether the case ought to be reversed for these omissions yet the necessary ingredients of murder in the second degree should be given when that issue is submitted to the jury, applying the law to the facts. McDowell v. State, 55 App. 596, 117 S. W. 932.

In a prosecution for murder, where the only defense was that some one else did the killing, and it appeared that deceased had received his death wound by being struck in the head with a gun barrel, a charge on murder in the second degree, which did not make an unlawful killing a condition precedent to conviction, is not reversible error for the killing could not have been justified. Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1053.

Where, on a trial for rape on a female under the age of consent, prosecutor testified that accused had intercourse with her, and physicians examining her declared that she had been penetrated, an instruction that it was necessary that the evidence showed penetration, but beyond that the jury need not go, though erroneous, was not ground for reversal; the indictment not alleging that the offense was accomplished by force, threats, or fraud. Kinch v. State, 70 App. 419, 158 S. W. 649.

12. Reasonable doubt.—Where the court, in a trial for theft, charged generally regarding the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, there was no error requiring a reversal, though a particular clause of the charge did not include the law of reasonable doubt. Williams v. State, 62 App. 322, 137 S. W. 657.

In a prosecution for rape, the court charged that if the accused did not have sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness, as charged in the indictment, or if there was a reasonable doubt as to whether he did or did not, defendant was not guilty, and also that the burden of proof is upon the state throughout the entire case, the defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal and competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. Held, that the giving of the instructions was not reversible error. Lott v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 544.
The court instructed that a reasonable doubt was an actual doubt that the jury must have, whether or not it overcame the entire case, giving consideration to all the testimony and every particular of it, and if the jury felt uncertain and not fully convinced that accused was guilty, and believed that they are acting in a reasonable manner, and that a reasonable man in any matter of life importance would hesitate to act because of such a doubt, as they are conscious of having, then that was a reasonable doubt of which accused was entitled to have the benefit. Held that, while it was the better practice not to define
"reasonable doubt," the instruction attempting to define it could not have injured

13. Singing out evidence.—Submission, in prosecution for perjury, of mate-raility of testimony held not prejudicial. Montgomery v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S.
W. 865.

A charge in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape that if defendant embraced prosecutrix with her consent, or if there was a reasonable doubt as to whether he embraced her with her consent, such acts upon his part with her consent would not constitute an assault herein defined, while objectionable as imposing the burden of proving certain conduct toward the witness with her consent giving undue prominence to such consent, is harmless.
Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

14. Weight of evidence.—A charge even if on the weight of the evidence is not ground of reversal unless the error was calculated to injure the rights of de-

That an instruction was upon the weight of the evidence would not be reversible error, where the facts recited therein were proved beyond a reasonable doubt, both by accused and all of the other witnesses. Crain v. State (Cr. App.) 155
S. W. 155.

The giving of a charge calling the evidence to the attention of the jury and informing them they might consider it in passing on the credit of the witness was properly submitted to State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1065.

15. Inapplicability to evidence—Instruction not supported by evidence.—A charge on circumstantial evidence could not have injured accused, even if the case was not one of circumstantial evidence. Platinburg v. State, 57 App. 376, 123 S. W. 421.

Where the testimony of prosecutrix on a trial for seduction, testifying unequivocally to the promise of marriage, to accused's act, and to her consent thereto by reason of the promise of marriage and her devotion to accused, was corroborated by proof that accused cailed on prosecutrix at her home, accompanied her writings, and by letters written by accused to prosec-uctrix in which he spoke of his love for her and of their coming marriage, the error in a charge that prosecutrix was an accomplice, and that the jury could not convict on her testimony unless they believed that her testimony was true, and that it tended to show guilt, and that there was other testimony tending to connect accused with the commission of the offense, arising from the fact that it required a less degree of proof than the law contemplates, was not prejudicial to accused.

The error in submitting the issue of manslaughter, while the evidence only shows accused's guilt of murder in the second degree or self-defense relied on by him, is not prejudicial to accused convicted of manslaughter. Stewart v. State, 71 App.
237, 153 S. W. 996.

In a prosecution for false imprisonment, while it was improper for the court in giving the statutory definition of the offense to quote another article of the statute defining threats in connection with the offense, where there was no evidence of the threats, where the case was harmless, error was on the false imprisonment alleged and proved. Matthews v. State, 71 App. 374, 160
S. W. 1185.

Where, in a prosecution for theft, it was not in issue that the defendant had taken the property in payment of a debt to him, an instruction placing the burden of proof of such an issue on the defendant was not ground for a reversal.
Schenk v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 357.

16. Instructions as to offense not established by evidence.—In a prosecution for murder, the court charged that even though the jury believed that the killing, if any, took place under circumstances showing no deliberation, yet if accused provoked the difficulty with the apparent intention of killing or doing serious bodily injury to deceased, the offense was not within the definition of manslaughter.
The presence of this state of mind was given in connection with the definition of manslaughter, and was preceded by a paragraph defining adequate cause, and was followed by one applying the law to the facts of the case, in which the court directed the jury that if the killing was done in a sudden transport of passion aroused by adequate cause, and not in self-defense, it would be manslaughter. Held that, although the place occupied by the charge as to manslaughter in the instructions was wrong, and there was no provoking the difficulty in the case, the error was harmless, in view of the facts that there was no manslaughter in the case. Eggles-

Any error in submitting an issue of provocation of the difficulty in a murder case was harmless, even if the evidence did not raise the issue, where a full and complete charge on self-defense was given, and it appeared, in a trial on an angry, at decedent, accused went to different places, where he procured a gun and ammunition, and returned to where he killed decedent. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.)
114 S. W. 267.

In a prosecution for murder, where the evidence showed either murder in the second degree, as found by the jury, or perfect self-defense, errors in the charge as to manslaughter were not prejudicial. Burns v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 366.

Where the evidence showed that about half an hour before accused shot decedent out of a restaurant, and that he struck decedent on the head with a pistol, whereupon accused left the restaurant, obtained a gun and shells, and returned and shot decedent, an instruction on manslaughter, that the past conduct of decedent, his threats and bearing, should be considered in considering the killing of his mind was harmless, not prejudicial to accused. Maxey v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 562.

A charge on a trial for practicing medicine without a license, which embodied Pen. Code, art. 759, to the effect that, if the affidavit or other evidence, whereby it was falsely false, it would subject the defendant to punishment for false swearing, was not prejudicial to accused, where no evidence was submitted on such an issue. Milling v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 411.

Evidence which showed that decedent, who was a deputy, hid behind a gate post and stepped out and presented a gun at accused and others as they were carrying away stolen property, did not raise the issue of manslaughter, self-defense, or defense of another, any error in submitting such issues was not prejudicial to accused, though his own defense was aliased. Christian v. State, 71 App. 566, 161 S. W. 101.

Where the facts did not justify the submission of aggravated assault, defendant's complaint of the court's charge on that offense, even if correct, would not present reversible error. Girtman v. State, 72 App. 158, 164 S. W. 1969.

In a prosecution for homicide, where there was no issue of manslaughter in the case, errors in instructions on manslaughter are harmless. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 750.

17. Assumption of facts.—In a prosecution for pandering, defendant was not prejudiced by the court's assumption in its charge that the house to which defendant took prosecutrix was a house of prostitution, and in omitting to define "prostitute" and "prostitution"; the meaning of both being too well known to need definition. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 943.

Even though an instruction in a prosecution for the killing of an officer was erroneous as assuming that the defendant was carrying a pistol at a certain time, it was harmless where the officer had a warrant for his arrest charging him with carrying a pistol at that time. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 553.

Where accused admitted that he intentionally struck the blows which killed decedent under circumstances showing an intention to kill, and relied on self-defense and on facts reducing the killing to manslaughter, and there was no issue of accidental homicide or any issue rendering the homicide other than an intentional one, the error, if any, in a charge that where one person intentionally kills another it depends on the circumstances whether the act is justifiable, or, if not justifiable, the degree of guilt, was not prejudicial. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 237.

18. Disregarding evidence.—Where decedent, accompanied by a third person, fired a shot before accused shot decedent, but the third person did not do anything at which any one could take offense, the failure, in submitting the issue of self-defense, to include the acts of the third person, was not prejudicial to accused: the court submitting every theory of self-defense as applied to the conduct of decedent. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 205, 141 S. W. 983.

It was not reversible error for the court to charge that any assault causing pain or bloodshed would be adequate cause to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, and that if deceased or his brother assaulted accused with their fists or a stick, and this created anger, rage, etc., accused would be guilty only of manslaughter, instead of summing up all the testimony relating to the alleged assault.Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

19. Errors harmless under the evidence.—See a charge in a prosecution for swindling devolving the burden of proof upon the defendant, held to be harmless and immaterial in view of the facts in the case. Sherwood v. State, 42 Tex. 489.

On a trial for murder, where there was testimony admitted as to the acts and declarations of several supposed conspirators, and it was objected to the charge of the court that it permitted the jury to consider threats and declarations of all, while the evidence may not have shown all to be conspirators, held, that if the objection complained of be conveyed, still, inasmuch as the charge was not excepted to, and no probable injury to defendant made to appear, all the parties having been shown to be co-conspirators, defendant can not be heard to complain. Luttrell v. State, 31 App. 492, 21 S. W. 248.

An incorrect definition of principals could not prejudice defendant when he was present and acting in the theft. Robinson v. State, 37 App. 195, 39 S. W. 107.

Where accused was at least guilty of aggravated assault, if guilty at all, it was not prejudicial error to omit to submit to the jury the different statutory grounds of aggravation. Wimberley v. State, 60 App. 65, 139 S. W. 1002.

Where, on a trial for murder, accused testified that the injuries inflicted on him by decedent with a club caused both pain and bloodshed, the error in a charge on manslaughter that an assault and battery, causing pain and bloodshed, was adequate cause was not reversible. Anthony v. State, 62 App. 138, 136 S. W. 1957.

In a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquor in local option territory, an erroneous instruction as to the date when the local option law went into effect is harmless, where the testimony tended to show a sale by defendant after the actual date on which the law went into effect. Green v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 126.

Defendant purchased mules on credit, giving a deed of trust for the price on land which he claimed was unincumbered. The land was subject to vendor's lien note. Before the time of defendant's trial for swindling, he deeded the land to his vendor in payment of those notes. The land upon which he gave a second deed of trust was only part of the land subject to the vendor's lien. Held, that an struction that, if the land not subject to the second deed of trust was of cash market value, the vendor's lien must be on the whole, then the verdict should be for the defendant was harmless error. Brown v. State, 62 App. 592, 138 S.W. 604."

Though an instruction on the subject of confessions might have been made more clear, it will not be ground for reversal, where in evidence outside of the confession were sufficient to support the verdict. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S.W. 652.

Where the evidence in a prosecution for obstructing a railroad track showed that the tracks had been placed on the track and defendant's action showed that rocks also had been placed there, an instruction submitting obstructions by ties or rocks was not reversible error. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S.W. 166.

Where accused was cross-examined in order to show that he persons whom he killed had been made by defendant to have been unworthy of lifes, and that accused knew such fact, and no testimony on this point was elicited from any other witness, an instruction requiring the jury to find that accused "honest-ly" believed the information given him regarding such threats in order to justify the homicide, if error, was harmless. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S.W. 752.

An instruction in a trial for homicide limited the law of threats to those actually communicated to defendant before the homicide, but there was no pertinent or forcible evidence that any of the threats made by deceased were not communicated to defendant, and whether communicated or not they were considered by the jury. Held, in view of the Code provision, that the exclusion of uncommunicated threats was not prejudicial. Summers v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S.W. 774.

Error, if any, in an instruction as to principals in nontrying both parties to his death, was not reversible, where the undisputed evidence showed beyond doubt that they were both present. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S.W. 105.

In a prosecution for homicide, the defense was that accused was told, about an hour before the killing, that defendant had said that he had accused's daughter, who disappeared from home, where accused would never see her again, and that defendant had said to accused's informant, "Tell that damn, gray-haired old daddy of yours [referring to accused] that if he wants to know anything from me to speak," and accused testified that about an hour afterward, when defendant was passing his home, he said to defendant that he understood that de- cendent had his little girl where she would never see her again, and that defendant must tell him where she was, and that defendant replied, "What in hell are you going to do about it?" Held that, since according to accused's testimony he was informed of defendant's insulting conduct toward his daughter very shortly before the difficulty, a part of the instruction on manslaughter, that "the provocation must arise at the time, to cause the passion," could not have harmed accused. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S.W. 441.

Where, in a prosecution for unlawfully disposing of mortgaged property, all of the evidence by both accused and the state showed that accused gave a mortgage as alleged, and that it was unsatisfied at the time of his disposition of the prop- erty, any error in a charge because it did not confine the jury to the evidence in the case, but permitted them to believe from any source, that the mortgage lien was unsatisfied at the time of the sale, could not have harmed accused. Coley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S.W. 789.

If there was any error in instructions, as to the testimony of an accomplice which did not specifically require the jury to find such testimony to be true, it was harmless, where accused's own testimony, in connection with that shown to have been voluntarily given by him before the grand jury and which he did not contradicted, showed that the testimony of the accomplice was true. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S.W. 915.

In an instruction on the abandonment of the difficulty, the use of the words "in faith, abandoned," etc., was improper, in that the trial court told the defendant intended at some future time to renew the difficulty, but it is harmless error in a case where there is no evidence from which such an inference could be drawn. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S.W. 364.

Where accused, on trial for carrying a pistol, did not have any authority from the sheriff to carry it, and the evidence of threats only showed threats generally, long before the date of the offense, and the court charged that if accused, on the occasion, had reasonable ground for fearing an unlawful attack, and the danger was so threatening as not to admit of the arrest of the person about to make the attack, he should be acquitted, and that the law permits one to carry a pistol when his life is threatened, and he believes honestly that the threats will be excuted, any error in a charge, that if accused, when he carried the pistol, had not been called on by any officer to assist in suppressing an unlawful assembly he should be convicted, was not prejudicial, since, in view of the evidence and the other instructions, no other verdict than that of guilty could properly be rendered. Cushing v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S.W. 599.

Where, in a trial for the theft of property of the value of more than $50, the uncontroverted evidence showed that the money stolen exceeded that amount, an instruction to convict defendant if he took property of the value of $50 or more, if erroneous, was harmless. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S.W. 897.

In a prosecution for murder, where accused had killed deceased by striking him on the head with a gun barrel, the error in a charge on murder in the second degree, which told the jury that if the weapon was one capable of producing death "in the innocence," etc., is not prejudicial, for it appearing there was no justification for the killing. Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S.W. 1053.

Where all of the evidence in a prosecution for unlawfully killing a deer went to its killing on or about August 1, 1909, 1910, or 1911, error in a charge that if accused within two years next before May 13, 1912, killed a wild deer, the jury should convict, on the ground that two years from that date would embrace the open season, to January 1, 1911, and that from November 1, 1910, to January 1, 1912, was not reversible. Baker v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 631.

On a trial for engaging in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, accused could not complain because the charge would have authorized the conviction of a subsequent holder of the liquor, where there was no evidence what he was a druggist or had a license to sell on prescription. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 556.

An instruction authorizing the conviction of defendant as principal if he acted with others in the commission of the offense, though not personally present constitutes reversible error where the defense was an alibi, where the evidence for the prosecution was circumstantial, or where there was any evidence that defendant was not an accomplice, even though it would not have supported a conviction if the evidence was uncontradicted that the defendant was present at the commission of the offense. Silvas v. State, 71 App. 213, 159 S. W. 223.

In a prosecution for burglary, the evidence was insufficient to support the instructions that if accused, rather than another so as to constitute him a principal, unlawfully burglarized the store with intent to steal, the jury should find him guilty. Held, that the instruction was not prejudicial, even if erroneous, merely because there was no evidence that accused kept watch at the store, the evidence being that his accomplice burglarized the store alone. Pinkerton v. State, 71 App. 195, 160 S. W. 87.

Where the killing was in the morning, on the first meeting of defendant with deceased after the night when defendant was claimed to have been informed of the meaning of insulting language to his wife by deceased, there was no harm in the use of the word "sudden" in the charge that by "adequate cause" was meant such as would commonly produce a degree of anger, sudden resentment, or terror in a person of ordinary temper sufficient to render the mind incapable of reflection; and that if defendant, on his first meeting with deceased after being informed of such insulting words, killed because of said words and their influence on his mind, he could not be found guilty of any higher degree of offense than manslaughter. Davis v. State, 73 App. 49, 163 S. W. 442.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicants in prohibited territory, the court refused a requested charge not to consider as a sale a transaction between accused and J., if he requested accused to order whisky for him, and paid her for it from money due him, and accused ordered the whisky for him acting as his agent, but instructed, instead, that, if J. requested accused to order whisky for him, and she did so and acted as his agent in doing so, such transaction would not be a sale, unless J. paid accused for the whisky after it arrived or at delivery. Held, that the refusal of the requested charge and the giving of the charge was not reversible error; the evidence, in fact, showing a sale by accused to J. Hightower v. State, 73 App. 285, 165 S. W. 181.

A charge which required the jury to believe that the required threats which were communicated to the defendant were actually made by the deceased, and that they were threats to take the life of defendant and to do him serious bodily injury, was harmless, where the evidence was uncontradicted that the deceased did threaten the defendant with death and also with serious bodily injury. Carey v. State (Cr. App.) 157 S. W. 266.

Where an alleged statement made by deceased after she had been injured did not even tend to show that defendant inflicted the injuries, and did not tend to cause any injury to the accused, or to furnish any reference to impeaching testimony, on the question whether deceased spoke after her injury or not, though objectionable as to the weight of the evidence, was not prejudicial. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 437.

As the courts have no right to assess punishment not provided for by law, the error in submitting a case under statutes not applicable to the offense is fundamental, and may be first raised on motion for rehearing on appeal. Dillard v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 99.

21. Unnecessary instructions.—Where the state's evidence showed an unlawful killing of decedent by accused, and there was no eyewitness to the killing save accused, who testified to facts establishing a complete defense, and there was no evidence that accused killed decedent under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate or without an adequate cause, a charge that, if, in a sudden passion arising from the transport of the accused, shot decedent, accused was guilty of murder in the second degree, was objectionable as narrowing the state's case down to the state of mind of a sudden transport of passion without adequate cause, and the error therein was in favor of accused. Hickey v. State, 62 App. 568, 128 S. W. 1051.

Where the evidence in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape shows that defendant was either guilty of such assault or that he was not guilty of an instruction that, if defendant assaulted the prosecuting witness without the specific intent of having carnal knowledge, or if there was a reasonable doubt as to such specific intent, he was not guilty of assault with intent to commit rape, he found guilty of assault and battery; and that if the assault was with such intent, but without intent to have carnal knowledge of the prosecuting witness by force, he was guilty only of aggravated assault and battery, an offense which was not defined in the instruction, is, in connection with the whole charge, more favorable to defendant than he was entitled to. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

In a trial for embezzlement, an instruction that the defendant and the prosecuting witness were partners, if they agreed to engage in business, each to furnish certain goods and money necessary to run the business, and each to share in the profits, was harmless, being more favorable to the defendant than he was entitled to, where there was no evidence that he had complied with certain conditions of the agreement necessary to complete the formation of the partnership. O'Narrow v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 252.

22. Additional burden on state.—An erroneous charge, which imposes a greater burden on the state than is necessary, is not ground for reversal of a conviction. Evans v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 573; Neuvar v. State, 72 App. 449, 163 S. W. 58.

Error in a prosecution for killing an infant for predating an instruction upon a passion aroused without adequate cause, was not prejudicial to accused, so as to be reversible, especially where he received the lowest penalty for second-degree murder, since, if the quoted words had any effect at all, they placed a greater burden on the state than they had in fact done. Jones v. State, 85 App. 594, 141 S. W. 902.

Error in charging that defendant could be convicted if he sold intoxicating liquor "for the purpose" of evading the prohibitory law merely placed an additional burden on the state, and could not have harmed accused. Nobles v. State, 71 App. 121, 158 S. W. 1182.

Accused, in a prosecution for robbery, was not prejudiced by an instruction that the robbery must have been wilfully committed, since such requirement only imposed an additional burden of proof on the state. Madrid v. State, 71 App. 429, 161 S. W. 93.

23. Submission of lesser offense.—Where the evidence showed the offense, if any, to be murder in the first degree, the submission of the issue of murder in the second degree was not prejudicial to accused. Coffman v. State, 73 App. 295, 106 S. W. 539; Hardy v. State, 31 App. 539, 20 S. W. 501; Wolforth v. State, 31 App. 387, 20 S. W. 741; Morgan v. State, 31 App. 1, 18 S. W. 647; Hamilton v. State, 64 App. 175, 114 S. W. 966.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, the evidence of the state shows that the killing was without excuse, and the evidence of the accused shows self-defense, the issue as to manslaughter is not involved, and therefore an error of the court in its charge on manslaughter could not avail accused, as, in submitting the issue, the court erred in favor of accused. EGGLESTON v. State, 59 App. 542, 126 S. W. 1165.

Accused cannot complain on appeal that she was convicted of a lower grade of assault than that for which she could have been convicted under a proper instruction. Jenkins v. State, 69 App. 465, 132 S. W. 1192.

On appeal from a conviction of simple assault on an information charging aggravated assault, under Pen. Code, art. 601, § 3, accused cannot complain of an instruction permitting a verdict of guilty of simple assault, on the ground that the evidence clearly showed an aggravated assault; any error being in favor of the accused. Garrett v. State, 61 App. 514, 135 S. W. 532.

In a trial for disturbing religious worship, error in failing to submit a count charging disturbance of the peace was harmless to accused. Webb v. State, 63 App. 297, 110 S. W. 96.

Where the facts in a trial for murder would sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree, and the court, by making its definition of implied malice prominent, as accused in getting the offense reduced to murder in the second degree, with almost the minimum penalty, accused could not complain. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 627.

On a trial for aggravated assault, the submission of simple assault was favorable to accused, even though the evidence did not raise that issue. Dunn v. State, 71 App. 89, 158 S. W. 360.

The submission of manslaughter, when that was not in the case, was favorable to the accused, so that he cannot complain thereof on appeal. Wilson v. State, 71 App. 395, 169 S. W. 83.

The giving of an instruction on manslaughter which quoted Pen. Code 1911, art. 1123, subd. 1, providing that provocation must arise at the time of the commission of the offense, and that the passion must not be the result of a former provocation, not prejudicial, though it was not authorized by the evidence, where the court also stated that in determining whether adequate cause existed at the time of the killing the jury may consider all of the facts and circumstances in evidence occurring both at the time and prior to the time of the killing. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 569.
Where the testimony of defendant in a murder case showed no prior difficulty between defendant and deceased other than what occurred at the immediate killing, error in giving, without evidence to authorize it, an instruction on manslaughter, which quoted Pen. Code 1911, art. 1129, subd. 1, providing that provocation must arise at the time of the commission of the offense, and that the passion must not be the result of a former provocation, was harmless. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 603.

24. Submission of defense.—Where, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, the state's evidence showed that accused shot at prosecutor, and the evidence of defense showed that accused fired no shots, but that he and his companion were shot from behind, a charge on self-defense, though not raised by the evidence, was not prejudicial to accused. Recen v. State, 58 App. 457, 126 S. W. 577.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors, an instruction that the state must prove two sales to persons as alleged in the indictment, within two years preceding the filing of the indictment, instead of within three years, as provided by the statute, was error favorable to accused. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 593.

Error, in a prosecution for robbery with arms in charging that if accused retok the money under an honest belief it was his property, the jury should acquit, when accused had lost the money at cards and voluntarily given it to the winner, whom he afterward robbed, was favorable to the accused, so that he cannot complain thereof. Coker v. State, 71 App. 504, 160 S. W. 366.

Where on the evidence self-defense was not in the case, a charge thereon was clearly in defendant's favor, and he could not complain of it. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 765.

25. Weight of evidence.—A defendant, in a prosecution for forgery, cannot complain that an instruction submitting his defense was on the weight of the evidence, where, so far as it was so, it was in his favor. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

A charge that correctly stated the law as to the defense of insanity, and concluded, "You are further instructed that the fact that the defendant's mind was simply weak or impaired and that he was not insane as above defined would be no defense," would not constitute reversible error because of the fact that the latter part of the charge was on the weight of the evidence, since the error was in favor of, and not against, the defendant. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 633.

If an instruction that two sales of whisky would not of itself constitute the offense of engaging in the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors was on the weight of the testimony, it was error favorable to accused of which he could not complain. See v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 599.

26. Limiting evidence to purpose.—If there was any error in an instruction, that a previous statement by prosecutrix consistent with her testimony could only be considered in determining the weight to be given her testimony, it was in accused's favor. Hemphill v. State, 72 App. 488, 165 S. W. 482, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914.

27. Testimony of accomplice.—Any error in charging that certain state's witnesses were accomplices of accused was favorable to him, since, if they were not, their testimony would not as a matter of law have to be corroborated to sustain a conviction. Joy v. State, 57 App. 83, 123 S. W. 584.

Where on a trial for bribery accused mistakenly insisted that the state's witnesses were accomplices and induced the court to submit that question to the jury, he had not complained of such submission whether the same were corroborated or not, as it did no injury to him but was rather in his favor. Minter v. State, 76 App. 634, 159 S. W. 286.

Where witnesses for the state were not accomplices, accused could not complain of instructions to the jury that one of them was an accomplice of the accused in the commission of the offense whether the other was an accomplice. Heare v. State, 73 App. 390, 165 S. W. 566.

Error in submitting to the jury the question whether a witness for the state was an accomplice was favorable and not prejudicial to the accused. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 122.

28. Punishment.—Error in a charge omitting to state that the punishment might be imprisonment for life, as expressly stated by Pen. Code 1911, art. 1069, was in defendant's favor and not ground for reversal, especially where the instruction fixed the punishment at 10 years within the period fixed as the lowest punishment. Graham v. State, 73 App. 28, 163 S. W. 726.

In the prosecution of an accomplice for swindling, defendant could not complain of instructions to the court to the effect the accomplice's failure to authorize a higher penalty, since, such, if error, was clearly in defendant's favor. Bragg v. State, 73 App. 340, 166 S. W. 162.

29. Effect of verdict.—Conviction being had on but one of two counts, an incorrect charge on the other count is immaterial error. Rosson v. State, 37 App. 87, 38 S. W. 788; Tigerina v. State, 35 App. 307, 33 S. W. 333.

Ordinarily, the reversed of murder cannot complain of instructions to manslaughter, Wheatley v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 672. And see Maxwell v. State, 31 App. 119, 19 S. W. 911.

Where the first count of an indictment charged defendant with making a forged instrument purporting to be the act of J., and in a second count with knowingly passing the instrument with intent to defraud, and in a third with making the instrument purporting to be the act of J., a fictitious person, and defendant was convicted on the second count, he was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to charge that, before he could be convicted of forging the name of a fictitious person, the jury must believe from the evidence that no such person existed, and was not in A. on the date defendant claimed the check was drawn, and that the jury could not presume that such person did not exist. Boswell v. State, 59 App. 161, 127 S. W. 820.

Where accused, who shot and killed deceased 15 or 20 minutes after a personal encounter between them, was only convicted of manslaughter, an instruction that, if there was not sufficient cooling time, the homicide would be reduced from murder to manslaughter, was not materially prejudicial. Cox v. State, 60 App. 471, 132 S. W. 125.

Where accused, relying on self-defense, was found guilty of manslaughter, the error in an instruction on manslaughter that an assault and battery by decedent, causing pain and bloodshed, was adequate cause to reduce the killing to manslaughter was immaterial (Anthony v. State, 62 App. 128, 136 S. W. 1067).

A count of an indictment charging a daytime burglary did not allege that it was a private residence, but simply charged a burglary entry of a house belonging to G. with intent to commit theft. A count charging a nighttime burglary alleged that it was a private residence occupied by G. and his family. Pen. Code 1895, art. 835, provides that he is guilty of burglary, who, with intent to commit a felony or theft by breaking, enters a house in the daytime. A charge authorized a conviction on proof of an entry and remaining concealed therein, which state of facts was not pleaded in the indictment. The conviction was under the count for daytime burglary. Held, that the error in the charge cannot be complained of by the defendant, since it could not have induced the jury to return a verdict of guilty. Joy v. State, 62 S. W. 415.

Where the state's case showed a lying in wait and a killing on premeditated malice, and the court correctly charged on murder in the first degree a conviction of murder in the first degree would not be reversed for errors in other instructions. Ex parte Examiner v. State, 63 App. 194, 133 S. W. 721.

Where an indictment charges theft in two counts and accused is convicted under the second count, an alleged error in charging the jury relative to the first count will not be considered on appeal. Sanford v. State, 64 App. 697, 143 S. W. 1172.

Where the second count of an indictment charged accused with an attempt to rob, and the third count alleged an attempt to rob by using and exhibiting a firearm, the jury having found defendant guilty as charged in the second count, he was not prejudiced by an instruction permitting a conviction if he unlawfully made an assault on prosecuting witness and “did then and there exhibit a firearm, to wit, a gun,” to such witness, etc. Evans v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 573.

In a trial for murder, where the charge on manslaughter was that approved on a former appeal, with the addition that an assault and battery, a blow inflicted by deceased causing pain to defendant, was adequate cause for manslaughter, the additional instruction was without injury where defendant was convicted only of manslaughter. State v. State (Cr. App.) 188 S. W. 790.

Where the court submitted the issue of manslaughter, and the jury convicted defendant of that offense only, error, if any, in failing to submit that issue, in conformity with the evidence, was harmless. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 897.

Where one was convicted of manslaughter, and to do so was necessary to find that he was a principal with one W., an instruction on assault to murder, which was only to be considered if he was not found to be a principal, could not have prejudiced the defendant. Cukierski v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 312.

On a trial for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors, an instruction that if the jury acquitted him of that offense they might find him guilty of furnishing liquors was harmless. Held was convicted of engaging in the business of selling. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.

Any error in instructions on assault with intent to kill was harmless where accused was only convicted of aggravated assault. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 932; Lacrampe v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 636; Harris v. State, 72 App. 481, 162 S. W. 1156.

Where accused was convicted of aggravated assault only, instructions with reference to manslaughter and higher degrees of homicide cannot be reviewed on appeal. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 583; Boyd v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 628; State v. State (Cr. App.) 192 S. W. 638.

One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the court misdirected the jury as to the law on aggravated assault. Jaehnig v. State, 57 App. 186, 123 S. W. 265.
In a prosecution for assault to kill, instructions drawing a distinction between assault to kill and assault with the intent to kill are not error and do not constitute a conviction of aggravated assault only. Hogue v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 905. Though the evidence did not raise the issue of murder, the submission of that question was harmless, where accused was only convicted of negligent homicide. Wichita v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 661.

31. — Punishment.—A case will not be reversed because the judge's charge misstated the punishment, where the jury impose the lowest punishment under the law. Ramirez v. State, 43 App. 455, 66 S. W. 1101; Brown v. State, 62 App. 594, 133 S. W. 540; Green v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 595.

The court charged the old law as to punishment, which was by fine and imprisonment, whereas under the amended law the imprisonment feature is eliminated from the punishment. As the jury inflicted only a fine, the defendant's rights were not prejudiced by the charge. Chick v. State 197 S. W. 545.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction on the issue of manslaughter, erroneous in that it required the jury to believe both that decedent used insulting language about defendant's mother and also assaulted defendant with a knife, will be considered harmless, where defendant was only convicted of manslaughter, and was given the lowest penalty. Munos v. State, 58 App. 147, 124 S. W. 941.

One given the minimum punishment for manslaughter may not complain of error in the charge submitting murder in the first and second degrees. Wells v. State, 63 App. 618, 141 S. W. 96.

Where the indictment contained counts of forgery and passing a forged instrument, the submission of the issue of forgery to the jury is not erroneous, where the court also submitted the passing of the forged instrument, there being evidence to support both charges, and the jury in assessing the penalty fixed the lowest that could be fixed for either count. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

Error, if any, in submitting a count for burglary of a private residence, was harmless, where defendant was convicted upon a different count, and given the lowest penalty thereunder. Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 108.

Where the jury convicted for murder in the second degree and assessed the punishment the failure of imprisonment in charging on manslaughter to submit as adequate cause insults shown by the evidence was reversible error. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 351 S. W. 818.

A definition of manslaughter, though inaccurate, is not harmful, unless it conflicts with a charge on self-defense, where the defendant was given the lowest penalty for manslaughter. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 353.

The failure of the judge to give a charge that temporary insanity produced by intoxication must be considered in mitigation of the penalty is harmless, where the lowest penalty is fixed by the jury. Drysdale v. State, 70 App. 273, 156 S. W. 685. One convicted of murder and sentenced to 99 years' imprisonment cannot claim that the court erroneously charged that, if defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, he might be imprisoned any number of years not less than five where the instructions also specifically charged the law as to murder in the second degree. Castillo v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 788.

32. Inconsistent instructions.—If instructions to acquit one accused of unlawfully carrying a pistol if he had reason to fear an attack or if the pistol was so broken as to be useless were inconsistent, the error was harmless, in the absence of any evidence that accused was in danger of an attack. Farris v. State, 64 App. 524, 144 S. W. 248.

33. Defining terms.—Where the indictment for aggravated assault alleged that the assault was made with a knife, alleged to be a deadly weapon, and that by means thereon defendant inflicted serous bodily injury, and that the assault was committed on him while in the discharge of his duties as an officer, and the court submitted all of the issues, and the verdict was general, the failure to give a charge defining a serious bodily injury was reversible error, though the requested charge thereon was not technically correct. Porter v. State, 60 App. 538, 322 S. W. 395.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 559, making it a felony to keep a room as a place in which to gamble with cards, the refusal of requested charges that "kept for the purpose of gambling" means the chief purpose, and that the accused must have been personally interested in keeping, or have been the proprietor of the room in question, if error, was harmless. Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 759.

Where, in a prosecution for violating the local option law, it was proved that defendant had a United States liquor license, and the court instructed that this was prima facie evidence that he was selling liquor in violation of law, it was not error, where the defendant could take advantage, for the court could take the same position in a new trial, that the court failed to define "prima facie evidence." Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 904.

It was not reversible error in a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, where there was evidence of the seduction and of the promise of marriage, to define the offense strictly in accordance with the statute without specifically defining it. Blackburn v. State, 71 App. 625, 160 S. W. 687.

In a prosecution for perjury, where there was no evidence that the testimony claimed as perjured was so given by mistake, inadvertence, or agitation, the failure of the court in his charge to define "wilfully" and "deliberately" was not reversible error, it appearing that accused was given the lowest penalty. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 438, 160 S. W. 904.

34. Reasonable doubt as to particular issue.—Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault, a charge, not excepted to at the time as given, is erroneous, as placing the burden of showing self-defense on defendant, the refusal of a request to charge that, if the jury had reasonable doubt as to whether the prosecution fired upon her, then he was entitled to a mistrial, reasonable doubt, is prejudicial error. Stuart v. State, 57 App. 123 S. W. 656.

It was not prejudicial error to omit to instruct, that the jury had reasonable doubt as to whether the prosecution fired upon the victim, it was not prejudicial to omit to instruct, that if the jury had reasonable doubt as to accused's guilt, Wysong v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 941.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 1022, subd. 9, for aggravated assault, where the record shows that the accused and aggravated assault were submitted to the jury upon the reasonable doubt in favor of defendant as between the two degrees, while of itself not error, was reversible error, where, it had been given, error in failing to give defendant's request that, if the difficulty arose from provocation arising at the time, he would not be guilty of aggravated assault would have been cured. Hodges v. State, 73 App. 378, 166 S. W. 512.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the court charged on the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, accused was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to charge that, if there was a reasonable doubt arising on the facts between the issue of manslaughter and self-defense, accused was entitled to the benefit therefrom. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 743.

35. Uncontested issues.—In a prosecution for carrying a pistol, where accused's reputation as a peaceable citizen was admitted, it was not reversible error to refuse an instruction that his reputation was admitted. Hines v. State, 57 App. 216, 123 S. W. 411.

The failure to submit questions to the jury was not prejudicial to accused, where the evidence on the issues was not contested. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 852.

Where, in a prosecution for theft of a piano as bailee, the evidence was that it had cost $275, and was worth from $500 to $500 when converted, the court's instructions to the jury must believe that it was worth more than $50 in order to convict accused was not reversible error. Height v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 908.

36. Trivial evidence.—The evidence to present the issue of manslaughter must be so pertinent and forcible that it may be reasonably supposed that the jury will be influenced thereby in arriving at a verdict, and unless the evidence is of such weight, it is not error to refuse to charge on manslaughter. Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655.

Where the evidence of the state clearly showed that the confession of accused was voluntarily made and understood, and accused's testimony to the contrary was weak, the error, in refusing to charge that if the confession was voluntarily made, or without a full understanding of the nature of it, it must be disregarded was not prejudicial. Lopez v. State, 73 App. 624, 166 S. W. 154.

37. Defenses.—In a prosecution for theft, the court charged that if defendant was present with another, and they or either of them, acting with a common purpose into which defendant entered, undertook to steal a hog, then defendant would be a principal, and that defendant's mere bodily presence without participating in the intent would not make him guilty as the principal, nor would have the effect of making him guilty of theft, that it must be shown that he participated in the original taking. Held, that the court's failure to affirmatively charge on alibi was not ground for reversal. Phillips v. State, 57 App. 121 S. W. 1110.

Where the only evidence of alibi was an alleged statement of accused that he told another that he was down the road about a mile and a half or two miles from the place of the killing, and another's house, on the night of the killing, and conclusively that accused was in such house, but was at the place of the killing when it occurred, and the court gave instructions applying the law of circumstantial evidence to every possible combination of facts, any error in not charging on alibi was not reversible. Williams v. State, 60 App. 483, 122 S. W. 343.

In a prosecution for seduction, the refusal of a charge presenting the issue of consent because of lust is harmless error, where the evidence tending to establish the defense is weak and trivial. Knight v. State, 64 App. 641, 144 S. W. 967.

The failure to instruct upon matters of defense raised by evidence so trivial that it cannot be supposed to have been considered by the jury is no ground for reversal. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1006.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the state introduced evidence of defendant's explanation of his possession of the property alleged to have been stolen, and the falsity thereof, the failure to charge that defendant should be acquitted if the property was purchased as he stated, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to that fact, was harmless, where the entire evidence amply showed defendant's guilt. Coggins v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 311.

38. Included offenses.—The case will not be reversed because the court did not charge upon another theory (of manslaughter) than that charged upon where the failure to so charge was not prejudicial. Cornelius v. State, 54 App. 173, 113 S. W. 1968.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, accused was convicted of that offense, he was not prejudiced by the court's omission to submit the offense of simple assault, on the theory that, if it was committed simply to alarm the prosecution, it could not be more than simple assault, since, being an assault, it could not be a lesser grade than aggravated assault, if unlawful. Lofton v. State, 69 App. 270, 125 S. W. 354.

In a prosecution for robbery, the court's failure to submit the issues of simple and aggravated assault was not prejudicial to defendant, where the court instructed the jury to acquit if defendant did not take the ring, which he was charged to have taken, from off the person of another, though the evidence would have sus-

29. Circumstantial evidence.—Where, in the trial of one for knowingly permitting gambling on premises under his control, all the evidence was positive except that upon the question of knowledge by the accused, and the court instructed that the accused was not guilty if he rented a room in the building to be used as a bookmaking purposes without his using it for gambling, error, if any, in failing to instruct upon circumstantial evidence was harmless. De Los Santos v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 919.

Entirely not charging on circumstantial evidence was not reversible where under the evidence an honest jury could not have acquitted. Dennis v. State, 71
App. 162, 158 S. W. 1008.

Where the court in its instructions affirmatively presented every defensive theory, and charged accused that the jury must find accused guilty beyond a reasnable doubt, the failure to charge on circumstantial evidence, though the evidence called for such a charge, was not reversible error. Ballard v. State, 71 App. 168, 160 S. W. 92.

The error, if any, in failing to charge on circumstantial evidence, in view of the fact, was not reversible, where the court charged the jury that if they believed the animal alleged to have been stolen was the property of accused, or had a reasonable doubt of that fact, they should acquit him. Law v. State, 71 App. 179,
160 S. W. 98.

40. Limiting evidence to particular purpose.—Though the court should instruct the jury as to the purpose of evidence of the contemporaneous theft of other property, the omission to so charge is not fundamental or material error in the absence of exception or requested instructions, unless the defendant’s rights may have been thereby. Gentry v. State, 25 App. 614, 8 S. W. 905.

Where a witness was properly permitted on re-examination, after cross-examination to show bias, to explain that a former action taken by him against defendant could not to certain evidence, it could not be ill will, the court’s failure to limit the effect of such testimony was harmless, where the testimony could not have had any probative force in showing defendant’s guilt of the charge on which he was being tried, and the jury could not have been misled into convicting defendant for the other offenses. Manley v. State (Cr. App.) 159
S. W. 1135.

The failure of the court to limit the consideration of testimony, admitted to show the bias of witnesses for the defendant, to that purpose, where the testimony could not have been used for any other purpose, does not require reversal. Roux

41. Effect of verdict.—Where accused was acquitted of an assault, the failure to direct the kind of verdict as to assault in case the jury found that accused act-

Where the court correctly submitted murder in the first and second degrees, and the jury found accused guilty of murder in the first degree, a failure to submit a less degree of homicide was not prejudicial. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 202, 141 S.
W. 892.

Any insufficiency in the instructions on manslaughter was not reversible error, where accused was only found guilty of manslaughter, and the lowest au-

Where accused was found guilty only of manslaughter, the failure to charge that an assault and battery would be adequate to reduce the homicide to manslaughter did not present error. Flores v. State, 72 App. 232, 162 S. W. 883.

42. Error favorable to accused.—Where defendant, in a criminal prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, introduced evidence to impeach the prosecuting witness, he could not complain that the court did not limit it, but permitted it to be considered for any and all purposes, since, if error, it was error in his favor.
Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 616.

In a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicants in a prohibition territory contrary to Pen. Code 1911, art. 588, failure to define the meaning of "engaging in or pursuing the occupation or business" of selling intoxicants would be favorable to accused, so that he could not complain thereof; since, without definition, the jury would naturally understand that the term meant the pursuit of the business as a vocation to procure a living or obtain wealth. Hightower v.
State, 72 App. 265, 165 S. W. 181.

43. Cure by other instructions.—Where the court in its general charge misdirected the jury as to alibi, but gave a special charge at the request of the defendant which embodied correctly the law upon that issue, the defendant could not complain of the misdirection in the general charge. White v. State, 19 App. 542.

"Failure, in prosecution for false swearing, to define "deliberately" and "wilfully," is without prejudice when supplied by special Instructions. Woodson v.

Indiscretion in misstating the name of the offense once is immaterial error when the charge states it correctly in other and subsequent parts of the charge. Oxford v.
State, 32 App. 272, 22 S. W. 971.

Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault, the court, in applying the law to the evidence, clearly stated that the minimum penalty was that the trial, any error in an instruction that the penalty was a fine not less than $20 or more than $1,000, or imprisonment, or both, was cured. Woodland v. State, 57 App. 352, 133
S. W. 141.

Where, in a prosecution for assault on defendant’s wife by striking her, the court charged that if defendant struck R. with his hands and fists as alleged, and defendant was an adult male, while R. was a female, then he would be guilty of aggravated assault, he was not prejudiced by the court's error in a general definition of assault. Reynolds v. State, 58 App. 272, 124 S. W. 201.

In a homicide case, accused testified that he and decedent had a quarrel over an account, and decedent got very angry and caught accused around the neck and said he was going to cut him, and, while they were scuffling, some one shot, and when accused did not know who shot, and did not know his brother was going to shoot if he did shoot. The court charged that if accused's brother, or some one else than accused, on an independent impulse of their own, shot decedent, the jury should acquit, and also charged that if some other than accused fired a fatal shot without reasonable doubt whether accused or some other did it, the jury should acquit. Held, that the charges given were more favorable to accused than one as to the right of a third party to intervene to protect the life of one of assaulted, and that the failure to give the latter was not reversible error in view of the charges given. Spencer v. State, 69 App. 217, 128 S. W. 118.

Any error in the general part of the charge on the right of self-defense was not injurious to accused, in view of the correct concrete application of the principles of law relating to provoking a difficulty. Keeton v. State, 59 App. 316, 128 S. W. 494.

The error, if any, in a charge that a conviction may be had on circumstantial as well as direct evidence, on the ground that it is on the weight of the evidence, does not require a reversal, where the charge is followed, and in direct connection therewith, by the statement that, to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, each fact necessary to establish guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and that all the facts must be considered with each other and the whole on the conclusion of guilt. Roberts v. State, 60 App. 20, 129 S. W. 611.

The quoted phrase, in a charge that every one is entitled to defend himself against unlawful attacks, and may use all the necessary force reasonably sufficient, all necessary to prevent death or serious bodily harm, but "no more than the circumstances reasonably indicate to be necessary," was not so erroneous, in limiting the perfect right of self-defense, as to require a reversal of a conviction for second degree murder, where, following an instruction, the court gave a correct charge, applying the law of self-defense to the facts in issue. Moss v. State, 60 App. 268, 131 S. W. 1088.

An instruction in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape that the jury must determine whether defendant was guilty of an assault with intent to rape, aggravated assault, and battery, or not guilty, applying the facts in evidence to the law as given, while improper as requiring the jury to determine whether defendant was not guilty, is harmless where the jury are instructed that defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence, and that in case of a reasonable doubt they should acquit him. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

Though a portion of a charge in a criminal cause did not state the offense in the language of the indictment, in the statement of the law of the case to the jury, but in submitting the cause to the jury for their finding, the court used the language of the indictment, the defendant was not injured by the charge. Baumgarn v. State, 64 App. 165, 142 S. W. 4.

Where the court charged that the state must show that accused was in possession of the stolen property, and that on the failure of the state to so show beyond a reasonable doubt accused must be acquitted, and that if accused's explanation of his possession was reasonable he must be acquitted, a charge that possession of stolen property could be proved by circumstantial evidence was not prejudicial. Suggs v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 188.

Accused cannot complain of a sentence defining self-defense at the close of the charge on murder in the first degree, where an independent instruction on self-defense. Kimney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 29.

In a trial for homicide, the court charged that every person may defend himself against unlawful attack reasonably threatening injury to his person, and may use necessary and reasonable force to defend himself, but no more than the circumstances reasonably indicate to be necessary, and by other charges correctly submitted the case on evidence for a finding as to self-defense without in any way qualifying it. Held, in view of the Code provision, that any error in another instruction limiting the defendant's right of self-defense, and impressing the jury with the belief that the court thought defendant had used greater force than was necessary, was not prejudicial. Summers v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 774.

An instruction as to principals, erroneous as excluding the question of defendant's presence, was not cured by a charge upon alibi. Menefee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 138.

Where the requested instructions of defendant on a trial for murder were given, and presented every phase of self-defense raised by the evidence, they cured any slight error on the court's own charge on self-defense. Penton v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 190.

A charge given in a prosecution for incest with accused's daughter, authorizing a conviction if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused had intercourse with his daughter as charged, knowing at the time that she was his daughter, but that, if they believed from the evidence that the daughter consented to the intercourse, they should acquit, was more favorable to accused than a requested charge that, in determining whether or not the daughter consented to the sexual intercourse with her father, they should take into consideration all of the facts and circumstances connected with the case. Tyler v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 782.

An instruction that the fact that accused took hold of, kissed, or placed his hands on, prosecutrix would not make him guilty of assault with intent to rape, but that, before they could convict, the jury must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that he took hold of, kissed, or placed his hands on, her in such manner as to constitute an assault, "and at the very time instant and without suspension of action and without waiting to ascertain whether or not she would consent to then and there place herself in such attitude that the final act of carnal intercourse could be performed upon her, whether the purpose was to put her in such state by her free co-operation alone or by her," with apparently omitting something necessary to make a complete sentence, held not to have harmed accused, in view of other instructions. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 920.

Although a paragraph in a charge, standing alone, was calculated to make the jury believe that the court thought there was no reasonable doubt of guilt, where it was followed immediately by two other paragraphs which undoubtedly gave the defendant the benefit of any doubt, there was no error. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 295.

Error in an instruction defining manslaughter, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, inadvertently quoting literally the statutory language, in which an assault and battery "by the deceased," causing pain or bloodshed, was made an adequate cause, was harmless where the court also charged that if prosecuting witness had assaulted the accused, causing pain or bloodshed, and thereby rendered his mind incapable of cool reflection, etc., he would only be guilty of aggravated assault. Littrell v. State, 70 App. 183, 157 S. W. 157.

Although a charge by the court was too general, it was cured by the giving of special specific charges requested by defendant. Harris v. State, 72 App. 491, 162 S. W. 1150.

In view of this article and the fact that defendant did not object or ask any charge, a charge in a trial for homicide that all testimony as to the relations of defendant with deceased's wife was only to aid on the issue of defendant's motive, if erroneous, did not authorize or require a reversal, where the court gave a full, complete, and unobjectionable charge properly submitting every question raised. Lane v. State, 73 App. 266, 104 S. W. 378.

Where accused's defense was alibi, the error in a charge on principals, which did not require the jury to find that accused was personally present at the killing, must be considered along with other paragraphs of the charge, where the court indicated in case of a reasonable doubt as to whether accused was present at the killing, McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

Where the court charged on alibi, and that the burden of proof was on the state, the accused was presumed to be innocent until his guilt was established beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the jury were the exclusive judges of the facts proved, of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight to be given to their testimony, any error in a charge that if the jury believed that prosecutor did not prove, as testified to by his witnesses, must rely on circumstantial evidence to convict, construed as a charge on the weight of the evidence, was not reversible. Terrell v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1688.

(B) Failure or Refusal to Give Instructions

44. In general.—Necessity of request for charge, ante, art. 727, and notes.

Omissions in one part of the charge become immaterial if they are supplied in other portions in such manner as to clearly instruct the jury upon the issue involved and protect the rights of the accused against prejudice. Smith v. State, 22 App. 316, 3 S. W. 684; Hodges v. State, 22 App. 415, 3 S. W. 733; Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771; Hart v. State, 21 App. 165, 17 S. W. 421.

Under this article the refusal to instruct on faked resistance (in a rape case) is not reversible. Leach v. State (Cr. App.) 77. 77. 77.

In a prosecution for aggravated assaulted, where the court charged that any unlawful violence to the person of another, with intent to injure him, whatever the means or degree of violence, was an assault and battery, any error in refusing to charge that, being before you can find, where it must find beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time he used or offered to use violence it was his intention to injure such person, was harmless; the issue being sufficiently submitted. Stone v. State, 57 App. 221, 123 S. W. 652.

Where, on a trial for burglary with intent to steal, the evidence showed an entry and the larceny of a harness, and that accused offered to sell a harness, and explained that his father had given it to him to sell, and that at the time of his explanation he was not suspected of the crime, and that the harness belonged to prosecutor, and the father of accused as a witness for him testified that he had not owned a harness and had not given any harness to his son to sell, the failure to charge on explanation of recently stolen property was not prejudicial to accused, since a charge on the subject would have been injurious to him, because making prominent the testimony of his father. Jones v. State, 60 App. 436, 132 S. W. 476.

Where, under the evidence, accused could not have been prejudiced by the court's failure to charge on possession of property, such failure was not ground for reversal. Frazier v. State, 62 App. 640, 135 S. W. 629.

Where the charge has submitted the law applicable to the case, as required by art. 725 ante, a defendant who desires a more specific presentation of any issue should request thereon, otherwise the court will not reverse unless the charge was calculated to injure the right of the defendant. Dowling v. State, 63 App. 366, 140 S. W. 224.

A failure to give the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt statute to the jury is not reversible error, unless the court was requested to give it and refused. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

The failure of the court to present issues presented by defendant's evidence is not reversible error, in absence of a request for special charges. Davis v. State, 62 App. 484, 141 S. W. 93.
A conviction will not be reversed because of technical omissions or misstatements in the instructions, especially where accused requested no charge on the subject. Jones v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 263.

Where the charge required the jury to believe beyond a reasonable doubt that accused killed deceased, and the jury were also charged on alibi, the refusal of the court to charge that if another killed deceased they should acquit was no ground for reversal. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1066.

A failure to supplement a requested charge in a prosecution for an illegal sale of liquor is not reversibl unless the addition of the matter in question properly would have made the charge insufficient. App. 7 in addition of matters unproperly state the law will not reverse. Meador v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 253.

Any error in omitting to instruct on the necessity for corroboration of a particular accomplice was harmless, where no objection was made to an omission to give the instruction as to another accomplice. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 353 S. W. 596.

In a criminal prosecution, accused was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to charge that the burden of proof was on the State throughout the trial and never shifted to defendant. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1149.

Where the court gave all of accused's requested charges except the one to acquit and another embraced in the main charge, accused could not complain of the charge for failing to state the law applicable to the facts. Calyon v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 891.

III. OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

45. Necessity of exception.—An error or omission in the charge, not excepted to will not be reviewed on appeal unless fundamental or calculated to prejudice accused. Shubert v. State, 26 App. 323; Wimbish v. State, 25 App. 56, 7 S. W. 337; Patterson v. State, 25 App. 266; 9 S. W. 270; Williams v. State, 29 App. 197; 15 S. W. 285; Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 656; Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 272; Shaw v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 1083.

In the absence of a statement of facts or a bill of exception, there is nothing on the record to indicate but the correctness of the charge of the court with viewed in reference to the indictment. If the charge under any state of proof would be under the indictment, it will be presumed that there was evidence warranting it. It is only when the charge is not warranted by the indictment, or by any state of facts that could have been proved, that it will be revised in the absence of a statement of facts or bill of exception. Nairn v. State, 18 App. 256; White v. State, 9 App. 41; Early v. State, 9 App. 475; Brown v. State, 16 App. 197; Henderson v. State, 20 App. 38; Banks v. State, 24 App. 656, 7 S. W. 327.

The court’s charge on reasonable doubt, alibi and circumstantial evidence, where it was not excepted to and no special instructions were asked, held sufficient. Marshall v. State, 37 App. 456, 36 S. W. 86.

46. Time for exception.—Bills of exception relating to the charge of the court may be taken at any time before the trial is concluded, and the trial is not concluded until the verdict is returned into court and received. It is not required that the defendant shall specifically except to the charge as given, or to the action of the court refusing a requested instruction, at the very time that the one is given, or the other refused, but such exception may be made after the jury has retired from the box. All that is required is that general exception be taken at the time, with a request for time to prepare a bill containing the specific objection, including the preservation and presentation of such bill to the judge before the verdict is returned, in order that the court may have the opportunity to correct its charge, if it so desires. Phillips v. State, 19 App. 158; McCull v. State, 14 App. 353.

To perpetuate an exception to a charge of the court the defendant must give notice of exception at the time the charge is delivered, but he need not specify the ground of exception until the jury has retired. He must do so, however, before the return of verdict; otherwise this court will revise only fundamental error. Martin v. State, 25 App. 655, 8 S. W. 632; Smith v. State, 27 App. 59, 19 S. W. 751; Boggan v. State, 39 App. 406, 17 S. W. 1667; Phillips v. State, 19 App. 168; McCull v. State, 14 App. 353, discussed and distinguished. Garelo v. State, 31 App. 66, 29 S. W. 179.

47. Motion for new trial.—If a verbal charge be given over the objection of the defendant, it will not be ground for reversal, unless it be excepted to at the time, and the error be presented by bill of exception. It is too late to complain of the error in a motion for a new trial. Vanwey v. State, 41 Tex. 639; Franklin v. State, 2 App. 8; Criswell v. State, 7 App. 243; Lawrence v. State, 7 App. 192.

The striking out of a paragraph in a charge by the court after having read it to the jury must be excepted to and bill reserved. It cannot be taken advantage of for the first time by motion for a new trial. Angley v. State, 35 App. 457, 34 S. W. 1116.

48. Sufficiency of exception.—Exception to the charge of the court, to be considered, must point out the objection. Thompson v. State, 22 App. 265, 22 S. W. 975.

49. Misdemeanors.—In misdemeanors, as a general rule, an error in the charge will not be reviewed unless it is excepted to at the trial, and presented by proper bill of exception, and, furthermore, if the defendant desires further instructions, he must present them in writing, and if they be refused, he must promptly except to the refusal and present this action of the court by bill of exception, or the matter will not be considered on appeal. O'Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 343; Jackson v. State, 23 Tex. Supp. 239; Mooring v. State, 42 Tex. 85; Browning v. State, 518.
50. Necessity of objection or exception.—Errors in the charge, or in the failure of a party to object to errors in the charge, unless fundamental, cannot be considered on appeal, where no motion was made at the trial or in the motion for new trial.

A bill of exceptions filed after term time and complaining of a charge presents nothing for review where a qualification by the trial judge shows that accused made only a general exception at trial and did not assign the errors complained of in his motion for new trial. Kant v. State, 147 S. W. 467.

Where no exception is taken to the failure of the trial court to charge, an assignment of error therein after the adjournment of the term cannot be considered.

Gotcher v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 574.

Cases—Particular issues.—Omission to charge article 1106, Penal Code, must be raised by bill of exception or on motion for new trial. Pratt v. State, 59 App. 167, 127 S. W. 827. See, also, Alexander v. State, 63 App. 102, 138 S. W. 721.

A conviction will not be reversed for mere failure to charge on alibi unless a special charge submitting this issue is requested or an exception saved to the court's failure to give such charge at the time. Johnson v. State, 56 App. 540, 120 S. W. 1002; Jones v. State, 53 App. 131, 110 S. W. 745, 126 Am. St. Rep. 776. If there is no exception to the charge of the court, nor motion for a new trial, the error is not reversed because the issue of alleged assault was not submitted. Pena v. State, 38 App. 333, 42 S. W. 991.

If the judge fails to give a charge in writing applicable to the facts of the case as required by one of the eight preceding articles this fact must be excepted to at the trial or on motion for a new trial. Criminal appeals cannot review it. Barnett v. State, 42 App. 302, 62 S. W. 766. It is too late to complain in the appellate court of the failure of the charge to restrict the effect of the testimony admitted over his objection. Exceptions should have been made to the ruling, or it should have been complained of in motion for new trial. Young v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 567.

An objection that the court failed to charge on manslaughter comes too late when made for first time in appellate court. Rambo v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 165.

It is too late to raise for the first time in the appellate court the question that the defendant's shot did not necessarily result in the death of the deceased, but that it may have been and was probably caused by the conduct in treating the deceased after the wound was inflicted. White v. State, 44 App. 346, 72 S. W. 174, 63 L. R. A. 660.

It is too late to raise the objection in appellate court for first time that the trial court did not apply the law to the issue of ownership. This should have been taken advantage of by bill of exception or in motion for new trial. Winond v. State, 44 App. 514, 72 S. W. 194.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, an objection that the court did not charge acid and battery cannot be first made in the appellate court, although the facts required that such charge should have been given. As the question was not raised in court below by bill of exception nor in motion for new trial, it cannot be revised by appellate court. Cubin v. State, 45 App. 108, 74 S. W. 40.

Unless the point is saved by bill of exception or raised in motion for new trial, that court erred in failing to charge the law of aggravated assault in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill. It cannot be raised in the appellate court.

The punishment for perjury committed in a civil suit was formerly by confinement in the penitentiary not less than 5 nor more than 10 years. In 1897 it was changed to not less than 2 nor more than 10 years. In 1904 a defendant was convicted in a case of this character of perjury, on the trial of which the court charged the punishment to be not less than 5 nor more than 10 years' confinement in the penitentiary. The majority of the court held that because objection to the court's error is not presented by bill of exceptions, nor reserved in motion for new trial, he cannot avail himself of the court's error for the first time in the appellate court. The jury, in the appealed case, are the reviewed cases. Martin v. State, 47 App. 29, 83 S. W. 232.

In order for an appellant to avail himself of the failure of the court to submit the issue of "cooling time" in a murder case, he must reserve an exception to such failure in the trial court. The question cannot be raised for the first time in the appellate court. Ham v. State (Cr. App.) 98 S. W. 815.

Under the decisions construing this article it would seem there are no fundamental errors on appeal except those reserved by bill of exceptions or in the motion for a new trial. White v. State, 52 App. 135, 106 S. W. 1153.

Misdirecting the jury in respect to the punishment is not available, unless excepted to at the time or challenged in the motion for new trial. Robbins v. State, 57 App. 8, 121 S. W. 594.

A conviction will not be reversed for the failure to limit the scope of impeaching evidence, in the absence of an exception to such failure and a request for such limitation. Goes v. State, 57 App. 557, 124 S. W. 107.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 725, providing that where, on appeal by defendant in a criminal action, any of the requirements of the preceding articles have been disregarded, the trial should not be reversed unless the error shall have been excepted to at the time, did not require an exception at the trial in order to entitle accused to review an erroneous instruction authorizing a conviction of an offense where he is not charged. Grant v. State, 59 App. 150.

The failure of the court in its charge to apply the law to the facts will not justify a reversal of the conviction where there is no bill of exceptions taken at the time excepting to the charge on that ground. May v. State, 59 App. 141, 127 S. W. 832.

The refusal of an Instruction as to alleged improper argument by the prosecuting attorney in a criminal prosecution will not be reversed when the matter is not preserved by bill of exceptions. Green v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 126.

In the absence of any request, and in the absence of any objection to the charge as given, a conviction will not be reversed because of the failure to charge on accused's theory. Treadwell v. State, 64 App. 83, 141 S. W. 219.

A charge in a criminal prosecution cannot be complained of on appeal, where it was neither complained of at the time nor a special charge requested correcting it. Baumgarner v. State, 64 App. 165, 142 S. W. 4.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will not reverse alleged error in the refusal of instructions, unless the action of the lower court is excepted to by defendant at the time and additional instructions asked and a bill of exceptions saved to their refusal. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 173.

The failure of the court, on a trial for assault to murder, to submit the issues of self-defense and alibi cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 886.

The refusal of a requested instruction relative to the argument of the prosecuting attorney could not be considered on appeal when not raised and preserved by a bill of exceptions. Williamson v. State, 72 App. 615, 163 S. W. 455.

52. Bills of exception and statements of facts.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms. 959-942.

The denial of a motion for a new trial, on the grounds that the court erred in submitting murder in the first degree could not be reviewed, in the absence of bills of exception and statements of fact. Ramos v. State, 71 App. 484, 160 S. W. 580.

The court's refusal to give a requested charge on self-defense would not be reviewed, where it was nowhere copied in the record or bill. McGregor v. State, 71 App. 604, 160 S. W. 711.

53. Motion for new trial.—Error in the charge as a ground for new trial, see post, art. 338, subd. 2, and notes.

This statute authorized reversals on appeal for errors in the charge where they are excepted to either at the time the charge is given or on motion for new trial. Garza v. State, 36 App. 517, 42 S. W. 563.

When requested instructions are refused, and the action of the court is objected to in a motion for a new trial, it will be considered on appeal. Livingston v. State, 38 App. 555, 48 S. W. 1093.

Where there are no bills of exception in the record nor errors claimed in admitting or rejecting testimony to special charges asked, but the charge is assailed in the motion for new trial and every paragraph thereof is criticized, the court on appeal cannot reverse the case for immaterial error. Alexander v. State, 63 App. 102, 128 S. W. 721.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 723, as amended by Acts 25th Leg. c. 21, which prohibits reversal of a conviction for error in the charge, unless it was excepted to in the bill of exceptions, or was complained of in the motion for new trial, objections raised by an amended motion for new trial, filed with permission of the trial court, are reviewable. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

Where objections are presented in a motion for a new trial, exceptions to the charge, though not approved by the trial judge, are considered as grounds of the motion. Lewis v. State, 72 App. 377, 162 S. W. 866.

Where no complaint was made in the motion for new trial of the court's failure to charge self-defense, it is too late to complain of such failure on appeal. Keye v. State, 53 App. 320, 111 S. W. 401.

There has been no motion for new trial, no defects, or omissions or errors of omission in the charge can be considered. Raines v. State, 56 App. 94, 119 S. W. 94.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where accused was prosecuted as a principal, though he did not do the act, and the court fully charged as to the defense, and no errors in the charge were pointed out in the motion for new trial, any error in charging the law as to principals will be considered harmless. Johns v. State, 63 App. 416, 140 S. W. 1093.

When the motion of the court to charge on circumstantial evidence was not called to its attention by the motion for new trial, the error cannot be reviewed on appeal. Romero v. State, 72 App. 105, 160 S. W. 1193.

55. Necessity of requests. — Failure to charge on alibi is not ordinarily reversible error unless excepted to or unless a requested charge thereon was refused. This article does not change the rule as to charges on the law of alibi as fixed by the decisions before its passage, and does not institute a more rigorous or technical rule than existed aforesaid. Wright v. State, 56 App. 353, 120 S. W. 461; Phillips v. State, 57 App. 160, 121 S. W. 1150; Schaper v. State, 52 App. 291, 122 S. W. 257, citing Jones v. State, 53 App. 151, 110 S. W. 741, 126 Am. St. Rep. 776, which overrules Allen v. State, 45 App. 465, 96 S. W. 458; Wilcher v. State, 47 App. 301, 83 S. W. 384, and Bird v. State, 48 App. 183, 87 S. W. 146.

Where a defendant requested no special charges on any of the points in the instructions to the jury which he objects, the court may decline to consider such objections. Conger v. State, 68 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

Defendant, complaining of the charges given as not stating the circumstances under which the defendant should be acquitted, should have requested additional charges; and, not having done so, his criticism presented no reversible error. Rogers v. State, 71 App. 149, 159 S. W. 40.

See, also, art. 757, and notes.

56. Necessity of statement of facts.—In the absence of a statement of facts and allegations in the bill of exceptions, submitting the offense stated in the indictment, substantial application on appeal to have charged the law applicable to the evidence. Focke v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 267; Jenkins v. State, 59 App. 475, 128 S. W. 1113; Morris v. State, 63 App. 278, 149 S. W. 775; Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1071.

If no statement of facts in the record can enable the court to determine whether or not the appellant was injured by the court's charge, even conceding it to be erroneous. Ruiz v. State, 45 App. 476, 88 S. W. 808; Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1083.

Matters presented in an omnibus bill of exceptions, complaining of the refusal of a continuance and of portions of the charge and of rulings on evidence, cannot be considered, in the absence of a statement of facts. Leto v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 284.

An exception to the charge, not setting up any such error as will authorize a conviction on proof not justified by the indictment, cannot be considered, in the absence of a statement of facts. Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 184.

Where the record on appeal does not contain the testimony or bills of exceptions, the question whether an issue was material, and that accused was entitled to have the jury pass on certain testimony, will not be considered. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 1043.

See, also, art. 844, and notes.

57. Sufficiency of objection. — An objection that the court erred in his charge or some designated paragraph, which gives no reason or merely states that the charge is not the law, or is inapplicable to the evidence or the issues or is on the weight of the evidence, is too general to be considered on appeal. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 124 S. W. 658; Powell v. State, 58 App. 293, 120 S. W. 298; Davis v. State, 55 App. 461, 126 S. W. 833; Joseph v. State, 59 App. 92, 127 S. W. 171; Vargas v. State, 60 App. 196, 131 S. W. 594; Leech v. State, 63 App. 325, 139 S. W. 114; Spence v. State, 68 App. 148, 142 S. W. 15; Ford v. State, 64 App. 14, 142 S. W. 6; Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 922; Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 598; Wells v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 950; McWhirter v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 185; Wooldridge v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 559; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 185; Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 926; Wall v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 822; Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1073; Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 897; Bryant v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1158; McDowell v. 521

A bill of exceptions merely complaining of the refusal of a requested instruction set out, without any reason why it should have been given, is too general. Harris v. State, 64 App. 584, 144 S. W. 222, Gould v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 772; Coffey v. State, 70 App. 395, 155 S. W. 692.

Objections to instructions, or failure to give special charges requested, if taken for the first time in the motion for a new trial, are in the nature of exceptions, and must be equally specific. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 625, 145 S. W. 783, Berg v. State, 64 App. 612, 142 S. W. 884.

A general exception to the charge will not be considered unless it involves an error fundamental in character, or such as may have injuriously affected the defendant. Hurley v. State, 30 App. 260, 16 S. W. 975; Garceau v. State, 31 App. 66, 20 S. W. 179; Bogan v. State, 30 App. 466, 17 S. W. 1087.

A complaint as to a charge on the law of self-defense excepted to, "because same was too restrictive, and not general and liberal enough towards the defendant on the law of self-defense, but limited the rights therein," was too general to be subject to review. Pollard v. State, 58 App. 299, 125 S. W. 399.

A motion for a new trial was presented on the ground that the court failed to give an instruction defining manslaughter, and applying the rules of law with reference thereto to the facts, and telling the jury that defendant would be guilty of aggravated assault if, had she killed said prosecutor under those circumstances, she would only be guilty of manslaughter, in that the testimony in the case clearly raised the issue of manslaughter and aggravated assault. Held, that such statement of the instruction to the jury was sufficient to call the attention of the jury to the difference between manslaughter and aggravated assault, and to the failure to submit the issue of aggravated assault. Furgerson v. State, 58 App. 431, 126 S. W. 594.

Where a charge on the law of provoking the difficulty was excepted to, without pointing out any error therein, and the bill of exceptions merely quoted a part of the charge, and added that accused objected thereto and tendered his bill of exceptions to said charge on account of said error, the complaint was sufficient to raise the issue on appeal, whether the court was justified in not giving the charge on the law of provoking the difficulty. Coffey v. State, 60 App. 73, 131 S. W. 216.

An exception to a charge, submitting the issue of second-degree murder as being confusing, misleading, unintelligible, and not such a clear presentation of the law as accused was entitled to under the law, and because a part thereof was so carelessly worded as to leave the jury in doubt as to its meaning, was a general exception not sufficiently pointing out any error complained of to authorize its consideration on appeal. Tilmeyer v. State, 61 App. 272, 138 S. W. 1060.

An error in a motion for a new trial, and a motion to give the special requested charge, on the ground that it was not covered by the charge of the court, will not be reviewed, as the motion should specifically point out the objection. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 142 S. W. 878.

Defendant, in exceptions to the whole of the charge, gave as the only reason for objection that the charge was "vague, uncertain, indefinite, and multifarious, and did not give the true law of the case, and was prejudicial to defendant in his trial, and calculated to and did mislead the minds of the jury as to the true law of the case." Held, that the objections were too general. Perkins v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 241.

Exceptions to the refusal to give requested instructions where the bill of exceptions gives no reasons why they should have been given, and where the motion for a new trial, and the several bills of exceptions, excepted to it, do not state the grounds for the refusal to give such instructions, but states no reason why they should have been given, will not be reviewed. Perkins v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 241.

The bill of exceptions to the refusal of charges merely recited that "defendant offered to the court special charges Nos. 1, 2, 3, * * * * and 9, and asked that the same be allowed and read to the jury, but the court refused the same, to ch. 1241) was authorized or refused in evidence without his consent, and that the court erred in permitting the accused to give the evidence, or to refuse to give it. Habe v. State, 150 S. W. 177.

A bill of exception reciting that defendant excepted to the charge because it failed to instruct upon all the law applicable to the case, in that the evidence called for a charge upon dying declarations, and the sanity of deceased when he made such declaration, because there was testimony that a man with a gunshot wound in his stomach would rarely be in his sane mind five to seven hours afterwards, presents no matter for review where it does not attempt to show that the declaration was in such a condition, nor show that it had been several hours from the time of the shot to the making of his declaration or that the declaration was in any way affected by the declarant's condition. Galen v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1171.

Complaints of instructions, on the ground that the court erred in refusing charges mentioned by number are too general to be considered on appeal. Walls v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution for disturbing a religious assembly, an objection that the information alleged that the congregation had assembled for religious worship, while the charge used the words "religious purposes," is not definite enough to require review. Laird v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 260.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the "refusal to charge Pen. Code 1911, art. 41, to interpose an alibi as a defense, as the evidence raised the issue," is too general to be considered on appeal. Lucas v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 527.

In a prosecution for cattle theft, where the evidence was purely circumstantial and the defense was an alibi, an objection on the ground that there was no evidence that any person other than the defendant killed the cow, and no evidence showing that the defendant was present at the time, or if not present, was keeping watch or aiding in the killing, was sufficient to point out that the charge erroneously authorized a conviction as principal upon a state of facts which would make him guilty only as an accomplice. Silvas v. State, 71 App. 212, 159 S. W. 223.

Defendant filed a bill of exceptions reciting, "Be It remembered," etc., after which was incorporated a complete copy of the entire charge, followed by a recital that defendant excepted to the charge because it was on the weight of the evidence; that it was variant from the information, misstated the stock law (Pen. Code 1911, art. 1241) under which he was prosecuted; and that it permitted the jury the filing of the charge in the form alleged that defendant requested the court to give the following charges, and purported to copy literally four special charges, and closed with the statement, "Which charges then and there refused to give and to which defendant excepted." Held, that the bill was too general to permit a review of any of the proceedings attempted to be excepted to. Fisher v. State, 71 App. 561, 160 S. W. 683.

An objection that an instruction is ambiguous, conflicting, and misleading to the jury and prejudicial to the accused is too general to be considered on appeal. Meek v. State, 71 App. 435, 160 S. W. 698.

Where the record contained several requests by defendant, none of which were numbered, defendant's bill, merely complaining of the court's refusal to give his request, without otherwise identifying it, was too general. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

An objection that a charge "was not a correct statement of the law in reference to the matter dealt with" was too general to be considered. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 541.

A bill of exceptions stating that accused presented certain special charges which the court refused to give, to which ruling he then and there excepted, did not raise the question with respect to such refusal in such a way that it could be reviewed. Galen v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal of a matter to be presented to the court for his action, and that the court ruled thereon. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

58. Misdemeanors.—In a misdemeanor case, counsel must except to the instructions at the time, and must ask additional instructions, and must save a bill of exceptions to the charge or refusal to charge, specifically pointing out the error, or the instructions will not be reviewed on appeal unless radically wrong. Bradley v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 446; Durham v. State, 57 App. 739, 122 S. W. 553; Thompson v. State, 59 App. 498, 124 S. W. 650; Stennett v. State, 59 App. 262, 128 S. W. 616; Ellis v. State, 59 App. 262, 130 S. W. 170; Ellis v. State, 59 App. 630, 130 S. W. 171; Hilcher v. State, 60 App. 189, 151 S. W. 59; Branick v. State, 60 App. 263, 151 S. W. 1125; Day v. State, 62 App. 537, 138 S. W. 129; Rey. 523.

The article merely extends the time of exception to the charge of the court, but in no way cures the failure of defendant in misdeemors to tender special charges to the court at the time of the trial. The old line of authorities on the question of charge in misdemeanor cases still applies. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 73 S. W. 35; Licott v. State (Cr. App.) 79 S. W. 35; Gowans v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 614.

If one is indicted for a felony and is convicted of a misdemeanor an exception that the charge omits an instruction on alibi, when the evidence raises the question, is sufficient under this article without requesting the court to charge on the subject. But if the prosecution is for a misdemeanor and conviction is for misdemeanor then the exception is not sufficient unless a request is made for such charge. Wilcher v. State, 47 App. 201, 82 S. W. 355.

In a prosecution for betting at a pool table, defendant cannot complain of a charge which he admits states the law correctly in the abstract, but claims it is not applicable to the case, where he failed to request specific instructions, since, this being a case of a special charge, the court was not bound to charge, though complained of in a motion for new trial, unless specially excepted to and charges asked; but where the charge is erroneous, and excepted to, it is ground for reversal. Tinker v. State, 58 App. 321, 125 S. W. 899.

Where the court gave a general charge in a prosecution and there was no exception nor any special charges requested, the Supreme Court will presume that the charge covered every necessary phase of the case. Sullivan v. State, 61 App. 657, 135 S. W. 466.

Ordinarily in a misdemeanor case a defective instruction is not reversible error, where no special charge is requested; but where the instruction is affirmatively wrong, and an exception is properly taken and shown by proper bill of exception and preserved by motion for new trial, it is prejudicial error. Novy v. State, 62 App. 492, 135 S. W. 139.

On appeal in misdemeanor cases, objections to failure to instruct on reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence will not be reviewed, unless accused excepted to the charge, and requested special charges on the points. Webb v. State, 63 App. 207, 140 S. W. 95.

In a prosecution for assault, accused objected to the charge that the use of any dangerous weapon in an angry or threatening manner, with intent to alarm another and with the circumstantial evidence that object was an assault. The court held that this was not applicable to the evidence. He also objected to that charge upon the ground that the court should have charged the jury that the crime involved more than a simple assault. In neither case did he request special charges. Held, that under art. 739, ante, and this paper, the objections to this charge presented no reversible error. golden v. State, 63 App. 275, 140 S. W. 100.

The charge in a misdemeanor case cannot be reviewed for failure to charge on alibi, unless a special charge is requested, and the failure to give it is excepted to and preserved by bill of exceptions. Brodgon v. State, 63 App. 475, 140 S. W. 351.

The giving, in a misdemeanor case, of a charge which is on the absence of evidence thereto at the time, or request for a special charge on the subject. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 918.

In a misdemeanor case, especially where accused requested no special charges to cure any of the alleged errors, a bill of exceptions, stating that accused excepted to the court's charge on the ground that the same was not the law, that the court set out and read a purported letter, and for that reason charged the jury on conspiracy giving a wrong charge, and failed to charge on defendant's not being able to read and write or his other defenses, is too general to be reviewed. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 945.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions to a charge in a prosecution for unlawfully killing a deer, because the period of two years within which the court charged that a conviction could be had if the killing occurred within that time included several months of the open season, and failure to request a written charge correcting the error, it cannot be reviewed. Baker v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 631. Such a Criminal Appeals will not review objections to instructions when first made in that court, so that where, in a prosecution for selling intoxicants in dry territory, the objection below to a charge that if accused ordered liquor as an accommodation for others, and collected the money from them before the order was made, whether or not the order was made, an objection will not be considered on rehearing that the charge was erroneous as requiring the jury to believe that he collected the money from the parties before the order was made Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 511.
59. — Motion for new trial.—Exceptions must be reserved to instructions given in a misdemeanor case at the time they are given, and a special charge covering the matter requested and an exception taken to the refusal to give the request, in order to have the instructions reviewed; it being too late to first except to instructions in the motion for new trial. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 638, 159 S. W. 369; Miles v. State, 55 Ala. 173, 17 S. W. 155; Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1047; Schneider v. State, 70 App. 517, 156 S. W. 944; Fisher v. State. 71 App. 564, 160 S. W. 633.

There is no objection to a clerical error in the instructions in a misdemeanor case was first raised by motion for a new trial and there was no exception to the instructions when given, or during the trial, and the bill of exceptions filed 20 days after the adjournment of the court was solely to the court's overruling the motion for new trial on that ground, the error was not reviewable. Giles v. State, 70 App. 556, 157 S. W. 943.

60. — Statement of facts.—In the absence of a statement of facts and bill of exceptions, it will be presumed that the court charged all the law applicable to the evidence. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 1147.

(C) Decisions under Act of 1913

61. Applicability of act.—See ante, art. 735, and notes.

Where on a trial for an offense committed prior to the taking effect of such amenderatory chapter the trial court submitted the charge to accused's counsel for criticism and objection, and allowed him a reasonable time to examine it, and he failed to object thereto or to suggest amendments, objections to the charge could not be made. In the motion for a new trial, though the trial judge at the opening of the trial announced that accused would be tried under the law and procedure in force at the time of the commission of the offense, unless accused filed a written request that he be tried under the law and procedure in force at the time of the trial, Wright v. State, 73 App. 175, 163 S. W. 976.

Under this article, the trial judge to object or to raise an objection, in the motion for new trial, to an instruction in a homicide case, based on the theory that accused was not punished if it was not shown that the commission of the offense, would be tried as an election to be tried under the old law, though, in absence of election, he was entitled, under Pen. Code 1911, art. 17, to be punished under the new law, as it ameliorated the punishment. Echols v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 786.

62. Objections and exceptions.—Errors in the instructions cannot be reviewed, unless excepted to at the time of the trial. Wright v. State, 73 App. 175, 163 S. W. 976; Davis v. State, 73 App. 49, 163 S. W. 442; Seats v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 792; Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 52; Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 337.

Accused claimed that the forged note was written in L. county, and from there mailed to the prosecuting witness, while the prosecuting witness testified that it was mailed to him from M. county, in which county venue was laid. Accused requested charges on the theory that the mailing of the note from M. county was not sufficient to give that county venue if the note was written in L county. The only exceptions to the charge on venue, was that the state must prove that the offense was committed in M. county, were to the overruling of accused's requests. Held, that in the absence of appropriate objections accused could not, on appeal, contend that the charge was insufficient to present the issue raised by his testimony and that of the prosecuting witness. Meredith v. State, 73 App. 147, 164 S. W. 1019.

An exception that the court erred in failing to submit the law of manslaughter is too general to call for review of the question whether the evidence raised the issue of manslaughter. Chant v. State, 73 App. 545, 162 S. W. 792.

Neither a paper objection to the court's charge and filed in the record and containing the style and number of the cause, but not signed by any one or showing that it was presented to the trial court, nor special charges, which were copied in the record, followed by the word "refused," with the trial judge's signature, were sufficient to present for review the correctness of the charge. Womack v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 139.

The fact that objections to the charge were made before it was read to the jury may be presented by a bill of exceptions approved by the trial Judge. Ross v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 305.

In a misdemeanor case, the only proper way by which the Court of Criminal Appeals can consider an objection to the court's charge is by bill of exceptions thereto, taken at the time of the trial. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 708.

Where no objections were taken to the charge before it was read to the jury and the manslaughter statement of facts, it must be presumed that the judge fully presented all the issues made by the evidence. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

Exceptions to a charge in a criminal case should show that they were taken before the charge was read to the jury. Denton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 796.

Accused, not having raised that particular objection, cannot complain that the instructions on self-defense did not inform the jury what would be the grade of the offense, if, after inflicting a mortal wound in self-defense, accused pursued deceased and inflicted other wounds, hastening death. Maddox v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1026.

63. — Requests.—Defendant's requested charges, not shown to have been presented to the court or acted upon by it before the charge and argument, could not be reviewed. Safford v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 395; Logan v. State, 75 App. 624, 166 S. W. 154; Woodard v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 309; Perritt v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 316; Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 743.
Where neither the motion for new trial nor the bills of exception give any reason why counsel refused to file a motion for new trial, or why a motion for new trial was refused, or show how they were applicable to any state of facts, error in refusing the requests cannot be considered. Bain v. State, 73 App. 528, 166 S. W. 505; Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1022.

Where no objection was made to the charge either on the ground of omission or error, in the refusal of special charges requested by defendant would not be considered. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1110; Womack v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 129.

In a felony case, it is not necessary to preserve a refused instruction by a bill of exception, where the record shows its presentation and request in ample time, and hence, where the record did so show, the insufficiency of the bill of exceptions was considered. Goldstein v. State, 73 App. 558, 166 S. W. 149.

Where no objection was made when the charge was submitted to accused's counsel before argument, a request to charge on circumstantial evidence, made during the closing argument for the state, comes too late. Forward v. State, 73 App. 561, 166 S. W. 725.

Where the record contains no bills of exception or statement of facts, refusal of requested charges and denial of motion for new trial will not be reviewed. Mendoza v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 391.

64. Time for objections.—Objections to instructions cannot be reviewed on appeal, unless they have been presented to the trial court before the charge is read to the jury and that fact is shown by the record. Bedford v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 727; Hawkins v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 102; Wynne v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 120; Gutierrez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 737; Estes v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1149; Bodkins v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 216; Carmicle v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 218; Bowden v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 670; Glasper v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 585; Dillard v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 59.

Objections to instructions cannot be raised for the first time on motion for rehearing. Burge v. State, 73 App. 605, 167 S. W. 62; Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 100.

Defendant, who did not specifically object to the charge of the court before it was read to the jury, could not complain of the charge, either in the motion for a new trial or in the bill of exceptions filed after the term, except under the conditions named in this act. James v. State, 72 App. 457, 163 S. W. 61. Referred to: Art. 38, Sec. 138; the refusal of requested charge will not be considered on appeal, where no objection was filed to the court's charge when it was presented to counsel for inspection. Speer v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 291.

65. — Motion for new trial.—Where the accused fails to reserve any exception to the charge as given or the failure to submit a particular issue and presents a special charge on same, an objection presented in respect thereto in a motion for new trial is too late. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 610; James v. State, 72 App. 457, 163 S. W. 61; Simmon v. State, 73 App. 288, 164 S. W. 815; Faye v. State, 73 App. 278, 164 S. W. 1015; Gait v. State, 73 App. 275, 165 S. W. 142; Edwards v. State, 73 App. 800, 169 S. W. 617; Mora v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 344; Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1150; Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 143; Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 217; Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 735; Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1153; Staples v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 1056.

An objection to a charge on self-defense and to the refusal to give specially requested charges, not made until motion for new trial was filed, was insufficient, and assignment of error thereon could not be considered by the Court of Criminal Appeals. Crossett v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 518.

Objections to the charge, which are first made after verdict in the amended motion for new trial, cannot be considered on appeal in a criminal case. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 672.

66. Sufficiency of objection.—Objections to a charge on the ground that the court failed to apply the law to the facts and no charge on an affirmative defense, and only authorizing an acquittal in the expression "otherwise you will find defendant not guilty" are too general and will not be considered. Calyon v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 591.

67. Misdemeanors.—In misdemeanor cases, the only way the appellate court is authorized to consider complaints of the charge of the court and the refusal of requests is by bill of exceptions, taken at the trial, giving the specific reasons why the court erred. Branch v. State, 73 App. 471, 155 S. W. 605; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1105, L. R. A. 1915A, 573; King v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 675.

In a misdemeanor case, where the court charged the jury but did not submit the charge to counsel, errors assigned by counsel when he did see the charge will be considered on appeal, but a mere assignment of error complaining of the court's failure to submit the charge before it was given cannot be considered where no error therein was pointed out. Goode v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 714.

Art. 744. [724] Bill of exceptions.—On the trial of any criminal action, the defendant, by himself or counsel, may tender his bill of exceptions to any decision, opinion, order or charge of the court or other proceedings in the case; and the judge shall sign such bill of exceptions, under the rules prescribed in civil suits, in order that... such decision, opinion, order or charge may be revised upon appeal. [O. C. 603.]

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Where there is no bill of exceptions or statement of facts, nor any questions raised in the motion for new trial that can be considered without a statement, the judgment will be affirmed. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 637; Angle v. State, 55 App. 427, 34 S. W. 116; Saldano v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 771; Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 159; Hamill v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 514; Session v. State, 60 App. 541; McKinney v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 855; Young v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 548; Redo v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 71; Shockley v. State, 71 App. 475, 109 S. W. 452; Gowan v. State, 73 App. 222, 164 S. W. 61; Everett v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1100; Price v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1101.

Where no error appears in a record containing no statement of facts or bill of exceptions, the judgment will be affirmed. Meyer v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 221; Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 222; Kemper v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 308; S. W. 901; Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 128 S. W. 992; Gonzales v. State, 61 App. 583, 135 S. W. 381; Campbell v. State, 61 App. 504, 136 S. W. 548; Harris v. State, 62 App. 235, 187 S. W. 373.

Where there is no bill of exceptions and no statement of facts, and where the indictment or information charges the offense of which defendant was convicted, there is nothing presented for review. Horton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 785; Walters v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 26; Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 128 S. W. 301; Hardy v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 447; McCollum v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 599; Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1088; Follis v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 779.

On appeal on a record without a motion for a new trial, or any bill of exceptions or statement of facts, the judgment will be affirmed. Branden v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 667; Morris v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 420; McElroy v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 1144; Hale v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 696.

Grunds of complaint in a motion for new trial in a misdemeanor case cannot be considered, unless bills of exceptions are reserved to the rulings of the trial court. Goodwin v. State, 63 App. 140, 138 S. W. 399; Lewis v. State, 35 App. 616, 81 S. W. 467; Rector v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 992.

Any ruling or action of the court which is not manifest of record, or which can not be fully understood and intelligibly passed upon, without a statement of the facts bearing upon it, must, in order to be reviewed, be presented by a proper bill of exception setting forth fully and clearly such facts. Escareno v. State, 16 App. 82; Callahan v. State, 30 Tex. 488.

Where, on appeal from a conviction, the record contains neither a bill of exceptions nor a statement of facts, and the motion for a new trial is not presented in the transcript containing the record, a notice of appeal, and an order granting time in which to prepare a bill, the judgment will be affirmed. English v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 389.

In the absence of bill of exceptions and statement of facts, the only ground for new trial being that the verdict was contrary to the law and evidence, the indictment for robbery with a deadly weapon being regular, two courts thereof having been submitted to the jury by appropriate and correct charge, the jury having found him guilty and assessed his punishment at 40 years in the penitentiary, and the judgment being regular, there must be an affirmance. Marue v. State (Cr. App.) 134 S. W. 727.

Where no bill of exceptions is taken, and where the record does not show that the matter alleged as error occurred or was excepted to at the time, it cannot be considered. Mosley v. State, 61 App. 294, 135 S. W. 148.

Errors not assigned in bills of exceptions or the motion for a new trial are not reviewable. Davenport v. State, 63 App. 244, 140 S. W. 146; Matters not raised by a bill of exceptions or motion for new trial cannot be considered on appeal. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 986.

Grounds assigned in a motion for new trial, which do not relate to matters reserved in a bill of exceptions, cannot be reviewed on appeal unless they relate to erroneous instructions. Columbus v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 910.

A fact, merely recited in a motion for new trial, but not verified by bill of exceptions, and with nothing in the record to indicate its truth, cannot be considered on appeal. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 913.

The facts must be presented by bill of exceptions that there may be review of the denial of new trial, asked on the ground that the special judge who presided at the trial was not legally qualified or elected. Jaramillo v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 600.
An appeal from a conviction must be affirmed, where there is no motion for new trial, no bill of exception, and no indictment charges an offense, and the trial court submitted that offense. Sanders v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 566.

In the absence of a motion for new trial, bill of exceptions, or statement of facts, a record, a judgment of conviction will be affirmed; the court having submitted the offense charged in the indictment. Parrish v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 433.

The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider questions raised by assignments of error, but is restricted by the statute to questions raised by bills of exceptions or in the motion for new trial. Skinner v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1007.

On appeal in a criminal case, where the indictment, charge, judgment, and sentence were in proper form, there were no questions open for consideration, in the absence of a bill of exceptions or statement of facts. Hooper v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 221.

Where no bills of exceptions were reserved to the introduction of testimony, and the charge submitted the offense charged in the indictment, the judgment would be affirmed, in the absence of a statement of facts. Oakery v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 285.

Where a writ of certiorari was granted to perfect the record in a criminal appeal, and to supply lost papers, and defendant had ample opportunity to supply the lost papers, but made no effort to do so, an affirmance of the conviction will be granted on motion of the state, in the absence of a statement of facts and bill of exceptions. Rupard v. State, 71 App. 256, 158 S. W. 285.

On appeal in a criminal case, where the indictment was in proper form and the charge submitted the offense alleged in the indictment, the denial of a motion for a new trial could not be reviewed where the record contained no bill of exceptions nor statement of facts. Sullivan v. State, 71 App. 82, 158 S. W. 302.

Where the record does not show the evidence or any reserved objections to the court's rulings, assignments of error that the verdict was contrary to law and evidence and in excluding and admitting evidence and in giving and omitting to give instructions cannot be considered. Gonzales v. State, 71 App. 83, 158 S. W. 293.

Where accused's motion for a new trial presented certain questions by merely reciting the questions, and then stating in the ground of the motion that they would be more particularly shown by his bill of exceptions, giving the number thereof, while as to many of the grounds there was no such bill in the record, they could not be reviewed. Thomason v. State, 71 App. 439, 150 S. W. 259.

Absent a statement of facts and bills of exceptions, grounds in the motion for new trial, complaining of the rejection of evidence, of the failure of the court to charge, and based on newly discovered evidence, cannot be reviewed. Leach v. State, 72 App. 273, 161 S. W. 977.

Objections not affirmatively mentioned in the bill of exceptions are deemed to have been waived. Best v. State, 72 App. 201, 161 S. W. 966.

Where the record of the election of a special judge was regular, the overruling of a plea in abatement of the indictment on the ground that lawyers not practicing in the court participated in the election of the special judge, who was a nonresident of the district, not supported by any evidence, cannot be considered on appeal. Tores v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 523.

Rulings on motions and pleas cannot be reviewed where accused reserved no exception to them. Tores v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 523.

Where objections were reserved to the introduction of testimony, and no objections were made to the court's charge, or any special charges requested, the only question reviewable on appeal is the sufficiency of the evidence. Jarrot v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 55.

Without a statement of facts or bill of exceptions, and where there is no motion for a new trial in the record, nothing is raised that can be reviewed. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 524.

Absent bill of exceptions, in a misdemeanor case, only the question of the evidence sustaining the conviction can be considered. Shinson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 976.

3. — Appointment of counsel.—A ruling of a trial court denying accused the particular counsel he desired to have appointed for his defense is not reviewable in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Krucmell v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 871.

4. — Denial of change of venue.—See art. 634, and notes.

App. 345, 20 S. W. 750; Attaway v. State, 31 App. 475, 20 S. W. 325; Pickens v. State, 56, 21 S. W. 562; Hyden v. State, 31 App. 401, 20 S. W. 765; Com-

Where accused stated in his motion for new trial that he was not prepared for trial, not having been able to procure material evidence, because he had no attorney to attend to his case, and that his motion for a continuance when the case was called was overruled, but there was no bill of exception reserved to such matters, and nothing in the record verifying such statement, except such mention in the motion for new trial, the questions raised would not be reviewed. Franks v. State, 57 App. 131, 125 S. W. 21.

6. Proof of venue.—See art. 338, post.

To take advantage, on appeal, of insufficient proof of venue, there must have been a contest over it in the trial court and the matter preserved by bill of exceptions is not the same as the venue issue is sought to be established, or the invokes was in the county where the venue was laid, when it will be noticed without

7. Rulings and objections respecting jurors.—See art. 338, post.

Grounds for new trial, in the court erred in overruling challenges to certain jurors not presented by bills of exceptions showing the questions propounded and the answers of the jurors. Vines v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 727; Campbell v. State, 73 App. 193, 164 S. W. 850.

If the sheriff was not sworn, a bill of exceptions must show it. Sameschen v. State, 8 App. 45.

Irregularities in the organization of a trial jury should not be tolerated, but, if permitted by the trial court, the error, to be revised on appeal, must be promptly excited at the very time, and it is too late to object thereto for the first time on motion for new trial. If not objected to at the proper time, and a jury is selected without objection, the defendant will not be heard to complain afterward, but will be held to have waived all such objections. McMahon v. State, 17 App. 232, 196 S. W. 201; Caldwell v. State, 19 App. 318; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 811.

An objection that the jury was not sworn cannot be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 91 S. W. 583.

Where a venire ordered to try accused appeared from the record to have been presented without alleged errors in the formation of the jury not presented by bill of exceptions, will not be reviewed. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 305, 131 S. W. 1058.

Objection that a juror was insane cannot be considered when not presented by bills of exceptions and when the record does not show the facts in relation thereto. Springer v. State, 63 App. 266, 140 S. W. 99.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions requiring accused to go to trial before a "picked-up" jury. It will be presumed that he made no objection at the time. Ellenton v. State, 63 App. 127, 140 S. W. 1101.

Where the record does not contain a bill of exceptions, and the evidence on the matter of discrimination in the county against the negro race in selecting jurors, alleged by accused, a negro, as a ground for quashing the indictment and denied by the appellee, is not preserved in the record, the question is not reviewable on appeal. Wells v. State, 68 App. 615, 141 S. W. 96.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, questions involving the organization of the grand jury are not reviewable on appeal. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 645.

Questions raised in a motion for a new trial concerning the absence of negroes on the jury panel, failure to serve accused with a copy of the special venire, etc., cannot be reviewed, where they are not presented by a bill of exceptions, and where there is no evidence in the record with reference thereto. Vines v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 727.

On appeal from a criminal prosecution, that the defendant was required to exhaust peremptory challenges on jurors whom the court held to be qualified, but whom the defendant did not think qualified, or that the defendant should have been granted additional peremptory challenges, were unavailable for review in the absence of bills of exceptions. Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1062.

On appeal from a criminal prosecution, the court will not review the overruling of a motion to quash the jury venire, where there was no bill of exceptions thereto in the record, even though the duly acknowledged motions to quash were shown. Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1063.

The action of the trial court in organizing the jury cannot be reviewed, where not verified by bill of exceptions. Rodriguez v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1167.

That the court required accused in a homicide case to go to trial without a special venire could not be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Pinson v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 556.

Where no bill of exceptions is reserved verifying the fact that a juror sat on a former trial of the case, and the record contains no evidence showing such fact, errors in overruling the motion for new trial on that ground cannot be reviewed. Reeves v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 127.

Errors in the formation of the jury, or in the selection of any juror, cannot be reviewed on appeal, in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 880.

Assignments of error to the selection of a special venire cannot be considered, where no bills of exception were reserved. Asbeck v. State, 70 App. 225, 155 S. W. 625.

In the absence of a statement of facts and bills of exception, the denial of a motion for new trial, requested on the ground that the grand jury was not organized according to law, cannot be reviewed, it appearing that the lower court heard the evidence on that issue. Fowler v. State, 71 App. 1, 153 S. W. 1117.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions reserved thereto, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot review the trial court's action in overruling a motion to quash the venire. Sharp v. State, 71 App. 623, 160 S. W. 365.

In the absence of an exception reserved to the formation and organization of the jury, an objection that it was composed wholly of "tulemen" is not ground for reversal. Bracher v. State, 72 App. 198, 161 S. W. 124.

Where the trial judge, on a motion for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors could not read or write, decided that he could read and write, and the evidence on the hearing of the motion was not brought on appeal by a proper bill of exceptions, the overruling of the motion would not be reviewed. Berry v. State, 73 App. 203, 163 S. W. 964.

The overruling of a plea in abatement of the indictment on the ground of discrimination in the organization of the grand jury, and the denial of a motion to quash a special venire on the ground of discrimination in the selection of jurors to prevent a fair trial, cannot be reviewed on appeal, unless exceptions are reserved and the evidence on the hearing included in the bills of exception. Toree v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 225.

8. Rulings relating to time and mode of trial and to arraignment and plea.—See art. 923, post.

It is not essential to the validity of a plea of former jeopardy, that a record of the proceedings on the former trial has been perpetuated by a bill of exceptions. Pizarro v. State, 80 App. 129, 54 Am. Rcp. 511; Briccse v. State, 27 App. 195, 11 S. W. 113.

Where the record in a misdemeanor case shows on its face that no plea to the information was entered, advantage of this can be taken in appellate court in absence of bill of exceptions, when the question was raised in motion for new trial. Thompson v. State, 46 App. 412, 58 S. W. 623. And see Noble v. State, 59 App. 581, 99 S. W. 597, and Maya v. State, 51 App. 32, 101 S. W. 223.

In an appeal of a bill of exceptions, the appellate court cannot consider error in compelling accused to go to trial, and not allowing him a certain time to prepare for trial. Elliott v. State, 59 App. 1, 127 S. W. 547.

Defendant's complaint, on motion for new trial, that he was "forced to trial without his attorney" cannot be considered on appeal, in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.), 159 S. W. 1170.

Refusal of the court to permit accused to withdraw his plea of guilty, and plead not guilty before the retirement of the jury, cannot be reviewed on appeal, where there was no bill of exceptions and the objection was not raised. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 436.

In a prosecution of an accessory, it is too late, in the motion for new trial, to complain that the principal was not first tried, in the absence of any motion or 531.
bill of exceptions calling therefor, or any showing that the principal was under arrest, but by Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 199.

Where a ground of a motion for new trial, that accused was induced by his father to plead guilty upon representations made to him and his father by the county attorney that he would receive the lightest punishment, was not preserved in the record and the record did not sustain such a judgment of conviction will be affirmed. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 515.

Where accused pleaded not guilty in the court to which the venue was changed instead of that in which the indictment was returned, as required by art. 658, but no bill of exceptions was taken to the omission nor the question raised in the trial court other than by an amended motion for new trial, the court did not err in denying the motion. McGregor v. State, 71 App. 664, 160 S. W. 711.

The striking of a plea of former jeopardy could not be reviewed, where no bill of exceptions was reserved thereto. Jones v. State, 72 App. 496, 162 S. W. 1112.

When a bill of exceptions was not reserved to the action of the trial court in calling the case out of its regular order, its action is not reviewable. Cyrus v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 679.

9. — Rulings respecting indictment, information, or complaint.—Where the record on appeal contains no statement of facts and no bill of exceptions, a question of variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof touching the name of the person whose house was alleged to have been burglarised cannot be reviewed. Adams v. State, 60 App. 176, 92 S. W. 839.

In absence of a bill of exceptions, objections that the minutes did not show when the indictment was received and ordered filed, that the copy of the indictment served on accused was not a true copy, and that accused's counsel was misled by the state's attorney, and induced to believe that the indictment would be dismissed and a new indictment filed, cannot be considered on appeal. Lemons v. State, 59 App. 296, 128 S. W. 416.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions showing the facts, the action of the trial court in permitting a name in an information to be changed to correspond with the name of the one making the complaint cannot be reviewed. Germany v. State, 62 App. 276, 137 S. W. 139, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 477.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, the action of the trial court in overruling accused's motion to compel the state in a prosecution for seduction to elect upon which act it would rely cannot be reviewed. Knight v. State, 61 App. 541, 144 S. W. 947.

Error in overruling a motion in arrest because the indictment charged two separate misdemeanors each of which counts were submitted in separate charges cannot be reviewed without a bill of exceptions to the ruling on the motion verifying that the exception was properly made. Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 611.

Objection that a complaint, charging accused with the misdemeanor with which he was convicted, bore no file mark by the clerk, cannot be considered, where not presented on appeal by a bill of exceptions showing the facts. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 945.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, the appellate court cannot review the question as to service on accused of a copy of the indictment. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 1974.

Where the information contained in the record was properly signed by the county attorney, and the fact that it was not so signed was not authenticated by a bill of exceptions, error cannot be predicated on the overruling of a motion in arrest on the ground that the information was unsigned. Baker v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 631.

A defendant can take advantage of the failure of an information to charge an offense even though his bill of exceptions on that point is refused by the trial court. Rupard v. State, 71 App. 556, 150 S. W. 255.

10. — Conduct of trial in general.—Objections to the court's action in retiring the jury during counsel's discussion of the law after the conclusion of the evidence are not available on appeal, where the matter is not preserved by bill of exceptions. Lawshe v. State, 57 App. 92, 151 S. W. 895.

Where it was not shown by bill of exceptions that accused was brought before the jury at different times during the trial handcuffed, and led into the courtroom by a chain attached to the handcuffs, and held by the sheriff or one of his deputies, the denial of a new trial on the ground that such act was prejudicial to him would not be reviewed; it being presumed that, in the absence of the bill, it either did not occur at all, or, if so, only in such a way as was not prejudicial. The circumstances, though under the general act a defendant should not be carried into or out of court in the presence of the jury handcuffed, handcuffed, or chained. Zunago v. State, 63 App. 58, 128 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 655.

The action of the trial judge in permitting the jury to separate during the noon hour, without instructions, cannot be reviewed on appeal, where no bill of exceptions was reserved. McInidoo v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 235.

Alleged error in permitting defendant's wife to sit in court in front of and facing her daughter, the prosecuting witness, while testifying, could not be reviewed, in the absence of bills of exception reserved at the time. Jennings v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 313.

Where not presented by a bill of exceptions, the appellate court cannot review the error of the trial court in rushing through the case without giving accused, who was too poor to employ counsel, an opportunity to present any defense. Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 580.

A refusal of improper conduct of a witness for the state while testifying in a criminal prosecution cannot be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing his acts. Marlow v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 610.
A ground of motion for new trial, complaining that part of the jury was not sworn, should not be considered on appeal, where the facts are not verified by bill of exceptions or otherwise. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1151.

An objection that an interpreter was not sworn according to law could only be raised by a bill of exception. Moreno v. State, 71 App. 466, 160 S. W. 381.

The court, in appointing a commission of physicians to make a physical examination will not be reviewed on appeal in a criminal case in the absence of a bill of exceptions thereto. Edwards v. State, 71 App. 417, 160 S. W. 709.

Where there was no bill of exceptions reserved to the misconduct of spectators during the trial, and nothing to verify the allegation thereof in the motion for new trial, which was not sworn to, the matter could not be reviewed. Buckingham v. State, 72 App. 101, 164 S. W. 5.

Merely swearing a state's witness in the absence of defendant, being first complained of in the motion for new trial, presents no error. Singleton v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 46.

11. -- Putting witnesses under rule.—Where accused did not object to a witness' testimony on the ground that he was wrongfully excused from the rule and no bill of exceptions showing injury was reserved, the alleged error cannot be reviewed. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

Where improper remarks have been made by the prosecuting officer in argument to the jury, there is no ground for reversal, unless defendant objects, takes a bill of special exceptions, and asks that the remarks be stricken out and the charge is refused. Luehr v. State, 63 App. 339, 139 S. W. 1147; Johnson v. State, 64 App. 399, 142 S. W. 589; McWhirter v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 189; Wren v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 440.

Objections to the allusion by the prosecuting attorney that defendant did not testify should be reserved by bill of exceptions. Anderson v. State, 39 App. 34, 44 S. W. 834.

In absence of bills of exception allowed and approved by the trial judge, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider alleged improper remarks of counsel or error in admitting evidence. Greer v. State, 62 App. 81, 136 S. W. 451.

Argument of the prosecuting attorney cannot be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions or some showing that the language was used by him. Boyce v. State, 62 App. 374, 137 S. W. 116.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, an objection to the action of the county attorney in consulting with some of the witnesses will not be reviewed. Carney v. State, 63 App. 379, 140 S. W. 446.

Alleged improper argument of counsel cannot be considered on a criminal appeal, in absence of a bill of exceptions, where the motion for a new trial does not state the language used, and a special charge was not requested to correct it. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 145 S. W. 878.

A denial of a motion for a new trial for improper remarks of the district attorney cannot be reviewed on appeal, where there are no bills of exception, and the evidence and remarks referred to do not appear in the record. Henry v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 879.

Improper language alleged to have been used by the district attorney cannot be reviewed, where it is sought to be taken advantage of by an exception to the refusal of a special charge, but without a bill of exceptions verifying the fact that the objectionable language was used and showing that an exception was reserved. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 783.

Alleged improper remarks of a district attorney cannot be considered by a court on appeal from a conviction for murder, where they are not verified by a bill of exceptions, and the motion for a new trial does not state what the remarks were that were objected to. Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 1062.

These remarks were made by the prosecuting attorney, and by the prosecuting attorney, should for appeal be shown by bill of exception: allegation of the fact in the motion for new trial not verifying it. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 371.

13. — Misconduct of court.—In the absence of a bill of exceptions reserved to the remarks of the trial court complained of, the court on appeal cannot presume that they were made. Melton v. State, 63 App. 573, 140 S. W. 783.

A court on appeal will not review the act of the lower court in lecturing a witness when the question is not presented by a bill of exceptions. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 778.

Objection on motion for new trial, that the trial judge erred in reading the charge by unduly emphasizing one word and not another is not reviewable, where the facts relating to the emphases are not shown by bill of exceptions. Newton v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 628.

A mere allegation in the motion for new trial not supported by a bill in the record that the court reprimanded counsel for the accused is insufficient to preserve such matter for review. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 623.

14. — Misconduct of jury.—Misconduct of jurors in their deliberations cannot be relied on as shown on appeal, unless shown by bill of exceptions. Patterson v. State, 207, 14 S. W. 1128; Flores v. State, 57 App. 157, 123 S. W. 22.

That a jury in a criminal case received testimony and evidence and wrong information as to the evidence in the case from one of their members cannot be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions evidencing all the facts. Brandt v. State, 57 App. 157, 123 S. W. 22.

A ground of assignment for misconduct of the jury, not verified by any bill of exceptions, and in respect to which no facts appear in the record, is not reviewable on appeal. Bozanno v. State, 69 App. 607, 132 S. W. 777.

Irregularity on the part of the jury in arriving at their verdict will not be considered on appeal when not presented by a bill of exception. Garner v. State, 62 App. 55, 123 S. W. 124.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions showing that the jury read newspapers, it cannot be presumed that they were prejudiced, and that the reading was prejudicial. Berg v. State, 64 App. 612, 133 S. W. 884.

Where, in a homicide case, a ground of a motion for a new trial, complaining that the jury was allowed to deliberate during its deliberation, was not supported by affidavit, and there was no bill of exceptions reserved, the appellate court could not consider the objection. Gant v. State, 73 App. 279, 185 S. W. 142.

15. — Rulings on evidence.—See Willson's Cr. Forms, 938.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions or statement of facts, the court on appeal cannot review the rulings on the evidence. Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 136 V. 825; 154 S. W. 248; (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 485.

Error in not permitting accused to ask certain questions on cross-examination cannot be considered on appeal, in absence of a bill of exceptions. Clark v. State, 63 App. 181, 125 S. W. 12.

Where no objection was made, upon a trial for burglary, to the admission of circumstantial evidence to prove a want of consent of the owner of the property stolen, and no bill of exceptions was reserved, the objection cannot be raised on appeal. Brown v. State, 58 App. 336, 125 S. W. 915.

Where it is urged as a ground for new trial that the trial court erred in excluding evidence that the defendant in a prosecution for aggravated assault had been convicted and paid his fine before a justice of the peace, and this ground is not presented by a bill of exceptions, it will not be considered on appeal. Pollock v. State, 60 App. 266, 121 S. W. 1994.

Grounds of a motion for new trial complained of the admission of testimony will not be considered on appeal, where the testimony is not presented by bill of exceptions and is not even given in the motion for new trial. Franklin v. State, 63 App. 435, 140 S. W. 1991.

On appeal from a conviction in a prosecution for violating the local option law, the question whether the court erred in permitting the minutes of the commissioners' court to be introduced in evidence will not be considered where no bill of exceptions appears in the record. Moreno v. State, 64 App. 699, 148 S. W. 156, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 863.

An appellate court could not review alleged error in permitting the state to interrogate defendant as to the particulars of an alleged assault committed on another and the record contained no bills of exceptions preserving error thereon. Lacoume v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 626.

Rulings admitting testimony are not reviewable where no exceptions thereto appear in the record, especially where it is not stated what was testified to, or what part of the testimony was excepted to. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 598.

The admission on a trial for homicide of accused's testimony on a habeas corpus proceeding cannot be reviewed on appeal, where no bill of exceptions thereto was reserved. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

Denial of a motion to strike out all the testimony added down to the close of the state's case could not be reviewed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions reserved thereto. Doe v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 54.

Unless defendants, in a misdemeanor case, take a bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence, and so preserve the point, the question of its admissibility cannot be held reversible error on appeal. Mackey et al. v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 598.

The record does not contain the evidence, or any bills of exception, the exclusion of evidence cannot be reviewed. Featherstone v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 1055.

Where the record does not contain the evidence, or any bills of exception, the exclusion of evidence cannot be reviewed. Cameron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 867.

Where prosecutrix was tested as to her competency, and the court decided that she was competent, and her testimony went before the jury, accused, reserving no exception, could not complain of the ruling. Kinch v. State, 70 App. 419, 156 S. W. 649.

There was no error in admitting a subpoena in evidence, where the only exception reserved was to the remarks of counsel, and not to the admission of the evidence. Mooney v. State, 73 App. 121, 164 S. W. 828.

Where motion for new trial complaining of error in the admission of evidence of accused did not accuse did not disclose what the statements were, and there was no bill of exceptions showing that the testimony objected to was offered, the ruling was not reviewable. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1047.
16. Verdict contrary to law and evidence.—On appeal from a conviction, objection to the law and the evidence is not reviewable, where the evidence is not presented by statement of facts or bill of exceptions. Young v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1133; Stuart v. State, 35 App. 440, 34 S. W. 121; Powell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 574; Wallace v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 299; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1162; Chandler v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1011; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 812; Fitzhugh v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 710. Where the record does not contain the evidence, its sufficiency to support a conviction cannot be reviewed. Gerron v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1018; Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 849; Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 294; Ramos v. State, 71 App. 494, 160 S. W. 383. Where, on appeal in a criminal prosecution, there is no statement of facts or bill of exceptions, and the ground for a motion for new trial is the refusal to strike out the evidence of a witness because he was an ex-convict, and there is no verification in the record of that statement, the objection and the ground of such motion that the evidence is insufficient will not be considered. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 127.

Where, in a misdemeanor case, there was some evidence of a fact essential to a conviction, and there was no requested charge that the evidence was insufficient, the question of the insufficiency of the evidence, not presented by a bill of exceptions in any form, is not reviewable on appeal. Goodwin v. State, 63 App. 140, 138 S. W. 399.

A conviction, though based on conflicting evidence, must be affirmed, where there were no bills of exception and there was no complaint of the charges given, and no charges were requested. Mitchell v. State, 71 App. 234, 158 S. W. 812.

17. Error relating to instructions.—See art. 743, and notes. See also, art. 938.

18. Findings of court.—In the absence of a bill of exceptions bringing the evidence into the record, a finding of fact of the trial court cannot be reviewed. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 843.

19. Evidence heard and proceedings had on motion for new trial.—A motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be reviewed on appeal, where the evidence is not presented by a bill of exceptions or otherwise. Franklin v. State, 63 App. 435, 140 S. W. 1091; Madrid v. State, 71 App. 420, 161 S. W. 93.

Where matters of fact are involved in the ruling upon a motion for new trial, they must be properly presented in the record by bill of exceptions or statement of facts, or they can not be considered on appeal. Jordan v. State, 10 Tex. 473; Short v. State, 36 Tex. 644; Sharp v. State, 6 App. 650.

It is not necessary to take a bill of exceptions to the overruling of a motion for a new trial. Doans v. State, 36 App. 468, 37 S. W. 751.

Where the failure to grant a motion for a new trial for absence of a witness then in the penitentiary is not presented by a bill of exception, and it is not shown that such convict was offered as a witness, or that a motion was made in continuance until he could be obtained, error cannot be predicated upon such refusal. Wilson v. State, 61 App. 628, 136 S. W. 447.

Where no bill of exceptions and statement of facts or evidence was in the record, motion which arose between the attorneys, on motion between the trial, as to an agreement on a plea of guilty, and which was settled by the trial court, could not be reviewed. Muckleroy v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 199.

Accused's motion for new trial on the ground that his attorneys were not sufficiently heard to the testimony of his own witnesses, because of the late time at which they were appointed, preventing him from securing a fair trial, cannot be considered on appeal, where it was not verified by a bill of exceptions, or otherwise than by accused's statement under oath. Flowers v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 1162.

Where evidence adduced on a motion for a new trial is not in the record, the conclusion of the judge thereon in approving the bill of exceptions must be accepted. Jefferson v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 968.

One convicted of a crime cannot take advantage of an alleged error in overruling a motion to quash the indictment based upon defects in the selecting and swearing of the grand and petit juries shown by extrinsic evidence, where the order overruling the motion appears, but not the motion itself, and there is no statement of facts or bill of exceptions. Anderson v. State, 70 App. 594, 157 S. W. 1197.

Where the order denying a motion for a new trial for misconduct of the jury recited that the court heard the motion and "the evidence adduced thereon," error in denying the motion cannot be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions containing the evidence heard by the trial court. Sharpe v. State, 71 App. 653, 160 S. W. 309.

Supreme Court rule 53 for the district and county courts provides that there shall be no bill of exceptions as to matters which at common law constitute the record proper, as the citation, pleadings, and motions for new trial, etc., and rule 55 provides that rulings upon applications for continuance and other incidental motions, and upon evidence and other proceedings not embraced in the two preceding a bill of exceptions must be preserved in a part of the record. Held, that evidence introduced on a motion for new trial must be preserved by bill of exceptions to enable the Court of Criminal Appeals to review a ruling denying the motion. Sharpe v. State, 71 App. 653, 160 S. W. 309.

A bill of exceptions.—When matters of fact involved in a ruling of the court complained of, they must be authenticated by proper bill of exception, and merely setting them out as grounds for new trial, or assigning 539

An attorney's "protest" not signed by the judge will not answer as a bill of exceptions. Caldwell v. State, 2 App. 53; Wakefield v. State, 3 App. 98; Davis v. State, 40 Tex. 478.

A recitation in the judgment that accused excepted to the action of the court in a requested instruction or to the action of the court in overruling objections in evidence is not sufficient to take the place of a bill of exceptions. DAVIS v. State, 2 App. 34; Wadsworth v. State, 3 App. 39; Davis v. State, 40 Tex. 478; Asbeck v. State, 70 App. 225, 156 S. W. 925.

Exceptions to evidence admitted over the defendant's objection may be embraced in a statement of facts in connection with the evidence admitted. Exceptions to evidence excluded cannot be embraced in a statement of facts, but must be presented by bill of exception. Cooper v. State, 7 App. 194; Green v. State, 12 App. 51; McWhorter v. State, 13 App. 523; Branch v. State, 15 App. 96.

A recital in the judgment that a continuance was refused, and that the defendant excepted, will not supply the place of a specific bill of exceptions. Gaston v. State, 11 App. 143; Hollis v. State, 9 App. 642; Prator v. State, 15 App. 363.

Statements relative to the action of the court in regard to the charge given could not be considered when contained only in the motion for new trial and not embodied in a proper bill of exceptions. Angley v. State, 35 App. 427, 34 S. W. 116.

Statements in the motion for new trial relative to the charge, or failure to instruct, cannot be regarded as bills of exceptions. Martin v. State, 35 App. 462, 43 S. W. 282.

The action of the court in respect to an application for continuance must be evidenced by a bill of exceptions, that it may be reviewed. The presence in the record of an order, taken from the minutes of the court, reciting that the application was overruled, and defendant excepted is not enough. Wesley v. State, 60 App. 299, 131 S. W. 1107.

Under this article errors assigned in the brief on exceptions to the testimony not preserved by bills of exceptions cannot be considered. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 138 S. W. 615.

The court on appeal in a criminal prosecution will not consider matter claimed as error, where not presented by a bill of exceptions, though sworn to in a motion for new trial (Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 176).

Since a sworn motion for a new trial is merely a pleading, if it is desired that exhibits attached to the motion be considered as evidence they should be introduced as such, and the fact that no other evidence was introduced should be shown by the bill of exceptions in order to have error in overruling the motion reviewed. Sharp v. State, 61 App. 103, 166 S. W. 965.

Matters stated in an affidavit attached to the motion for new trial, not being verified by bill of exceptions or statement of facts, cannot be considered on appeal. Terry v. State, 75 App. 139, 164 S. W. 2.

A matter simply alleged in the motion for new trial, but not verified by affidavit, bill of exceptions, or statement of facts, cannot be considered on appeal. Lamont v. State, 73 App. 77, 164 S. W. 3.

21. Form, requisites, and sufficiency of bill.—See art. 2609, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, and notes thereunder.

A bill of exceptions failing to state the grounds for the exception urged will not be considered on appeal because too indefinite. Day v. State, 63 App. 527, 133 S. W. 292; Edman & State, 64 App. 418, 142 S. W. 887.

Bills of exception which relate to the competency of evidence, or to rulings of the trial court upon applications for continuance, will not be considered on appeal without a statement of such facts as are necessary to elucidate the exceptions. Livar v. State, 26 App. 115, 9 S. W. 552.

When there are a number of bills of exception but no statement of facts the errors complained of will not be reviewed. Mayes v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 612.

In absence of statement of facts bill of exceptions should have contained all the evidence. Robinson v. State, 37 App. 195, 39 S. W. 107.

When the bill of exceptions to the overruling of defendant's motion to require the State to disclose the names of private prosecutors, does not show what effect such disclosure would have on the case, it will be presumed that the motion was properly overruled. Bratt v. State, 38 App. 121, 41 S. W. 622.

If the grounds alleged in the bill of exceptions, as objections, are true, it should show in the bill. Munoz v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 760.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the bill of exceptions must show on its face that it contains all of the evidence as to the matter complained of. Brown v. State, 57 App. 269, 122 S. W. 562.

A bill of exceptions containing all the matters complained of on the trial, is improper, and will not be reviewed. Cabral v. State, 57 App. 394, 122 S. W. 872.

Where a bill of exceptions, setting forth accused's objection to a 7 year old boy as witness because he did not understand the nature of an oath, merely stated that the objection was overruled and the boy allowed to testify, without giving any of the proceedings had in regard to testing his competency, it cannot be aided by going to the statement of facts or other parts of the record. Munger v. State, 57 App. 354, 122 S. W. 874.

A bill of exceptions touching a matter separately reserved, and not contained in the statement of facts, must be tested solely by reference to its contents. Green v. State, 60 App. 530, 132 S. W. 806.

Though bills of exceptions are not full and explicit enough to be reviewable on appeal, yet where defendant was convicted on circumstantial evidence, and sentenced for life, the court will look into the bills of exceptions and assignments of defendant. Ridge v. State, 61 App. 214, 134 S. W. 732.

A bill of exceptions stating the matters sought to be reviewed as objections and not as facts is insufficient. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 558, 137 S. W. 550.

The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot look to other parts of a record in aid of a bill of exceptions which accused has accepted and filed, and he is bound by qualifications therein. Campbell v. State, 63 App. 355, 141 S. W. 222, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 658.

A bill of exceptions which does not set out any of the testimony, but only refers to other parts of the record, is too incomplete to be considered on appeal. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 267.

A bill of exceptions, which, without stating grounds of objection, recites merely that defendant excepted to the verdict when it was returned into court, the verdict merely finding defendant guilty and assessing his punishment, presents nothing for review, other than the sufficiency of the evidence. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 518.

A bill of exceptions, in the absence of a statement of facts, must show on its face that it contains all the evidence in the trial as to the matter complained of, or there is nothing to review. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 185.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict cannot be considered, where the evidence is not in the record. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 185.

The Supreme Court will not consider bills of exceptions not prepared in accordance with the rules, and which do not set out the proceedings below sufficiently to show whether there is error, nor within themselves disclose all that is necessary to manifest error. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

Where a bill of exceptions, complaining of the court's refusal to require the state's counsel to let defendant's counsel have a paper to which he referred while examining a witness, did not disclose what the paper was, nothing was presented for review. Flores v. State, 72 App. 222, 182 S. W. 882.

On appeal the legal presumption is that the court ruled correctly, and to have the refusal of a severance reviewed, the bill must state matters as to arrest, trial, and continuance which would show error in the ruling. Zweig v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 747.

Inferences will not be indulged to supply omissions in a bill of exceptions, nor will the court on appeal supply omissions, nor aid the bill by inferences or presumptions. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

Objections not affirmatively mentioned in a bill of exceptions are deemed to have been waived. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.
23. — Rulings relating to indictment or information.—The record disclosed that defendant was present and contested the entry of an order allowing the state to present an information for the one which had been filed before. No objection was made to the order. The exceptions did not recite that defendant was not served with notice of the motion for the entry of order. A motion in arrest of judgment recited that defendant had not been served with process for this order. Held, that, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing that fact, the matter will not be reviewed. Banks v. State, 62 App. 552, 133 S. W. 406.

A bill of exceptions, which shows that accused announced that he was not ready to go to trial, because he had not been served for at least one full day with a copy of the indictment, and that the trial, to which he excepted, does not show as a fact that he had not been properly served with the indictment, and the court on appeal must assume that the trial court found, as a matter of fact, that accused had been properly served, in view showed that the indictment was returned and filed November 6th, and the case was not called for trial until November 14th following. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 276.

Where the court, in approving the bill of exceptions complaining of the denial of a motion to require the state to indorse on the indictment the names of all its witnesses, stated that the indictment contained the indorsement of witnesses who were all of the main witnesses, the bill presented no error. Byrd v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 168.

While an order permitting an amendment to the information should be entered of record and copied in the transcript, a showing in the bill of exceptions that permission was granted by the court to make such amendment is sufficient evidence of such fact. Tulley v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 224.

24. — Rulings respecting jurors.—To entitle defendant to a reversal because of the false answer of a juror on his voir dire the bill of exceptions must show the examination of the juror. Shaw v. State, 27 Tex. 456.

The bill of exceptions fails to show that jurors challenged by defendant sat on the jury that tried him, or that he had exhausted his peremptory challenges, and an objectionable juror was forced upon him, the overruling of such challenges is not cause for reversal. Kramer v. State, 54 App. 84, 29 S. W. 158.

A bill of exceptions to the action of the court in refusing to sustain challenges to jurors for cause must show that the juror sat on the trial and that defendant's peremptory challenges were exhausted. Segars v. State, 35 App. 45, 31 S. W. 370.

A bill of exceptions to the action of the court in refusing to excuse a juror who had been a witness in the case, should show what was said between counsel and the juror, and the facts stated by counsel to the court. Johnson v. State, 35 App. 170, 32 S. W. 772, 60 Am. St. Rep. 31.

A bill of exceptions to the overruling of challenges to jurors that were qualified juries must show that such jurors sat in the case and show the facts disqualifying them. Jones v. State, 37 App. 435, 35 S. W. 975; Jordan v. State, 27 App. 224, 33 S. W. 780, 39 S. W. 111.

A bill of exceptions reserved to the qualification of a juror on voir dire examination states that he has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, should state the answer of the juror or the facts or information upon which he based his opinion, or the reason why the judge held the juror qualified. Sawyer v. State, 39 App. 557, 47 S. W. 650.

A bill of exception complaining of disqualified juror should show that party's challenges were exhausted. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 723.

A bill of exceptions to the rulings of the court on questions to jurors touching their qualifications cannot be considered on appeal, where the record fails to show that juror was questioned at during the trial of the case or that juror's challenge was made before the trial was required to exhaust peremptory challenges upon them. Canon v. State, 59 App. 338, 128 S. W. 141.

Where the bill of exceptions as qualified and approved, and accepted by appellant, showed that no objection was taken to a juror on his voir dire, and that no showing was made which would disqualify him, a conviction will not be reversed because of recitals in the bill before it was qualified, which would disqualify such juror. Williams v. State, 69 App. 453, 132 S. W. 345.

A bill of exceptions to the exclusion of certain questions in the examination of veniremen, which does not recite what the expected answers were, will not be considered on appeal. Caton v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 590.

Where it did not appear that the jury or any one of them were not competent, fair, and impartial, the refusal of the court to permit counsel for accused to ask certain questions of the jury was not error; the expected answers not being incorporated in the bill. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

A bill of exception recited that on voir dire 36 or more men were examined for jury service, and challenges for cause were made and sustained until only 24 men remained, and the court thereupon directed the challenge to be made from the list of 24 men, to which defendant objected and requested a full panel, which objection is overruled, and that on the challenges the state struck 8 men and the defendant 8, and the first 12 remaining were impaneled as a jury, to all of which defendant then and there excepted. Held, that the bill of exceptions did not authorize review of the alleged error. Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 153, 157 S. W. 157.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the overruling of accused's challenge to a juror presents no error, where it was not shown that this juror served, or any objectionable juror served. Poulter v. State, 70 App. 157.

A bill of exceptions, showing that defendant objected to the court excusing jurors and instructing the sheriff to summon others, but not showing that the court acted improperly in excusing the jurors, presents no error. Millar v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1164.

Where the bill of exceptions did not show what the answers of the jurors would have been, accused cannot complain that the court excluded questions as to whether they were members of the Masonic order and whether the fact that the prosecutor influenced them in reaching their verdict. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 318.

That jurors had read a newspaper account of the case, made a ground of motion for new trial, should, for purpose of appeal, be verified by bill of exception. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 971.

The denial of a motion for a new trial, sought on account of the misconduct of the jury, cannot be reviewed, where the affidavits were not included in the bill of exceptions. Gipson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

25. Denial of continuance or postponement.—In the absence of the application for continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses, the bill of exceptions stating that accused issued a subpoena for the witnesses, without showing that he complied with the law other than the statement that he had issued process and without alleging that the witnesses were not absent by the procurement or consent of accused, or that the application was not made for delay, is too indefinite to require consideration on appeal. Clark v. State, 57 App. 649, 154 S. W. 632.

Where defendant's bill of exceptions shows a motion for a continuance to secure a witness, but does not disclose what the defendant desired to prove by the witness, the bill of exceptions presents no ground of review. Davis v. State, 60 App. 620, 192 S. W. 932.

A motion by accused for a continuance to procure witnesses was properly overruled where the bill of exceptions showed no diligence to procure the witnesses, stated no reason for their absence, failed to show their residence, and merely stated that accused applied to the clerk for subpoenas which he had not been returned for want of time. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 932.

Where the bill of exceptions to the refusal of a continuance stated that an absent witness would testify as to defendant's whereabouts on a specific day, while the record showed only the date of the offense as an authorized conviction if the offense was committed on any day within one year prior to the filing of the indictment, the reviewing court could not say that it was error to refuse the continuance; it being presumed, since the bill of exceptions did not affirmatively show the materiality of the testimony of the witness, that the ruling of the trial court was correct. Clardy v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 565.

A bill of exceptions did not show any error which stated that 20 or 40 minutes after accused's announcement as ready for trial he moved to postpone claiming that he had not been served with a true copy of the indictment, and that the motion was overruled because the copy served was sufficient to apprise accused of the nature of the accusation, and that accused accepted said copy and summoned his witnesses and appeared and asked for a postponement because of absent witnesses but afterwards stated that his witnesses were all present and he was ready, whereupon the motion to postpone was overruled as coming too late. Dennis v. State, 71 App. 162, 163 S. W. 1068.

Denial of a continuance is not reviewable on appeal where the application therefore is not copied in the bill of exceptions in the record complaining of the denial. Betts v. State, 71 App. 264, 159 S. W. 1069.

A ground for new trial, consisting of an exception to the court's refusal to suspend trial until an absent witness could be brought to court, witness could not be reviewed, where no facts were stated in connection therewith, and there was no bill of exceptions verifying the matter in the record. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 743.

A bill of exceptions merely stating that appellant's motion for a continuance was overruled and that he was forced to trial, in the absence of a material witness, not copying the motion or stating what his witness would testify, or the diligence used to procure him, or the reason why he had not been served, presented no question on appeal. Keets v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 149.

26. Putting witnesses under the rule.—Where the court qualified defendant's bill complaining that some of the state's witnesses were in sight and hearing of the witness testifying, although the rule had been invoked by stating that the witnesses were out of sight and hearing of the witness on the stand, error was not presented. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal of the trial court to put some of the prosecuting witnesses under the rule presents no error, where it does not show whether the witness testified to. Smith v. State, 79 App. 88, 165 S. W. 648.

27. Misconduct of court.—A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal of the trial court to put some of the prosecuting witnesses under the rule presents no error, where it does not show whether the witness testified to. Smith v. State, 79 App. 88, 165 S. W. 648.

A bill of exceptions complaining of a remark of the court that a witness for accused had run away together, made to the clerk in overruling an application for a continuance, is without merit, in the absence of an affidavit that the remark was heard by the jury and affected their verdict. Gipson v. State, 59 App. 469, 126 S. W. 267.

A bill of exceptions to a remark of the trial judge is insufficient, where it merely states that an objection was made, without showing the ground thereof. Newton v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 638.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of a remark of the trial judge on an application for a continuance that he also wanted the absent witness present in order to...
5. An indictment for perjury on the motion for the continuance, did not show error, when it appeared that the defendant had been impeached of perjury, that any juror who served heard the remark, or was objected to on that ground. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.

A bill of exceptions alleging that improper remarks were made by the court in the presence of the jury, counsel by the court, stating that the remarks were not made in the hearing of the jury, shows no error prejudicial to the defendant. Create v. State, 71 App. 9, 158 S. W. 288.

Where a bill of exceptions, complaining of a remark of the court that testimony was proper to impeach a witness of accused, was qualified by the court's explanation, disclosing that accused objected to the testimony on the ground of irrelevancy, and insisted on knowing the rule under which the evidence could be admitted, the bill of exceptions presented no error. Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 283.

The bill of exceptions shows that the judge lost control of the trial, constituting reversible error in felony cases, it showing that during the prosecuting attorney's opening address, in which he used fervent and violent language, the judge was in another room, talking, and could not hear what was taking place in the courtroom, and that defendant's counsel, desiring to take an exception, had to go out for the judge, and also reciting that the judge lost control of the trial. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 256.

28. — Misconduct of prosecuting attorney.—Where a bill of exceptions alleging error in a remark of the district attorney in his closing argument did not show the attitude of the case in such a way as to indicate whether the language complained of could have injuriously affected accused, and no written charge was requested, the remarks be not considered, it did not show error. Whitehead v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1019; Clayton v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 119; Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 1075; Walls v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 150; Stewart v. State, 71 App. 237, 158 S. W. 946; Hearne v. State, 73 App. 390, 165 S. W. 490, 166 S. W. 164.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the action of the county attorney in reading statements while examining a witness and in asking the witness whether the statements were true, will not be considered, where it shows that what was said and the circumstances under which the statements were made. Ligon v. State, 59 App. 274, 128 S. W. 620.

The bill of exceptions in a homicide case stated that the court was writing its charge and did not hear an alleged improper remark by the state's attorney in argument, if made by him, and that accused's counsel never requested to have the statement withdrawn and first called the court's attention to it in the motion for new trial. Held, that the bill of exceptions did not certify that the alleged improper statement was made. Lane v. State, 58 App. 550, 129 S. W. 255.

In absence of a certificate in a bill of exceptions showing that an alleged improper argument was in fact made by the state's attorney, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot reverse for such argument. Lane v. State, 58 App. 565, 129 S. W. 259.

Where the court sustained objections to improper questions asked accused on cross-examination, and the questions were not answered, and at the request of accused's counsel the court admonished the district attorney not to ask such questions again, and he complied, the conduct of the district attorney was not ground for reversal, and to justify a reversal the bill of exceptions must show that there were answers to the questions and that the answers were injurious to accused. Huggins v. State, 69 App. 214, 131 S. W. 555.

An objection to remarks of the assistant county attorney in his argument to the jury, as to the beating of deceased by defendant, the Saturday night before the murder, does not present any reason for reversal where the ground of objection was not verified as a fact and is insufficient to be treated as a statement of fact, and the judge immediately instructed the jury not to consider the remarks. Alexander v. State, 61 App. 31, 133 S. W. 436.

An objection in the bill of exceptions to opening remarks of the assistant county attorney in his argument to the jury, alleged to be without evidence upon which to base them, as to the act of defendant in beating decedent the Saturday night before the murder, cannot be treated as a statement of the fact, and the statement of the court that "the above is approved with the understanding that the judge immediately instructed the jury not to consider the above remarks" does not verify the ground of objection as a fact. Alexander v. State, 61 App. 31, 133 S. W. 436.

Improper arguments by the county attorney cannot be relied on on appeal, where there was no bill of exceptions showing that such language was used by him, the only bill of exceptions showing requested instructions that the jury should ignore certain alleged remarks. Holland v. State, 61 App. 201, 134 S. W. 695.

A bill of exceptions complaining of improper argument as not being within the record is insufficient, where it fails to show the testimony introduced at trial, even though reference be made to the statement of facts without showing what the statements are. Whitehead v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1019.

A bill of exceptions, complaining that the argument of the county attorney on the defendant's contention that there was a conspiracy against him, was improper, but failing to show within itself the facts of the case and the testimony of the witness the defendant had requested in writing that the court should not consider the jury to disregard these statements, is insufficient. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 558, 137 S. W. 356.

Bills of exceptions based on improper argument of counsel should show a sufficient ground of objection, and the evidence referred to so that the court can tell therefrom whether the argument was of such a character as to require a reversal. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.
A bill of exceptions to parts of the closing argument of the state's attorney, should only cover different parts, some not ruled on, and so stated, and here and there in brackets simply the word "exception," and no request for any charge to disregar[d] any parts of the speech, is insufficient to show error. Harris v. State, 64 App. 594, 144 S. W. 232.

A bill of exceptions must be specifically detailed, a bill of exceptions to a conviction, the court will not review objections to remarks of the county attorney, where the bill of exceptions does not show just what occurred, or any error, and the record does not show that appellant requested any instruction to disregard the remarks complained of. Gamble v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 521.

Where bills of exceptions complaining of the remarks of the county attorney in his argument did not explain the circumstances under which the remarks were made, and what the record contained so that they were improper, and showed that the court, at the request of accused, specially charged the jury not to consider the remarks, the record did not show that the remarks were grounds for reversal. O'Neal v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 928.

Where a bill of exceptions stated that the prosecuting attorney asked a witness if he did not know he was lying but did not show the connection in which the question was asked or that the witness testified to any material fact, it failed to show that the remark was harmful to the defendant. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 177.

A bill of exceptions showing that the only thing that occurred in the absence of the judge was a disagreement as to whether the state's attorney's argument was within the record, without showing whether defendant had testified as the state's attorney stated or not, was defective. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 178.

A bill of exceptions, reciting that the state permitted a witness to testify that a brother of defendant had quit his wife for a certain other woman, to which defendant had excepted on the ground of its irrelevancy and to prejudice the jury, and that if admissible at all it was only for the purpose of impeaching the named woman; and a bill reciting that counsel for the state in closing said that such woman was the paramour of defendant's brother—were insufficient. Kidder v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 620.

The bill of exceptions to remarks of the prosecuting attorney in argument, showing that the court sustained defendant's objections thereto and orally told the jury not to consider them, and not showing the surrounding circumstances, does not show prejudicial error. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 147.

The refusal of a requested charge, alleging certain remarks to have been made by the prosecuting attorney, cannot be reviewed in the absence of bills of exceptions verifying the fact that such language was used; the charge alone not doing so. Law v. State; 73 App. 5, 163 S. W. 99.

Where there was no exception showing that the state's counsel made remarks in regard to which special charges were asked, that the facts such remarks were made was not verified so as to bring the matter before the court for review. Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 533.

Where the court, in approving a bill of exceptions to alleged misconduct of the private prosecutor in argument in stating that because another jury had failed to do their duty by only giving accused 10 years in the pen was no reason why the present jury should render such a verdict, stated that the argument was in reply to argument of accused's counsel, without stating what such argument was, a bystander's bill, reciting the language used by the private prosecutor, but making no objection, or stating what argument was made by accused's counsel, was unavailable. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

A bill of exceptions recited that the district attorney in the presence of the jury stated that he was willing for the jury to take with them a map drawn by a public servant, and admitted to be seen written in evidence; that accused objected to the statement of the district attorney as prejudicial and calculated to cause the jury to believe that he did not want them to have the map because it might bear witness or give evidence against him. Held, that the bill was insufficient to properly present the matter for review. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

29. — Rulings on evidence.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 938, 939.

TIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Where, in a criminal prosecution, a bill of exceptions merely sets out the evidence and states that the same was immaterial, it is too general to require its consideration: Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 56; James v. State, 41 App. 19, 61 S. W. 908; Fifer v. State, 64 App. 203, 141 S. W. 983.

The bill must show not only that the confession was offered, but that it was admitted, and it must set out the confession as introduced. Stroube v. State, 49 App. 845, 61 S. W. 897.
A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence must show that the evidence was admitted and that it was, at the time, objected to by defendant. Holder v. State, 55 App. 19, 29 S. W. 786.

A bill of exceptions to the opinion of a witness should show that the witness was not an expert. Issacs v. State, 56 App. 58, 38 S. W. 40.

A bill of exceptions for error in questioning defendant should show his answer.

A bill of exceptions which shows that defendant was taken to a saloon, shown a watch and asked if he had let a third party have the watch, and stated that he made no attempts to connect the weapon taken from the burglarized house; held, too indefinite to demand consideration. Moore v. State, 39 App. 266, 45 S. W. 899.

A bill of exceptions to confessions made while under arrest must set out the confessions and statements made. Dement v. State, 39 App. 271, 45 S. W. 917.

The term „incapable and irrelevant” is without meaning, when used alone in a bill of exceptions objection to evidence, and such a bill will not be considered. Peoples v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 72.

Where the bill of exceptions, complaining of the court’s action in permitting the state to prove accused’s testimony on the examining trial over accused’s objection that he was under arrest at the time and was not warned, did not show whether the testimony was taken in the examining trial, or whether it was a statement made by accused after due warning, it would be presumed that the court ruled correctly, and that it was the sworn testimony of accused that was offered in evidence and hence admission of evidence was under arrest and no warning was given. Kirkpatrick v. State, 57 App. 17, 121 S. W. 511.

Bill of exceptions setting out objections to testimony of accused’s wife on cross-examination as not limited to a cross-examination of her direct testimony, but stating nothing to show that it was not so limited, cannot be considered. Ferguson v. State, 57 App. 265, 122 S. W. 553.

In a burglary prosecution, accused’s bill of exceptions recited that the state offered a confession in evidence, to which accused objected, on the ground that the confession was not true in fact; that accused was not warned as provided by statute, but was compelled by force and violence to sign it, which confession was admitted in evidence. Held, that the exception to the admission of the confession was not so specifically stating the ground of the objection not being verified as facts. Malley v. State, 58 App. 425, 125 S. W. 599.

A bill of exceptions, reciting that exceptions were taken to the exhibition of a hat to the jury on the ground that it had not been introduced in evidence, but stating nothing to show that the hat had not been introduced in evidence, with no certification to the truth of the exceptions taken, nor to the grounds of the exception, is insufficient. Green v. State, 58 App. 428, 126 S. W. 890.

Two cases were brought against accused for violation of the liquor laws, and both were submitted to the court. In the first case accused was found not guilty; and in the second case, was found guilty, and he urged on appeal that the court considered the evidence introduced in the first case in arriving at his conclusion in the second case, but the court in approving the bill of exceptions stated that he considered only the evidence introduced in the second case in deciding it. Held, that error was not shown. McAdams v. State, 59 App. 86, 126 S. W. 1156.

Where, in a prosecution for assault on a city marshal who had arrested accused’s father, the bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence to the facts and circumstances of the arrest stated as a ground of objection that accused was not present at the arrest, but it is not stated as a fact in the bill that accused was absent at the time of the arrest, the ground of the exception to the evidence cannot be considered. Marsden v. State, 59 App. 20, 126 S. W. 1160.

The bill of exceptions taken to leading questions should affirmatively show that the leading questions did not fall under any of the exceptions to the general rule excluding leading questions, and should exclude the idea that, under the peculiar circumstances, the court was justified in permitting leading questions. Carter v. State, 59 App. 78, 127 S. W. 215.

A bill of exceptions to the state’s introduction of evidence to support the reputation for truth of a state’s witness, on the theory that it was incompetent for the state to support its witness by evidence of general reputation, was insufficient, in the absence of a showing that the credibility of the witness had not been attacked. Edgar v. State, 59 App. 252, 127 S. W. 1068.

The assignment of error in permitting a question whether witness stated to another that he left home because his father, accused, wanted to get him in difficulties, and in permitting such other to testify that witness made such statement; but the bill of exceptions did not go to the admissibility of such other’s testimony, that the assignment of error was broader than the bill of exceptions, and hence could not be considered. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 125.

In a prosecution for homicide, an objection to the testimony of a witness as to the act of accused in dragging the body of deceased after the shooting cannot be considered on appeal, where the testimony of such witness is not stated in the bill of exceptions, and the bill does not undertake to show what the witness testified to; but the dragging of the body. Canon v. State, 59 App. 562, 129 S. W. 141.

In a prosecution for homicide, a bill of exceptions recited that the state pronounced to a witness the question “How did the defendant appear to look to you?” and that to this question appellant objected, and asked that the witness be required to tell what the defendant did and describe the expression of his face, and any other thing that the defendant did, and let the jury say how that appeared. The ruling of the court on this bill was as follows: “Allowed and ordered filed, with the show that the purpose of this evidence was to show that the witness was excited, and such fact was elicited by the question. There was no other way to show it unless the question had been put in a leading shape, or nearly so.” Held, that the bill of exceptions was not sufficient to show that accused was prejudiced by the ruling of the court. Carson v. State, 59 App. 296, 128 S. W. 114.

The bill of exceptions recited that a certain statement, testified to as having been made by accused, was made some weeks before the homicide for which accused was tried, that accused was under arrest for carrying a pistol at the time, and was in the justice court, and the pistol-carrying charge had been dismissed or by his pleading guilty to a disturbance of the peace. Held, that the bill of exceptions showed that accused had been discharged from the pistol-carrying charge when the object of the statement was made. Lane v. State, 59 App. 296, 128 S. W. 352.

Memoranda headed "Defendant's Bills of Exceptions," subscribed "S. of F. p. 7 (Witness G.)", containing disconnected questions and answers, and showing objections to testimony, rulings thereon, and exceptions by such recitals, as, "Counsel for plaintiff: Questions or objections herefore presented and answered are insufficient, and present nothing for review." Romquillo v. State, 60 App. 27, 139 S. W. 338.

A ground of objection to the admission of evidence which amounts to the statement of a fact as the ground, and which is not verified by the bill of exceptions, cannot be considered. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 30, 129 S. W. 1199.

A mere statement, as a ground of objection to proof of a conversation of a witness with a third person that accused was absent, is not equivalent to a finding that accused was not present, and a bill of exceptions complaining of the evidence must show as a fact that accused was not present. Jones v. State, 59 App. 589, 139 S. W. 1118.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of questions put to accused by the county attorney, which does not point out any error, and which fails to show accused's answers, if any, cannot be considered on appeal. Ellis v. State, 59 App. 630, 130 S. W. 171.

An exception to a question put to prosecuting witness is not shown to have been well taken; it being impossible to say from the bill whether she had or had not already testified as she did in answer to such question. Beeson v. State, 60 App. 39, 130 S. W. 1099.

A witness was asked, in a homicide case, whether he knew of any accident that happened to accused, in which he got a lock on his head, and answered, "Well, I did not see the lock. There was no answer to the question. The bill of exceptions did not have been, or the answer would have given the witness something regarding the matter. Held, that the bill of exceptions did not show the proper error, was incomplete, and would not be considered. Coffey v. State, 60 App. 72, 131 S. W. 216.

On a trial for homicide, the wife of accused, having been asked on cross-examination if she did not hear her husband curse accused, and having replied that he did not utter the words attributed to him, was asked on redirect examination whether he had cursed, to which question accused objected unless he be permitted to contradict the anticipated answer. Held, that overruling the objection was not shown to be error, on a bill of exceptions not showing what the specific objection was, or that accused offered evidence that witness had heard her husband swear. Bradley v. State, 60 App. 298, 132 S. W. 483.

On appeal from a conviction of cattle theft, a bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of evidence of a witness that accused told him that he, accused, had killed the yearling, on the ground that his testimony was a confession while under arrest, and in custody, especially where qualified by the court with the statement that accused was not under arrest at the time. Hinsley v. State, 59 App. 555, 132 S. W. 779.

Where, on a trial for murder, no objection was interposed to the evidence that decedent left home about 6 o'clock in the morning of the day of the killing, and the court left it to the jury to perform specified work to perform, and the testimony in the case, an objection to evidence relating to the time of his expected return on the ground that it was immaterial did not present an objection to the evidence reviewable on appeal. Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 534, 132 S. W. 783.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of evidence on a trial for perjury committed by accused while testifying for a defendant in a civil action in justice's court, which recites that the justice testified that he was a justice and was familiar with the records in his court, that same were kept by him and in his possession but that he did not have the docket with him, and that the court permitted the justice to testify as to the contents of certain records in a civil suit that had been pending in his court notwithstanding the objection of accused that the records were the best evidence, and which is approved with the explanation that the justice testified that there was such a civil action on his docket, that it was tried by him without a jury, and that accused appeared as a witness for defendant, and that the justice rendered judgment for defendant because of the testimony of accused, does not show any error, because it does not state what records were admitted in evidence, and because it does not negative the fact that matters essential to show jurisdiction of the justice were not in fact admitted. Green v. State, 60 App. 690, 132 S. W. 806.

The grounds of objection to the admission of evidence stated at the time of the making of the objection thereto should be incorporated in the bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of the evidence, and a mere statement, "to which ruling of the court in admitting the testimony defendant objects," is insufficient. Ross v. State, 61 App. 12, 133 S. W. 658.

A bill of exceptions to admission in evidence of a bullet removed from decedent's body insufficiently raises an objection that it did not appear that accused used a pistol of that kind of bullets, where the bill does not state what kind of bullets, where the evidence did not show he had such a pistol or was not the only person who shot. Butler v. State, 61 App. 133, 134 S. W. 230.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, a bill of exceptions to exclusion of witnesses who had watched the house frequently, and had seen no one enter or leave and nothing improper, is insufficient to show error, where the time to which the testimony relates is not shown. Thompson v. State, 61 App. 250, 134 S. W. 350.

Admission of testimony of another offense was not reversible error where the bills of exceptions do not contain sufficient other testimony to show error, and it might have been admitted to prove motive. Barrego v. State, 61 App. 625, 136 S. W. 47.

Where the bill of exceptions does not state what the conversations were which are claimed to be hearsay, the question cannot be reviewed. Wilson v. State, 61 App. 625, 136 S. W. 47.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence on cross-examination, which may have been legitimate for certain purposes, is unavailing, when so indefinite that it cannot be said therefrom whether admission of the evidence was erroneous, and how it was injurious. Leggett v. State, 62 App. 99, 136 S. W. 784.

Where a bill of exceptions fails to show the contents of an opinion and briefs read to the trial court in a criminal case, they cannot be held to be improper. Germany v. State, 62 App. 876, 137 S. W. 130, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 477.

A bill of exception complaining of the exclusion of evidence that several persons who signed accused's bail bond were jurors in a former trial of the same case, which was offered as corroborative evidence of the accused's good reputation, is insufficient when it does not show that the persons signing were jurors, or that accused's reputation had been attacked. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 554, 137 S. W. 356.

A bill of exception complaining that the trial court refused to allow the defense to introduce the testimony of a prosecutrix that the defendant was the person who ever had intercourse with her by proving that she had said that another had had intercourse with her cannot be considered, where it failed to show that she had testified that the defendant was the only person with whom she had ever had intercourse. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 448, 137 S. W. 356.

Where certain evidence objected to was admitted on the promise of the county attorney to connect with it, and in qualifying the bill of exceptions the court ruled the testimony was connected not only with the case but was made by the accused, but by the testimony of another witness, it would be presumed on appeal that the court's modification stated the fact and that the testimony was connected, though the bill of exceptions did not show how the same had been made. Henzen v. State, 62 App. 926, 137 S. W. 1124.

An objection to testimony as being irrelevant and prejudicial is too general to be considered. Wilson v. State, 63 App. 81, 138 S. W. 409.

There being exceptions to the rule that, where the sale for which defendant is being tried was made out positively and clearly, evidence of other sales is not admissible, the bill of exceptions to evidence of other sales should exclude the circumstances under which it might be admissible. James v. State, 63 App. 75, 138 S. W. 612.

A bill of exceptions reciting that defendant made objection to any and all evidence introduced by the state of other sales than that for which he was being tried is insufficient for not showing by proper averments either and different sales were improperly admitted. James v. State, 63 App. 75, 138 S. W. 612.

The bill of exceptions reciting that defendant objected to the ruling sustaining an objection to his testimony, because the question, if truthfully answered, would have brought a certain answer, is insufficient because not setting out the answer which would have been. James v. State, 63 App. 75, 138 S. W. 612.

A bill of exceptions merely showing that on a prosecution for sale of liquor on a certain day of a certain month the state introduced evidence of a sale in that month, to which defendant objected because of no specific date being fixed, is insufficient inasmuch as not only generally may be objected to prior to presentment of the indictment, and within limitations, but subsequent evidence may have fixed the date of the sale testified to as that on which the state relied. James v. State, 63 App. 75, 138 S. W. 612.

Where a bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence of a minor, objected to on the ground that the witness did not know the pains and penalties of perjury failed to show the testimony given by the witness, but merely recited that he was allowed to testify as to all the circumstances surrounding the killing, it was insufficient to authorize a review of the question on appeal. Zunago v. State, 63 App. 58, 138 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 665.

Where the bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of testimony to impeach a witness for accused does not set forth the testimony of the witness, nor show that a proper predicate was not laid for the impeachment, then that accused was not present at the time the witness made the statement proved by the impeaching witness, the bill does not show error in the admission of the testimony. Hickey v. State, 62 App. 568, 138 S. W. 1051.

Bills of exception to the admission of evidence are insufficient, where they fail to show the testimony in the case. Webb v. State, 63 App. 207, 140 S. W. 96.

On exceptions on appeal from a conviction for a breach of the peace, which shows the admission of evidence to a certain effect and then sets out a statement from the witnesses' testimony, is insufficient, in that it does not inform the court as to what the other testimony was, so as to show whether or not the statement was admissible, and presents nothing for review. Robertson v. State, 63 App. 248, 140 S. W. 103.

To obtain review, a bill of exceptions, complaining of the erroneous admission of a confession, must contain the confession. Joines v. State, 63 App. 416, 140 S. W. 1003.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, defendant objected to the testimony of a certain physician as to the examination of the prosecutrix, because the examination was too remote, a bill of exceptions, which failed to state when the examination was had, did not show error. Smith v. State, 63 App. 183, 140 S. W. 1096.

A bill of exceptions to the exclusion of a witness' opinion as to prosecutrix's age was insufficient, where it did not state the proof on the subject, so as to show whether, for any contingency, the witness' best judgment could have been given. Smith v. State, 63 App. 183, 140 S. W. 1096.

In a prosecution for rape, a bill of exceptions to the exclusion of the contents of a letter offered on the issue of prosecutrix's age held insufficient. Smith v. State, 63 App. 183, 140 S. W. 1096.

Bills of exceptions to the overruling of objections to questions asked defendant's witnesses on cross-examination are insufficient, where they fail to show what the proper questions should have been to enable the appellate court to determine the question of admissibility. Wright v. State, 62 App. 429, 140 S. W. 1105.

Bills of exceptions to the exclusion of questions asking a witness whether he had not been convicted of certain misdemeanors, not involving moral turpitude, were insufficient, where they did not state that the witnesses would have sworn to such convictions, but, on the contrary, indicated that he might deny the same. Wright v. State, 63 App. 429, 140 S. W. 1105.

A bill of exceptions on appeal from a conviction for an assault with intent to commit rape, which recites that the prosecutrix testified as to whom she talked with first after the occurrence, that defendant's counsel, upon an objection, was permitted to ask questions of the witness as to that point, and that, after asking such questions, defendant objected to any proof of any complaint made by witness on the ground that it was not voluntarily made, but was in answer to questions asked by her friends, and was no part of the res gestae, without a definite showing as to the voluntary character of the complaint, is not sufficient to require an affirmative declarator of the objection. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

A bill of exceptions on appeal from a conviction for a assault with intent to commit rape to the testimony of a witness that, when the prosecutrix made complaint to her and another, she was crying, is not sufficient to require consideration. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

Bills of exceptions on appeal from a conviction for assault with intent to rape, which merely show the testimony of the prosecutrix, without showing that the witness was permitted to give the details of the assault or whether the person to whom she made complaint, and which, on objection to the testimony of the person to whom the complaint was made, do not set out the evidence of the witness, are insufficient. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

A bill of exceptions on appeal from a conviction with intent to commit rape which sets out testimony of the state as to the condition of the mind and appearance of the prosecuting witness when she went, after the ride, to her own home, without stating that defendant's counsel attempted to have her testify that she was pleasant and agreeable to the accused, and that the witness did not sufficiently state the evidence to authorize consideration on appeal. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

Where testimony introduced might be admissible for a certain purpose, a bill of exceptions which fails to negative the fact that it was admissible for that purpose, is incomplete and cannot be considered. Chance v. State, 63 App. 602, 141 S. W. 1112.

A bill of exceptions must be complete in itself, and a court will not look to other parts of the record in order to determine whether testimony is admissible, so that, which would not be improved which would be improved by other testimony, a bill of exceptions, which fails to show whether the state's attorney followed up the matter, is incomplete, and the court will not review the exception thereto. Chance v. State, 63 App. 602, 141 S. W. 1112.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the allowance of a question asked a witness as to whether he could state from the report of a gun the position he occupied between decedent and accused the direction decedent fired the gun, is insufficient, where the court may infer that the witness was looking directly at decedent or any other fact of which the witness would enable the witness to testify positively from personal knowledge. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 393, 141 S. W. 399.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the admission in evidence in papers in a civil suit that does not set out the papers or their substance, but which merely recites that they are irrelevant and calculated to prejudice the jury, is insufficient. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 393, 141 S. W. 399.

In a prosecution for forgery, a bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony, which merely set out the question and answer and noted the objection thereto, with the reason for the objection as presented in the trial court, was insufficient. Howard v. State (Criminal Proceeding) 113 S. W. 176.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the allowance of a question asked a witness as to whether he believed accused intended to defraud him, giving as a reason for the propriety of the answer which would have been elicited that the indictment charged "that the forgery was done to injure and defraud the parties," (meaning the witness) is insufficient, where the indictment merely charged that the forgery was intended to "injure and defraud." Howard v. State (Criminal Proceeding) 148 S. W. 115.
In a prosecution for forgery, a bill of exceptions to the introduction of checks in evidence which merely observes that the defendant objected to their admission because they were not connected with and threw no light on the transaction, because the state’s witness did not remember whether at the time the checks purported to have been given by his son he had forbade him to use his name, and because unavoidable and inadmissible to the rights of the defendant, is wholly insufficient to present any matter attempted to be raised. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

A bill of exceptions to the introduction in evidence of “all of the filed papers in said cause,” such as indentures, subpoenas, bonds, attachment,” etc., on the ground that they were immaterial, but not containing a copy of any of the papers, does not show reversible error. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 582.

The objection was sentenced in a prosecution for assault to kill in error in permitting accused to be asked whether he and his wife were at the time living together as husband and wife, and whether he had cursed, abused, and ran her home, because such evidence was immaterial and irrelevant, and that it was error to permit the state to inquire into a matter between the accused, and his wife in which the person assaulted was not interested, and because it appeared that, if accused and his wife were separated, they had separated long before accused’s trouble with the person assaulted. Held that, in absence of a further showing in the bill as to the facts, it could not be said that the trial court erred in admitting the evidence; it being presumed that there was no error unless the bill allows it. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 582.

A bill of exceptions which is not full and explicit so that matters attempted to be presented may be comprehended without recourse to inference, and does not show the state of the evidence so as to show whether the evidence objected to was admissible, is insufficient, as it cannot be aided by the statement of facts. Harris v. State, 64 App. 694, 144 S. W. 272.

A bill of exceptions in a murder case, which states merely that a witness for the state was asked if accused, her son, had not given her a beating of which she informed deceased, and the answer thereto, with the objection that it was immaterial, without showing any other evidence in the case to present the question raised by the objection. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 552.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, a bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony of the sister-in-law of the deceased and mother of the defendant, in answer to a question whether she had told the defendant that she had heard, merely shows the question, the objection made to it and the answer, without any showing of the other evidence of the witness or others, and any attempt to show how the testimony was prejudicial to the defendant, is insufficient to enable the court to determine whether the admission of the testimony was prejudicial. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 552.

A bill of exceptions on appeal from a criminal prosecution, which merely sets out evidence, which is objected to, with an objection, that the admission, or its refusal, is insufficient to present the matter for review. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 252.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the admission of testimony on cross-examination because involving a matter not brought out on the direct examination, which does not show the testimony on the direct examination, does not present reversible error. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 255.

A bill of exceptions to testimony of a grand juror showing certain testimony before the grand jury, but not who testified before the grand jury, is insufficient. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 598.

A bill of exceptions, on an appeal from a conviction for permitting a theatrical performance to be given on Sunday, which merely states the facts. Held that, in describing a missionary scene shown at the performance, said, “And it was quite a nice little play,” was not sufficient in its specification of error to the admission of evidence to require consideration. Oliver v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 665.

Where a bill of exceptions to the admission of certain evidence did not show in what connection it was introduced, but only that it was objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant and inadmissible because it indicated the commission of a misdemeanor by parties in no way connected with the offense and in a county where the court had no jurisdiction, etc., it was too indefinite to be considered, since the grounds of objection could not be considered as a statement of facts. Graves v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 961.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, a bill of exceptions, reciting that the state offered in evidence a brand of one M., recorded in the brand book of the county, wherein defendant objected to its admission, because, when recorded, the law required the county clerk to designate the part of the animal on which it should be placed, and the record did not indicate where the animal should be branded, and that the record further disclosed that five brands were recorded at that time, when the law allowed a recordation of only one, and that the objections were overruled, and excepted, is fatally flawed, and is insufficient to pass on the question involved. Baker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 667.

Where a judgment of conviction of the defendant of a similar offense was final on its face, and he objected to its admission in evidence upon the ground that there was no showing that it had not been appealed from or that a new trial had not been granted, it was incumbent on him to show by the bill of exceptions that there had been an appeal taken or a new trial granted in such former prosecution. Gould v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 172.

A bill of exceptions, complaining that accused’s wife was cross-examined on matters not brought out by him on her direct examination, presents no question for review, where it does not show what was the wife’s direct testimony. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 946.

In a prosecution for theft, one of the bills of exceptions showed that while the witness was being examined, he was asked if his son and his son were partners, or whether the goods stolen belonged to the witness individually, that defendant objected, on the ground that it called for the conclusion of a witness and was highly prejudicial to defendant's rights, and that the witness answer him individually, and not to his son. Another bill stated that the son was asked whether he and his father were partners, and whether it was not a fact that the witness had no interest in the store, that the goods were taken, but that they belonged to the individual, which was objected to for the same reasons as above: that the court overruled the objections. Held, that such bills were not sufficient to render inadmissible the ruling excepted to. Hatfield v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 256.

In a prosecution for rape, where the indictment charged what it was by force, and also that the prosecutrix was an imbecile, a bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony as to the mental condition of the prosecutrix, after the prosecutrix had testified that she was forcibly ravished, and another as to her competency to testify, was insufficient to present any matter for review. Hubbard v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 260.

A bill of exceptions, which shows that, while the state was making out its case, it introduced witnesses to contradict the voluntary statement by accused on his examining trial, does not show error in the admission of such testimony, where it does not give the voluntary statement nor the testimony to contradict it. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 276.

A bill of exceptions, reciting that a skirt which deceased was wearing when killed was exhibited to the jury and offered in evidence, is insufficient to raise for review the admissibility of the skirt, where the bill does not recite that it was actually received in evidence. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

A bill of exceptions to an appeal on a motion for a new trial, refusing to sustain a motion for a new trial, on the ground that the defendant's objection was insufficiency of the evidence, where it was proved that the defendant had been convicted of a similar crime, in another division of the same county, was insufficient. Eddins v. State (App.) 148 S. W. 585.

A bill of exceptions, on appeal from a conviction for robbery with firearms shows that the witness for the state was permitted to testify that defendant's objection that on the night of the alleged robbery he had a conversation with his brother, the person alleged to have been robbed, and that his brother had then told him that defendant had taken the money from him by threatening him with a pistol, which the trial judge, on approval, qualified by stating that defendant had called a witness who testified that on the night of the alleged robbery the state's witness told him that his brother had told him that he had been robbed by defendant in a game of cards, and wanted him to go and make defendant give the money back to his brother. Held, that the bill was insufficient. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 593.

A bill of exceptions, on appeal from a conviction for the theft of cattle, showed an objection to evidence of a deputy sheriff that in ascertaining defendant's identity he made search and inquiry and sent instructions to other police officers. Held, that as presented the bill showed no reversible error, since the court could not tell therefrom whether the evidence was admissible or not, or its effect on the case. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 703.

Where a bill of exceptions does not show whether the evidence complained of was permitted to go to the jury, it does not present error. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 703.

In a prosecution for cattle theft, a bill of exceptions, complaining of the admission of a brand on the ground that it was not the brand of the prosecuting witness, must be overruled, where the court approved the bill with qualifications and referred to the statement of facts for the evidence, wherein it appeared that the prosecuting witness had inherited the brand as the only heir of his father. Dugat v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 789.

A bill of exceptions to the overruling of an objection to a question is insufficient where it does not state the answer given. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 891.

In a prosecution for homicide, bills of exception to a refusal to strike out testimony that, after the first search of accused's trunk, a truss and an undershirt with blood on it were found, the searches taking place after accused was in prison, are insufficient to present any matter for review, not showing how the finding of those articles connected accused with the offense. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1674.

In a prosecution for murder, a bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony, merely showing that over accused's objection the state asked a witness whether, when he was in a certain person's office, he did not state that deceased was about the same size as that person, presents nothing for review, not showing that the testimony was material. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1674.

A statement in a bill of exception to the allowance of an objection that the evidence of the objection made that no proper predicate had been laid is not sufficient to show that it was the fact that no predicate had been laid. Douglass v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1688.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of the testimony of a witness on the trial of an accomplice to a forgery of checks that she remembered the circumstances of the checks being passed by a young woman, and the young woman's present residing in the store before the bills were passed, that it was not proper to allow the woman to the store and talked to her, but that witness could not identify the man on the ground that the testimony did not identify accused as the man who talked with the woman in the store, and it was irrelevant as evidence against accused, and that the testimony could not be received to corroborate the woman forging the check was insufficient to require the appellate court to review the ruling.

Wrenn v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 136.

In a prosecution for sales of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, a bill of exceptions complaining of the admission of testimony by a witness that he got a pint of whisky for a sick man, taken by itself, shows no error. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151
S. W. 296.

In a prosecution for violating the liquor laws, a bill of exceptions reserved to the reading of an entry in a stub book kept by the officer issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor shows no error, where it does not show that the stub book or its contents were introduced in evidence. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151
S. W. 296.

On appeal from a conviction for making sales of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, bills of exceptions stating that defendant expected to quarrel with witness and was issued defendant a liquor license on the ground that the license would be the best evidence, but that the question was answered in the affirmative and to testimony that he issued a license to one J. F. W., although the evidence had not shown J. F. W., and accused to be the same person, are insufficient to require a re-

On appeal from a conviction for unlawfully carrying a pistol, a bill of exceptions stated that a witness for the state testified that he saw a pistol in accused's pocket and told him he had better leave himself or he would get into trouble.
Appellant denied this, and objected to the testimony, on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and calculated to prejudice the jury against him, since he was not being prosecuted for misbehaving himself or disturbing the peace, but had pleaded not guilty. The court qualified the bill by stating that accused had denied such statement, and that it was admitted as a part of the res gestae.

 Held, that the bill was so meager in stating the status of the case as not to show Exceptions stating that certain testimony was leading, too general, and prejudicial," which failed to show in what connection the evidence was ofered, is too vague to present a question for review. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 151

S. W. 1552.

A bill of exceptions after conviction for perjury in having falsely testified in his wife's action for divorce that he had not had intercourse with her before their marrige, showing that the former wife had testified for the state, and explained why she gave false answers in her deposition filed by defendant in his original suit against her for divorce, and objecting thereto for irrelevancy and on the ground of a confidential communication between husband and wife, was insufficient to require consideration of such objections. Spearman v. State (Cr. App.) 152

A bill of exceptions in a prosecution for perjury for having testified in his his wife's action to set aside a divorce obtained by him and for a divorce that he had not had intercourse with her before their marriage, stating that the wife testified that, while in another state after the decree in his divorce action, defendant met her, and told her that the court had granted him the divorce, and that, if it valid, he would remarry her, and objecting thereto on the ground that the evidence was immaterial and irrelevant, that his divorce was set aside for fraud, and that any such conversation was privileged as a communication between husband and wife, was insufficient to require consideration of such objections. Spearman v.
State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 915, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243.

A bill of exceptions which does not point out any specific part of documentary evidence, or objectionable, and which does not present the question of its admission, so the court can know its bearing in the case, is insufficient. Spearman

Bills of exception merely stating that, on the trial of defendant for carrying a plug were over his objection, he objecting to the ruling, to testify that they saw him with a pistol before a certain day, some of them three or four months before that day, present no question for review; they stating no ground of objection and giving no reason why the testimony was not admissi-

A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence in a prosecution for assault with intent to rob, which merely showed by quoting the questions that witness was asked whether the assaulted person identified the three men who held him up and answered that he did, and further stated, in answer to questions, that he identified accused as the person who pointed the gun at him, was insufficient to show error, not showing who the witness was, or the circumstances of the identification, etc. Wingate v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1078.

Where a bill of exceptions was reserved for allowing the introduction of a letter written by defendant, but no grounds of objection are stated, and part of the contents are admissible as showing an attempt to get a witness to leave the

A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal of the court to permit defendant, on trial for seduction, to prove that witnesses had heard that third persons had accused prosecutrix of improper relations with others than defendant, as qualified by the court's showing that the witnesses in fact tested the occasion, not show error; the court indicating to defendant that he could prove the character of prosecutrix by general reputation or by specific acts. Walls v. State (Cr.
App.) 153 S. W. 128.

A bill of exception to the effect that the state was permitted to prove by certain witnesses that defendant's wife, who had testified in his favor at the trial, had made a written statement at the inquest to the effect that deceased was unarmed, which contradicted her testimony at the trial, were too general to require the scene of the homicide will not be reviewed, where they stated the objections made, and were not approved of the facts on which the objection was based, and did not state sufficient facts surrounding the matter to show error. Mims v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 321.

A bill of exception complaining of a question, on a trial for adultery, as to how long accused and the woman lived together, on the ground that it was leading, and of the answer that they lived together three months, on the ground that it was a conclusion, which did not give the status of the case, the other testimony, or anything except the question and answer, was insufficient. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 268.

On a prosecution for homicide claimed to have been committed in defense of accused's son, a bill of exceptions reciting that the state was permitted to prove that a weapon at the time of the difficulty between accused and deceased, and that he saw accused's son secreting a dirk knife or hollow ground razor, which was objected to and an exception taken, was insufficient to require the court to pass upon the admissibility of the evidence on appeal. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Where evidence on a trial for homicide that accused's son in whose defense he claimed the homicide was committed was seen to secrete a knife was objected to only "unless it could be shown that defendant was present," and the qualification of witness as to the exceptions thereto stated that it occurred within a few seconds after the killing, and that the testimony showed that accused was then standing only a few feet away, and that he and his son walked away together, no error was shown. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Where the connection of a question asked on accused's cross-examination, with his other evidence, was not shown by a bill of exceptions to a ruling permitting the question, the bill was incomplete. Nesbit v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence which the admission of which the admissibility of which was not out the questions asked or answers cannot be reviewed. Nesbit v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 203.

On appeal from a conviction of burglary, committed by shooting into a house with a rifle, to which he had previously lived, who had "kept" it, and accused, a bill of exceptions, stating that a question asked the prosecuting witness as to why accused wanted her to live with him, and whether he wanted her to sleep with him, was leading, failed to show that a leading question was not permissible. Gradington v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 219.

Where the trial court would not permit appellant to introduce a judgment and record, he should copy them in his bill of exceptions, to their exclusion. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 262.

Bills of exception to the exclusion of a question to a witness whom accused's counsel were evidently trying to discredit, which did not show any of the surrounding circumstances, and to the admission of alleged opinion evidence which also failed to show any of the surrounding circumstances, are insufficient to require review. Christie v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 541.

A bill of exceptions to the refusal to exclude a question whether the witness had made a certain statement cannot be considered, where it also shows that the witness said he could not remember anything about that. Davis v. State, 70 App. 37, 155 S. W. 546.

A bill of exceptions on appeal from a conviction for horse theft, which showed that while prosecutor was testifying and was being cross-examined he was asked whether accused had brought a horse that accused had possession of the alleged stolen property before the finding of the indictment, that the court sustained an objection to the question, and that, if the witness had testified he would have shown that the civil action was still pending, was insufficient to require the court on appeal to review the ruling. Halle v. State, 70 App. 59, 156 S. W. 637.

In a prosecution for homicide with a pistol, a bill of exceptions, reciting that while the witness was upon the stand, after it had developed that he had not seen the body of deceased until the day after the homicide, and there had been no evidence introduced that the condition of the wounds was then the same as immediately subsequent to the shooting, he was permitted to testify over accused's objection as to the manner in which the balls entered and left the body of deceased, and that an opinion based on such condition was immaterial and prejudicial, sufficiently presents for review the question of the competency of such evidence. Roberts v. State, 70 App. 297, 156 S. W. 651.

A bill of exception for prosecution with an assault to kill, reciting that prosecuting witness testified to a settlement for cotton purchased, and witness mentioned to accused that he owed him for picking cotton and "it made him mad," and that defendant objected to the quoted evidence on the ground that it was a conclusion, and excepted to the overruling of objection. Held not sufficient to authorize a view of any error in admitting the evidence. Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 183, 157 S. W. 157.

A bill of exceptions reciting that one of accused's witnesses was asked on cross-examination if he had not been indicted for murder, and when, presents no accused and the woman lived together, not showing that such evidence was not admissible for impeachment, and it appearing from the record that the witness in question was one of accused's attorneys, and that he stated he did not object to going into the details of the whole transaction. Pouler v. State, 70 App. 197, 157 S. W. 166.

A bill of exceptions reciting that in a prosecution for perjury based on false testimony by accused that he was an infant, a witness for the state testified that in a certain year he was thrown in company with accused, and that his residence was in the county, pretexts no error, whereas it showed that the court charged the jury to disregard testimony that accused was in the jail with the witness, and the witness was only allowed to testify as to the length of his ac­quittal with accused. Poulter v. State, 70 App. 187, 157 S. W. 158.

In a prosecution for forgery a money order, a bill of exception reserved to the introduction of a money order, which was objected to on the ground that the verbiage did not correspond with that charged in the indictment, is insufficient, for the bill should have referred to the variance and specified wherein it existed. Cheeseborough v. State, 70 App. 612, 157 S. W. 761.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony and to leading questions must contain sufficient matter to show that the testimony was improper and that the alleged leading questions did not fall within any of the exceptions. Rodriguez v. State, 71 App. 108, 158 S. W. 537.

A bill assigning error in the admission of testimony over the objection of the accused, is, if required about occurrence, on inspired at the accused, is incomplete, since the objection does not amount to a statement of the fact that the accused was not present. Wilson v. State, 71 App. 330, 158 S. W. 1114.

Where the fact of accused's former conviction of crime was brought out before the jury, a bill of exceptions to the action of the court in allowing the prosecu­tor to ask the questions eliciting the evidence shows no error where it appeared that the court ordered the evidence stricken and disregarded by the jury and qual­ified the bill of exceptions by a statement that objection for new trial the ju­rors said they disregarded the evidence, for, where illegal evidence has been ad­mitted and then withdrawn by the court, no reversible error is committed unless some injury is shown. Vick v. State, 71 App. 59, 159 S. W. 59.

A more statement in a bill of exceptions that the admission of incompetent evi­dence, which was subsequently stricken, was prejudicial is not sufficient to show that fact, but the manner of the harm should be shown. Vick v. State, 71 App. 59, 159 S. W. 59.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal to permit accused on cross-ex­amination of a witness to ask if he had ever committed robbery and of his con­finement to inquiries regarding thefts and burglaries, because the inquiry was pertinent to impeach the witness and, because accused objected on certain grounds and then and there excepted, were insufficient to require or authorize the court to consider them. Kaufman v. State, 70 App. 478, 159 S. W. 58.

A bill of exceptions reciting that witnesses for the state over accused's objection were permitted to testify to certain facts, to which accused objected on certain grounds and then and there excepted, were insufficient to require or authorize the court to consider them. Kaufman v. State, 70 App. 458, 159 S. W. 58.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence, reciting the questions and answers of respective witnesses, extending through five pages of typewritten matter, and followed by numerous objections, was insufficient to require review on appeal. Dugat v. State, 72 App. 59, 160 S. W. 376.

The incompetency of a witness to testify could not be reviewed, where no evi­dence as to his incompetency accompanied the record. Ramos v. State, 71 App. 484, 160 S. W. 389.

In the absence of bill of exceptions or statement of facts showing that a cer­tain witness testified, and what he testified, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot determine whether there was any prejudicial error in the examination of such witness or the admission of her evidence. Daly v. State, 72 App. 551, 162 S. W. 1552.

Where, in a rape prosecution, the evidence of the girl, the prosecuting witness, constituted 48 typewritten pages, and defendant in one bill objected to a whole mass of the testimony, without pointing out any specific error, the bill presented no error; a part of the evidence being admissible. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 162 S. W. 67.

To show prejudice from exclusion of defendant's question on cross-examina­tion of a state witness, to show his animosity to defendant, whether certain facts were, or the bill of exceptions should state that the defendant did not have the facts were, or that, if he did not so testify, proof would be offered that they were. Davis v. State, 72 App. 49, 163 S. W. 412.

The bill of exceptions does not show prejudice in the sustaining of objection to the question asked, on cross-examination, of one who had testified to deceased's good reputation, if it was not common, current report that deceased was keeping two certain women; it not stating witness would have testified such was the re­port, but stating that defendant expected or hoped so to show. Davis v. State, 73 App. 49, 163 S. W. 412.

In a homicide case a bill of exceptions, complaining of the admission of evi­dence of threats by accused not directed against any particular person, was insuf­ficient to require consideration, where it did not state the facts surrounding the testimony, nor show why or in what way it was inadmissible. Hila v. State, 72 App. 17, 163 S. W. 717.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of a statement of facts in a former trial of accused containing his former testimony, which bill did not show that it was not agreed by the parties that the said admitted testimony had not been agreed to as the testimony of accused on the former trial, nor show that no witnesses were introduced who testified that the accused had given such testimony on the point and did not by any means exclude the possibility that the testimony was not proven in some of the methods prescribed by law to render it admissi­ble, was insufficient to show error. Best v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 992.

A bill of exceptions is too general for consideration if it includes a number of statements, some of which are clearly admissible. Link v. State, 73 App. 82, 164 S. W. 937.

A bill of exceptions should be clear and pointed, giving the testimony admitted, the objection made, and point out the error in the ruling. Link v. State, 73 App. 82, 164 S. W. 937.
A bill of exceptions stated that the "state introduced in evidence part of a statement of a former trial as agreed on and signed by the state as agreed on and signed by the state and for the defendant and certified as correct by the official stenographer, now absent and living in another state, and approved by the court; that said statement was not signed by defendant; and that it purported to be his testimony on the former trial as above set out, and that he had not. And the defendant showed that he should not be liable to such former trial as above set out, and he stated that he had not so testified; that defendant objected to said statement and testimony for the following reasons: 'It is hearsay, it is contained in the statement of facts agreed by the attorneys,' etc., which objections were overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and tenders his bill of exceptions to be signed and approved and filed as part of the record." Held, that the bill was insufficient. Best v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 997.

In a prosecution for murder, a bill of exceptions that the court erred in admitting testimony tending to show that there was "bad feeling between the Gants [defendant's people]" was too indefinite for review. Gant v. State, 73 App. 279, 165 S. W. 142.

In a prosecution for vagrancy, bills of exceptions that the court erred in excluding testimony that at the time of the offense charged, accused had $49 in his possession, and that for several months prior thereto he had bought groceries from a certain merchant, and paid cash therefor, were insufficient and too meager to be considered on appeal. Branch v. State, 75 App. 471, 165 S. W. 605.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, the admission of evidence that an officer stated to a witness that there was something crooked there, referring to accused's place, was not ground for reversal, where the bill of exceptions did not state facts from which it could be intelligently determined whether or not it was admissible. Cunningham v. State, 73 App. 565, 168 S. W. 241.

A bill of exceptions, complaining of the testimony of a witness testifying without questions being propounded to him, must disclose the testimony given, and especially the part deemed objectionable, or the ruling cannot be reviewed. Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 522.

Where a bill of exceptions in a criminal case complaining of the admission of evidence of a witness' good reputation for truth and veracity, as qualified by the trial judge, showed that a witness was cross-examined as to the making of contradictory statements, but did not show whether such contradictory statements were proved, it did not show that the admission of such evidence was erroneous. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 346.

Where defendant was charged with procuring another to burn his insured house, bill of exceptions complaining of the admission in evidence of the insurance company's policy and its assignment to defendant, over objections that it had not been shown that the insurer had authority to issue the policy or that it was properly executed by an agent, which bills did not contain a statement of the facts which rendered the instruments inadmissible, are not sufficient: the statement of objections made not being a statement of facts. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 122.

In a homicide case, a bill of exceptions complaining of testimony by the wife of deceased that the reason she remained in the home of M. was because he willed it to her, on the ground that the testimony was a conclusion of the witness presents no error, where the court, in approving the bill, explained it by adding that according to deceased and his wife were trespassers in M.'s home, and to rebut this the witness was permitted to testify that she remained there under a claim of right. McGaughey v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 387.

A bill of exceptions to the exclusion of offered evidence, alleging that accused "could not prove certain facts, instead of that he could prove facts, which bills did not contain a statement of the facts which rendered the witness the facts stated, was insufficient. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, a bill of exceptions, showing that the prosecuting witness was allowed, over objection, to state how long after it was after he had purchased the liquor that he told the prosecuting attorney about it, when qualified by the court to show that the defendant's statement was that the prosecuting witness was so intoxicated that he could have no recollection of the transaction, shows no error. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 895.

A bill of exceptions complaining of the refusal to permit the defendant to answer a question as to what was done at a certain time, which does not state the answer which would have been made, but states that it was sought to prove to the defendant and the wife of deceased, who were indicted as accomplices, had made no attempt at that time to induce the principal to commit the crime, shows no error, where defendant did testify fully as to that fact. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

A bill of exceptions in a murder case alleged that the widow of deceased was called by the state and asked if, before defendant killed deceased, during her husband's lifetime, she ever heard him make any threat against defendant, and answered that she had not, to which defendant objected as an attempt to prove deceased's character, because it related to a purported statement by deceased long prior to the killing, and because defendant did not rely on threats a as a provocation. The court overruled the objection, and defendant then and there, the attorneys for the state and for the defendant and certified as correct by the official stenographer, now absent and living in another state, and approved by the court; that said statement was not signed by defendant; and that it purported to be his testimony on the former trial as above set out, and he stated that he had not so testified; that defendant objected to said statement and testimony for the following reasons: 'It is hearsay, it is contained in the statement of facts agreed by the attorneys,' etc., which objections were overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and tenders his bill of exceptions to be signed and approved and filed as part of the record." Held, that the bill was insufficient. Best v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 997.

A bill of exceptions in a murder case alleged that the widow of deceased was called by the state and asked if, before defendant killed deceased, during her husband's entire lifetime, she ever heard him make any threat against defendant, and answered that she had not, to which defendant objected as an attempt to prove deceased's character, because it related to a purported statement by deceased long prior to the killing, and because defendant did not rely on threats as a provocation. The court overruled the objection, and defendant then and there, the attorneys for the state and for the defendant and certified as correct by the official stenographer, now absent and living in another state, and approved by the court; that said statement was not signed by defendant; and that it purported to be his testimony on the former trial as above set out, and he stated that he had not so testified; that defendant objected to said statement and testimony for the following reasons: 'It is hearsay, it is contained in the statement of facts agreed by the attorneys,' etc., which objections were overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and tenders his bill of exceptions to be signed and approved and filed as part of the record." Held, that the bill was insufficient. Best v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 997.
which does not negate the fact that the charges were for felonies or cases involving moral turpitude, shows no error. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1161.

A bill of exceptions, which is the admission of evidence that when deceased's wife came home and found him shot she asked him how he felt, and that he replied that he felt very bad and then embraced and kissed her until she was taken to court, with a statement that it contained only a part of the evidence which was admitted as a predicate for the declarations made by deceased to his wife, is too meager for consideration. Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 779.

A bill of exceptions to evidence is too general for consideration, where it includes a number of statements, some of which are clearly admissible, and there is nothing in the objection pointing out specifically the supposed objectionable parts of the evidence. Zweig v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 747.

On appeal from a conviction, where the bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony over objection failed to set out such testimony, but contained a statement by the court below that such testimony at defendant's request was withdrawn from the jury, who were instructed not to consider it, the bill presented no error; it being impossible to determine whether or not the testimony was such that its withdrawal would not cure error in admitting it unless it was set out in the bill. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1067.

An objection that testimony was irrelevant and immaterial without further specification is no objection, if the testimony was admissible under any theory of the case. Emery v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 764.

Bills of exceptions complaining of the admission of accused's statement on the examining trial given through an interpreter because it did not correctly represent what accused stated did not show that the action of the court was erroneous, where neither the statement nor the substance thereof was copied into the bills. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence simply stating the grounds of objection, but not stating as matters of fact the matters upon which the objections are predicated, is incomplete and insufficient. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

A bill of exceptions reciting that the prosecuting witness was allowed to testify that she had heard that accused, who was charged with performing an abortion on the witness, had performed such operation before, was too meager to warrant a review where nothing else appears. Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 327.

A bill of exceptions, in a seduction case, to the exclusion of questions to the prosecutrix as to when the first act of intercourse occurred, shows no error, where there was no offer that she would have testified it occurred before the marriage promise. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

30. — Rulings relating to instructions.—See notes under art. 743.

31. — Misconduct of jury.—Where the bills of exception do not present the evidence thereof, objections in a motion for new trial that the jury discussed the failure of accused to testify cannot be reviewed. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

32. Allowance of time to prepare bill of exceptions.—See art. 2058, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St., 1914.

Reasonable requests for time to prepare a bill of exceptions should always be granted, and the refusal of such request is error, but is not reversible error, unless it be made to appear that injury probably resulted to the defendant from such refusal. Rosborough v. State, 21 App. 672, 1 S. W. 459; Smith v. State, 19 App. 95; Keen v. State, Id. 618; Brown v. State, 13 App. 59; Knox v. State, Id. 148; Powers v. State, 23 App. 42, 5 S. W. 155.

While counsel for accused is entitled to a proper opportunity in open court to make any objection he desires to the argument of the state's attorney and to renew the exceptions, it was not error to refuse to permit an objection to be so made as to interrupt counsel's argument and to permit the assigning of reasons, so that the jury would understand the objections. Edwards v. State, 61 App. 397, 135 S. W. 549.

Where accused reserved no bills of exception to the charge, but the court, after the jury retired, stated that it would supply any omission or correct any error pointed out by accused, and accused did not specify exceptions, the court on appeal will not consider exceptions to the charge, in the absence of fundamental error therein. Alexander v. State, 63 App. 102, 138 S. W. 721.

Though the statute makes it proper for the court when an objection is made and a bill of exceptions is taken to stop the trial a sufficient length of time to then and there examine, sign, and approve the bill, the refusal to suspend the trial for that purpose is not reversible error, where the party complaining is subsequently given his bill in full. Kears v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 327.

33. Approval and signature of judge.—See Willson's Cr. Forms, 944. See arts. 2063-2066, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, and notes. See, also, art. 938, post.

Where the trial judge certifies that he refused to prepare or sign a bill of exception, on the admission of evidence, on the ground that there was no objection or exception by appellant, and there was no attempt to controvert this statement of the judge, and it was permitted to go in the record and come before the court on appeal, the court will not review the matter presented by the bill of exception. Market v. W. 1160; Crane v. State 126 S. W. 476; 22 S. W. 472; Britton v. State, 61 App. 39, 123 S. W. 885; Vines v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 737; Kaufman v. State. 70 App. 436, 159 S. W. 58.

Where the court refused bills of exception, and accused made no attempt to prove they could not be considered on appeal, McArthur v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1020; York v. State, 57 App. 481, 123 S. W. 1112; Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1171; Simpson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 999; Daly v. State, 72 App. 551, 162 S. W. 1152.

An unauthenticated bill of exception amounts to nothing, and will not be considered. Hill v. State. 10 App. 673. A bill of exceptions must be authenticated in one of two ways: 1. By the official signature of the judge who tried the case. 2. By bystanders in the manner provided by the statute. For the rules governing bills of exception in civil cases, and which are in the main applicable in criminal cases, see Vernon's Sayles' Civ. Stat., arts. 2058, 2067 and notes; rules for District Court, 55-60, 2 App. 605; see, also, Mc Dow v. State, 10 App. 98; Owens v. State, 4 App. 155.

Defendant's counsel were refused permission to ask certain questions, and the court refused to allow the bill of exceptions to state what answers counsel expected to elicit; held, it will be presumed that the answers would have been favorable to the defense, Barnes v. State, 37 App. 220, 38 S. W. 681.

The bill of exceptions should be submitted to the adverse party or his counsel and if found correct then signed by the judge and filed by the court in the manner provided by the statute.

The trial court should uniformly follow the letter and spirit of this and articles 2058, 2067 of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. In regard to bills of exceptions they should be authenticated, to secure a fair and impartial trial under the laws and constitution of this State. Owens v. State, 43 App. 249, 63 S. W. 638.

Where the record on appeal from a conviction of murder contained a bill of exceptions showing a refusal to admit certain testimony for the defense, and the trial court denied the bill, holding that the statement of facts would show the admission of such testimony, the bill presents no ground of review. Davis v. State, 60 App. 630, 132 S. W. 932.

A bill of exceptions must be authenticated by the signature of the trial judge, and a mere recital in the motion for new trial that accused had objected to evidence cannot be considered on appeal. Nelson v. State, 64 App. 489, 142 S. W. 913. In a prosecution in a criminal action, the court refused to answer of the trial court, on the ground that it did not remember that any such charge was asked and refused, the appellate court will accept the statement of the trial court as to the matter. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 178.

Grounds of a motion for new trial are not verified by merely reserving exceptions to the action of the court in overruling the motion, and, unless otherwise verified, cannot be considered on appeal. Sunford v. State, 64 App. 607, 113 S. W. 1172.

When the court instructed the jury to disregard remarks, charged to have been made by the district attorney, is not reviewable where the trial court refused a bill of exceptions relating to the matter, and no bystanders' bill was preserved. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

A bill of exceptions which the record marked "refused" by the trial court, cannot be considered on appeal; a bystander's bill being proper in such case. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

A paper purporting to be a bill of exceptions, containing objections to the charge, which does not show on which fact that those objections were made at the time, the charge was given, or that the paper was proved by the trial judge as a bill of exceptions, cannot be considered. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 945.

A bill of exceptions which the court refused to sign with the statement that no such ruling was made by the court cannot be reviewed. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 891.

Where defendant, under permission to substitute lost papers, seeks to substitute bills of exceptions, the originals of which the trial court founds were not presented to nor approved by him, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider the disallowed bills. Rupard v. State, 71 App. 256, 158 S. W. 256.

Under the statute, only the judge who tried a criminal case could approve a bill of exceptions and state of facts, and his successor could not do so. Potter v. State, 72 App. 71, 160 S. W. 1194.

Bills of exception in a criminal case should be presented to the judge who tried the case for his approval, or proven by bystanders, and bills approved by another district judge are not properly verified. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 1164.

Where the court declined to sign a bill of exceptions to remarks of the prosecuting attorney, accused must resort to the other means of establishing the facts provided by statute if the remarks are to be considered on appeal. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 563.

34. Mode and sufficiency of approval.—If the judge certifies that the bill was not "allowed," but orders it made part of the record, it will be considered on appeal as sufficiently authenticated by his signature. Bell v. State, 2 App. 215, 28 Am. Rep. 429.

On signing a bill of exception, the judge may, in his discretion, very properly explain the rulings excepted to. Bejarano v. State, 6 App. 260; Hardy v. State, 31 App. 386, 29 S. W. 591.
A trial judge should refuse to sign a bill of exceptions which, in his opinion, does not fairly recite points in issue. He should not sign a bill, and be by way of explanation contradict its recitals. Tyson v. State, 14 App. 388.

Where there are several bills of exceptions, and the judge on a separate sheet of paper refers to the bills, explains some of them and approves all of them; held, such approval is sufficient. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 App. 267, 8 W. 589.

Bills of exceptions must be officially approved and authenticated by the trial judge in order to be considered on appeal, and where they merely contained initials which were the same as the trial judge's initials they cannot be considered. Fator v. State, 59 App. 251, 138 S. W. 691.

A bill of exceptions alleging that the court overruled objections to the testimony of a witness as to statements by defendant that he did not approach accused at the time he was shot, on the ground that the testimony was not res gestae, followed by a certificate of the court stenographer giving the testimony by questions and answers, but not made a part of the bill, or approved or passed on by the judge, is insufficient. Sanders v. State, 63 App. 258, 140 S. W. 163.

35. — Qualification or correction by court.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 945.

If counsel are not satisfied with the approval of a bill of exceptions as explained by the court, they must follow their statutory remedy; viz., get their bill signed by bystanders. Hill v. State, 57 App. 415, 55 S. W. 609; Briscoe v. State, 37 App. 464, 26 S. W. 281.

The court can allow, change, or strike out a bill of exceptions during the term, although filed and approved, if upon proper showing it appears to be untrue or erroneous. Cain v. State, 42 App. 210, 59 S. W. 275.

When an application states that it is the first application, but the judge, in approving the bill of exceptions to its refusal, states that it is the second application, the apprailler, by accepting the bill of exceptions as allowed, is bound thereby. Encon v. State, 61 App. 206, 134 S. W. 606.

On appeal from a conviction, accused is bound by a qualification in a bill of exceptions to refusal of an instruction submitting an issue as to the voluntary character of a confession, stating that there was nothing in the proof to indicate that accused did not fully understand everything in the confession, and that the prosecution stated that it was freely and voluntarily made. Campbell v. State, 63 App. 656, 141 S. W. 232, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 528.

Where a bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence in a criminal prosecution made by the judge, who stated that the statement of the prosecuting witness were made so close after the transaction as to be part of the res gestae, there was no error shown, for a party allowing a bill of exceptions as qualified by the court is bound by such qualification. Wade v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 246. Such bill, it should be noticed, was not approved, and not approved, subject to contradictory explanations of the Judge, inquired thereof. Hinton v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 617.

Where the trial court improperly qualifies a bill of exceptions in approving it, the apprailler's remedy is by reserving an exception thereto. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

The trial judge could not qualify bills of exception by stating facts dehors the record; it being necessary that he testify to such facts like any other witness. Gordon v. State, 72 App. 9, 160 S. W. 714.

Where the judge approves a bill of exceptions with a qualification, accused refusing to accept the qualification can only prove the facts as claimed by him by a bystander's bill, properly sworn to as prescribed by statute. Mooney v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 62.
36. Preparation of bill by judge.—See art. 2066, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, and notes.

The same strictness is required of the court in stating the grounds on which evidence apparently erroneous was admitted as in required of defendant in stating objections to the admission of evidence. Talia v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 448.

When the matters of exceptions tendered as authorized the article was rejected by the court, and the court as authorized by Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2066, prepared a bill of exceptions which was defective, but accused, because of lapse of time since the trial, could not prove a bill by bystanders, the bill prepared by the court cannot be rejected on appeal. Hickey v. State, 62 App. 568, 138 S. W. 1651.

Where the judge refused to sign defendant's bill of exceptions because not full and correct, and prepared his own bills, and defendant did not have his bills by bystanders, they could not be considered. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 304.

Under this article and art. 2058 et seq., Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, providing that the bill incorrect, he may prepare a bill of exceptions presenting the ruling of the court, and providing for bills by bystanders, the court may prepare a bill of exceptions where the bill presented is erroneous, and, where the bill as prepared by the judge is not questioned, the court on appeal is bound thereby. Keene v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 327.

37. — Bill of exceptions included in statement of facts.—To warrant consideration of a bill of exceptions which is incorporated in the statement of facts, the judge's approval of the statement must certify that the bill of exceptions referred therein was approved. Wuller v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 321.

When a bill of exceptions contradicts the record as to a specific fact, the bill will be communicated to the fact truly. Gaines v. Salmon, 15 Tex. 311; Smith v. State, 4 App. 626; Harris v. State, 1 App. 74.

Affidavits will not suffice to authenticate the recitals in a bill of exception which are qualified or disputed by the trial judge in his note of explanation thereunto. If the court refuses a full and fair bill of exception, the defendant is authorized to resort to bystanders. Lindsey v. State, 11 App. 283.

The appellate court will not supply omissions in bill of exception. Attaway v. State, 31 App. 475, 20 S. W. 925.

When the motion sets up the bias or prejudice of the judge, his explanation appended to the bill of exceptions will not prevail as against the affidavits appended to the application. Gaines v. State, 38 App. 202, 42 S. W. 385.

It is not necessary to consult the statement of facts to verify the judge's statement attached to the bill of exceptions. Burt v. State, 38 App. 397, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 39 L. R. A. 305, 330.

Where there is an issue between the explanation of a bill of exceptions by the court and the matter recited by bystanders, which is in dispute, the recitals in the statement of facts may be looked to. Zachary v. State, 57 App. 179, 122 S. W. 293.

In a case where, a bill of exceptions, complaining of the refusal to permit a witness to answer a question relating to the reputation of prosecutrix for chastity prior to her alleged connection with accused, stated that the witness would have answered that he knew her general reputation in that respect, and that it was bad. The court approved the bill to which he undertook to set out what would have been the witness' answer, and gave an explanation that it changed its ruling, and notified accused's attorneys during the trial, offering to permit evidence of prosecutrix's reputation, and calling special attention to the former witness, that witness was afterwards on the stand, but was asked no further question on the subject. The bill as proved up by bystanders included the court's explanation, recited the question asked, that objection was made, the answer of the witness, purpose of the testimony, and that "we, the undersigned, * * * and that the said bill of exceptions, which the judge * * * refused to sign, is correct. * *" Held that, as the bill as proved up did not in terms deny the statement of the court, it should be accepted. Zachary v. State, 57 App. 179, 122 S. W. 293.

Appellant's objection in the bill of exceptions to the testimony of certain witnesses, because "defendant had already been convicted on the testimony" of such witnesses, "and no new trial had been granted," will not be taken by the Court of Criminal Appeals to establish the fact of such conviction. Hardgravげ v. State, 61 App. 235, 155 S. W. 132.

Where an exception in a prosecution for the illegal sale of intoxicants was reasserted in question as to whether witness issued a retail license to one J. F. W., on the ground that he and defendant were not shown to be the same person, the court's approval of the bill of exceptions, reciting the objection, is not a certificate of the fact on which the objection was based, but merely of the exception. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 396.

The bill of exceptions reciting that the jury did not see, examine, or use for any purpose the signature of witness, which he wrote on a slip of paper, when testifying that he did not write his name on the back of the forged check, the contrary cannot be presumed. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1052.

This court must take the record as it finds it, and, if appellant's bill of exceptions shall be inadmissible in this court, as it may be, may be done in this court, and within the time prescribed by law, and it cannot be done in this court. Bizzell v. State, 72 App. 442, 162 S. W. 561.

In a prosecution for perjury before a grand jury investigating illegal sales of liquor, witness' denial of such testimony was a claim to declaratory relief, and the court had no jurisdiction to consider the motion to strike it out, the court, approving the bill of exceptions to his overruling of the motion to strike out such testimony, by merely approving the bill, did not thereby allege the contents of the witness' alleged testimony, so that it had to be taken as stated on appeal. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1671.

A bill of exceptions cannot be impeached by affidavit of the trial judge, it not being contended it is not a correct copy of the original or was obtained by fraud, but merely that the judge read only the first part of it. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

39. Proof by bystanders.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 945. See art. 2607, Vernon's Scales' Civ. St. 1914, and note. See, also, art. 935, post.

A paper purporting to be a bill of exception signed by bystanders will not be recognized and considered as part of the record, unless it has the statutory requisites of the bill so signed. The recital in the signature, "it is signed by the undersigned bystanders," with three names subscribed thereto, does not authenticate it. Knight v. State, 7 App. 269; Scales' Civ. St. art. 1389; Houston v. Jones, 4 Tex. 170; Hardie v. Campbell, 63 Tex. 292.

An objection to any ruling of the trial court should except to the same at the time, and, if he asks it, time should be given him in which to embody his exception in a written bill. Refusal to grant such time, if prejudicial to the party, would be reversible error. But to bring before this court the refusal of the trial court to grant time for the preparation of the bill, exception to such action should be promptly taken, and if the court refuses the bill the party should appeal to the bystanders. Note that in this case the rule was not observed. George v. State, 25 App. 9, S. W. 26. See, also, Briscoe v. State, 27 App. 195; Brown v. State, 20 App. 614, 18 S. W. 197; Baldwin v. State, 37 App. 635, 21 S. W. 679.

A bill of exceptions signed by bystanders will not be considered unless it be shown by some testimony other than the mere statement of the bystanders that the judge refused to sign and approve the bill. Landrum v. State, 37 App. 666, 49 S. W. 737.

Affidavit of defendant showing why bill of exceptions by bystanders was not taken cannot be considered. Gallardo v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 972.

Bill of exception signed by only two bystanders is not sufficient. Osborne v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 54.

Bill of exceptions signed by bystanders, where it is not shown otherwise than by statement of the bystanders that the trial judge declined or refused to sign the bill as to the matter. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 900.

Vernon's Scales' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2606, requires the trial judge, when he disagrees with the bill of exceptions presented by counsel, to return it with his refusal inscribed thereon and make it such a bill as he deems is necessary to the ends thereunto. Appellant's objection is to the refusal to sign the bill presented, if dissatisfied with that filed by the judge to have the bill presented filed as a part of the record, upon presenting the signatures of three reputable bystanders as to its correctness. Held, that a bill of exceptions presented by bystanders to be attested by bystanders or approved by the judge's act of approval, and not so attested that signed by the judge will be taken as correct. Washington v. State, 58 App. 345, 125 S. W. 917.

Where accused is not satisfied with the bill of exceptions as qualified by the court, he should attack it by bystanders. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 127 S. W. 551.

Defendant's counsel prepared bills of exceptions in time, presented them to the county attorney, who, after being importuned several times to examine and pass on them, refused to do so, whereupon defendant's counsel presented them to the court, and endeavored to get it to act on them. The court refused to suggest any errors in the bills, except that one of them did not state the proceedings in the exact order in which they occurred, whenupon defendant's attorney corrected the bill, after which the court refused to allow the bills, but simply marked them "refused," and refused to prepare other bills correctly setting forth the exceptions. There were also affidavits indicating that the court's refusal to sign the bills was capricious, and that defendant under such circumstances was not required to resort to bystanders' bills, but that the Court of Appeals would consider the bills as though signed and allowed. Butler v. State, 64 App. 482, 142 S. W. 904.

A bill of exceptions, proved up by bystanders after its disallowance by the court in accordance with statute, filed v. the bill judged at the time, which was not contested in the trial court, could not be attacked on a motion for a rehearing in the Court of Criminal Appeals by affidavits. Hemphill v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 452, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914.

A bill of exceptions in a criminal case to the prosecuting attorney's argument, disallowed by the court on the ground that he could not recall such argument, but bearing an approval by citizens of the state, asserting that they were fully informed of its contents, that they were present when the matters related in the bill occurred and were fully cognizant thereof, and that the bill was correct and truly presented the facts as they transpired, which was properly sworn to, was in compliance with the statute, and, not having been contested as authorized by statute, would be taken as true. Hemphill v. State (Cr.App.) 165 S.W. 462, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 914.

When not contested by affidavit as authorized by statute, a bystander's bill, presented by a bystander's bill, presented by Vernon's Sayres' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2067, in the name of the State, not having the State's absolute verity, and cannot be questioned otherwise. Marshall v. State (Cr.App.) 175 S.W. 151.

Where the judge refused to act on bills of exception until his vacation ended, thereby postponing action until the expiration of the statutory time, accused could properly be defended by bystanders. Demoico v. State (Cr.App.) 178 S.W. 1024.

40. Time for preparation and filing.—See arts. 844a and 845, post, and notes.

Bills of exception bearing no file marks, and not showing that they were ever filed with the clerk of the court, nor when they were delivered to the clerk, if at all, and not showing when they were presented to and approved by the judge, will not be considered. Roberts v. State (Cr.App.) 150 S.W. 627.

42. Incorporation of bill into record.—See art. 938, post.

While a bill of exceptions may be clearly shown the matter sought to be presented and its connection. Cox v. State, 60 App. 471, 132 S.W. 125.

Grounds of motion for a new trial based on bills of exceptions not appearing in the record cannot be considered on appeal. Dickeson v. State (Cr.App.) 146 S.W. 914.

43. Necessity of objection, exception, or other presentation in trial court in general.—Objections or exceptions to particular proceedings, see notes under articles of the code dealing with the particular subjects.

An exception to error of the court in making the judgment must be saved at the time, otherwise, on appeal, the conviction will not be reversed because of it, unless it be apparent that the defendant was injured by it. Copeney v. State, 10 App. 473; See also, Mayo v. State, 7 App. 942; Davis v. State, 11 App. 645; Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S.W. 444; Young v. State, 31 App. 24, 17 W. 421.

Where the remarks of the trial court in the presence of the jury were not at the time complained of, and no opportunity was given the court to withdraw the same, accused could not, on appeal, complain thereof. Cov v. State, 59 App. 379, 125 S.W. 750; Jones v. State, 7, 25 S.W. 783; Florance v. State, 21, 1024; 126, 74 S.W. 273, 134 S.W. 619; Edwards v. State, 61 App. 307, 135 S.W. 540; Mitchell v. State (Cr.App.) 144 S.W. 1006; Hickman v. State (Cr.App.) 165 S.W. 915; Valdez v. State, 64 App. 457, 160 S.W. 341; Himmelbaur v. State (Cr.App.) 174 S.W. 836.

A judgment in a criminal case cannot be reversed on grounds presented for the first time on appeal, unless the error is fundamental. Martenez v. State (Cr.App.) 158 S.W. 888; Shunklin v. State (Cr.App.) 152 S.W. 1068; Guelshoeburge v. State, 70 App. 612, 157 S.W. 761.

Alleged improper remarks of the prosecuting attorney will not be reviewed, where they are not shown by bill of exceptions and it does not appear that a special charge was requested with reference thereto. Hooper v. State, 72 App. 85, 160 S.W. 1187; Warren v. State (Cr.App.) 149 S. W. 130.

In misdemeanors, nothing will be revised on appeal not excepted to below, Goodell v. State, 2 App. 520; Campbell v. State, 3 App. 33; unless the error is fundamental. Veal v. State, 8 App. 474.

Objection that a witness was permitted to testify on the trial without sworn, comes too late when first raised on motion for new trial. Goldsmith v. State, 32 App. 112, 25 S.W. 495.

It cannot be objected, on appeal, that a witness between 10 and 11 years old did not show that she understood the nature of an oath, where no objection was taken to the ruling of the trial court that the witness was competent. Nichols v. State, 32 App. 381, 25 S.W. 689.

In order to have the question of the competency of the witness revised on appeal exceptions must be taken at the time the witness is offered. Nichols v. State, 32 App. 291, 24 S.W. 689.

A prejudicial statement made by a witness is no ground for reversal when objection was made at the time. Penn v. State, 36 App. 149, 25 S.W. 973.

Answers of a witness not objected to at the time, and when there is no motion to have them stricken on appeal, will not be considered on appeal. Howard v. State, 37 App. 494, 38 S.W. 475, 66 Am. St. Rep. 812.

If a party is surprised by evidence he should ask for postponement so as to get evidence to meet it. It is too late after verdict to complain. Turner v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 54.

If an important witness becomes too ill to testify defendant should ask a postponement, and if he continues ill after a reasonable postponement the defendant should withdraw a bid or withdraw a case from the jury and a continuance. It is too late after verdict to raise this question. Munoz v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 760.

An assignment of error that the offense was a graded one and the grade depended on the value of the property alleged to have been injured, and the value was proved, cannot be considered where the matter was not called to the attention of the court by exception or in motion for new trial, but is raised for the first time in defendants' brief. Williams v. State, 53 App. 596, 110 S. W. 64.

Objection of jury cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, especially where the record does not disclose the matters complained of. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 140, 134 S. W. 348.

Where the defense while cross-examining the prosecutrix, and trying to show that her baby did not resemble the defendant, did not object to having the baby brought in before the jury, the defense cannot claim it as error on appeal, where the court offered to have the baby removed if the defense requested. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 355, 137 S. W. 356.

Grounds of motion based on exceptions not in the record cannot be considered on appeal. Allen v. State, 62 App. 561, 137 S. W. 1153.

Objection first raised by motion for rehearing on appeal is too late, unless it presents fundamental error. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 287.

Where accused did not at the time except to the act of the court in questioning witnesses, he cannot complain on appeal. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1086.

In a prosecution for robbery, accused cannot complain that evidence showing that he robbed two companions at the same time was admitted, where there was no motion to compel state to elect, and no complaint of the evidence was made until asked to withdraw a continuance v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 390.

Defendant, prosecuted for sale of liquor, not having objected to evidence of three sales on the same day, or moved to require the state to elect between the sales, could not by motion for new trial object that the verdict did not specify the sale for which he was convicted; the judgment being a bar to prosecution for any of the sales. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 914.

Where the court, on being advised that a juror who had been selected and sworn had formed and expressed an opinion, ordered the other six jurors accepted and sworn into an adjoining room in charge of an officer, and the juror was examined, and thereafter the court stated he would sustain a peremptory challenge, but no challenge was interposed, accused could not complain because the juror sat in the case. McKelvey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 922.

In a prosecution for perjury, charged to have been committed in a civil suit in a justice's court, the admission of the testimony of the justice, as to what the issues joined before him were, is not ground for reversal, where no objection was made below, even though the plea filed in the justice's court would have been the best evidence. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 428, 160 S. W. 964.

A motion to exclude evidence to which defendant did not object when offered was unsustainable. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 266, 162 S. W. 364.

An objection that the sheriff was not sworn before he summoned one taleman, and that such taleman completed the jury and sat in the case, could not be made for the first time on motion for new trial. Howard v. State, 72 App. 624, 163 S. W. 429.

The court on appeal and accused are bound by objections made in the trial court at the time of trial, and any additional objections cannot be considered. Terrell v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 315.

Evidence which might have been admissible, had other evidence been offered, will not be excluded on a ground not raised in the court below. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 574.

44. Objections to indictment or information.—See art. 476, and notes.

45. Objections relating to instructions.—See art. 743, and notes.

46. Objection or exception to preserve grounds for new trial.—Where there was no exception to the admission of testimony, the question cannot be raised on motion for a new trial. Batte v. State, 57 App. 152, 122 S. W. 561; Vernon v. State, 72 App. 387, 162 S. W. 499; Suesberry v. State, 72 App. 439, 163 S. W. 429.

An acceptance of the jury by the defendant is a waiver by him of the right to question its organization, on motion for new trial or in arrest of judgment, or upon appeal. Buite v. State, 1 App. 452; Yanez v. State, 6 App. 429, 32 Am. Rep. 591.

The objection, however, that a juror is not a household, can not avail on motion for new trial, unless a showing is made of a want of knowledge and rebuttal of laches. An unmarried man may be a household. Brill v. State, 1 App. 572.

Improper argument of counsel to be available must be objected to at the time it is made. It will not be considered when objected to for the first time on motion for new trial. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 455, 34 S. W. 623.

Failure to institute a trial examination statement that he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of defendant, but he would not be influenced by such opinion. Defendant did not further question or challenge such juror, but on motion for new trial set up the disqualification of such juror; held, that he should have challenged such juror at the time the jury was being impaneled. Moore v. State, 36 App. 88, 35 S. W. 683.

When surprised at the testimony of a witness the defendant should ask to withdraw his announcement of ready for trial, and postpone or continue the case,
He cannot successfully claim surprise for the first time on motion for new trial. Bryant v. State, 35 App. 394, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 79.

An objection that a hypothetical question did not contain all the evidence favorable to defendant will not be considered. Defendant's remedy is to propose a proper question. Shirley v. State, 37 App. 477, 36 S. W. 261.

At the time objecting party was not excepted to the action at the time cannot be made a basis for a new trial. Allen v. State, 36 App. 436, 37 S. W. 738.

Defendant was arraigned for trial and went to trial without objection the same day he was indicted; held, no ground for a new trial. Butler v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 757.

In a prosecution for homicide, exception to the action of the sheriff in bringing accused into the courtroom, in the presence of the jury at the opening of the trial, with W. of the accused cannot be taken for the first time on the motion for a new trial. Cannon v. State, 59 App. 398, 125 S. W. 141.

An objection for the first time on a motion for new trial that two of the witnesses were not sworn is too late. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 135 S. W. 887.

When the same of the name of the jury, as drawn and served and as signed to the verdict, cannot first be raised on motion for new trial. Jones v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 953.

Where accused, knowing of the bias of a juror, fails to challenge him, he cannot raise objection on motion for a new trial. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

Though the jurors in a criminal prosecution were professional jurors, an objection thereeto should be by motion to quash the panel, where known to the accused's counsel, and, in the absence thereof, the constitution of the jury could not be relied on as ground for new trial. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 188.

It is too late to raise for the first time on a motion for a new trial an objection that a juror was not a resident of the county. Jefferson v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 906.

Where there was no objection at trial to evidence by accused's wife on cross-examination, to the effect that she did not inquire after decedent's condition, or attend his funeral, though he was her son-in-law, objections to such evidence could not first be taken in motion for new trial. Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 159 S. W. 272.

In a prosecution for forgery, a contention that accused was under 16 years of age at the time of the commission of the alleged offense and was less than 17 when the indictment was found against him must be made on trial, and cannot be raised for the first time on the motion of new trial. Bowen v. State, 72 App. 401, 162 S. W. 1146.

Where counsel for defendant announced ready for trial and made no request for additional time or any representation that he had not had time to prepare for the trial, such suggestion came too late after verdict, where it was not contended that appellant or his counsel was in any way surprised by the state's testimony. Spikes v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 614.

47. Sufficiency of objection or exception.—In a criminal prosecution, where a large part of the testimony objected to is admissible, a general objection is insufficient, and a special objection is necessary. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 757; Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 331; Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139; Brown v. State, 71 App. 333, 162 S. W. 329; Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 779.

An objection that evidence is immaterial is too general and indefinite, and will not be considered on appeal. Hickey v. State, 69 App. 548, 138 S. W. 1051; Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 941.

A general objection to evidence of the seizure of liquor in defendant's possession prior to an alleged sale in violation of the local option law is insufficient as an attack on the ground that such possession by defendant was contemporaneous with the alleged sale. Goss v. State, 57 App. 557, 124 S. W. 107.

Any error in permitting a question to accused, a middle-aged man, in a prosecution for murder, as to whether complaint was not filed against him in another county for killing a negro, the answer to which was that such a complaint was filed against him when he was 19 years old, was not of itself reversible error; the only objection to such question being that it was immaterial, and no objection being made because of the remoteness of the time when the complaint was filed. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 123.

Where the only objection to the admission of evidence in a murder case, admitted to show defendant's possible intent, that defendant for some weeks before the killing had taken with him some of his younger children wherever he went, which he had not done theretofore, was that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and prejudicial, accused cannot urge on appeal that the evidence was not admissible on the ground that defendant's intentions, unknown to accused, were not admissible to affect accused. Hunger v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 725.

Objections to remarks made by the trial judge when the jury was impaneled for the week were insufficiently preserved, though objection was then made, where accused's trial was not called until four days later, and the objection was not renewed. Newton v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 638.

Objections that questions, put by the state's attorney to a witness as to his sympathy for accused, were improper are insufficient to present the question of impropriety. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 596.

It lies to the argument of the county attorney, where no specific objections thereto are made. Crawford v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 229; Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 633.

Where no grounds of objection to evidence were stated, defendant's counsel merely stating in some instances, "Objected to," and in others that the testimony...
Art. 745. [725] Jury in felony case shall not separate until, unless, etc.—After the jury has been sworn and impaneled to try any case of felony, they shall not be permitted to separate until they have returned a verdict, unless by permission of the court, with the consent of the attorney representing the state and the defendant, and in charge of an officer. [C. C. 605.]

In general.—Separation of the jury in a felony case is not allowable even by consent of the parties, unless the jurors are in charge of an officer. Porter v. State, 1 App. 394.

The law which forbids the separation of the jury should be carefully observed and enforced. Marnoch v. State, 7 App. 22.

This article, construed in connection with section 10 of the Bill of Rights, is imperative and mandatory, and a separation of the jury, except under the conditions imposed, is fundamental error. McCampbell v. State, 57 App. 687, 48 S. W. 905; Kelly v. State, 28 App. 120, 12 S. W. 505; Brown v. State, 28 Tex. 482; English v. State, 28 App. 500, 13 S. W. 775.

Consent of defendant.—See ante, art. 22, and notes.

The defendant may waive the right to have the jury kept together, but he must do so in person, and not by his counsel. Sterling v. State, 45 App. 249; Kelly v. State, 28 App. 120, 12 S. W. 505; Brown v. State, 28 Tex. 482.

While the appellate court does not believe that it is necessary to get the consent of the attorney for the defendant for a part of the jury to retire for a few minutes in charge of an officer to answer a call of nature while the others remain in the court room, yet the better practice is to obtain such consent. Johns v. State, 47 App. 161, 83 S. W. 199.

Where a juror left his seat and started to leave the courtroom, and was recalled by the court and told that if he wanted anything the sheriff would wait on him, but that the jury could not separate, and the sheriff remarked that they must all remain together, according to San Antonio rules, which remark the jury were instructed not to consider, the sheriff’s remark, though improper, was not reversible error. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1171.

What constitutes separation.—That during a 10 minutes’ recess the officer in charge of the jury took the jury to the toilet room 25 steps from the jury box, and that six or eight minutes thereafter it was discovered that one juror had stayed in the box, and the officer then took him in with the rest, and no one spoke to the juror in the interval, would not constitute a separation within the statute. Robinson v. State, 58 App. 550, 126 S. W. 276.

During the trial of a murder case, a horse belonging to one of the jurors got out of the pen, where it was being kept, and passed along the road to a store.

A juror left the jury, caught the horse 25 or 30 steps away, and an attorney in the case took the horse from the juror. Nothing was said by the juror to the attorney, or by the attorney to the juror, or by anybody else to the juror, in regard to the case. Held, that such separation was not material. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 133 S. W. 857.

There was no error in permitting jurors, accepted and sworn, to separate in the courtroom, where each juror was constantly within the hearing and sight of the officer and in the immediate view of the court, and where it was not shown that they had any talk with others, or that anybody spoke to them. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1171.

Where the jury in a criminal prosecution, after retiring to consider their verdict, informed the court that they wished to have a portion of the testimony reproduced, and the court ordered them to be brought into open court, and after they returned to the courtroom the sheriff discovered that only 11 jurors were present, and within five minutes the sheriff was sent to the jury room after the other juror, and the other juror was found in the jury room, and no one was with either him or the other 11 but the sheriff, and no one spoke to any of them, there was no error in the alleged separation. Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1013.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, 2 jurymen were allowed to go to a drug store or a druggist’s soda fountain, while the others remained outside, and 10 of the jury went into the courtroom and took their seats while the other 2 remained outside in a toilet, and the jury were taken to the wagon yard, and those who had horses were permitted to go and get feed for them while the other jurors remained out of the stable and in the yard, there was a violation of this article. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

Where the jury room was upstairs over the district court room, and the stairs were eight feet from the door of the courtroom, and when the jury came down the stairs and started to take their seats it was discovered that one was not present, though he was seen coming down the stairs, and his tardiness was only from half a minute to a minute and a half, and it was impossible for him to have met any one, there was not a ‘separation’ of the jury.

The court having adjourned for 10 minutes, the jury in charge of the sheriff and a deputy were conducted to the hall of the courthouse, and, after all other persons had been removed, those who desired were permitted, those who to a greater or lesser degree. One of the jurors remained in the toilet alone, while the others were in the hall, and, without one noticing his absence, the officer returned the rest of the jury box some 87 feet from the hall. The juror’s absence having been discovered, the officer immediately required the remainder of the jury to return with him to the hall, and, as they got near the hall door, the absent juror, in company with the judge, entered the courtroom from the hall door, whereupon the judge took them to their seats. The absent juror testified that he had come to get mail with him in the toilet, or in the hall when he was coming out, at which time he saw the judge and asked him where “his crowd” was, and that no one spoke to him, or he to any one else. Held, that such absence did not constitute a separation of the jury sufficient to vitiate the trial. Latham v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 797.

Instructions of court.—In a trial for murder, where defendant’s bill of exceptions showed that each of the jurors selected had testified that he knew the result of a former trial, and knew that the trial court had set aside the judgment, but had stated that such knowledge would not influence his verdict, and had been accepted, the remark of the court at adjournment that they must not separate, and that, if they did so, “It would force him to grant a new trial,” was under the circumstances improper. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 163.

Prejudice in general.—That a juror unattended left the jury room and conveyed some bedclothes to the floor above to the person from whom they were borrowed and took a drink of whisky at another room held not error it not being shown that probable injustice was done. Stewart v. State, 21 App. 153, 19 S. W. 908.

Where the jury accidently separated for a few minutes without the slightest probability of being influenced thereby there was no error. Champ v. State, 52 App. 98, 22 S. W. 673.

Separation of the jury by permission of the court over defendant’s objection will necessitate reversal of a conviction without reference to the question of injury to defendant. But to reverse because the jury separated without the consent of the separating juror expressed with her or his persons about the case, or committed other misconduct to the prejudice of the accused. It is complicated in this case that a juror, with consent of counsel on both sides, was permitted by the court to visit his sick wife in charge of an officer; but it had not converse with her or any one about the case. Held, that the objection is without merit. Boyett v. State, 26 App. 691, 9 S. W. 275.

Upon the return of the verdict the jury was discharged, but almost immediately, and before all the jurors had left the box, the verdict was found to be informal, and the jury was reassembled. Held, that no injury resulted to the defendant from this proceeding, and he has no cause to complain. Boyett v. State, 26 App. 659, 9 S. W. 275.

Accused pleaded guilty of manslaughter, but asked that sentence be suspended. The jury assessed his punishment at two years’ imprisonment, and recommended that sentence be not suspended. Before the verdict was rendered court was suspended, owing to a fire nearby, and the sheriff took the jurors into an adjoining room, but after two or ten minutes some jurors discovered that two minutes were spent in the court room. There were others in the courtroom at the time, but it did not appear that the jurors spoke to any one, or that any one spoke to them, and the door between the courtroom and the room where the sheriff was opened. Held, it being that no undue influence was exercised, and punishment, they having given accused the lowest penalty affixed to the crime of which he pleaded guilty, the separation of the jury could not have prejudiced him, although they declined to recommend a suspension of sentence. Sephus v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 656.

To make the separation of the jurors, in a criminal case less than capital, reversible error, accused must show that they have been tampered with while apart so as to prevent an impartial trial. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 897.

Separation before being sworn.—The statute forbidding the separation of the jury applies to jurors who have been segregated and impaneled in the case, and does not require jurors to be locked up after they have been examined as a whole, and all challenges have been made, and they have not been selected or sworn. Martin v. State, 57 App. 566, 124 S. W. 681.

The impropriety of permitting jurors who had been accepted, but not sworn, to separate and use the telephone, was not reversible, where they were not objects, and no impropriety was shown, and no impropriety was committed by them while separated. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1134.

Accepted jurors in a felony case less than capital may separate when they have not been sworn to try the case. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 897, overruled. Leach v. State, 84 App. 1, 141 S. W. 88.

— Capital case.—In a capital case the jurors who have been accepted by both parties, but not sworn, should be kept together in charge of an officer. Grissom v. State, 4 App. 374.

The fact that one or two accepted jurors, pending the completion of the jury, remained in the court room when the others were taken to an adjoining room even though it be shown that the separated jurors conversed with outside persons while so separated, will not necessarily require the reversal of a capital conviction. Bailey v. State, 26 App. 706, 9 S. W. 270.
To make the separation of jurors, accepted but not sworn in a capital case, reversible error, it must appear that it affected the fairness of the trial. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 857.

Ground for new trial.—A mere separation of the jury is not cause for a new trial, even in a capital case. Such separation may be explained, and unless it be shown that probable injustice to the defendant was occasioned thereby, it will not be good ground for setting aside the conviction. Jones v. State, 19 Tex. 168; 62 Am. Dec. 550; Jack v. State, 26 Tex. 1; Nelson v. State, 32 Tex. 71; Wakefield v. State, 41 Tex. 556; Jenkins v. State, Id. 138; Soria v. State, 2 App. 357; Davis v. State, 3 App. 91; Cox v. State, 7 App. 1; West v. State, Id. 159; Russell v. State, 11 App. 388; Ogle v. State, 16 App. 361; but see Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 366.

A general dispersion of the jury, though unavoidable, will witivate the verdict. Early v. State, 1 App. 245, 28 Am. Rep. 408.

A short temporary separation of the jury, when no injury is shown, is no ground for a new trial. Taylor v. State, 38 App. 552, 42 S. W. 1019.

Affidavits of jurors are insufficient to go away with the effect of a separation when the opportunity to be tampered with or influenced is clearly shown. Robinson v. State, 39 App. 460, 17 S. W. 1082, and authorities cited.

Separation of the jury during trial; held, sufficient ground for new trial. Burris v. State, 37 App. 587, 49 S. W. 284.

While part of the jury were in a saloon, others were out in the back yard, and while eleven of the jury were eating breakfast, one went out to a closet with one of the witnesses in the case unaccompanied by the officer; held, such separation was a violation of the law and a new trial should have been granted. Darter v. State, 39 App. 46, 44 S. W. 550.

The officer in charge of the jury should not allow the jury to go into a saloon while deliberating upon their verdict. No emergency would justify such act. Id.

Where, during the trial of a homicide case, a juror became sick at night, and a physician was called to prescribe for him in the presence of an officer, and, with the consent of accused's counsel, he was placed on a cot in the court room while the other jurors were in the jury room, and, while he was lying on the cot, relatives saw him in the presence of the officer staying with him, there was no such separation of the jury as to authorize the setting aside of conviction, in the absence of anything improper occurring. Chant v. State, 73 App. 345, 166 S. W. 513.

In a felony case a juror, after the evidence was all in and argument begun, and while they were in charge of an officer going to supper, slipped off and went three or four blocks and got his horse and took him to a livery stable. He was gone between 15 and 30 minutes, and admitted talking to two people. The only evidence heard on the motion for new trial was the testimony of the juror, the state contenting itself with showing that the juror was favorable to defendant. Held, that defendant should have been granted a new trial because of such separation, since, under the statute, when a separation was shown, the burden was upon the state to show that nothing improper took place during the separation, and should have called the two witnesses to whom the juror admitted to have talked. Somers v. State, 73 App. 549, 166 S. W. 1156.

A short 10 minutes adjourned for 10 minutes, the jury in charge of the sheriff and a deputy were conducted to the hall of the courthouse, and, after all other persons had been removed, those who desired were permitted to go to a water cooler and toilet. One of the jurors remained in the toilet alone, while the others were on the hall and without any notice to any one noticing his absence, the rest of the jury to the jury box some 37 feet from the hall. The juror's absence having been discovered, the officer immediately required the remainder of the jury to return with him to the hall, and, as they got near the hall door, the absent juror, in company with the judge, entered the courtroom from the hall door, whereupon the jury took their seats. The absent juror testified that no one was with him in the toilet, or in the hall when he was coming out, at which time he saw the judge and asked him where "his crowd" was, and that no one spoke to him, or he to any one else. Held, that such absence did not constitute a separation of the jury sufficient to vitiate the trial. Latham v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 797.

Art. 745 [726] In misdemeanor case jury may separate.—In case of misdemeanor, the court may, at its discretion, permit the jury to separate before the verdict, after giving them proper instructions in regard to their conduct as jurors in the case while so separated.

In general.—It was not error to permit the jury to separate after the completion of the evidence, but before the return of a verdict, where such separation was authorized and were guilty of no improper conduct. Farris v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 310.

Reconvening jury.—This article does not authorize the court to reconvene a jury after it has been finally discharged, in order to remedy an informality in a verdict rendered by it, or to return another verdict. Ellin v. State, 27 App. 199, 11 S. W. 111. See, also, Testard v. State, 26 App. 260, 9 S. W. 888; Rider v. State, 26 App. 334, 9 S. W. 688; Cannon v. State, 3 Tex. 31.
Art. 747. [727] Sheriff may provide jury with, etc.—It is the duty of the sheriff to provide a suitable room for the deliberation of the jury, in all criminal cases, and to supply them with such necessary food and lodging as he can obtain; but no spirituous, vinous or malt liquor of any kind shall be furnished them. [O. C. 606.]

Use of intoxicating liquor as ground for new trial.—See post, art. 837 (7), and notes.

Art. 748. [728] No person shall be with jury or permitted to converse with them, etc.—No person shall be permitted to be with a jury while they are deliberating upon a case, nor shall any person be permitted to converse with a juror after he has been impaneled, except in the presence and by the permission of the court, or except in a case of misdemeanor where the jury have been permitted by the court to separate; and in no case shall any person be permitted to converse with the juror about the case on trial. [O. C. 607.]

In general.—A conversation with other persons by a juror, with permission of the court, over the objection of the defendant, is reversible error per se, without reference to the question of probable injury to the defendant. Defriend v. State, 22 App. 570, 2 S. W. 611.

That a juror on separation of the jury conversed with outside persons does not necessarily require a reversal of the conviction. Bailey v. State, 26 App. 706, 9 S. W. 270.

Jurors should not be permitted to converse with other persons over telephones, out of the presence of the court and without permission of the court and when such contact does occur it is obligatory on the State to show beyond any question that the jurors were not tampered with. Early v. State, 51 App. 382, 103 S. W. 873, 874, 123 Am. St. Rep. 889.

Jurors, in a trial for statutory rape, while deliberating on the case, were permitted to talk over a telephone to their families and others. Held that, considered with the unsatisfactory evidence in the case, it was ground for reversal. Logan v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 713.

Ground for new trial.—See post, art. 837 (7), and notes thereto.

Art. 749. [729] Punishment for violation of preceding article.—Any juror or other person violating the preceding article shall be punished for contempt of court by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Cited, Martin v. State, 9 App. 293.

Art. 750. [730] Officer shall attend jury.—In order to supply all the reasonable wants of the jury, and for the purpose of keeping them together and preventing intercourse with any other person, the sheriff shall see that they are constantly attended by a proper officer, who shall always remain sufficiently near the jury to answer to any call made upon him by them, but shall not be with them while they are discussing the case; nor shall such officer, at any time while the case is on trial before them, converse about the case with any of them, nor in the presence of any of them. [O. C. 608, 609.]

In general.—The presence of a bailiff with the jury, while they are deliberating, will not vitiate the verdict, unless it appear that the fairness of the trial was affected thereby. Martin v. State, 9 App. 293; Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 419; Dansby v. State, 34 Tex. 392; see, also, Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 499, 51 Am. Rep. 330.

Interest of officer.—That the prosecuting witness guarded the jury is not ground for reversal, in the absence of showing that the verdict was affected thereby; but the practice is not a good one. Speer v. State, 57 App. 297, 123 S. W. 415.

That the sheriff, who was a material witness for the state, was in charge of the jury during the trial was not ground for reversal, in the absence of a showing of some act of him which influenced or tended to influence the jury in their verdict. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1171.

The fact that a deputy sheriff was a witness in a case did not disqualify him from performing his official duty in guarding the jury. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1172.

Ground for new trial.—See post, 837, and notes.
Art. 751. [731] Jury may take all papers in the case.—The jury may take with them, on retiring to consider their verdict, all of the original papers in the cause, and any papers used as evidence. [O. C. 610.]

Law books.—While the court does not hold it to be error, yet they do not wish to be understood as commending the practice of allowing a jury to take law books with them. Camp v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 37.

Indictment.—That the jury did not take with them the indictment is immaterial. Schultz v. State, 15 App. 255, 49 Am. Rep. 194.

At a former trial defendant was found guilty of murder in the second degree, the verdict was written on the indictment, the clerk obliterated the verdict by putting ink over it and the court allowed the jury to take the indictment out with them: held, no error. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 545, 34 S. W. 623. See also Lancaster v. State, 36 App. 16, 35 S. W. 165.

Evidence.—The jury may take with them papers used by the witnesses for comparing handwriting. Ferguson v. State, 61 App. 152, 138 S. W. 445; Webb v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1013.

It is not to allow the jury to use a magnifying glass in inspecting documentary evidence. Hatch v. State, 6 App. 484.

The jury is entitled to take with them all evidence in the case. Heard v. State, 9 App. 1.

Decedent's coat which had been put in evidence may be taken into the jury room. Torbert v. State, 75 App. 116, 2 S. W. 534.

In a prosecution for burglary, by shooting into a house with intent to injure a person therein, where the state's theory was that accused fired on account of indignities offered his wife, and accused chimed that when he reached the window, they attempted to shoot him with a pistol and that he fired for self-preservation, evidence that one of the jurors who had been on the building when it was constructed, and had some personal knowledge of its location, drew a diagram, which the jury substituted for two diagrams introduced in evidence, of the lot in which the injured person was when the shot was fired, was not ground for reversal. Railey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

A refusal to permit the jury to take papers received in evidence is not error, in the absence of a request by the jury that they be permitted to take them. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 342.

A letter introduced in evidence was properly turned over to the jury at their request on their retiring to deliberate on a verdict. Warren v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 126.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, the jury can take certified copies of the orders putting prohibition in force in the territory, which had been in evidence with them on retirement. Howard v. State, 72 App. 624, 163 S. W. 429.

The refusal to permit the jury to take letters offered by defendant bearing on the issues was not reversible error. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

Charges.—See ante, art. 742, and notes.

Art. 752. [732] Foreman appointed.—The jury, in all cases, shall appoint one of their body foreman, in order that their deliberations may be conducted with regularity and order. [O. C. 611.]

Art. 753. [733] Jury may communicate with the court.—When the jury wish to communicate with the court, they shall make their wish known to the sheriff, who shall inform the court thereof; and they may be brought before the court, and, through their foreman, shall state to the court, either verbally or in writing, what they desire to communicate. [O. C. 612, 613.]

In general.—Where after retirement and in the absence of defendant, the jury returned into court and asked to be relieved of further consideration of the case, which the court refused, stating that he had to leave the next morning, there was no such violation of this article as to require reversal. Washington v. State, 56 App. 195, 119 S. W. 659, following Wilkinson v. State, 49 App. 170, 91 S. W. 228.

In a prosecution for violation of the prohibition law, where a witness testified that he asked the defendant to procure whisky for him, and defendant said he would, and thereafter some one handed a bottle of whisky to the witness through a window, but that witness saw only his hand, and did not know who it was, and the jury propounded to the court, in writing, the question whether a man would have to sell and deliver intoxicating liquors in person to be a violation of the law, it was the duty of the court, under this article and art. 754, to answer the question of the jury. Beck v. State, 63 App. 615, 141 S. W. 111.

Under this article and articles 754, 755, 756, the court may not, in the absence of defendant, ask for the testimony of designated witnesses received without objection, the consideration of the testimony directly bearing on the issues. Cowart v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 341.

Who may act as spokesman.—Communication to the court through a juror other than the foreman is a mere irregularity not invalidating the proceedings. Willis v. State, 24 App. 836, 6 S. W. 857.

Presence of defendant.—See post, art. 756, and notes.
Art. 754. [734] Jury may ask further instruction.—The jury, after having retired, may ask further instruction of the judge touching any matter of law. For this purpose, the jury shall appear before the judge, in open court, in a body, and through their foreman shall state to the court, either verbally or in writing, the particular point of law upon which they desire further instruction; and the court shall give such instruction in writing, but no instruction shall be given, except upon the particular point on which it is asked. [O. C. 614.]

If the jury desire further instructions, they should be brought into court in a body, and, after notice to the defendant or his counsel, and in case of felony, in the presence of the jury, they should be instructed only by them. The instructions should be in direct response to the questions asked, and must not invade the province of the jury. Taylor v. State, 42 Tex. 504; Newman v. State, 43 Tex. 552; Wharton v. State, 46 Tex. 3; Chamberlain v. State, 2 App. 461; Garza v. State, 2 App. 237; Hannah v. State, 7 App. 619; Post v. State, 16 App. 598; Shipp v. State, 11 App. 46; Granger v. State, Id. 454; McDonald v. State, 15 App. 493; Mapes v. State, 12 App. 85.

When the jury request further instructions, and the subject-matter thereof be proper, the court has no option but to give them. If the subject-matter be improper, the court should so inform the jury. All instructions or responses so given by the court to the jury must be in writing. Conn v. State, 11 App. 390.

An instruction as to punishment held sufficiently responsive to the inquiry of the jury. Boggs v. State, 38 App. 82, 41 S. W. 612.

That the court, after charging orally without objection, gives, at the request of the jury after it had retired, and also at the request of the prosecuting attorney and a proper written charge added, a ground for reversing a conviction. Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 465, 122 S. W. 133.

In a prosecution for violation of the prohibition law, where a witness testified that he asked the defendant to procure whisky for him, and defendant said he would, and thereafter some one handed a bottle of whisky to the witness through a window, but that witness saw only his hand, and did not know who it was, and the jury propounded to the court, in writing, the question whether a man would have to sell and deliver intoxicating liquor in person to be a violation of the law, it was the duty of the court to answer the question of the jury. Beck v. State, 63 App. 615, 141 S. W. 111.

Where the jury after retiring returned for additional instructions, and were given the additional charge, though the additional charge was not taken from the court, it was not reversible error. Lyles v. State, 64 App. 621, 142 S. W. 562.

Where the jury asked if it made any difference whether the confession was made before a justice of the peace or the county attorney, the instruction was properly limited to the question and one, requested by defendant, as to the necessity of a confession being freely and voluntarily made was properly refused. Harris v. State, 64 App. 694, 144 S. W. 222.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, where the evidence indicated that the accused's child having been injured by an older boy, accused took his pistol and went out into the street, it was not error for the court, in response to an inquiry of the jury, after their retirement, whether, under those circumstances, accused had a right to "get his gun and go down there," to state that he did not have that right. Harris v. State, 64 App. 654, 144 S. W. 249.

The court may not, in the absence of accused, withdraw from the jury, asking for the testimony of designated witnesses received without objection, the consideration of the testimony directly bearing on the issues. Cowart v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 541.

Where the jury returned, after being charged and asked if it was necessary that the accessory know that the principal seduced the prosecutrix, and the court told them that the defendant must know that fact, adding that the issue was one for the determination of the jury, who might consider all the circumstances, there was no error. That accused was guilty of theft by deception, in spite of this article which is not construed to mean that the court cannot, at any other time before verdict, correctly charge the jury on any matter, though necessary or proper, or that he should make the answer as short as possible. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution for theft from the person, the jury, after retirement, asked the judge whether they could render verdict finding accused guilty of attempt at theft, in answer to which the court charged that if the jury found from the evidence that accused was guilty of an attempt to commit theft from the person—that is, that, in the county and state named in the indictment, on or about the date named, before the presentment of the indictment, accused did attempt to unlawfully, fraudulently, and privately take from the person and out of the person's property, without the owner's consent, personal or real, not belonging to the owner, and with an intent to deprive him of its value and appropriate it to his own use—then the jury could find accused guilty of an attempt to commit theft from the person. Held, that the charge given in answer to the jury's question was correct. Bell v. State, 78 App. 466, 136 S. W. 1194.

Where the jury, after retiring in an adultery case, returned, and propounded a question to the court, it was not error for the court to give no additional in-instructions, but to tell the jury to look to the charge as given. Edwards v. State, 71 Tex. 160, 162, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 553.

Necessity of defendant's presence.—See post, art. 756, and notes.

Additional instructions without request.—After the jury has retired, the court cannot, of its own motion, withdraw an instruction given at the request of the defendant, and give additional instructions. Goss v. State, 49 Tex. 520; Garza v. State, 2 App. 290.

The court cannot give additional instructions at the instance of the state, the jury not having requested such instructions. Myers v. State, 8 App. 321.

When the court has given an erroneous charge as to the punishment, he may correct it. People v. State, 3 App. 166, 53 S. W. 347.

When such additional instructions are given, they are to be considered in connection with the charge already given. Swift v. State, 8 App. 614.

Art. 755. [735] Jury may have witness re-examined, when.—If the jury disagree as to the statement of any particular witness, they may, upon applying to the court, have such witness again brought upon the stand; and he shall be directed by the judge to detail his testimony to the particular point of disagreement, and no other, and he shall be further instructed to make his statement in the language used in his examination as nearly as he can. [O. C. 615.]

In general.—The witness must not be re-examined upon the point, and the following rules must be observed: 1. The jury should indicate the particular statement about which they disagree. 2. The witness should be directed to repeat his testimony upon the particular point, and no other. 3. The court may instruct the witness to repeat his testimony upon the point in the very language he employed on the original examination, as nearly as he can. Campbell v. State, 42 Tex. 591.

Mere difference of counsel as to the evidence of a witness does not necessitate his recall, and its avoidability is left to the discretion of the judge, subject to review only for abuse. Proper practice in such cases is for the judge to inform the jury that if they shall disagree as to the testimony in question, the witness will be recalled at their instance. Lister v. State, 3 App. 17.

When the summation of witness recalled the jury rendered their verdict the presumption is that the jury did not desire to have their testimony reiterated. Colter v. State, 37 App. 284, 33 S. W. 576.

This right of recall is limited to the request of the jury, and the court cannot be held to error because it refused recall on request of attorneys. Wilson v. State, 37 App. 372, 35 S. W. 396, 33 S. W. 624, 29 S. W. 373.

It was not reversible error to permit a witness to answer questions asked by the foreman of the jury after they had retired, where he testified to no new or additional fact, but testified precisely or substantially as previously testified by him. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

Necessity of defendant's presence.—See art. 756, and notes.

Recalling on courts' own motion.—See post, art. 756, and notes.

Depositions.—Depositions may be reread when the jury disagree as to their correctness. Wilson v. State, 3 App. 139, 12 S. W. 729, 19 S. W. 117.

Different or additional evidence.—If the witness changes his statement to the prejudice of the defendant, it is material error. Tarver v. State, 43 Tex. 564; Edmundson v. State, 7 App. 116.

Presumption.—When a witness is recalled to restate his testimony in the absence of a showing what the evidence first given was, and what given on recall was, it will be held that the witness restated his evidence correctly. Killman v. State, 53 App. 570, 112 S. W. 96.

Ground for new trial.—See art. 827 (6), and notes.

Art. 756. [736] Defendant shall be present, when.—In every case of felony, the defendant shall be present in the court when any such proceeding is had, as mentioned in the three next preceding articles. His counsel shall also be called. In cases of misdemeanor, the defendant need not be personally present. [O. C. 617.]

In general.—If instructions given at the instance of a defendant are lost, the judge cannot repeat them orally to the jury, even in a misdemeanor case, in the absence of the defendant. Chamberlain v. State, 2 App. 451; Caston v. State, 31 App. 394, 29 S. W. 553.

If the defendant in a murder trial is not present when a witness is recalled to restate his evidence the case will be reversed. Burton v. State, 46 App. 493, 81 S. W. 742.

The court may not, in the absence of accused, withdraw from the jury, asking for the testimony of designated witnesses received without objection, the consideration of the testimony directly bearing on the issues. Cowart v. State (Cr. App.) 115 S. W. 311.

It is improper for the court to communicate with the jury, in the absence of accused. Booth v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 932.

It was improper for the court, at the jury's instance to have read to them a portion of the testimony of a witness, in the absence of defendant's counsel, who was sent for, but could not be found. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 197.

Art. 757. [737] If a juror become sick after retirement.—If, after the retirement of the jury, in a felony case, any one of them becomes so sick as to prevent the continuance of his duty, or any accident or circumstance occurs to prevent their being kept together, the jury may be discharged. [O. C. 618.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 976.

Validity of article.—This article is not in conflict with constitution, art. 1, sec. 14, declaring that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the same offense. Woodward v. State, 42 App. 188, 58 S. W. 135.

Illness of child.—The serious and probably fatal illness of the child of a juror is a circumstance of such necessity as authorizes and justifies the discharge of the jury. Woodward v. State, 42 App. 188, 58 S. W. 135.

Necessity of judicial finding.—A judicial finding of sickness is necessary before the jury is discharged. Upchurch v. State, 36 App. 634, 34 S. W. 206, 44 L. R. A. 694.

The juror can not be excused and his place supplied, but the entire jury must be discharged, and another jury impaneled. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557; Hill v. State, 10 App. 618. The defendant may, however, waive the rights thus secured to him but in person. A want of a waiver by his counsel will not bind him. Snel­ling v. State, 15 App. 249; ante, art. 23, and notes; Arcia v. State, 28 App. 198, 12 S. W. 599.

Art. 758. [738] In misdemeanor case in district court.—In a misdemeanor case, in the district court, if nine of the jury can be kept together, they shall not be discharged but, if more than three of the twelve are discharged, the entire jury must be discharged. [Const., art. 5, § 13; Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 82, § 19.]

Verdict by nine jurors in misdemeanor case.—See, post, art. 765.

Art. 759. [739] Disagreement of jury.—The jury may be discharged after the cause is submitted to them, when they can not agree, and both parties consent to their discharge, or where they have been kept together for such time as to render it altogether improbable they can agree; in this latter case, the court, in its discre­tion, may discharge them. [O. C. 619.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 977.

In general.—After a felony case has been submitted the jury can not be discharged, unless there is no probability of their agreement, unless for one of the causes specified in article 757, ante, or unless it be with the consent of the defendant, or by the final adjournment of the court. See, upon this subject, Schindler v. State, 17 App. 488; Varnes v. State, 20 App. 107; Pizano v. State, 20 App. 109, 21 Am. Rep. 613; Brady v. State, 21 App. 869, 1 S. W. 469; Ellison v. State, 12 App. 557; Hill v. State, 10 App. 618; Early v. State, 1 App. 248. 28 Am. Rep. 491; Clark v. State, 28 App. 189, 12 S. W. 729, 19 Am. St. Rep. 817; Arcia v. State, 28 App. 198, 12 S. W. 599; O'Connor v. State, 28 App. 228, 13 S. W. 14; Rudder v. State, 29 App. 263, 15 S. W. 717; Dow v. State, 31 App. 278, 20 S. W. 583. Penn v. State, 36 App. 140, 35 S. W. 972.

The judicial discretion vested by this article is not measured by "reasonable time." Powell v. State, 17 App. 245.

Length of time of deliberation.—Where, on a trial for pandering lasting only from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. the jury were kept together until 6 p. m. the following day, and then reported that they could not agree, the court did not abuse its discretion by discharging them without accused's consent. Jones v. State, 72 App. 490, 182 S. W. 1145.

Under the statute, the length of time required by the jury to consider its verdict before it is discharged is for the court's discretion, and no abuse of discretion is shown in a case where the jury were held from 4:30 p. m. on May 31st until 10:30 a. m. on May 32d, when they found a verdict. Matthews v. State, 72 App. 654, 163 S. W. 733.

Recollect in judgment.—The judgment discharging the jury is not valid unless it finds and recites that the jury have been kept together such a length of time that it is not probable they will agree. Wright v. State, 35 App. 158, 32 S. W. 791.

The jury had withdrawn after the court sent a message to the court to the effect that there was "no hope of reaching a verdict," and that they wanted to be discharged, to which the court responded, in the absence of accused and his counsel, "Tell the jury as long as there is life, there is hope, and this court lasts four or five weeks longer." Held, that the court's remark was not of itself reversible error. Booth v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 923.

The remarks of the court to the jury, after they had retired and deliberated for about 24 hours, and reported that they could not agree and asking for a discharge that the case had to be settled by some 12 men, that the court did not know of any 12 men who could do the work better than the jury, that the jury could settle the case and ought to do so, that the court would hold session until the business was disposed of, and that the jury should retire and consider a verdict, were not objectionable as coercing a verdict. Rippetoe v. State (Cr. App.)
148 S. W. 811.

Jeopardy.—Ante, art. 9, and notes.
A discharge of the jury under this article in defendant's absence and over the obligation of his counsel, is a bar to another prosecution. Rudder v. State, 29 App.
262, 15 S. W. 717.

Art. 760. [740] Final adjournment discharges jury.—A final adjournment of the court, before the jury have agreed upon a verdict, discharges them. [O. C. 620.]
See generally, Dow v. State, 51 App. 578, 20 S. W. 583; Ex parte Juneman, 29
App. 486, 32 S. W. 503.

Art. 761. [741] If no verdict, cause may be again tried, etc.—
When a jury has been discharged, as provided in the four next preceding articles, without having rendered a verdict, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term. [O. C. 621.]
In general.—After a mistrial, the case stands as if there had been none; and if the defendant is not ready for another trial, he must apply for a continuance.
It is beyond the legal authority of the court to discharge the jury in the absence of the defendant and such discharge bars further prosecution. Rudder v. State, 29
App. 262, 15 S. W. 717.
Under this article and art. 715, ante, it was not error to refuse defendant a continuance after a mistrial because there were no qualified regular jurors. Branch

Art. 762. [742] Court may proceed with other business.—The court may, during the retirement of the jury, proceed to any other business and adjourn from time to time, but shall be deemed open for all purposes connected with the case before the jury. [O. C.
622.]
In general.—Miller v. State, 32 App. 266, 22 S. W. 880.
Subject to statutory restrictions, the order and regulation of business in the trial courts is under their discretionary control, and not revisable on appeal when no prejudice to the defendant is shown. It was held not error to proceed with a trial for theft during the postponement of a trial for rape for one day in order to 648.
During an intermission in a criminal trial, it was not error for the court to permit a special judge in another case to take an oath and enter an order in such

Article 763. [743] Definition of "verdict."—A "verdict" is a declaration by a jury of their decision of the issues submitted to them in the case, and it must be in writing and concurred in by each member of the jury.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 947.
Cited, Robertson v. State, 62 App. 216, 142 S. W. 533, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 440; Essery v. State, 72 App. 414, 163 S. W. 17.
Nature and requisites of verdict.—A verdict must be sufficient in itself, and its defects can not be amended and cured by inference from other parts of the record, except that the charge of the court may be looked to, to identify the offense as found by the jury. Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 416; Marshall v. State, 4 App. 549; Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44; Henderson v. State, 5 App. 334; Chester v. State, 1 App. 763; Vincent v. State, 10 App. 229.

It must be responsive to the charge of the court and sufficiently certain to identify the transaction with that alleged in the indictment, and to bar another prosecution. Senterfit v. State, 1 App. 327; Vincent v. State, 10 App. 330.

It must speak the truth between the state and the defendant, as to the offense charged in the indictment. Buster v. State, 42 Tex. 315.

The verdict must be in writing, and must be concurred in by all the members of the jury. Wooldridge v. State, 13 App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 768; Buster v. State, 42 Tex. 315.

Verdicts are to have a reasonable intendment and to be given a reasonable construction. They are not to be avoided unless from necessity originating in doubt of their import, or immateriality of the issue found, or of their manifest tendency to work injustice, or their failure to contain that which some express provision of the statute requires they should contain. Walker v. State, 12 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; McMillan v. State, 7 App. 100; Bland v. State, 4 App. 15; Williams v. State, 5 App. 226; Partain v. State, 22 App. 100, 2 S. W. 544.

A verdict is certain, when the intention of the jury in connection with the pleadings and charge is understood. McGeaw v. State, 27 App. 670, 40 S. W. 367.

When a verdict is so defective and uncertain that the court can not know for what offense to pass judgment, it should not be received, or, having been received, should be set aside. Guest v. State, 24 App. 530, 7 S. W. 242; Shelton v. State, 27 App. 453, 11 Am. St. Rep. 200.

In a prosecution for false swearing, the district attorney wrote out a verdict and handed it to a juror, who signed it as foreman, and as thus signed it was read by the clerk. The juror did not retort or deliberate as to their verdict, nor did the member speak to any other member in the room in connection with it. No juror had not been elected foreman, nor was there any consultation among the jurymen as to the matter, though the judge, after the verdict was handed to the clerk, asked the jury if they agreed to it, and they nodded their heads. Held, that the verdict was erroneous. Wooldall v. State, 55 App. 513, 125 S. W. 501.

A verdict is sufficient where a judgment properly rendered on it will bar another prosecution for the same offense. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 100.

Form of verdict.—Technical objections to the want of form in wording will be disregarded. Lindsey v. State, 1 App. 227. And so will technical and unsubstantial objections. Reynolds v. State, 17 App. 412.

And so where several defendants are on trial, under the same plea, and the finding of the jury is the same as to all of them, it will be sufficient to refer to them as the "defendants." If, however, they should find a verdict as to one, or more, differing from the verdict as to another, or others on trial, it would be necessary to name in the verdict each defendant to whom a finding applies, so as to render certain the finding of the jury as to each defendant. Williams v. State, 5 App. 235. See, also, Plumley v. State, 8 App. 529, for a sufficient identification of the defendant by the record.

The verdict must be in writing, but it is not imperative that it be written upon the indictment, nor that the jury shall have the indictment with them in their deliberations. Mau v. State, 15 App. v. 199, 46 Am. Rep. 321; Mobley v. State, 25 App. 288; Hooper v. State, 9 App. 522.

When there is but one defendant on trial, the verdict need not designate him by name. It is sufficient to refer to him as "the defendant." George v. State, 17 App. 419; Williams v. State, 5 App. 226.

Verdict written with lead pencil is good. Ellis v. State, 30 App. 601, 18 S. W. 139.

Need not be dated. Hardy v. State, 37 App. 55, 35 S. W. 615.

The foreman wrote out the verdict on the court's charge and signed it, and, as about to leave the jury room a juror said that he should not be written on the indictment, when the foreman unfolded the indictment, and discovered that there was a verdict written thereon, and stated that there must be a mistake, and they must have the wrong indictment, and they called the sheriff's attention to the indictment, which was returned to the jury room without any verdict on it, and the jury believed that they had gotten the right indictment instead of the one on which the verdict had been written, whereas the foreman wrote the same verdict of guilty on the indictment which he had written on the charge, and was not injurious in the proceedings in writing out the verdict. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1134.

That the verdict in a larceny case read, "We, the jurors, find," instead of, "We, the jury, find," did not render it insufficient. Skinner v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1007.

A verdict, in a prosecution for burglary, reading, "We, the jury, find, the defendant guilty of burglary as charged, and assess his punishment at two years in the penitentiary," was not insufficient as omitting the word "confined." Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1161.

The rule of idem sonans obtains in the construction of verdicts, which is, that Verdict will not be disturbed on account of bad writing or spelling. Cockerell v. State, 32 App. 685, 26 S. W. 421.

Responsiveness to issues.—The verdict must respond to the indictment under P. C. art. 1360, for driving stock to market without bill of sale. Senterfield v. State, 41 Tex. 186.

A verdict, convicting defendant of an attempt to rape, rendered upon the solo is se of an assault with intent to cause rape, is not responsive to the issues. Wyt ias v. State, 64 App. 236, 142 S. W. 585.

Number of jurors concuring.—Verdict of conviction by four jurors agreed to by the parties is a nullity. Archer v. State, 51 App. 46, 100 S. W. 769.

Different counts.—Indictment contained a good and a bad count and the court submitted both to the jury. Held, that the verdict, because uncertain upon which count it was rendered, cannot stand. Peacock v. State, 37 App. 418, 35 S. W. 964. Where there are two counts, verdict should show upon which count it is based. Shell v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 207.

Surplusage.—A verdict, in a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, is not erroneous, because it finds that accused should pay the costs, as these would be assessed against him, regardless of the verdict. McIndoo v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 225.

Clerical mistake.—When the verdict as set forth in the judgment was insuffi sient, it was held, on appeal, that it was manifest that the insufficiency was the result of a clerical mistake, the verdict as actually rendered being elsewhere se

Impeachment of verdict.—A verdict can be neither explained nor impeached by the affidavit, deposition, or other sworn statement of a juror. Weatherford v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. App. 520, 31 S. W. 251, 57 Am. St. Rep. 525.

Jurors will not be allowed to impeach their verdict by alleging that different members of the jury misunderstood the testimony of a witness. Ulmer v. State, 71 App. 579, 160 S. W. 1188.

Art. 764.  [744] In felony case, twelve jurors must concur, etc.

—Not less than twelve jurors can render and return a verdict in a felony case, and the verdict shall be signed by the foreman.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 947.

Number of jurors rendering verdict.—A jury of more than twelve persons is an illegal one and can not render a legal verdict. Bullard v. State, 38 Tex. 564, 19 Am. Rep. 89.

Necessity of signing.—Prior to the enactment of the preceding article, the verdict need not have been signed by the foreman, though that was held to be the better practice. Morton v. State, 3 App. 510; Williams v. State, 5 App. 615. See, also, Const. art. 5, sec. 13; ante, art. 4.

The verdict in a felony case must be signed by the foreman; such signature not necessary in a misdemeanor verdict. Barton v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1092.

The verdict of the jury need not to have been signed by the foreman or any others of the jury, even in a felony case. Mackey et al. v. State (Cr. App.) 351 S. W. 802.

Signature.—The foreman having signed the verdict, it was not vitiated because he did not write "foreman" in full, but an abbreviation. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 506.

Presumptions as to signing.—A judgment as shown by the record on appeal rec ited that the jury was composed of 12 men, whose names were given, but the ver dict signed by the foreman was by a name not corresponding to any of those re cited as in the panel. This discrepancy, however, was not adverted to or noticed in the motion for a new trial, and was not questioned or raised by bill of excep ions, affidavit, or otherwise. Held that, in absence of proof, it should be held that accused was tried by a jury of 12 required by Const. art. 5, § 13, and Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 655; the foreman's name being presumed to be improperly stated in copying the verdict. Petty v. State, 59 App. 586, 129 S. W. 615.

Art. 765.  [745] When nine jurors may render verdict, etc.—In cases of misdemeanor, in the district court, where one or more of the jurors have been discharged from serving after the cause has been submitted to them, if there be as many as nine of the jurors remaining, those remaining may render and return a verdict; but, in such case, the verdict must be signed by each one of the jurors rendering it. [Act Aug. 1, 1876, p. 12, § 19.]

See, ante, art. 758; Const. art. 5, sec. 13.

Art. 766. [746] Six jurors in county court.—In the county court, in all criminal actions, the jury consists of six men, and the verdict must be concurred in by each of them.

See Const., art. 5, sec. 17; ante, arts. 4, 645.

Consent to trial by less than six.—The accused in a misdemeanor may waive his right of trial by jury, and this implies his right to consent to a jury of fewer than six persons. This waiver must be shown by the record on appeal. Stell v. State, 14 App. 59.

Where defendants, on trial for a misdemeanor, agreed to try the case before a jury of five, which was done without objection pending the trial, an objection by themselves, after conviction, that they were tried by a jury of five men only, was too late. Mackey et al. v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 802.

Art. 767. [747] When jury have agreed, etc.—When the jury have agreed upon a verdict, they shall be brought into court by the proper officer; and if, when asked, they answer that they have agreed, the verdict shall be read aloud by the clerk; and, if in proper form and no juror dissents therefrom, and neither party requests to have the jury polled, the verdict shall be entered upon the minutes of the court. [O. C. 623.]

During recess of the court for dinner a verdict was returned to the judge, who received it without formally reopening court. Held, that the court was open for all purposes connected with the case before the jury, and a formal reopening of the court for the purpose of receiving the verdict was not necessary. Templeton v. State, 5 App. 398.

It can not be received on Sunday, when the term of court expired by limitation at twelve o'clock the night previous. Ex parte Junemann, 28 App. 486, 13 S. W. 783.

Entry of verdict.—An entry that the verdict was returned into court by the "grand jury duly impaneled to try said cause" was held not vitiated by the word "grand." Stewart v. State, 4 App. 519.

It is not essential that the verdict should be "filed," but only that it be entered upon the minutes. Williams v. State, 7 App. 162; Huffman v. State, 28 App. 175, 12 S. W. 588; Ex parte Junemann, 28 App. 486, 13 S. W. 783.

Length of deliberation.—A verdict rendered by the jury after being out not exceeding 10 minutes will not be set aside as the result of passion or prejudice on the sole ground of the shortness of the time of deliberation; counsel having made lengthy arguments. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 185.

Art. 768. [748] Polling the jury.—It is the right, either of the state or of the defendant, to have the jury polled, which is done by calling separately the name of each juror and asking him if it is his verdict. If all, when asked, answer in the affirmative, the verdict shall be entered upon the minutes; but, if any juror answer in the negative, the jury shall retire again to consider of their verdict. [O. C. 624.]

See Williams's Cr. Forms, 571, 972.

Manner of polling.—In polling a jury, it is not intended that the jurors shall be interrogated further than to ask each of them the direct question: "Is that your verdict?" If he answers in the affirmative, his answer is conclusive, and further inquiry is not permissible. Dean v. State, 17 App. 69.

Dissent by juror.—What constitutes.—A verdict is good although a juror may hesitate or explain when it is delivered, provided he does not retract. See instances: Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 625; Jack v. State, 26 Tex. 1.

Application of statute.—Neither this nor the succeeding article was modified by the act of the thirtieth legislature, page 51 (arts. 646, 648, 601-903, C. C. P.). Derden v. State, 56 App. 396, 120 S. W. 486, 130 Am. St. Rep. 996.

Entry of verdict.—See art. 767.

Art. 769. [749] Defendant must be present, when.—In cases of felony, the defendant must be present when the verdict is read, unless he escapes after the commencement of the trial of the cause; but, in cases of misdemeanor, it may be received and read in his absence. [O. C. 625.]

See article 646.

See ante, art. 767; Rudder v. State, 29 App. 262, 15 S. W. 717.

Presence of defendant and counsel.—In a felony case the defendant must be present when the verdict is received, but the presence of his counsel is not essen-

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

[TITLE 8]

Art. 770. [750] Verdict must be general.—The verdict in every criminal action must be general; when there are special pleas upon which the jury are to find, they must say in their verdict that the matters alleged in such pleas are true or untrue; where the plea is not guilty, they must find that the defendant is either “guilty” or “not guilty;” and, in addition thereto, they shall assess the punishment in all cases where the same is not absolutely fixed by law to some particular penalty. [O. C. 626.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 946, 954, 957.

1. 2. Forgery. 3. Requisites and sufficiency in general. 4. — Verdicts held sufficient. 5. — Verdicts held insufficient. 6. — Mistakes of grammar or spelling. 7. Finding of guilt—General or special verdict. 8. — Sufficiency in general. 9. — Specifying offense. 10. — “Guilty as charged.”

1, 2. Forgery.—See notes under Pen. Code, arts. 924, 946.

3. Requisites and sufficiency in general.—In construing a verdict the object is to get at the meaning of the jury. Chester v. State, 1 App. 705. And a verdict is sufficient when it appears that the jury have clearly expressed an intention to find the defendant guilty of the crime charged in the indictment, and to assess his punishment within the terms of the law. Williams v. State, 5 App. 226; Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44; McMillian v. State, 7 App. 100; McCoy v. State, 7 App. 379.

The court, in determining whether a verdict is sufficient, must seek to arrive at the meaning of the jury and give it the reasonable intention, and where the jury has expressed an intention to find accused guilty as charged in the indictment, and to assess his punishment in terms of law, the verdict is sufficient as against technical objections. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 100.

4. — Verdicts held sufficient.—The verdict in a local option case used the word “indictment” instead of “information” and omitted the word “fine” before the amount assessed as a fine; held, sufficient. McGee v. State, 37 App. 668, 40 S. W. 967.

A verdict finding accused guilty, and imposing a “fine of $50 and 40 days in jail,” shows that accused was fined $50 and that his imprisonment should be 40 days in jail. Ellis v. State, 58 App. 639, 130 S. W. 171.

A verdict, reciting that the jury found defendant guilty as charged in the indictment and assessed his punishment at a fine of $25 and 20 days in jail, was not fatally defective, because accused was tried on a complaint and information, instead of an indictment, and because the word “confinement” was omitted in connection with the “20 days in jail.”Craig v. State, 62 App. 296, 127 S. W. 977.

A verdict, “We the jury find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and assess his punishment at death,” signed by the foreman, was not void for uncertainty. Zonigo v. State, 63 App. 138 S. W. 712, In Re, 102 S. 560.

A verdict in criminal slander, “We, the jury, find the defendant, C., guilty according to the law and evidence of the case, and affix the fine to the lowest limit, which is $100,” is sufficient. Curl v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 602.

The finding of the jury in the instant case was sufficient. “We, the jury, find accused guilty and assess the penalty at five years in the penitentiary,” is sufficient. Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 580.

A verdict that we, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment and assess his punishment at two years in the penitentiary, is neither unintelligible nor vague. Dugat v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 789.

A verdict, in a prosecution for selling liquor without a license, “We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged, and assess his fine at $500 and 30 days in jail.” Figueredo v. State, 71 App. 371, 103 S. W. 179.

5. — Verdicts held insufficient.—Where the offense charged was robbery, a verdict: “We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of agreeing to the commission of the offense, and is liable as a principal offender, and assess the punishment at seven years in the state penitentiary,” was held insufficient. Ring v. State, 42 Tex. 362.
On trial for aggravated assault, the verdict was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at a fine of $15." Held, insufficient. Hayes v. State, 33 App. 546, 28 S. W. 202.

On trial for murder the jury returned a verdict finding defendant guilty, and assessing his punishment at death, but did not state the degree; held, while this is such an irregularity as requires a reversal of the case, it does not amount to an acquittal of murder in the first degree. Garza v. State, 39 App. 355, 46 S. W. 245, 73 Am. St. Rep. 927.

6. — Mistakes of grammar or spelling.—A verdict reading, "We the juror find the defendant guilty, and assess his punishment death," is intelligible. Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348.

Verdicts are to have a reasonable intention, and to receive a reasonable construction, and are not to be avoided, unless from necessity, originating in doubt of the exact import of the words used, or their manifest tendency to work injustice, or their failure to contain that which some express provision of the statute requires they shall contain. Incorrect orthography, or ungrammatical language will not vitiate a verdict. Walker v. State, 13 App. 615, 44 Am. Rep. 710, note; Wooldridge v. State, 13 App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 761; Bland v. State, 4 App. 15; Reynolds v. State, 17 App. 415; Williams v. State, 5 App. 226; Curry v. State, 7 App. 91; McMillan v. State, Id. 100.

The following verdict was held sufficient: "We, the jurys, find defend gitty and assess his punishmes at 90 days imp. county jake." Hallig v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 922.

In a prosecution for misdemeanor, a verdict, "We, the juror, find the defendant guilty and se his pently at 66 days in jail & $25.00 fine," is not reversible error, as it is not unreasonable in its wording. Willingham v. State, 62 App. 325, 44 S. W. 470, reversed.

A verdict that the jury find the defendant 'guilty' and 'assess' his punishment," etc., was not vitiated by the misspelled words. Alsup v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 624.

On a trial for aggravatated assault, a verdict, "We * * * find the defendant guilty of aggrevate assault & assess his punishment in the county jail one month and fine him one hundred dollars ($100.00)," is sufficient. Yates v. State, 72 App. 279, 162 S. W. 499.

A verdict, "We the jury find the Defenda.— Guilty of Man Slaughter and Assess his punishment at two years in the State Penitentary," signed by a juror, followed by the word, "Fourman," is sufficient as against a motion in arrest. Lopes v. State, 73 App. 624, 166 S. W. 154.

7. Finding of guilt—General or special verdict.—Verdict must be general, finding defendant either guilty or not guilty. It must be general as contradistinguished from special. Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 410.

8. — Sufficiency in general.—A verdict must declare that the jury find the defendant guilty. An omission of the word "find" vitiates the verdict, and such omission cannot be补ed in the judgment. Shafer v. State, 29 S. W. 187.

The form of the verdict, in the event of conviction, as prescribed by the charter in this case, was as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Mack Crook, guilty as an accomplice to murder of the first degree in the killing and murdering of James H. Black, as charged in the indictment," etc. Held correct. Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

A verdict: "We find the defendant guilty," etc., omitting the words "the jury," held, insufficient. Boudout v. State, 37 App. 515, 40 S. W. 405.

Also a verdict: "We the jury find the defendant guilty as in the indictment," leaving out the word "charged" was held sufficient. Styles v. State, 37 App. 599, 40 S. W. 498.

A verdict which finds defendant guilty as charged in the complaint, when he was charged by information based on a complaint is sufficient. Jackson v. State, 37 App. 612, 40 S. W. 498.

Verdict, "We, the jury, find defendant guilty as in the indictment;" held, sufficient. Styles v. State, 37 App. 599, 40 S. W. 498.

The information charged that on or about February 17th accused unlawfully, etc., carried a pistol. The verdict was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the information," Held, that the verdict found accused guilty of unlawfully carrying a pistol on or about February 17th. Greer v. State, 62 App. 81, 135 S. W. 451.

In a prosecution for theft, a verdict that "we, the jury, find defendant guilty and assess his punishment at two years confinement in the penitentiary," is not open to objection that defendant was not found guilty as charged. Franklin v. State, 63 App. 438, 140 S. W. 1091.

In a prosecution for following the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibited territory, where the indictment charged the offense with particularity, a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment, signed by the foreman, together with the judgment and sentence thereon, are sufficient. Monroe v. State, 70 App. 246, 157 S. W. 154.

9. — Specifying offense.—A verdict finding the defendant "guilty of the crime," was held sufficient in a case of horse theft. Lindsay v. State, 1 App. 327.

Guilty of "burglary and theft" was held unintelligible and bad. Haney v. State, 2 App. 504.

But a verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of felony, and assess the years in the penitentiary," did not state the particular offense charged was guilty of theft of the property of the value of twenty dollars or over, that being the offense with which he was charged. Miles v. State, 3 App. 59. So a verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor in driving from the county trespass end cow br." was held insufficient. Senterfield v. State, 41 Tex. 137. So a verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor, and assess his punishment at one hundred dollars, held insufficient, Howell v. State, 10 App. 298. So on an indictment for the theft of two hogs, a verdict finding the defendant guilty "of theft of property of the sum of twelve dollars," was held insufficient. Collins v. State, 6 App. 647; Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 971.

An indictment being held good for theft, but the charge submitting only driving from the range, a general verdict will be good for that offense. Marshall v. State, 4 App. 549. And see Foster v. State, 21 App. 50, 17 S. W. 548.

But of a horse, the offense of driving the animal from its accustomed range was also submitted to the jury, and they returned a general verdict of guilty, assessing the punishment at two years' confinement in the penitentiary. Held, that the verdict was sufficient to support a judgment for the offense. Foster v. State, 21 App. 50, 17 S. W. 548. So, where the indictment charged theft of cattle, but the charge of the court submitted to the jury only the offense of driving the animals from their range, and the jury returned a general verdict of guilty, assessing the punishment at a fine of one dollar, the verdict was held sufficient. Marshall v. State, 4 App. 549. So, where an information charged an aggravated assault, and a general verdict of guilty was returned, assessing the punishment at a fine of $109, the verdict was held sufficient, inasmuch as that was the offense charged, and no minor offense was submitted by the court to the jury. Franks v. State, 4 App. 431. See, in this connection, Dreyer v. State, 11 App. 651.

A verdict of guilty will be construed as meaning guilty of the offense charged. Steinberger v. State, 35 App. 492, 34 S. W. 617.

Where the court submitted the issues of guilt of disfiguring the person of another, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, and of aggravated assault, punishable by fine, a verdict of guilty, but not designating the punishment at a term in the penitentiary was sufficiently definite to show the purpose of the jury to find accused guilty of disfiguring. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W., 567, 46 L. R. A. 6 (N. S.) 1132.

A verdict on a trial for murder, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at twenty years in the penitentiary," rendered under instructions submitting murder and manslaughter, is insufficient to sustain a judgment adjudging accused guilty of murder. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 19.

10. — "Guilty as charged."—A verdict which finds the defendant "guilty as charged in the indictment" is sufficient without naming the offense, and is the proper form for a verdict of guilty, except in murder, or when the intention is to find for a lower degree. Henderson v. State, 5 App. 124; Nettles v. State, 1d. 356; Johnson v. State, 58 App. 526, 117 S. W. 127.

But where the indictment charged theft of property of the value of twenty dollars, a verdict that finds the defendant "guilty as charged in the indictment" is a sufficient finding that he is guilty of theft of property of the value of $20. Colea v. State, 11 App. 153. See, also, Lawrence v. State, 29 App. 536.

On trial for rape in the court in his charge submitted rape, also assault with intent to rape. The jury brought in the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment," and then assessed his punishment at fifty years confinement in the penitentiary; held, this verdict found defendant guilty of rape and the court properly treated it so. McGee v. State, 39 App. 190, 46 S. W. 709.

The indictment charged accused with the theft of a watch of the value of $133 and also $31 in money. The court submitted two phases of theft—first, theft of property over $50; second, that under $50. The following verdict was returned: "We find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment, and assess his punishment at 4 years' confinement in the penitentiary." Held, that the verdict showed that the defendant had been convicted of a felony. Burton v. State, 62 App. 618, 135 S. W. 1019.

Where accused was charged only with aggravated assault, a verdict that "we, the jury, find accused guilty as charged," was sufficient. Noland v. State, 68 App. 275, 140 S. W. 100.

An objection to a verdict, "we find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment of murder in the first degree," on the ground that it is uncertain in that the indictment embraces all the degrees of homicide, is hypercritical. Wisnioski v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 218.

Where an accused is charged with aggravated assault, but the court limits the jury to a consideration of simple assault, a verdict of "guilty of assault as charged in the information" is sufficiently definite. Carpenter v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 833.

In a prosecution for robbery, where the indictment charged that it was committed by the exhibition of deadly weapons, a verdict finding accused guilty as charged in the indictment, and assessing his punishment at the lowest term of imprisonment prescribed, is sufficient because there are no degrees of robbery, however committed. Dosh v. State, 72 App. 239, 161 S. W. 979.

A verdict, in a prosecution for an aggravated assault, reciting that the jury find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment is sufficient to show a conviction for aggravated assault, and of no other offense. McCraw v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 957.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault on a female, a verdict finding defendant guilty as charged and assessing his punishment at a fine of $25, which was the lowest penalty for aggravated assault and the highest for simple assault, was not defective, as indefinite concerning the offense of which accused was convicted, since any assault on prosecutrix would be an aggravated one by virtue of the statute. Carmicle v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 223.

11. — Conformity to pleading and proof.—Under an indictment charging an assault with intent to murder, a verdict of guilty of assault with "attempt" to murder was held sufficient. Hart v. State, 33 Tex. 352.
"Guilty of aggravated assault and battery" was held good, although the indictment did not charge a "battery," and none was proved. Bittick v. State, 49 Tex. 117.

The indictment charged the theft of a "horse (a stallion)," the verdict found the defendant guilty of the theft of a "horse (a gelding)," as charged in the indictment, was not responsive to, and did not support the indictment. Persons v. State, 3 App. 240.

And where the indictment charged theft of a horse, and the verdict was a general verdict, as charged in the indictment, "assessing the punishment at two years' confinement in the penitentiary, it was held that the conviction was for the offense defined in art. 1356, and that the verdict was sufficient. Foster v. State, 21 App. 80, 17 S. W. 548.

A general verdict of guilty responds sufficiently to an indictment which contains two counts, even if one of the counts be bad, inasmuch as the verdict will be applied to the good count. Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Pitner v. State, 27 App. 269, 29 S. W. 662; Southern v. State, 34 App. 144, 29 S. W. 750, 53 Am. St. Rep. 708; Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901; Noollemann v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 710.

Counts are independent of each other, and the first or any other may be quashed without affecting the remainder; and a general verdict applies to those which are good. The position is that the conviction is to the good count. King v. State, 10 Tex. 251; State v. Rutherford, 13 Tex. 24; State v. Yarbough, 19 Tex. 161; Henderson v. State, 2 App. 88; Boren v. State, 23 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463.

When there are two counts with different penalties and the defendant pleads guilty to first, the court can submit both to the jury and jury can convict on second. Dancey v. State, 36 App. 616, 24 S. W. 113, 355.

When there are two counts and both are submitted, and the charge states the penalty incorrectly as to one, but gives the correct minimum of each, which is the same, and the jury assess the minimum, the court can apply a general verdict to either count. Lovejoy v. State, 40 App. 36, 48 S. W. 520.

When there are under the same indictment, and different penalties, if the judgment ascertaining punishment is application of general verdict to the count which the penalty sustains, Jordan v. State, 40 App. 190, 48 S. W. 371.

Where an indictment charged burglary and theft in a single count, and the charge was sustained, and the court was convicted to the issue of burglary, a general verdict of guilty was held to authorize a judgment for burglary. Turner v. State, 22 App. 42, 2 S. W. 619.

A general rule is that a general verdict of guilty responds sufficiently to an indictment which contains two counts, even if one of the counts be bad, inasmuch as the verdict will be applied to the good one. But exceptions to this rule are when the counts charge a felony which includes other offenses which are misdeemeanors, and all the offenses are not indicted, and the verdict is the same as the charge of the count. This is because a general verdict as to the offense included is only a penalty and not a conviction of the offense included, and such is the penalty sustains, Jordan v. State, 40 App. 190, 48 S. W. 371.

Where an indictment in separate counts charges distinct offenses the proper practice is to retire the jury and let them apply the verdict to one of the counts. Crawford v. State, 31 App. 51, 19 S. W. 766, and cases cited.

When there are several assignments of perjury and proof to sustain any good assignment, a general verdict will be sustained. Beach v. State, 32 App. 240, 22 S. W. 976; Moore v. State, 32 App. 406, 24 S. W. 95.

When an indictment separate counts charges distinct offenses the proper practice is to retire the jury and let them apply the verdict to one of the counts. Southern v. State, 34 App. 144, 29 S. W. 750, 53 Am. St. Rep. 702.

If the defendant requests it the jury should be required to pass upon each count separately. 10.

When an indictment in one count charges defendant as principal and in another as an accomplice, a general verdict is insufficient. Isacca v. State, 36 App. 505, 38 S. W. 49.

On an indictment for theft and receiving stolen goods the application of a general verdict of guilty to one count; held, no error. Rosson v. State, 27 App. 87, 38 S. W. 758.

This rule will not apply when a preliminary motion to quash was overruled, when it should have been sustained to as certain defective counts. Under such conditions, the submission of all the counts was error. McMurry v. State, 35 App. 521, 48 S. W. 1010.

Where there is a fatally defective count in an information, and the case is submitted on all counts, a general verdict of conviction cannot stand. Smith v. State, 57 App. 609, 124 S. W. 665.

Where, on the trial of an indictment in two counts, one for forgery, and one for uttering the instrument as forged, the jury were instructed to disregard the first count and base their verdict on the second count, and the verdict rendered was 2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—37 577.

“guilty as charged in the indictment,” the verdict would apply only to the second count. Rhea v. State, 70 App. 258, 156 S. W. 642. Where one of the counts submitted attempted to charge a violation of the rules and regulations of the live stock sanitary commission, while the others charged violations of Pen. Code 1911, art. 1233, relative to permitting contagious and infectious diseases to run at large, or on other animals not so affected, and the verdict found accused guilty of “breaking the laws of the live stock sanitary commission,” the verdict could not, for the purpose of upholding a conviction, be applied to the counts charging a violation of article 1233, since a verdict general in its terms may be applied to any count submitted, a verdict which makes a specific finding as to the count under which accused is found guilty cannot be so applied. Rhea v. State, 70 App. 258, 156 S. W. 642. In one information charging, in two counts, that accused played cards at a place other than a private residence occupied by a family, and that he knowingly went into and remained at a place where cards were being played, where the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction under the second count, a general verdict of guilty should be applied to that count. Sloan v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 156.

A judgment of conviction can be based only upon a verdict of guilty. To find the defendant “guilty” is not sufficient. Wilson v. State, 12 App. 481; Taylor v. State, 5 App. 569. Nor is it permissible to explain by which the jury intimated to find the defendant guilty, and that the word “guilty” was intended for the record. Harwell v. State, 21 App. 251, 2 S. W. 1038. If the word “guilty” was used and the letter “t” in the word “guilty” does not vitiate the verdict. Partain v. State, 22 App. 100, 2 S. W. 851; Walker v. State, 13 App. 615, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note. And to find the defendant “guilty” is sufficient. Koontz v. State, 41 Tex. 570. So to find him “guilty” is sufficient. Curry v. State, 7 App. 91.

A verdict which read, “We the jurors find the defendant guilty and of murder in the first degree,” etc., was held sufficient. Walker v. State, 13 App. 615, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note.

14. Special pleas.—See art. 574.

Where the defendant has pleaded former conviction or acquittal, as well as not guilty, and such plea under the evidence has been submitted to the jury, as well as the plea of not guilty, the verdict must expressly find whether the special plea is true or untrue, and if it fails to do so, the conviction, on appeal, will be set aside. Davis v. State, 42 Tex. 494; Deyton v. State, 44 Tex. 446; Taylor v. State, 4 App. 29; Brown v. State, 7 App. 619; McCampbell v. State, 9 App. 124, 35 Am. Rep. 726; Pickens v. State, Id. 270; White v. State, Id. 390; Smith v. State, 18 App. 274; Davis v. State, 24 App. 392, 6 S. W. 390; Brown v. State, 24 App. 320, 6 S. W. 572. In a misdemeanor case, where a jury has been waived, and the cause has been submitted to the judge, an express finding on the special plea is not required. Taylor v. State, 4 App. 29; Munch v. State, 25 App. 30, 7 S. W. 341; Wright v. State, 27 App. 447, 11 S. W. 457; English v. State, 29 App. 174, 15 S. W. 677.

Where the evidence did not show that the judgment of conviction pleaded in bar was final, or whether an appeal had been taken therein, or a motion for new trial therein granted, the court properly refused to submit the issue of former conviction to the jury. Lindsley v. State, 22 App. 505, 123 S. W. 573.

15. Assessment of punishment—Province of jury.—If verdict finds accused guilty of any offense within the different degrees embraced in the indictment, it must assess the punishment, except where it is absolutely fixed by statute. Buster v. State, 42 Tex. 315.

By the adoption of the Revised Penal Code the penalty for murder has been changed from death absolutely, to the alternative of death or confinement for life in the penitentiary, and the jury must not only find by their verdict that the defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree, but they must assess the punishment at either death or confinement in the penitentiary. For the general verdict of guilt of murder in the first degree without assessing the punishment, will be insufficient to support a judgment. Doran v. State, 7 App. 385; Wooldridge v. State, 13 App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 706. When under the law the punishment was death absolutely, a general verdict of guilty of the capital offense, without assessing the punishment, was sufficient. Murray v. State, 1 App. 418; Boothe v. State, 4 App. 292; Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 473.

There was evidence justifying a conviction of murder in the first degree, whether the death penalty should be assessed was for the jury. Zunagov. State, 63 App. 58, 138 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 665.

The indeterminate sentence law passed at the regular session of the 33d Legislature, 1911, having been declared unconstitutional, any person charged with murder alleged to have been committed October 1, 1901, for which he was placed on trial in July, 1913, was entitled as of right to have his punishment assessed by the jury. Johnson v. State, 23 App. 178, 101 S. W. 1098.

The case returned to the same court, where the verdict found accused guilty and recommending a suspension of sentence, without assessing the punishment, the court properly refused to receive the verdict, and directed the jury to assess the punishment in a misdemeanor case is not authorized by law. Smith v. State, 75 App. 206, 162 S. W. 335.

In a criminal case, whether tried before or after the enactment of the indeterminate sentence law of August 18, 1913 (Acts 33d Leg. [1st Called Sess.] c. 5), the court must require the jury to assess the penalty. Williamson v. State, 72 App. 618, 163 S. W. 435.

The first indeterminate sentence law having been declared invalid, the court properly required the jury to assess the punishment in a prosecution for assault to rape in Sullivan v. State, 73 App. 258, 164 S. W. 843.

In a prosecution for procuring an abortion, it was proper to submit to the jury the question of the punishment to be assessed upon conviction. Link v. State, 73 App. 82, 164 S. W. 957.

16. SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL.—A verdict which assessed the punishment at “ten years in the penitentiary,” was held good, the word “confinement” being unnecessary. Jones v. State, 7 App. 103; Lindsay v. State, 1 App. 327; Taylor v. State, 14 App. 540; Carroll v. State, 24 App. 313, 6 S. W. 42; Gage v. State, 9 App. 255; Reynolds v. State, 17 App. 415.

Where the verdict assessed the punishment at “twelve months imprisonment,” the law fixing it at “one year,” the verdict was sustained. Mitchell v. State, 2 App. 407.

When the punishment prescribed by the law is fine and imprisonment in the county, or such imprisonment without fine, a verdict assessing a fine, without imprisonment, also, is insufficient. Fowler v. State, 9 App. 149; Johnson v. State, 18 App. 7; Sager v. State, 11 App. 110.

Verdict assessed punishment at a fine of $3000/160—0 and fifteen days in jail, held it plainly appeared that the jury intended to assess a fine of $300 and was sufficient. Kelly v. State, 36 App. 469, 38 S. W. 43.

Where the word “dollars” or the dollar mark is omitted, the verdict will not be set aside, as the sense is clear. O’Dochartey v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 657. A verdict finding a person guilty of murder in the second degree, assessing his “punishment twenty years’ confinement in the penitentiary,” is insufficient, though the word “at” is omitted between “punishment” and “twenty.” Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 251.

The verdict must state the place of confinement of a minor under the age of sixteen years, but it is not necessary that it state the finding of the jury as to the age of defendant. Cole v. State, 32 App. 221, 24 S. W. 510.

A verdict assessing punishment at two years in the “Reform School” cannot be upheld. It should have stated the house of correction and reformatory. Evans v. State, 35 App. 485, 34 S. W. 265.

A verdict sentencing one convicted of a felony to the “reform school” is void. Evans v. State, 35 App. 485, 34 S. W. 265.

Where accused was charged with cattle theft as a felony, a verdict finding him guilty as charged in the indictment, and assessing his punishment at “two years imprisonment,” was not defective for failure to fix the place of punishment, since there could be no other place therefor than the penitentiary. Willcox v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 598.

18. Excessiveness of punishment.—A verdict can not be held excessive if the punishment assessed is within the statutory limits, unless in a clear case of the abuse of the discretion which the law has confided to juries. Tague v. State, 4 App. 147; Davis v. State, Id. 456; Johnson v. State, 5 App. 423; Drake v. State, Id. 649; Jones v. State, 14 App. 85; Chiles v. State, 2 App. 37; Davis v. State, 15 App. 594; Pate v. State, 73 App. 278, 164 S. W. 1018.

19. Mistakes in spelling.—When a verdict assessed a “find” against the defendant, it was held sufficient, the context showing that the word “find” was intended for the word “fine.” Bland v. State, 4 App. 15.

A verdict assessing the punishment at confinement in the state “penity” was held bad. Keeler v. State, 4 App. 327. But confinement in the state “prisin” was held proper. McCoy v. State, 7 App. 379.

A verdict assessing the punishment at “2 years in the state penitenlery,” was held sufficient. Hoy v. State, 11 App. 32. So was a verdict assessing the punishment at five years “confine­ment in the penitentiary.” McMillan v. State, 7 App. 109.

On trial for theft the verdict was, “We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of two years.” Held, the verdict was good and sufficient without the words “at con­finement,” and they might be rejected as surplusage. Roberts v. State, 23 App. 83, 24 S. W. 955.

In assessing the fine, the jury used “dollars” instead of dollars. Held, sufficient. Short v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 1072.

That the jury used the word “asses” instead of “assess” does not render the verdict void. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 250.

Objection to the verdict was that it used the word “years” instead of “years,” it appearing that the word might be called either. The verdict was held sufficient. Jones v. State, 35 App. 565, 34 S. W. 631.
A verdict, "We the jury find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at [sentence] when the State was entitled to the misspelling, to sustain a judgment. Smith v. State, 63 App. 192, 140 S. W. 1096.

A verdict was returned, finding accused guilty of manslaughter and assessing his punishment at three years in the penitentiary. By direction of the court it was submitted to find him guilty of murder in the second degree, guilty of manslaughter, and to assess his punishment by confinement in the penitentiary for three years, and in the appended verdict the word "three" was misspelled "tree." No objection to the verdict was made at the time, and judgment was entered thereon, fixing the penalty at three years' confinement in the penitentiary. Held, that the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial on account of the mispelling the word "three"; accused not having been in-

20. Correction of verdict.—See art. 774, and notes.

Art. 771. [751] When offene of different degree is charged.—Where a prosecution is for an offense consisting of different degrees, the jury may find the defendant not guilty of the higher degree (naming it), but guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment or information. [O. C. 630.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 356, 545-550.
See Pen. Code, art. 114, and notes.

Offenses for which conviction may be had.—Party charged with robbery cannot be convicted of an aggravated assault if the indictment does not contain allegations which would make it known for aggravated assault, but he can be convicted of a simple assault, if the elements of such assault are stated. Foreman v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 485.

One indicted for an assault with intent to rape, and for an attempt to have carnal knowledge of a female without her consent, and with burglary at nighttime, with intent to have carnal knowledge of the female without her consent, may

Under this article and art. 772, subd. 13, under an indictment charging theft privately from a person, the jury could convict of the offense of attempt to commit theft, from the person, if the evidence authorized such conviction. Bell v. State, 70 App. 496, 156 S. W. 1194.

Specifying grade or degree of offense.—In Illustration, see Slaughter v. State, 493, 3 S. W. 577; Hays v. State, 33 App. 546, 28 S. W. 263; Styles v. State, 37
App. 599, 40 S. W. 499.

In murder cases, the verdict of conviction must find the degree. McCloud v.
State, 37 App. 237, 32 S. W. 104, following Buster v. State, 42 Tex. 315.

Where the charge only submits one degree of a crime, the verdict need not designate the degree. If it says guilty as charged it is sufficient. Millard v.
State (Cr. App.) 50 S. W. 273.

Muder by poison is per se murder of first degree, but the verdict to be sufcient must expressly find that degree. Brooks v. State, 42 App. 347, 60 S. W. 53.

On a prosecution for assault, must find the grade of the offense, whether aggravated or simple assault; and a verdict merely finding accused and assessing his punishment at a fine, is insufficient. Evans v. State, 57
App. 174, 122 S. W. 392.

A verdict of guilty should specify the grade of the offense of which it was intended to convict accused. Scott v. State, 60 App. 318, 121 S. W. 1072.

Sufficiency of verdict.—When an indictment charges an offense, which includes other offenses, and all the offenses covered by the indictment are submitted to the jury by the charge of the court, a general verdict of guilty, assessing a punishment applicable to either of the offenses, is uncertain and will not support a judgment.

Thus, where the indictment charged theft of cattle, and also driving cattle from their accustomed range, and both offenses were submitted to the jury, a general verdict of "guilty as charged in the indictment," assessing a punishment applicable to either offense, was held insufficient, and did not authorize the judgment for theft of cattle. Guest v. State, 24 App. 530, 7 S. W. 242. See, also, in this connection, Miller v. State, 16 App. 417. And on the same subject, see Taylor 215.

In all felony cases which include degrees, except murder cases, a general verdict of guilty, affixing a punishment corresponding with the offense charged in the indictment, will support a judgment of conviction for that offense. Nettles v.
State, 5 App. 286; Henderson v. State, Id. 134. See further under heads of the different offenses including degrees. Foster v. State, 25 App. 543, 8 S. W. 694.

This article distinguishes between the degree directly and affirmatively charged in the indictment, and the lesser degrees of the same offense, charged by inclusion.

The article contemplates only such included offenses of lesser degree, as are necessarily included by inference within the allegations as distinguished from the degrees directly and affirmatively charged; and a verdict which responds to the higher offense, directly charged, is not uncertain, because it might also be applied to an included offense of lesser degree not so charged. McGee v. State, 39 App. 190, 45 S. W. 709, following Nettles v. State, 5 App. 286, and overruling on the point, Guest v. State, 24 App. 590, 7 S. W. 242.

Where the issues of both aggravated and simple assault were submitted and the 580

Art. 772. [752] Offenses consisting of degrees.—The following offenses include different degrees:

1. Murder, which includes all the lesser degrees of culpable homicide, and also an assault with intent to commit murder.

2. An assault with intent to commit any felony, which includes all assaults of an inferior degree.

3. Maiming, which includes disfiguring, wounding, aggravated assault and battery and simple assault and battery.

4. Arson, which includes every malicious burning made penal by law.

5. Burglary, which includes every species of house breaking and theft or other felony when charged in the indictment in connection with the burglary.

6. Theft, which includes swindling and all unlawful acquisitions of personal property punishable by the Penal Code.

7. Perjury, which includes all false swearing made punishable by the Penal Code.

8. Bigamy, which includes adultery and fornication.

9. Adultery, which includes fornication.

10. Riot, which includes unlawful assembly.

11. Kidnapping or abduction, which includes false imprisonment.

12. Every offense against the person includes within it assaults with intent to commit said offense, when such attempt is a violation of the penal law.

13. Every offense includes within it an attempt to commit the offense, when such an attempt is made penal by law. [O. C. 631.]

Explanatory.—Degrees in murder have been abolished. See arts. 1140, 1141.

Selling intoxicating liquors.—The offense of pursuing the business or occupation of selling intoxicating liquors and the offense of making a single sale are separate and distinct, and are not degrees of the same offense. Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.

Subdivision 2.—In view of article 771 and 837, one indicted for an assault with intent to rape, and for an attempt to have carnal knowledge of a female without her consent, and with burglary at nighttime, with intent to have carnal knowledge of the female without her consent, may be convicted of aggravated assault. Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1073.

One charged with an aggravated assault may be convicted of a simple assault if the facts justify such finding. Yelton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 318.

Subdivision 3.—Maiming includes disfiguring, wounding, aggravated assault and battery, and simple assault and battery. Pool v. State, 59 App. 482, 129 S. W. 116.

Subdivision 6.—It has been held that under an ordinary indictment for theft a conviction may be had of the offense defined in P. C. art. 3566, post, of "wilfully taking into possession and driving, etc., live stock," etc. Foster v. State, 21 App. 89, 17 S. W. 548; Turner v. State, 7 App. 506; Powell v. State, 1d. 467; Marshall v. State, 4 App. 549; Campbell v. State, 22 App. 262, 2 S. W. 835; Counts v. State, 37 Tex. 588; Bawcom v. State, 41 Tex. 189; Guest v. State, 24 App. 539, 7 S. W. 245; Smith v. State, 21 App. 194, 17 S. W. 558.

It has been held that under an ordinary indictment for theft, a conviction may be had for swindling. Davison v. State, 12 App. 231. But see Huntsman v. State, 12 App. 619.

So far as it includes embezzlement, this subdivision is unconstitutional and void. Huntsman v. State, 12 App. 619, overruling Whitworth v. State, 11 App. 414. ("Embezzlement," following the word "swindling," originally struck out.)

"Theft from the person" is a distinct offense from general theft, and under an ordinary indictment for theft, a conviction cannot be had for theft from the person. Gage v. State, 22 App. 125, 2 S. W. 635; Harris v. State, 17 App. 152; Kerr v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122. A conviction for the offense of embezzlement cannot be had under an indictment for theft. Huntsman v. State, 12 App. 619; Lott v. State, 24 App. 725, 14 S. W. 277, overruling Whitworth v. State, 11 App. 414. The decision in Whitworth v. State, supra, was based upon article 772, subd. 6 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which article was adopted in the revision of the Codes, but was held unconstitutional in Huntsman v. State, supra. Prior to the enactment of said article it had been held that a conviction for embezzlement could not be had under an indictment for theft. Simco v. State, 8 App. 406; s. c., 9 App. 338.

Conviction for the offense under article 1348 cannot be sustained under an indictment charging theft in general terms—and vice versa. Torres v. State, 33 App. 128, 3 S. W. 128; Williams v. State, 20 App. 153, 16 W. 620.

It is error to charge that defendant can be convicted of driving stock from accustomed range, under an indictment for theft. Chambers v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 251.

The offenses of theft, of being an accomplice to the theft, and of receiving and concealing the stolen property, are entirely separate and distinct, and under an indictment charging one of such offenses, a party cannot be convicted of either of the others. Kaufman v. State, 70 App. 438, 159 S. W. 58.

Proof that plaintiff, acting as agent for the defendant in the purchase of a mule, drew upon the defendant for a sum in excess of that paid for the mule, and converted the excess to his own use, is sufficient to justify a statement by defendant that he was a thief. Burkholder v. Lyons County (Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 13.

Subdivision 8.—It has been held that a former acquittal of bigamy can constitute no bar against a charge of adultery. Swancock v. State, 4 App. 105. This decision was rendered, however, before the adoption of the Revised Codes, and whether or not, in view of this subdivision, it would be adhered to, remains to be determined.

Subdivision 12.—An indictment for robbery will not support a conviction for an assault with intent to murder. Manson v. State, 21 App. 229, 17 S. W. 251.

Subdivision 13.—In view of article 771, under an indictment charging theft privately from the person, the jury could convict of the offense of attempt to commit theft from the person, if the evidence authorized such conviction. Bell v. State, 70 App. 466, 166 S. W. 1194.

Art. 773. [753] Informal verdict may be corrected.—If the jury find a verdict which is informal, their attention shall be called to it, and, with their consent, the verdict may, under the direction of the court, be reduced to the proper form. [O. C. 627.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 270.

Power to correct verdict.—It is not only within the power, but it is the duty, of the trial judge, to reject an informal or insufficient verdict, call the attention of the jury to the infornmality or insufficiency, and either have the same corrected with their consent, or send them out again to consider of their verdict. Taylor v. State, 11 App. 240; Jones v. State, 7 App. 103; Alton v. State, 41 Tex. 38; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Guest v. State, 24 App. 530, 7 S. W. 241; Robinson v. State, 25 App. 315, 4 S. W. 904; Gage v. State, 9 App. 250; May v. State, 8 App. 191; Rocha v. State, 38 App. 69, 41 S. W. 911; Jones v. State, 54 App. 507, 113 S. W. 761; Murphree v. State, 55 App. 316, 115 S. W. 1190.

The judge can cause the verdict to be corrected so as to show the specific finding of the jury. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 633.

Matters which may be corrected.—Verdict of murder, assessing penalty at 99 years imprisonment, being not only informal but contrary to the charge of the court, and not such a finding as the court could receive, was not only proper but the duty of the court to reject the verdict, call the attention of the jury to the charge and send them out again to consider of their verdict. Taylor v. State, 14 App. 349.

Two parties being jointly on trial for burglary, and the jury having returned a verdict finding both guilty, and affixing the punishment at confinement in the Reformatories, if the defendant was informed that appellant could not be tried on the application for the full term of years; whereupon they considered their verdict and assessed the punishment of both defendants to commitment in the penitentiary. Held, a new trial having been

On the other hand, when there were two counts in the indictment, the verdict was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty," etc. The court, in the presence of the jury, and with their consent, inserted after the word "guilty," "of theft of property of the value of twenty dollars;" Held, no error. Southern v. State, 34 App. 124, 20 S. W. 750, 15 Am. St. Rep. 762.

An incorrect date may be corrected by direction of the court. Hardy v. State, 87 App. 55, 35 S. W. 615.

The court may, on the jury finding accused guilty on all the counts of an indictment and assessing a fine for each, refuse to accept the verdict and direct the jury to retire and designate under which count a verdict of guilty is based if accused is found guilty, and accused may not complain of the action of the court where the jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of one offense and assessing his punishment in a sum less than the sum assessed on all the counts.

A change, in the form of a verdict, finding accused guilty of murder in the first degree, and fixing his "sentence" at life imprisonment, so as to omit from the verdict the name of accused and insert the word "punishment" in place of the word "sentence," made by the court before the verdict was filed, and in the presence of the jury, was not erroneous; the jury assenting to the change. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 263, 141 S. W. 989.

The court properly has the jury correct a verdict assessing a greater penalty than allowed by law, and with consent of the jurors, properly inserts the words, "and assesses his penalty at;" Held, no error. South v. State, 26 App. 287, 10 S. W. 995.

The court properly has the jury correct a verdict assessing a greater penalty than allowed by law, and with consent of the jurors, properly inserts the words, "and assesses his penalty at;" Held, no error. South v. State, 26 App. 287, 10 S. W. 995.

Effect of correction.—Where the verdict convicting defendant of murder in the second degree misstates the words "first returned, mistrial, imprisonment," and "penitentiary," but the court before their final discharge corrected the verdict in those particulars, and such corrections, on submission to the jury, were agreed to by them, the verdict is proper in form. Catron v. State, 63 App. 377, 149 S. W. 237.

Reconvening jury.—Where the court in a prosecution for felony has accepted the verdict and discharged the jury, it is without authority to reconvene the jury and permit them to amend their verdict, and such amended verdict is a nullity. Essery v. State, 72 App. 414, 168 S. W. 17; Coleman v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 150.

Anticipating informalities in instructions.—Since the court could have orally called the jury's attention to the informality of a verdict brought in, and instructed the jury to correct the form, or had it corrected, or, had it done so, its consent, it was not reversible error to orally instruct as to the form of the verdict in the first instance, though it may have been better to have instructed thereon in writing. Ragsdale v. State, 61 App. 145, 134 S. W. 234; Noland v. State, 63 App. 275, 140 S. W. 149.

Sufficiency of verdict.—The verdict must be sufficient in itself, and its defects cannot be aided and cured by inference from other parts of the record. Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 410; though the charge may be looked to in order to identify the offense as found by the jury. Marshall v. State, 4 App. 559; Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44.

Art. 774. [754] If jury refuse to have verdict corrected.—If the jury refuse to have the verdict altered, they shall again retire to their room to deliberate, unless it manifestly appear that the verdict is intended as an acquittal; and, in that case, the judgment shall be rendered accordingly, discharging the defendant. [O. C. 628.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 970.

See, ante, article 773.

See Robinson v. State, 23 App. 315, 4 S. W. 904; Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 33.

Power of court.—If an improper verdict is returned the court can direct the jury to retire and find properly. Jones v. State, 64 App. 507, 138 S. W. 762.

The court may, on the jury finding accused guilty on all the counts of an indictment and assessing a fine for each, refuse to accept the verdict and direct the jury to retire and designate under which count a verdict of guilty is based if accused is found guilty, and accused may not complain of the action of the court where the jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of one offense and assessing his punishment in a sum less than the sum assessed on all the counts. Day v. State, 62 App. 527, 138 S. W. 123.

The court properly has the jury correct a verdict assessing a greater penalty than allowed by law, and, with consent of the jurors, properly inserts the words, "and assesses his penalty at;" Held, no error. South v. State, 26 App. 287, 10 S. W. 995.

When verdict operates as acquittal.—An informal or illegal verdict will not operate as an acquittal, unless plainly so intended. Robinson v. State, 23 App. 315, 4 S. W. 904; Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39; Ellis v. State, 27 App. 190, 11 S. W. 111.

Art. 775  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

such of the defendants as they deem guilty and acquit others.  [O. C. 632.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 951, 952.

Operation of article.—In Alonzo v. State, 15 App. 378, 49 Am. Rep. 267, it is held that in a prosecution for adultery, the acquittal of one of the parties to the offense will not bar a prosecution against the other.  The reason and doctrine of that decision seems applicable also to the offenses of bigamy and miscegenation.

No exception is made in any case to the operation of the preceding article.  Alonzo v. State, 15 App. 378; see also, Flynn v. State, 8 App. 398; Allen v. State, 34 Tex. 250; Williams v. State, 5 App. 226; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 712; Willson's Cr. Forms, 951, 952.

Where an indictment charged that three persons named did unlawfully and willfully make an assault on prosecutor, etc., all were not entitled to an acquittal unless the evidence showed that they jointly committed the offense, but one or more could be convicted according to the proof of guilt.  Madrid v. State, 71 App. 450, 161 S. W. 92.

Form of verdict.—A verdict finding defendants guilty jointly, is good.  Davidson and Thompson v. State, 49 App. 289, 49 S. W. 372, 50 S. W. 365.

Upon the trial of joint offenders, if the same results in conviction, the verdict must assess the separate penalties and the judgment must conform.  The verdict in this case reads as follows:  "We, the jury, find the defendants guilty as charged, and assess the fine at $1000;" to which verdict the judgment conforms.  Held, that the verdict assesses a joint penalty, and that the judgment is not final.  Cunningham v. State, 26 App. 81, 9 S. W. 62.

On a trial of two defendants jointly for murder the verdict was:  "We the jury find the defendants Art Mootry and Albert Rolley guilty of murder in the first degree and assess their punishment at death;" held sufficient.  Mootry et al. v. State, 35 App. 456, 33 S. W. 877, 34 S. W. 126.  See, also, Polk et al. v. State, 35 App. 495, 34 S. W. 623.

Objection that on the separate trials of joint defendants, one was awarded the minimum and the other the maximum penalty, will not be entertained.  Taylor v. State, 28 App. 281, 42 S. W. 234.

Instructions.—In a prosecution of four jointly indicted and tried for offering to bribe a witness, an instruction that, where several defendants are tried together, the jury may convict such of them as they may believe from the evidence, beyond reasonable doubt, to be guilty, and acquit the others, in view of a verdict acquitting part of the defendants and convicting one, was not misleading as requiring the jury, on finding one guilty, to find all guilty.  Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 709.

Art. 776.  [756] Same subject.—Where the jury, on the trial of several defendants, agrees to a verdict as to one or more, and can not agree as to others, they may find a verdict as to those in regard to whom they agree; and judgment shall be rendered accordingly; and the case, as to the rest, may be tried by another jury.  [O. C. 633.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 963.

Art. 777.  [757] In case of acquittal.—In all cases of acquittal, the defendant shall be immediately discharged from all further liability upon the charge for which he has been tried, and judgment upon the verdict accordingly shall be at once rendered and entered.  [O. C. 635.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 962, 968, 998.

Art. 778.  [758] Judgment entered immediately.—In every case of acquittal or conviction, the proper judgment shall be entered immediately.  [O. C. 634.]

Necessity of defendant's presence.—A judgment of conviction can not, in a felony case be entered in the absence of the defendant, but may be in a misdemeanor case.  Mapes v. State, 12 App. 85.  But the presence of the defendant is not essential when the clerk performs the ministerial act of entering the judgment in the minutes.  Powers v. State, 23 App. 421, 5 S. W. 153.

Entry of judgment.—Judgment on a verdict can not be entered on Sunday.  Shumway v. State, 7 App. 235, 25 Am. Rep. 462.  See, also, Flynn v. State, 8 App. It is made the duty of district and county attorneys to see that the judgments in criminal cases are properly entered by the clerk, and, when practicable, they 554 should be present when the minutes are read. Rule 119 for District Courts (142 S. W. xxvi). The judgment should be rendered and entered upon the minutes as soon as practicable after the verdict has been received, except that it can not be entered on Sunday, though a verdict may be received on Sunday. McKinney v. State, 3 App. 698.

An informal entry will not invalidate a judgment entered during the term, especially when the judge approved the minutes. Hurley v. State, 35 App. 292, 33 S. W. 351.

The failure of the judge to sign the minutes of the court does not invalidate the judgment. Hurley v. State, 55 App. 332, 33 S. W. 594.

— Necessity.—When a party has been adjudged guilty of contempt of court, he cannot be legally imprisoned until the judgment has been entered up and a writ of commitment issued. Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 521, 34 S. W. 625.

Correction of judgment.—The trial court cannot conform the judgment to the verdict after an appeal has been taken. Robison v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 912.

Entry nunc pro tunc.—See note to article 889.
See Estes v. State, 38 App. 508, 43 S. W. 982.

Art. 779. [759] When verdict of guilty in felony.—When a verdict of guilty is rendered in any case of felony, the defendant shall remain in custody to await the further action of the court thereon. [O. C. 634.]

Art. 780. [760] Acquittal for insanity.—When the defendant is acquitted on the ground of insanity, the jury shall so state in their verdict. [O. C. 636.]

Insanity as defense.—See Pen. Code, art. 39, and notes.

Insanity after conviction.—See Title 12, chap. 1.

Instructions.—The preceding article is merely directory, and though, in a proper case, the jury should be instructed in accordance therewith, the omission to do so, if without apparent injury to the defendant, will not be material error. Massengale v. State, 24 App. 181, 6 S. W. 35. See, also, Frizzell v. State, 39 App. 42, 16 S. W. 751.

Art. 781. [761] Verdict on plea of guilty by person insane.—When a jury has been impaneled to assess the punishment upon a plea of "guilty," they shall say in their verdict what the punishment is which they assess; but where the jury are of opinion that a person pleading guilty is insane they shall so report to the court and an issue as to that fact be tried before another jury; and if, upon such trial, it be found that the defendant is insane, such proceedings shall be had as are directed in title twelve, chapter one, of this Code. [O. C. 637.]

See arts. 1019, 1025, 1056.

Art. 782. [762] Conviction of lower is acquittal of higher offense.—If a defendant, prosecuted for an offense which includes within it lesser degrees, be convicted of an offense lower than that for which he is indicted, and a new trial be granted him or the judgment be arrested for any cause other than the want of jurisdiction, the verdict upon the first trial shall be considered an acquittal of the higher offense; but he may, upon a second trial, be convicted of the same offense of which he was before convicted, or any other inferior thereto. 2. Illustrative cases.—For criminal decisions, citing and illustrating the preceding article, see Myers v. State, 3 App. 8; Morrill v. State, 5 App. 447; Jackson

3. Application of common law rules.—Common law rules of procedure, see art. 26, ante, and notes.

The code changes the common law rules of evidence only in so far as they conflict with its provisions. It does not repeal such rules by implication. Tilley v. State, 21 Tex. 296.

The common law rule with regard to the examination of witnesses is practically and entirely done away with in effect by C. C. P. art. 718, which provides that the court shall allow testimony to be introduced at any time before the argument of the case is closed, if it appears that it is necessary to a true administration of justice. Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 16 S. W. 737.

Thus, as to procedure rules of construction and questions of evidence is not in force in this state with reference to the enforcement of criminal laws except when our legislative body has failed to provide rules with reference to those questions. Lonkmann v. State, 32 App. 563, 25 S. W. 22; Cline v. State, 36 App. 270, 26 S. W. 1699, 27 S. W. 722, 61 Am. St. Rep. 820.

In the absence of a statutory provision on the subject, the rules of the common law, when ascertained, are as binding as if written in the Code or statutes. Blue­man v. State, 33 App. 60, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

The proof of ownership of cattle by proof of the brand is a matter settled by the statutes with which the common law has nothing to do. McKenney v. State, 32 App. 568, 25 S. W. 426, 49 Am. St. Rep. 795.

4. Judicial notice.—In general.—See article 475; Vernon's S y l s e s ' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3857.

In an early case it was held that the offense of betting at "rondo" had been so frequently brought under discussion and adjudication before the courts, that judicial cognizance would be taken that it was a "gaming table" within the meaning of statute. State v. Mann, 13 Tex. 61.

In proper cases a court will assume knowledge of natural laws, such as are ordinarily admitted by experience, or demonstrated by science. But this rule will not authorize the assumption that a boy sixteen years of age presented the physical appearance of a person under the age of twenty-one years. Hunter v. State, 35 App. 444, 51 Am. Rep. 319.

Judicial knowledge is taken by the courts of this state that, as fixed by the act of congress, ten cents in silver is a dime, legal tender coin of the United States, of the value of ten cents. Means v. State, 36 App. 475, 17 S. W. 1097.

Courts take judicial notice that "brass knuckles" may be composed of metal other than brass. Louis v. State, 36 App. 52, 35 S. W. 377, 61 Am. St. Rep. 832.

The Court of Criminal Appeals judicially knows that "Alex." is a contraction of the name "Alexander." Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1128.

The court will take judicial notice of the value of United States money. Sims v. State, 64 App. 435, 142 S. W. 572.

Judicial notice is taken that text-books in the Texas public schools impress the idea that alcoholic stimulants are injurious to health and morals. Ex parte Town­send, 54 App. 290, 144 S. W. 728; Ann. Cas. 1914 C, 811.

Under the rule that courts may take judicial notice of facts which form part of the common knowledge of persons of ordinary understanding, judicial notice may be taken of the nature and habits of a hog, and of the results incident to his keeping and confinement within the populous portion of a city. Ex parte Potts (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 221, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629.

The Court of Criminal Appeals knows as a matter of common knowledge that the entire limits of a city include thickly settled and business parts of the city. Ex parte Eradshaw, 70 App. 166, 159 S. W. 259.

Courts take notice of the territorial extent of the jurisdiction and sovereignty exercised de facto by their own government and the local divisions of their country and the relative positions of such local divisions but not of their precise boundaries, further than they may be disclosed in public statutes. Boston v. State, 5 App. 383, 32 Am. Rep. 575.

General statutes, which recognize the location of a place, will authorize judicial knowledge of such location. In the absence of such a statute, and in the absence of knowledge, the court cannot judicially know that a named place is in a particular county. Hoffman v. State, 12 App. 406; Terrell v. State, 41 Tex. 463; Boston v. 589.
Courts of this state judicially know that the Indian Territory is beyond the jurisdiction of this state. Conner v. State, 23 App. 378, 5 S. W. 389. And that the "Muscogee Nation" is the same as the "Creek Nation." Cowell v. State, 16 App. 57.

The courts of this state take judicial notice of the boundaries and limits of counties, and of their relation or contiguity to each other. See the opinion in extenso for proof held sufficient to support an allegation of venue. McGill v. State, 25 App. 495, 8 S. W. 661.

While the court would take judicial notice that L. was the county seat of a county, it could not take judicial notice that a particular store was in L. Stewart v. State, 31 App. 365, 18 S. W. 908.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will take judicial notice that the city of Galveston is in Galveston county, Tex., so that the venue of a crime was sufficiently established in that county, where it was shown have been committed in the city of Galveston. Gossett v. State, 57 App. 43, 122 S. W. 428.

The Court of Criminal Appeals judicially knows the geography of the country, and that Panola county lies north of and adjoining Shelby county. Bussey v. State, 59 App. 360, 127 S. W. 1625.

The Court of Criminal Appeals judicially knows where the respective counties of the state are situated and where and how they are situated with reference to one another, and the location of the county seats and railroads with reference thereto. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 317.

The court judicially knows that Red river is on the northern boundary of the state. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 722.

The Court of Criminal Appeals takes judicial notice that in 1877 Nueces county was much larger than the ordinary Texas county. Sandaval v. State, 72 App. 368, 162 S. W. 1148.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will take judicial notice that, at the time of the enactment of article 631, there were no railroads in the country affording access from one county seat to another. Coffmann v. State, 73 App. 295, 165 S. W. 909.

7. Municipal corporations.—Judicial knowledge of municipal corporations is not chargeable to the courts of this state, inasmuch as the law enables cities and towns of two hundred inhabitants to incorporate, and such corporations are not by public act. Temple v. State, 15 App. 304, 49 Am. Rep. 290. And a court or judge is not charged with judicial knowledge that any designated locality is in an incorporated city or town. Patterson v. State, 222 S. W. 597.

Courts cannot judicially know that towns, even where they are county seats, are incorporated towns. Blitt v. State, 66 App. 525, 121 S. W. 168.

8. Laws and ordinances.—A person cannot be convicted for violation of the county option law, in the absence of proof that such law was adopted in the county, where the prosecution is pending subsequently to the passage of the statute, since judicial notice of the existence of such law will not be taken. Pointer v. State, 60 App. 355, 132 S. W. 136; Woodward v. State, 58 App. 411, 126 S. W. 270; Fierce v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 559.

The Court of Criminal Appeals does not judicially know that prohibition is in force in any given locality in the state, nor can any of the lower courts have such judicial knowledge. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 997; Dormann v. State, 64 App. 104, 111 S. W. 526; Kinnebrew v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 775.

A joint resolution of the legislature is a public statute of which the court is bound to take judicial notice. State v. Deesdenier, 7 Tex. 76.

That municipal corporations are authorized by law to hold elections for city attorney and other officers, was held to be within judicial cognizance. Gallagher v. State, 19 App. 469.

As to whether an act is robbery in a foreign country, State or Territory, can only be shown by introducing the law of such foreign country, State or Territory, in evidence. Smith v. State, 37 App. 342, 39 S. W. 365.

The court knows judicially that a girl just over 12 years of age could not marry in Texas; 14 years being the youngest age at which a marriage could occur. Munger v. State, 57 App. 384, 122 S. W. 874.

The court knows judicially that in Texas a marriage between a white man and negro woman could not be had. Munger v. State, 57 App. 384, 122 S. W. 874.

Where it appears that prohibition was adopted in a county at an election held June 5, 1904, the court will take judicial notice that another election could not have been held, and the law repealed prior to alleged violations between March and September, 1911. Leonard v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 632.

The court cannot take judicial notice that prohibition is in force in any county or subdivision thereof, and the personal knowledge of the presiding judge on a trial for selling liquor in prohibition territory is not judicial knowledge. Jackson v. State, 70 App. 582, 157 S. W. 1196.

The courts will take judicial notice of the time of the commencement of a term of a district court as fixed by a general and public statute. Hudson v. State, 40 Tex. 12.

Judicial cognizance will be taken of the courts of the state, and of the counties in which they are held, and of the judges thereof. Watson v. State, 5 App. 11; Long v. State, 1 App. 769.

A court will take judicial cognizance of the statutory terms of district and county courts, but not of terms of the county court fixed otherwise than by an act of the legislature. Conner v. State, 6 App. 155; Wills v. State, 4 App. 813.

A presumption will be taken of the fact of there being two district courts in a county. Thomas v. State, 59 App. 159, 127 S. W. 1030.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will take judicial notice that in a large part of Texas the district courts are met only twice a year, and that in many of the counties they remain in session for periods of time ranging from one to four or five weeks. Ex parte Looper, 61 App. 129, 131 S. W. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 32.

The Court of Civil Appeals properly took judicial notice of its prior decision determining that a local option election in a county where a liquor dealer's bond was given was invalid. State v. Savage (Tex.) 151 S. W. 531.

The Court of Criminal Appeals would take judicial notice of the date when a former appeal in the same case was decided and the cause reversed, the date when the mandate was issued, or the no motion for rehearing was made, and that two days was ample time for the mandate to reach the district court of Eastland county. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

The Court of Criminal Appeals takes judicial notice of the terms of the district court. Knowlton v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 674.

10. --- Public Officers.—The court takes judicial notice of the names and signatures of its own officers, and where the officer's signature is followed by the word "Clerk" it will be presumed on appeal that he was clerk of the court in which the record was tried. Castaneda v. State, 58 App. 140.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will take judicial notice of the date of the incumbency and resignation of a certain judge, and also of the date on which his successor was appointed and took the oath of office. Porter v. State, 72 App. 71, 180 S. W. 1184.

Where, in a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquor in local option territory, there is no evidence raising the issue that the article sold, which was beer, was not intoxicating, but the case was tried on the theory that it was intoxicating and in refusing an instruction based on the theory that the beer sold was not an intoxicating liquor, as under Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7465, defining "intoxicating liquors" as including fermented liquor, the courts will take judicial knowledge that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Moreno v. State, 64 App. 660, 143 S. W. 156, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 863.

In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, taking judicial notice that beer is an intoxicating liquor and not inducing a presumption against accused, who was proved to have sold beer, without any evidence being introduced that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Moreno v. State, 64 App. 669, 143 S. W. 156, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 863.

The court will take judicial notice that beer is intoxicating, where there is no issue raising the question whether it is intoxicating. Jones v. State, 78 App. 342, 156 S. W. 1191.

12. Effect of Judicial Notice.—When judicial knowledge of a fact can be induced, such fact need not be alleged or proved. State v. Mann, 13 Tex. 61.

A presumption of guilt arises from fabrication of evidence, or attempts to escape or evade justice, when accused of an offense. Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. 578; Sheffield v. State, 43 Tex. 378.

The law presumes, ordinarily, in favor of the regularity of all the proceedings in a case. Meredith v. State, 40 Tex. 480; Escareno v. State, 16 App. 85.

In theft, the fact that the defendant disposed of different recently stolen articles at the same time, warrants the presumption that they came to his possession at that time. Jack v. State, 20 App. 398.

It presumes that an officer has performed his duty properly, but this presumption does not extend to a person not an officer. James v. State, 21 App. 353, 17 S. W. 432.

Where the placing of liquor in a room was depended on as a circumstance to prove that accused charged with perjury in testifying that liquor was not placed in his house knew that the testimony was false, the evidence must show that accused had control of and was in charge of the room, under the rule that the court cannot base one presumption on another presumption. Trinkle v. State, 71 App. 64, 158 S. W. 544.

The law presumes the chastity of every woman, and especially would this be true of a young girl of 17. Blackburn v. State, 71 App. 655, 160 S. W. 887.

Where, in a prosecution in which the prosecution of the public interest, the court is required to conclusively presume that all steps taken were legal, and will not pass on the questions as to whether or not the orders were sufficient. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 552.

14. Relevancy of evidence—in general.—"Relevancy" as applied to evidence means that which conduces to prove a pertinent hypothesis, a pertinent hypothesis being one which, if sustained, will logically influence the issue, so that it is relevant to put in evidence any circumstance which tends to make a proposition at issue true or false, and whatever is a condition either of the existence or nonexistence of a relevant hypothesis may be shown; but no circumstance is relevant which does not make more or less probable the proposition at issue. Beltcher v. State, 71 App. 616, 161 S. W. 453; Lane v. State, 13 App. 266, 184 S. W. 278.

The general rule is, that the evidence must correspond to the allegations, and be confined to the issue; otherwise it is irrelevant, immaterial, and inadmissible. This general exclusion of evidence of collateral facts is a rule not to be ignored, but if in any given case the evidence of collateral facts exists in a case where the evidence, motive, or intent of a party is a material fact in issue, in which case evidence of collateral facts may be admissible. Williams v. State, 41 Tex. 237; Cestere v. State, 1 App. 19; Persons v. State, 3 App. 241; Fore v. State, 5 App. 251; Francis v. State, 7 App. 501; Rye v. State, 8 App. 150; Heard v. State, 9 App. 1; Green v. State, 12 App. 51.

When it becomes necessary to prove motive, intent, or knowledge on the part of the defendant, greater latitude is allowed in the introduction of evidence than is allowed with respect to other issues. Francis v. State, 7 App. 281; Fore v. State, 5 App. 257; Heard v. State, 9 App. 1; Cameron v. State, Id. 322.

Proof that an examining court had denied the defendant bail is irrelevant. Richardson v. State, 9 App. 612.

Where one theory of the defense in a murder trial was, that a state's witness had committed the murder, it was held competent for the state to introduce any evidence that would tend to refute it; and that it was not error to permit the state to prove the intimate personal and business relations existing between the deceased and said witness at the time of the homicide. Walker v. State, 17 App. 16.

And in a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed before an examining court, the complaint upon which the examination was based was held to be relevant and competent evidence for the state, to prove that the alleged false statements were made in a judicial proceeding, etc., but not evidence to be considered in determining the main issue. Higgenbotham v. State, 24 App. 365, 6 S. W. 291. See also, Partain v. State, 22 App. 100; 2 S. W. 854; Gabrowsky v. State, 12 App. 429; St. Clair v. State, 11 App. 267.

Any evidence that goes to explain, illustrate or prove motive for which crime has been committed is admissible even though the fact proved was created after the commission of the offense. Morrison v. State, 40 App. 492, 51 S. W. 355.

It is improper to prove that character of defendant's wife for chastity is had when such evidence has nothing to do with the case. Williams v. State, 49 App. 506, 51 S. W. 220.

As tending to show who brought on the difficulty State can show that defendant and his brother who were acting together, were together drinking, carousing and manifesting a turbulent and lawless disposition. Clay v. State, 49 App. 604, 51 S. W. 376.

In the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife, it is relevant for the state as tending to show motive, that the wife was unfaithful to him, provided it be further shown that at the time of the homicide he had knowledge of her infidelity; but without proof of such knowledge on his part, evidence of her infidelity is irrelevant and inadmissible. Phillips v. State, 22 App. 135, 2 S. W. 611.

In a murder trial, it was held competent for the state to prove that the homicide occurred in a house of prostitution, and that the defendant was the keeper of the house. Wilson v. State, 22 App. 414, 5 S. W. 314.

In was held error for the state to introduce in evidence an order changing the venue in the cause. Jurisdiction is a question addressed to the court alone, and is not a subject for the consideration of the jury. The said order did not relate to any relevant fact in issue. Shamburger v. State, 24 App. 453, 6 S. W. 549.

When the state's theory is that a certain person participated in a crime which is done by the acts of such person, the evidence of the showing that he was present is admissible. Martin v. State (Ct. App.) 30 S. W. 222.

That the person making the complaint, but who was not a witness, had said that he would get even with defendant, was admissible. Simmons v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 294.

On trial for murder, evidence that the neighborhood in which the parties lived was "a lawless and tough place," was inadmissible, unless it was a case of circumstantial evidence, and it was admitted for the purpose of showing that the murder might have been committed by some person other than the defendant. Golin v. State, 37 App. 90, 38 S. W. 784.

That inculpatory articles, alleged to be the property of decedent, were found in the possession of one, and not on a first search, of his premises, goes to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of the evidence. Harris v. State, 62 App. 235, 127 S. W. 373.

In a trial for murder, where the age of the accused was in issue, but where there was no question but that two of the witnesses for him were his parents, the marriage certificate of such parents was inadmissible, since it would not tend to corroborate the testimony of accused or of his parents. En parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 859.

Either party to a criminal case may introduce any pertinent evidence tending to prove an issue or lessen the adverse effect of any proper deduction made by evidence introduced against him. Sweeney v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 883.

In a prosecution for burglary, the owner of the house in which the burglary was alleged to have been committed was properly permitted to testify that a scrutinizing which made a screen door fit closely was pried loose on the day of the entry, and that the latch with which the door was fastened could have been lifted with a penknife. It was irrelevant, under the condition of the premises, as to whether or not the door was hung on the inside, that the lapse of time would go to the weight of his testimony rather than to its admissibility. Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 899.

It had been in jail several weeks before trial and had but a few days to engage counsel was properly excluded. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

In a prosecution of a tax collector for appropriating money collected to his own use, the various sums he took were shown to have been for women about the time he was charged with having embezzled the state's money, and to whom he gave it. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 901.

In a prosecution for offering to bribe a policeman not to arrest a woman and man found together in bed in accused's house, evidence of the general reputation of the woman was admissible. Haller v. State, 72 App. 294, 162 S. W. 872.

Evidence that accused's house was reputed to be a house of ill fame was admissible as tending to show why accused would offer to pay money to the policeman. Haller v. State, 72 App. 294, 162 S. W. 872.

Evidence that accused offered to pay money to first one, and a few minutes thereafter to another, policeman, in the presence of both, was admissible. Haller v. State, 72 App. 294, 162 S. W. 872.

Under Vernon's Snyders' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7233, incorporated towns, become subject to the stock law, if it is adopted, and hence, in a prosecution for violating the stock law, evidence of ordinances of an incorporated town included in the subdivision is admissible. Newsom v. State, 72 App. 419, 163 S. W. 85.

It was not error, in a prosecution for libel, to permit proof of the meaning of the word "renegade," used in the libelous article, as the court could have legally defined the word in its charge. Sampson v. State, 73 App. 575, 166 S. W. 511.

If the body and in the clothes were not admissible to show that deceased had in his possession a considerable sum of money. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 250.

Where, on a trial for theft from the person, accused showed that he did not take prosecutor's money with the intention of appropriating it, but merely pulled it out of prosecutor's shirt front to show to him that he had not lost it, evidence that accused and prosecutor were Odd Fellows was admissible. Burrus v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 991.

Where accused claimed that deceased gave him whisky containing cocaine, and that he was thereby rendered insane, evidence that deceased was drunk on the morning of the homicide was inadmissible. Maddox v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1029.

In a prosecution for the murder of his father-in-law, it was the contention of the state that accused lay in wait for deceased as he went to lodge meeting, and killed him, while accused contended that their meeting was accidental, and that he killed in self-defense. Accused objected to evidence that deceased belonged to a lodge, which met the evening of the killing, on the ground that it was immaterial and would tend to prejudice any juror who was a member of that lodge. It did not appear that any juror was a member of the lodge, nor was the objection that the fact of the lodge meeting was unknown to accused made. Held, that, under the circumstances, the evidence was properly received. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 574.

Where, until accused took the stand and admitted the killing, there was no positive evidence that he had slain deceased, it was not error to permit the sheriff, who arrested accused after discovering the body, to testify to finding a pistol and cartridges secreted in a loft. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 574.

Where, on a trial for passing a forged check, accused questioned the accuracy of the check in evidence, the bank's officers testified that it was a correct forgery, and in general use. Burner v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 109.

In a prosecution for rape on a 13 year old girl, testimony that defendant had told a witness that he had had intercourse with a child of 11, and that it was surprising how young a girl a man could have intercourse with, was inadmissible, but was not error to have had the witness be 0f the age mentioned, or defendant have used language indicating that he referred to her. Haggart v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 285.

Where the identity of accused was a sharply contested issue, one of the prosecution witnesses may testify as to that he recognized accused's voice, and that accused, who had been his chauffeur, addressed him as "son," which was the name habitually employed by other members of his family. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

For other instances of irrelevant evidence, see under heads of the different offenses.

15. Facts in issue.—Under a separate indictment for murder, or assault with intent to murder, it is competent for the state to prove that another committed by the defendant, and that the defendant was present at the time of the commission of the offense, although it is not so alleged in the indictment. Davis v. State, 3 App. 91; Gladden v. State, 2 App. 508; Williams v. State, 42 Tex. 592; Mills v. State, 13 App. 457.

On a false swearing to procure a marriage license, defendant objected to proof that the father and mother objected to the marriage of their minor daughter because such evidence was not authorized by the indictment; held, that evidence was admissible to controvert the alleged false affidavit to the effect that there were no legal objections to said marriage, and which affidavit was traversed by the indictment. Harkrader v. State, 35 App. 243, 23 S. W. 117, 60 Am. St. Rep. 49.

It is admissible to prove the age of a female under an indictment charging defendant, an adult male, with an assault upon such female, although the age of the female is not alleged in the indictment. Hill v. State, 37 App. 279, 28 S. W. 397; S. W. 666, 66 Am. St. Rep. 603.

In a robbery prosecution, the subpena and attachment for a witness, to procure whom accused applied for a continuance, which was denied, as well as testimony that such witness was present at a former term of court, was not admissible in evidence as evidence of diligence on the attendance of such witness. McDaniel v. State, 29 App. 462.

In a prosecution for receiving stolen property, it was competent for the state to prove that defendant had possession of the property because of his knowledge of its theft. W. v. State, 34 App. 147.

Under an indictment for perjury, based on accused giving false testimony before the grand jury, testimony that when accused appeared before the grand jury he was warned that he did not have to testify to anything that would incriminate him, and that if he did testify anything he said could be used against him on the trial of his case, was admissible, though the indictment did not allege that he was so warned. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 933.

In a prosecution for murder, shot deceased while attempting to recover mules that had strayed into deceased's inclosed field, and which he was seeking to impound, it was proper for the state to prove that the stock law (Vernon's Statutes, art. 1514, § 248 et seq.), prohibiting mules and other stock from running at large, had been adopted and was in force in the county wherein the homicide occurred. Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 550.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence of the acts and conduct of the grand jury in the investigation of the crime is inadmissible, where it was not in issue, under a count in the indictment averring that the killing occurred by some means to it unknown, to show that the grand jury could, by diligence, have ascertained the means by which the killing occurred. Satterwhite v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 559.

Voice is a competent means of identification, and a witness who recognized accused's voice over the telephone may testify as to his remarks. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

16. Time and place of criminal act.—In a trial for murder, the evidence showed that the deceased was found dead behind a gambling house. It was held competent for the state to prove that the deceased was found dead behind a gambling house. It was held competent for the state to identify the deceased by the apparel and appearance of the body, and by the description and contents of a valise found a short distance from the body. Tooney v. State, 5 App. 462.

The sheriff cannot testify as to the identification of defendant nor the circumstances under which it was made. Reddick v. State, 35 App. 463, 34 S. W. 274, 66 Am. St. Rep. 56.

A witness may state that he measured tracks on the ground, and may state the character of such tracks, and describe the peculiarity of shoes worn by accused. Boyman v. State, 59 App. 23, 126 S. W. 1142.

On a trial for burglary, it was proper to permit witnesses who identified accused as a regular valet to testify that within 45 hours after the burglary they saw and recognized him and caused his arrest, especially where in the meantime his appearance had been in some measure changed by a change of clothes and by wearing his hair cut. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 785.

In a prosecution for pandering, alleged to have been committed in B. county, evidence that the house of J., to which defendant took his wife, was situated in B. county, Tex., was admissible to prove the venue. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

In a prosecution for adultery, where the state necessarily depended somewhat upon circumstantial evidence, evidence tending to show that persons seen by witness under circumstances indicating the offense were the defendants was admissible as a circumstance bearing upon the identity of the parties. Mackey et al v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 802.

In a prosecution for the theft of belting from a cotton gin, men who had repaired the belt may testify as to their identification of it by the way it had been

In a prosecution for kidnapping, where the place of Jurisdiction of the offense was in issue, testimony of a witness, who was at the place eight days thereafter, detailing facts tending to show that the act of the offense was in fact in this state, was admissible, especially where it was not suggested that conditions had

A witness, who was accused and a third person, together at a named place, could, to fix the time, state that he saw them the night before he learned of the crime charged. Castenara v. State, 70 App. 436, 156 S. W. 1180.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, it was not improper to permit the author to testify that she knew the accused to be seized over the telephone, and heard her on the night of the assault and previous thereto, talking over the telephone. Forrester v. State, 73 App. 61, 163 S. W. 57.

17. — Evidence creating prejudice against accused.—In a prosecution for willfully turning out cattle and refusing to keep them up, evidence that a yearling belonging to accused crawled through a partnership fence into an adjoining lot several miles from the place in question did not tend to establish the charge, but was calculated to prejudice accused before the jury, and objections thereto should have been sustained. Phinney v. State, 59 App. 480, 129 S. W. 249.

On a trial for murder, the admission of evidence that accused prior to the murder, and not connected therewith, consorted with negro prostitutes on a fishing excursion, and drank whisky while so doing, was reversible error, as placing accused
S. W. 1120.

Where the state showed statements by accused to prosecutrix as to his owning property that his claim of ownership was unreliable because merely prejudicing

In a prosecution for arson, there was admitted in evidence a letter written by accused in jail, to B., stating that he had been wantonly and very badly, and requesting him to come to the jail and see accused. B., under the state's theory, was the receiver of property taken from accused's home the day before it was burned; and it was claimed that he said that he thought there was something wrong, but in view of the prejudicial inferences which might be drawn from the letter, it was error to admit it in evidence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 150
S. W. 426.

In a prosecution for assault to murder, it is error to admit in evidence two applications for a continuance made by defendant, where defendant on the stand admitted that he had applied for continuances and stated why he had done so, and there was nothing in the applications which contradicted his testimony. Wilson v.
State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1015.

18. — Circumstantial evidence.—In theft it is not permissible to prove the owner's want of consent to the taking of the property by circumstantial evidence, unless the positive and direct testimony of the owner cannot be produced, and its nonproduction is satisfactorily accounted for. Porter v. State, 1 App. 394; Ersken State, Id. 405; Jackson v. State, 7 App. 363; Lanham v. State, Id. 137; Stewart

But where it is shown that the direct testimony of the owner cannot be produced, and that the failure to produce it is not attributable to any want of dil-gence, or to any fault on the part of the prosecution, then it is perfectly competent and proper to resort to circumstantial evidence. Wilson v. State, 45 Tex. 76, 23
Am. Rep. 159; Poston v. State, 7 App. 422; Foster v. State, 4 App. 246; Trafton v. State, App. 486; Rains v. State, 7 App. 558; Jackson v. State, Id. 363; Clayton v. State, 15 App. 345,

As a general principle, circumstantial evidence, the mind seeks to explore every possible source from which any light, however feeble, may be derived, and it is peculiarly proper that the jury should have before them every fact and circumstance, however slight, which may aid them in reaching a satisfactory conclusion. Greater latitude in the presentation of evidence must necessarily be allowed in cases of circumstantial evidence than those of direct evidence. Cooper v. State, 19 Tex. 449; Landers v. State, 35 Tex. 359; Ballew v. State, 36 Tex. 98; Barnes v. State, 41 Tex.
342; Nofsinger v. State, 7 App. 391; Preston v. State, 8 App. 39; Howard v. State, 8 App. 53; Boudin v. State, Id. 323; Washington v. State, Id. 377; Somerville v.
State, 6 App. 423.

It is the right of a defendant to have every relevant circumstance, from which a conclusion may be drawn favorable to his innocence, considered. Friedgen v. State, 51 Tex. 420; Myers v. State, 24 App. 324, 6 S. W. 194; Bowers v. State, Facts so remotely pertinent as to have no possible weight, or which are incapable of bearing any reasonable presumption or inference prejudicial to guilt, the innocence of the defendant, should be rejected. Bowen v. State, 3 App. 617; Bootie Sharp v. State, Id. 650; Cooper v. State, 7 App. 194.

It is not necessary that evidence should bear directly upon the issue; it is admisible if it serves to prove the issue or constitutes a link in the chain of proof, although it might not justify a verdict in accordance with it. Marshall v. State, State, 25 App. 263, 7 S. W. 107; Monk v. State, 27 App. 640, 11 S. W. 460;
Taylor v. State, 27 App. 463, 11 S. W. 462; Leeper v. State, 29 App. 63, 14 S. W.
598; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 185, 15 S. W. 557; Crass v. State, 30 App. 480, 17
S. W. 306; Reschel v. State, 30 App. 874; 18 S. W. 414.

When the inculpatory evidence is circumstantial, any fact, however unimportant in itself, which tends in the least degree to establish the guilt or innocence of the accused, is competent evidence. In such cases, therefore, the admissibility of circumstantial evidence, which would be deemed irrelevant in a case dependent on direct and positive testimony. In such cases no definite line of demarcation between proximate and remote facts can be drawn. The only criterion of competency is what proved tend to cast any light, howsoever feeble, upon the subject of the inquiry. Preston v. State, 8 App. 30; Washington v. State, Id. 377; Bouldin v. State, Id. 322; Howard v. State, Id. 53; Simms v. State, 10 App. 131; Langford v. State, 17 App. 445.

Circumstantial evidence is defined to be that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis—a pertinent hypothesis being one which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue. Hence, it is relevant to put in evidence any circumstance which tends to make the proposition at issue more or less probable, or which tends, either of the existence, or of the nonexistence, of a relevant hypothesis, may be shown. But no circumstance is relevant which does not make more or less probable the proposition at issue. McGuire v. State, 10 App. 125; Grinnell v. State, 22 App. 26, 2 S. W. 601, 58 Am. Rop. 620.

Circumstances relied on to establish the principal fact at issue, or such as are necessary to the conclusion sought, must be actually proved, or no inference or presumption can be legitimately based thereon. Jernigan v. State, 10 App. 548.

However remote from the main issue in point of time, place, or other circumstances a fact may be, if relevant, and tending to explain the main issue, the safer practice is to admit evidence thereof, leaving the question of its weight to the jury.

All the circumstances of the transaction may be submitted to the jury, provided they afford any fair presumption or inference as to the matter in issue. McNaughton v. State, 16 App. 257.

When direct and positive proof is attainable, circumstantial evidence cannot be resorted to. Miller v. State, 18 App. 34; Dixon v. State, 15 App. 480; Clayton v. State, Id. 245; Porter v. State, 1 App. 394; Gabrielsky v. State, 13 App. 428; Scott v. State, 12 App. 195; Williams v. State, Id. 275. Whatever is incomplete, either of the existence, or of the nonexistence, of a relevant hypothesis, may be shown. But no circumstance is relevant which does not make more or less probable the proposition at issue. McGuire v. State, 10 App. 125; Grinnell v. State, 22 App. 26, 2 S. W. 601, 58 Am. Rop. 620.

When the owner of stolen property has died since the taking, the want of consent may be shown by his acts and declarations. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 526.

Where the state relies on circumstantial evidence, the court may admit testimony of isolated circumstances forming links in the chain sought to be established. Davis v. State, 61 App. 611, 138 S. W. 48.

In prosecution for crime, any fact can be established by circumstantial evidence as completely as by positive evidence. Melton v. State, 71 App. 139, 138 S. W. 556.

Where the state relies upon circumstantial evidence to connect defendant with a crime, defendant may prove, by the same character of testimony, that others committed it, and that he did not. Satterwhite v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 959.

19. __ Alibi.—Where the defense of alibi was that accused spent the entire day and night of the killing in his father's home, testimony that a witness heard accused on the night of the crime who was in another room of an immovable house was admissible. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Testimony that accused was seen drinking with deceased on the evening of the murder was also admissible. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Testimony that a witness saw accused down town on the afternoon of the murder and saw him later that evening is also admissible. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Also testimony that a witness saw him on the afternoon of the killing in a saloon drinking with another person. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Testimony that the company of a former witness saw two men drinking as detailed by such witness, though he did not know and could not recognize accused, as the other witness had, is admissible in corroboration. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Where an accomplice claimed to have met accused in an immoral resort, testimony that on the night of the killing the accomplice and accused visited the resort, where they removed their blood-stained clothing and spent the rest of the night smoking hops, was admissible. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

Testimony that, some days after, he was arrested when leaving such resort, was admissible. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

An alibi is available not merely to meet the main issue in the case but any circumstantial fact relied upon by the state. Taylor v. State, 37 App. 44, 11 S. W. 35; Gallaher v. State, 23 App. 248, 12 S. W. 1987.

20. __ Incriminating others.—In a case of circumstantial evidence the bare fact that some other person may have had a motive to commit the crime is not enough, but proximity and opportunity must also be shown. Ogden v. State (Cr. App.) 1999; Thompson v. State, 20 App. 523, 14 S. W. 319.

Investigation with reference to other parties to the transaction for which the defendant is on trial. In other words, to show remote facts or threats of a third party, is not admissible, unless the facts are in proof which proximately and pertinently connect such third party with the crime charged against the defendant. See this case for evidence held to be admissible under this rule, and as overruling the decisions in the cases of Bowen v. State, 612; Eastman v. State, 4 App. 409; Fox v. State, 4 App. 574; Holt v. State, 9 App. 571, in so far as they conflict with the rule announced.

in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, the defense being that B., and not the defendant, was the proprietor of the house, certain promissory notes, and a mortgage on the furniture, etc., in the house, executed by said B., were held to be relevant, tending to show that B., and not the defendant, kept the house. Stone v. State, 22 App. 152, 2 S. W. 583.

Evidence showing ill will of a person, not a witness, towards the accused, and which raises merely a bare suspicion that such person took the money embezzled, is properly rejected as immaterial. Lawshe v. State, 57 App. 32, 121 S. W. 367.

In a prosecution for rape and incest, circumstances of larceny, familiarity, etc., indicating that prosecutrix might have been guilty of intercourse with others than accused, was admissible to rebut her testimony that she had never had intercourse with any other person than accused and to account for her general condition, the condition of her vagina, and the destruction of her hymen, as testified to by physicians, and to prove that others than accused had in fact had intercourse with her. Bader v. State, 57 App. 293, 122 S. W. 555.

Where, on a trial for homicide, accused sought to show that a third person had committed the offense, proof that the third person had been indicted and tried in justice's court for simple assault on decedent was inadmissible. Hardin v. State, 57 App. 401, 123 S. W. 613.

One on trial for crime may prove the confession of another in a position to have committed the crime. Gilder v. State, 61 App. 16, 133 S. W. 583.

In a prosecution for seduction under a promise of marriage, evidence that other persons than defendant had had carnal intercourse with the prosecuting witness was admissible. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 815.

Where the state, on a trial for theft from the person, showed that accused committed the offense, while he showed that a third person, committed it, the repudiation of the third person for honesty was in issue, and the state could prove his guilt. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 909.

In a prosecution for an aggravated assault, consisting in the whipping of the prosecuting witness, testimony for the defense that a few months before other persons were heard to threaten to whip the prosecuting witness because he did not support his family is inadmissible, where they were not identified and shown to have been in a position where they could have committed the assault. Cuples v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 267.

In a prosecution for arson, where the state relied on circumstantial evidence, tending to show that the injured party had had a difficulty with the accused, and the accused had ill will and could have burned his house is admissible; it appearing that such person might have fired the premises instead of accused. Ward v. State, 71 App. 310, 158 S. W. 1126.

In a prosecution for arson, where the state relied solely on circumstantial evidence and the fact that accused had a grudge against the injured parties, accused is entitled to show that other persons in the neighborhood had threatened to burn out the injured party's premises because he drove them off of his land; it appearing that such persons were in a position to have committed the offense. Ward v. State, 71 App. 310, 158 S. W. 1126.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, that another person struck the person alleged to have been assaulted by defendant was immaterial, unless it was expected to show an acting together in the assault. Hodges v. State, 75 App. 478, 150 S. W. 512.

In a prosecution for theft of oil cups, lubricator, belts, etc., from a cotton gin, defendant was not entitled to show theft of furnace grates from the gin by other persons. Foch v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 357.

In a prosecution for murder, where the evidence as to defendant's guilt was entirely circumstantial, it was not error to exclude testimony that unidentified burglars had been operating in the neighborhood, such evidence having no tendency to show who committed the crime. Satterwhite v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 909.

21. Transactions to which accused is not a party.—To affect one accused of murder, transactions between decedent and third persons in his absence must in some way be brought home to him. Kincald v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 597.

22. Evidence held inadmissible.—It was held error to permit a state's witness to testify that, after he had testified against the defendant on an examining trial, he fled the county because serious threats had been made against him. It not being shown that defendant made the threats, or that he was in any way responsible for them. Means v. State, 23 App. 558, 5 S. W. 123.

A state's witness testified that, at the instance of the agent of the alleged owners of the stolen animals, he went to the city of Memphis, and there found certain cattle in the brand of the alleged owners, and without having otherwise identified the animals, he further testified to the objection by the defense, that he sold the said animals under a power of attorney from the alleged owner, and delivered the proceeds of the sale to the agent for the alleged owners. Held, that the proof was res inter alios acta, and irrelevant, and, tending to prove the issue of ownership, its admission was material error. Byrd v. State, 26 App. 374, 9 S. W. 759.

The state was entitled to prove by the sheriff that he had a conversation with one of three defendants and immediately wired a deputy to arrest another one. Held irrelevant. Rix v. State, 33 App. 353, 26 S. W. 505. Evidence that defendant's brother was in jail is inadmissible. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 252.

The fact that a third person bought shot is not admissible if not being shown that defendant knew of the purchase or used the shot. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 559.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, defendant's theory was that the relations of his wife had taken all the property he had and caused a scene that prosecutrix's uncle, after obtaining from defendant a check for $348.05, was res inter alias acts, and not admissible as tending to show a conspiracy. Groszhingemig v. State, 57 App. 241, 121 S. W. 1113.

In a criminal prosecution, evidence as to why another person was not also indicted for the offense was irrelevant. Zachary v. State, 57 App. 170, 122 S. W. 283.

In a burglary case, evidence that a search warrant had been sued out, either by the prosecuting witness or by a third person, was inadmissible. Elkins v. State, 57 App. 247, 122 S. W. 293.

In a burglary case, evidence of acts of third persons as to carrying property from the burglarized house and secreting it, not brought home to accused, was inadmissible. Pitts v. State, 60 App. 524, 132 S. W. 801.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence that a witness, who testified that he and defendant committed the burglary, had in his possession articles stolen two days before, was wholly irrelevant when not made for the purposes of impeachment. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 27, 135 S. W. 887.

In a prosecution for harassment, evidence warranting an inference that a state's witness had been induced to leave the state by defendant's brother and certain others was inadmissible, in the absence of some proof that accused was connected therewith. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 27, 135 S. W. 887.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence that the son of accused and a witness ran away to avoid going before the grand jury, and that the son furnished the money therefore, is inadmissible against accused in the absence of a showing that he furnished his son the money or aided or induced the witness to avoid going before the grand jury. Day v. State, 62 App. 448, 138 S. W. 150.

On the trial of a mother for murder of her child by poison, evidence that the last time the child was at home of a third person, playing with children, she began to cry was inadmissible, in the absence of anything connecting accused, not present, with the crying. Orner v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 923.

While, in a prosecution for murder of a child by whipping it, a witness may testify as to all of what she saw or heard in regard to the acts charged, she may not testify as to her own action upon hearing the whipping of the child. Betts v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 672.

Where in a burglary prosecution no purported confession was offered, evidence that the arresting officer had at other times mistreated other prisoners in an attempt to extort a confession was inadmissible. Moray v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 927.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence of the presence, or attempted presence, of a railroad company agent during the burglary was inadmissible. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 936.

In a prosecution for pandering, evidence as to the place where prosecutrix was placed by another after the prosecution of accused had been begun was inadmissible. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

Testimony of accused's witness in an inquest case, that she had stopped visiting at accused's home because she believed a third party and accused's wife were criminally intimate, was properly excluded, where neither the wife nor the third party were used as witnesses, especially where other witnesses were permitted to state all facts showing such criminal intimacy. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 315.

Where, in a prosecution for burglary, defendant denied that he had committed it, but claimed he had purchased the stolen property from G., while the state claimed defendant and G. acted together in committing the burglary, evidence that G. had previously committed other burglaries in the same town, with which defendant had nothing to do, was inadmissible. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 822.

On a trial for burglary, testimony that, after the witness obtained possession of certain cigars, he sent for R., who identified them as the cigars stolen, this not occurring in accused's presence, was inadmissible, although R. had testified that they were the cigars stolen. Bradshaw v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 218.

On a trial for aggravated assault, the testimony of the prosecuting witness, that before leaving a hotel just prior to the difficulty, he placed a pistol in his pocket on account of information received from the clerk of the hotel that accused was there to see him, was improperly admitted, since accused was not chargeable with what occurred between third parties not in his presence, and such testimony was admitted to the jury the idea that accused was there to make it appear that the prosecution witness armed himself to defend himself against an anticipated attack. Ponder v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 244.

In a prosecution for homicide the testimony of deceased's father that deceased expected to marry accused's sister on the day following the homicide, that he and deceased were going for the license on that day, but that he knew nothing about the matter, except what deceased had told him, was incompetent, in the absence of any evidence that accused knew of the relations between his sister and deceased, or that he was objecting to the marriage. De Leon v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 247.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence that there had been a good deal of gambling among negroes and Mexicans in the vicinity in which accused lived some time prior to the killing was irrelevant and improperly admitted. Roberts v. State, 70 App. 297, 156 S. W. 651.

Where, in a perjury case, defendant's father was not a witness, it was error to admit evidence showing that he had left another county under suspicious circumstances. Poulter v. State, 72 App. 140, 161 S. W. 475.

An accused is responsible for his own acts and those done under his authority; but the fact that one who was subsequently engaged as his attorney conferred with the accused and the prosecutrix is not admissible as evidence tending to show a consciousness of guilt. Bradley v. State, 72 App. 257, 162 S. W. 515.

23. — Evidence held admissible.—In a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of a liquor dealer without paying the occupation tax, it was held to be relevant and for the state to prove, that the defendant was charged with the charge of the defendant's business, sold liquors, as such testimony tended to establish that the defendant was engaged in such occupation. Wade v. State. 22 App. 629, 3 S. W. 786.

Where, on a trial for violating the local option law, prosecutor testified that he got whisky by, or from, or through accused, that accused told him that he would get whisky from C., that accused, in company with another, went to C.'s house, and that after they had returned from the house the whisky was delivered to prosecutor, the court properly permitted the state to show that C. had recently purchased whisky, which he had either drank or given away, but none of which he had sold. Wesley v. State, 57 App. 277, 122 S. W. 550.

Where the state showed that accused and third persons had conspired to rob, and the homicide was committed, and accused had visited the residence of the person to be robbed and had gone to signal the third persons who were a short distance away, the testimony of a witness, who saw accused go about a hundred yards from the place, that she heard somebody talking, was admissible to connect accused with the third persons, who almost immediately after the hearing of the talking appeared at the place of the killing. Bass v. State. 59 App. 186, 157 S. W. 1029.

In a prosecution for keeping a bawdy house, the character of the occupancy being an evidence of the crime, it is admissible to prove the character of the occupancy and the conduct of the parties occupying the house, as well as their conversations; and in such a prosecution it was proper to admit testimony of a witness that he went to the place in question with another person late at night, and that there was, who asked witness the name of the hotel. Where witness said they wanted some girls, and if they did to go upstairs, saying that there were some girls up there. Robbins v. State, 60 App. 523, 132 S. W. 770.

Where deceased's wife had described the slayer the evening of the killing, a witness' testimony that he received that description and believed it to be a man, who fitted that description is admissible, particularly where the credibility of the wife is impeached by proof of inconsistent statements. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1006.

In a prosecution for passing a forged check, evidence that the bank on which the check was drawn refused payment was admissible on the issue of forgery. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 197.

In a prosecution for forgery in which the forgery relied on consisted of the raising of a voucher check, it is admissible for the prosecution to prove that the voucher, as altered, had been paid by the bank, and also that the bank had paid a number of such checks to the accused in person, though he was not able to state positively that the accused presented the identical check. Horn v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 948.

The testimony of prosecutrix in a rape case that she was prevented by force by defendant's partner in the crime from making complaint until the night of the following day was properly admitted; it being always permissible in rape cases to prove that complaint was made at the first opportunity. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1059.

In a prosecution of an accessory charged with giving a witness a certain amount of money to get out of the country, testimony by bankers that another accessory had not paid them for that amount and procured it at the time was admissible. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution of L. W. for stealing a yearling, testimony of W. W. that, after the date alleged in the indictment, he bought a yearling about the same size and age as the yearling alleged to have been stolen by the state to show that the yearling bought by the witness was the one de-
24. Indictment, acquittal or conviction of third persons.—When one of several defendants, charged with the offense of conspiracy, has been tried and acquitted, the record of such acquittal is competent evidence in behalf of another of such defendants subsequently tried. Paul v. State, 12 App. 316.

Accused and S. were indicted for murder, but the indictment against S. was dismissed by the court on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to convict S. under the indictment. But that if he could be convicted of any offense, it would be that of accessory. Held, that evidence that a witness had been told that S. was being prosecuted in the federal court for another offense, and that accused was a witness against him, and the indictment of S. in the federal court, and a subpoena for deceased as a witness in the case were improperly admitted, as it failed to connect accused in any way with any of the matters testified to, and it was inadmissible to show conspiracy between accused and S., in the absence of any evidence connecting accused with S. in the killing. Figure v. State, 58 App. 611, 127 S. W. 133.

On a trial of statutory rape, evidence that a third person charged with having raped prosecutrix had been acquitted was inadmissible. Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 227.

On a trial for assault to murder, evidence that other parties had been indicted for their participation in the difficulty in which the alleged assault occurred, and such indictments themselves, were improperly admitted. Lara v. State, 72 App. 100, 161 S. W. 99.

On a trial for assault to murder, it was error to admit evidence that other parties indicted for their participation in the same difficulty had forfeited their bonds, and were refusing to come to justice, where accused had not attempted to flee, and was not shown to be responsible for the acts of such other parties subsequent to the difficulty. Lara v. State, 72 App. 100, 161 S. W. 99.

On a trial for assault to murder, evidence that another party had been convicted of an offense by a jury of a person accused to the prosecuting witness's rescue in the difficulty in which the alleged assault occurred, was improperly admitted. Lara v. State, 72 App. 100, 161 S. W. 99.

25. — Persons connected with prosecution.—Unless defendant expects to prove a connection between the jurors and the committee it is immaterial who composed a committee employing private counsel to prosecute. Moore v. State, 36 App. 574, 33 S. W. 299.

Evidence as to the fee paid attorneys who assisted in the prosecution was properly excluded. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1001.

In a prosecution of an optician for practicing without a license, the court properly refused to permit accused to show that a third party, who was not a witness, had employed an attorney to assist in the prosecution of the case. Tipton v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 97.

26. Conduct of accused subsequent to offense.—Indications of a consciousness of guilt by a person accused or suspected of crime, or of one who in consequence of such indications, is accused or suspected of crime, may be proved as evidence against him. No limit to the number of such indications can be assigned, nor can the character be theoretically defined. However they may be, they are admissible, if they tend to elucidate the transaction in question. Hart v. State, 15 App. 292, 49 Am. Rep. 188. See, also, Williams v. State, Id. 101; Tooney v. State, 8 App. 452.

What was said and done by defendant a short time after the killing was admissible against him, not only as res gestae, but was admissible for the reason that they were the acts and declaractions of defendant in the nature of a confession. McGee v. State, 31 App. 71, 19 S. W. 764.

State cannot show that defendant did not testify at a former trial. Dorris v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 311.

Evidence that on the night of the difficulty accused and his companion came to witness' house, some eight or ten miles from where they resided, and stayed all night, though they were both married men, was admissible to show conduct inconsistent with innocence: their explanation being a desire to reach a justice of the peace, before whom accused pleaded guilty to a lesser offense than that with which he was subsequently charged. Decker v. State, 55 App. 159, 124 S. W. 912.

The coming and going of an accused after the commission of an offense are proper matters to be shown, except where the state thereby seeks to prove a different offense. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 622.

In a trial for burglary, followed by defendant's attempt to cut his throat, the court properly permitted the chief of police to testify about defendant's condition and about his writing of statements concerning the offense upon scrap paper soon after. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1001.

On a trial for horse stealing, where there was evidence that the sheriff followed accused from the place where the horses were stolen to another state, where he was sold horses, and accused claimed that the horses had been purchased from them by a third person, evidence that he voluntarily returned to this state should have been admitted. La Fell v. State (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 884.
The acts and conduct of one when arrested are admissible against him. Serop v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 552.

Where defendant had been previously indicted for the same offense in another county under a defective indictment, and had there forfeited his bail, the indictment and the order forfeiting the bond are admissible to show flight. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 122; Gilleland v. State, 24 App. 524, 7 S. W. 311.

Where there has been no attempt to show flight, the evidence to show flight and the defendant did not run away is admissible. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 515, 24 S. W. 622.

The flight of defendant is good evidence against him and any act of his in connection with it is admissible. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 529.

In a prosecution for rape, it was not error to allow proof to be made that a constable, after the prosecution was instituted, had sought to find accused and could not do so, on the ground that it was not shown that the officer had any process for the accused, and his search for him was without authority of law, since it was permissible to prove by any one who knew that accused had fled from the scene of the offense and from his home, Gent v. State, 57 App. 414, 123 S. W. 594.

In a prosecution in K. county for rape, evidence that accused was found in G. county, and that he had changed his name and denied ever living in K. county, was shown; flight, change of name, and a denial that he had ever lived in the county where the crime was committed. Gent v. State, 57 App. 414, 123 S. W. 594.

In a prosecution for rape, the complaint filed against accused, the capias, and the bail bond were admissible to show that there was a prosecution, flight, and accused's forfeiture of his bond. Gent v. State, 57 App. 414, 123 S. W. 594.

In a prosecution for theft, accused's forfeiture of his bail bond and subsequent flight were in evidence against him, and his explanation of flight was upon the advice of his counsel for certain reasons was admissible in his favor. Brown v. State, 57 App. 570, 124 S. W. 101.

If accused has not sought to escape arrest for the crime for which he is tried, no good or useful purpose is served by showing that he sought to escape arrest for other crimes; and while evidence of flight is admissible as some evidence of guilt, and as amounting in effect to a quasi admission of it, flight to escape arrest for another and different offense ought not to be considered as evidence of guilt of an offense as to which there was no flight. Damron v. State, 58 App. 555, 125 S. W. 296.

Evidence is admissible in a homicide case of accused's flight and escape after arrest, being a circumstance against him. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 429, 129 S. W. 125.

In a prosecution for making a criminal assault on a young girl, in which the state's evidence tended to show that accused had left the state to avoid arrest, and had returned and was in hiding in his father's house when arrested, the officer who arrested him testified that, when he went to the house, accused's mother said, "Don't go in there, you will scare him to death, he is heavily armed, and he will die before he will give up," and that witness heard a voice from the room which sounded like that of accused, saying, "Ma, I will die before I will give up." Held, that the evidence of the officer to evade arrest was admissible as tending to show guilt. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 635.

Where accused fled after the commission of the alleged crime, it was not error to allow the sheriff to testify that he searched for him, advertised, and offered rewards, and finally found him in jail in another part of the state. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 920.

Where, after a homicide committed in 1906, accused fled from the city and was not located until in December, 1913, it was not error to permit the chief of police to detail the search he made to find accused and that he could not be found in the city. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 562.

While evidence of flight is ordinarily admissible as indicative of guilt, yet a judgment nisi in an ex parte proceeding against accused for the forfeiture of his bail bond because of his failure to appear for trial, not being a final adjudication of any fact, was inadmissible. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 299.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, there was no evidence indicating that defendant went to Louisiana while on bail with intent not to return in time for trial, evidence that when he returned he apologized to one of his bondsmen for not telling him in advance about his intended trip, and that he did not blame him for refusing to become a bondman a second time, was inadmissible. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 999.

Evidence that accused fled the country, and that the officers had mailed out circulars in their efforts to apprehend him, but he was not arrested for three years, was admissible. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 525.

A chance opportunity to escape. — It is still permissible to prove that defendant attempted to escape, but the circumstances, character and extent of an assault committed on a jailer in an attempt to escape cannot be shown in a trial of murder. Spriggins v. State, 42 App. 341, 60 S. W. 56.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, the case depended in part on circumstantial evidence, an escape from prison after the arrest of the accused was proper to be shown. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 624.
Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state did not attempt to show flight by the accused nor did he attempt to escape, the court properly excluded evidence that he had an opportunity to escape with others from the jail, but that he did not do so, but informed the officers, offered to show his character. Milner v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 348.

29. Suppression or fabrication of evidence.—Fabrication of evidence by the defendant, under the circumstances attending the examination had proved in all cases and considered by the jury. Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. 579; Sheffield v. State, 43 Tex. 375; Williams v. State, 22 App. 497, 4 S. W. 64.

Suppression of, or failure to produce, evidence may sometimes be indicative of guilt. Mercer v. State, 17 App. 462.

30. Suborning or interfering with witnesses.—Where it is shown that an assault was made by defendant upon a witness because such witness was going to testify against him in a criminal prosecution, such assault becomes a relevant fact and is admissible as evidence against defendant. Inman v. State, 35 App. 29, 30 S. W. 219; Love v. State, 35 App. 27, 29 S. W. 790.

Where a witness testified that he had never heard prosecutor make any threat against accused, the witness should be permitted to testify that accused tried to induce him to state that prosecutor had made threats. Day v. State, 62 App. 448, 123 S. W. 130.

31. Matters explanatory of facts in evidence or inferences therefrom.—A defendant may introduce rebutting proof in explanation of his flight, etc. Arnold v. State, 9 App. 435.

In a murder trial, the defendant proposed to prove, in explanation of his recent purchase of a pistol, and of his possession of it on the day of the homicide, that it was the custom and habit of the people of that county to carry pistols. Held, that such testimony was irrelevant. Creswell v. State, 14 App. 2, in a criminal prosecution, the defendant's plea as introduced in evidence against him on his trial, was held competent for the state to also introduce the complaint to which the plea of guilt referred in order to identify the offense therein charged with the offense for which the defendant was then being tried. Rice v. State, 22 App. 654, 3 S. W. 791.

In a prosecution for maiming, where the injured party was a fellow-prisoner in jail with the defendant, it was held relevant and competent testimony on the issue of intent to prove that the prisoners had a code of laws adopted by themselves, which prescribed penalties for certain offenses, and that it was in the effort to enforce one of these laws upon the injured party that the maiming of him resulted. Bowers v. State, 24 App. 542, 7 S. W. 247, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901.

A defendant has the right to explain any conduct or previous statement made by him tending to create a distrust of his integrity or truth. Bruce v. State, 31 App. 590, 21 S. W. 681.

Where the state proved flight of defendant, he had a right to prove that he had been informed that there had been a mob organized to arrest and hang him. Le-wallen v. State, 33 App. 412, 26 S. W. 832.

When defendant was arrested he had a key which fitted the lock of the door to the house in which the homicide was committed. Held that defendant should have been allowed to explain when and how he came in possession of the key. Radford v. State, 33 App. 528, 27 S. W. 146.

Evidence that witness failed to identify defendant for fear of personal safety is inadmissible. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

On trial for theft defendant proved an alibi: fixing the dates by entries in certain books; the heirs, competent for the State to have the books brought in and the entries identified by the witness, and then to prove by expert testimony that there had been erasures and interlineations made in such entries. Colins v. State, 39 App. 411, 36 S. W. 933.

When defendant brings out testimony as to a record of a former trial, the State may introduce testimony explaining the record. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 App. 20, 38 S. W. 806.

Refusal to allow witness for the defense to explain impeaching testimony; held, reversible error. Tippett v. State, 37 App. 188, 39 S. W. 130.

Defendant introduced in evidence a petition filed by plaintiff for the recovery of money, the court properly refused to permit the prosecuting witness to testify in regard to the allegations in such petition. Sanders v. State, 38 App. 543, 42 S. W. 962.

Where a person for any reason has failed to explain his silence when the circumstances would suggest a candid statement, he may give his reason for such silence and the transaction is the subject of judicial inquiry; and where a prosecuting witness in a prosecution for aggravated assault had not told accused's wife who the assailant was, witness could explain on direct examination that she had not informed the wife because she and accused had been good to her and had treated her as their own child. Ferguson v. State, 57 App. 205, 122 S. W. 551.

In a murder prosecution, there was evidence that accused's brother participated in the fight in which decedent was cut, and accused's theory was that, if he used a knife in the fight, it was in his brother's defense, and he introduced evidence that his brother and two wounds on his head, on the theories on his head, had been made by decedent. Held, that a witness could testify that he struck accused's brother on the head with a piece of iron in the fight, and that he helped to undress decedent after he was cut, and found no weapons on him, as tending to corroborate his theories. Graham v. State, 57 App. 184, 132 S. W. 681.

Where, in a homicide case, accused had proved by a state's witness that he told others that he knew nothing of the killing, the state could, on redirect examination, ask him why he told such others that he did not see the killing, the answer to which was that he did so because he was instructed by the grand jury not to tell what his testimony would be. Spencer v. State, 59 App. 217, 138 S. W. 119.

Where an attorney indicted for embezzlement of money alleged to have been received, executed a receipt for $80 "on loan account," parol evidence was admissible to explain that the words "loan account" meant that the money was left with him to be loaned. Hamer v. State, 60 App. 241, 131 S. W. 577.

In a prosecution for burglary, where it was shown that about a mile from the place of the burglary there was discovered a place where parties had eaten a lunch, and there was found a bottle marked Jersey Cream Whisky, a tin can marked Pork and Beans, and a number of other foodstuffs in the possession of the sheriff as to defendant's habits while in jail, as to whether he ate Van Camp's Pork and Beans, drank Jersey Cream Whisky, and smoked cigarettes, was admissible. Bowen v. State, 65 App. 596, 133 S. W. 256.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state offered evidence that defendant had furnished money to G. to purchase a horse of S. and induce him to leave the state, and that defendant's brother and G. carried S. to a train, and that he did leave the state, defendant was entitled to show by G.'s father that G. gave his son the money with which to purchase the horse. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 133 S. W. 887.

Admission of testimony in a homicide case, over the general objection that witness' investigation was not legal and was prejudicial to defendant's rights, that witness should have been examined as to whether he could find gun shells similar to the one found at the place of the homicide, and in doing so had gone to several hardware stores, and failed to find any similar shells, was not error; as not only it cannot be said that it was inadmissible for any purpose, but in the absence of special reason, in connection with evidence that the shells were of a peculiar make, and were peculiarly loaded, and that like shells were found in defendant's room. Wheeler v. State, 61 App. 527, 136 S. W. 68.

Where accused was charged with assault with intent to maim, claimed that she acted to repel an attempt to rape her, the state could show numerous previous acts of intercourse between the parties, and that the victim went to the place of the offense at accused's invitation. Cole v. State, 62 App. 270, 138 S. W. 109.

To explain why accused happened to be at the place where the homicide occurred, he was entitled to show that a few minutes before the homicide he left witness' office, stating that he was going to a certain place, the way to which was shown by the place of the homicide. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 158 S. W. 1025.

Where a statement of deceased was admissible, and was used to induce the defendant to make a confession, and that it was generally conceded that the animal belonged to accused, and not H., and also offered to show, in connection with the evidence as to accused's reputation, that, when the H. animal was branded by accused, a number of persons were present, and saw him brand it. Held, that the evidence offered was admissible to show accused's reputation in the way of the animal, making it error to exclude it. Booth v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 923.

Where accused on a trial for rape on a girl under 15 years of age contended that the different members of the family of prosecutrix were about the premises at the time they were having intercourse, as what was being done, the court properly permitted the state to prove the membership of the family of prosecutrix, and to show their whereabouts at the time of the alleged offense, and that the members of the family were not in sight or hearing at such time, and to show that the mother of prosecutrix was dead. Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 827.

Where accused was charged with slandering his wife in charging her with misconduct with S., and accused sought to use the flight of S. as an incriminating circumstance, the court properly permitted him to testify to a statement made to him by the wife as furnishing a reason for his flight consistent with his innocence. Elder v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1052.

Where accused testified that he had stated that certain others stole the money, he was properly asked the time when the money was stolen by the others and the amount, and could explain why he could not give that information. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901.

Where the state in a prosecution for homicide showed that, on a prior trial, it had introduced an eyewitness who was then absent, to raise an inference that the testimony of such witness was favorable to the state, the defendant in rebuttal was entitled to introduce the testimony previously given by the witness in order to prove that the testimony had not such effect. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1003.

In a prosecution for uxoricide, where accused introduced testimony that at the time of the killing he was in great distress and shedding tears, testimony that his crime is admissible. Beaupre v. State, 70 App. 391, 138 S. W. 825.

Where the defense brings out the fact that the prosecuting witness in a larceny case delayed having defendant arrested and declined to file a complaint, the state could show that she did so through fear of threats of bodily harm. Creeden v. State, 71 App. 3, 138 S. W. 268.

In a prosecution for abandonment after seduction and marriage, where defendant's uncle had testified that the wife told him she was going back to send the defendant's letter, that it was proper for the state to show that the state was occasioned by the uncle's telling her that her husband was not coming back. Qualls v. State, 71 App. 67. 158 S. W. 533.

Where, in a prosecution for assault to rape, a witness for the state testified on cross-examination that he had promptly reported the offense to the officers after he saw its commission, and had not himself interfered, he was properly allowed to explain on redirect the reason for his failure to do so. Hooper v. State, 72 App. 82. 169 S. W. 1187.

Where, in a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, defendant swore that he received a letter from prosecutrix, while he was absent in Colorado, soliciting him to return because she suspected she was pregnant, and on his return that she told him the reason why she wrote the letter, he was entitled to testify as to the reason why she desired him to return. Gillespie v. State, 73 App. 585. 166 S. W. 135.

32. Character or reputation of accused.—It is not permissible for the state to give in evidence the bad character of the defendant, unless he has initiated the inquiry by introducing evidence of his good character. Hartless v. State, 32 Tex. 38; Williams v. State, 49 App. 594, 51 S. W. 229.

A defendant may prove his general character in all cases, whether the evidence against him be direct or circumstantial, doubtful or certain, whenever general knowledge or criminal intention is of the essence of the offense. Coffee v. State, 1 App. 518; Lee v. State, 2 App. 318; Lockhart v. State, 3 App. 567; Jones v. State, 19 App. 553; Johnson v. State, 17 App. 565; House v. State, 42 App. 125, 57 S. W. 826.

When evidence of character is admissible it should be restricted to the trait of character in issue; or, as otherwise expressed, the evidence should have some analogy and reference to the nature of the charge, it being obviously irrelevant and beside the point to inquire into the party's loyalty on a charge of theft, or to inquire into his character in a charge of murder, or into his character in a charge of treason. Jones v. State, 10 App. 552; Lockhart v. State, 3 App. 567; Johnson v. State, 17 App. 565; Coffelt v. State, 19 App. 436; Leader v. State, 4 App. 162; Plasters v. State, 1 App. 673.

Where intent is an essential element of the offense it is competent to prove the general reputation of accused. Short v. State, 25 App. 373, 8 S. W. 281.

An inquiry as to character must be limited to the general reputation of the person impugned in the community of his residence, or where he is best known, and the witness must express his opinion from his knowledge of that general reputation, and not from his own individual opinion. Holsey v. State, 24 App. 35, 5 S. W. 523; Brownlee v. State, 13 App. 255; Marshall v. State, 5 App. 273; Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 263; Doon v. Weatherly's Adm'r, 25 Tex. 615.

Testimony as to the character of a defendant's associates is irrelevant and inadmissible. Holsey v. State, 24 App. 55, 5 S. W. 523.

In a trial for rape the accused may prove his character as a “peaceable,” “law abiding” man. Lincecum v. State, 29 App. 325, 16 S. W. 518, 25 Am. St. Rep. 727.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, evidence of the common reputation of the defendant as a prostitute, and as deprived of chastity, is not admissible. Gamel v. State, 21 App. 357, 17 S. W. 158.

Evidence as to defendant's character in another state may be introduced when he has been in the state only two years. Thomas v. State, 23 App. 467, 18 S. W. 334.

The court is inclined to hold that where proof of actual character is relevant (that is, tends to solve some issue in the case) it ought to be admitted. Spangler v. State, 41 App. 424, 55 S. W. 325.

An answer to a question which tends to put in issue the reputation of defendant as a law-abiding citizen when he himself has not put it in issue should be excluded. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 913.

Where accused's general reputation for chastity and virtue is put in issue, matters occurring five or six years before are not inadmissible on the ground of remoteness. Newell v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 939.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, defendant was not limited to proof of his character for morality and chastity, but was entitled to prove that his general reputation as a peaceable law-abiding citizen was good. Bishop v. State, 72 App. 1, 169 S. W. 765.

Where defendant prayed a suspension of sentence and introduced evidence of his reputation, there was no error in permitting the state to inquire into his habits and mode of life. Turner v. State, 72 App. 914, 169 S. W. 765.

Defendant not testifying, the state may not introduce evidence of his bad character, irrelevant to the issue of guilt of the crime charged. Kaufman v. State, 74 App. 458, 165 S. W. 193.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, where defendant had lived in the county for seven years, and where the state did not attack his general reputation for truth and veracity, evidence as to such reputation was properly excluded. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1110.

Where one is on trial in a criminal case, his character prior to the commission of the offense may be inquired into, but not the character he may have acquired 604.
after the commission thereof or what is said about his character after such time. Carl v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 973.

33. — Evidence of particular acts.—Evidence that a defendant, who was on trial for theft of a horse, was at the time of the theft, a county convict, and as such hired to the owner of the horse, was held irrelevant. Persons v. State, 3 App. 249.

Evidence that defendant was a "capper and roper-in" for a gambling house near which deceased's body was found held not inadmissible. Tooney v. State, 8 App. 462.

It was held error for the state to prove that for four or five years prior to the trial the defendant had been confined in the penitentiary for felony. Guajardo v. State, 24 App. 603, 7 S. W. 331.

On trial for robbery, proof that some months prior to the commission of the offense defendant worked for wages, is irrelevant. Colter v. State, 37 App. 284, 39 S. W. 576.

Character of defendant for peace and quietude cannot be put in issue by the State by proving an isolated difficulty with third party or generally. Dimry v. State, 41 App. 272, 55 S. W. 553.

Where defendant's character for peace is put in issue, State can prove a former difficulty in which he was engaged. Young v. State, 41 App. 442, 55 S. W. 323.

The fact that defendant was a fugitive from justice at time of homicide is admissible against him. Patterson v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 559.

The district attorney who sat in a former trial of the same case had signed the defendant's bail bond is inadmissible to show good character and reputation. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 558, 127 S. W. 556.

Evidence was not inadmissible in a homicide action that accused was "a good worker and not being an issue, the court overruled objection." Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 231.

In a trial for the murder of a woman whom he had outraged, testimony of a young woman as to having seen defendant on the day of the homicide, that she did not notice him much that day, but that he always generally looked at her real hard, and once watched her until she got to the corner, qualified by the court's statement that it was introduced without objection and that the objectionable part was at once excluded, presented no error. Durfee v. State, 73 App. 165, 165 S. W. 138.

In a prosecution of a woman for arson, evidence was not admissible that witness, who roamed at accused's house at the time of the fire, saw accused and a man together in the house, and knew that they roomed together. McClary v. State, 73 App. 430, 165 S. W. 572.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, evidence that some time before the date of the alleged offense accused had beer in an ice box in such house, and that parties were drinking beer there, was admissible. Cunningham v. State, 73 App. 566, 166 S. W. 519.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence that fact of accused's visits to saloons and the lowest of dives might necessarily have a prejudicial effect does not render such testimony inadmissible, where it was vitally connected with the evidence to show accused's guilt. Mullis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 289.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence that accused sold whisky some time before the killing, not being relevant thereto, is improperly received. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 978.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that six or seven years before the killing, at a time when accused did not know deceased, accused became intoxicated at a picnic and had to be restrained, is inadmissible. Marshall v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 254.

34. Materiality or competency of evidence.—A defendant charged with aggravated assault, by striking a boy with a switch, may testify to the object and purpose of such striking to show his motives and intent. Berry v. State, 30 App. 422, 17 S. W. 1088.

On trial for assault with intent to rape, defendant's evidence that he intended to have sexual intercourse with prosecutrix with her consent, and not by force, should have been allowed. Lewallen v. State, 33 App. 412, 26 S. W. 822.

On trial for manslaughter the opinion of the court of appeals on an appeal from a former conviction is inadmissible. Abrams v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 798.

Petition to substitute defendant over the objection of the defendant to read article 912 C. C. P. in evidence for the purpose of showing that the escape of a man convicted of a felony pending the appeal tends to affirm his sentence. This was improper. It is the law of the land, but it is not evidence in the case. Lucas v. State, 50 App. 210, 96 S. W. 1066.

A question asked a witness as to where a pistol belonging to another was kept before such other came to a certain place to pick cotton was not inadmissible as being irrelevant and immaterial, and failing to show that the witness knew that the other owned any pistol, or had in his possession other pistols than the one witness had formerly seen, since the objection did not go to the admissibility of the testimony, but merely to the weight thereof. Deckard v. State, 55 App. 359, 123 S. W. 417.

Where, on a trial for passing a forged check, accused claimed that he went by a designated name, and that he had met a person by that name at a designated town and had formed a partnership with him, and that he got the check from his partner in settlement of that partnership, evidence that one who had lived in the designated town did not know any man there by the designated name was admissible. Fluewellian v. State, 59 App. 334, 128 S. W. 621.
In a prosecution for homicide, where the issue is self-defense, it is error to permit the attorney to testify that he never heard deceased make any threats against accused. Maclin v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 951.

Evidence is admissible, in a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a weapon, that a person who was shown to have been with prosecuting witness and others, who testified to his exposition of the unlawful act, was not in the state of mind at the time of the trial and might not return, though accused did not attack the state's good faith in not producing all the evidence available. Sweeney v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 883.

Where the first count in an indictment had been quashed because of a defect therein, it was not error to refuse to permit accused to require the assistant county attorney to testify that he knew the first count was bad. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 197.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the fact that the assaulted party was dead, and that another spectator was out of the state, may be shown before the jury to explain why their evidence at the examining trial was read. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 912.

An envelope found on defendant, on which were written the names with which a check was signed and indorsed, is admissible on trial for forgery of the check. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 198.

Defendant in homicide could not introduce his ball bond to appear and answer the indictment, it being material to no issue. White v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 93.

35. Remoteness.—In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, it was held competent for state to prove the condition of an undergarment of the alleged injured female on the first evening and the second morning after the alleged outrage upon her person. Grimmert v. State, 22 App. 36, 2 S. W. 631, 58 Am. Rep. 630.

In a prosecution for rape, it was held competent for the state to show by a medical expert that five weeks after the alleged rape he examined the alleged injured female, and to state the result of such examination. While such evidence was relevant to throw light upon the question whether it was a prosecution for this offense no testimony should be rejected which, in the remotest degree, will tend to aid the jury in reaching the truth. Pless v. State, 23 App. 73, 3 S. W. 576.

In a prosecution for forgery, there was no error in excluding evidence of certain transactions of the prosecuting witness in different matters 12 years prior to the transactions complained of, especially where the testimony could not have been of any benefit to defendant. Wheeler v. State, 63 App. 370, 137 S. W. 124.

Evidence of difficulty between accused and a year or more prior to the alleged assault was properly excluded. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 185.

Threats by defendant against deceased, though made two or three years prior to the killing, relating to the same difficulty, were admissible, although a partial reconciliation had occurred in the meantime. Powdrill v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 231.

Evidence as to condition of locus on second day after occurrence held not too remote. Sharp v. State, 71 App. 633, 160 S. W. 369.

In a rape prosecution, evidence of physicians who examined the sexual organ of the girl was properly admitted on the issue of penetration, the length of time it had been out of the control of the assault, and the examination not affecting the admissibility of the evidence, but its weight. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

36. Experiments.—On an issue as to whether certain words could have been heard by a witness testifying thereto evidence of an experiment to determine the question is admissible. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 557.

citing experiments showing that the crime could not have been committed by defendant within the time declared; held, admissible. Clark v. State, 38 App. 36, 40 S. W. 992.

Experiment made on the scene of killing can be proved if it was made under circumstances similar to original transaction, although not made under exactly similar conditions as attended the original transaction. The want of exact similarity would not exclude but would go to the weight of the testimony. Schauer v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 251.

In a prosecution for homicide, defendant introduced evidence to show that the deceased was killed by an accidental discharge of defendant's pistol falling on the floor. The state then put the pistol in evidence and exhibited it to the jury with the explanation that the hammer rested upon a "safety" and could not be discharged by a blow, or by a fall upon the floor. The defendant then offered testimony of an experiment with the pistol by fastening it to a secure place and striking the hammer while on the safety notch a slight blow, and that the blow caused the discharge. This was excluded on the ground that the experiment was not made by striking the floor, as appellant claimed the shot to have been fired. Held, that the testimony as to the experiment made with the pistol was improperly excluded. Hodge v. State, 69 App. 157, 131 S. W. 577.

Testimony concerning experiments is not admissible in a murder trial, where they are based on speculative and hypothetical theories, and are not shown to have been based upon facts connected with the homicide. Harris v. State, 62 App. 236, 197 S. W. 272.

In a prosecution for uxoricide, where accused claimed that his wife had committed suicide, evidence of experiments showing that she could not have killed herself, as claimed, was admissible. Coffman v. State, 73 App. 395, 165 S. W. 939.

A physician testified that at the time he made the experiments so as if he could make an indentation in the wall of the room where deceased was killed by striking across a bed with an iron bar with which defendant claimed deceased.
had been killed, and in the same manner, the bed had not been moved and a deputy sheriff, who testified with reference to a similar experiment, testified that before he made it accused placed the witness in the exact position which he claimed the person who killed deceased was in when he struck the blow, the evidence of the experiments was not rendered inadmissible because of defendant's testimony that when the physician arrived he changed the position of the bed. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437.

37. Admissibility by reason of admission of other evidence.—See a case in which the state having introduced hearsay testimony, it was held that the defense should have been permitted to rebut it with the same character of testimony. Ellison v. State, 12 App. 558.

A fact apparently irrelevant may be made relevant and admissible by other facts with which it is connected by the proof. See this case for an example. Campbell v. State, 15 App. 506.

An unrecorded brand on an animal can only be used as any other flesh mark in connection with other testimony to identify the animal. It is no proof of ownership, and the flesh mark can be proved by parol as any other flesh mark. Welch v. State, 42 App. 398, 60 S. W. 48.

It is error to admit evidence to contradict hearsay testimony, and that raises an immaterial issue. Bostright v. State, 42 App. 442, 60 S. W. 761.

The introduction of improper testimony whether with or without objection by the accused, does not authorize the state to introduce, over accused's objection, improper testimony of the same nature. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 739.

Examination by the defense in a prosecution for an aggravated assault as to matters which were not relevant to the assault, but which the state had been allowed improperly to develop, would not excuse the improper admission, where the examination was merely to meet the testimony of the state, to which the accused had also asked for the exclusion also testimony for a charge taking its effect from the jury. Larrue v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 194.

In a trial for aggravated assault, prosecutrix was properly permitted to testify that she told her mother of the affair, but not to detail the conversation, when she arrived home, where accused's counsel first asked her whom she told. Grantland v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 196.

Evidence cannot complain that evidence brought on direct examination was hearsay when he brought out the same evidence on cross-examination. Lott v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 544.

On a trial for assault with intent to rape, where prosecutrix testified without objection that she told her sister about it at the time, and afterwards told her mother, it was not error to permit the mother to testify that prosecutrix complained to her three days after the alleged assault. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 520.

Upon defendant's trial for aggravated assault, where he was permitted to testify that he had no intent to injure complaining witness, there was no error in refusing to permit the other party engaged in the assault to testify that he did not intend to injure. Robey v. State, 73 App. 9, 163 S. W. 713.

Where, in a prosecution of accused as an accomplice to abortion, defendant, who was prosecutrix's stepfather, claimed, and as a part of his defense sought to prove, that the whole prosecution was a "frame-up" by the husband of prosecutrix, and showed that he had made threats against defendant, and was very unfriendly toward him, denying that he ever had had intercourse with prosecutrix at any time, and testifying that her testimony that he was the author of her ruin was a pure fabrication, and that he knew nothing of the intention to have an operation performed until after it was performed, it was proper to permit the state to show in rebuttal that, before prosecutrix's sister and her husband disclosed the fact to the officers they communicated with prosecutrix's grandfather and grandmother, and were advised by them to disclose the fact, and also that before such disclosure the prosecuting officers had obtained from prosecutrix a statement of the facts on which they acted before she had come under the influence of her sister and brother-in-law. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 418.

38. View.—It is error to permit the jury to inspect the scene of the crime in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder. Riggins v. State, 42 App. 472, 60 S. W. 877.

In a prosecution for rape, the court properly refused to send the jury, at defendant's request, to inspect the ground where the offense was alleged to have occurred. Fite v. State, 73 App. 278, 164 S. W. 1018.

In a prosecution for theft of goats, the brand on which, it was claimed, had been changed, a view of the goats by the jury was not permissible, nor could they be introduced in evidence. Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1084.

In order to constitute declarations a part of the res gestae, it is not necessary that they were precisely coincident in point of time with the principal fact. If they sprang out of the principal fact, tend to explain it, were voluntary and spontaneous, and such as to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they may be regarded as contemporaneous, and are admissible in evidence. Boothe v. State, 4 App. 202; Foster v. State, 8 App. 248; Neyland v. State, 13 App. 530; Ford v. State, 40 App. 284, 50 S. W. 560; McKinney alias Jackson v. State, 40 App. 289, 50 S. W. 970; Freeman v. State, 40 App. 296, 50 S. W. 970; Ward v. State, 70 App. 292, 159 S. W. 272.
Examinations and remarks of those engaged in the difficulty, made at the time, are part of the res gestae and are admissible. Shumate v. State, 33 App. 266, 43 S. 783. Colquitt v. State, 34 Tex. 560.

Circumstances constituting res gestae may always be shown to the jury, along with the principal facts, and their admissibility is determined by the judge, according to the degree of their relation to the principal facts, and in the exercise of his sound discretion—it being extremely difficult, if not impossible, to bring this class of cases within the limits of a more particular description. Declarations made at the time of the transaction and expressive of its character, motive, or object, and that are substantial and indicating a present purpose and intention, are admissible as evidence. See an application of the doctrine above stated in a case of theft. Williams v. State, 4 App. 5. See also, Gilliam v. State, 3 App. 132, a case of jail breaking; Ward v. State, 41 Tex. 411; a case of theft. Taylor v. State, 7 App. 653; and P. C., art. 3348; for other decisions in theft cases involving the doctrine of res gestae evidence.

A declaration explanatory of an act is admissible as res gestae, if it was made spontaneously at the time of the act, and before deliberation or time to fabricate the statement. Foster v. State, 8 App. 218.

What is said and done just before the killing in a disturbance out of which the killing grew is a part of the res gestae. Hardin v. State, 40 App. 217, 49 S. W. 607. The fact that a witness on account of tender age is incompetent to testify does not render her statements made at time of transaction from memory inadmissible as a part of the res gestae. Cremo v. State, 40 App. 675, 51 S. W. 324, 53 S. W. 582.

As to declarations, the test is, were the declarations the facts talking through the party, or the party's talk about the fact? Bradberry v. State, 22 App. 273, 2 S. W. 522; Hobbs v. State, 16 App. 517.

Res gestae are events speaking for themselves through the instinctive words and acts of participants when relating the events. There are no limits of time within which the res gestae can be arbitrarily confined. They may not be coincident as to time if they are generated by an excited feeling which extends without and are not let down from the moment of the event they illustrate. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act, and become part either of the act immediately producing it, or of action which it immediately produces. Indecents which are thus immediately and unconsciously associated with an act, whether such incidents are doings or declarations, become in this way evidence of the character of the act. Continuousness cannot always be measured by time. Inefficiencies hold the requisite, and when this obtains the acts or declarations are res gestae. Powers v. State, 23 App. 42, 5 S. W. 153.

Conversations held in the presence of defendant prior to the commission of the homicide are admissible. Wright v. State, 36 App. 427, 37 S. W. 732.

40. — Accompanying and surrounding circumstances.—The use of a weapon different from and in addition to that charged in the indictment is res gestae. Richards v. State, 3 App. 425.

What occurred during the quarrel is res gestae on a trial for homicide. Chalk v. State, 35 App. 116, 32 S. W. 531.

Where the offense alleged is the cutting a ditch upon real property, it is competent for state to prove that defendant began digging the ditch three or four days prior to the date alleged in the complaint. This was part of the res gestae of the offense—being same ditch—and not another and distinct offense. Adams v. State, 47 App. 55, 51 S. W. 984.

On a trial for carrying a pistol, evidence as to the particulars of the shooting and as to who fired the first shot is admissible as res gestae, and as showing defendant's intention in carrying the weapon. Hutchinson v. State, 58 App. 228, 125 S. W. 19.

Evidence that defendant was discovered in the retail establishment of one person, without any authority to enter the same, and the fact that a wholesale establishment of another in an adjoining room, separated only by a partition, afforded evidence, was part of the res gestae, and admissible in a prosecution for burglary of the wholesale store. Doyle v. State, 59 App. 39, 126 S. W. 1131.

In a burglary case, evidence of a witness that she had a trunk in the burglarized room containing the clothing at the time the house, that when she left in the morning the trunk was locked, and, when she returned in the evening, the lock had been broken off the trunk, was admissible as part of the res gestae, and as evidence to show that somebody had been in the room. Hulbert v. State, 59 App. 159, 127 S. W. 880.

Where the disturbance in which the killing occurred arose out of the difficulty between accused and a third person, evidence of such difficulty was admissible. Johnson v. State, 61 App. 635, 135 S. W. 250.

guage, evidence was not restricted to the language used; but evidence as to the surrounding circumstances is admissible as part of the res gestae. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 555.

Evidence, in a prosecution for rape, of the attending circumstances held properly admitted as a part of the res gestae of one particular act. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

In a prosecution of a father for the rape of his daughter, the daughter was permitted to testify that the acts were without her consent; it being admitted as a part of the res gesta. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

Where, on a trial for keeping a house of assignation, two men testified that they met two girls on the street and arranged to meet them at accused's house for sexual intercourse, the girls suggesting accused's house, and telling them to see accused they were for "Mary's" and tell her "they" that they went direct to accused's house, delivered such message, and engaged rooms, and were joined in a few minutes by the girls, their testimony as to the conversation on the street and the testimony of a police officer as to seeing the men and women together on the street and watching them was admissible. Hearne v. State, 73 App. 396, 165 S. W. 596.

Accused, while attending a dance, stepped out on the gallery and urinated, and was surprised, whose husband complained to him of his conduct. While subsequently dancing with deceased's sister, he attempted to take liberties which she resented, refusing to continue dancing with him. He asked one or two other ladies to dance, and cursed them for their refusal, whereupon a dispute took place, in which deceased jerked accused out of the door, whereupon accused knocked deceased off a porch and shot him. Held, that, on a trial for homicide, testimony as to what occurred on the gallery and in connection with that matter and as to what occurred while accused was at deceased's sister was admissible, as it was a part of the transaction, and all of his misconduct was the cause of the others attempting to put him out of the room, and of the consequent killing. Muldrew v. State, 73 App. 463, 166 S. W. 156.

In evidence as to what occurred on the gallery for homicide, evidence was admitted of an arrest of accused by police officers, who immediately put accused in a car, and when the constable attempted to arrest him, resisted arrest and shot the constable, was admissible as res gestae. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1158.

On a trial for homicide, a witness was properly permitted to detail the events leading up to the tragedy: this being res gestae of the transaction. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

41. Subsequent condition of injured person.—Evidence that two days after the alleged occurrence, when witness saw prosecutrix, she noticed that her lips were blue, could see places on her neck, bruised spots on her throat, and a bruised place on her lip, was admissible as res gestae. Gromes v. State, 84 App. 54, 141 S. W. 261.

On a trial for homicide, a physician's testimony that, when he saw accused after the homicide, he seemed to be very much distressed, was properly excluded, where he testified that it was 20 or 25 minutes after he received the call to attend deceased before he saw accused, and the evidence did not show how much time elapsed between the homicide, and the time he received the call. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, evidence by a physician, who reached the prosecuting witness some ten minutes after the assault, to the effect that the witness was conscious when he reached her, but was pale from the loss of blood, was admissible. Forrester v. State, 73 App. 61, 165 S. W. 268.

42. Acts and statements of accused prior to offense.—Statements made by the defendant prior to the killing as to his purpose in going to the place where the homicide occurred are not part of the res gestae. Powell v. State, 5 App. 234.

Acts, declarations and statements of defendant before the homicide are not admissible. Harrell v. State, 39 App. 222, 45 S. W. 581.

Declarations of defendant made immediately before the killing took place, held admissible as a part of the res gestae. Koller v. State, 36 App. 486, 38 S. W. 44.

A declaration of defendant just before the transaction admissible to show motive and intent. Ex parte Kennedy (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 648.

A statement by accused, just prior to his entering a schoolhouse and disturbing religious worship, in answer to a warning by witness that, if the meeting was disturbed, somebody would report accused and his companions, "By God, you would not do it," was admissible as res gestae. Boyd v. State, 57 App. 250, 122 S. W. 933.

43. Acts and statements while committing offense.—Evidence as to oral statements by defendant at the time a false affidavit was made, corresponding to the statements in the affidavit, was admissible as part of the res gestae over the objection that it was secondary evidence. Simpson v. State, 46 App. 77, 79 S. W. 530.

Evidence of obscene language, used by defendant to a lady when he had a pistol drawn on her, being part of the transaction, is admissible as res gestae on a prosecution for carrying a pistol. Brcogin v. State, 63 App. 773, 140 S. W. 357.

That declarations made by accused when he was surprised in a burglarized building were in answer to questions would not prevent their admission as res gestae. Hickman v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 915.

In a trial for burglary with intent to commit rape, persons who went to the house to prevent the execution of such intent, after being informed that accused had broken into the house, were properly permitted to testify what accused did when they came to the house: his acts and declarations constituting part of the res gestae. Alsup v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 624.

44. Acts and statements of accused subsequent to offense.—What a person does immediately after an assault, and in direct connection with it, is often more satisfactory in showing the state of mind which prompted the assault than that which immediately precedes it. Weaver v. State, 24 Tex. 387.

The reasons given by defendant why he delayed in shooting are incompetent, Mercer v. State, 32 Tex. 59. See, also, Johnson v. State, 1 App. 129.

Where there was no eyewitness to the homicide, the defendant offered to prove by witnesses who reached the place of the homicide five or ten minutes after it had been made by him to them in relation to such homicide, that his statement so made was res gestae and admissible. Brunet v. State, 12 App. 521.

It was proper to permit the state to prove that a few minutes after the deceased was shot; the defendant and another man were seen at the house of deceased's father, and to prove the language and conduct of defendant at that time and place. This testimony related to matters which transpired immediately after the homicide, and were closely connected with it and were part of the res gestae. Cartwright v. State, 16 App. 473, 49 Am. Rep. 526.

Declarations made by the defendant ten or fifteen minutes after he had committed the homicide, and after he had gone a distance of four or five hundred yards from the place of the homicide, were held to be not a part of the res gestae and not admissible for the defendant. Stephens v. State, 20 App. 255.

And see a case of habeas corpus for bail where the declarations of the relator, made immediately subsequent to the homicide, were held res gestae. Ex parte Albright, 29 App. 125, 15 S. W. 175.

What was said and done by defendant a short time after the killing was admissible against him as res gestae. McGee v. State, 31 App. 71, 19 S. W. 764.

Whereas the same as much as an hour had elapsed after the killing, the defendant had loaded his wagon and done some three-quarters of a mile, his declarations would not be a part of the res gestae and would not be admissible in his own behalf. Chalk v. State, 35 App. 116, 32 S. W. 534.

Declarations made by deceased at the place and within fifteen minutes after the shooting are a part of the res gestae, and are admissible in evidence. Lindsey v. State, 35 App. 184, 32 S. W. 768.

Statements made by defendant, half an hour after the alleged assault, are inadmissible as part of the res gestae. McCullouch v. State, 35 App. 265, 33 S. W. 236; Kinnard v. State, 25 App. 176, 33 S. W. 234, 60 Am. St. Rep. 47.

Evidence of a fight between accused and the only witness for the state while on the way to the trial for violating the prohibition law was not admissible as part of the res gestae. 1 Ham. v. Egute, 57 App. 163, 129 S. W. 214.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, and for resisting an officer, testimony by the officer that, while he was taking accused to jail, the latter cursed and abused and threatened to kill him, was admissible as res gestae; and it was not rendered inadmissible by the officer's testimony in connection therewith of a statement by accused, after he was released and came back, that he intended to kill him. Woodward v. State, 58 App. 411, 126 S. W. 271.

In a trial for burglary, a statement made by appellant, shortly after he was shot down by a prosecuting witness at the door of the latter's chicken house, that he and his companions had gone into the chicken house, breaking off the lock, that when a number of chickens were caused to be shot and had followed that business for some time, that when interrupted he started to escape, etc., was admissible as a res gestae statement. Bronson v. State, 59 App. 17, 127 S. W. 175.

Statements made by defendant and his companions by defendant and his companions were excluded when offered as res gestae; there having been sufficient time intervening during which defendant and his companions could have concocted a defense. Denier v. State, 58 App. 204, 127 S. W. 205.

Evidence by accused's father as to what accused told him about the killing when he saw him some time thereafter was not admissible not being res gestae. Jackson v. State, 62 App. 351, 130 S. W. 1156.

Where defendant after the killing walked to his home, put up his gun, told his father of the killing, and then walked a mile to the home of a justice of the peace, and gave himself up, evidence as to what he then told the justice as to the killing was properly excluded as not being part of the res gestae. Blue v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 769.

Where accused shot and killed his wife, and then left the scene of the killing, but immediately returned and then started to find an officer to surrender to him, and officer between a half and three-quarters of an hour from the scene of the killing, and he was immediately turned over to the officer, and he then said that he wanted the officer and the sheriff to go to the scene of the killing to see whether his wife was dead, and, if she was, they should come back, tell him and he would be satisfied and the mob could come in the morning, was admissible as a part of the res gestae, in the absence of anything to show that accused's mind had become cool and calculating when making the declaration. Rainer v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 755.

In a homicide case, testimony that defendant came to witness' house on the night of the crime, and told him to tell "S. not to give him out for the next ten years, because ten years was not too long for him, and that he walked all the way from V. to State 40 Tex. 485. 2 App. 595, 52 due to his wife's going to see that short sighted, but Shorty stepped in his way," was admissible to show his state of mind; S. having been the mistress of accused, and the killing having been in her presence, and was close enough to the time of the crime to be part of the res gestae. Gentry v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 685.
Where witnesses, who were walking along the road with defendant and his wife at the time they were shot, testified that as the accused was about to be shot, an arm, and threw him away from the remainder of the crowd, and shortly after was seen to sink to the ground, further testimony that defendant walked back to her, and told her to get up, and kicked her, was admissible as res gestae. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 550.

Where the state claimed that accused walked into the room where decedent and others were, and immediately shot decedent, while appellant claimed that decedent had shot himself, and that during the struggle accused got out his gun and shot decedent, the testimony of an eyewitness that accused made no reply to a question put to him by the witness immediately after the shooting as to why he shot decedent was admissible to throw light on the transaction. McKelvey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 332.

Statements made by accused to his son immediately after having killed deceased were admissible on behalf of the state. Smith v. State, 70 App. 156 S. W. 214.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence of statements made by accused, or leading to them, within fifteen minutes after the killing, upon his return home, whence he had ridden rapidly after shooting deceased, is admissible as part of the res gestae. Garcia v. State, 70 App. 156 S. W. 539.

A few minutes after a fight and while a wound received in such fight was bleeding, and the parties were laboring under the excitement incident to the fight, one of the parties made a statement to a physician as to the difficulty and how it occurred, such statement should have been admitted on such party's trial for aggravated assault. Russell v. State, 71 App. 56, 158 S. W. 546.

A statement by accused long after he had left the scene of the homicide was not res gestae, but a self-serving declaration, and properly excluded. Wright v. State, 73 App. 175, 163 S. W. 976.

Where accused left the place where he killed decedent, and later in the night went to the home of a third person and called a justice of the peace over the phone, his statements made to the third person and to the justice were inadmissible as self-serving declarations, and were not a part of the res gestae. Chant v. State, 73 App. 345, 166 S. W. 313.

On a trial of accused for the murder of his son-in-law, the conduct of decedent's wife immediately after accused had stabbed decedent, and accused's statements in response to exclamations by the wife, were admissible as part of the res gestae. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 185 S. W. 100.

Where, from the time accused gave the alarm and called a number of people stating that he thought deceased was dead, the minds of those present were directed to ascertaining the mode of death and to finding the weapon with which the killing was done, and accused participated until his arrest in the search for the weapon, which was continued in his presence, evidence that he was nervous while the others were searching the room in which the weapon was found, and that after it was found and was being taken away with other pistols also found in the same room, he turned pale and flushed up and appeared nervous, was properly admitted as res gestae, though it related to his conduct while under arrest, as time is not the only determining factor as to res gestae; and if all the facts and circumstances show the matters to be so connected as to be part and parcel of the transaction, acts and conduct springing out of and forming a part of it are admissible as a part of the transaction. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 360.

45. Other offenses part of same transaction.—See Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 156, 15 S. W. 597.

As part of the res gestae, it is competent to prove that other persons than the deceased, for whose murder the defendant is on trial, were killed in the same onslaught. Krebs v. State, 3 App. 298; Crews v. State, 24 App. 533, 21 S. W. 572; Lee v. State, 72 App. 267, 162 S. W. 443.

In a robbery trial, it was proper to show that another person was robbed at the same time and place as prosecuting witness. Serop v. State (Cr. App.) 134 S. W. 796; Compton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 590.

And it is also competent to prove as res gestae an additional assault committed by the defendant at the time of the one charged. Weaver v. State, 24 Tex. 387.

Where the prosecutrix, in testifying, was permitted, over the defendant's objection, to narrate the circumstances of an assault made by the defendant upon her father-in-law when the latter came to her rescue during her struggle with the defendant, it was held that the testimony was admissible; that it was res gestae and relevant. Thompson v. State, 11 App. 61.

Upon the question of intent, and to develop the res gestae, etc., the state was properly permitted to show the contemporaneous receiving by defendant of other stolen property than that charged in the indictment. Morgan v. State, 31 App. 1, 15 S. W. 547.

It is competent for the state to prove the simultaneous theft of other property than that alleged, if such proof conduces to establish identity in developing the res gestae, or to prove the guilt of the accused by circumstances connected with the theft, or to show the intent with which the accused acted with respect to the property alleged in the indictment. Williams v. State, 24 App. 412, 6 S. W. 318; Stokely v. State, 24 App. 509, 6 S. W. 538; Reno v. State, 25 App. 126, 7 S. W. 553; Gentry v. State, 25 App. 674, 8 S. W. 955; Hanley v. State, 25 App. 375, 18 S. W. 142; Airoo v. State, 25 App. 485, 13 S. W. 512; Barton v. State, 25 App. 519, 13 S. W. 512; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 199, 15 S. W. 597; Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 16 S. W. 787; Wellhausen v. State, 30 App. 625, 18 S. W. 300; Nixon v. State, 31 App. 205, 20 S. W. 355; Anley v. State, 31 App. 211, 20 S. W. 355.

See a case of murder where the proof showed that several assaults committed at the same place, almost simultaneously in point of time, and for the same manifest purpose, were so closely connected with, related to, and illustrative of each other as to make the res gestae of the one of the other. Leeper v. State, 25 Tex. 198, 11 S. W. 388.

On trial for robbery of one woman, it was held admissible to prove that, at the same time and place, defendant raped another woman who had no money. Harris v. State, 32 App. 570, 22 S. W. 1067.

That the prosecuting witness was robbed during the assault is admissible as part of the res gestae. Richards v. State, 34 App. 277, 36 S. W. 229.

Where his wife were found in a barn, deceased mortally wounded and his wife dead, the killing of the wife is a part of the res gestae. Crews v. State, 34 App. 552, 31 S. W. 373.

On trial for burglary evidence of theft and arson committed at the same time is admissible. Nixson v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 149.

Evidence showing that other property was taken at the same time and place is admissible in a prosecution for burglary. Hayes v. State, 36 App. 146, 35 S. W. 882.

On trial for murder of one Mrs. C., evidence of the killing of her husband and son at the same time and place was admitted; held, that this was part of the res gestae, and being limited by the court to its legitimate purpose, was properly admitted. Martin v. State, 38 App. 462, 45 S. W. 355.

Evidence of possession of other stolen animals belonging to other parties stolen about the same time is admissible as a part of part res gestae. Thompson v. State, 42 App. 149, 57 S. W. 806.

An indictment for conversion as bailee of a horse, it was admissible to prove as res gestae that he took a saddle at the same time. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 888.

The fact that an extraneous crime is not exactly contemporaneous does not make it inadmissible. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 1119.

That crimes are contemporaneous is not sufficient to authorize their admission. They must also illustrate and show intent with which defendant acted in the commission of the offense for which he is being tried. Hunt v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 565.

In a prosecution for carrying a pistol, in which the evidence showed that another made threats against accused, who, when he heard of them, armed himself, and went down town, and shot such other, after a quarrel, evidence of the character or inflicted, while not necessary, was part of the res gestae of carrying the pistol. Hines v. State, 57 App. 216, 123 S. W. 411.

Where, on a trial for assault to murder, the evidence showed that accused, on hearing the return to his premises of prosecutor and other boys, after he had learned that they had been on the premises shortly before playing a prank on him, fired a shot to alarm them, and shot prosecutor, evidence that on their first appearance he had shot twice, and had killed one of the boys, was admissible as a part of the transaction. Trimble v. State, 57 App. 439, 126 S. W. 40.

Evidence of another theft on the same day was not admissible as part of the res gestae; the two offenses being separate. Nunn v. State, 60 App. 86, 131 S. W. 320.

Where, on a trial for aggravated assault on an officer, the evidence showed that a few minutes before the assault there had been a difficulty between accused and a third person, and when prosecutor after the difficulty accosted accused she had a large knife open in her hand and used profane and threatening language, and that prosecutor in endeavoring to arrest her and prevent injury to himself was assaulted by her, the exclusion of evidence relating wholly to the difficulty with the third person and to the conduct of prosecutor after the assault on him was not erroneous. Porter v. State, 60 App. 688, 132 S. W. 535.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, by selling liquor to D., a witness testified that accused sold to D. could testify that accused at the same time sold liquor to him, and D. also could testify to the same sale to the other witness; such evidence being admissible as res gestae, and to establish accused's guilt. Hardgrave v. State, 61 App. 325, 132 S. W. 109.

On a trial for assaulting with a pistol, with intent to murder, a man who was paying attentions to a woman to whom accused was attached, evidence that in the light, immediately after the shooting, accused struck the woman with his fist and attempted to strike her with a chair was admissible as a part of the res gestae, and as throwing light on his state of mind and intention. Irving v. State, 70 App. 222, 156 S. W. 641.

Where an officer claimed that he was called to a saloon and notified of pending trouble, and that some one had a knife; that he discovered the knife on accused's person and demanded it; that accused refused to surrender it, and a difficulty arose, in which he was cut on the hand before he obtained the knife; that he then arrested four persons and started off with them, when some one called to him to watch out, and he was then assaulted from the rear, and that a person who came to his rescue was killed—he was properly permitted to testify on accused's trial for assault to murder as to the details of both difficulties, the participants therein, the wounds inflicted on him, and that such person who came to his rescue was killed. Latta v. State, 12 App. 134, 161 S. W. 99.

In a prosecution for the procuring of a woman to have sexual intercourse with another man, evidence that during the intercourse she robbed the man, and gave part of the money to accused, is admissible as part of the res gestae. Bybee v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 526.

On a trial for assault on a constable, with intent to kill, growing out of an attempt to arrest accused for killing a third person a few minutes before, evidence that he shot and killed such third person was properly admitted. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 534.

In a prosecution for receiving one stolen pool ball, testimony that the accused at about the same time received other balls from the same person is admissible as part of the res gestae and to show intent. Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 783.
In a prosecution for carrying liquor into prohibition territory and delivering it there to a person named, evidence that other persons had given defendant money to get liquor for them, which liquor was delivered at the same time as was that for the person named in the indictment, was properly admitted as part of the res gestae and as showing system. Ferryman v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1195.

47. Allsup v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 624.

Where defendant killed the husband of his stepdaughter, evidence of a witness that at the time of the shooting she heard defendant's stepdaughter say that she told him to do that, was admissible as res gestae, being an exclamation coincident with the firing of the shots by a party concerning whom the trouble arose. Smith v. State, 70 App. 62, 156 S. W. 214.

A statement by a person not present at the time of a homicide made shortly thereafter is not a part of the res gestae and is properly excluded as hearsay. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 140, 159 S. W. 235.

Where defendant was charged with maliciously taking down a gate, it was prejudicial error not to allow witnesses to testify as to what was said by the boys doing the act to show that there was no intent to injure the property; it being res gestae. Meador v. State, 72 App. 527, 162 S. W. 1155.

In a suit on a benefit certificate issued by a fraternal beneficiary association, the by-laws of which provided that the certificate should be void if the insured should die in consequence of a violation of any law, it appeared that insured was killed while engaged in a brawl. Held, that evidence of declarations made immediately after the killing by one of the men who was present that the killing was in self-defense was admissible as part of the res gestae. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Bailey (Civ. App.) 163 S. W. 653.

In the trial of one charged as accomplice to murder, declarations of the principle which are part of the res gestae of the killing are admissible. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 899.

In a prosecution for violation of an ordinance of the city of Ft. Worth making it unlawful for any white person and any negro to have sexual intercourse, each act to constitute a separate offense, punishable by fine not to exceed $500, evidence that, as soon as admission was gained to the room where defendant and the white man were locked in, both of them undressed, and the bed ruffled up, the white man said to the officer that he had not had intercourse with defendant, was admissible as part of the res gestae. Strauss v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 963.

When issued a forged instrument by offering it in evidence in the justice court, and the district court obtained possession thereof by a subpoena duces tecum, that court did not err, on a trial for passing such instrument, in refusing to instruct its officers to return the instrument to accused, as legal possession had been obtained of it, and the court had a right to hold it until the case was disposed of. Bunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 106.

In a prosecution for selling liquor in local option territory, where a witness was allowed to testify that he did not know who got a bottle of whisky purchased, after stating that his father and two others were present, the witness not being allowed to testify to any statement made in the presence and hearing of defendant and not constituting a part of the res gestae of the transaction, connected with whisky being delivered and whisky being taken, as its result, the evidence was admissible. Mills v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 267.

The primary rule of evidence which requires that the proof shall correspond with the allegations, and be confined to the point in issue, excludes all evidence of collateral facts, or those which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal fact or matter in issue. Under this rule, it was held error to permit the state, over objection, to prove that, prior to the commission of the arson, for which the defendant was on trial, he was charged with the commission of another and distinct offense, and was a fugitive from justice. Chumley v. State, 20 App. 547.

Another distinct offense committed "about the time" is not an offense committed at the time, and when it does not show system is inadmissible. James v. State, 40 App. 155, 49 S. W. 401.

It is not permissible for the state to prove a former trial and conviction of the defendant for the same offense. Clark v. State, 23 App. 290, 5 S. W. 115.

Evidence that the defendant had been confined in the penitentiary for felony, was held irrelevant and inadmissible. Guajardo v. State, 24 App. 603, 7 S. W. 331.

On trial for robbery of a woman it is competent for the state to prove that at the time and place defendant had no money, and used his pistol in both instances. Harris v. State, 32 App. 279, 22 S. W. 1037.

Evidence of defendant's former conviction must be limited to his credibility. Hutton v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 969.

Showing for keeping and exhibiting a gaming table evidence that defendant had been engaged in other acts of gaming should not be admitted. Ah Kee v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 269.

State cannot prove that defendant was fined some time before the killing for 617.
disturbance with deceased, it not being for purpose of showing malice or antecedent rage. Woodworth v. State, 42 App. 158, 58 S. W. 145.

Where defendant is tried for bringing eight dead dogs into the county of prosecution it is error to prove that two weeks after date of crime he brought ten dead hogs into said county. The two transactions were not contemporaneous. Grant v. State, 42 App. 200, 58 S. W. 1097.

Where two offenses have been committed about the same time and accused is being tried for one, the commission of the other is not admissible unless it either shows system or the offenses are contemporaneous and show the intent with which accused acted in commission of offense for which he is being tried. McIver v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 50.

Independent crimes cannot be introduced where no connection is shown between the offense with which defendant is being tried unless some system is shown—such as in arson or burglary. In most instances independent crimes are never admissible, since they do not illustrate the act with which defendant is being tried, nor do they throw any light on his intent and motive. Spelligina v. State, 42 App. 341, 60 S. W. 54.

Extraneous crimes committed two and one-half months before commission of crime for which defendant is being tried are not contemporaneous. Denton v. State, 42 App. 427, 60 S. W. 672.

It is error to prove that next day after the crime when defendant was arrested he was carrying a pistol, as this was a distinct offense and in no way connected with and not illustrative of the crime for which defendant was being tried. Riggins v. State, 42 App. 472, 60 S. W. 578.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, evidence that accused had been previously indicted in the county for a like offense was inadmissible. Waterhouse v. State, 57 App. 509, 124 S. W. 623.

In a prosecution for offering to bribe a witness, where defendant did not take the stand, the admission in evidence of his having been arrested for arson would have been reversible error. Maples v. State, 60 App. 169, 131 S. W. 567.

In a prosecution for practicing medicine without authority in violation of Pen. Code, art. 750, evidence that defendant treated persons other than the person named in the information was admissible. Germany v. State, 62 App. 576, 137 S. W. 130, Ann. Caa. 1913C, 477.

Where a witness for the state testified that accused had attempted to induce him to give false testimony, testimony of the witness that he made a complaint against accused therefor, and as to the result of the trial thereon, was immaterial. Day v. State, 62 App. 448, 125 S. W. 130.

In a prosecution for pandering, witnesses were properly permitted to testify that defendant first sought to obtain a room at E.'s, and, failing in this, obtained a room at J.'s both of which were houses of prostitution, that he subsequently carried his wife to each of those places, and the statements made by him on those occasions. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

In a prosecution of a bank president for receiving deposits on a certain Monday with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, evidence that on Saturday before such Monday, other persons had made deposits, was not admissible, especially where accused was not in personal charge of the bank. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 551.

In a prosecution for receiving a stolen dress, evidence of the theft of a diamond ring subsequent to the theft of the dress, by the same party who stole the dress, was improperly admitted, where the court in no way limited its application. Forrester v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1041.

The details of an operation of abortion and the suffering at the time and after are not admissible in evidence in a prosecution for seduction, nor for being an accessory to that crime. Harrison v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

When defendant was on trial for perjury, evidence of other trial offenses committed by him in other counties, under different circumstances, and for which he had never been indicted, was inadmissible. Poulter v. State, 72 App. 140, 161 S. W. 476.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, evidence that accused had pleaded guilty to a charge of vagrancy was not admissible unless the section of the vagrancy statute under which she was prosecuted was first shown. Bowman v. State, 73 App. 194, 164 S. W. 846.

On a trial for carrying a pistol, evidence as to an altercation between accused, after he had given bail for his appearance and left the jail, and a person who followed him to get him to return to attend to some minor matter, should have been excluded, and its admission is ground for reversal, where the jury, in addition to a fine, assessed the punishment at imprisonment in the county jail for 60 days. Ransom v. State, 73 App. 442, 165 S. W. 932.

When extraneous crimes are res gestae of an offense on trial, or tend to show the intent with which accused acted, such intent is an issue, or tend to connect him with the offense charged, they are admissible. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1122.

In a prosecution for rape on a child under 15, her evidence of an act of intercourse prior to that charged, although committed more than a year before the institution of the prosecution, so that prosecution for it would have been barred by limitation, was admissible as evidence showing the relations of the parties, hearing on the probability of the commission of the act charged, under the rule that evidence of one crime is admissible to prove another, when they are so related that the State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 357. With the offense charged, they are admissible. Haggart v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 357.

Where accused is shown to have committed an act forbidden by law, and makes defense that, if she did the facts alleged, she did so innocently or by mistake, proof of other similar offenses is admissible to rebut the defense. Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 357.
52. — In prosecutions for homicide.—Propriety of allowing defendant to be asked about another murder with which he had been charged. Butler v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 125.

Where defendant is being tried for murder, evidence of an assault upon the body by the defendant cannot be shown. Spriggins v. State, 42 App. 341, 60 S. W. 35, 36.

Accused on the day of the murder was told by deceased that the latter had taken up hogs belonging to accused because they were injuring his crops, and both went to the house of deceased and subsequently to the house of deceased's landlord, and from there returned to the house of deceased, where the murder was committed. Held, that evidence that, while at the landlord's house, accused cursed and abused some of the people he met there, and assaulted one woman, was not admissible, as evidence of extraneous crimes is inadmissible unless the same will develop the res gestae, intent, system, or identity of the parties. Pace v. State, 58 App. 90, 124 S. W. 949.

On a trial for murder, evidence that decedent was a fugitive from the justice of a sister state, charged with a felony and that on his coming to Texas he changed his name was inadmissible. Roquemore v. State, 59 App. 558, 129 S. W. 1120.

The state, on a trial of a parent for the murder of his child, may show that the parent had pleaded guilty to a charge of aggravated assault on the child. Betts v. State, 60 App. 651, 61 S. W. 251.

A bill of exceptions which shows that the court would have sustained an objection to a question asked accused as to whether he had ever killed a person before, unless the proof showed that the killing was recent, and that if counsel for accused desired to urge the objection the question and the partial answer made before the objection would be excluded, and no further reference or question was ever made thereto by any one, does not show error in the admission of evidence. Johnson v. State, 61 App. 635, 134 S. W. 235.

While it was permissible, on a prosecution for mixing poison with a drink with intent to kill M., to introduce defendant's statement that on the day it was claimed the poison was mixed with the drink she was at M.'s house for the purpose of showing her opportunity to do the mixing, the fact of an officer having subsequently gone to defendant's house to search for such articles and to arrest her for stealing them is an extraneous matter not admissible. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 239.

Evidence that another who died may have drunk thereof cannot be considered on the question of defendant having put poison in milk with intent to kill M. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 239.

Where defendant killed his wife and another, evidence, in a prosecution for the killing of the other, that defendant had previously assaulted and seriously injured his wife, and had been indicted therefor in another county, was admissible to support the state's contention that defendant killed his wife to prevent her from testifying in the other prosecution. Robbins v. State, 78 App. 387, 165 S. W. 628.

In a prosecution for homicide, it was improper for the court to permit the state to ask witnesses for accused on cross-examination whether they had not associated with accused, drunk with him, and branded cattle with him, for the purpose of raising an inference that accused was also a cattle thief. Eads v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

53. — In prosecutions for forgery.—See a state of facts in a trial for forgery in which it was held that certain postoffice receipts with the exhibit that the stolen stock in question had been stolen, were extraneous. Lettz v. State (Cr. App.) 21 S. W. 371, distinguished. Burge v. State, 32 App. 355, 23 S. W. 692.

In a prosecution of a railroad station agent for forging a labor receipt, other transactions, indicating an embezzlement by the agent, rather than forgery, were inadmissible. Felton v. State, 60 App. 415, 122 S. W. 448, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 66.

Evidence that accused had presented other forged checks for payment to the bank which paid the check alleged to be a forgery was improper, where such payments were not shown to have been contemporaneous with the transaction relied on. Horn v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 945.

In a prosecution for passing a forged check or draft, evidence of the officers who arrested accused that at the time of his arrest they found other forged drafts or checks on his person and in his baggage, and as to the character of the ink with which such checks were written, was admissible. Dugat v. State, 72 App. 39, 160 S. W. 376.

54. — In prosecutions for embezzlement or theft.—Evidence is sometimes admissible to show a chain of circumstances relied on by the owner of the sheep, that in the same flock in which he found his stolen sheep he saw other sheep with marks and brands recently altered, as it had been the marks and brands upon his said stolen sheep, into the mark and brand of the defendant, and that the said flock having been recently sold by defendant, his proper testimony was admissible as a link in the chain of circumstances relied on by the owner of the sheep.
state to connect the defendant with the theft of the sheep described in the indictment. Hester v. State, 15 App. 367.

In a prosecution for the theft of a horse, committed in B. county, on January 19, 1857, it was held error to permit the state to prove that the defendant was seen in another county on the night of January 31, 1857, at a place where, on said last named date, another horse, different from that named in the indictment, was stolen. Carter v. State, 23 App. 508, 5 S. W. 128.

As tending to establish identity in developing the res gestae, or to prove guilt by circumstances connected with the theft, or to show the intent of the accused with respect to the property described in the indictment, it is competent for the state to prove the theft by defendant of other property at the same time and place of the theft in question, but it is not competent to prove a distinct theft committed by the defendant at another time and place. See the other case and place. Evidence of distinct thefts held to have been erroneously admitted. Williams v. State, 24 App. 412, 6 S. W. 318.

On trial for theft of a yearling it was held inadmissible to prove the theft of two calves by someone living at defendant's place. Schwen v. State, 37 App. 368, 35 S. W. 172.

On trial for theft of a bank bill it is competent to show that prosecutor had about the same time, and under similar circumstances, lost several other bills. Hurley v. State, 36 App. 73, 35 S. W. 371.

In a prosecution for theft evidence of similar thefts at other times; held, inadmissible. Buck v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 772.

Evidence of other thefts, not showing systematic crime nor showing defendant's connection therewith, is not admissible. Unsell v. State, 39 App. 330, 45 S. W. 1022.

State cannot prove burglary by defendant fifty miles away in prosecution for theft of horse at a different time and place. Molver v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 50.

Where, in a prosecution for theft, the evidence was unequivocal as to the breaking and entering of the house in question and the theft therein, evidence as to another burglary, alleged to have been committed on the same night, serving no purpose of identification, system, or developing the res gestae, was inadmissible. Clark v. State, 59 App. 246, 125 S. W. 131, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

Where, on the trial of a porter in a store for the theft of a skirt, the state proved that accused had a skirt in his possession in the store, but did not prove that he had been in possession of other goods, evidence of goods found in the house of a third person with whom accused spent a part of his time was inadmissible. Morgan v. State, 62 App. 120, 136 S. W. 1065.

Where city secretary was indicted for misappropriating a warrant belonging to the city, and it appeared that the warrant was deposited by him to the credit of the wrong fund of the city for the purpose of covering up a shortage in that fund, it was error to admit evidence of prior misappropriations from the fund in which the shortage appeared. Dickey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 271.

In a prosecution for embezzling the proceeds of a check given accused to deposit for another, it was error to admit evidence that accused had committed a crime in dealing with others. Nesbitt v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 944.

Or for selling liquor to a minor evidence that defendant had sold liquor to other minors is inadmissible. Freedman v. State, 37 App. 115, 58 S. W. 993.

In prosecutions for the sale of intoxicating liquors, proof of other and different sales is inadmissible. Spain v. State, 61 App. 107, 63, 133 S. W. 327.

Where, on a trial for violating the local option law, the question of system of accused was not in issue, and the evidence on the issue of a sale of whisky by accused to prosecutor was conflicting, evidence of the delivery of whisky to accused three months before the alleged sale was inadmissible, because disconnected with the charge. Gaines v. State, 63 App. 73, 138 S. W. 357.

Where the person who had purchased liquor from accused in local option territory testified that accused told him that he was shipping similar liquor to other persons named, and that he could procure liquor from such persons, it was not error to permit the witness to testify that accused had shipped similar liquor to others in the town. Sandoloski v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 151.

In a prosecution for sale of intoxicants on Sunday, it is not error to ask a witness who, before he saw the side door of accused's saloon open on a stated Sunday, Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 296.

Where accused denied making a sale of beer to prosecutor in violation of the local option law, the admission of evidence of another sale by accused to prosecutor and of the fact that two or three days after the alleged sale of beer the officer arresting accused found whisky and beer and empty beer bottles, from some of which beer had been recently emptied, was not erroneous. Mitchell v. State, 71 App. 185, 139 S. W. 1073.

Where, in a prosecution for selling intoxicants in prohibition territory, admitted that he received the money from prosecuting witness, and delivered the whisky to him, but claimed that he was acting as agent in so doing, evidence by prosecuting witness that he had purchased whisky from accused and on another occasion was admissible on the issue of agency. Ross v. State, 72 App. 611, 163 S. W. 493.

56. In prosecutions for burglary.—On trial for burglary it is error to permit evidence of other extraneous crimes not connected with the burglary in ques-
In a prosecution for burglary it was error to permit the state to prove another burglary by defendant and, immediately before the commission of the alleged burglary for which he was on trial. Hill v. State, 44 App. 603, 73 S. W. 9.

On a prosecution for burglary, it was error to admit evidence that defendant, when arrested and taken before a justice, and before he was warned, was discovered trying to get rid of a pin and watch, and to show that they were the fruit of former crimes. Johnson v. State, 50 App. 116, 86 S. W. 45.

In a prosecution for burglarizing the house of C., evidence of an alleged confession by accused, in which he admitted obtaining certain articles from the store of another on the same night, was inadmissible as substantive evidence. Barnett v. State, 56 App. 538, 99 S. W. 558.

Motions of a district attorney to dismiss indictments are addressed to the discretion of the court, with which the jury has nothing to do, and hence in a burglary case, evidence of other indictments against the accused for assault to murder, growing out of the same transaction, and that they had been dismissed, was improperly admitted. Bailey v. State, 55 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1129, 125 S. W. 576.

In a prosecution for the burglary of a store, a witness for the state testified that he was an employee of the same telephone company as defendant, and that he saw the defendant coming out of the workroom, in which was located a wire screen partition, and saw it and the store, with a large grip which could hold several suits of clothes, and that he noticed that if it was full, and, on his inquiry what he had in defendant replied, "Old clothes to have washed." Held, that it was error to admit such testimony, when it related to an occurrence some two weeks after the date on which he charged, and its admission was but a proof of other and extraneous crimes. Johnson v. State, 57 App. 458, 123 S. W. 1105.

In a prosecution for burglary by shooting into a dwelling house at night on September 23th with intent to murder, it was error to admit testimony as to trouble which accused had at another’s house on December 25th following. Windham v. State, 59 App. 366, 128 S. W. 1130.

In a prosecution for burglary by shooting into a dwelling house in the night-time with intent to murder, the court permitted the occupant of the house to testify: That on the night of December 25, 1908, he heard accused make threats against him. That accused and his father had been at another place and got into trouble there, and they stopped at witness’ gate, and accused said: "Where is old C.? The God damn son of a bitch, let him show up to-night!" and then said, "I am going to shoot that light out," but his father told him not to, and that he was in trouble enough already. That, when accused made such statements, witness spoke to him. Another witness was permitted to testify in support of the above testimony. Held, that the testimony was erroneous in not being confined to another offense distinct from that alleged. Windham v. State, 59 App. 366, 128 S. W. 1130.

57. — In prosecutions for rape and incest.—In a statutory rape case, it was not error to admit evidence of other acts of intercourse by defendant with prosecutrix where the instructions limited the jury to the consideration of one specific act on a certain date. Williamson v. State, 72 App. 618, 163 S. W. 435; Smith v. State, 64 App. 454, 142 S. W. 1172; Cozy v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 14; where the state has elected to rely upon the subsequent act of incestuous intercourse, evidence of subsequent acts are inadmissible, and likewise acts leading up to the intercourse. Gross v. State, 61 App. 176, 135 S. W. 373, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477; Cowser v. State, 70 App. 205, 157 S. W. 768.

On trial for rape, evidence of other assaults made by defendant on prosecutrix is admissible. Hanska v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 173.

Where, in a prosecution for incest, the state elected to rely for a conviction on a separate act definitely proved and as to which the prosecutrix was corroborated, it was error to permit the state to introduce proof of other acts of intercourse between prosecutrix and accused before or after the act in question. Pridemore v. State, 59 App. 583, 129 S. W. 1115, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 583.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, where the defense claimed the father of the prosecutrix was the guilty party, evidence that four years before he raped another daughter is not admissible to show the father guilty. Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 585, 137 S. W. 265.

In a prosecution of defendant for rape of his daughter, evidence of other sexual acts between the parties, that accused was the father of prosecutrix’s child, that he slept with her and had many times been seen in bed with her by others was admissible. G. & N. & P. R. R. Co. v. State, 72 App. 266, 162 S. W. 365.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence of an act of intercourse prior to that charged, tending to show the relations of the parties and the probability of the commission of the offense, could be considered only as bearing on the probability of the commission of the act charged, since a conviction could be had only for such act. Haggard v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 323.

58. — In prosecutions for assault.—In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, evidence that defendant on the morning of the offense had threatened to kill accused was inadmissible. Owen v. State, 58 S. W. 490.

In a prosecution for assault of a person assisting an officer in attempting to arrest defendant, evidence that defendant had whipped a little boy a day or so be­fore, was properly admitted. Owen v. State, 58 App. 261, 125 S. W. 465. Also testimony that defendant had been indicted therefor. Owen v. State, 58 App. 261, 125 S. W. 465.

Where accused, charged with assault with intent to murder, put his character for peace and quiet in evidence, proof that about 5 years before, when 13 or 14 years of age, accused had cut his female teacher with a knife, and had pleaded guilty to aggravated assault, was admissible on the issue of his being a quiet and peaceable man. Goosby v. State, 59 App. 525, 129 S. W. 624.

Where one tried for felonious assault pleaded self-defense and previous threats by complaining witness, it was error to permit the state to show that accused pleaded guilty to carrying a pistol at the time. Comegys v. State, 62 App. 231, 137 S. W. 349.

Where, on a trial for assault to murder, a witness stated that he had not heard prosecutor make any threat against accused, and that accused had tried to induce him to testify to the contrary, the testimony of a third person that she had seen accused waving a knife over the head of witness was inadmissible. Day v. State, 62 App. 448, 133 S. W. 130.

In a prosecution for assault alleged to have occurred shortly after the person assaulted called the defendant into his store and asked defendant to pay a debt, where the testimony was conflicting as to who commenced the difficulty, and the person assaulted testified that he was not excited or mad when he called defendant into the store, testimony that about 30 minutes preceding the difficulty the person assaulted had committed an assault on a drummer, and that within 15 minutes preced­ing such assault he had committed another assault on another drummer, was admissible. Jackson v. State, 62 App. 541, 138 S. W. 411.

Any competent evidence of assault with intent to murder, it was improper for the court to permit the state to introduce a subpoena which had been issued for another, whom, it was claimed, defendant had assaulted at another and different time, and to state that such person could not be produced, because she was sick in bed, and to state that defendant was then under arrest for committing such other assault. Lacoume v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 626.

59. — Evidence relevant to offense and also showing another offense.—It is no objection to a conviction for embezzlement, that the evidence also proves that in committing the embezzlement the defendant also committed theft of the property. Good v. State, 22 App. 1, 2 S. W. 231.

Where, in a trial for assault to murder, it appeared that the injured person's brother lost a hat, and, being informed that accused's brother had it, the injured person went to him to recover it, when the defendant, being afraid of the direction of the difficulty found a hat identified as the one taken near the place of the difficulty was not objectionable as tending to connect accused with theft of the hat, a different offense than that for which he was being tried, where there was nothing in the record to show that he was accused of theft. Wilson v. State, 62 App. 61, 138 S. W. 469.

Where, after defendant had been acquitted of burglary, he was indicted for theft, committed in the same transaction, any evidence which tended to show that he was guilty of the burglary notwithstanding the acquittal. Roman v. State, 64 App. 515, 143 S. W. 912.

Where, on a trial for burglary, the prosecutor testified that accused, when caught in the house burglarized, stated that he had just walked 20 miles, and was tired and hungry, and wanted something to eat, the testimony of witnesses that accused was in a store in the town in the forenoon of the day of the burglary in the after­noon. Though the date by stating that the defendant stated that night, was admissible to prove the falsity of accused's statements and to fix the time of his presence in the store, and, where the court so limited the testi­mony, accused could not complain on the ground that the testimony proved that he was in the store. Stoolgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1092.

In a prosecution for robbery by threats with a pistol, evidence that a certain witness had been convicted of carrying a pistol shortly after the date of the alleged robbery, offered to impeach him and to connect him with the offense charged against accused, was inadmissible for any purpose: accused having testified that he got the pistol used by him from such witness. Coker v. State, 71 App. 504, 160 S. W. 266.

In a prosecution for procuring a female to leave the state for the purpose of prostitution, the fact that evidence that defendant obtained money from her father to enable him to search for her, though he already knew where she was, also tended to show that the defendant was guilty of swindling does not affect its admissibility. Hewitt v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 46.

Any competent evidence which tends to defeat the defense urged is admissible, though it tends to show accused's commission of another offense, and especially is this true where accused's intent is an element of the crime, and the evidence offered tends to show that his intent was criminal. Bedford v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 727.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide alleged to have been committed in pursu­ance of a conspiracy to organize in Texas an armed force to invade Mexico, accu­sated voluntarily became a witness in his own behalf, evidence obtained from him in developing the homicide case was not objectionable because it also showed a conspiracy to violate the neutrality laws of the United States. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

60. Other offenses to prove identity.—Evidence of a theft from another person on the same date was not admissible on the question of identity. Nunn v. State, 60 App. 86, 131 S. W. 320.

61. Acts showing knowledge.—For the purpose of establishing the de­fendant's knowledge of the vicious character of a forged paper he is charged with.
uttering, it is competent for the state to show his contemporaneous connection with other transactions of a vicious character. Heard v. State, 9 App. Ca. 61.

Where the defendant was charged with receiving a yearling, knowing that the same was stolen, it was held competent for the state to prove that at the same time he received said yearling, he also received, in connection with another person, and in the same manner, a white cow, of two other cattle, two of the person, he sold three cattle at the same time to a third person. Said testimony was admissible as tending to show defendant's knowledge and intent with respect to the animal named in the indictment. Harwell v. State, 20 App. Ca. 261, 2 S. W. 696.

Where, on a trial for aggravated assault on an officer, the information alleged that accused knew at the time that the prosecutor was an officer and had been so informed at the time, evidence that a few months before the assault prosecutor had arrested accused was admissible to show accused knew, or had reason to know, that prosecutor was an officer at the time of the assault. Ligon v. State, 59 App. Ca. 274, 128 S. W. 620.

In a prosecution for passing a forged check or draft, evidence of the passing, or attempted passing, by accused of other forged checks or drafts at about the same time is admissible as showing guilty knowledge, etc. Dugat v. State, 72 App. Ca. 59, 160 S. W. 376.

On the trial of the owner of a house for knowingly permitting it to be kept as a house of prostitution where prostitutes were permitted to resort or reside for the purpose of plying their vocation, evidence that a number of other houses owned by accused were occupied by women who were running houses of prostitution, that the occupants of the house in question and the other houses had been arrested charged with being prostitutes, and that accused went on their bonds was competent to show accused's knowledge of the character of the occupants and their vocation. Golden v. State, 72 App. Ca. 19, 160 S. W. 957.

Acts showing intent, malice, or motive.—It may be shown for the purpose of proving a criminal intent, that the accused had, about the time of the uttering charged, uttered or attempted to utter, other forged instruments of the same description, or that he had such others, or instruments for manufacturing them, in his possession. Hallam v. State, 4 App. Ca. 645; Francis v. State, 2 App. Ca. 501; Heard v. State, 9 App. Ca. 1; Burks v. State, 24 App. Ca. 326, 328, 6 S. W. 390, 302; Thornley v. State, 36 App. Ca. 118, 34 S. W. 264, 35 S. W. 981, 61 Am. St. Rep. 536. Other swindles perpetrated by the defendant, about the same time and in the same manner as for which he is on trial, are admissible to establish the identity and the fraudulent intent of the defendant. Davison v. State, 12 App. Ca. 214; Hutcherson v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 375.

A back link in the chain of transfer may also be proved a forgery, but the court should caution the jury that it is only to show intent. Francis v. State, 7 App. Ca. 9.

Where defendant confessed to having forged the instrument, and at the same time confessed having embezzled other funds, the latter confession was admissible to show intent. Strang v. State, 32 App. Ca. 216, 23 S. W. 690.

Evidence of other sales of liquors is not admissible to show intent. Dane v. State, 36 App. Ca. 44, 35 S. W. 661.

On trial for slander it is competent to prove, as showing the animus of defendant, that subsequent to the slander as alleged he used the same or similar language to other parties in regard to the prosecutrix. Whitehead v. State, 39 App. Ca. 48 S. W. 10.

If party is charged with theft it is permissible to prove contemporaneous theft committed by committing theft to one of the same kind, or otherwise it is never admissible except when state relies upon system. Denton v. State, 42 App. Ca. 427, 60 S. W. 672.

In a prosecution for uxoricide, in which defendant claimed that the killing was accidental, accused was convicted by a jury of first degree murder, or fighting his wife, and that he had paid fines for fighting her and assaulting her with a pistol, was admissible to prove motive and intent in killing her. Wilson v. State, 60 App. Ca. 1, 129 S. W. 612.

In a prosecution for theft of five goats claimed by accused to have been taken under a mistake of fact, there was no error in admitting testimony of a witness whose goats were claimed to have been stolen and who bought the five in question, as to having seen accused in possession of nine other goats, this being proper in view of the mark of the witness thereon to show, as affecting the good faith or truthfulness of the claim of accused, possession of other goats belonging to the witness which had likewise been marked and branded by accused. Petty v. State, 59 App. Ca. 588, 129 S. W. 615.

In connection with testimony tending to show that defendant's motive in killing deceased was to protect himself against testimony of deceased in cases in which defendant, and in some of which deceased, was charged with theft, the indictments in those cases were admissible. Chandler v. State, 60 App. Ca. 292, 121 S. W. 258.

In order that other collateral forgeries may be considered by the jury in proving defendant's fraudulent intent with reference to the forgery in question, they must be such as to raise a reasonable doubt that any of the transactions in fact forgeries; a scintilla of evidence indicating such fact not being sufficient. Pelton v. State, 60 App. Ca. 412, 132 S. W. 480, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 86.

In a prosecution of a railroad station agent for forging a receipt for money alleged to have been paid for services rendered at his station on behalf of the railroad company, other receipts relating to precisely similar transactions, also claimed to have been forged, and to have been executed about the same time as the forgery in question, were admissible to show defendant's intent. Pelton v. State, 60 App. Ca. 412, 132 S. W. 480, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 86.

Where, in a prosecution for an attempt to bribe an officer by saying to him that, 623 if he would summon certain persons as jurors, defendant “would make it all right that they would not lose anything,” it was essential to establish defendant’s intent in using such words, evidence that defendant approached others in the same manner was admissible. Carden v. State, 62 App. 545, 138 S. W. 598.

In a prosecution for the theft of certain mules, by means of falsely representing to the prosecutor that defendant desired to hire him to haul certain furniture with the mules, evidence that accused had previously stolen other animals in substantially the same manner was admissible to show system and intent. Melton v. State, 63 App. 459, 149 S. W. 250.

One accused of stealing cattle having claimed to have taken them under a claim of ownership, the state could show that, several days before the taking, he and his brother took other cattle from the owners without their consent. Ellington v. State, 63 App. 450, 149 S. W. 1102.

In a prosecution for forgery of a check, other checks were properly admitted in evidence to show intent, where they were shown to have been made within a few days charged to have been forged and their effect on the court’s charge. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

In a prosecution for homicide claimed to have been committed by putting arsenic in coffee, evidence that persons other than accused had been rendered ill by drinking the coffee should be considered only in passing upon the intention of accused. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

Upon a trial as principal in a murder, the details of extraneous crimes or supposed extraneous or collateral offenses are not admissible even to show motive. Menefee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 128.

While details of another crime are generally not admissible in a criminal prosecution, where in a prosecution for burglary the accused contended that he entered the house with an innocent intent, and after entering and forming the idea of theft and stole the property, evidence of the entry of another house on the same day was admissible on the question of intent. Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 889.

On a trial for burglary, committed by shooting into a house with intent to injure a woman who had previously lived with and been “kept” by accused, but who had left him, evidence of prior assaults on such woman by accused was admissible to show intent. Pendleton v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 270.

In a trial for being an accomplice in the larceny of a horse, evidence that accused assisted the same principal in selling another stolen horse, and received part of the proceeds, was admissible to show his motive and intent in assisting in the sale of the particular horse. Bailey v. State. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 535.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, evidence that, when defendants were making up a herd to drive for shipment, they saw strange cattle and turned them from one part of the pasture into another so as to prevent their mingling with the herd, was the same as upon the theory that defendant, the wrongdoer in the herd, had stolen them, in the absence of anything showing contemporaneous and fraudulent acts in connection with those cattle. McKnight v. State, 70 App. 470, 154 S. W. 1188.

In a prosecution for swindling in executing a deed of trust as security for a loan by prosecuting witness on land which accused had already conveyed to P., evidence that, after P.’s deed had been delivered and recorded, he told accused that he had learned that the title was bad, and demanded back his money, whereupon accused agreed to give him another lot in lieu thereof, which he never did, was not objectionable, as showing another offense, but was admissible as bearing on accused’s motive. Redford v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 327.

In a prosecution for homicide in the furtherance of a conspiracy to illegally organize in Texas an armed company to invade Mexico, evidence that accused, a member of the company, secured arms when he went to the camp, carried them all the way to Mexico, and was armed with the company, was admissible as showing that, while in the United States, the company was prepared to resist all those who might interfere with their purpose, together with the nature of the resistance that would be offered. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1146.

Where, in a prosecution for unlawfully pulling down a fence, defendant contended that he acted under a belief that he owned the land, evidence that he not only tore down the fence around the land claimed by him but also around another tract was properly admitted; testimony of extraneous crimes being admissible to show intent. Johns v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 610.

In a prosecution for robbery, where accused’s identity was a sharply contested issue, it appeared that accused had been a chauffeur in the employ of the father of the complaining witness, and that the wife of such witness had become enamored of accused. Accused and his companions, after robbing one of their victims, placed him in a swing on a porch, and then lay in wait for the complaining witness, who was murderedly assaulted. Held that, as it appeared that mere robbery was not the motive motive of the wrongdoers towards the complaining witness, it was proper to allow the witness’ wife, who testified in accused’s favor, to be cross-examined as to whether accused did not tempt her to put powders in her husband’s coffee. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

65. Acts of series showing system or habit.—In a prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 559, for unlawfully engaging in the business of selling intoxicants in prohibited territory, evidence of other sales than those alleged in the indictment is admissible to show that accused was engaged in the occupation of selling intoxicants. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 184 S. W. 571; Watkins v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 223; Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 68 App. 119, 120 S. W. 1941; Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 280; Byrd v State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1665; Misner v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1949; Brown v. State, 72 App. 33, 160 S. W. 374; Cole v. State, 72 App. 232, 162 S. W. 880.

Where independent criminal acts are connected as part of a systematic plan, evidence of any of them is legitimate to show guilty knowledge, and the time when the collateral inculpatory acts occurred is immaterial, provided they are close enough in time to indicate that they are part of a system, or if they are part of a system, and if they are part of a system of such similar character as to tend to establish the guilt of the accused.

On trial of a person accused of pursuing the business and occupation of selling intoxicating liquor, evidence of a sale about three years before the trial is competent as showing the character of the business in which he was engaged where there was evidence tending to show that such business had been continuous from then.

Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 914.

Where a number of specific sales are alleged in an indictment for carrying on the business of selling liquor contrary to law, evidence of other sales is admissible. Creech v. State, 70 App. 229, 158 S. W. 277.

While ordinarily, in a prosecution for violating the prohibitory law, evidence of other sales is not admissible, yet where the evidence as to the making of the sale is conflicting, testimony that accused made sales to other persons is admissible solely on the ground that it tends to show that he made the sale in question.

On trial for receiving and concealing stolen goods, the testimony of the thief, from whom it was claimed accused received the goods, that for four years he had a contract with accused and his father and brother by which he and his associate were to steal goods and accused and his father and brother were to take them from him, and his testimony as to the details of transactions committed in consummation of such agreement, was properly admitted to establish a system of like crimes committed by accused, where the witness testified that the particular goods involved were stolen pursuant to an agreement between him and accused, and the court properly charged as to the purpose for which such evidence could be considered, and that accused could not be convicted for other offenses and required corroboration of the witness' testimony. Kaufman v. State, 79 App. 438, 159 S. W. 58.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, evidence of other sales should be confined to the time subsequent to the publication of the order made by the judge after the prohibition election, where such time is within three years prior to the indictment. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 252.

In a prosecution for the burglary of a box car, where defendant claimed that certain clothing found at his house had been bought by him from a certain named person, evidence that such clothing had been taken by defendant and another on another and previous breaking of a car was admissible to rebut the defense, though evidence of other independent crimes is ordinarily inadmissible. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

64. — Continuing offenses.—Under a charge of keeping a disorderly house during a stated period, evidence is admissible to show its maintenance on any particular day or days within that time, to fix the character of the house and of the keeper, though one conviction only can be had. Novy v. State, 92 App. 492, 138 S. W. 196.

In a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of peddling patent and other medicines without a license, evidence of individual sales was admissible as tending to prove that general sold. Shed v. State, 79 App. 10, 155 S. W. 524.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicants in prohibition...

It is an established rule that the best existing evidence within the reach of the prosecution must be produced, or its absence satisfactorily accounted for, before a resort to secondary or inferior evidence will be sanctioned. Porter v. State, 1 App. 238; Rudder v. State, 1 App. 48; Scott v. State, Id. 235; Barnett v. State, Id. 337; Harris v. State, 11 App. 113; Somerville v. State, 6 App. 433; Smith v. State, 10 App. 432; Powell v. State, 11 App. 401; Hunter v. State, 13 App. 16; Baldwin v. State, 15 App. 275; Wyers v. State, 12 App. 52; Smith v. State, Id. 14 App. 449; Woodson v. State, 24 App. 153, 6 S. W. 184; Scott v. State, 19 App. 225.

The rule requiring the production of the best evidence attainable, does not demand that primary proof procurable, but only excludes such evidence as does not exist, and is withheld or not accounted for. This rule has been adopted for the prevention of fraud, and to secure a pure administration of justice. Porter v. State, 1 App. 394; Rodriguez v. State, 5 App. 258.

In a prosecution for assault, if others besides the assaulted person witnessed the transaction, their testimony is primary, and is competent without producing the testimony of the assaulted party or accounting for its nonproduction. Eckert v. State, 9 App. 105.

The written law of another state cannot be proved by parol in Texas. Patterson v. State, 17 App. 102.

Circumstantial evidence to prove an issuable fact, cannot be resorted to when it appears that primary evidence of such fact existed, and its nonproduction is not accounted for. Williams v. State, 19 App. 276; Scott v. State, Id. 235; Miller v. State, 15 App. 275; Dixon v. State, Id. 480; Clayton v. State, Id. 484; Hunter v. State, 13 App. 16; Wyers v. State, Id. 57; Gabriel v. State, 1128; Stewart v. State, 9 App. 334.

An unrecorded brand on an animal can only be used as any other flesh mark in connection with other testimony to identify the animal. It is no proof of ownership, and the flesh mark can be proved by parol as any other flesh mark. Welch v. State, 42 App. 338, 69 S. W. 46.

Where, in a prosecution for embezzlement, it was claimed that defendant had executed or forged a note to deceive his client, and that the note had been lost, it was no objection that its contents were sought to be proved by a copy of a copy of the note; there being no degrees of secondary evidence. Hamer v. State, 60 App. 341, 131 S. W. 813.

Where there is written evidence of a fact in issue, the writing, whether required by law or not is, as a general rule, the best evidence. Green v. State, 60 App. 509, 135 S. W. 806.

As a person knows as a fact whether he has placed money in a bank, he may on a prosecution for swindling, over objection that the books of the bank are the best evidence, testify that he had money in a bank on which he gave checks to defendant. Robinson v. State, 63 App. 217, 139 S. W. 918.

Evidence as to identity of cost marks and stock numbers on clothing in store and clothing claimed to have been stolen therefrom was not objectionable as secondary evidence. Williams v. State, 63 App. 567, 140 S. W. 447.

Where, in a prosecution for assault to murder, the shooting was claimed to have taken place in October, 1910, while the trial did not occur until March, 1912, evidence that the clothing worn by prosecutor, when shot, was not powder-burned, was admissible on an issue as to how close he was to defendant when shot; it not being necessary to produce the clothes as the best evidence. Simms v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 786.

In a trial for burglary of a railroad car, testimony by a local agent of the railroad company that the car was in his custody was not objectionable as not being the best evidence, even if the company had written rules bearing on the custody of cars. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 110.

A marriage may be proved by the evidence of one who testified that she knew the parties, was present at their marriage, and knew that they were married. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 944.

There are no degrees of superiority in secondary evidence. Harris v. State, 71 App. 463, 160 S. W. 447.

When accused, at the time she killed deceased, was registered under an assumed name at a hotel, and, after the killing, the name under which she had registered was erased, the fact that she consented to the admission of secondary evidence to prove the fact that she so registered did not deprive the state of the right to the fact, though there was no evidence connecting her with the erasure. Latham v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 757.

66. Judicial proceedings and records.—Witnesses may testify as to testimony given by accused on a former trial; the prosecuting attorney’s testimony not being inadmissible on the theory that the official stenographer’s record was the best evidence. Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1128; Harris v. State, 71 App. 463, 160 S. W. 447.

In a prosecution for resisting the execution of process, the process, the execution of which has been resisted, is the subject of its existence, etc., and should be produced or its absence accounted for. Porter v. State, 1 App. 394; Scott v. State, 3 App. 103.

The best evidence that a change of venue was duly obtained in a case, is the order of the judgment of the court, and until it be shown that such primary evidence cannot be produced, parol evidence cannot be resorted to. Valentine v. State, 6 App. 439.

When it is proposed to contradict the testimony of a witness by his testimony taken before an examining court, if his testimony on a former trial was reduced to writing, the writing must be produced, or its nonproduction accounted for, before the testimony will be allowed as to it. Hunter v. State, 3 App. 257.

In proving a conviction for felony, in order to disqualify a witness, the best evidence is the judgment of conviction, and proof that the records of the court, in which the conviction is claimed to have been had, had been partially searched without finding the judgment or verdict, and that such records are voluminous, will not authorize resort to secondary evidence to prove the conviction. Perez v. State, 10 App. 327. See, also, notes under art. 785.

The pendency of litigation between parties in a justice's court, may be proved by the production of the papers, without producing or accounting for the nonproduction of his records. Kennedy v. State, 19 App. 615. Or by a constable who served process in the litigation. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593.

Contents of a court record or a certified copy of such record under the hand and seal of the clerk and it is error to permit parol evidence thereof. Stewart v. State, 35 App. 174, 32 S. W. 756, 60 Am. St. Rep. 35. Defendant's statement made on examining trial may be shown by parol. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 167.

A question to a witness as to how many times he had been indicted was not objectionable on the ground that the bills of indictment were the best evidence of that fact. Keeton v. State, 59 App. 316, 128 S. W. 414.

In a prosecution for perjury committed in a civil case, it was proper to allow the official stenographer to read in evidence a transcript of his original stenographic notes of the testimony of accused, where it was shown that he was experienced and capable, and that the original notes had been lost. Barber v. State, 64 App. 598, 142 S. W. 577.

The testimony of accused in another court could be proved by any person who heard it; it not being necessary to produce the stenographer's report. Mooney v. State, 73 App. 121, 164 S. W. 828.

That a person charged with keeping a disorderly house had pleaded guilty to a charge of vagrancy should have been proved by the court papers and dockets. Bowman v. State, 73 App. 134, 164 S. W. 846.

In the case is the best evidence of an acquittal: but, since there was no record where the grand jury failed to indict, oral testimony was admissible to prove that fact. Ghent v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 566.

67. Official records.—If a locality has been incorporated by special legislative enactment, the primary evidence of the fact is the original charter or incorporated copy thereof. But when it is shown that such primary evidence is lost, or cannot be had, secondary evidence is competent. If the corporation was created under the general incorporation statute (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, title 22, c. 14) a certified copy of the entry of that fact, upon the record of the commissioner's court, would be primary evidence. Temple v. State, 15 App. 304, 49 Am. Rep. 250.

The best evidence is the charter of pardon. The next best evidence of it is a certified copy or exemplification of it, from the office of the secretary of state, and parol evidence can not be used to prove it, in the absence of a showing satisfactorily accounting for the nonproduction of both the original and such copy. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 429, 51 Am. Rep. 320. See, also, notes under art. 788.

On an issue of the age of prosecutor in a prosecution for rape, a witness for the state was allowed, over objections, to testify as to the contents of a school census report which he claimed was made in 1897 or 1898, the original of which was in the hands of the prosecuting attorney, and had been lost in another county. The state contended that she was born in 1894, and the defendants asserted the same. In 1897 or 1898 a census report was taken, the contents of which included her as a school child. Held, that the admission of the secondary evidence of the report was error under the circumstances. Shoemaker v. State, 58 App. 515, 126 S. W. 887.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, the county clerk could testify from the stubs of receipts issued for liquor licenses, which were his only records of licenses issued, that he issued no license to accused, over an objection that his books were the best evidence of that fact. Wilson v. State, 61 App. 623, 136 S. W. 447.

In a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquor in a certain justice's precinct, the record of the precinct introduced by the state did not disclose what surveys were within the bounds of the precinct. Held, that oral evidence that the place where the liquor was sold was within the limits of the precinct was admissible, although the boundaries of a justice precinct are matters of record, and the record is the best evidence thereof. Moreno v. State, 66 App. 660, 143 S. W. 150, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 583.

On a trial for receiving and concealing stolen cattle, a witness was properly permitted to testify as to the ownership of certain cattle, though the brand on such cattle was recorded, where he did not testify that he knew the cattle by the brand, but independent of the brand. Mooney v. State, 73 App. 131, 164 S. W. 528.

68. Corporate and other unofficial records.—In a prosecution for burglary of freight cars by clerks at the time of exams, releasing packages is admissible as original evidence. Dawson v. State, 32 App. 555, 25 S. W. 21, 40 Am. St. Rep. 791.

A witness, over defendant's objection, was allowed to testify to the contents of a certain railroad company in East St. Louis, Ill., that certain cattle alleged to have been stolen had been shipped over said road; held, there is no rule of law or principle of evidence under which such testimony is admissible. Wade v. State, 57 App. 401, 55 S. W. 663.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, art 589, making it a felony to procure the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory, testimony by an express agent as to express shipments of intoxicating liquors to the accused, being from his personal knowledge and not from receipts or records in his office, was admissible, not being secondary evidence. Clark v. State, 61 App. 597, 133 S. W. 260.

In a prosecution for gaming, the fact that defendant was president of a club that had control of the gaming place could be shown by oral testimony. Folk v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 907.

In a prosecution for bringing stolen property into the state testimony of one of the company agents to have been the original owner that it was a corporation was admissible as a fact that the witness personally knew. Zweig v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 747.

69. — Family records. — Where, in a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix's mother testified as to prosecutrix's age, evidence of a Bible entry of the date of prosecutrix's birth made by the mother was inadmissible by the second. Rowan v. State, 57 App. 635, 124 S. W. 668, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1006.

Where the father of prosecutrix testified in a prosecution for rape as to her age, an entry of the date of her birth made by him in an ordinary ledger is inadmissible as secondary evidence. Haywood v. State, 61 App. 92, 134 S. W. 218.

70. — Conveyances, contracts and other instruments. — An exception to the general rule is that the official character of an alleged public officer need not be proved by the commission or other written evidence of the officer's right to act as such except on an issue directly between the officer and the public. Such official character may be proved ordinarily by parol testimony. Woodson v. State, 24 App. 135, 6 S. W. 184; Shely v. State, 35 App. 10, 32 S. W. 901.

In a prosecution for arson, where the theory of the prosecution was that accused attempted to burn a building to enable the owner to obtain insurance, parol evidence that the building was insured is inadmissible, where it is not shown that the insurance policies themselves could not by diligence have been obtained. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 183; Ewen v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 457.

Where the context was whether or not an alleged stolen animal corresponded with a description in a bill of sale, the witnesses agreeing as to the description in the bill of sale, it was held that the production of the bill of sale, as primary evidence, was essential. Halles v. State, 10 App. 499.

In a theft case an agreement in writing, signed by state's counsel and the defendant, and an attesting witness, that an attached affidavit of the owner of the alleged stolen property proving his want of consent to the taking of the property, might be read in evidence on the trial, was presented by the state, and said affidavit was thereunder offered and admitted in evidence, the defendant objecting thereto on the ground that it was not proved that he executed the agreement, held, that the objection should have been sustained, as it devolved upon the state, before the said affidavit, to prove the said affidavit, the defendant of said agreement by the attesting witness if accessible, and if not, by secondary evidence. Allen v. State, 16 App. 297.

In proving the execution of a written instrument, if there be a subscribing wit­ness thereto, the testimony of such witness is primary, and must be produced, or its nonproduction satisfactorily accounted for, before the execution of the instrument can be proved by secondary evidence. Morrow v. State, 22 App. 229, 2 S. W. 624; Sample v. Irwin, 45 Tex. 567; White v. Holliday, 29 Tex. 619; Craddock v. Merrill, 2 Tex. 494. When the subscribing witness denies, or does not recol­lect, the execution of the instrument, its execution may be proved by other evi­dence. Art. 813.

When an original written instrument can be produced, secondary evidence of its contents is inadmissible. Huff v. State, 33 App. 291, 4 S. W. 98; Chester v. State, 23 App. 577, 5 S. W. 125; Miller v. State, 18 App. 34; Wyers v. State, 13 App. 57; Sager v. State, 11 App. 110.

On trial for burglary of freight cars, waybills made out by the clerks in their special departments and sent with the cars were held to be admissible as original evidence. Dawson v. State, 22 App. 535, 28 S. W. 21, 40 Am. St. Rep. 791.

In prosecution for theft of a cow a sale by the original owner of cattle bearing the brand of the cow may be proved by parole. Ledbetter v. State, 35 App. 196, 32 S. W. 903.

Certified copies of papers executed by defendant are inadmissible when defendant had not been notified to produce the originals. Golin v. State, 37 App. 59, 38 S. W. 784.

It is error to permit witness to testify from memorandum which he had made of contents of bill of lading of contents of barged car, the bill of lading it­self is best evidence. Johnson v. State, 42 App. 440, 60 S. W. 667.

Without showing that invoices of goods received were lost or inaccessible, it was error in a burglary case to permit witnesses to refer thereto to show, in connec­tion with tickets of sales, the loss of goods claimed to have been stolen. Johnson v. State, 57 App. 485, 123 S. W. 1165.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house and permitting to be kept a disorderly house in which liquors were sold without a license, testimony that wit­ness had seen an internal revenue license in the possession of defendant's partner, who told witness that it was a license and was issued to defendant and himself, was inadmissible, being secondary evidence. Campbell v. State, 69 App. 496, 129 S. W. 139.

Testimony that witness went to the place alleged to have been kept as a dis­orderly house and asked a boy there if they had an internal revenue license, and the boy brought him one, was properly excluded as secondary evidence; the license itself not being produced in evidence. Campbell v. State, 59 App. 496, 129 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution for forgery of a check, a question whether witness authorized defendant to sign his name to the check was not objectionable on the ground that the check was the best evidence, since the production of the check would not have shown that it did not sign it, and the witness did not have been the best evidence of that fact. Douglass v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1036.

Whether or not a license to sell intoxicants had been issued to accused is a fact which may be proved otherwise than by the exhibition of the license. This being part of the law, Code, art. 629, requiring the posting of licenses in some prominent place in the building in which the sale of intoxicants is carried on. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 296.

A witness can testify that he saw a revenue license posted in any given place, and it cannot be objected to as not being the best evidence. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 875.

In a prosecution for arson, it was proper to permit the prosecution to prove by oral evidence that the state owned the barn which was burned, without requiring the production of the deed. Anderson v. State, 71 App. 27, 150 S. W. 847.

The best evidence that the house burned was insured is the policy, and, it not appearing that it could not be produced, testimony that it was insured is objectionable as secondary. Crowder v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 501.

71. Books of account.—Evidence of entries in books is not admissible until it has been shown that the books have been lost or destroyed or cannot be procured.

In a prosecution for forgery of a receipt of cotton seed, delivered to a gin, testimony of the person whose name was signed to the receipt, and another witness from the gin, that no receipt was issued by them or any one else on the day on which the alleged instrument was shown has been introduced, is not inadmissible because the books of the gin were the best evidence, since such testimony did not embrace any fact that would be shown by the books. Chappell v. State, 58 App. 401, 126 S. W. 274.

A witness may not be permitted to testify what his books show without a person present. Davis v. State, 24 App. 290, 137 S. W. 15.

Where the state, on a trial for the larceny from a gin of a bale of cotton, sought to identify the bale by the ginner's weight of the bale, the books of the ginner, properly kept, and not the tickets delivered by him to the owner, were the best evidence. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1694.

Before contents of letter can be admitted, letter must be produced or defendant notified to produce it. James v. State, 40 App. 195, 49 S. W. 401; Johnson v. State, 37 App. 163, 11 S. W. 196.

In the case of a telegram sent, the original message sent, or the transcript delivered by the company to the receiver, are the best evidence of the contents thereof. Conner v. State, 23 App. 378, 5 S. W. 159; Chester v. State, 23 App. 577, 5 S. W. 125.

Where a wife testifies, in a prosecution for abandonment, that a letter was stolen from her, it should be shown that the letter was either in her husband's possession or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and then she may testify as to its contents. Quitman v. State, 71 App. 158, 155 S. W. 529.

In a prosecution for assault, where defendant, a postmaster, claimed to have had a telegram from the Postmaster General to relieve the complaining witness, the court, if defendant had such telegram, should have required its production and introduced in evidence, instead of admitting defendant's oral testimony to the fact and as to its contents. Robey v. State, 73 App. 9, 163 S. W. 713.

73. Admissibility of secondary evidence.—In order to authorize secondary evidence of a lost written instrument, it must be shown that the instrument once existed, and that a bona fide and diligent search has been made for it in the place where it is most likely to be found, if the nature of the case admits of such proof.

What degree of diligence in the search for the lost instrument must be shown, depends upon the peculiar circumstances of the particular case; but, as a general rule, the party is required to show that he has, in good faith, exhausted, in a reasonable degree, all the sources of information and means of discovery, which the nature of the case would naturally suggest, and which were accessible.

Haun v. State, 13 App. 383, 44 Am. Rep. 706. If the proof establishes a reasonable presumption of the loss of the instrument, it is sufficient to admit secondary evidence of it. Cheatham v. Riddle, 8 Tex. 162.

Secondary evidence of records may be received to establish their existence and contents, when the primary evidence has been lost or destroyed, under the same rules as writings, and the state of other evidence for the substitution of lost records and papers is merely cumulative, and does not abolish or affect other modes of establishing the same. McMillan v. State, 18 App. 372; Stallworth v. State, 1d. 378.

Photographic copies of the original writings are admissible in evidence when the original is in the possession of defendant and upon notice to produce them he has refused to do so. Grooms v. State, 40 App. 325, 50 S. W. 370.

We are in possession of the instrument or power of the adverse party, secondary evidence can not be introduced of its contents, unless the adverse party, or his attorney, has been given regular notice to produce the original. There are three instances in which such notice is not required: (1) Where the document to be produced is itself a notice. (2) Where, from the nature of the document, the defendant has notice that he is charged with the possession of the document. Notice to produce is not required when the document belongs to a third party, and the instrument obtained in an indictment for forgery, that the alleged forged order was in the possession of the defendant, or was lost or destroyed, and that a copy of the same could not be had, etc. for another purpose, was held to be not a notice to produce the order. Rollins v. State, 21 App. 148, 17 S. W. 466.

On trial for fraudulently obtaining a check, a copy of the check is admissible after proof that the original is lost. Williams v. State, 34 App. 533, 31 S. W. 465.

A note and mortgage were court papers in custody of the district clerk, and were by him turned over to defendant's counsel for inspection, but they were never returned to the clerk. The district attorney testified that he had asked defendant's attorneys for such papers, and that they each said they did not know where the papers were; held, that secondary evidence of the contents was admissible. Garrett v. State, 27 App. 105, 38 S. W. 1017, 39 S. W. 108.

Where a conveyance by accused was admissible in evidence, and the deed had been traced to his possession, the state, upon accused's failure to produce the deed in evidence after notice, could show the conveyance by other evidence. Skidmore v. State, 67 App. 497, 123 S. W. 1129, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496.

A witness at defendant's trial for burglary testified that defendant spoke English at a habeas corpus proceeding. Held, that as the state could not, in the first instance, use the testimony of defendant himself to show that fact, the evidence was admissible. Kelly v. State, 61 App. 663, 136 S. W. 58.

Where the note to which signatures were forged was destroyed and only parts thereof containing the signatures were preserved, parol testimony of the contents of the note, with a blank note as the form of the note to which the signatures were forged, was admissible. Slatter v. State, 61 App. 243, 136 S. W. 770.

In a prosecution for swindling, where defendant's title to lands was in issue, and the state served notice upon defendant to produce his title papers, the record copy of these title papers are admissible in evidence. Brown v. State, 63 App. 592, 138 S. W. 694.

While the defendant could not be required to produce papers in evidence, yet when they were in possession of the district clerk, and were delivered to defendant's counsel for inspection, the clerk was under no duty to return them, and the defendant could not be held to be privileged against the clerk's use of his possession of them to introduce in evidence the check copied therein with the original, which was then in his possession, and that it was afterwards lost and could not be found after diligent search, parol evidence of its contents was admissible. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 107.

In a prosecution for murder, where evidence of a note, which does not show that the note was forged, was on a file in the district attorney's office, and was in the custody of the district attorney, and the state was allowed to introduce in evidence the copy of the note, it was admissible. Asbeck v. State, 70 App. 225, 156 S. W. 925.

In prosecution for aggravated assault, where the fact of complaining witness's resignation from a post office position was in issue, and he himself testified, without objection, that he had sent his resignation to Washington at a certain date, a carbon copy of such resignation was admissible. Robey v. State, 73 App. 9, 163 S. W. 713.

Where the forged note was in possession of accused, who admitted that it was correctly set out in the indictment, oral proof of its contents is properly received, where accused, who was given time to get the note, which he said was at his home when the state served notice upon him to produce it, or that secondary evidence would be introduced, testified that he was unable to find the note, and did not request additional time for search. Meredith v. State, 73 App. 147, 164 S. W. 1019.

Where the alleged forged instrument and other papers material on a trial for passing a forged instrument had disappeared after being placed on the judge's desk on the trial in a former prosecution, it was not error, in connection with evidence of their loss and the search made therefor, to admit evidence that accused had been tried in such other case. Bunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 108.

On a trial for passing a forged instrument, where accused objected to secondary evidence of the contents of the forged instrument and other material papers which had been lost, it became incumbent upon the state to show their location when last seen, the search, made therefor, and the loss thereof, and when this was shown, secondary evidence of their contents became admissible. Bunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 108.

When a written instrument is shown to be in the possession of a defendant and he declines to produce it upon notice, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Bunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 108.

74. Confessions.—Where the evidence shows the loss of a confession and that it cannot be found on a diligent search, oral proof of its contents is admissible. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 627.

75. Demonstrative evidence.—In a prosecution for arson, against the defendant John Lovelace, it was shown that Lovelace had shot an officer who was attempting to arrest him upon said charge, and the officer thereupon shot and killed Lovelace. It was held error to permit the state to introduce in evidence the blood-stained warrant for the arrest of Lovelace, which the officer had when he killed him. Chumley v. State, 20 App. 17.

The party assaulted may be allowed to show to the jury his side where accused struck him and from which portions of the broken rib had been extracted. Parish v. State, 35 App. 588, 26 S. W. 439.

For prosecution for assault with intent to murder, it was error to allow the assaulted party to exhibit his scars to the jury, where his wounds had been operated up on and so changed and enlarged that the scars could throw no light upon the issue in the case as to the manner in which they were inflicted. Graves v. State, 68 App. 42, 124 S. W. 676.

In a prosecution for homicide, arteries of clothing and a flour sack, shown by the evidence to belong to accused, and shells from a gun shown to correspond in size to wounds on deceased's body, and to shells purchased by accused, which articles were found near the place of the homicide, were admissible in evidence. Canon v. State, 59 App. 398, 128 S. W. 141.

In a statutory rape case, where there was no objection to the prosecutrix having her baby with her on the stand, it was proper for the jurors to consider the resemblance between the baby and the defendant. Vaughn v. State, 62 App. 24, 136 S. W. 476.

In a trial for cattle theft, it was not error to receive testimony that witness who examined the brand on the cow made a memorandum of the mark and brand on it, nor to receive in evidence the memorandum, where the testimony conformed to the memorandum and accused cross-examined. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 135 S. W. 615.

Where an undated letter written by a daughter of accused to decedent, her husband, was properly received in evidence, the envelope in which the letter was sent was admissible to show the date of the letter, and that it was addressed to decedent's brother, though intended for and delivered to decedent, and though there were blood stains thereon. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 186 S. W. 100.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that the dial of a watch found on the body of the deceased, and which had stopped, indicated a certain time was admissible. Satterwhite v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 955.

76. Matters explanatory of offense.—Where there is a conflict in the testimony, in a prosecution for homicide as to the position of the deceased when a shot was fired, the clothing worn by him was properly admitted in evidence to show which of the theories was correct. Reaugh v. State, 70 App. 499, 137 S. W. 455; Herring v. State, 13 App. 277; Hart v. State, 15 App. 265, 49 Am. Rep. 188; Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 733.

Where hair was found upon a gun defendant should have been allowed to exhibit it to House v. State, 48 App. 125, 57 S. W. 635.

Where a trial for homicide accused undertook to show that a third person fired the shot that struck a witness, and the evidence of the direction of the shot was not clear, the introduction in evidence of the clothing worn by the witness at the time was relevant. Milo v. State, 60 App. 194, 127 S. W. 1036.

Where the evidence in a prosecution for a homicide committed with an ax was wholly circumstantial, overall worn by accused at the time of the homicide which had blood spots on them, and marks as if some one had tried to rub the blood off, were admissible in evidence to connect accused with the killing. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 132 S. W. 345.

The bloody and bullet-pierced clothing worn by deceased should not be admitted in evidence, where it could not serve to throw light on any question; the facts being clearly shown independent thereof. Williams v. State, 61 App. 352, 136 S. W. 771.

In a homicidal case in which the issue was self-defense, and the state claimed that accused fired the first shot with his rifle, the clothing which decedent wore when he was shot, the bloody parts of which were cut away, leaving only that part through which the shots passed, were admitted in evidence to discredit accused's testimony as to the position of decedent's gun when he was shot, and to show accused claimed that decedent, shot first, shooting from his right shoulder. Held, that the evidence was admissible for the purpose offered. Jackson v. State, 63 App. 351, 159 S. W. 1156.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder, bloody clothing worn by accused at the time of the difficulty was properly admitted in evidence to corroborate the state's testimony as to the number of times accused struck, as against objection that there was no controversy as to the number of wounds inflicted, nor the direction that any of them had taken, and that the evidence tended to prejudice the jury against accused. York v. State, 64 App. 153, 142 S. W. 8.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the nature of the wounds and their location was not disputed, the clothing worn by complainant at the time of the assault was inadmissible solely to show the amount of blood lost and the condition of the clothing after the assault. Lacome v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 626.

Where accused claimed that deceased when killed was standing up with a stick in his hand, and the state claimed that accused was pulling him by the wrist, and thereby evidence that after the killing deceased's sleeve was pulled down over his hand, if the shirt would aid the jury in determining the attitude of the parties or the location of the wound it was admissible in evidence. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 672.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, the evidence was conflicting on the questions of whether accused had fired both barrels of his gun at prosecutor, and as to the number of punctures seen after the shooting on the person of prosecutor, and as to whether the prosecutor was sitting at the time he was shot, there was no error in admitting in evidence the clothing worn by prosecutor at the time of the shooting, but since washed and free from blood, to show the number of shot holes in the clothing, and in permitting the prosecutor to exhibit to the jury the part of his body where the shots struck him, the shot holes having healed, was not erroneous. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 802.

In a prosecution for homicide, where it appeared that the first search of accused's trunk showed that there were undershirts in it, an undershirt with human blood on it, found at a search after accused's imprisonment, was admissible in evidence. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

The garments worn by decedent at the time of the homicide are admissible in evidence if they illustrate any issue. Peters v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 213.

It was error in a prosecution for aggravated assault, to permit the injured person's bloody coat to be admitted in evidence; the fact of the cutting and the location of the wound not being disputed. Corley v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 237, where the blood had been washed from decedent's clothing, otherwise in the condition in which they were removed from him, and accused questioned the nature and length of the wounds, the clothing was admissible in evidence, and the state could also show that the cut in the top and under shirts consisted of one wound. Ward v. State, 70 App. 293, 159 S. W. 272.

In a rape prosecution, prosecutrix's shoe with a portion of the heel off, a piece of the heel found at the place of the alleged rape, prosecutrix's bent hat pin, and accused's tie pin also found there, as well as prosecutrix's torn waist and other clothes, were all properly admitted in evidence on the question of force. Sharp v. State, 71 App. 633, 159 S. W. 369.

In a prosecution for killing a woman whom he had outraged, where the evidence was confusing and circumstantial, the clothing worn by deceased when killed, with the cuts therein into which a knife, which defendant admitted was his, was found to fit, was admissible as an aid to the jury in determining whether or not her wounds were made with such knife. Durfee v. State, 73 App. 165, 165 S. W. 186.

Where, on a trial for homicide, accused testified that deceased made a threatening gesture and sprang towards him, while it was the state's claim that accused shot deceased when deceased's back was turned towards him, the point of entrance of the shot was an issue in the case, and deceased's clothing was admissible in evidence. Washburn v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 739.

Where deceased was killed in furtherance of a conspiracy to form in Texas an armed force to invade Mexico in order to prevent discovery of the conspiracy, accused, on trial for the homicide, by the testimony of accused that he was the man who had worn by deceased at the time of the killing, a rope with which his hands were tied behind him, and a belt with which a load was fastened on him after he had been captured by the conspirators and while he was forced to pack material for them, was killed. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 236.

A door panel upon which blood prints were discovered, which was sawed out and preserved, and which was identified at the trial, was properly admitted in a trial for homicide. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 360.

78. Articles used in committing offense.—A bullet was sufficiently identified to make it admissible in evidence against accused, where the constable producing it testified that he obtained it from the undertaker and the undertaker identified it as one which he removed from decedent's body and delivered to the coroner. Butler v. State, 61 App. 123, 124 S. W. 239.

On a trial for assault it appeared that accused shot at an officer who attempted to arrest him, that there was a pistol in the wagon in which he was riding, and that cartridges which fitted the pistol were found on his person, and that the bullets had been split and something put in them. Held that it was proper to exhibit such cartridges to the jury. Ricen v. State, 63 App. 89, 133 S. W. 402.

Where accused shot decedent through the head with a 44-caliber bullet, a battered bullet found at the place of the killing long afterwards, and evidence that it weighed only 154 grains, while a 44-caliber bullet weighed 297 grains, were inadmissible, in the absence of evidence that a bullet in passing through a person's head would lose that much in weight. Hickey v. State, 62 App. 688, 133 S. W. 1051.

In a murder trial, it was not error to admit in evidence a pistol found in defendant's possession, accused admitted that he gave the pistol admitted to the person at the barn, and it was sufficiently identified as the pistol used by accused. Sanchez v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 124.

There was no error in admitting in evidence a bullet found on the ground where the killing occurred, where the position of deceased at the time he was shot was a contested issue, on which the finding of the bullet would have a strong bearing, and the bullet was shown to be of a size that fitted defendant's pistol, and was in a pool of blood that must have come from deceased. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 304.

Where one of the self-confessed robbers who claimed accused was not with them testified that accused's pistol was used, a pistol discovered under accused's pillow and identified as the one used was properly received in evidence. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

In a prosecution for robbery, where one of the men was struck with a bar of iron, found in a nearby yard, and duly preserved, the bar was properly received in evidence, having been identified as an ice pick made by accused. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

78. — Articles subject of offense.—In a trial for theft of a buggy axle, buggy spring, ax, and ax handle, where accused claimed that the articles in his possession did not conform to the description given by a witness, and the state had exhibited part of the property to the jury, accused was entitled to have the witness bring the axel and springs into court for comparison by the jury with those described. Wilson v. State, 58 App. 104, 124 S. W. 945.

Where accused was shown to be the man who executed an alleged forged check signed by him, to which he signed an assumed name, the check was properly admitted in evidence. Carter v. State, 61 App. 605, 136 S. W. 47.

In a prosecution for uttering a forged note, the fact that an indorsement of a third party thereto long after the note was passed possessed an effect on the passing of the note did not affect its admissibility in evidence. Jordan v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 625.

Evidence in a larceny case that a sack of money was taken from the defendant at the time of his arrest, and that such property talled with that stolen, was properly admitted together with the sack and money. Coleman v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1177.
79. - Writings admitted for comparison.—Where one accused of theft, claiming that he bought the property from another, showed a bill of sale purporting to be signed by such other person whose whereabouts were unknown, a road petition bearing the known signature of such other person was properly admitted to show that the signature on the bill of sale was not genuine. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 138 S. W. 612.

In a prosecution for forgery of a check, a bond admitted to have been signed by accused was admissible on the issue of forgery of the check. Frye v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution for permitting to be kept on premises owned by defendant a disorderly house, testimony that appellant paid taxes on certain fixtures contained in the building in which the business was charged to have been conducted was admissible. Sweeney v. State, 59 App. 370, 128 S. W. 309.

On a trial for rape by means of a sham marriage, a letter written by accused while he and prosecutrix were living together as husband and wife and in which he admitted their marriage, was admissible as an admission by accused that he and prosecutrix were married, and as consistent with the existence of the marriage state. Wilkerson v. State, 60 App. 38, 131 S. W. 1165, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 128.

In a prosecution to prevent a witness from testifying as a violation of Pen. Code, art. 756, evidence that defendant made representations to the father of the prosecuting witness and to others that he could cure certain diseases, and had cured them, was admissible. Germany v. State, 62 App. 276, 137 S. W. 130, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 477.

Accused’s admission that he is a married man and has a living wife is admissible against him in a prosecution for bigamy. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 200, 139 S. W. 581.

In a prosecution for perjury committed by accused, who was defendant in a civil action, his verified answer in that action was admissible, for a party’s pleadings are always evidence against him. Barber v. State, 64 App. 96, 142 S. W. 577.

In a trial for murder, where the age of the accused was in issue, testimony of accused as to his age, voluntarily given in a previous case, was admissible as original testimony. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

It is not error to receive in evidence accused’s motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses who would testify to facts therein alleged as against the objection that the motion is irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in the case. Crawford v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 229.

On a trial for adultery, accused’s statement to a witness that the woman was married and her husband living was competent. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 568.

In a prosecution for theft of the proceeds of another’s check, evidence was not admissible that, some time after accused had cashed the check and appropriated the money, he was in accused’s employ and was taking care of the place, in order to sell him a life policy, and that witness replied that he did not have the money, and accused offered to let him have the policy on what he owed him. Nesbitt v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 203.

In a prosecution for the business of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory, the admission in evidence of an agreement between the county attorney in another case against defendant for violation of the local option law that the case should be continued, and that defendant would not engage in selling liquors in the county while local option was in force there, that the sheriff could not at any time examine his place of business, and that the finding of intoxicating liquors therein should be held to be a plea of guilty, that a conviction thereon should be held to be a plea of guilty, and that while defendant kept the agreement that he should suspend, was prejudicial error, since it had no bearing upon the case on trial. Todd v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 220.

In a prosecution for theft, where accused was arrested after the stolen goods had been found in his house, evidence that his hands then were greasy, as if from the belting, and that he washed them, was not inadmissible because he was under arrest when he did so. McGee v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 246.

Where, on a trial for embezzlement of a check or the money thereof, the evidence showed that a check was delivered to accused for use in payment of a balance due him, he deposited the check and withdrew the money thereon, a letter written by accused prior to the finding of the indictment, reciting that a receipt from the land office would be found inclosed, while no receipt was inclosed, was admissible. Irby v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 540.

In a prosecution for homicide testimony that the witness had a talk with defendant after the killing about a note upon which the witness was defendant’s surety, and that the defendant told the witness that he had made settlement with his father, the payer, who had promised him that if he would kill deceased he would give accused the note and pay all the costs in the case, is all admissible;
the entire conversation being necessary to explain the reason accused gave for killing.

In a prosecution for perjury by false testimony by accused that he was an infant when he incurred the liability sued on, evidence of conversations between accused and the road overseers, in which accused admitted that he had reached his majority before the time such debt was incurred, is admissible. Poulter v. State, 70 App. 197, 157 S. W. 165.

Where a witness in a homicide case testified that defendant stated to him, in response to an inquiry as to where he got the blood on his shirt, that he had killed his brother, and that the witness then gave him another shirt, which he put on at the house, the testimony of M., who was present at the house but had not heard such statement, that defendant stated, in response to her inquiry concerning the blood, that he had something to tell her, but he would not tell her because she was of bad repute, was properly admitted. Womack v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 159.

Where a number of persons, charged with playing cards and with going into and remaining in a place where cards were being played, were tried together, an admission of one of the defendants, subsequent to the commission of the offense and in the absence of the other defendants, was properly admitted, as it was admissible against him. Sloan v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 156.

Defendant's statement, shortly after the shooting, made to one who asked why he had killed the girl, that "in Mexico they are killing lots of them—why can't I kill one?" was an admission that he killed the girl, and admissible to prove that fact. Guerrero v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 731.

On a trial for testifying falsely before the grand jury, an agreement between defendant's attorney and the district attorney, made in defendant's presence and acquiesced in by him, that a witness who desired to go home would testify that defendant was sworn before the grand jury by the foreman, was properly admitted in evidence whereby it was that defendant was sworn and testified before the grand jury. Sutton v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 791.

In a prosecution for permitting a disorderly house to be kept on defendant's premises, evidence that defendant had admitted that he was the owner of the building was admissible, since title to the property was not being adjudicated. Davidson v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1037.

81. Acquiescence or silence.—Silence of a person under arrest is not a confession of the truth of statements made in his presence. Gardner v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 946.

Defendant's friend told him he was very wrong, and he made no reply; held, admissible. Kelly v. State, 37 App. 641, 40 S. W. 603.

Res of third parties made in presence of defendant are admissible it must be shown that he heard them and that he understood himself to be accused and the circumstances must be such as to require him from a response. Ex parte Kennedy (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 448.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, evidence that certain persons called upon accused, and notified her to stop running a disorderly house, or permitting women to resort there for purposes of prostitution, was admissible as implying, in substance, a direct charge against accused of violation of law, without denial on her part. Finn v. State, 60 App. 521, 112 S. W. 805.

Accused's silence when charged with an offense is sometimes admissible in evidence, so that in a prosecution for keeping a bawdyhouse, testimony of an officer was admissible that he notified accused that she was keeping a disorderly house and vacated it, not appearing that accused made any reply to the charge. Gordon v. State, 60 App. 570, 133 S. W. 255.

Statement of defendant's boy, heard and not replied to by defendant, made to an officer who had come to defendant's place to search for whiskey, "If you will let him off this time, I will see he does not sell any more," defendant's statement that he had to pretend to get him not to do that,—is admissible on a prosecution for illegal sale. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 914.

In prosecution for the burglary of a box car, testimony of officers who searched defendant's house that they found in his trunk two shirts identified as those stolen, that he denied that they were his, and claimed that they had been bought by his brother-in-law, that his sister in his presence denied that, and stated that defendant had brought them there, and that defendant made no reply to her statement, was admissible. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1707.

82. Negotiations for compromise.—The defense proposed to prove that the defendant, at his first meeting, with the owner of the property after the alleged theft, proposed to pay him for the same. It was also proposed to prove the conversation which then ensued between the defendant and the owner, which conversation is not set out in the bill of exceptions. Held, that the said proof was properly excluded as being no part of the res gestae nor relevant to any issue in the case and as not coming within the rule which qualifies as evidence a defendant's explanation of his possession of stolen property. Brooks v. State, 22 App. 134, 9 S. W. 562. Also, see Cortez v. State, 24 App. 511, 5 S. W. 546; Guest v. State, 24 App. 530, 7 S. W. 212; Lloyd v. State, 24 App. 570, 6 S. W. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 906; Lopez v. State, 28 App. 243, 13 S. W. 219; Bayne v. State, 29 App. 132, 15 S. W. 171; Williamson v. State, 30 App. 390, 17 S. W. 219, 112 Am. St. Rep. 25 App. 329, 8 S. W. 328; Matlock v. State, 25 App. 654, 8 S. W. 818, 8 Am. St. Rep. 651.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor without a license, evidence that accused visited the prosecutor, and asked how much the fine would be, and requested him to make the offense "Sunday selling," so that the penalty would be lighter, is not inadmissible as an attempt to compromise the case. Loicano v. State, 72 App. 515, 103 S. W. 64.
83. Effect of admission.—Accused on trial for rape of a girl under 15 years of age may admit that prosecutrix was not 15 years of age at the time of the alleged offense, and be bound by such admission. Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 287.

84. Declarations in general.—What one says when he starts on a journey—his purpose and object—is generally admissible. Young v. State, 37 App. 428, 36 S. W. 278.

There is no rule which authorizes proof to be made of what a party may have said about threats communicated to him. Harrell v. State, 39 App. 264, 45 S. W. 631.

85. Declarations by accused.—It was held competent for the state to prove declarations made by the defendant on the same night, but before the burglary was committed, and also to prove certain interviews on the day after the burglary between defendant and the person in whose possession certain property burglaryfully taken from the house was found on the day after the burglary. Langford v. State, 17 App. 445.

In a prosecution for perjury, statements and declarations made by the defendant as a witness before the grand jury, contradictory to his evidence upon which the perjury was assigned, were held to be relevant and admissible. Littlefield v. State, 24 App. 167, 5 S. W. 650.

Declarations made by accused long prior to a homicide held not competent as evidence to Albright v. App. 128, 15 S. W. 372.

The state was permitted to prove that on the afternoon before the homicide defendant who was then drunk told witness that he had a good pistol and was going to use it. Held irrelevant. Richardson v. State, 32 App. 524, 24 S. W. 894.

What defendant said in regard to the property after the theft is inadmissible, Blount v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 950.

Where, on a trial for murder, the evidence showed that, when the body of decedent was examined, no pistol was found on him except one in his coat pocket located away from his bosom, evidence that accused, relying on self-defense, shortly after the homicide stated to third persons that he killed decedent, and at the time he shot him decedent was putting his hand in his shirt bosom, was admissible as original testimony, though it incidentally contradicted accused's testimony. Harrison v. State, 60 App. 544, 132 S. W. 783.

There being, up to the time defendant took the stand, no positive proof that he killed deceased, the state, which was endeavoring to make a case against him by circumstantial evidence, was entitled to introduce a conversation between defendant and his employer on the morning after the killing, and also a statement of which defendant, though he had promised to work that day, fled the country, in which the employer said that he had been told that defendant was squabbling with someone on the road the day before, and told defendant he must not quarrel with the other men, and defendant answered that he had not had any trouble. La Grone v. State, 61 App. 170, 135 S. W. 121.

Any statement of a defendant relative to the offense for which he is being tried is admissible. Germany v. State, 62 App. 276, 137 S. W. 130, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 477.

The state's theory being that defendant killed decedent because he was desirous of marrying decedent's wife, and wanted to get decedent out of the way, testimony as to what defendant said when he heard the court had refused a divorce to her, though both defendants were acquainted, and the remark was addressed denied that he had used the language. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1157.

In a prosecution for theft as bailee of certain mules which accused desired to purchase based on evidence tending to prove that others that the owner would retain a mortgage on the mules, but desired additional security, and that the others signed a note as sureties upon such representation, but afterwards learned that the owner had not reserved a lien; that the sureties requested accused to secure them by a mortgage on the mules, which accused refused to do, and the sureties claimed that the next day they agreed to take the mules and pay the note. Held that, while evidence as admissible as to representations by accused that the original owner would take a mortgage on the mules if the sureties would sign the note as such, other misrepresentations of accused as to a farm, etc., were inadmissible. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 181.

In a prosecution for unlawfully disposing of mortgaged property, evidence that accused told the person to whom he sold the mortgaged property, a mule, at the time he purchased it, that “there was not a dollar against her,” was admissible. Coley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 789.

In a prosecution for seduction, evidence by the prosecutrix that certain letters were written by defendant to her rendered them admissible. Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 821.

Where the state claimed that defendant killed decedent, that he might marry decedent, and evidence of what defendant said when he heard the court in dismissing the complaint, and then having defendant with him at the time accused his decedent's wife a divorce was admissible. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 848.

An objection to the admission in evidence of letters written by accused or by a third person prior to the filing of an indictment for embezzlement on the ground that the letters were written after the date alleged in the indictment as the date of the offense. Dury v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 543.

In a prosecution for homicide, where there was a question as to whether or not accused was a trespasser on accused's premises, testimony that the witness heard accused authorize deceased to pick cotton on his premises is admissible. Bogue v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 948.

Where defendant was accused of falsely testifying on the trial of her husband that he did not strike her at a given time, evidence as to declarations by accused upon being examined by a physician, and of her statements to the county judge, testifying that she was beaten, is admissible to show that she falsely testified. Smith v. State, 70 App. 68, 156 S. W. 645.

Where two witnesses testified that they passed decedent's home on the morning of which the killing was alleged to have occurred, that they saw a man and decedent, and heard loud talking and swearing between them, and one of the witnesses testified that he heard defendant say to decedent, "I guess, by G——, you are about the last G—— man that had it," and recognized his voice, the evidence was admissible, though the other witness was not familiar with defendant's voice, and could not testify that he was the one who made the statement testified to. Belcher v. State, 71 App. 644, 161 S. W. 459.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, a conversation between witness, his wife, and defendant in regard to the projected theft of the animal was admissible. Elmore v. State, 72 App. 226, 162 S. W. 517.

Acts and declarations of accused prior to the event which tend to show his mental status are admissible in a prosecution for an offense of which intent is a material element. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 457.

86. — Self-serving declarations.—The acts and declarations of the defendant are not admissible evidence in his behalf, unless they form a part of the res gestae, or are a part of a confession introduced in evidence against him, or come within the rule that declaration has been given in evidence, that is to say, the whole is admissible. Pharr v. State, 10 App. 485; Allen v. State, 17 App. 637; Jones v. State, 22 App. 324, 3 S. W. 230; Bradberry v. State, 22 App. 273, 2 S. W. 582; Webb v. State, 8 App. 115; Robinson v. State, 3 App. 256; Harmon v. State, 72 S. 515; State v. Id., 92 S. 450; Poore v. State, 52 S. 234; McCulloch v. State, 35 App. 268, 33 S. W. 230; Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 173.

Defendant's declarations to witnesses who saw cuts on his neck and through his coat that they were inflicted during the encounter with the assaulted party, and before the assault was committed by defendant in the same encounter were self-serving declarations and not res gestae. Good v. State, 18 App. 39.

A statement made by defendant shortly after the homicide that he was as "innocent as a babe unborn," held, properly excluded. Lancaster v. State, 35 App. 16, 33 S. W. 165.

What defendant said a few weeks before the homicide, about getting away from deceased, is inadmissible; it is a self-serving declaration. Red v. State, 39 App. 414, 46 S. W. 468.

In a murder case, where it appeared that the difficulty arose over decedent's undue intimacy with accused's sister, testimony of a witness that accused, a few hours before the homicide, came to him and wanted him to have decedent arrested for intimacy with accused's sister and for threats to kill accused, was properly excluded as a self-serving declaration of accused. Hart v. State, 57 App. 21, 121 S. W. 505.

In a prosecution for theft of a mower accused, claiming that he bought it from others, and paid part down, and subsequently paid the remaining 25 cents, could show that he paid the money for the mower, and evidence that he stated at the time what he paid the 25 cents for, was admissible. White v. State, 57 App. 196, 135 S. W. 281.

In a prosecution for murder, testimony of a witness as to statements made to him by the defendant a day or two before the killing that deceased had threatened his life, and that he intended to move away, are inadmissible, as self-serving. Hardeman v. State, 61 App. 111, 123 S. W. 1056.

In a prosecution for a homicide occurring about 10 o'clock at night, evidence that accused, when informed of decedent's death about 10 hours afterwards at the place where he was staying a mile and a half from the place of the killing, said that he was sorry that decedent was dead, and that he, accused, did not intend to kill him, was not res gestae, but hearsay and self-serving, and was properly excluded. Cornwell v. State, 61 App. 122, 134 S. W. 221, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 71.

In a prosecution for violating the prohibitory law by selling liquor to S., evidence that all parties had been given in evidence, that accused had been given in evidence, that accused, after going back and overtake the purchasers and make them give back his whisky was not admissible as res gestae, but was an inadmissible self-serving declaration. Wright v. State, 63 App. 429, 140 S. W. 1105.

Where it appeared that accused killed decedent with a shotgun, testimony by him as to what he said to different persons, before any trouble with decedent, about going hunting was inadmissible; he having been permitted to show his preparations to go hunting. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

Evidence that insanity produced by epilepsy was not shown by any evidence before he entered into a contract of employment, and that the contract stated that he was subject to epileptic fits, and that if he was injured by reason of having a fit he would not hold his employer liable, because the contract is but a self-serving declaration that he was subject to epileptic fits. Maxey v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 952.

In a trial for burglarizing a railroad car, it was not error to exclude testimony for accused that after he was arrested he asked why he was in custody, and, on being told that it was for stealing a sack of flour, he asked, "What in the world want with a sack of flour?" Kell v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 110. Where, in a prosecution for homicide, two persons were indicted as principals, the conversation or conduct of either of them on the morning after the commission of the crime was inadmissible on behalf of either, where they were of a self-serving character. Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 171. In support of the contention of defendant, charged with selling liquor to H., that he did not sell it to him, but that H. grabbed it and ran, throwing down some money, the fact that defendant gave the money to a third person to return to H. may not be shown, this having been not before, but after, he was charged with making the sale. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 914. Evidence that accused was arrested denied assaulting prosecutrix, and said he had not seen her that morning when the alleged assault occurred, was properly excluded, being purely self-serving. Duckett v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1177. In a trial for burglary accompanied by assault and followed by an attempt on the part of defendant to commit suicide, evidence that defendant told his foster mother the day after the crime was committed that he did not know how the wound on his throat was inflicted and that it was not self-inflicted, being hearsay and self-serving, was properly excluded. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

In a trial for burglary accompanied by an assault upon a young woman, evidence that defendant told his foster mother of his engagement to the young woman soon after it occurred and some months before the offense, was properly excluded, being hearsay. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

A statement of defendant, a short time before the killing, to a third person that he had been told deceased had charged defendant and his sister-in-law with improper conduct is a self-serving declaration. Strickland v. State, 71 App. 552, 161 S. W. 110.

In a prosecution for wife murder, declarations to third persons by accused prior to the killing, not a part of the res gestae, that he rescued his wife from drowning, and that he would not permit her to drive a certain horse because it would kill her, and that she had become angry thereat, were self-serving and inadmissible. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437.

Declarations by accused several hours after the alleged offense are inadmissible in his behalf as self-serving. Cyrus v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 679.

In a prosecution for swindling by obtaining goods by means of a worthless check, evidence of defendant's mother that after his arrest she saw him in jail, and he then stated to her that it was his intention and belief, at the time he signed the check, that it was drawn on a different bank than it was, and that he had killed a deer at the time to pay the check, was inadmissible, as self-serving. Glover v. State, 57 App. 288, 122 S. W. 396.

Where, in a prosecution for horse theft, the state, as a circumstance tending to prove the theft, introduced evidence showing that defendant sold the horse at less than its real market value, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to show by the purchaser that, at the time of the sale, he gave as his reason for selling that he was out of feed and wanted to buy feed for his other stock. Sims v. State, 72 App. 621, 183 S. W. 79.

Defendant's declarations to third persons of why he was going to move off deceased's place, made subsequent to the time witness testified he said deceased accused him of whipping his wife and made threats against deceased on account thereof, are self-serving, and so inadmissible. Davis v. State, 78 App. 49, 163 S. W. 442.

88. Declarations by person injured.—Declarations of the deceased on leaving home, as to where he was going, are verbal acts, and admissible for the state. West v. State, 2 App. 409.

Declarations of the deceased, unless res gestae, dying declarations, or made in the presence of the defendant, are not admissible evidence against the defendant. Green v. State, 8 App. 71; Campbell v. State, Id. 84; Hammel v. State, 14 App. 292; Gonzales v. State, 16 App. 162; Robinson v. State, Id. 347.

When an article is proved to have been in possession of deceased, anything he may have said in regard to it is admissible. It is a verbal act, as to title and possession, and when made long anterior to alleged homicide indicates absence of fabrication. Gay v. State, 49 App. 242, 258, 49 S. W. 612.

The statements of the injured female, made an hour after the alleged assault and at a different place from where the assault occurred, are inadmissible. Caudle v. State, 24 App. 26, 38 S. W. 830.

Statements of prosecutrix made soon after the alleged assault was committed are admissible to corroborate her testimony. Duke v. State, 35 App. 283, 33 S. W. 349.
Ex parte statement of deceased before the transaction, not brought home to defendant, is inadmissible. It is not criminative evidence on part of defendant. Young v. State, 41 App. 442, 55 S. W. 333.

The testimony having placed defendant where he could and probably did hear a conversation between deceased and witness, in which deceased told of defendant and threatened him, the statement was admissible in evidence, although the witness was not called as a witness in the case, for the purpose of showing defendant’s knowledge of the conversation. La Grone v. State, 61 App. 170, 136 S. W. 121.

In a prosecution for murder, statements of the deceased made a week or ten days before the killing that the point of difference between himself and others was being warm, that certain persons were getting raw, naming the accused, and there was likely to be trouble over the matter, where communicated to the defendant, and hearing directly upon the question of self-defense. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1174.

Where a defendant, prosecuted for assaulting his wife, had applied for a continuance to take her deposition, she having left the state, but failed to get it, the court did not err in refusing to admit affidavits and other papers claimed to be signed by her attempting to exonerate him. Yates v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1064.

Where accused, after being informed by his wife that decedent had insulted her, sought decedent and shot and killed him on first meeting him, the testimony of witnesses that decedent, before the shooting, had related how he had cursed accused’s wife was admissible to show the probable truth of the communication by the wife of the fact of the insults to accused and to corroborate the testimony of the wife that decedent had cursed her. Davis v. State, 79 App. 271, 155 S. W. 516.

On a trial for homicide committed in a fight, evidence that deceased, after receiving the fatal injuries, and while being taken to a doctor, “was greatly afraid of a bitch” (meaning accused) was, properly excluded, since it would have shed no light on the actions of either party during the difficulty. Dawson v. State, 72 App. 65, 161 S. W. 469.

Declarations by defendant’s wife that he had made threats against her on various occasions, and testimony that she had called upon a deputy sheriff for protection against him, were admissible, in a prosecution for the killing of another at the same time as defendant killed his wife, provided such statements were made in defendant’s hearing or brought to his knowledge before the killing. Robins v. State, 73 App. 267, 166 S. W. 528.

89. Declarations of third persons.—When the evidence fails to establish the defendant’s connection with the matter it is improper and inadmissible to adduce in evidence against him the prejudicial acts and declarations of third persons, though such acts and declarations were offered in the interest of or in behalf of the accused. Favors v. State, 20 App. 158; Burbee v. State, 23 App. 199, 4 S. W. 684; Maunes v. State, 23 App. 683, 5 S. W. 122; Taylor v. State, 27 App. 463, 11 S. W. 492; Nalley v. State, 28 App. 387, 18 S. W. 670; Tillery v. State, 24 App. 251, 5 S. W. 842; 2 Am. St. Rep. 682; Clark v. State, 28 App. 189, 12 S. W. 729, 19 Am. St. Rep. 817; McFadden v. State, 28 App. 241, 14 S. W. 128; Menges v. State, 25 App. 718, 9 S. W. 49. But contra the principles enunciated in the above cases, see Drumley v. State, 21 App. 222, 17 S. W. 140, 57 Am. Rep. 612; Johnson v. State, 22 App. 206, 3 S. W. 609; Ball v. State, 29 App. 107, 14 S. W. 1012; Fuller v. State, 29 App. 509, 17 S. W. 1108. In this case the declarations of the third party were held to have been properly excluded as hearsay. Evers v. State, 31 App. 318, 20 S. W. 744, 18 L. R. A. 421, 57 Am. St. Rep. 811.

On a trial for killing an officer who was attempting to unlawfully arrest defendant, evidence of statements by a third person to the officer regarding the despicable character of defendant was inadmissible. Miers v. State, 31 App. 161, 29 S. W. 1674, 53 Am. St. Rep. 765.

Statements made by a codefendant as to defendant’s connection with the crime is inadmissible against the State. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

Declarations of a witness after the killing charged are inadmissible, except for impeachment. Abram v. State, 36 App. 44, 35 S. W. 389.

What defendant’s wife said is inadmissible. Wheelock v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 182.

There being no evidence of a conspiracy between defendant and deceased’s wife, mother-in-law, and sister-in-law, it is not competent to prove that on the morning after the killing, the latter three were talking and laughing as though nothing had happened. Barry v. State, 37 App. 302, 39 S. W. 692.

Nor was it competent to show that the mother-in-law on the day after the killing tried to trick witnesses to see and conduct of deceased toward defendant’s wife. Barry v. State, 37 App. 302, 39 S. W. 692.

Where one is employed to gather cattle, on a charge of theft from another party, declarer at the time of employment in reference to gathering cattle are admissible, but not those made afterwards, whether employer is dead or alive at time of trial. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 558.

In a prosecution for homicide evidence of advice given by a witness to F., who did the killing, a day or two prior to the homicide, with reference to his rights in respect to a trespass on certain crops by hogs, was too remote and inadmissible. Denener v. State, 58 App. 624, 127 S. W. 261.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, where the evidence showed that accused and others stopped the buggy in which prosecutrix and her escort passed on the road before reaching the place of the assault, who said to them, "Boys, if you have gone ahead," the testimony of the boys and another being by prosecutrix to her escort as to what their con-of the fact should be if they met accused and the others, and by the escort to the effect that if accused and the others had gone down the road they had gone to get whisky.
 Held that, in view of the fact that accused and his companions were met shortly after such statements were made where the escort anticipated they would be, the testimony was admissible. Ross v. State, 60 App. 547, 132 S. W. 793.

The admission of the testimony was not dependent on the only sense of a conspiracy between accused and the witness. Ross v. State, 60 App. 547, 132 S. W.
793.

Where, in a prosecution for rape on a female under 15, defendant pleaded limitations, and there was a direct issue as to the time when he had his last act of intercourse with prosecutrix, she testifying that she had not had intercourse with other men than her husband and defendant, evidence that she had made these statements had intercourse with other men mentioned, at the time contended for by defendant, was admissible as bearing on the question

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence that one now dead confessed to committng the homicide is admissible for the defendant. Pace v. State, 61 App. 436,
135 S. W. 375.

In a homicide case it was immaterial whether witness told another after the homicide that there were several men who were ready to kill defendant, in the absence of a showing that accused was one of the men referred to by the witness.
Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 135 S. W. 1025.

Evidence that prosecutrix pointed out to her father and the sheriff the place where she claimed accused assaulted her was competent. Duckett v. State (Cr.
App.) 150 S. W. 1177.

While it was proper, in a prosecution for the theft of money, to admit evidence as to where the money was found, and by whom found and returned it was improper to prove that a third person had told the defendant where that the money would be returned under named conditions, where defendant was not shown to be in any way connected with such proposal. Manley v. State (Cr.
App.) 153 S. W. 1135.

In a prosecution for abandonment after seduction and marriage it was not proper to show that defendant's uncle had told the wife that she was too good for the defendant. Quals v. State, 71 App. 67, 168 S. W. 539.

Testimony on a prosecution for receiving stolen cattle, of one having charge of a pasture, that he was instructed by the owner of it to keep defendant out of it,

Where decedent was killed as an incident to a conspiracy to illegally organize an armed force in Texas to invade Mexico, in accordance with a certain political party, testified that he was a subscriber to a newspaper, and that one of the principal things which induced him to join the company was articles in the paper, and that the principles announced in the paper were those of the party to which he belonged and joined the company to carry out, a translated copy of the paper was admissible as showing the purpose for which the conspiracy was organized and for which the defendant joined it. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.)
171 S. W. 1149.

90. Declarations in accused's absence.—Conversations, statements, and acts of third persons, had, made, and performed in the absence of the defendant, are ordinarily not admissible in evidence against him or in his behalf. Chumley v.
State, 29 App. 547; Fuller v. State, 19 App. 356; Segura v. State, 16 App. 223;
Robinson v. State, Id. 247; Gonzalez v. State, Id. 163; Anderson v. State, 14 App.

Tex. 64; Davis v. State, 37 Tex. 227; Secrest v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 958.

On a trial for testifying falsely before the grand jury regarding a theft by J., J's confession of the theft was admissible though made in defendant's absence.
Martin v. State, 32 App. 317, 26 S. W. 400.

Declaration of paramour in adultery jointly indicted with defendant not made in his presence, not admissible against him. Whicker v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S.
45.

In a burglary prosecution, testimony that goods found in accused's residence by the sheriff, after the burglary, were brought to witness, and he identified them, was admissible, and not objectionable as a declaration of the witness made while accused was not present. Piattinburg v. State, 57 App.
275, 123 S. W. 421.

On a trial for an illegal sale of whisky through go-betweens, acts and declarations in furtherance of the sale, though made in the absence of the accused and without his express authority, are admissible when it appears that he is so connected with the transaction as to show knowledge, intent, and purpose of making the sale and his necessary cognizance of the events happening in his absence.
Linton v. State, 57 App. 480, 123 S. W. 1107.

In a prosecution for gaming, a question to accused's witness whether another did not ask certain persons in witness' presence and accused's absence, on the day before the offense was alleged to have been committed, where their poker players were, and was answered in the affirmative, was not admissible; the answer not binding accused. Melton v. State, 58 App. 56, 134 S. W. 910.

On a trial for violating the local option law, testimony of the state's witness that he told the truth when the officers caught him with the whisky, and also told the truth when in a certain office, etc., was inadmissible; defendant not be-Declarations made by the third person, in the absence of accused, after the offense, that he and accused were partners in business, were inadmissible. Holt v. State, 57 App. 423, 125 S. W. 45.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house in which liquors were sold without license, testimony that defendant's partner stated that a document was an internal revenue license and that it had been issued to defendant and himself could not bind the defendant in his absence. Campbell v. State, 59 App. 496, 129 S. W. 193.

No conspiracy being shown, it was improper to receive evidence of declarations, before the killing, by accused's brother and sister and another in his absence, tending to show intent to kill decedent; or declarations by the sister in accused's absence, and on hearing a pistol fired that accused had killed decedent. Clements v. State, 61 App. 161, 134 S. W. 728.

In a prosecution against a father for incest with his daughter, evidence of what his wife's brother, in a conversation with the wife in the defendant's absence, said about her leaving defendant, is not admissible, being conversations of third parties in the absence of defendant. Gross v. State, 61 App. 176, 125 S. W. 573, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

Trial for the transactions of witnesses, expressed on finding goods in the home of a third person in the absence of accused, were not binding on him. Morgan v. State, 62 App. 120, 136 S. W. 1065.

In a prosecution for homicide, it was incompetent to permit a witness to testify that a third person, who had the watch in his possession, called it to the officer's attention, that he went to the police station, examined the records, and then took possession of the watch, which proved to be the one stolen, although this did not take place in accused's presence. McMillan v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 1140.

In a trial for receiving stolen goods, testimony of an accomplice of the thief, but not of the defendant, that the thief told her in defendant's absence that the stolen goods were sent to defendant, was improperly admitted. Forrester v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1041.

It was error in a larceny case to permit a witness to testify to a conversation, in defendant's absence, between witness and other members of a lodge as to expelling defendant from the lodge. Manley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1138.

Statements made by a state's witnesses to the county attorney at an ex parte hearing at which accused was not present are inadmissible to prove the offense charged. Liner v. State, 70 App. 156, 156 S. W. 211.

Declarations of a negro for unlawfully carrying a pistol, evidence of a state's witness that he heard accused's brother say in accused's absence that he was going to take a gun away from C., a white man, who was deputy sheriff, was incompetent; there being no claim of any conspiracy or acting together between accused and his brother. Gibs v. State, 70 App. 278, 156 S. W. 927.

In a prosecution for stealing chickens, where the testimony showed that the defendant had been seen taking a basket to his wife, a witness for the state in chief cannot testify that defendant's wife wanted to leave the basket with the witness, stating that she was afraid somebody would get the basket and find the chickens in it, where the defendant was not present when such statement was made. Seymour v. State, 71 App. 158, 158 S. W. 304.

Declared to or by officer.—An officer may testify that he summoned the accused party to assist him in making the arrest, but he should not state the details of the conversation as to the character of the man he was going to arrest. Owen v. State, 55 App. 261, 126 S. W. 495.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the state relied on flight as an evidence of guilt, the sheriff could testify to his attempts to locate accused, but could not testify that another who reported the crime, told him to look out for accused. Handy v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 299.

Declarations inculpating accused.—In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors, it is not competent for the state to prove declarations of the prosecuting witness to connect accused with the sale. McAdams v. State, 59 App. 86, 126 S. W. 1156.

Evidence of declarations of prosecutrix, while living with accused apparently as his wife, that she and accused were married, and evidence of letters written by her during that time stating that she and accused were married, and evidence of her declarations to the same effect when accused was arrested and it was first brought to her attention that the marriage was a nullity, was admissible on a trial for rape by means of a sham marriage. Wilkerson v. State, 60 App. 258, 121 S. W. 1108, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 126.

Where the state sought to show that accused and his brother and a third person committed the crime charged pursuant to a conspiracy, a statement of accused that he wanted to see his brother and the third person on important business, was inadmissible against accused, unless accused sent the message by his father to his brother and the third person, and where accused and the father desired the testimony of the accomplice that the father delivered such message was inadmissible against accused. Carlisle v. State, 64 App. 555, 142 S. W. 1178.

In a murder trial, the state was properly permitted to show that before the killing accused's companion attempted to borrow a weapon, stating that he had a friend who wanted to kill another, where the circumstances indicated that accused knew his companion was making the request, and was close enough to hear what he said, though accused testified he did not hear the conversation. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 111 S. W. 257.

93. — Declarations to accused.—When a defendant's witness had testified to threats made by deceased against defendant, it was not error to refuse to permit her to state that in communicating such threats to defendant she had also told defendant that deceased was a bad man and had killed some men. Harrell v. State, 39 App. 294, 45 S. W. 581.

Where, on a trial for aggravated assault, the evidence showed that a third person was one of the parties to the assault, and participated in it, and pleaded guilty to simple assault, a statement by the third person, in the presence of accused, that his paying a fine would not be sufficient, was admissible. Boykin v. State, 59 App. 267, 128 S. W. 382.

In a homicide case, it was not error to exclude testimony that a witness told B. to tell accused that he had heard decedent threatened to kill accused, and for accused to be careful to "keep his eyes on" decedent, and not to do anything until forced to do so; it not appearing that B. was dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or that he denied having communicated such threat to accused. Kemp v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

Testimony of a witness that just after the shooting a third person, who was shown by the testimony to be near accused and deceased, asked accused what he meant, was properly admitted, but, if appearing that accused made no reply, the jury should be instructed to disregard it, unless supported by reasonable doubt that accused heard the question or exclamation. Rhea v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 578.

In a prosecution for obstructing a street, where it appeared that, on defendant's request, the commissioners' court permitted him to close certain lands which he said were on the east side of a depot, a letter to defendant from the county judge, to the effect that the request had been granted as to the lots east of the depot, where the obstruction was placed, was admissible on the issue of willfulness. Carney v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 155.

94. — Corroborative or impeaching statements.—In a murder trial, a state's witness, who was shown to be an active participant in the transaction which resulted in the homicide, having testified to material facts, it was held competent for the state to prove that two hours before the homicide said witness said that she directed the deceased to kill defendant if he came on the premises. Tow v. State, 22 App. 175, 2 S. W. 587.

Where the defendant claimed that he did not intend not to live with his wife until after his father informed him that she had stated she was going to send him to the penitentiary, it was proper for the father to testify that he so informed his son. Qualls v. State, 71 App. 67, 158 S. W. 539.

A state's witness testified in a homicide case that he saw decedent's knife a few minutes after the killing, lying on the ground closed, but accused's witnesses testified that it was open when picked up. The state's witness was asked on cross-examination if he did not tell accused's son that accused thought witness had it in for him, but he hadn't, and could not say whether the knife was open or closed, and the witness denied such statement, the court then asked him if accused's son did not say certain things to him, which evidence was excluded; the court explaining, however, that witness could be asked anything with respect to what was claimed he said to accused's son. Held, that since it did appear that the latter's statements would make witness' alleged statements clear, there was no error in excluding the evidence offered. Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 169 S. W. 272.

Where a witness for the state testified that, after he had seen defendant and deceased's wife in flagrante delicto, he told a certain named person something like a week or two weeks afterwards, and the state offered no other witnesses to bolster his testimony, the admission of his testimony was not error, although the state could not bolster up its witness by offering other witnesses to show that he had told them soon after the occurrence the same fact to which he was then testifying. Lane v. State, 73 App. 266, 164 S. W. 378.

Where accused claimed that he and his brother met the prosecutors by chance, and the light was not of his seeking, evidence that after leaving,证据 that at 8 o'clock he had left the place he had been during the evening, stated that he was going to his father's to stay the balance of the night, it then being about 1 o'clock, is admissible, even though accused had met the prosecutors earlier in the evening, when they were in some young ladies home and had threatened them using offensive language and had stated that he would get his brother and attack them later that night. Carter v. State, 73 App. 334, 165 S. W. 300.

95. — Letters.—Where, in a prosecution for homicide, defendant testified in her own behalf that deceased had accused her of infidelity, and that her alleged misconduct was the cause of the killing, and it was also shown that she had attempted to regain possession of certain letters written to a man since deceased, certain letters alleged to have been written by her to others were admissible, though she denied authorship thereof. Straight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

In a foreign state for a father who lived in a foreign state for a year, it was held admissible, where the state, in a domestic state, informing him of the death of the prosecuting witness, another son, who resided with the father, is inadmissible to prove such death. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S.W. 915.

In a trial for homicide growing out of the illegal relations of defendant with deceased’s wife, a letter written by him to her tending to show an intimacy between them was admissible on the issue of motive. Lane v. State, 73 App. 266, 154 S.W. 278.

96. — Declarations in accused’s presence.—A statement made to a defendant, or in his hearing, and which he hears and understands, and which is made under circumstances which reasonably require him to answer, is not hearsay, and may be given in evidence. Bond v. State, 20 App. 421; Felder v. State, 23 App. 475, 5 S.W. 115, 59 Am. Rep. 777.

In a trial for murder, the state was permitted, over objection of the defendant, to prove that some member of a crowd congregated at the place of the homicide, just after the shooting, pointed to the defendant, who was walking away, and said: “There is the man who did the shooting.” It was not shown that the defendant heard this remark, or understood that it related to him. Held, that this evidence was hearsay and inadmissible. To entitle the state to introduce in evidence the declaration of a bystander, it must be clearly shown that the defendant understood himself to be accused of the criminal act committed; and, further, the circumstances must have been such as to require of him a response. Felder v. State, 23 App. 477, 5 S.W. 145, 59 Am. Rep. 777.

In prosecution for stealing by means of a worthless check, evidence that, after defendant’s arrest, his mother told him that she had neglected to put his money in a different bank from that on which the check was drawn, and that defendant thereupon cried, was inadmissible. Glover v. State, 57 App. 268, 122 S.W. 396.

In a homicide case, it was error to receive testimony that on hearing a gun fired, and on going around a house to the place where the parties were, witness said to accused, “Why did you do that? Don’t shoot again!” Kemper v. State, 61 App. 1, 125 S.W. 1035.

On a trial for burglary, the confession of a third person made in accused’s presence while accused and the third person were both under arrest was incompetent. Bradshaw v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S.W. 218.

On an accusation for stealing a horse and buggy, where it appeared that accused and another traveled together in the buggy, were together when it was sold, that accused, at the time of the sale, stated that it was not stolen, and that they then went together to the place where they were arrested, while in possession of the stolen horse and that while in jail they told the officers the statement of the other in accused’s presence, and accused in by him at intervals, as to where the buggy would be found was admissible against accused. Moran v. State, 73 App. 555, 166 S.W. 161.

For other decisions as to “Hearsay,” see Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 3687.

The general rule excluding hearsay evidence there are exceptions, as in the case of dying declarations, art. 808 ; confessions, arts. 809, 810.

Mere hearsay is not only not the best, it is not even secondary, evidence; it is no evidence. It is not admissible, although no better evidence is to be obtained. Bedenla v. Reeves v. State, 7 App. 130; Reeves v. State, 9 App. 572; Felder v. State, 23 App. 477, 5 S.W. 145, 59 Am. Rep. 777.

The general rule is that all reports or statements, verbal or written, made by a person not produced as a witness, are inadmissible in evidence. The principle of this rule is, that such evidence requires credit to be given to the statements of person who is not subjected to the ordinary tests enjoined by the law for ascertaining the correctness and completeness of his testimony—namely, that oral testimony should be delivered in the presence of the court, or a magistrate, under the moral and legal sanctions of a oath, and where the moral and intellectual character, the motives and deportment of the witness can be examined, and his capacity and opportunities for observation, and his memory can be tested by cross-examination. Such evidence, moreover, as to oral declarations, is very liable to be fallacious, and its value is, therefore, greatly lessened by the probability that the declaration was imperfectly heard, or was misunderstood, or is not accurately remembered, or has been perverted. It is also to be observed, that the persons communicating such evidence are not exposed to the danger of a prosecution for perjury to the extent that other witnesses are exposed. Harris v. State, 1 App. 74.

Evidence that certain shoes of the accused would have made such tracks as the owner of the burglarized premises had described to the witness was hearsay. Blount v. State, 12 App. 49, 41 Am. Rep. 666.

In a prosecution for an assault with intent to rape, a state’s witness was allowed to testify, over defendant’s objection, that after the commission of the offense, certain persons came to witness and made overtures for a compromise of the conflict against the defendant, inquiring how much money it would take to settle it, etc. There was no proof that these overtures were made by the authority or with the knowledge of the defendant, and he was not present when they were made. Held, that this evidence was purely hearsay and inadmissible. Barbee v. State, 196 S.W. 523; 193 S.W. 624. For similar instances see: See: Favor v. State, 20 App. 155; Washington v. State, 17 App. 197; Tyler v. State, 11...
Chap. 7  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS  Art. 783

See Estes v. State, 23 App. 600, 5 S. W. 176, for evidence held to be hearsay, and improperly admitted against the defendant prosecuted for receiving stolen property.

Testimony as to what others told witness that deceased had said would be hearsay. Howe v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 497.

Hearsay evidence, as to the identification of stolen property, is inadmissible. Howard v. State, 35 App. 554, 22 S. W. 554.

When one is being tried for murder, the testimony of one given on his trial for the same murder, reproduced by one who heard it, is inadmissible, and is not harmless because defendant’s testimony is somewhat similar. Taylor v. State, 41 App. 566, 55 S. W. 961, 965.

On a trial for murder testimony that an ax with which the killing was claimed to have been done and which was brought to the witness by another party as soon as he found it, had negro hair, blood and brains on it, was not objectionable as hearsay. Williams v. State, 69 App. 452, 123 S. W. 245.

In a prosecution for theft of a package of overalls, testimony by an express agent as to what the records of his office showed, regarding the package, without proof of who made the records, or that they were correctly made, was hearsay and inadmissible. McConico v. State, 61 App. 48, 133 S. W. 1047.

In a prosecution for keeping a room in a hotel as a place in which to gamble, a witness on his direct examination testified that accused was proprietor, and on cross-examination testified that he had never lived at the hotel; had never had a room there, but had eaten there; that he knew that accused was proprietor, because he looked after the interests of the hotel; that he had seen him around there, acting as if he was the proprietor; that he had a wife and children there; and that his boys were on watch at night. The court overruled objection that he did not know whether accused was actually proprietor, and said that his testimony was a conclusion. Held, that this testimony was not hearsay. Purshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 769.

The statement by the witness that his testimony was a conclusion and that he did not know, as a matter of fact, whether accused was the actual proprietor was an objection which went to the weight of his testimony, and not to its competency. Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 769.

On a trial for selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, after J. had testified that he purchased liquor from accused, accused, to show that the liquor was ordered by J., and not by defendant, gave evidence to show a shipment of liquor by express to J. The brother of accused had testified that he and accused were partners in the whiskey ordering business, and that liquor which he ordered was divided with accused. The state, by cross-examination of the brother and by recalling J., sought to prove that the shipment to J. was really ordered by the brother, though in J.’s name, to which accused objected as hearsay and prejudicial, irrelevant, and not in support of the issues. Held, that the objection was properly overruled. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 914.

In a trial for burglary of a railroad car, testimony by a local agent of the railroad company that the car was in his custody was not objectionable as being hearsay, even if the company had written rules bearing on the custody of cars. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 116.

In a prosecution for passing a forged check, a witness testified that accused purchased a pair of shoes from one of his salesmen and offered the check in payment, backed it back to witness and asked him; whereupon accused indorsed the check to witness. Held, that such evidence was based on the witness’ own knowledge, and was not objectionable as hearsay. Wesley v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 167.

Defence’s testimony as to what the newspapers had published regarding the crime was properly excluded where he stated that all his information was hearsay. Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1061.

In a prosecution for theft, evidence that, in the house pointed out as being accused’s, the officers, who entered under their search warrant, found the stolen bolts and fittings was not inadmissible because the house was pointed out as accused’s, where his household furniture and wardrobe were in it at the time of the arrest, and he had been living there up to within three days of the theft. McGee v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 246.

Where on a trial for perjury, predicated on accused’s false testimony through an interpreter, the interpreter testified that he correctly interpreted what accused testified to, the testimony of a juror as to what the interpreter interpreted to the jury was not objectionable as hearsay. Mores v. State, 71 App. 529, 158 S. W. 1136.

In a prosecution for receiving or concealing stolen goods, which were shown to include certain pipes, evidence that witness found two pipes buried in the ground, which were part of the stolen property, and delivered them to the owners, was admissible over an objection, shown by bill of exceptions, that it was not shown that accused was connected with the hiding of the pipes or knew of their being stolen at the time, so that the evidence was hearsay and inadmissible. Meek v. State, 71 App. 453, 169 S. W. 698.

A statement of facts in a former trial of the case containing the testimony of the accused was not hearsay. Best v. State, 72 App. 201, 164 S. W. 997.

Hearsay evidence in regard to the arrest of a third person as the man who killed deceased was properly excluded, where the witness who identified defendant as the one who shot testified that he did not see the man shoot, and the arrest of such third person. Herrera v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 719.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that defendant’s wife, on the morning following, after the homicide, pointed out to certain witnesses on the ground the location of the premises, from which measurements and plans were made, held admissible. Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 550.

On a trial for homicide, accused claimed that deceased attacked him with a knife, and that he struck deceased in self-defense. The state offered evidence that the fabrication hatched out in the office of accused’s attorney on the morning of the trial. Held, that evidence that it was a matter of common talk and rumor in the neighborhood where the difficulty occurred that a knife was found the next morning at the place where it occurred was properly excluded as hearsay. Held, v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 725.

98. — Evidence as to fact of making declaration.—A person who was present when others were negotiating a trade between themselves, and who heard them make the trade, is a competent witness to testify about the trade, and his testimony is original and not hearsay. Hester v. State, 35 Okla. 761.

In a prosecution for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors, where there was evidence of the receipt, by accused, of express shipments of intoxicating liquors, the testimony of accused’s father that a doctor, in his presence, advised accused to use intoxicating liquors on his broken leg for the purpose of causing it to heal, was properly excluded as hearsay, especially where it did not appear that any of such shipments were so used. Leonard v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 632.

Where accused showed that he called at the sheriff’s house and that the sheriff’s wife informed him that the sheriff was absent, and also showed by the wife that many people came to the house calling for the sheriff, the testimony of the wife that she afterwards told the sheriff that people were calling for him, was properly excluded as hearsay. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 140, 150 S. W. 235.

On a trial of a private banker to show time when he received certain deposits, evidence of a certain transaction between him and the state bank commissioner in which defendant was required to substitute certain assets of another bank owned by him was not objectionable as hearsay. Brown v. State, 71 App. 335, 129 S. W. 239.

99 — Statements of witnesses or persons available as witnesses.—In a theft case it was held hearsay and inadmissible for a witness to testify that a few moments after the alleged theft, he told the owner of the property stolen that he had seen two suspicious looking negroes in the vicinity, one of whom he recognized as the defendant. Jackson v. State, 20 App. 196.

On a trial for rape by means of a sham marriage, evidence of a declaration by prosecutrix, made in the absence of accused, while she was no longer under the impression that she was his wife, as to the fact that she and accused had been married by a merchant, was inadmissible as hearsay. Wilkerson v. State, 69 App. 338, 121 S. W. 1108, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 126.

A question asked as to what a constable told him that the prosecuting witness said was properly excluded as hearsay, especially where the constable, although a witness for accused, was not asked regarding such matter. Sheppard v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 314.

Where no attempt was made to impeach a witness, a question calling for a statement, alleged to have been made by the witness, relative to accused, out of court and overheard by another, was inadmissible as hearsay. King v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 324.

In a prosecution for murder, where it appeared that S. tried on a vest, which was found in accused’s trunk after the killing, and which a witness claimed belonged to deceased, the witness, who was identifying the vest, might properly be asked if he did not when S.'s office to say that deceased was about the same size as S. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

Wit left her home, after the alleged assault by accused, and went to a relative, a half mile away, the details of the complaints made by prosecutrix to the relative were inadmissible, in the absence of a showing that the complaints were a part of the res gestae. Callihan v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 617.

On a trial for violating the liquor law, the testimony of the chief of police that two policemen brought him some whisky, which he produced and exhibited, should have been excluded as hearsay, especially where such policemen had not then testified, and, of course, had not been impeached. Broadnax v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1165.

What witness told another would be hearsay, and was properly excluded. Ward v. State, 70 App. 236, 159 S. W. 272.

Evidence to show that a witness who though present in court, was not used, had identified a person other than defendant as the person who committed the homicide, was properly excluded. Herrera v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 718.

Accused, desiring the testimony of what third persons told a witness, should call the third persons as witnesses. McHenry v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1630.

100. — Statements of persons deceased or not available as witnesses.—That deceased indirect witnesses that a woman in his office was defendant’s wife, held, hearsay. Jones v. State, 38 App. 80, 40 S. W. 807, 41 S. W. 638, 70 Am. St. Rep. 718.

Testimony that deceased told witness that his life had been threatened, held, hearsay. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 978.

That a person was in Europe did not justify evidence of his statements to another witness not made in accused’s presence. Bradshaw v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 215.

101. — Oral statements in general.—In a prosecution for assault and battery, testimony of witnesses as to statements made to them relative to the assault, by the person alleged to have been assaulted, being hearsay, should have been excluded. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 615; Gonzales v. State, 16 App. 152.
The statements of a detective acting with the defendant as a sham conspi-ator in the commission of the burglary, as to what another detective acting in the same capacity had told him, are hearsay, and inadmissible against the defendant.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder, the defendant proposed to prove that he had heard from X, a short time before the assault, directed one of the victims to take the other home, because such other party was intoxicated. Held, hearsay, and

A medical witness, having expressed his opinion as to the cause of death of the decedent, was permitted, over the objection of the defendant, to testify that other physicians in attendance at a post mortem exjamination of the deceased, concurred in his opinion as to the cause of death. Held, that this evidence was clearly hearsay, and inadmissible. Morgan v. State, 16
App. 592.

The defense offered to prove by the witness N. the statement made to him by one D. to the effect that the gun with which it was claimed by the state the killing was committed, was found by D. at a certain place, which proof, upon objection by the state, was excluded as hearsay. Held, that the ruling was correct. Crook v.
State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

Testimony that the witness had been informed of certain facts is hearsay, and 611, 135 S. W. 615. A former defendant as to what a certain person told him while he was in jail, is inadmissible. Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 225.
A statement made by a person that he heard shots in a certain direction is Testimony that witness others say that defendant had threatened the life of another is hearsay. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 96.

Statements made by defendant on his way home after the killing were properly

Statements by a third person in absence of defendant, concerning an admission, are inadmissible. Gill v. State, 26 App. 589, 33 S. W. 199.

In a murder case, where it appeared that the homicide was the result of illicit relations between the defendant and accused's sister and that the latter had had the girl examined by a doctor, who had told her that the girl showed signs of having had intercourse with some man, was properly excluded as hearsay. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 121 S. W. 508.

Where, on a trial for rape, the issue was whether accused or his brother commited the offense, and the testimony as to the identity of accused was meager, the action of the district attorney in asking a witness questions, for the purpose of bringing before the jury statements by accused's father, made in the absence of accused, who believed that accused was the guilty party, was erroneous. Hughes v.
State, 62 App. 358, 136 S. W. 1065.

Statements of a third person, not a witness in the case, made in the absence of accused and prosecutrix, cannot be proved by the state or accused. Campbell v.

One accused of murder was not entitled to show that a little girl had shown his witness a knife, stating that she found it under a bridge, where accused claimed decedent was standing when shot; the conversation having occurred a month after the shooting, and the witness not having been present when the knife was

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, evidence of witnesses that a third person, who was not a witness, had stated that he had had intercourse with the prosecuting witness, was hearsay and inadmissible. Murphy v.
State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 616.

Evidence as to what witnesses had heard others say about the deceased having trouble with a person other than the accused was properly rejected as hearsay; evidence as to what the witnesses knew of the matter and what they had heard deceased say being proper. Williams v. State, 144 S. W. 622.

In a murder trial, testimony that a third person told witness the day after the killing that he had delivered a pistol to decedent just before the homicide, and testimony as to other statements by the third person, was properly excluded as being

Where defendant, in a trial for murder, testified that he was knocked down by deceased and lost his watch and had been informed that a certain person had picked it up and brought it to the police station, and the chief of police testified that such person had brought accused's watch to him and delivered it, evidence as to what the finder said to the chief of police at the time he delivered the watch was hearsay and not admissible. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

Evidence on the part of defendant that his witness heard some child state after the killing when defendant was not present that another person shot at defendant was inadmissible for any purpose. Blue v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 730.

Where accused, relying on insulting language by decedent toward a female relative to the effect that she was pregnant by accused, sought to show that a third person was the father of the child of the female, the testimony of a witness that in a conversation with decedent's wife on the evening before the killing the wife stated that female had obtained medicine from her doctor for her menstrual periods, and had asked where the third person was, was inadmissible as hearsay to support the theory that the third person was the father of the child. Redman v.
State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 676.

In a homicide case, it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify that
C. had told him that he had seen two cattle in S.'s brand, and not the brand of deceased, in a certain pasture; it appearing that deceased had sold cattle to the man who placed the cattle in the pasture, the testimony being hearsay. Kelly v.
State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 304.
In an incest case the court properly excluded testimony as to what police and defendant told the prosecutrix and her mother when the complaint was made. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 315.

Where a clerk of the store alleged to have been burglarized, on discovering the burglary, showed the owner as soon as he arrived that the door had been fastened, the witness was asked the condition of the bar with which the door had been fastened, and the door, but was not entitled to state what was told him by his clerk. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 532.

Where accused was charged with slandering his wife, and several young men testified to facts damaging to the wife's reputation for chastity, though denying any ill will toward her, evidence that a boy whose name was unknown to the witness heard some boys around T. where the part of the street in which his wife's house was situated, said he had heard the deponent tell someone he would arrest the accused for what he had done. Gilleispie v. State, 73 App. 555, 166 S. W. 135.

In a prosecution for homicide, lying declarations of the deceased, to the effect that the deceased wife had appealed to deceased for protection the night before was not admissible. Harde v. State, 73 App. 176, 166 S. W. 555.

Where it appeared in a murder trial that decedent had previously inflicted a fatal wound on accused's son by striking him with a stick of wood, testimony that C. told witness that he had gotten the stick that decedent killed the son with, that decedent told him to get it and hide it, that decedent might have it in court, and that he did hide it, was properly excluded as being hearsay. Decker v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 566.

Evidence that another told witness that he had given authority to sign a certain name to a check claimed to have been forged was not admissible in a prosecution for forgery, being hearsay. Davis v. State, 70 App. 253, 166 S. W. 171.

Where, in a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, it was shown that on one occasion O. was seen in prosecutrix's company by certain others, evidence that on the next day he requested those who saw him never to say anything about him with prosecutrix the night before was hearsay and inadmissible. Gillespie v. State, 73 App. 555, 166 S. W. 135.

Evidence of witnesses as to what a third person, notifying them of the difficulty between accused and decedent, reported, was inadmissible as hearsay. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 257.

102. — Oral statements incriminating accused.—In a prosecution for selling liquor on Sunday, testimony by the officer who took the liquor from T., who purchased it, that he asked him where he got it, and he took him to the back end of a saloon, and told him that that was where he got it, was objectionable as hearsay, where not made in the presence of defendant. Long v. State, 58 App. 25, 124 S. W. 640.

But testimony of the officer identifying the place shown him by the witness was not objectionable as hearsay. Long v. State, 58 App. 25, 124 S. W. 640.

On a trial for violating the local option law, testimony of the marshal that he caught the state's witness with some whisky, and that the witness stated that he got it from accused, etc., was inadmissible. Kirksey v. State, 58 App. 158, 125 S. W. 15.

A statement made to a witness by a third party that if any one got into trouble about the prosecutrix it would be defendant was hearsay and inadmissible in a rape case in the absence of proof of conspiracy or collusion between such witness and the prosecutrix to prosecute the defendant. Clardy v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 568.

Declarations of accused's infant children, made on coming alone to the home of witness, that their parents had declared before the children left home that they were going to sell their property, were inadmissible as hearsay, though when the children came to the home of witness they appeared to be excited. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1176.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, testimony of a policeman that a certain woman stated to him, in defendant's absence, that defendant knew that she and the man who registered with her were not husband and wife, being hearsay, was improperly admitted. Nichols v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 304.

On trial for receiving stolen goods, stolen from a house which was burglarized, the state may show that, on information received, officers found a toy in the trunk of the wife of accused, and prove that the toy was one taken from the house burglarized on the night of the burglary; but the state may not, to aid the testimony on this issue, prove that a third person had told the officers that they would find the toy, nor give in evidence the search they made of accused's dwelling to find the toy, where the officers made the search without informing any one that they were in search of the toy. Barker v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 151.

103. — Identification of property stolen.—In a theft case, it was held error to refuse a direction to the jury to prove that the alleged owner of the property that the alleged owner of stolen property pointed out, claimed and took possession of the same when defendant was not present, is inadmissible to establish ownership. Clay v. State, 40 App. 560, 51 S. W. 212.

In a burglary case, evidence of the identification of goods in accused's possession by third persons as belonging to them was inadmissible. Enkows v. State, 57 App. 247, 122 S. W. 399.

| Title 8 | TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS | 646 |
104. — Conversations.—Evidence of discussion among employees where defendant worked as to his salary; held, inadmissible. Hurst v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 264.

In a trial upon an indictment as principal in a murder, evidence as to a telephone conversation by which the wife of the one who actually did the killing arranged to have him come to the house in her husband’s absence was inadmissible as hearsay. Menefee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 138.

In a trial for burglary accompanied by an assault and followed by an attempt on the defendant’s life, by himself with a razor, evidence as to conversations between defendant’s foster mother and the officers relative to their finding blood and a blood-stained handkerchief was properly excluded. Slaffey v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 161.

One charged with having assaulted his wife, who left him and went out of the state, although asked on cross-examination if he did not go after her and have a conversation with her, having so testified on direct examination, was properly not permitted to detail to the jury the conversation he had with her. Yates v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

In a prosecution for horse theft, the court properly refused to permit witnesses to testify as to conversations they had had with the person from whom defendant claimed to have gotten the horse, since, not occurring in the presence of defendant, it was hearsay. Sims v. State, 72 App. 621, 163 S. W. 73.

105. — Written statements.—Where a witness testified that after accused’s arrest, and while the matter of his marriage with prosecutrix was being discussed, he told her that she and accused had not been married, a letter written by prosecutrix to the witness, while accused was in jail, admitting her statement to the witness that she and accused had not been married, and stating that she was afraid to say in the presence of accused that they were married, and that she had not before married, and that she had never married, and that she thought they were, was inadmissible as hearsay. Wilkerson v. State, 60 App. 385, 131 S. W. 1108, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 126.

Where the state sought to show that a check, relied on by accused in support of his defense, had been altered, a letter by a bank to another bank, which had cashed the check, was inadmissible against accused; he having no connection with the letter. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

An unsworn statement of a person who was not independently shown to have ever been connected with an underwriters’ association, made to a third person in a letter, that the association did not have a certain capital, was not admissible in evidence. Tripp v. State, 72 App. 157, 160 S. W. 1191.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, letters and certificates from parties at another place bearing upon defendant’s pecunial and law-abiding reputation, etc., were hearsay and inadmissible. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1110.

A letter written by one claiming to be a wife of accused is not admissible to show that he was guilty of the offense of bigamy. Ex parte Lambert (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 783.

106. Evidence founded on hearsay.—It is improper to admit a newspaper account of the commission of the offense. Millirons v. State, 34 App. 12, 28 S. W. 655.

A witness whose knowledge is based on letters written by third persons is not competent to testify. Scruggs v. State, 35 App. 622, 34 S. W. 951.

In a prosecution for disturbing religious worship, one who testified that he did not know accused, but that he was the man whom he saw at the church window on the night of the disturbance, could testify that he was told accused’s name by others. Buzan v. State, 59 App. 213, 125 S. W. 388.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, an auditor’s report, showing the amounts embezzled, where the information contained in the report was obtained in part from different books, in part from oral statements of different persons, and in part from other sources. Dickie v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 271.

The testimony of a witness having no personal recollection of the facts, but relying on the books of a bank, kept by a third person and not proved to be correct, and on a letter with which accused had nothing to do, is inadmissible as hearsay. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

The testimony of a witness having no independent recollection of the fact testified to, but relying wholly on memoranda made by him of private writings, not the best evidence of the facts recited therein, is hearsay. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

Testimony merely of what witnesses had heard as to the mental condition of defendant’s father is hearsay. Brice v. State, 72 App. 219, 162 S. W. 874.

107. Matters provable by reputation.—In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, the character of the house, and of its occupants also, may be proved by general reputation. Pen. Code, art. 496.

County boundaries may be proved by general reputation. Cox v. State, 41 Tex. Civ. 1: Nelson v. State, 1 App. 42. Except in trials for bigamy, incest, and adultery, nothing by any general reputation, ordinary or creditable, shall be proved as to matters between a man and wife, or between persons of the same family, as between a man and woman, or as to the character of a witness to the facts. Thirteen months before trial, they lived in the same neighborhood with him and knew his reputation. Held sufficient as predicate. Thurmond v. State, 27 App. 347, 11 S. W. 491.

General reputation is admissible to prove character when that is an issue. Landa v. Obert, 5 Civ. App. 626, 25 S. W. 342.

On trial of a white woman for intermarrying with a negro, evidence that her first husband was a white man was admissible to show that she was recognized as a white woman. Bell v. State, 33 App. 163, 25 S. W. 769.
On trial for libel, for charging the injured party with dishonesty, the general rendering of evidence for honesty and fair dealing is admissible, but rumor and conversation in regard to specific acts are not admissible either to show want of malice or to mitigate the punishment. Baldwin v. State, 39 App. 245, 45 S. W. 714. The term "pedigree" includes the facts of birth, marriage, and death and the times when such events happened. Bowan v. State, 57 App. 635, 124 S. W. 668, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

Testimony that defendant was reputed to be in control of a private residence is hearsay. Dunn v. State, 72 App. 370, 161 S. W. 467.

Evidence as to age.—While, where prosecutrix's mother and father are dead or beyond the court's jurisdiction, and her age is in issue, hearsay evidence as to her age was admissible, if based on statements of her near relatives or persons in a position to know thereof, it was error to admit evidence that prosecutrix's reputation was that she was only 15 years of age, where her parents had testified in the case to her age, though they testified differently. Cowden v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 773; Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 783.

The court may not certify to the jury as to her age, where she received her knowledge from her mother. Vaughan v. State, 62 App. 24, 136 S. W. 476.

In a rape prosecution the girl was properly permitted to testify as to her age, though she did say on cross-examination that she was 14, because her mother had told her so; its weight being for the jury. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

109. Acts and declarations of conspirators in general.—In the case of conspirators, when a conspiracy has been shown, any fact or circumstances which tend to establish the guilt of one of them, is relevant and competent evidence against the others. Pierson v. State, 18 App. 524; Mixon v. State, 25 S. W. 294.

The acts of all are admissible in a general indictment against all. Cruit v. State, 41 Tex. 476; or on separate indictments, Corn v. State, 41 Tex. 301.

Where defendant and M. acted together and were the parties who did the killing, and M. had or kept the gun, or in whose possession it was found and a gun found hidden between the mattresses of M.'s bed, was admissible against defendant. Rodriguez v. State, 32 App. 259, 22 S. W. 978.

Where conspiracy has been established, declaratory has been of a co-conspirator made before the commission of the offense are admissible. Cline v. State, 24 App. 347, 30 S. W. 801; Atkinson v. State, 34 App. 424, 30 S. W. 1061.

Statements and declarations of co-conspirators are admissible when evidence tending to prove a conspiracy has been introduced. Small v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 790.

The evidence showed a conspiracy between defendant and one W. The state was allowed to prove that prior to the alleged theft the witness had a conversation with W., who stated that said cattle belonged to defendant, but defendant did not wish it known as he had some judgments against him; held, such conversation not being in the furtherance of the common design is not admissible. Dungan v. State, 33 App. 315, 45 S. W. 19.

Where a conspiracy has been formed, the acts and declarations of a conspirator are admissible against his co-conspirators until the object of the conspiracy has been accomplished. Milo v. State, 50 App. 176, 127 S. W. 1925.

In a prosecution for burglary, testimony that an alleged accomplice of defendant introduced defendant to witness was admissible. Bowen v. State, 60 App. 595, 133 S. W. 256.

In the prosecution of an accessory to the crime of seduction, it was proper to admit evidence of acts and statements by the principal as to bringing about the period of the prosecutrix; all evidence admissible against the principal being admissible against the accessory, it being necessary to prove the guilt of the principal. Houston v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 139.

In a prosecution for assault to murder, where the state's theory of the case was that four persons were acting together in a conspiracy to take the life of the person assaulted, there was no error in admitting statements made by the conspirators, or acts done by one of them; held, the acts and declarations of co-conspirators, prior to the consummation of the completed act, are admissible to show the conspiracy and the animus behind the acts. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1015.

109g. Who are accomplices.—See art. 70, Penal Code, and notes.

110. Furtherance or execution of common purpose.—If two or more act together, with unlawful intent, in the perpetration of a crime, they are co-conspirators and principal offenders by reason of their common design and co-operation, and whether they be indicted and tried jointly or separately, the antecedent acts or declarations of each, pending and in pursuance of the common design, and tending to further that design, or upon the motive or the intent of its perpetrators, are competent evidence against each and all of them. Cox et al. v. State, 8 App. 254, 24 Am. Rep. 746; Avery v. State, 10 App. 199; Cruit v. State, 41 Tex. 476; Blum v. State, 20 App. 575, 34 Am. Rep. 530. See, also, Williams v. State, 24 App. 17, 24 Tex. Civ. Prac. Ann. 28 St. R. 817; Cook v. State, 22 App. 511, 3 S. W. 749; Tillery v. State, 24 App. 251, 5 S. W. 842, 5 Am. St. Rep. 582; Cortex v. State, 24 App. 511, 6 S. W. 546.

On a prosecution for larceny, the evidence for the state showed that F. rented a room over a store, and that the room was occupied by himself and defendant, that during their occupancy a hole was cut through the floor whereby access was obtained to the state and goods taken and gone therefrom. While the owner of the store was testifying he was asked if he saw any one else that evening in the store, and stated that the other man was F., who came in and asked to be shown some gloves. The evening referred to was the evening before the theft. Held, that the evidence was admissible. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 30, 129 S. W. 1101.

Testimony of the one who leased the room as to the statements of F., when taking the room, to the effect that he was going to bring a "partner" with him was admissible. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 30, 129 S. W. 1109.

Where the indictment does not allege a conspiracy, yet if the evidence shows that, though widely separated, the defendant and another, not under indictment, concerted and co-operated in the transaction, the acts of the other in pursuance of the common design are evidence against the defendant. Heard v. State, 9 App. 1.

Where a conspiracy has been shown, not only the acts and declarations of a co-conspirator in furtherance of a common design may be proved against the defendant, but also the financial condition of the co-conspirator, in connection with his possession of the effects of the deceased, prior to the consummation of the conspiracy. Post v. State, 10 App. 598.

In a murder trial, it was held correct to permit the state to prove that eleven days before the murder, the codefendants of the defendant were seen in the town in which the murder was committed. In connection with other proof, this testimony tended to show preparation and complicity on the part of all the defendants. George v. State, 17 App. 513.

On trial for murder, where defendant and two others had acted together, it was held admissible to prove threats and preparation of one of the others, also being shown that defendant knew of such threats and preparation and took part in the killing. Cline v. State, 33 App. 452, 27 S. W. 128.

Conspiracy being established, the acts and declarations of each conspirator, pending the enterprise, are admissible in evidence. Williams v. State, 24 App. 17, 5 S. W. 655; Rice v. State, 32 App. 533, 26 S. W. 508.

Declarations of alleged conspirators in the absence of defendant, and not in furtherance of the common design, are inadmissible. Schwen v. State, 37 App. 365, 35 S. W. 172; Cudill v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 373.

To render the statements and declarations of one co-conspirator admissible against another it is essential that the conspiracy was then pending its object not having been consummated and such act or declaration must be in furtherance of the common design. Dungan v. State, 39 App. 115, 45 S. W. 19.

Where the facts, in a prosecution for robbery occurring at the time of an assault, show a conspiracy to beat prosecutor, hired to ferret out places where liquor was unlawfully sold, prosecutor may testify what his business was, and that he met one of the conspirators at the barber shop, where the assault took place, by appointment. Phelps v. State, 73 App. 217, 104 S. W. 1064.

111. Absence of defendant.—When a conspiracy is shown (which is usually inductively from circumstances), then the acts and declarations of one conspirator in furtherance of the common design, as long as the conspiracy continues, are admissible against his associates, though made in the absence of the latter.

Where, in a prosecution for assault to kill, the state charged a conspiracy between defendant and three others to kill deceased, evidence of all facts and circumstances in furtherance of the design by each of the parties was admissible, although all of them may not have been present at the time the assault occurred. Wilson v. State, 70 App. 3, 155 S. W. 242.

Where the facts in a prosecution for kidnapping showed a conspiracy, the acts, words, and conduct of each and all of the conspirators in furtherance of the common design, until the termination of the conspiracy, were admissible, whether defendant was actually present or not. Nunez v. State, 70 App. 481, 156 S. W. 932.

Where accused, charged with rape, informed a third person that accused's son was acting for him, using money given him by accused, and that the third person would obtain instructions from the son, the acts of the son, done under the directions of accused, were admissible against him, though the acts were not in the presence of accused. Burge v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 63.

Declarations of a co-conspirator during accused's absence, in furtherance of a conspiracy that accused should burn the co-conspirator's horse for the insurance, were held, that they could only be considered if the conspiracy was proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 339.

In a prosecution for bringing stolen property into the state, the statements and acts of the co-conspirators during the pendency of, and in furtherance of, the common design to convert the goods to their use, such as its division, etc., were 112. — Acts and declarations during actual commission of crime.—Declarations made during the commission of an assault in pursuance of a conspiracy are admissible. Rape v. State, 34 App. 615, 31 S. W. 652.

Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault on a police officer, there was evidence that defendant and two others were committing the assault, and that one of them, approaching complainant, removed his pistol from his holster and struck him over the head with it, it was not error to permit the state to exhibit the pistol to the jury, though defendant had not been personally connected therewith. Lacouve v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 626.

Where the testimony of the prosecuting witness tended to show that a person accused of rape and C. were acting together to compel her to have sexual intercourse, it was not error to permit her testifying to the acts and conduct of C. as well as the acts and conduct of accused. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 342.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the evidence indicated that with defendant B. were present and were engaged in the assault, it was not error to allow in evidence statements made by B. at the time of the assault against accused. Waters v. State (Cr. App.) 118 S. W. 796.

Where it was the theory of the state that accused and his father conspired to kill a man owing to a difficulty between deceased and the father, evidence of the acts of the father during the shooting was admissible. Coulter v. State, 72 App. 602, 182 S. W. 885.

113. — Acts and declarations prior to conspiracy or defendant's joinder therein.—One conspirator's declaration of his individual intention to commit a crime, not made in furtherance of a design concerted with the evidence against one who subsequently engaged in the conspiracy and co-operated in its execution. Cox v. State, 8 App. 234, 24 Am. Rep. 716.

When conspiracy has been proved, and conspirators are together, the declarations of one made prior to the conspiracy are admissible against the other. Casner v. State, 42 App. 118, 57 S. W. 825.

Acts and declarations of principals in regard to the deceased, occurring before the homicide and before the conspiracy was entered into, are admissible against those who subsequently entered the conspiracy and also against those who made them. Cain v. State, 42 App. 210, 59 S. W. 276.

If two or more parties form a conspiracy to do a certain act, and a third party enters the conspiracy after its formation, the acts and statements of the conspirators made before the said party comes into the conspiracy, are admissible against such party when he adopts the conspiracy, common design and purpose of all. Stevens v. State, 42 App. 154, 59 S. W. 548.

114. — Subsequent to crime but before fulfillment of purpose.—Where defendant was apprehended by a company of men illegally organized in Texas to invade Mexico, merely as an incident of the purpose of the organization, in order to prevent defendant from informing concerning them, and the conspiracy did not end until the company were arrested and incarcerated, evidence as to what was said and done by the conspirators, or any of them, after defendant's death and prior to their arrest was admissible. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133; Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1153.

It was shown that the goods taken from the burglarized house were still in the joint possession of defendant and his co-defendant, and that they were preparing to take them out of the State; held, the conspiracy was not at an end and the confessions, acts and statements of one were admissible against the other. Franks v. State, 36 App. 149, 35 S. W. 577.

A conspiracy to set fire to a building, with the ultimate purpose of obtaining the insurance on a building of one of the conspirators adjoining it, did not terminate with the burning of the building, so as to render inadmissible a letter by one of the conspirators to the other, received the day after the fire, on the ground that the object of the conspiracy had then been accomplished. Gracy v. State, 57 App. 68, 121 S. W. 705.

Since, where a crime is committed pursuant to a conspiracy, the conspiracy continues until the proceeds of the crime have been divided or the design is accomplished, any evidence as to the concerted action of the conspirators up to the time the purpose of the conspiracy has been accomplished is admissible. Snelling v. State, 57 App. 416, 123 S. W. 610.

Where a conspiracy has for its purpose not only the commission of a crime, but also a division of the profits which were to result therefrom, the declarations by one conspirator made after the crime, and before the subsequent arrangements as to the division of the benefits were completed, were competent as against his co-conspirators. Eddleston v. State, 59 App. 128 S. W. 1105.

Where it is a part of a conspiracy to murder that, after the killing, a co-conspirator should return to the body and place a knife there, to show that the killing was in self-defense, his act would be in the nature of concealing the crime, and evidence of such act would be admissible in evidence as part of the res gestae in a prosecution for murder, and if for any reason, as for escape or concealment, the common purpose of the conspirators continues, declarations in furtherance thereof are admissible, although the crime which was the object of the conspiracy has been consummated. Eddleston v. State, 59 App. 128 S. W. 1105.

The evidence showing an acting together by M. and defendant, shortly after a burglary, in attempting to dispose of a harness taken in the burglary, their possession of which was not made out; also evidence before disposition of the harness, that defendant had a harness he wanted to sell, was admissible, on a prosecution for the burglary, as a declaration of a co-con-
The rule that evidence of acts and declarations of a conspirator in furtherance of the common design is admissible against another conspirator pending the conspiracy and until its final termination includes anything that is within the contemplation of dividing the spoils, or any matter that may be subsequent to, but included in, the scope of the agreement. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

115. Acts and declarations after accomplishment of object.—In general the acts and declarations of a confederate of the defendant are not evidence against the defendant, if they were made after the consummation of the unlawful enterprise; but such acts or declarations are evidence against the defendant if he was present and acquiesced in them, even after the lapse of some time from the consummation of the offense, and even before he had been charged or prosecuted for such new offense. In 18 App. 91: Long v. State, 18 App. 121; Hicks v. State, 19 App. 398; Armstead v. State, 22 App. 51, 2 S. W. 627; Smith v. State, 31 App. 167, 17 S. W. 552; Davis v. State, 9 App. 363; Avery v. State, 10 App. 193; Willey v. State, 22 App. 486, 3 S. W. 570; Williams v. State, 24 App. 17, 5 S. W. 655; Cortez v. State, 24 App. 511, 6 S. W. 549; Tillery v. State, 24 App. 251, 5 S. W. 812, 5 Am. St. Rep. 882.

Declarations of a co-conspirator after the consummation of the conspiracy are inadmissible. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 596; Phillips v. State, 6 App. 364.

The declaration of a conspirator, made soon after the accomplishment of the object of the conspiracy, is not admissible against the other though present, as forming a part of the res gestae. It is admissible against the one making it. Williams v. State, 49 App. 568, 51 S. W. 224.

Declarations made after the object of the conspiracy had been accomplished as to further acts of defendants are not admissible. Nixon v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 498. Neither are declarations made in the presence of defendant while he is asleep. Id.

On trial for murder, where the state's theory was that defendant assisted another person in committing the homicide, evidence of the flight of such other person is admissible. McIntyre v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 247.

On trial of two persons for murder, evidence that after the homicide was committed one of them had possession of property that had belonged to deceased, is inadmissible as against the other. Conde v. State, 35 App. 98, 34 S. W. 286, 60 Am. St. Rep. 22.

The finding of a pistol belonging to defendant's brother, by information given by the owner after the conspiracy between defendant and his brother was at an end, would be inadmissible. Murphy v. State, 36 App. 24, 35 S. W. 174.

Orient to prove that on the morning after the murder of the mother-in-law, sister-in-law, and wife of the deceased, were talking and laughing as though nothing had happened. If a conspiracy had existed between them and defendant, it was then at an end. Barry v. State, 57 App. 302, 39 S. W. 692.

Evidence made by the principal before him are clearly admissible against an accomplice. Wilkinson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 961.

A conspirator to set fire to a building, with the object of obtaining the insurance on a building of his own adjoining it, wrote a letter to his co-conspirator before the fire, but not received until the day after, in regard to the conspiracy between them. Held, that the letter was not within the rule against the admission against a conspirator of acts or declarations of his co-conspirator, in his absence, after the accomplishment of the object of the conspiracy. Gracy v. State, 57 App. 68, 121 S. W. 765.

Where the evidence showed that any conspiracy to steal money had ended and the spoils had been divided when a conversation occurred in which a claimed co-conspirator offered accused money, there was no connection between the money offered accused there and that stolen, so that the testimony of such conversation was not admissible. Smelley v. State, 57 App. 416, 123 S. W. 610.

Accused and another were arrested for burglary, and were warned generally that anything they might say could be used against them, and the other person in the presence of accused acknowledged that he had the stolen goods, and accused remained silent. Held, that the confession and acts of the codefendant were not admissible in evidence against accused, as they were the acts and declarations of an alleged co-conspirator after completion of the offense, and made under circumstances which could not be used against the silent conspirator, and the evidence was also inadmissible because his silence after being warned that any statement that he might make could be used against him precluded the admission of anything that was said in his presence. Couch v. State, 58 App. 565, 128 S. W. 866.

Acts and declarations of a conspirator after the commission of a crime were admissible against his co-conspirators, where they are so connected with the crime as to form a part of the res gestae. Eggleston v. State, 58 App. 549, 128 S. W. 1100.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence of possession by one of the co-conspir-Admissibility in defendant's behalf.—See notes under art. 791.

117. Preliminary proof of conspiracy.—The sufficiency of the preliminary proof as a predicate for the imputed acts or declarations, is primarily determinable by the judge; but if its sufficiency is a question in the case, it should be submitted to the jury, and the instructions to disregard such acts and declarations as evidence, if they are not satisfied from the evidence, independent of such acts and declarations of the defendant's complicity in the crime charged. Loggins v. State, 8 App. 434; Crook v. State, 27 App. 158, 11 S. W. 444.

Conspiracy can not be proved by the declarations of a co-conspirator made after the consummation of the offense, and in the absence of the defendant. Cohen v. State, 11 App. 153; Crook v. State, 27 App. 158, 11 S. W. 444.

See facts stated in the opinion, upon which it was held that a prima facie case of conspiracy established, and hence there was no error in admitting evidence, against the defendant, the acts and declarations of his co-conspirators, and especially so where the court submitted the question of conspiracy vel non to be found by the jury, and further instructed them that if they found a conspiracy they were not to consider the acts and declarations as evidence against the defendant. Luttrell v. State, 31 App. 213, 21 S. W. 418.

The statements of a party received as that of a co-conspirator with defendant, which were made in defendant's absence and not before the trial, are given at the trial are not admissible to prove the conspiracy. Newton v. State, 62 App. 622, 135 S. W. 708.

In connection with other circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy between defendant and his brother, evidence that the brother, when asked, a few days before the homicide, what was the trouble between defendant and deceased, said: “It ain't going to leak out from us; it may leak out after a while, but it will never come from us”—was admissible. Cameron v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 867.

Though all the testimony for defendant is to the contrary, yet, if the testimony as a whole raises the issue that defendant and his wife were acting together in making the assault, then her acts and declarations during the time of the preparation for the act and while it was being consummated are admissible. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

A conspiracy may be shown by circumstances. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

While a conspiracy cannot be shown by declarations of a co-conspirator alone, they may be considered thereon in connection with other evidence. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

Evidence, on a prosecution for assault to murder, held sufficient to authorize a finding that defendant and his wife were acting together, rendering her acts and declarations admissible on the issue of whether he fired. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

118. Necessity.—To render the acts and declarations of a supposed confederate admissible against a defendant, proof must be adduced of the defendant's complicity at the time such acts were done or declarations made by his alleged confederate. Loggins v. State, 8 App. 434.

The acts and declarations of the principal may be proved to establish his guilt, but if there be no proof alimia of conspiracy between the defendant and the principal, the jury should be instructed not to consider such evidence as proof of any other issue than the guilt of the principal. Arnold v. State, 9 App. 425.

Declarations of an accomplice made pending the offense, in the absence of proof of conspiracy, were not admissible. Martin v. State, 25 App. 557, 8 S. W. 652.

The state's witness, Holman, testified, on the trial of the accused as an accomplice to murder, to the acts, declarations, and statements of one Harris, and a part of the testimony, the witness, the said Harris, and the alleged principal, to all of which the accused objected upon the ground that he was not present at any of the times testified about, and that it had not been shown that a conspiracy to commit murder existed between him and the said parties. Held, that this was error, as the accused was not present, and was inadmissible, except upon the predicate of the existence of such a conspiracy. Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

Outside of the acts and declarations, there must be proof of the conspiracy itself. Blackburn v. State, 23 App. 226, 26 S. W. 65.

To render the statements and declarations of one co-conspirator admissible against another it is essential that a conspiracy be shown. Dunigan v. State, 35 App. 115, 45 S. W. 19.

Testimony that freshly branded cattle were found in a co-defendant's pasture, no conspiracy having been shown, is inadmissible. Guinn v. State, 39 App. 257, 45 S. W. 694.

When no conspiracy has been proven, acts and declarations of other persons charged with the commission of the offense are inadmissible against each other. (Following Smith v. State, 21 App. 120, 17 S. W. 552.) Harris v. State, 31 App. 411, 20 S. W. 916.

The acts and declarations of a co-conspirator may be introduced in evidence before the conspiracy has been established, provided it be subsequently established. Luttrell v. State, 31 App. 492, 21 S. W. 916. Proof of a plot or combination must precede introduction of declarations made by either of the conspirators, though the acts and declarations of separate parties in planning and executing the scheme may be shown in evidence of the common design. Sorrento v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1123.

Where a conspiracy is shown, it is immaterial that this is not done until after introduction of acts and declarations of a co-conspirator. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

120. Documentary evidence in general.—For other decisions as to documentary evidence, see Vernon's Scales' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 3657, 3694, 3695.

Documentary evidence is admissible in criminal cases under the rules of the common law, to establish collateral facts, and this practice is not in contravention of the constitutional right of the defendant to be confronted with the witnesses against him. Rogers v. State, 11 App. 608; May v. State, 15 App. 439.

A notary's certificate of protest, whether given in this or another state, is competent evidence of the facts therein recited, but of nothing more. May v. State, 15 App. 439; May v. State, 17 App. 215.

An affidavit previously made by defendant against a witness may be introduced to fix a date. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 615.

Evidence for swindling by obtaining goods with a worthless check, the check was admissible, though it did not show whether the bank on which it was drawn was a corporation or a joint-stock company, or where it was situated, and though the indictment did not allege that the bank was engaged in the banking business in the city and county of its location. Glover v. State, 57 App. 296, 125 S. W. 396.

The license and return showing accused's marriage to his second wife was evidence in a bigamy case. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 206, 139 S. W. 981.

Where accused, in a civil action on a note, falsely testified that the plaintiff executed and gave to him a receipt showing payment, the receipt, whether a valid instrument or not, was admissible in a prosecution for perjury, for it was material whether the receipt was executed as testified by accused. Barber v. State, 64 App. 96, 142 S. W. 577.

In a prosecution of a tax collector for embezzling, accused's reports to the state comptroller were properly admitted in evidence, even though some of them were signed only by his deputies. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901.

121.° Evidence against records. — Penal Code, art. 606, makes the entries on packages of intoxicating liquors shipped by express and in the books and papers of the express companies thereby required quasi public records and admissible in evidence in a prosecution for pursuance of the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition. Where the records kept by them were the company and identifying them, though they were not proved by the officer or agent of the express company making the entries; it also appearing that accused had signed such records as a receipt for the packages referred to therein. Stephens v. State, 63 App. 111, 144 S. W. 141; Atkisson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 1141.

The record of a brand is not admissible as evidence of ownership in a trial for cattle theft unless the same has been recorded; and the record is not sufficient unless it designates the part of the animal upon which it is to be placed. But the statute controlling the subject can not be construed to mean that the record shall designate the particular right or left side, shoulder, flank, or hip, as the case may be, of the brand upon which the brand is to be placed. It was sufficient in this case that the record of the brand showed that it was to be placed on the "hip, thigh, and flank." Thompson v. State, 25 App. 161, 7 S. W. 589.

On a trial for giving away liquor on election day the minutes of the commission's court showing the order for the election is admissible in evidence. Borches v. State, 33 App. 96, 25 S. W. 423.

An ordinance of a city or town may be proved by introducing in evidence a book purporting to be the ordinances of such city or town signed by the mayor of such city or town and attested by the secretary therefor. Stark v. State, 28 App. 235, 42 S. W. 379.

The fact that the assessment as made on a regular assessment blank was not signed and sworn to by the party making the assessment does not render it inadmissible if the officer identifying it as the original assessment made by the party. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 49.

In a trial for keeping a disorderly house where intoxicating liquors were sold, the county attorney's testimony, and an examined copy of the internal revenue collector's records as proved by his testimony, were properly admitted. Navy v. State, 62 App. 492, 128 S. W. 129.

In a prosecution for a violation of the local option law, the records of the commissioners' court were properly introduced in evidence to prove that prohibition was in force in the county, though such records were not transcribed by the judge nor the commissioners, as they became originals when transcribed by the clerk and signed and approved by the judge and commissioners. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 188.

In a prosecution for unlawfully engaging in the business of selling intoxicants in dry territory, the books of an express company showing the shipments of liquors to accused were admissible in evidence, having been properly identified, and the book shown to have been correctly made, and bearing a receipt for items therein being shown. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 571.

In a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of selling patent and other medicines without a license, orders of the county court levying an occupation tax covering the period during which defendant was engaged in pursing that occupation were admissible. Shed v. State. 70 App. 10, 155 S. W. 534.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, the putting in force the prohibition within the territory may be proved either by the minute book, where the orders are entered in the minutes of the commissioners' court, or by properly certified copies thereof. Howard v. State, 72 App. 624, 163 S. W. 429.

122. Judicial proceedings and records.—A transcript of the proceedings in justice court properly certified is admissible in habeas corpus trial. Ex parte Ambrose, 32 App. 485, 24 S. W. 291.

On trial for murder a petition for injunction, filed by defendant against deceased and others, and the order and writ were held competent to show animus of the parties. Turner v. State, 33 App. 168, 25 S. W. 665.

In a prosecution for homicide, the subpoena issued for deceased as a witness in a prosecution of defendant for cattle theft and the indictment of defendant in such prosecution were admissible on the question of motive. Canon v. State, 59 App. 306, 128 S. W. 141.

In a trial for killing a sheriff who attempted to arrest accused, the warrant for such arrest was properly admitted in evidence, regardless of any defects therein. Condon v. State, 63 App. 405, 338 S. W. 594.

In a trial for perjury in an action by defendant's former wife to vacate a divorce obtained by him, and for a divorce, the wife's petition therein, the answer thereto, and the decree obtained by defendant in his action were admissible to show the issues in the wife's action. Spearman v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 515, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243.

In a prosecution for perjury consisting of defendant's testimony in a prior prosecution against him for assault on J., it was proper for the state to introduce the indictment against defendant in such prosecution. Miles v. State, 72 App. 493, 165 S. W. 587.

In a prosecution for perjury for giving false testimony against prosecutor upon an examining trial, the complaint was admissible, as a matter of inducement, and the warrant of arrest, with the return thereon, to show that the examining court had jurisdiction over the prosecutor. Waddle v. State, 73 App. 501, 165 S. W. 591.

In the trial of appellant for arson, it was in proof that he had procured insurance on his stock to a much larger amount than its value when burned, and a statute was hired by the appellant to keep the stock, and did set it on fire, and that the appellant, previous to the fire, told him that he intended to swindle the insurance company, and that he was fixing his books for that purpose, and had them nearly ready. Over defendant's objections the state was permitted to produce an account-book, and to prove that it was a book used by defendant in his business, and that certain entries therein were in his handwriting, and was then allowed to prove by an expert bookkeeper the meaning of these entries and ambiguous. The objections were sustained, but whether the purpose nor the date of the entries was proved, and that the entries themselves were irrelevant. Held, that in view of the other evidence there was no error in overruling the objections and admitting the entries. Bluman v. State, 33 App. 48, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 78.
In a trial for keeping a disorderly house, where intoxicants were unlawfully sold, receipts were admissible to show receipt of intoxicants by him. Novy v. State, 62 App. 492, 135 S. W. 129.

Where the information alleged that a certain company was the proprietor of a place of public amusement, a theater, and that the defendant was the agent and employee, and as such agent and employee did as such generally, such proof to be opened, such place of public amusement on Sunday, tickets and programs of the theater for certain dates, including the Sunday in question, were admissible to prove the allegations of ownership and agency. Gould v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 172.

Medical books were not admissible in evidence in a homicide case to show that catgut was not a proper thread used for sewing up wounds. Ward v. State, 70 App. 293, 159 S. W. 272.

Where, on a trial for bigamy, the proprietor of a hotel identified accused as the person who stopped at her hotel, and also identified accused's first wife as the woman who was there with accused, and testified that accused informed her that the woman was his wife, a leaf out of the register of the hotel, showing that accused had registered there with his wife, was admissible. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 43.

Where accused went to a hotel in the place where decedent resided, and having registered under an assumed name, and been assigned a room, was on the lookout for decedent until she met and shot him, and thereafter the name under which she registered was erased, the register was admissible in evidence, as against an objection that it was calculated to prejudice accused's rights, and to show that she was connected with the murder. Latham v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 797.

124. Maps and photographs.—A map or plat of a town in which the homicide occurred made by the county surveyor and testified by him to be correct is competent evidence. Rodríguez v. State, 32 App. 259, 22 S. W. 974.

When it was found that it was not error to admit in evidence photographs taken at the scene of the homicide the morning thereafter, showing the position of the body, the buggy in which it was found, and the environments. Sanchez v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 124.

Where, in a prosecution for cattle theft, the state proved before introducing in evidence a map showing the pasture of the alleged owner, together with the gates, etc., that it was approximately correct, the map was properly admitted in evidence and used by witnesses; it not being necessary to show that it was absolutely correct. Reynolds v. State, 71 App. 494, 160 S. W. 362.

Where a civil engineer drew a map or plat which was shown to be substantially correct, it was properly admissible to show the situation of the place of the homicide, though not drawn to a scale, as against an objection that it was misleading. Bullock v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 196.

A county map, made by the land office, is properly received in evidence, though it had been torn in half and put together again. Tore v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 522.

125. Authentication and proof.—See as to “Foreign laws,” notes to Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 3092, 3093.

For the manner of proving the laws of an Indian nation, see Crowell v. State, 16 App. 57.

Revised Statutes 1911, art. 4304 (same article in Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914) requires the secretary of state to keep a fair register of all the official acts of the governor, which is tantamount to requiring that he shall keep a record of all official acts of the governor, and certified copies from such registry are admissible evidence against accused. Alibat v. State, 18 App. 495, 51 Am. Rep. 319.

Records are proved by their production in court, or by exemplified or certified copies thereof. Elsner v. State, 22 App. 687, 3 S. W. 474.

Merely showing that one received a letter through the mail without showing who signed it or was authorized to sign does not make the letter admissible. Templeton v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 831.

In the trial of one for a violation of the Sunday law by keeping a theater open as agent for an amusement company, the articles of incorporation of the amusement company together with an application for a permit for the company to do business in the state, and a copy of the permit, all properly certified to by the Secretary of State, were admissible in evidence. Gould v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 172.

Where an entry of date of birth is made in a family Bible at or about the time of birth, and this fact is proven, the entry is admissible to prove the date of birth, but when the father is living and in attendance in court, and the entry is shown to be in his handwriting, he must be called to testify that the entry was made contemporaneous with the event. Bigelow v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1044.

In a prosecution for forging an express order, the express agent may testify as to entries made by his assistant where they were kept under his direction and from which Cheesbourge v. State, 70 App. 812, 157 S. W. 77.

Where a witness testified that a marriage license offered in evidence on a trial for bigamy was the original license issued by the clerk, and that the witness was deputy clerk, and knew the signature on the license to be genuine, the license under the seal of the clerk was duly received in evidence though not filed with the papers in the case. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 43.

In a prosecution for selling liquor, the sheet showing the paying of an internal revenue liquor tax by defendant was not admissible, unless properly proven by an examined copy or otherwise. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 282.

126. Compelling production.—On trial for keeping a "Blind Tiger," where defendant's counsel had obtained possession of defendant's a revenue license which had been brought into court as evidence, the court had the power, and correctly caused counsel to return such license into court. Segars v. State, 35 App. 445, 31 S. W. 570.

127. — Exclusion of parcel evidence.—In a trial for keeping a disorderly house, evidence held admissible to show the meaning of abbreviations, such as "Brs. liquor," "cs. liquor," "Cs. whisky," etc., in freight bills and receipts covering consignments to accused. Novy v. State, 62 App. 492, 138 S. W. 183.

128. Opinion evidence in general.—For decisions as to proof of "Handwriting" by experts, see art. 814.

Opinions of witnesses are not, as a general rule, admissible in evidence; but witnesses must be confined to a statement of facts, and it is the province of the jury to deduce from the facts detailed in evidence the conclusion which should be deduced therefrom. Where the jury are as competent as any other persons to deduce the proper conclusions from a given state of facts, the opinions even of experts are not admissible in evidence as to the conclusion or inference to be drawn from them. Camper v. State, 23 Tex. 231; Campbell v. State, 10 App. 566; Lambkin v. State, 12 App. 811; Kohlenschlag v. State, 23 App. 264, 4 S. W. 588.

The father of the defendant who has testified to an alibi, can not be compelled to give his opinion as to the guilt of the defendant. Dever v. State, 37 App. 396, 39 S. W. 1671.

A witness may not testify as to his opinion about matters of which he has no actual knowledge. Morgan v. State, 62 App. 120, 138 S. W. 1065.

Opinions as to who, under given facts, had possession of potatoes are inadmissible; and an opinion by a physician that the accused was not in the locality at a particular time, is not admissible. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 643.

129. Facts or conclusions.—Witness's opinion from experiments made on the scene is admissible as being short hand rendering of the facts, that is, as if the facts themselves were speaking. Martin v. State, 40 App. 660, 51 S. W. 912.

In a prosecution for burglary by shooting into a house with intent to injure a person, witness testified that just prior to the time he had had an altercation with accused's wife, in which she was the aggressor, which she denied on the stand. A witness for the state on cross-examination testified that he witnessed the occurrence, and that he did not see a certain witness of accused present, a boy eight years old, who had testified that he was present and had, heard prosecuting witness call accused's wife certain insulting names and had seen him slap her, etc. Held, that it was not error to exclude a question whether, if the boy said he was there, witness would dispute it, as it called for the witness' opinion. Bailey v. State, 58 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 126 S. W. 548.

Where a witness had testified that she heard the cries of a woman or girl and also the sound of a man's voice which seemed to be located in a flat of bushes across the road from her house, that she had heard accused's voice a number of times and had heard the man's voice distinctly, she could testify that she recognized the man's voice at the time as the voice of accused, but that she might have been mistaken as to the identity; such testimony not being an opinion but a statement of a fact giving the grounds upon which she alleged her knowledge. Liles v. State, 62 App. 22, 125 S. W. 1177.

In a prosecution for disturbing the peace, complainant was not entitled to testify that the conduct of accused in fact disturbed her. Snodgrass v. State, 61 App. 253, 125 S. W. 57.

A witness on his direct examination testified that accused was proprietor of a hotel and on cross-examination testified that he had never lived at the hotel; had never had a room there, but had eaten there; that he knew that accused was proprietor, because he looked after the interests of the hotel; that he had seen him acting as if he was the proprietor; that he had seen numerous children there; and that sometimes his boys were on watch at night. The witness finally admitted that he did not know whether accused was actually proprietor, and said that his testimony was a conclusion. Held that this was not opinion evidence. Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 125 S. W. 759.

Under Pen. Code, art. 608, requiring every shipper of intoxicating liquors to a point within prohibition territory to place on the package the names of the consignor and consignee, and the words "intoxicating liquors," evidence in a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of selling liquors in prohibition territory by a driver of an express wagon that he hauled for accused packages marked intoxicating liquors from the express office to the place where accused did business was not objectionable as opinion evidence because the witness had no personal knowledge of the contents of the packages. Stephens v. State, 65 App. 382, 129 S. W. 1141.

In a prosecution for burglary, the wife of the person named in the indictment as the owner of the house entered was asked whether or not she had ever given the defendant permission to come into the house whenever he wanted to. Held, that the question was not objectionable as calling for a conclusion of the witness. McKinney v. State, 63 App. 476, 140 S. W. 341.

In a trial for murder, defendant asked a witness for the state, "If you had then thought that he (defendant) intended to shoot you, you would not have stayed there and waited for anything further," to which the witness answered, "No, sir." Held, that the exclusion of the testimony was not erroneous, since it was not admissible to prove what the witness would have done under other circumstances. Lyles v. State, 64 App. 621, 143 S. W. 592.

A question to a witness whether a certain theater was a place of public amusement does not call for the opinion of the witness, but for a fact. Oliver v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 604. 456
In a prosecution for seduction, testimony by the prosecutrix that she was encouraged to marry accused is to a fact and not objectionable as an opinion. Knight v. State, 64 App. 561, 144 S. W. 967.

Where a witness testified that deceased, when shot, was facing accused, a question as to how the shot could have gone as it did if he was facing accused was not objectionable as calling for a conclusion. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 763.

In a trial for burglary of a railroad car, testimony by a local agent of the railroad company that the car was in his custody was not objectionable as constituting a conclusion, even if the company had written rules bearing on the custody of cars. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 110.

Where a witness testified that a scalpel which made a screen door fit closely was a kitchen butter knife and that the knife inch could have been lifted with a penknife his testimony, "that he figured" whoever entered the house could have probably gotten in that way, was a matter of opinion and should have been excluded upon proper objection. Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 899.

In a homicide case, an answer to a question, "Did it appear to you that some one had been riding on the train and had fallen on the track in between the trucks?" would be but the deduction of the witness, and was properly excluded. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 595.

In a prosecution for incest with a stepdaughter, that a third person told accused that another might be the father of the child is inadmissible. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 578.

Testimony that a wound in the back of deceased could not have been made with the knife found near, in connection with the act of the witness in taking the knife and finding it so broad that it could not enter the wound, was a statement of a fact, and not an expression of an opinion. Espinosa v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 298.

Where all witnesses agreed that deceased called accused a "damn liar," and accused claimed that much worse epithets were used, the exclusion of a question to a young lady present at the killing as to whether deceased's language was profane was not error; for persons differ as to what is profanity. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 733.

In a prosecution for allowing a disorderly house to be kept on defendant's premises, testimony of one who had watched the house as to what he heard from outside a room in the house held not objectionable as opinion evidence, but admissible as testimony of the facts within the witness' knowledge. Davidson v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1637.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that a railroad train ran close to the spot where the body of deceased was found, that there were not obstructions between such spot and the trainway, and that a person of ordinary height, passing along such trainway, could easily have seen the dead body if it had been there, was not inadmissible, as calling for an opinion. Satterwhite v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 563.

130. — Evidence as to Intent, belief, or knowledge.—When a witness was present at an affray, and seized the arm of the assaulted party, it was held competent for the defendant to ask him why he seized the arm of such party. Thomas v. State, 49 Tex. 36.

The injured party may testify that he surrendered the property because he believed he would be shot if he did not. Dill v. State, 6 App. 113.

The fact that defendant had talked with witness the evening before the homicide and that witness believed there would be trouble and left to keep from seeing it is inadmissible, it being merely opinion evidence. Wilson v. State, 37 App. 64, 38 S. W. 610.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence of prosecutrix's mother that she discovered nothing while defendant boarded at her house that aroused her suspicions of intimacy between prosecutrix and accused except that after accused left the house witness found two letters addressed to the prosecutrix in defendant's handwriting which aroused his suspicions, which letters were not introduced in evidence, was objectionable as a conclusion of the witness. Rowan v. State, 57 App. 625, 124 S. W. 665, 156 Am. St. Rep. 1006.

Testimony that witness and her husband were the only persons who knew that there was money in the house alleged to have been burglarized is objectionable as a conclusion of the witness. Winkler v. State, 58 App. 564, 126 S. W. 1124.

In a rape prosecution, a question to a witness as to whether, when he talked with officers about the case with the knowledge he had thereof, he did not believe the guilty party to be either than accused, and on what he based his opinion, was properly excluded as calling for opinion evidence. Lemons v. State, 50 App. 239, 128 S. W. 416.

A statement of a witness that accused had determined to kill deceased is inadmissible, as a conclusion of the witness. Burnam v. State, 61 App. 51, 133 S. W. 1045.

In a prosecution for forgery, a question whether a witness believed that the defendant intended to defraud him when he drew certain checks was properly refused as calling for an opinion. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 178.

Art. 783

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

(Title 8)

Where a witness for accused testified to threats by decedent against accused, questioned as to whether he had not stated on the day of the trial that he did not know anything about the case, and as to whether the witness knew why accused was waiting at deceased's house; he was crying, and said his wife had just told him accused told her that deceased told him accused was guilty, and was glad his wife was dead. Held, that a further question as to whether the witness knew why accused was waiting at deceased's house was improperly excluded on the objection that it called for an opinion of the witness, where the witness answered that he was informed that he was to take a train to go to L., where his wife was dead. Maclin v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 551.

Where in a murder trial, accused's wife's brother testified to facts tending to show that accused, in talking to him of infidelity of some women, referred to accused's wife, it was not error to refuse to permit witness to state that he inferred that appellant was talking about his wife. Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 455.

In a prosecution for assault to murder, it was not error to refuse to allow the prosecuting witness to answer a question whether she had not told a certain person just after the assault that she did not believe defendant aimed to hurt her, since it would be but a conclusion. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 128.

In a prosecution for assault to kill, a statement by the prosecuting witness that she did not believe that defendant intended to hurt her was a mere expression of opinion. Russell v. State, 71 App. 56, 158 S. W. 516.

Where an electrical engineer showed that he possessed sufficient information to give an opinion, and also testified that he had taught the persons later charged with arson that the effect of cutting the electric light wire would be to put out the lights, it was not error to allow him to testify that those charged with the crime would know the effect of cutting the wires. Anderson v. State, 71 App. 27, 159 S. W. 547.

On a trial for adultery and fornication with W., testimony that a witness talked with her on one occasion, and that a few days later accused shook his finger at him and said, "Don't do that any more," without further explanation, was admissible; but the witness' further testimony that he suspected accused referred to his talk with W. should have been excluded. Koger v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 577.

131. Nature, condition, relation and identity of things. — Witnesses may give their opinion as to whether the stick shown was the stick with which the offense was committed. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 352, 38 S. W. 571.

Non-expert may testify to relative position of bullet wounds. Bulls v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 801.

Where the defense was self-defense, and accused claimed that decedent was reaching to his right hip pocket for a gun when accused fired, a witness who was present at the inquest, where the clothing was stripped from decedent's body, and who placed the right hand of decedent upon his right hip, could testify that the wound in the body was when the right hand was so placed, in a direct line with the wound in the right forearm, and a straight line entering the wound in the arm, entering the bullet entered, and the mark of the gun, and the bullet, have struck and entered the wound in the body though the witness was unable to testify to the precise location of the wounds in the arm or in the body; such testimony not being a mere opinion of the witness, but the statement of fact vital to the case. Cusen v. State, 57 App. 258, 102 S. W. 57.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, testimony by a witness that defendant had a pistol, that he believed it to be a pistol, that it looked like a pistol, that he might be mistaken, but to the best of his knowledge and belief it was a pistol, that he knew a pistol when he saw one, and that he would give his oath that it was absolutely a pistol, was not objectionable as being opinion testimony. Holt v. State, 58 App. 265, 125 S. W. 513.

Testimony that an attempt had been made to wipe the blood from the ax with which the killing was done was not opinion testimony, but merely a shorthand statement of facts, and was admissible. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 32 S. W. 345.

Witnesses, who testified that they had a thorough knowledge of the kind of hair they called "negro hair," could testify that the hair found on the ax with which decedent, a negro, was supposed to have been killed was negro hair. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 32 S. W. 345, Ann. Cas. 1812C, 126.

In a prosecution for theft of clothing, identifying the pants, returned to the store by the sheriff, by comparing the cost marks and stock numbers on the pants with those on the coats, and to the effect that the pants matched the coats, was not objectionable as opinion evidence. Williams v. State, 63 App. 567, 140 S. W. 447.

In a prosecution for homicide, where deceased had been shot through a window, a witness may state that deceased could have been shot from a certain designated position, and it is a mere shorthand rendition of the facts detailed by the witness, and not a statement of an opinion. Christie v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 541.

The testimony of a witness, who had measured tracks and the shoes of accused that they were of the same length, was a statement of fact and admissible to connect accused with the crime charged. Wilson v. State, 70 App. 204, 106 S. W. 294.

In a prosecution for burglary and the larceny of oats, a question asked the own-of the stolen property how the oats in the bin of defendant's father contrasted with his own does not call for a conclusion, and is proper whether the defendant was present at the time the owner made the examination of the oats or not. Wilson v. State, 71 App. 330, 158 S. W. 1114.

132. Evidence as to tracks and stains.—It has been held competent for a witness to state his opinion, that certain blood spots appeared to him to have been made with a band. Richardson v. State, 7 App. 486.

Evidence that certain shoes of the accused would have made such tracks as the owner of the property had described to the witness, is clearly hearsay, but the opinion of the witness, and inadmissible. Bluit v. State, 12 App. 39, 41 Am. Rep. 656.

In a trial for murder, a state's witness having described the peculiarity of a certain track seen by him at the place of the homicide, it was held competent for him also to testify, that at the examining trial of defendant and others charged with the murder, he saw on the foot of one of the defendant's alleged accomplices, a boot which would have made such a track as he had described. Such testimony tended to throw light upon the transaction. Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593.

In a prosecution for assault to rape, testimony of a party, who went to the place of the alleged assault the next morning, that he saw where the parties had sat down or wallowed on the ground, was objectionable, being a conclusion of the witness, and not a statement of fact. Liles v. State, 33 App. 310, 125 S. W. 221.

Testimony that witness did not know how long the tracks around the house in which the killing occurred were in inches, that it was a pretty good sized shoe and was longer than the ordinary, larger than a No. 8 shoe, was not objectionable as being witness' opinion, being more in the nature of a shorthand rendition of facts. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 132 S. W. 345.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, testimony of a witness who had stated that the night before he had seen a man and woman or girl ride by the house on a black mule and had followed up the tracks the next morning, and that he had seen where the mule had stopped at a certain place in a mesquite flat, because it was tramped down and he could see the male's tracks, that he saw the tracks of a girl or small woman and a man's tracks at such place, and that there was a place on the ground where the grass had been mashed down over a space of two or three feet, was not inadmissible as evidence of opinion, but was admissible as a mere recitation of facts. Liles v. State, 62 App. 52, 135 S. W. 1177.

Where a prosecution for a theft of United States notes was sought to be sustained by circumstantial evidence, and it was shown that defendant had cut his hand the night the property was stolen, evidence that, when the money was recovered, a spot which a witness thought was blood and which were not on the bills before they were stolen, was admissible as based on common knowledge and not mere opinion. Diaz v. State, 62 App. 317, 137 S. W. 377.

A witness was properly permitted to testify whether tracks he discovered were made by the heels of a boot he made for accused, who had told him to describe the detail as to why he knew the tracks were so made. Newton v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 638.

In a murder trial, witnesses were properly permitted to testify that they trailed the tracks of two men from a point near where the homicide was committed to another place, that they could tell the difference between tracks made by a person walking and one running, in that the tracks of the latter are farther apart, and the toe of the shoe cuts deeper, etc.; the witnesses having stated that they had experience in trailing men, and knew the facts testified to by observation and experience. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 760, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

Testimony of one, after testifying in what direction, as shown by tracks, deceased was traveling near a tree, that this orange tree was on the left side of a man, riding, towards the tree was not objectionable as an opinion; it being a fact within his knowledge. Strickland v. State, 71 App. 552, 161 S. W. 110.

People not experts were properly permitted to testify that on the next day and for a few days after the killing they went to the home of deceased, and found blood at various places on the ground, the side of the house, and floor thereof. Belcher v. State, 71 App. 646, 161 S. W. 459.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, where there was evidence that defendant was riding a certain horse, that he, with others, buried the four quarters and returned with the hind quarters, that the hide was buried after the brand was cut out and had been found with the brand cut out, and that the owner of the animal said it to be the hide of the的意见, that witness knew defendant's horse and the kind of tracks he made and had traced the tracks, which corresponded to the route traveled, was admissible not as an opinion and conclusion, but as the statement of fact. Elmore v. State, 72 App. 226, 162 S. W. 517.

On a trial for homicide in which it appeared that deceased ran to a place in a hall, and that the pistol with which he was killed was found in an adjoining room, the testimony of a witness that he discovered blood prints on the door leading to such room, that the blood was fresh on the door when he made the discovery the day deceased was killed or the following morning, that accused had a defective thumb, that it looked to have been mashed, was as broad again at the end as it should be, and ran to a point on the right-hand side, and that the blood print on the board showed that the point of the thumb was extra large and a defective thumb on the right-hand side like he described it, was properly admitted, as the witness did not express his opinion, but testified to facts observed by him. S. v. Brown, 134 S. W. 589.

133. Evidence as to manner, appearance and conduct.—A witness’ opinion that a woman “looks like a white woman” is not admissible. Moore v. State, 7 App. 668.

In a prosecution for seduction the mother should not be allowed to testify that from her attentions to her daughter she regarded defendant as her future son-in-law. Snead v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 366.

Statement by a witness that immediately after the homicide a certain person who was with defendant was watching witness was not the expression of an opinion. Trotter v. State, 37 App. 468, 36 S. W. 278.

On trial for an assault with intent to rape, it was not error to allow the prosecutor to testify that she saw the negro who assaulted her before she got even with him and that he was stooping down by the fence like he was at work on it. Ox­sine v. State, 38 App. 499, 43 S. W. 325.

Witness should not be permitted to state that from the way deceased talked she seemed to be uneasy or to give his opinion that from the pale and haggard look of defendant he was troubled some way or another. Spangler v. State, 41 App. 424, 55 S. W. 327.

The testimony of a witness that she had seen nothing in the conduct of a female, while at the dwelling of the witness, indicating that she was not a virtuous woman, was objectionable, as the conclusion of the witness based on facts not stated. Richmond v. State, 58 App. 435, 126 S. W. 596, 137 Am. St. Rep. 973.

As to a prosecution for homicide, a witness may testify that accused appeared excited. Cameron v. State, 59 App. 298, 125 S. W. 141.

State could ask as to prosecutor’s demeanor after the offense as to being calm, excited, or otherwise, and witness could state that prosecutor was a little excited and trembling and began to cry while talking. Holland v. State, 60 App. 117, 151 S. W. 563.

It was proper to permit a witness to testify that at the time defendant was exhibiting to witness certain weapons he seemed to be very quiet, and that he was sober; the testimony not being a conclusion. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 154 S. W. 705.

Where the state claimed that accused killed his son within 20 or 30 minutes after the defendant joined his mother in making affidavits against accused in an injunction in a divorce suit brought by the mother, evidence of witnesses who observed accused just before the killing that he spoke in an angry manner and looked mad, that his voice trembled, and his face was red and flushed, that he was much excited and seemed to be in a hurry, was admissible. Powdrill v. State, 62 App. 442, 135 S. W. 114.

In a murder trial, testimony that decedent had “his hands in his front pockets all the time” was not inadmissible as a statement of witness’ conclusion, because it was seen, and not that the blood was Auto at the time; such circumstance not affecting hard looks and not the admissibility of the testimony. Lacy v. State, 65 App. 139, 140 S. W. 461.

A witness may state bow a person appeared, though it is to some extent an opinion. Powell v. Rule (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 631.

Accused’s question to a witness whether he could testify that accused was sober enough on a particular occasion to comprehend what was going on was properly excluded on objection that it called for an opinion, though it was offered to show that he was drunk on the particular occasion that he could not know what occurred, where the witness was permitted to testify fully in regard to accused’s drinking, and stated that he did not know whether accused was drunk or not. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 595.

Testimony, on a trial for adultery, that accused and a woman “lived together” was not objectionable as a conclusion, especially where the witness had stated the facts showing that they lived together. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 568.

134. Evidence as to meaning of words and acts.—It is error to allow witness to state what he understood language of defendant to mean. This is a conclusion which the jury can draw from the language itself. Martin v. State, 42 App. 114, 58 S. W. 112.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder, testimony of prosecutor that he understood from accused’s manner in a prior difficulty between them that accused meant, in warning prosecutor not to say anything against him, that if he did a personal encounter would result, was inadmissible, being the opinion or inference of the prosecutor. Doughty v. State, 58 App. 452, 126 S. W. 873.

Evidence that witness could not exactly understand the language defendant used when he first shot at deceased, but understood him to say something like, “I have got you,” that witness could not say the exact language, but understood it that way, was not objectionable for indefiniteness. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 37, 153 S. W. 857.

A witness should not be permitted to testify to his understanding from what another told him. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 158 S. W. 615.

In a witness by a “understood” another person, who, with the witness, was chased off of premises claimed by deceased to mean the pistol had by the deceased at his house when he said “it was the ugliest, meanest, ester I ever saw,” was a mere opinion of the witness and inadmissible. Salmon v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1023.

In a homicide case, the court did not err in refusing to permit a witness to testify that he understood deceased to be speaking of the defendant, when he made some remark that there was somebody who was not a gentleman; it being a mere opinion. Salmon v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1923.

The sustaining of an objection to a question whether deceased, at the time he arose from his chair just before he was shot, was commanding or demanding acquiescence, was error. The court informed counsel that they could question the witness as to what deceased said. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 733.

135. Questions of law.—Witness will not be permitted to state that he had informed a charge of robbery made by one party against another, and found it to be without evidence to support it. Such a statement is a mere conclusion of the witness. Tillery v. State, 24 App. 251, 5 S. W. 842, 5 Am. St. Rep. 882.

There, in a prosecution for robbery, the sheriff who made the arrest testified that the person, alleged to have been robbed, charged accused to his face of getting his money, a question to witness whether he did not know that it was material whether accused denied the accusation was properly excluded, as calling for witness' opinion as a question of law. Chinnery v. State, 164 S. W. 458.

In a prosecution for rape on a female alleged to have been under the age of consent, defendant's statement to a witness after he had obtained a new trial from his first conviction that he was "really guilty," but was out on bond, having gotten a new trial to to the witness' conclusion but was admissible as an admission. Rowan v. State, 57 App. 625, 124 S. W. 665, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1059.

In a prosecution for theft, a question, asked of the prosecuting witness, as to whether he and his son were partners in the mercantile business from which the goods were taken, or whether the goods belonged to the witness individually, was not objectionable as calling for the conclusion of the witness. Hatfield v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 236.

Admissibility of opinions of non-experts.—An exception to the general rule excluding the opinions of witnesses obtains where the sanity of a party is in issue. In such case the opinions of witnesses, even though not experts, are admissible. In the decisions upon this subject collated in C. C. O., 124 S. W. 914. Where the value of property is an issue, the opinions of witnesses acquainted with the property, or with like property, are admissible evidence. Sadder v. State, 20 App. 135; Martinez v. State, 16 App. 132.

In a prosecution for adultery it was held, that the opinion of witnesses that a certain woman was the wife of the defendant, was not competent evidence. Webb v. State, 24 App. 161, 5 S. W. 651.

The exception also obtains where, in case of nonage, the discretion of the defendant is an issue. Carr v. State, 24 App. 562, 7 S. W. 328, 5 Am. St. Rep. 903.

In a prosecution for the theft of belting from a gin, a witness, who is an experienced gin man, may testify to the value of the belting when new and its value at the time of sale. McGee v. State, 155 S. W. 495.

Where it was claimed that accused falsely testified as to his age, testimony by witnesses as to their opinion of the age of accused is admissible when based on their acquaintance with him, and his size, weight, and appearance. Foulier v. State, 19 App. 120, 157 S. W. 16.

On a trial for gambling, the testimony of a witness that he was certain accused and others were gambling, that they acted like it, or at least that that was his opinion, but that he did not see any hand played by accused nor any money bet, should have been excluded; since, while the witness could state what was done by the parties, he could not give his opinion or conclusion from their acts. Chism v. State, 71 App. 389, 159 S. W. 1155.

137. Province of jury.—In a prosecution for using loud and vociferous, obscene, vulgar, and indecent language, cursing, etc., the prosecuting witness, over defendant's objection, was asked by the state if the imputed language was used in a manner calculated to disturb his family, and he answered in the affirmative. Held error. The witness could have testified to the words used, the manner of their use, the tone of voice, etc., leaving it to the jury, whose province it was, to decide whether or not they were calculated to disturb the inhabitants of the house. Lumbkin v. State, 12 App. 341.

It is competent, on a trial for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, for a witness to testify to the physical marks of age of the alleged minor, but it is not competent for the witness to express his opinion as to how such physical marks of age would impress others. Whether or not the accused knew the purchaser of the liquor to be a minor was a question for the jury to solve. Walker v. State, 26 App. 448, 8 S. W. 611.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, witness cannot give an opinion as to how long it would take to overcome a house's reputation as being disorderly, that being a question for the jury to determine. Thompson v. State, 61 App. 250, 134 S. W. 369.

138. Impressions from collective facts.—Another exception to the general rule is, where the facts from which the opinion proceeds as an effect are of a character that they can not be so detailed and presented to the minds of a jury as to enable them to sit down and pass a judgment; whenever a condition of things is such that it can not be reproduced and made palpable in the concrete to the jury, or when language is not adequate to such realization, then witness may describe by its effects upon his mind, even though such effect be opinion. Powers v. State, 22 App. 45, 5 S. W. 163; Richardson v. State, 7 App. 486; Hardin v. State, 8 App. 653; Allen v. State, Id. 67; Dill v. State, 6 App. 113; Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 331.

It is competent for a witness, in detailing the facts of a transaction, to state the effect they made upon his mind at the time, provided such impressions be purely conjectural or too remote. See the opinion for the "imperception of the mind."
prescriptions" of a witness admitted as evidence held under the above rule to be purely conjectural; whereas the trial court erred in refusing to exclude them. Irvine v. State, 26 App. 37, 9 S. W. 56.

It is not error to refuse to allow witness to state his impressions from acts of deceased at time of the homicide. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 812.

2. In a prosecution for burglary, a witness was asked the position of the door of the house in which deceased was standing when he was shot, and answered that he could not give a definite answer, but could only judge from the range of the ball and from the way it hit the door, his answer was properly excluded as an opinion deduced from physical facts which could have been detailed to the jury. Barnes v. State, 61 App. 133, 3 S. W. 887.

139. — Identity of persons and things.—On a trial for murder a witness testified that in his judgment and belief the defendant was one of the parties who came to his house on the night before the homicide to borrow a pistol; held, admissible, the fact that the witness was not certain as to the identity of the defendant goes only to the weight of the testimony and not to its admissibility. Tate v. State, 35 App. 231, 33 S. W. 121.

In a prosecution for disturbing religious worship, a witness could testify that in his opinion it was accused's face at the church window, and that in his opinion the noise came from that window; the witness not knowing accused, but having testified that the prisoner was the same person he saw at the window. Buzan v. State, 59 App. 215, 126 S. W. 388.

In a prosecution for burglary of a bank, testimony of witnesses as to seeing three men on the railroad track north of the town where the burglary occurred approaching the town on the evening before, and as to their resemblance to the three persons accused of the burglary, one of whom was the defendant, was admissible. Darden v. State, 60 App. 195, 133 S. W. 296.

In a prosecution for taking up and using a horse without consent of the owner, evidence that a witness saw two parties in a buggy, and that from their appearance, size, form, etc., he was his opinion that one of them was the defendant, was admissible. Sparkman v. State, 61 App. 429, 135 S. W. 44.

Nonexpert opinions may be given as to the identity of persons and objects. Harris v. State, 62 App. 235, 137 S. W. 373.

A witness having fully described a test worn by decedent could testify that according to his "best judgment" it was the same one in evidence. Harris v. State, 62 App. 235, 137 S. W. 373.

A witness who was asked in a theft prosecution whether any one stayed at her house the night before the theft could testify whether the grip carried by one of the parties looked like the grip showed to witness which belonged to accused. Williams v. State, 61 App. 257, 140 S. W. 447.

In a prosecution for theft of cotton, a person who observed and measured tracks leading from the wagon in which the stolen cotton was found, and who observed tracks made by the defendant while such person was on his horse, and defendant was walking in front of him after his arrest a week after the first observation, cannot testify that in his opinion the tracks were similar, where there is no showing of any peculiarity in the tracks made, or that the witness measured the last tracks made. Ballenger v. State, 61 App. 67, 141 S. W. 9.

In a prosecution for robbery, the opinion of the street car operator who was robbed that defendant was one of the men committing the robbery, the one who covered him with a pistol while the other got his money, was admissible; such opinion evidence being always admissible upon questions of identity. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

140. — Time.—A witness can not testify as an expert as to the length of time it would take to gather a certain number of cattle within a given range. He must state the facts, leaving the jury to determine the question of time. Tyler v. State, 11 App. 388.

On a trial for burglary, where a witness testified that accused was at his hotel at a given time, and the distance from the hotel to the residence of the prosecuting witness had been shown, it was not error to refuse to permit such witness to state whether accused could have gone from the hotel to such residence and been at the residence at the time the prosecuting witness said the entry was made; this question calling for a mere opinion of the witness. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 785.

A witness, who stated the distance from her home to the store burglarized and the time elapsing after accused had left her at her home until shots were fired, could not give her opinion as to whether accused could have reached the store after leaving her, but that question was for the jury. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 897.

141. — Cause and effect.—It is not permissible to ask a witness his opinion as to the danger likely to follow the use of a weapon in a particular mode. Thomas v. State, 49 Tex. 26.

When a claimed result becomes so remote that conclusion and deduction are necessary to connect it with a cause, a non-expert witness can only state physical facts, leaving the conclusions to be drawn by a jury. See this case for an illustration of rule: Nuvarro v. State, 24 App. 578, 6 S. W. 542.

A refusal to permit a witness in a criminal cause to testify as to what would be the probable effect on a negro or person of the lower classes of threatening, coaxing, intimidating, or cursing to induce or impel the making of a confession was properly refused, such witness was not shown to have expert knowledge not possessed by an ordinary jurman. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 623.

In a prosecution for accomplice to arson, a question calling for the opinion of a witness as to the origin of the fire when he first looked out and saw it was properly excluded as calling for a conclusion. Thompson v. State, 71 App. 439, 150 S. W. 359.

142. Facts forming basis of opinion.—Sheriff cannot testify in regard to sanity of defendant without first stating the facts upon which his opinion is based. Hunt v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 264.

A witness can state facts within his knowledge and then give his opinion as to sanity or insanity based on such facts though he is not an expert, but he cannot give his opinion on a hypothetical question unless he is an expert. Canon v. State, 41 App. 467, 56 S. W. 351.

It is error to admit opinion of witness that a college is not an accredited one basing such opinion on a book purporting to contain a list of accredited medical colleges. Aldenhoven v. State, 42 App. 6, 56 S. W. 914.

An expert who knows nothing about the situation cannot give his opinion in response to a hypothetical question not founded on the testimony in the case. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1071.

143. Subjects of expert testimony.—An exception to the general rule excluding the opinions of witnesses is, that on questions of science, or skill, or trade, persons of skill in those particular departments are allowed to give their opinions in evidence. Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2307.

Expert opinion evidence is not admissible to prove the relative positions and situations of parties involved in a homicide or assault to murder. Cooper v. State, 22 Tex. 341; Thompson v. State, 29 App. 335, 17 S. W. 448; Williams v. State, 20 App. 430, 17 S. W. 1071.

The opinion of a witness not an expert, is not competent to prove the sex of a skeleton buried in a cemetery, nor should it be offered to examine the skeleton and testify as to the sex of it. Wilson v. State, 41 Tex. 321.

An expert's opinion must be limited to a matter of science, skill, trade, or the like, and is not allowable on the merits of the case, or on matters about which the jury are as competent to form a conclusion as he is. Hunt v. State, 9 App. 199; Cooper v. State, 25 Tex. 331.

A witness, who is shown to be experienced in the use and handling of fire-arms, may give his opinion, after having made an examination of a fire-arm, that it had been recently discharged. Meyers v. State, 14 App. 35.

It is impossible for a witness to be an expert at saving goods from a burning house, and his opinion as to whether goods might have been saved is inadmissible. Bluman v. State, 33 App. 48, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

A witness cannot testify from the way deceased was accustomed to handle his pistol in firing and from the character of the wound, its appearance and cause as an expert and give his opinion as to who fired first. Hardin v. State, 49 App. 208, 49 S. W. 607.

There was no error in permitting a witness who qualified himself as a pharmacist to testify as to the contents of bottles of acids and to satisfy himself by a practical test of their contents. Watson v. State, 32 App. 39, 22 S. W. 46.

An expert bookkeeper was properly permitted to testify as to the meaning of entries in defendant's books, the entries being mercantile and ambiguous. Bluman v. State, 33 App. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

A man familiar with the stock business can qualify, and as an expert give his opinion as to whether a hide was taken from a slaughtered animal or one that had died of natural death. Clay v. State, 41 App. 653, 56 S. W. 593.

An expert may testify as to how a bullet entered a person's arm, though he may not state in what relative positions the parties stood at the time of the shooting. Roquemore v. State, 63 App. 598, 126 S. W. 1129.

On trial of prosecution, it was proper to sustain an objection to a question to an expert on mental diseases as to whether accused was a fit subject for extravehicular punishment, as the death penalty, or long continued confinement. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 124 S. W. 765.

Where accused testified on a former trial, and went into the details in regard to the homicide and attendant circumstances, it was proper in a hypothetical question to an expert on mental diseases to ask him whether a man who testified to the details several months afterwards could have been so under the influence of liquor as to be temporarily insane and irresponsible. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 124 S. W. 765.

Where there was no eyewitness to the killing of deceased, except accused, and he testified to facts indicating that the killing was in self-defense, and it was material to that issue to determine whether the first shot entered under the arm of deceased, it was improper to permit a physician to testify to an opinion that the first shot was the one that entered under the arm, and that the wound on the arm was not inflicted by the same shot. Powdrell v. State, 62 App. 442, 138 S. W. 118.

A physician was properly allowed to testify in a homicide case that he arrived at the scene of the killing shortly thereafter, and that neither the attitude of the body nor the clothing indicated a struggle; the case being one of circumstantial evidence. Cooper v. State, 116 S. W. 291.

Where an undertaker was shown to be familiar with pistol shot wounds and gave reasons for his statements, the court properly permitted him to testify that, from an examination of decedent's body, he was of the opinion that the bullet entered in the back or left side of deceased's body, running to the front, and came out in front. Vines v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 727.

The question whether an ordinary article of apparel has been washed is not a subject for expert testimony. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

In the homicide case where the defendant had cut him immediately before the shooting, an answer by a qualified witness to the question.
"If a man so cut should get up and walk 15 feet and turn around, would the presence of blood have appeared on his face?" was admissible. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 304.

Defendant being accused of killing his wife by stabbing her in the neck, a question to an expert as to his conclusion as to whether the wound was inflicted purposely or accidentally in a scuffle, was properly enunciated as not on a subject of expert testimony. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 134 S. W. 550.

In a prosecution for homicide with a pistol, opinion evidence by an expert as to whether a shot had been fired and left the body of deceased is inadmissible. It is shown that the expert did not view the body until a day after the killing during which time cotton had been stuffed into the wounds thus enlarging them. Roberts v. State, 79 App. 297, 156 S. W. 651.

Where physicians were qualified and testified to an examination of a wound in defendant's arm and described the wound and its condition, their testimony as to the length of time it had been inflicted when examined was admissible. Pullen v. State, 79 App. 156, 156 S. W. 955.

A witness, who had been engaged in stock business for many years, who had before seen brands that had been burned, might testify that he had examined brands on goats, as to the condition in which he found them, and that an old brand had the appearance of being burned over, and that the brand appeared to be fresh. Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1064.

144. — Cause and effect.—The opinions of medical men or surgeons, who are shown to be experts, are admissible as to the cause of death, the nature and consequences of wounds, the causes and effects of disease, the character of instrument with which a wound was inflicted, and the character of a particular weapon, as to whether it is deadly or dangerous, Wales v. State, 230 App. 461, 135 Tex. 478. Banks v. State, Id. 152; Lovelady v. State, 14 App. 545; Shelton v. State, 24 Tex. 662.

One who has handled firearms and is familiar with them can testify as an expert as to effect of firing a pistol at a certain distance. Head v. State, 49 App. 263, 50 S. W. 352.

But not as to the manner in which an injury was inflicted. Stengais v. State, 24 App. 156, 5 S. W. 553.

An expert offered by the defense stated that he had heard the state's expert testify. The court asked witness upon a hypothetical case covering all the evidence what he thought caused the death of deceased; held, no error. Hamlin v. State, 29 App. 579, 47 S. W. 565.

It is admissible to offer opinion of witness as to instrument used in making an assault who had no other qualification as an expert than that he had been an overseer. Taylor v. State, 41 App. 149, 51 S. W. 1197.

Where, on a trial of a parent for the murder of his child, the theory of the state was that accused had whipped decedent in such a manner that it caused the brain, causing death, the court properly permitted a physician to give his opinion that the whipping weakened the vitality and lowered the resisting powers of decedent, and thereby rendered her more liable to sustain a bursting of a blood vessel in the brain. Betts v. State, 60 App. 631, 133 S. W. 201.

A physician, examining the body of a decedent and testifying in detail to the condition thereof, may give his opinion that certain instruments are such as would produce death, and that certain wounds were inflicted by such instruments. Betts v. State, 60 App. 611, 132 S. W. 252.

In a prosecution for homicide, witnesses licensed to practice medicine were competent to testify that a man shot in a part of the head where deceased was shot would not have any voluntary movement, as the bullet would produce instant paralysis of the entire physical system. Straight v. State, 62 App. 463, 138 S. W. 742.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the court properly permitted a practicing physician to testify as an expert, in answer to a hypothetical question as to the effect of a blow on the head with a given instrument, whether it was shown the assault was made. Lacoume v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 626.

Testimony of a physician of long standing, who examined the wounds of a deceased person on the morning he was found dead, as to what character of instrument was used to inflict the wounds, was properly admitted in a prosecution for murder. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 622.

In the trial of an indictment for wilfully obstructing a railroad track, a railroad engineer of experience and knowledge may testify as an expert as to whether the obstructions placed on the track were calculated to wreck a train running at the usual rate of speed. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 166.

A physician, who has been practicing for a number of years, may give his testimony as an expert as to the nature of a blow which crushed deceased's skull. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1074.

It was proper to permit a physician who made a post mortem examination of decedent to testify that the wounds on deceased's head could have been made with a 45-caliber pistol used as a club; the state having introduced in evidence such a pistol, which was shown and admitted to belong to defendant and to have been used by him on the night of the killing. Girtman v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 1008.

Witnesses who had tried to ascertain which was the fatal wound, by probing and examining the wounds, only one of which entered a vital part, after detailing the facts of such examination to the jury, might give their opinions as to which wound caused death. Espinoza v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 208.

Under such circumstances, they might also give their opinions as to the kind of instrument used in making the wounds. Espinoza v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 208.

Where medical experts examined the wounds of the prosecuting witness, they are entitled to testify that, from their experience and observation as physicians, the weapon used was calculated to produce death or serious bodily injury, though they did not see the weapon. Nesbitt v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1126.

145. Competency of experts.—An expert witness is one who is selected by the court, or by a party in a cause, on account of his knowledge or skill, to examine, estimate, and ascertain things, and make report of his opinion. To entitle a witness to a specific topic, he must have special practical acquaintance with the immediate line of inquiry. Hecock v. State, 12 App. 97.

In this case the prosecutor, not having qualified as an expert, was erroneously permitted to testify as such a witness. Navarro v. State, 21 App. 372, 6 W. 532.

One who has had experience in handling firearms and in killing hogs and cattle, and who has made frequent observations as to the appearance of bullet wounds of entry and exit, and from such experience can tell which is the wound of entry and which the wound of exit, and he testifies that the wound where the bullet enters is smaller than where it comes out, and that on entering the bullet pushes the flesh inward, and where it comes out it pushes the flesh with its ragged parts outward, is competent to testify which one of the bullet wounds on the body of decedent was the place of entry. Welch v. State, 57 App. 111, 122 S. W. 886.

Where certain witnesses testified that they were experienced stockmen and had followed the business for many years, and had had such experience as would enable them to testify to the breed and condition of the cattle on the occasion of the killing, they were competent to testify to a brand on a horse defendant was charged with having stolen, as it was originally and as to its alleged alteration. Gatlin v. State, 72 App. 516, 163 S. W. 438.

A doctor, who had practiced medicine for 27 years, had performed major and minor operations in surgery, and when attending medical school had studied surgery and physiology, was competent to testify as an expert witness regarding the effect of a bullet wound in the breast which penetrated the heart. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 300.

146. Examination of experts.—In the examination of an expert as to his opinion upon a hypothetical state of facts, it is improper practice to allow hypothetical questions having no foundation in the evidence adduced; yet it is not essential that counsel shall state to such witness the facts as they have been proved. He may assume the facts in accordance with his theory of them. Lovelady v. State, 14 App. 546; Webb v. State, 9 App. 490; Leache v. State, 22 App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 638.

An expert may be asked by either party as to the reasons on which his opinion is based, or he may, with leave of the court, give such explanation on his own account. Beyond this he can not go, though he may be examined in details to test his credibility and judgment. Leache v. State, 22 App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 638.

Court can supervise a hypothetical question so as to see that all the facts are embraced. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 561.

Either side may put a hypothetical question based upon the facts of the case—that is, such facts as are proved and the party putting the question deems proper to consider in the hypothetical question—and, if the supposed side is not satisfied, with the question as put, it may amplify the question or put it under the facts deemed proper. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 134 S. W. 705.

Where, in an incest case, a doctor testified, on cross-examination by accused, that the hymen would have been injured by penetration beyond a certain depth, it was not improper for the state to adduce, on redirect examination, that there were cases of women being impregnated without destroying the hymen. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 315.

147. Facts forming basis of opinion.—An expert's opinion must not be based upon extrajudicial information, but must be founded either upon the evidence or the expert's personal knowledge of the facts, or else be postulated upon a hypothetical state of facts. Hunt v. State, 9 App. 166; Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 331.

Medical experts can state opinion on all of the evidence if they have heard it all or upon hypothetical statement in conformity with all the evidence. If they have not heard the evidence each side can have its opinion upon any hypothesis reasonably consistent with the evidence. If meagerly presented on one side thereof it may be fully stated by the other. Morrison v. State, 49 App. 473, 51 S. W. 358.

An expert should not be allowed to testify as to his opinion based on part of the testimony of one witness and on a newspaper account. Williams v. State, 37 App. 348, 39 S. W. 657.

In a prosecution for homicide, the state claimed that, when the shot was fired by which deceased was killed, the powder burned his eyebrows. Defendant introduced a firearm expert who testified to making certain experiments and tests on dummy's lying in the same position that accused was supposed to have lain at the time he was killed, having eyebrows made of human hair, using a pistol of the same size and cartridges of the same make. Held that, the witness having qualified as an expert, it was error to refuse to permit him to testify that, according to his experiments under similar circumstances, it would be impossible at any range for the powder to burn off the eyebrow. Streight v. State, 62 App. 455, 125 S. W. 742.

In a prosecution for homicide committed by placing poison in coffee, it was permitted to testify as to his opinion as to the contents in a bottle, sealed it, and delivered the bottle and the pot to the attending physician, who delivered them to the expert. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 386.
148. Compelling expert to testify.—An expert, like any other witness, may be compelled to testify as such. Summerville v. State, 5 App. 366; 22 Am. Rep. 573.

149. Evidence on former trial or hearing.—Testimony of defendant on a former trial or hearing, see notes under art. 790.

Testimony of a witness before the grand jury cannot be used on the trial of the case. Seals v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 1006; Tightower v. State, 70 App. 48, 102 S. W. 533.

Testimony taken before a court or judge on hearing of a writ of habeas corpus, although reduced to writing and properly authenticated, is not admissible evidence against defendant on final trial. Childers v. State, 30 App. 169, 16 S. W. 406, 28 Am. St. Rep. 690.

Where accused, who was indebted upon a note, falsely uttered what purported to be a receipt for the amount of the note, and in an action upon the note testified that he had served a receipt, evidence of his testimony, given in the civil action, was admissible in a prosecution for forgery. Barber v. State, 64 App. 85, 142 S. W. 532.

On an issue of insanity in a murder trial, it was error to exclude on accused's offer testimony as to accused's sanity, given in a prior inquisition in the county court; the witness having since died. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1146.

Former testimony of an absent witness in general cannot be shown at a subsequent trial in the absence of proof that the witness was either dead, out of the state, or that his presence was prevented by defendant, except to rebut an inference that his testimony was favorable to the state, on the state proving that it had tendered him on the prior trial. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1063.

Under a plea of insanity; a certified copy of the evidence adduced on an insanity trial, where it was adjudged insane could not be received, in the absence of any showing that the witnesses were dead, beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or that for any reason their attendance could not be secured. Cooper v. State, 71 App. 489, 160 S. W. 232.

Where a witness for accused, whose evidence was material and who had testified at the former trial, was unable to be present at the second trial because of paralysis, his testimony at the former trial could be reproduced by the evidence of a person who had then heard it. Harris v. State, 71 S. W. 147.

That the testimony of accused in a former trial of the case was contained in a statement of facts in that case would not make it inadmissible. Best v. State, 72 App. 264, 164 S. W. 957.

In a prosecution for homicide, where a witness was asked if he recognized a man he saw turn and walk off, and replied that he could not tell, but that it ran in his mind that it was defendant, such testimony was inadmissible. Sweat v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 554.

150. Preliminary proof.—To justify proof of the testimony of a witness testifying on a former trial, a proper predicate must be laid by showing that the witness is out of the state at the time of the subsequent trial. Harbin v. State, 57 App. 401, 123 S. W. 613.

Shewing that a witness has permanently removed from the state is sufficient predicate for admission of his testimony at a former trial. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 1062.

Testimony by a witness that M. was living in Louisiana and not in Texas, and that he received a letter from him the day before from some place in Louisiana, was a proper predicate to authorize the reproduction of his testimony given on a former trial. Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132.

Testimony of two witnesses that H. lived in Arkansas and is now there and does not reside any more in Texas is a sufficient predicate to authorize the reproduction of his testimony on a former trial. Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132.

It is sufficient predicate for admission of testimony of a witness, given on a former trial, that he has been in a foreign country, and that he has a letter from him stating that he is employed there. Sanchez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1133.

151. Method of proof.—A court reporter was properly permitted to testify from a copy of notes taken by him at a former trial of the case, where he stated that the notes were a correct transcription of the evidence, though he had no independent recollection thereof. Smith v. State, 60 App. 295, 131 S. W. 1061; Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 132.

The state, on the second trial, may not introduce the stenographic report of the testimony of a witness on the former trial by merely shewing his appearance on the second trial, but must first show the correctness of the testimony as taken by the stenographer. Franklin v. State, 62 App. 423, 133 S. W. 112; Harris v. State, 71 App. 465, 150 S. W. 447.

Where proof of the oral testimony of a witness at a former trial is admissible, a witness who heard the testimony should be introduced to prove it, and it cannot be established by an agreed statement of facts made at the former trial. Harbin v. State, 57 App. 401, 123 S. W. 613.

It is sufficient proof of the testimony of a witness on a former trial, new incapacitated, that the witness herein be able to testify substantially to the material part of the evidence of such other witness on the former trial without giving his words verbatim. Harris v. State, 71 App. 465, 150 S. W. 447.

A case excepts to the admission of a statement of facts in a former trial of accused containing his former testimony, which bill did not show that it was not agreed by the parties that the said admitted testimony had not been agreed to as the testimony of accused on the former trial, nor showed that the witnesses were introduced who testified that the accused had given such testimony on the previous trial, and did not by any means exclude the idea that the testimony was not proven in some of the methods prescribed by law to render it admissible, was insufficient to show error. Best v. State, 72 App. 291, 164 S. W. 996.
A statement of facts in a former trial of the case containing the former testimony of accused was not inadmissible as against the objection that it was not the testimony of a witness who had heard the defendant so testify, or the objection that it consisted of facts, or the statement of facts was not in the form of question and answer as the stenographer made it, or that it was not The accused in another court may be proved by one hearing the

152. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.—The sufficiency or effect of evidence is a question for the jury ordinarily, and a verdict will not be set aside for the reason that the evidence is insufficient, unless it is clearly so. See art. 596, and notes.
Affirmative is more reliable than negative evidence, and should have more may suffice to identify the defendant as the culprit. Davis v. State, 15 App.

defendant was not entitled to an acquittal on the ground that the evidence did not

S. W. 149.

153. — Circumstantial evidence.—For decisions relating to the charge of the court in cases of circumstantial evidence, see art. 725.
To support a conviction on circumstantial evidence, each fact necessary to establish the crime, and the facts and circumstances, and the facts must be consistent with guilt but inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.
Yarbrough v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 545; Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W.
436; Rios v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 608.
Circumstantial evidence, when fully and conclusively made out, is sufficient to sustain a conviction for crime, but the circumstances must not be of a vague, indefinite, shadowy character, and the facts constituting the chain must be clearly defined and fully proved. The more there may be of them, and the longer the chain, the more complete and certain will be the conclusion. Shulty v. State, 13 Tex.
To warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, each fact necessary to the conviction sought to be established must be proven by competent evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, and all the facts necessary to such conclusion must be consistent with each other, and with the conclusion, taken together, must be of a conclusive nature, leading on the whole to a satisfactory conclusion, and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused, and no other person, committed the offense charged. The more union of a limited number of independent circumstances, each of an imperfect and incoherent character, will not justify a conviction. They must be such as to generate and justify full belief according to the standard rule of certainty. It is not sufficient that they coincide with, and render probable the guilt of the accused, but they must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis. No other conclusion but the guilt of the accused must fairly and reasonably grow out of the evidence, but the facts must be absolutely incompatible with innocence, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt.
A legal test of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence is, is it sufficient to satisfy the mind and conscience of a common man, and so convince him that he would venture to act upon the conviction produced by it, in matters of the highest importance and concern to his own interest. Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 503; Pow-109; Law v. State, 35 Tex. 37; Elizabeth v. State, 27 Tex. 229; White v. State, 36
347; Cave v. State, 41 Tex. 152; Barnes v. State, Id. 342; Roseborough v.
State, 43 Tex. 579; Black v. State, 1 App. 368; Hampton v. State, Id. 652; Rod-
239; Pharr v. State, 10 App. 488; Hunt v. State, 7 App. 215; Lovelady v. State, 11
App. 545; Scott v. State, 19 App. 325.
Circumstantial evidence may be, and often is, as strong and conclusive as direct and positive evidence. Law v. State, 33 Tex. 37.
Rules as to the weight to be attached to circumstantial evidence are intended merely as directions to aid the mind in arriving at a correct conclusion. They are not rules of law, to be obeyed, but of reason, to be considered. Our statute has established as a test for the sufficiency of the proof, that the concurrent minds of the jury should be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant, beyond a reasonable

Though necessary in every criminal case that the corpus delicti be proved, yet the practical evidences, and the legal test of its suf-ciency is whether it satisfies the understanding and conscience of the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt. But circumstances indicative of guilt, no matter how strong, avail nothing without proof of the corpus delicti. Brown v. State, 1 App. 254; Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 596; See, also, Pen. Code, art. 1854.

Another practical test of the sufficiency of evidence is its ability to satisfy the understanding and conscience of the jury, and to produce in their minds a moral certainty that the defendant’s guilt, beyond a reasonable doubt, is established.

The degree of certainty which is supported by a reasonable probability, founded on the experience of the ordinary course of things, and, consequently, must be reasonable in itself. It is not requisite that circumstantial evidence, to warrant conviction of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt of his innocence. If, beyond a reasonable doubt, it convinces the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who must act upon it, the degree of certainty required by the law is attained. Taylor v. State, 9 App. 199; Jackson v. State, 30 App. 485; Law v. State, 23 Tex. 37.

An inculpatory or exculpatory statement is only a circumstance to be weighed with other facts. Russell v. State, 33 App. 424, 26 S. W. 890.

In determining whether certain footprints corresponded with defendant’s shoes, which were half soled, had several prominent tacks, and were run down at the heel, is not as circumstantial evidence sufficient within the rule to exclude every reasonable hypothesis that the tracks were made by the shoes of accused, who was seen within a day of the crime a few miles from the town where it was committed. Warren v. State, 52 App. 218, 10S. W. 132, 1d. (Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 133.

Any fact necessary to be established in a case can be proved as well by circumstantial as by direct testimony. Yantis v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 947.

A connected chain of circumstantial evidence is entitled to the same weight as positive evidence. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

Where the circumstantial evidence relied on to justify a conviction is sufficient to exclude any reasonable hypothesis, except that of guilt, a conviction is warranted. Cr. App., 145 S. W. 612.

On a trial for unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, the defendant’s knowledge of the minority may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 601.

Suspicious circumstances alone are not sufficient upon which to base a conviction. Yarbrough v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 545.

154. Uncontested evidence.—The force of testimony is increased by a failure to rebut it, where, from the nature of the circumstances, its falsity can be easily imagined; and counsel have a right to comment on such nonproduction. Mercer v. State, 17 App. 452; Thompson v. Shannon, 9 Tex. 550; Needham v. State, 19 Tex. 332. But a mere failure to produce exculpatory evidence within the power of the defendant easily to produce, does not always lend additional probative force to the prosecution’s evidence. State v. Hig v. State, 101 S. W. 1193; but if the State’s Statutory fact be questioned, or its criminative import be controverted, and the defendant has it in his power, but fails to disprove it if false, or to explain it if true, his failure to do so tends to establish its truth or criminative import. Davis v. State, 15 App. 594; Mercer v. State, 17 App. 452.

155. Conclusiveness of evidence on party introducing it.—In order to avoid a postponement of a trial, it was agreed that the defendant might read in evidence the testimony of an absent witness as set forth in defendant’s application for a continuance. Held, that such agreement did not preclude the state from introducing the absent witness to testify in person on the trial. Hackett v. State, 33 App. 498.

Where the state on a trial for larceny proved declarations of accused, explaining his recent possession of stolen property, it was bound by the declarations unless it disproved them, and accused need not furnish any other proof of his innocence. Daniel v. State, 60 App. 515, 132 S. W. 773.

In a prosecution for homicide puts in evidence the declarations of defendant, which were exculpatory and set up self-defense, it is bound by them, unless they are proven to be false, so as to entitle defendant to an acquittal. Giesecke v. State, 64 App. 531, 142 S. W. 1179.

The state, introducing in evidence an exculpatory statement of accused as a principal, must, to convict accused as principal, show the falsity of the statement. Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1136.

Where the state, on a trial for larceny, introduced the testimony of accused on a former trial to the effect that the property belonged to a third person, and that accused sold it for him, the state, to obtain a conviction, must show that the testimony was false. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1094.

Exculpatory or reasonable explanation showing innocence must be shown false, and must be viewed or weighed in the light of all the facts and its falsity so determined. McKnight v. State, 70 App. 470, 158 S. W. 1188.

Where, in a prosecution for abortion, the state offered a part of defendant’s statement introduced before the grand jury, in which she stated that prosecutrix conceived with R.; that defendant pushed her finger up in prosecutrix’s body, and pushed up her womb; that R. stayed on the porch while she did that; that she did not know R., and had never seen the girl before; that she pushed her womb up as far as she could, but gave her no medicine—such testimony was not excluded requiring the state to disprove the same to the jury that the defendant was not required to accept it as true. Shaw v. State, 73 App. 337, 165 S. W. 930.

157. Repeal of evidence in general.—Order of proof, see arts. 717, 718, ante, and notes.

Privilege of witness as to self-incriminating questions, see art. 4.

The party introducing a witness can not assail his credibility in any manner unless such witness has testified to some fact injurious to such party. Art. 815.
Illegal testimony should not be admitted, and when admitted inadvertently or erroneously, should be excluded, and the jury instructed to consider it. Myers v. State, 6 App. 1; Moore v. State, 7 App. 14; Clark v. State, 23 App. 260, 5 S. W. 115; Gose v. State, 6 App. 121.

It is not error to refuse to grant time to the defense to take down in writing the testimony of the witnesses while they are being examined. Lewis v. State, 15 App. 647.

When a witness after being admonished by the court, persists in injecting into his testimony statements which he has been informed are not legal evidence, he should be punished by fine, and, if necessary, by imprisonment. Harrison v. State, 16 App. 325.

It was held not to be error to permit a witness to retire from the stand and the court house into a room by himself, so that he could examine certain papers for the purpose of identifying and explaining them in his testimony. Kunde v. State, 22 App. 65, 3 S. W. 325.

Where a witness was asked a question as to whether another witness owned a pistol, the question was not objectionable, as depriving defendant of the privilege of proving by the witness himself that he did not own a pistol, since it would not disqualify him to testify, and, even if it did disqualify him, that would not render inadmissible testimony of other witnesses who were qualified. Deckard v. State, 67 App. 359, 123 S. W. 417.

In a homicide case, the trial court having decided that evidence objected to by the state concerning a statement made by decedent was inadmissible, it was improper to subsequently permit the evidence to go to the jury on withdrawal of the state's objection. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 135 S. W. 1025.

Accused was charged with assault and battery, and T., the person claimed to have been attacked, was also charged with the same offense committed at the same time against accused. On accused's trial T. was offered as a witness, but excluded upon a showing that he had been convicted of a felony and not pardoned, and after all of the evidence was introduced, accused requested the court, to decide the issue of the case, a jury having been waived, which the court refused to do, stating that it would reserve its decision until the evidence was heard in the case against T., when T. would be permitted to testify for himself. T. testified in his own case, and was acquitted, whereupon the court asked the jury if they considered accused guilty, and received an affirmative answer, when the court found a verdict against accused in his own case. Held, that the court's action in deciding accused's case on testimony introduced in T.'s case was erroneous, requiring a reversal. Cal. v. State, 21 App. 406, 160 S. W. 72.

A witness for the state did not or would not remember that he had told the county attorney immediately before the shooting by accused deceased told accused "not to shoot her," but testified that he said "not to hurt her," whereupon the county attorney held before him and examined him from a statement made by him shortly after the shooting that deceased had said to accused, "Don't shoot me." The witness, when recalled the following day testified that deceased had said, "Don't shoot me." Held, that there was no error in permitting such examination by the county attorney. Cooper v. State, 75 App. 250, 161 S. W. 1094.

Where certain letters offered in evidence were relevant and material, it was no objection to their introduction that they were read to the jury before the file mark of the clerk was placed on them. Millner v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 448.

158. Examination, credibility, impeachment and corroboration of witnesses.—See notes under art. 3687, Vernon's Style's Civ. St. 1914.

In some cases it may be proper to grant defendant's motion to compel the state to place the raped child on the stand. Bozeman v. State, 34 App. 503, 31 S. W. 399.

It has never been the rule in this State to require the State to place upon the stand all of the eye-witnesses to a transaction. The prosecuting officer may produce such witnesses and only such as he thinks best. Kidwell v. State, 25 App. 264, 32 S. W. 342.

The state cannot be compelled to introduce any particular witness in the proof of its case, where he is a co-conspirator of accused in a murder case, though he were an eyewitness. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 567.

Where defendant relied on certain eyewitnesses to prove that he acted in self-defense in killing deceased, the state was not required to introduce and vouch for them, but it was proper for the court to tender them both to the state and to defendant. Pugh v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 549.

The state is not compelled to introduce all of its testimony, nor to call all the eyewitnesses to the killing in its case in chief. Bullock v. State, 73 App. 419, 166 S. W. 196.

160. Consultation between counsel and witnesses.—A witness should not be called from the stand and conferred with by counsel. Williams v. State, 35 Tex. 659.

It is proper for a party to inquire privately of a witness, before he is called to testify, what his testimony will be, but if the witness refuses to divulge his testimony, the court cannot compel him to do so. Withers v. State, 23 App. 386, 5 S. W. 121; Yanez v. State, 26 Tex. 656.
Where the state did not call two of decedent's children in support of its case in an alleged shooting at an officer, it developed that the officer had been killed by a woman in whose company the defendant had been. 421 United States v. 165 S. W. 196.

161. Offer of proof.—No testimony should be offered by the prosecution that is not relevant and legal. 17 App. 267.

Testimony apparently inadmissible is properly rejected when counsel does not state for what purpose it is introduced. 35 S. W. 224. The mere fact that testimony in a homicide case is in a sense impeaching testimony, for the prosecution is counsel in the character, does not affect its admissibility as original testimony, where in fact and in law it is admissible in the first instance. 17 App. 554, 132 S. W. 783.

Evidence of the indictment of another for the larceny with which defendant was charged was properly excluded when not admissible on the grounds stated by defendant for offering it. 17 App. 1117.

Where defendant tried to introduce the entire testimony of a witness at the examining trial, but there was no predicate laid for its introduction, and, if offered to contradict the witness, the attorney did not state what part was offered for that purpose, although the court requested that any part to be impeached be pointed out, there was no error in refusing its exclusion. 17 App. 132.

162. Limiting effect of evidence.—The rule is well settled that a witness may be discredited by proving that on a former occasion he made statements inconsistent with his statements on the trial. The purpose of such contradictory evidence is to impeach the credibility of the witness, but to attack the truth of his statement on the particular trial, and the jury have the right to consider it for that purpose. 17 App. 147.

In a prosecution as an accomplice in a murder, it being claimed that defendant's wife and another were principals, where the first alleged connection of accused with the killing occurred on the day thereafter, evidence of trouble between deceased and two persons on the night before was not evidence against accused, and, being only competent as tending to show decedent's wife a principal, the court should limit its effect. 17 App. 123 S. W. 147.

Evidence that in the trouble between defendant and his wife, in which, accidentally or intentionally, she was killed with a knife, defendant kicked her immediately after she fell, or was seen on the ground, was part of the transaction itself, and not extraneous, so that it was not necessary that the court should limit the effect thereof. 17 App. 1161.

The proof of accused's motive and intent in committing the crime is part of the main issue and is not an extraneous matter, and testimony in relation thereto should not be limited. 17 App. 1006.

Where defendant claimed that the killing followed a difficulty he had with a woman in whom he had slapped her face, it was not error for the court to omit to limit testimony introduced by accused to show that a week or 10 days before the difficulty in question he had had a previous similar difficulty, under the rule that testimony where it can only be used by the jury for the purpose for which it was introduced and when the jury cannot be misled thereby on the main case. 17 App. 240.

Where in a trial for shooting at an officer, it developed by examination of defendant that on a prior occasion the officer shot his horse from under him, the court did not err in failing to limit the effect of such testimony, or to instruct the officer that he had no legal right to shoot on the former occasion; the question of his right to shoot on such occasion being one of fact for the jury to consider in deciding the issue of self-defense in the present case, taking into consideration all the circumstances in evidence. 17 App. 612.

In a prosecution for the theft of a cow, where the direct testimony as to ownership was sufficient to establish it, and evidence of an unrecorded brand was admitted without objection, the court need not in a special charge restrict the scope of such evidence to proof of identity. 17 App. 909.

Where testimony could not be legitimately or rationally used for any other purpose, it is not error to refuse to limit it to that purpose. 17 App. 1010.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of a mortgaged chattel, where evidence was introduced tending to show that the mortgagees had given the defendant an order on the county clerk for the mortgage, which the mortgagee denied, it was error to charge the jury that the evidence could only be considered on the question of the defendant's intention, since it was also competent as affecting the credibility of the mortgagee, and as tending to show his consent to the sale. 17 App. 809.

On a trial for cattle theft, where evidence as to an unrecorded cattle brand was admissible to establish identity, but not to prove ownership, but the court gave the jury's consideration the proof, it was error to refuse an instruction that such evidence should not be considered on the question of ownership. 17 App. 357.

In a prosecution charging one T., with others, as a principal in offering to bribe a witness, where none of the defendants requested a severance and were jointly tried, T.'s voluntary statement, made before the grand jury, reduced to writing and signed by him, was admissible as against him alone. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 739.

163. — Impeaching evidence.—Limiting evidence to impeach accused, see notes under art. 790.

A witness introduced by the state having testified to facts tending to support the state, over the objection of the defendant, is admissible to impeach its said witness. Held, that the omission of the trial court to charge the jury that such impeaching testimony could only be considered as affecting the credibility of the witness was error. Williams v. State, 35 App. 76, 7 S. W. 691.

Instruction of witness. Held, that the jury was not to consider any new, general instruction to impeach the evidence of a witness, can be considered for that purpose only. Floyd v. State, 29 App. 349, 16 S. W. 185.

Where accused objected to the introduction of certain evidence offered for impeachment, and, after its admission, only requested an instruction that the evid­ cence was such as to impeach the witness, and that the jury could not consider it for that or any other purpose, he could not object that the court failed to limit the evidce to impeachment only. Ellis v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1010.

Where evidence that defendant's brother, who gave material testimony in his favor on the issue of self-defense, had previously sought to induce another witness to give similar testimony could only be considered to discredit the brother's testimony, for which purpose it was offered, it was not error for the court to omit to limit its effect to such purpose. Durman v. State, 70 App. 241, 169 S. W. 244, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001.

164. — Evidence of other offenses.—Where proof of an attempt to pass the forged instrument to a different person than the party named in the indictment, was admitted as tending to establish the fraudulent intent the failure of the charge to impeach and circumscribe the purpose and object of the purpose was fundamental error. Burks v. State, 24 App. 326, 6 S. W. 390; 1st, 24 App. 332, 6 S. W.
303.

When the state proves the contemporaneous theft of other property, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the purpose of such evidence. Gentry

Where there is evidence of theft contemporaneous with the burglary charged, the evidence of such theft must be limited to its legitimate purpose. West v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 227.

Where evidence of defendant's possession of other forged instruments is admitted to show intent, the court in its instruction to the jury should limit such evidence to its legitimate purpose. Thorne v. State, 35 App. 118, 34 S. W. 264, 35

Evidence of another crime should not be admitted unless limited properly to its special purpose. Martin v. State, 35 App. 125, 35 S. W. 976.

In evidence of similar transactions at different places is admissible only to show the motive and intent of the accused, and it was error where such evidence was admitted for the court to refuse instructions limiting that evidence to its proper scope. Adams v. State, 62 App. 426, 138 S.
W. 117.

165. Cumulative evidence.—When it is shown that a witness contributed money toward the prosecution of defendant there is no error in excluding his further testimony as to what occurred in the grand jury room relative to raising a sub­

In exclusion to exclude record evidence of the fact that defendant had been tried for insanity and found to be insane, when the fact was proved otherwise and there was no dispute as to the fact. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 52.

In a prosecution for homicide, defendant's testimony to the rumor of his having been indicted for making an aggravated assault and had been convicted of simple assault on a one-armed, decrepit person was not denied, the court properly refused to permit other testimony as to the same transaction. Edwards v. State, 61 App. 297, 136 S. W. 549.

The court did not err in refusing to permit accused to prove that a witness had been convicted of an offense some 15 years before the trial, where the defendant was permitted to show that the witness had been in the penitentiary, and the state admitted that his reputation for veracity was bad, since such evidence would only be admissible as affecting his credibility. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S.
W. 935.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix admitted having made contradictory statements as to the author of her condition, and swore repeatedly before the grand jury that it was another than defendant, he was not entitled to introduce additional evidence of such contradictory statements by other witnesses. Cooper

On a trial for assault with intent to murder, it was immaterial to show how many times prosecutor had paid fines for fighting, where the court admitted evidence as to all fights he had engaged in. Willis v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 353.

166. Number of witnesses.—In a prosecution for homicide, the court should not limit the number of witnesses to the good character of accused, unless the state admits that his reputation in the respects inquired about was good, or unless cur­

Where some dozen witnesses testified to accused's reputation, and the state admits that his reputation as a low-abiding citizen was good, it was not error to refuse to permit other witnesses to testify to the same fact. Drake v. State (Cr.
App.) 151 S. W. 315.

167. Admission of evidence dependent on preliminary proof.—It is not necessary that the relevancy of evidence should appear at the time it is offered, it beings to any proper and conclusive, at any proper stage of the trial, in the discretion of the judge, any evidence which the counsel offering it states will be rendered relevant and material by other evidence which he undertakes to prove. But counsel should never make such a statement as interpose irrelevant evidence, unless he is morally certain that he can, by other evidence, render it relevant and material. And when irrelevant evidence has thus been introduced, and there is a failure to show its relevancy and materiality by other evidence, it is the duty of the court, on its own motion, to exclude such irrelevant evidence, and to instruct the jury to disregard it. Marshall v. State, 8 App. 273; Phillips v. State, 19 App. 158; Smith v. State, 21 App. 133, 17 S. W. 658; Pissman v. State, 18 App. 524.

Before contents of letters written to defendant can be shown it must be proved that he received the letters where mailing is not proof of this. James v. State, 40 App. 360, 49 S. W. 491.

Without having shown the statement to be authorized by the accused, the state proposed to prove by the sheriff the statement of the accused’s brother to him, that the accused intended to plead guilty when brought to trial, and the defense objected that the testimony was hearsay. Thereupon the county attorney stated that he would legalize the said testimony by subsequent evidence, but, when interrogated by the court, he declined to disclose the facts to be subsequently proved. Notwithstanding this action of the county attorney, the trial court admitted the evidence, and the defendant reserved exception. Held, that the trial court erred primarily in admitting the incompetent testimony upon the equivocal statement of the county attorney, and again by its subsequent failure to withdraw it from the jury. Rushing v. State, 25 App. 687, 8 S. W. 807.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence that defendant told the witness that M. had frequently been seen at prosecutrix’s house, and had told defendant that he (M.) was sleeping with prosecutrix, and referred to her as his wife, that accused requested witness to go to prosecutrix’s father and explain to him the statements of M. that M. was not admissible, in the absence of any attempt to show that he procured or induced the prosecution, notwithstanding other evidence that M. was a repeated visitor and companion of prosecutrix, and that the offered testimony indicated motive of the prosecutrix and her parents for the prosecution. Bader v. State, 67 App. 205, 122 S. W. 555.

As the state should not be called on to establish a negative as a predicate for the introduction of testimony, the state may prove by a witness the position of the body of decedent, without first showing that it had not been disturbed. Welch v. State, 57 App. 113, 122 S. W. 800.

In a prosecution for burglary, one of the accomplices fled to H., and while there was incarcerated on suspicion of having stolen certain jewelry in a different transaction. The district attorney asked him if he furnished the money for himself and his companion to go to H., and he testified that his companion bought his ticket, and after they arrived at H. the companion received a letter from the place where the burglary was alleged to have been committed, with $10 in it, and that witness did not know who sent the letter. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, in the absence of any attempt to show that accused was in any manner connected with the sending of the money, etc. Malbaum v. State, 59 App. 386, 138 S. W. 378.

In a prosecution for theft of a package of overalls, a waybill, showing that the package had been received at the depot, was inadmissible, where it was not shown that the waybill was correctly made out by the person issuing it. McConico v. State, 61 App. 48, 135 S. W. 1617.

In a trial for assault to murder, where it appeared that, before going to the place of the difficulty, accused exhibited a razor, and stated that if any one bothered him at the place where he was going he would use it, testimony that the next morning a razor near the place where the difficulties occurred on the theory of insufficient identification of the razor; it having been identified by another witness as one like the razor exhibited by accused. Wilson v. State, 63 App. 81, 138 S. W. 409.

In a trial for cattle theft, where it appeared that accused sold the cow to F., it was not enough to permit F. to testify that he showed the cow to W., where the testimony was followed by testimony of W. and other witnesses rendering the particular testimony material. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 671, 138 S. W. 615.

A certified copy of a marriage license of accused’s previous marriage, together with the minister’s certificate of performing the ceremony which had been filed in the office of the county clerk, several months after the marriage, was admissible in evidence, though it was not shown that defendant was the same person named in the marriage certificate; the latter fact merely going to the weight of the evidence. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 260, 139 S. W. 981.

Evidence that, two years before the difficulty between defendant and his wife, in which she was killed, he slapped her on two or three occasions, not being followed by evidence of later difficulties of the same nature between them, was too remote, and should, on motion, have been excluded, though not objected to when introduced. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1161.

Where there was no evidence, in a prosecution for horse theft, that the horses were taken with the consent of the owner, evidence as to whether the owner had mortgaged the horses, asked for the purpose of showing that he mortgaged them, and that they were taken by accused with his connivance and consent, to defraud the mortgagee, was not admissible. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 180.

In a trial for violating the local option law, it was improper to admit in evidence the record book of an express company purporting to show the signature of defendant for a consignment of liquor, where there was no evidence that defendant wrote his name in the book, and no attempt to connect him with the entries made therein. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 942.
In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, it is proper to allow witnesses to testify that accused was engaged in the saloon business, even if it had not been shown that the retail license introduced in evidence was issued to accused. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 296.

In a prosecution for burglary of a clothing store, evidence of the manager of the store of the value and clothing claimed to have been stolen was not objectionable, on the ground that the goods produced and exhibited were not sufficiently identified as those stolen: the objection going to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of the evidence. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 522.

168. Admissibility of preliminary proof.—As preliminary to introducing the evidence of a witness who had testified on a former trial, the state could show that such witness was then outside of the state, and that it was not certain that he would return; the fact that the state did not afterwards introduce such evidence being immaterial, especially where accused did not move to exclude the evidence as to the witnesses being absent from the state from the jury, on the ground that his evidence was not introduced. Sweeney v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 883.

169. Sufficiency of preliminary proof.—Where it was shown that the body of decedent, when seen by a witness, had been practically undisturbed, it was not error to permit the witness to prove the position of the body. Welch v. State, 87 App. 111, 122 S. W. 880.

Another witness testified that, as soon as he found the ax with which the killing was committed, he took it in the condition in which he found it to a crowd, where K. was, and the latter testified that the ax was bloody and had negro hair, blood and brains on it, which was substantially the testimony of the other witness. Held, that the ax was sufficiently identified to warrant the admission of evidence. Williams v. State, 90 App. 453, 132 S. W. 293.

The genuineness of letters claimed to have been written by N. to defendant is not established so as to make their contents admissible against defendant by the mere statement of witness that they were signed by N. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 239.

Where, in a prosecution for abortion, prosecutrix did not identify defendant as the woman to whom she was carried, but did testify that R. carried her to a woman named Kate or Kit Shaw, which was the name of defendant, who admitted that R. brought prosecutrix to see her, that was sufficient identification to justify the admission of prosecutrix's testimony. Shaw v. State, 73 App. 337, 165 S. W. 930.

170. Objections to evidence.—Review on appeal depend on objection in lower court, see notes under art. 744, ante.

When no objection is made, it is objected to because there is written evidence of the fact sought to be proved, it devolves upon the objector to produce the writing, or show that it once existed. Allen v. State, 8 App. 67.

171. Sufficiency of objection.—Where part of the testimony of an absent witness was admissible, an objection to the whole is properly overruled, it being necessary to point out the improper parts. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 912; Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 899.

It is not error to permit proof of the reputation of witnesses at the time of the trial as against an objection going only to the weight of the evidence. Sharp v. State, 61 App. 347, 134 S. W. 332.

172. Effect of failure to object.—Though the record is the best evidence that a witness has been convicted of crime, if other evidence is admitted without objection there is no error. Moore v. State, 39 App. 266, 45 S. W. 809.

Admission of testimony was not error, where it went in without objection and was excluded as soon as accused requested exclusion. Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 455.

173. Motions to strike out.—But if the illegal evidence has been elicited by the defendant, it will not be excluded. Speights v. State, 1 App. 551; Moore v. State, 6 App. 553.

When improper evidence has, through inadvertence or otherwise, been admitted, even when not objected to, it is a proper practice to exclude it from the jury, and to instruct the jury that it must not be considered by them. It is error in such cases to overrule a motion made by the defendant to exclude. Branch v. State, 10 App. 96; Thomas v. State, 17 App. 437; Phillips v. State, 22 App. 139, 2 S. W. 601; Gose v. State, 6 App. 121; Marshall v. State, 5 App. 273; Rountree v. State, 19 App. 110.

On a trial for rape committed by a negro unknown to the prosecutrix, the state having proved that on the morning after defendant was arrested and placed in jail, he, together with six or eight other negroes, were stripped of their hats and coats and formed in a line in the jail, when the prosecutrix was brought in and at what these negroes were then reassembled, with hats and coats on, and again defendant was identified by the prosecutrix and her sister, and defendant afterwards moved the court to exclude this testimony upon the ground that it was compelling defendant to testify against himself. Held, that the motion cannot be sustained, the defendant having made no objection to the evidence as admitted; and even if his motion was not too late, it did not appear that he made the slightest objection to taking his place in line for inspection, nor that he did not willingly take his place and risk his chance of identification. See the question discussed in extenso in the opinion and numerous authorities reviewed. Bruce v. State, 31 App. 590, 27 S. W. 681.

Where the record showed that after evidence had been admitted without objection, it was inadmissible and inadmissible and instructing the jury to disregard it, the request of accused moving to strike the question and answer from the record and to instruct the jury not to consider the same was sufficiently complied with. 783, 133 S. W. 928.

Where defendant, on cross-examination of a state's witness in a prosecution for violating the local option law, obtained an answer that complainant came to witness' house for a dollar, saying that he was to get whisky from defendant, the court refused to strike out such request after the testimony was all in. Wren v. State (Cr. App.) 130 S. W. 410.

174. Waiver or cure of error in admitting or excluding evidence.—Error in admitting evidence which is material and calculated to influence the jury is not cured by a charge that the jury should not consider the testimony. Darnell v. State, 58 App. 191, 2 S. W. 119; McCandless v. State, 42 App. 153, 67 S. W. 242.

On a trial for murder, where the wife of the accused had stated in her testimony that she knew her husband was going to kill the deceased, held, that the statement opinion evidence for any purpose, and lost the error was cured by the court's withdrawal of the statement from the consideration of the jury. Skaggs v. State, 33 App. 583, 21 S. W. 257.

As a rule the withdrawal of the illegal evidence from the jury cures the error, but there are exceptions. Dimry v. State, 41 App. 272, 52 S. W. 834.

In a murder case, where objection was sustained to a question asked a state's witness on cross-examination, but the court subsequently recalled the witness, and told accused's counsel that they could ask the question, a refusal to do so waived the error. Goode v. State, 57 App. 239, 122 S. W. 587.

Where, after an objection to a question, defendant's counsel said: "All right; go ahead; we don't care"—and when the witness was requested to repeat the answer again said, "Go ahead, and relate it again," and the witness did so, and no An unprompted will could be excused the testimony made to exclude the testimony of the objection was waived. Burnaman v. State, 70 App. 361, 150 S. W. 244, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001.

Art. 784. [764] Rules of statute shall govern, when.—The rules of evidence prescribed in the statute law of this state in civil suits, shall, so far as applicable, govern also in criminal actions, when not in conflict with the provisions of this Code or of the Penal Code. [O. C. 639.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 892, 893.

Proof of records and recorded instruments.—An original marriage license, with the return thereon showing the marriage, having been filed and recorded in the county clerk's office, according to law, is admissible in a prosecution for bigamy; it having been filed with the papers in the case, and a copy thereof served on defendant at the previous term. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 517.

Necessity of filing and notice.—Deeds, bills of sale, and other instruments in writing, which are required or permitted by law to be recorded, may be read in evidence without proof of their execution, if they have been filed among the papers in the cause, and notice of such filing given to the adverse party at least three days before the trial of the cause. But without such filing and notice, their execution must be proved, as in the case of other written instruments, before they can be read in evidence. Johnson v. State, 6 App. 251; Graves v. State, 28 App. 354, 13 S. W. 149; Allison v. State, 14 App. 402; Morrow v. State, 22 App. 239, 2 S. W. 624; Timbrook v. State, 18 App. 1; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3790, and marks and brands are not within the rule of admission of art. 3790, and do not required to be filed, etc. Nimon v. State, 17 App. 659.

The rule as to filing and notice of instruments does not apply to official certificates of records of another state. Patterson v. State, 17 App. 192.

The sale cannot be introduced without proof of execution unless filed among the papers in the cause at least three days before commencement of the trial, and notice of filing given the opposite party or his attorney. Morrow v. State, 22 App. 239, 2 S. W. 624. See further as to bills of sale, notes on "Evidences" under P. C. art. 1325.

The rule requiring three days filing and notice only obtains where the party offering the instrument is not prepared to and does not prove its execution aliounde and not where this can be and is proved by subscribing witnesses or a party who saw the instrument executed. Williams v. State, 39 App. 153, 16 S. W. 760.

The rule that before a recorded instrument can be offered in evidence it must have been filed with the papers in the case three days before the trial does not apply in prosecution for forgery. Caston v. State, 31 App. 304, 30 S. W. 555.

The unrecorded will could be used in evidence upon proof of its execution without filing it, and giving the opposite party notice, and the statute provides that a certified copy shall be admitted in evidence in like manner as the original. Golin v. State, 57 App. 90, 38 S. W. 794.

In view of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3790, the deed records of a county, showing a lease of a building to an amusement company whose employer is on trial for permitting a theatrical performance in the building to be given on Sunday, is admissible, where a copy was not filed before the trial and notice given. Gould v. State, 61 App. 195, 134 S. W. 695.

For a copy of a decree of divorce from accused's first wife to be admissible in a prosecution for bigamy to show that he did not exercise due care to ascertain if his second wife had procured a divorce before marrying a second time, it was unnecessary to file it and give three days' notice of the filing. Coy v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 221.

The original records showing that local option is in force in a county are admissible, without having given notice, against accused, charged with pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 249.
Proof of foreign laws.—A book which purported to be the Code of Laws of the Mexican Republic, and which purported to be published by authority of said nation, and was certified to be a true copy of the laws of said nation by the principal chief, under the great seal of said nation, was held to be admissible in evidence. The local governments of the Indian nations come within the meaning of "foreign governments," as used in art. 3692 of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914. Every nation is "foreign" to all others. And the several states of the American union as "foreign" to each other with respect to their statutes. Cowell v. State, 16 App. 77. Articles 3692 and 3695, of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, apply in criminal as well as civil cases. Under these articles, laws of another state, when offered as evidence, are not subservient to, or within the purview of, the rules which apply to proof of private documents. The written law of another state can not be proved by parol. The imprint of a book of statutes of another state suffices prima facie to authenticate and render it admissible in evidence. When a statute of another state is proved under article 3693 of the Revised Statutes, and only a portion of the provisions of a particular statute are embraced in the certificate of the secretary of state, the failure to embrace the entire statute will not invalidate the certificate, but, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the portions omitted are immaterial. Patterson v. State, 17 App. 102; Cummins v. State, 12 App. 121.

A reprint of a book purported to be the "Penal Code of the State of Coahuila, Republic of Mexico, and published by authority of said state:" is admissible in a criminal prosecution to prove the law of such state under Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3692. Fernández v. State, 25 App. 538, 8 S. W. 667.

Copies of records.—Article 3694, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, is cumulative and not restrictive in effect, therefore does not affect the rule or right with regard to the admissibility of the originals as evidence. Rainey v. State, 20 App. 455. Under Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3706 a certified copy of an unproven will was admissible and it would appear that it could be proved up as an examined copy by the subscribing witnesses. Golin v. State, 37 App. 90, 58 S. W. 794.

Proof of marks and brands.—Prior to such amendment, marks and brands which are self-evidently or intrinsically evidence of ownership, were admissible in the courts of this state, to prove ownership, only when thereby had been duly recorded. This rule applied to equine as well as other stock named in the statute. Thompson v. State, 26 App. 466, 9 S. W. 760.

Under Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7109, as amended by Acts 32d Leg. c. 69 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 7160) in a criminal case evidence as to unrecorded brands is admissible to prove ownership as well as identity. Turner v. State, 71 App. 477, 160 S. W. 357. See, also, notes on "Evidence" under P. C. art. 1329.

Art. 785. [765] Defendant presumed to be innocent; reasonable doubt.—The defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence; and, in case of reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to be acquitted. [O. C. 640.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 935, 936. See Pen. Code, art. 11, and notes.

1. Presumption as to intent.—See Pen. Code, art. 51.
3. Sufficiency of evidence in general.—See notes to art. 783, ante.
4. Presumption of innocence.—The law indulges no supposition, but as a fact, presumes the defendant innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence. Reid v. State, 9 App. 472.

As a rule the presumption of innocence applies only in the case for which the defendant is on trial. Hargrove v. State, 33 App. 431, 26 S. W. 993.

In a prosecution for theft, a statement by the district attorney in argument that defendant admitted he was a married man, and that he was charged with seducing a little girl, and that a man who would commit that character of crime would 675 commit theft, was erroneous and improper, in view of the presumption of innocence attaching to every person charged with crime. Thompson v. State, 159 S. W. 181.

In a prosecution for attempting to procure a woman to enter a house of ill fame there was a presumption of innocence in defendant's favor. Currington v. State, 72 App. 143, 161 S. W. 478.

In a prosecution for wife murder, there is no additional presumption of innocence because of the relationship. Brown v. State, 189 S. W. 437.

5. Presumption distinguished from reasonable doubt.—The rule imposing the burden to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt is a different thing from the presumption of innocence. A defendant has the presumption of innocence with him through the whole case. The advantage that he derives, however, from the fact that the burden is on the prosecution to make out the points it advances on this account is not at such an extent as to make a verdict of guilty, then, should the proof close at that point, the case goes to the jury free from any presumptions arising from the prior imposition of this burden.

In other words, the rule requiring the actor to take on him the burden of proof is one merely of practice, adopted for the proper development of the case, and ceases to operate when the evidence is in. The rule requiring guilt to be made out beyond reasonable doubt is a fundamental sanction of the law— applicable to all stages of a trial. The first rule concerns the order, to the second the weight of testimony. Jones v. State, 13 App.; Ake v. State, 6 App. 398, 32 Am. Rep. 586.

The jury are not required to believe the defendant innocent, but they must acquit him upon any reasonable doubt of his guilt, even without actually believing him innocent. The law presuming him to be innocent, the state must by legal evidence satisfy the minds of the jury, beyond reasonable doubt, that he is guilty. McMillan v. State, 7 Tex. 355; McMillan v. State, 17 App. 610; Smith v. State, 9 App. 159; Robertson v. State, 16 App. 269; Blocker v. State, 10 App. 379; Wallace v. State, 9 App. 299; La Norris v. State, 33 App. 33, 44 Am. Rep. 699.

This presumption of innocence is with the accused throughout the whole case, from its commencement to its final determination. Its effect is to put the burden of proving the guilt of the accused on the prosecution. The fact of guilt having been established to the exclusion of any reasonable doubt, the prosecution has made out its case, and this case will overcome the presumption of innocence, and prove the accused guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and the presumption of the accused's innocence is hereby forever ceased to exist until the conviction is finally determined. Jones v. State, 13 App.; Templeton v. State, 5 App. 398; Brinkoeter v. State, 14 App. 67; Gazley v. State, 17 App. 267; Robinson v. State, 10 App. 608; Moore v. State, 30 App. 238; Strong v. State, 18 App. 19; Furry v. State, 8 App. 471; Ake v. State, 6 App. 398, 32 Am. Rep. 586; Johnson v. State, 27 App. 163, 11 S. W. 106; Zwicker v. State, 27 App. 539, 11 S. W. 633; McArdle v. State, 27 App. 611, 11 S. W. 672, 11 Am. St. Rep. 216; Galbraith v. State, 28 App. 247, 12 S. W. 1083; Lewis v. State, 29 App. 105, 14 S. W. 1083; Johnson v. State, 20 App. 150, 15 S. W. 647; Slade v. State, 29 App. 351, 16 S. W. 253; Thompson v. State, 30 App. 325, 17 S. W. 448; Black v. State, 1 App. 368.

The presumption of innocence must be overcome before a conviction can be had. Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 473.

In a prosecution for fraudulently inducing the complaining witness to sign a note with accused by falsely representing that accused had a contract to teach school, held insufficient to overcome the legal presumption of innocence, and to sustain a conviction. Thurman v. State, 59 App. 255, 128 S. W. 404.

Where circumstantial evidence is relied upon, the presumption of innocence must be considered; that is, the facts must exclude every other conclusion or hypothesis except that of guilt to warrant a conviction. Williams v. State, 70 App. 275, 156 S. W. 938.

The burden of proof is on the state, and the defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 229.

7. Operation and effect of presumption.—The presumption of innocence must be overcome by the evidence, and in doubtful cases is sufficient to turn the scale in favor of the defendant. Hampton v. State, 1 App. 652; Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 225; Hull v. State, 52 App. 542, 125 S. W. 556; Shelton v. State, 7 App. 556; Shaw v. State, 12 App. 592; 6 Tex. 367.

The presumption of innocence counterbalances the presumption of continued life, in a prosecution for bigamy. Hull v. State, 7 App. 595.

Where the evidence is insufficient to rebut the presumption of innocence, the verdict will be set aside on appeal. Walker v. State, 14 App. 630.

The presumption of innocence is stronger than any presumption of guilt arising merely from the means used to accomplish the guilty purpose. Black v. State, 18 App. 124.

The presumption of innocence is not a substantial right of defendant, equal to a witness in his behalf. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 716.

8. Insanity.—Where the state shows beyond a reasonable doubt that accused committed crime, and he relies on mental irresponsibility, he has the burden of showing that fact, notwithstanding the presumption of innocence. Douglas v. State, 73 App. 365, 165 S. W. 933.

The rule that if accused was, at any time prior to the commission of the offense, insane, that condition existed when he did the act, unless the state established beyond a reasonable doubt that at that time he was of sound mind, applies only where, prior to the offense, accused had been legally ad­judicated, or it had been admitted or proved, prior to the offense that he was insane, and in other cases accused has the burden to show, his mental incapacity to commit the crime at the time of its commission. Douglas v. State, 73 App. 355, 165 S. W. 933.

In all cases of felony the court should give in charge to the jury the presumption of innocence in connection with the rule as to reasonable doubt. Thomas v. State, 49 Tex. 65; Carr v. State, 41 Tex. 545; Stapp v. State, 1 App. 734; Black v. State, 8 App. 364; Priesmuth v. State, 1 App. 483; Leach v. State, 1 App. 652; Coffee v. State, 5 App. 545; McMullen v. State, Id. 577.

The court did not err in refusing a special charge as to the presumption of innocence unless reasonable doubt which are principles of law were fully embodied in the charge given, it being unnecessary to repeat them in another form. Hurley v. State, 35 App. 282, 33 S. W. 354.

The refusal of a requested instruction as to the presumption of innocence, is not error where this is covered by the main charge. Thompson v. State, 37 App. 227, 33 S. W. 785, 39 S. W. 298. On appeal in misdemeanor cases, objections to failure to instruct on reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence will not be reviewed, unless accused excepted it and requested special charges on the points. Webb v. State, 63 App. 207, 140 S. W. 95.

10. Sufficiency of instructions.—The charge should be substantially in the language of the statute. The following is the proper form of such charge: "The defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence; and if from the evidence before you, you have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt, you will acquit him." The charge should follow the language of the statute without any attempt at amplification or explanation. Masseys v. State, 1 App. 569; Chapman v. State, 3 App. 67; Ham v. State, 4 App. 645; Bland v. State, 4 App. 15; Fury v. State, 8 App. 471; Cohea v. State, 9 App. 179; McPhail v. State, Id. 164; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Wilson v. State, 27 App. 577, 11 S. W. 638; Gallaher v. State, 28 App. 247, 15 S. W. 1087; Lewis v. State, 29 App. 383, 14 S. W. 1988; Johnson v. State, 29 App. 405, 15 S. W. 647; Slade v. State, 29 App. 381, 16 S. W. 253; Pitta v. State, 29 App. 374, 16 S. W. 139; Robertson v. State, 10 App. 602.

On a murder trial the court instructed that defendant was presumed to be innocent until his guilt was established by competent evidence beyond reasonable doubt, and if the jury had a reasonable doubt arising from the evidence then should acquit. Held not objectionable, as requiring affirmative evidence of innocence, or as contravening the rule that a reasonable doubt may arise from want of evidence as well as from evidence produced. Zwicker v. State, 27 App. 539, 11 S. W. 635; Tomlinson v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 332.

A charge that "defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt" is not erroneous because the word "legal," as used in the statute, is omitted before the word "evidence." Williams v. State, 34 S. W. 943, 35 App. 606; McDade v. State, 27 App. 641, 11 S. W. 672, 11 Am. St. Rep. 216.

An instruction that defendant is presumed innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence and that after his guilt is established by such evidence the presumption no longer exists, is erroneous. Stapp v. State, 1 App. 734.

On a trial for willfully obstructing a public road, an instruction that the willful intent was presumed ended that it devolved upon defendant to show his innocent intent destroyed the presumption of innocence, and was erroneous. Drinkoeter v. State, 14 App. 67; Drinkoeter v. State, 16 App. 72.

The court instructed the jury that "the defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and if, upon the whole evidence, you have a reasonable doubt of his guilt, you must acquit him, and not resolve the doubt by a mitigation of the punishment." This charge is objectionable in that the concluding clause may have induced the jury to inflict the greatest penalty instead of the milder one provided by the statute. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 163, 11 S. W. 106.

A charge that defendant is presumed to be innocent till his guilt is established by the evidence adduced to the contrary and in case the jury have a reasonable doubt as to guilt they must acquit, correctly instructs as to the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt. Flournoy v. State, 57 App. 88, 125 S. W. 26.

A statement of the statutory doctrine of reasonable doubt in the court's charge, that in all criminal cases the burden of proof was on the state, that defendant was presumed innocent until his guilt was established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and that in case the jury had a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt they should acquit, was sufficient. King v. State, 57 App. 352, 125 S. W. 155.

The instruction not to be regarded as a deadly weapon was not questioned, an instruction that the "instrument or means by which a homicide was committed are to be taken into consideration in judging the intent" of defendant is objectionable to the objection to the presumption arising from the character of the weapon and the manner of the killing, or that it makes a presumption of criminal intent neutralize the presumption of innocence. Smith v. State, 57 App. 653, 124 S. W. 673.

It was error to charge, in a prosecution for burglary in the district court of an accused under 16 years of age, that the defendant in this case, "as in all criminal cases," is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. Ragsdale v. State, 61 App. 145, 154 S. W. 244.

An instruction that in all criminal cases accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the burden of proving guilt is on the prosecution throughout the trial, and does not shift to the accused, and in case the jury has a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt they shall acquit, sufficiently presented accused's denial of guilt. Northcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1064.

Nor is it necessary that the insanity of the defendant be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Williams v. State, 37 App. 348, 29 S. W. 687; Burt v. State, 38 App. 397, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 49 L. R. A. 305, 330.

A mere probability or strong suspicion of guilt will not warrant a conviction. The proof must be sufficient to satisfy every reasonable doubt of the jurors, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the defendant. Phillips v. State, 19 Tex. 214; Conner v. State, 34 Tex. 659; Tollett v. State, 44 Tex. 55; Grant v. State, 3 App. 1; Darnell v. State, 5 App. 113; Hoadle v. State, 8 App. 353.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt was not a mere fanciful or imaginary one but grew out of the testimony or the want of it and left the mind in that condition that after a full investigation of the facts detailed in the evidence the jury could not say they had an abiding conviction that defendant was guilty, was not erroneous. Cave v. State, 41 Tex. 182.

A reasonable doubt may arise in the minds of the jurors from evidence tending to establish an alibi before they arrive at a moral certainty as to the truth of the alibi. Walker v. State, 42 Tex. 360.

But the doubt, to be a reasonable one, must not be merely speculative, imaginary, possible, or conjectural; it must be a real doubt. Gibbs v. State, 1 App. 123; Brown v. State, Id. 154; Pilking v. State, 19 Tex. 214; Billard v. State, 30 Tex. 347, 94 Am. Dec. 317; Ham v. State, 4 App. 645.

Reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after full consideration of all the evidence, leaves the jury without an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the accusation. Chapman v. State, 3 App. 67; Billard v. State, 30 Tex. 367, 94 Am. Dec. 317.

If the evidence leaves the mind involved in reasonable doubt as to his guilt, that doubt inures to his benefit, and he is entitled to be acquitted. Robertson v. State, 19 App. 602.

Doubt of a fact upon which another fact depends necessarily involves doubt of the latter fact. Poston v. State, 12 App. 408.

The rule as to reasonable doubt applies alone to criminative facts, and not to exculpatory facts, and the charge of the court should so restrict it. Exculpatory facts, to warrant acquittal, need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Dyson v. State, 13 App. 402; Rockhold v. State, 16 App. 577; Morgan v. State, 16 App. 558.

An alibi need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt. If the evidence adduced whether in behalf of the state or of defendant raises a reasonable doubt as to defendant's presence at the time and place of the commission of the offense, defendant is entitled to an acquittal. Gallaher v. State, 23 App. 247, 12 S. W. 109.

A reasonable doubt may arise from a want of sufficient criminative facts to establish guilt. Zwick v. State, 27 App. 339, 11 S. W. 675. 678
Chap. 7) TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS Art. 785

On a trial for slander, even though defendant has the burden of proving the truth of the alleged statement, he is not required to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt. Manning v. State, 37 App. 180, 39 S. W. 118.

Where a dazed and irresponsible condition of mind, relied on as excusing a homicide, was produced by a blow inflicted on defendant by decedent immediately prior to the killing, the burden of proof is on defendant to establish his mental condition, as claimed, by a preponderance of the evidence, but it is sufficient for acquittal if the evidence raises a reasonable doubt thereof; the blow and its consequences being a part of the res gestae. Dent v. State, 49 App. 166, 79 S. W. 525.

It is not every doubt of the sufficiency of the facts that will justify an acquittal; but the doubt must be a reasonable one. Liggan v. State, 59 App. 274, 128 S. W. 620.

Defendant is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt, and, where it exists, to an acquittal. Hollis v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 835.

The jury must find facts constituting an offense beyond a reasonable doubt before they may convict. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 183 S. W. 884.

12. -- Particular offenses.--See this case for evidence held insufficient to support a conviction for theft, because it does not overcome the presumption of innocence nor exclude the reasonable doubt. Reveal v. State, 27 App. 57, 10 S. W. 739.

The doctrine of reasonable doubt applies to every one charged with crime, and if the jury have a reasonable doubt of any grade of homicide, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal. Redman v. State, 62 App. 591, 108 S. W. 367.

In a prosecution for carrying a pistol, the burden was upon the state to prove the crime beyond a reasonable doubt; but not upon accused to prove his defense beyond a reasonable doubt; and a charge that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was handed his pistol in a restaurant, and immediately proceeded to take it to his home by the most direct route practicable, he should be acquitted, was erroneous. Humphrey v. State, 55 App. 50, 85 S. W. 633.

In a prosecution for burglary with intent to steal, the defendant cannot be convicted where there is a reasonable doubt that he entered the house, as charged, for the purpose of committing the crime of theft, or as to whether he had the consent to enter that house of the owner named in the indictment, or of his wife. McKinney v. State, 63 App. 470, 140 S. W. 344.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the burden of proving that accused was the principal is upon the state, which must establish that fact beyond a reasonable doubt. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 944.

In a prosecution for bigamy, where accused's defense was that he had been informed and believed that his first wife was dead, he is entitled to the benefit of reasonable doubt on his defense. Sparlin v. State (Cr. App.), 80 S. W. 307.

13. -- Grade of offense.--In a proper case, the rule of reasonable doubt applies to the degrees in murder. Guagando v. State, 41 Tex. 632; Murray v. State, 1 App. 417; Blake v. State, 3 App. 581; White v. State, 23 App. 154, 3 S. W. 710; P. C., art. 1140.

If there is a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense, it must be solved by the jury and not by the court. Conner v. State, 23 App. 378, 5 S. W. 189.

The necessity of instructions in general.—The necessity of instructions in general reasonable doubt must be charged in every felony case, whether asked or not. Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44; Goode v. State, 2 App. 520; Lindsay v. State, 1 App. 327; Black v. State, Id. 368; Priesmuth v. State, Id. 490; Mace v. State, 6 App. 470; Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 36, 36.

In misdemeanors, it is not error to omit an instruction as to reasonable doubt, unless the defendant requests it to be given. May v. State, 6 App. 121; Treadway v. State, 1 App. 688; Goode v. State, 2 App. 520.

Failure to give proper charge on reasonable doubt is fundamental error. Logan v. State, 40 App. 85, 48 S. W. 575.

"If the jury have a reasonable doubt arising from the facts," etc., is an erroneous charge, as the doubt may arise from a want of facts. Massey v. State, 1 App. 563.

An instruction, that "if the jury had any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, such as naturally and fairly presented itself from the evidence which the jury believed," etc., was held erroneous. The reasonable doubt is not limited to, nor is it necessary that it should arise from, the evidence which the jury believed. Holmes v. State, 9 App. 313.

An instruction, that "the defendant is entitled to all reasonable doubts" could not be complained of by the defendant, but is improper, because it opens up a field for speculation and doubt outside the facts of the case. Reid v. State, 9 App. 472.

The following charge was held erroneous: "If you can reasonably account for or explain the facts and circumstances in evidence before you in this case, in any way consistently with defendant's innocence, without resorting to unreasonable facts, you should then acquit. But it cannot be assumed for you to explain the facts and circumstances detailed before you in this case upon any reasonable ground consistently with defendant's innocence, then, if you can not do this, you should convict." Robertson v. State, 10 App. 662.
To instruct the jury that the defendant should acquit if they have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant’s guilt was erroneous; but such erroneous instruction would inure to the benefit of the defendant, and of which he could not ordinarily be heard to complain. Patterson v. State, 12 App. 223; McNair v. State, 14 App. 78; Holland v. State, Id. 182; Thomas v. State, Id. 200; Hackett v. State, 13 App. 404. It is therefore the duty of the court to charge the law of reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the principal as well as of that of the accessory. Pos­ton v. State, 12 App. 408.

An instruction that certain evidence might be considered as any other circumstance to establish the guilt or innocence of the defendant, was erroneous. The question is not whether defendant is innocent, but whether he is guilty, and the jury may not doubt as to his guilt though they do not believe the evidence. The proof of guilt fails to convince them beyond a reasonable doubt. Smith v. State, 13 App. 597.

Where the court charged on reasonable doubt as between the degrees of murder, the second degree and manslaughter as if manslaughter was the crime charged and instructed the jury that there should be an acquittal if there was a reasonable doubt of defendant’s guilt, this was sufficient without charging on reasonable doubt as between manslaughter and self defense. Cockerell v. State, 32 App. 555, 25 S. W. 421.

Though it is a local instruction that the jury should acquit if they had a reasonable doubt whether the alleged false statement was true or false, was not prejudicial to defendant. Kitchen v. State, 28 App. 165, 9 S. W. 461.

On the question of reasonable doubt the court charged as follows: "It is not sufficient to secure a conviction for the state to make out a prima facie case, but the guilt of the defendant must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt; and the failure or inability of the defendant to show his innocence does not lend any additional force to the incriminatory facts, if any, shown, to raise any presumption of guilt against the defendant." This charge, though abstractly correct, was calculated to lead the jury to believe that in the opinion of the court the defense had failed to show innocence. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 162, 11 S. W. 106.

Upon the defense of alibi, as applied to the alleged principal, the charge of the court required the jury to believe that the alleged principal was not present at the time and place of the killing. Held error, because the effect of such charge was to eliminate from the defense of alibi the doctrine of reasonable doubt. Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

An instruction that "if you believe from the testimony beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not take the property fraudulently, but under an honest belief of right, he would not be guilty of theft, and you should acquit him," held error, as applying the reasonable doubt to the evidence instead of the guilt of the accused. Lewis v. State, 29 App. 105, 14 S. W. 1008.

In a prosecution for the theft of a horse, it was error to instruct the jury: "If the facts and circumstances in evidence, taken together, leave you with reasonable doubt as to the guilt of defendant, you will return a verdict of guilty; otherwise not guilty." Clark v. State, 30 App. 402, 17 S. W. 942.

The court charged the jury, "if you believe the defendant innocent you will acquit him," but in another part of the charge he had instructed upon presumption of innocence, and told the jury "in case you have a reasonable doubt as to defendant’s guilt you will acquit him." Held that the charge taken as a whole is sufficient. Newlon v. State, 33 App. 141, 25 S. W. 774.

The defense was that defendant had bought the pistol found on his person from one S. The court instructed the jury that if they had a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant bought said pistol from S. or got it from any other person than E. J. (the alleged owner), you will acquit defendant; held, sufficient. Hayes v. State, 36 App. 533, 35 S. W. 171.

In a prosecution for mule theft, defendant having claimed that he traded a pair of horses for the mules, an instruction that if the jury found from the evidence that traded for the mules, or had a reasonable doubt whether he did or not, they should acquit him, sufficiently charged the doctrine of reasonable doubt, in accordance with the facts as defendant claimed them to be. Cleveland v. State, 57 App. 556, 123 S. W. 142.

Though it is a legal maxim that every one is presumed to intend whatever would be the reasonable or probable result of his act and the means used by him, it is never permissible to so instruct the jury, as defendant is entitled to reasonable doubt on every phase of the case. Thomas v. State, 57 App. 442, 125 S. W. 35.

Where the court properly charged on circumstantial evidence, and every other phase of the case including the issue of alibi, a charge that, if the jury did not find beyond a reasonable doubt that accused, and not his son, killed descendent, they should acquit him, was not erroneous. Wynne v. State, 59 App. 126, 127 S. W. 234.

Where the issue was whether accused or another struck prosecutor, and the court charged that to justify a conviction the jury must find that accused struck prosecutor, the refusal to charge that before the jury could convict they must believe that defendant and no other struck prosecutor, and if they had a doubt they should acquit, was not reversible error. Ligon v. State, 59 App. 274, 128 S. W. 620.

An instruction in a prosecution for homicide as to self-defense is not erroneous for failure to give a statement of the doctrine of self-defense, as the charge contains a statement of such doctrine and of the presumption of innocence, and after defining the different degrees and applying reasonable doubt to them, the jury were then told that, if they had a reasonable doubt on the guilt of defendant they should acquit. Eggleson v. State, 59 App. 1190.

A written charge that accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established, by evidence, "beyond a reasonable ______. This reasonable doubt extends to every phase of the case; and if you have a reasonable ______ of the guilt of the defendant, you will give him the benefit of such doubt and acquit him," is not prej.
udicially erroneous for omitting the word "doubt," after the word "reasonable," because the jury will supply the word and make the sentence complete. Cromwell v. State, 59 App. 625, 129 S. W. 622.

Accused's right to the benefit of reasonable doubt throughout the case, including the issue whether he wounded a witness to free himself or with intent to murder, was not impaired by an instruction that if the jury believed a reasonable doubt that the assault was unlawful, but had reasonable doubt as to whether it was with intent to murder or was an aggravated assault, accused was entitled to the benefit thereof, and that one accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is shown beyond reasonable doubt. Perry v. State, 61 App. 2, 138 S. W. 655.

An instruction that if the jury were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was guilty of murder, but had a reasonable doubt whether it was committed under the malice or malice aforethought, they should acquit the accused and find him guilty of a higher grade of murder in the second degree, if he was guilty of any offense, was not objectionable as not giving the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. Mingo v. State, 61 App. 14, 133 S. W. 882. Under Act April 15, 1909 (Acts 31st Leg. c. 15), making it a felony to pursue the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor in local option territory, the word "occupation" does not necessarily mean principal business, but may mean a business carried on by the defendant as a side line, and hence a charge, in a prosecution under that law, that in order to constitute and engage in or pursue the occupation of selling intoxicating liquor it is necessary for the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant unlawfully followed that business, places a greater burden on the state than the law requires, and was not prejudicial to defendant. Clark v. State, 61 App. 597, 136 S. W. 269.

A charge that if the jury believe beyond a reasonable doubt that accused is guilty of some degree of murder, but have a reasonable doubt as to whether the killing was committed on express or implied malice, they should acquit him of the killing, and find him guilty of no higher offense than murder in the second degree, followed by a charge that if accused is guilty of some grade of culpable homicide, but there is a reasonable doubt whether the offense is murder in the first degree, the jury must give the accused the benefit of the doubt and cannot find him guilty of a higher degree of offense than manslaughter, followed by a charge on reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence as applicable, was not so objectionable for the jury to be entitled to that, if the jury have a reasonable doubt that the killing was not committed on express or implied malice, accused cannot be convicted of murder in the second degree. Alexander v. State, 63 App. 102, 138 S. W. 721.

In the trial for the theft of a hog, a charge that, if neither of the hogs found in the pen of defendant belonged to the person named as owner in the indictment, the defendant would not be guilty, and that, if there was a reasonable doubt whether the hogs in defendant's pen were the property of the owner, accused should be found "innocent and not guilty," was erroneously given; the term "innocent" was not objectionable, but it was not sufficiently modified, and if thereby the jury were misled in considering whether they had reasonable doubts of the ownership alleged, they should acquit defendant. Holloway v. State, 63 App. 563, 140 S. W. 453.

Where there was evidence that one of three different persons, other than defendant, killed deceased, it was error to charge that if one of such other persons killed deceased the jury should acquit defendant, without further instructing that they should also acquit, unless they found, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was the person who in fact did the killing. Wallace v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 925.

Where, in a trial for unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, the court, after properly charging upon reasonable doubt and the burden of proof, stated that, in the matter of the whether the defendant was guilty or not, the defendant must prove to the contrary that the liquor was not a minor, and that the defendant had the burden of proof, accused was not prejudiced thereby, because the instruction was followed by another, that if accused be acquitted, she shall be acquitted, and further instructed that the same matter were properly refused. Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 691.

In a homicide case, the court instructed that, if the jury "find from the evidence that some one else other than defendant fired the shot that inflicted the wound in the right breast or right side of deceased," they should acquit, and further instructed that if the jury "find from the evidence that some one else other than defendant fired the shot that inflicted the wound in the right breast or right side of deceased," they should acquit. Held that, in view of the rest of the instructions, the part quoted in the first paragraph was not objectionable as not giving the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to who inflicted the wound in the right breast or right side of deceased, because the balance of the jury entertained different convictions. The court charged, pursuant to the statute, that the burden of proof was upon the state, and, in case the jury had a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, held that the reasonable doubt charge was properly refused; it being improper in any case. Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 394.

It was not error to instruct that if the jury had reasonable doubt as to whether accused procured a woman to come into the state for the purpose of prostitution, or as to accused's guilt, he should be acquitted, and that in all criminal cases accused to innocent until his guilt was established by legal and competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, that the burden of proof was on the state throughout the trial and never shifted to accused, etc. McDowell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 521.

An instruction that prosecutrix, on a trial for seduction, is an accomplice and that accused cannot be convicted on her testimony alone unless there is other evidence tending to connect accused with the offense, is erroneous for failing to charge on reasonable doubt covered by an instruction following. Cole v. State, 70 App. 459, 156 S. W. 929.

A charge which requires the jury to affirmatively believe beyond a reasonable doubt to facts necessary to show accused guilty, and which gives a complete charge on reasonable doubt, telling the jury that the accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and that, if the jury has a reasonable doubt as to guilt, they must acquit, sufficiently charges on reasonable doubt. Mitchell v. State, 71 App. 241, 155 S. W. 815.

In a prosecution for rape on a girl under 15 years of age, a charge that if the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant criminally assaulted her with or without her consent, she being under the age of 15 years, and not his wife, they should assess his punishment at imprisonment for not less than five years, unless defendant should be found not guilty, but if they did not find defendant's commission of the offense, or found that prosecutrix was 15 years old or more, or had a reasonable doubt that she was under that age, then they should acquit, followed by proper charges on the burden of the offense, the presumption of innocence and the defense of insanity, taken as a whole, clearly required the jury to believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, all of the essential elements of the offense before they could convict. Graham v. State, 73 App. 28, 165 S. W. 726.

In a prosecution for pandering, the court affirmatively charged that the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that accused was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt to become an inmate of a house of ill fame, with other requisites of the offense, before they could convict, and also charged that, if the jury believed that the house where the accused procured a room for the female was not a house of ill fame, they must acquit. Held, that an exception to an affirmative charge that the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the house where he procured a room was a house of ill fame was not sustained. Smith v. State, 73 App. 129, 164 S. W. 525.

Where the court charged on reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence, a charge submitting an issue was not objectionable for omitting any reference to reasonable doubt. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 864.

The court at defendant's request having charged, concerning defendant's statements as to how deceased was injured, that the burden of proof was on the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the falsity of such statements, and that proof of the falsity of the statements, if any, in material matters was not sufficient, but that the state must prove the falsity of every statement, if any, made by defendant which in the mind of the jury raised a reasonable doubt of his guilt, defendant could not successfully contend that the court had not otherwise charged with sufficient definiteness that all exculpatory statements which raised a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt must be proven to be false. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 437.

In a prosecution for homicide, in which accused relied on self-defense, the court charged if you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant with a deadly weapon in a sudden passion arising from an adequate cause, and not in defense of herself against an unlawful attack producing a reasonable expectation or fear of death or serious bodily injury, with intent to kill deceased, you will find the defendant guilty of murder. The court also charged that in all criminal cases the burden of proof was on the state, and accused was presumed innocent until her guilt was established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and, in case the jury had a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, they should acquit. Held, that such charge constituted a sufficient charge on reasonable doubt arising on the issue between manslaughter and self-defense. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 743.

Where the court gave the customary charge on presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, and in a separate paragraph affirmatively presented accused's defense, the charge was not objectionable because the part submitting the issue to the jury for a finding did not charge the converse of the proposition that if the jury did not believe that the elements of the offense had been proven as required, they should acquit. Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

The instructions need not define the term "reasonable doubt." Marshall v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 154.

Our statute has established as a test for the sufficiency of the proof that the concurrent minds of the jury should be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant, beyond a reasonable doubt, and the charge to the jury should be confined to this statutory language. Brown v. State, 23 Tex. 195.

The language of this long-standing provision was advisedly selected to express the precise meaning of the lawmaker. Its entire context should be preserved, and appended to it in the charge or supplement to obviate perplexity and bred error. Fury v. State, 8 App. 471; McPhail v. State, 9 App. 184; Cohen v. State, Id. 173.

Nothing further than a charge, in accordance with this article need be given on the subject of reasonable doubt. Sanche v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1133.

A requested charge that the law contemplates the concurrence of 12 minds before a conviction can be had, that such individual juror must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt before he can consent to a verdict of guilty, that each juror should feel the responsibility resting on him and realize that his own mind must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt before he can consent to a verdict of guilty, so that if any individual juror, after having considered, weighed all the evidence and consulted the conscience, entertains a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, it was his duty not to surrender his convictions merely because the balance of the jury entertain different convictions, was properly refused; it being reasonable that the court's charge on reasonable doubt was in substantial conformity to the statute. Hysaw v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 941.

18. — Shifting burden of proof.—An instruction which in effect conditions an acquittal upon the belief of the jury that the defendant is innocent, instead of on the sufficiency of the evidence to establish his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, is erroneous. Smith v. State, 9 App. 150; Robertson v. State, Id. 209; Blocker v. State, Id. 279; Wallace v. State, Id. 299; Crook v. State, 27 App. 195, 11 S. W. 444; Moore v. State, 25 App. 377, 13 S. W. 152; Wagner v. State, 17 App. 554; Brink­koe v. State, 14 App. 67.

The defense claimed that the deceased fired the fatal shot and killed herself. Upon that issue the court charged: "If, from the evidence, you believe that Anna Smith took her own life, and that the fatal shot which deprived her of life was not fired by defendant, but by any other than the act of the defendant, then he is not guilty, and you should so find." Held, that the charge was erroneous because it imposed upon the accused the burden of proving his innocence. The instruction should have been: "If, from the evidence, the jury entertained a reasonable doubt whether the defendant killed the deceased, or whether the deceased killed herself, they should acquit. Shamburger v. State, 24 App. 433, 6 S. W. 546.

An instruction directing an acquittal if the jury believed certain exculpatory facts, was erroneous as it required the jury to find defendant's innocence while the true rule is that they must presume innocence until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt. Johnson v. State, 23 App. 150, 15 S. W. 647; Johnson v. State, 20 App. 419, 28 S. W. 190, 3 Am. St. Rep. 690.

An instruction that payment of the federal tax was prima facie evidence that the person paying it was engaged in selling liquor, was not erroneous where the court also charged on the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt and left the jury to determine from all the evidence whether defendant was guilty. Floresk v. State, 34 App. 314, 36 S. W. 794.

An instruction that the doubt must be reasonable and based upon sound judgment and fairly deducible from the evidence considered as a whole and that the mere possibility that defendant might be innocent would not warrant an acquittal on the ground of reasonable doubt, was calculated to impress the jury with the belief that the testimony must indicate a reasonable doubt affirmatively, when the true principle is that the criminative facts must exclude it. Abram v. State, 36 App. 44, 35 S. W. 389.

Where indictment charged that defendant was agent of bailor, it was error to instruct the jury that if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that he was the agent of the person to whom he consented to deliver the property, they were charged with a shifting of the burden of reasonable doubt. Crain v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 912.

In a prosecution for murder, the court, after defining negligent homicide in the second degree, charged that if the jury believed from the evidence beyond reasonable doubt that defendant struck deceased with a stick or a club with no apparent intention of killing him, if he did so, he was not acting in self-defense. Held not erroneous, as requiring him to prove beyond a reasonable doubt no apparent intention to kill, the graveness of negligent homicide, which would not be in the case if there was an intention to kill. Talbot v. State, 58 App. 324, 125 S. W. 906.

An instruction that, if the jury found, beyond a reasonable doubt, that while a congregation was assembled for religious worship accused wilfully disturbed the congregation by loud talking, etc., he was guilty was not erroneous, as placing the burden on him to establish his innocence. Webb v. State, 63 App. 257, 140 S. W. 95.

An instruction that if defendant did not assault the prosecuting witness or if there was a reasonable doubt as to whether he assaulted her, he must be acquitted, is not objectionable as imposing upon defendant the burden of proving that he did not commit the assault charged. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

An instruction that if the jury believed accused shot deceased, but further believed that deceased had used insulting words or conduct concerning accused's wife, thereby creating in his mind such a degree of rage, anger, etc., as to render him incapable of cool reflection, he would not be guilty of any higher offense than manslaughter on accused to prove his use of force proximate cause of death by deceased, when read, as it should be, in connection with a further charge that, if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether the offense of which accused was guilty was manslaughter or murder, then they shall find him guilty of manslaughter. Welch v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 572.

In a prosecution for following the business of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory, an instruction that if defendant did not engage in the occupation, or if he did not sell two sales, or if the offense was as many as two sales, or if the offense was as many as two sales, as to either of these, or of the defendant's guilt, he should be acquitted, is erroneous.
placing too great a burden on the defendant; the state being bound to show him guilty of manslaughter. Sain v. State (Cr. App.) 138 S. W. 565.

Where the court gave a full instruction on self-defense as applicable to the facts, and charged that the burden was on the state to establish the defendant's guilt by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, applying the doctrine of reasonable doubt to the instruction correctly defining manslaughter, and charging that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing took place under such circumstances, and not in defendant's lawful self-defense, the defendant was not objectionable as shifting the burden to defendant to show that the killing was in self-defense. Overcash v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 701.

Where defendant contended that C. killed the deceased, an instruction that, "If you have a reasonable doubt that C. killed deceased, then you will find defendant not guilty," was a proper submission of the issue, and did not shift the burden to the defendant to show that C. did the killing. Face v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 132.

Where the court in charging on manslaughter charged that, if the jury find "beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had adequate cause," etc., you will find him guilty of manslaughter, but in the next paragraph charged that if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty of homicide, but have a reasonable doubt as to whether it was murder or manslaughter, they should only find him guilty of manslaughter, the instruction was not erroneous, as not giving him the benefit of the doubt. Hendricks v. State (Cr. App.) 104 S. W. 1063.

In a case on murder in the second degree, that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused, in a sudden passion, without adequate cause, and not in defense of himself or under circumstances which would reduce it to manslaughter, killed deceased, to find him guilty of murder in the second degree, etc., is not improper, accused to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he acted in self-defense. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 733.

A charge that, if the jury had any reasonable doubt as to the guilt of accused of murder in the first or second degree, or of negligent homicide or of killing him, and if the evidence raised a reasonable doubt, accused was entitled to an acquittal, was not objectionable as shifting the burden of proof on accused. Hill v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 884.

Where accused, charged with carrying a pistol, claimed that he borrowed the pistol as he was leaving town after having a difficulty with a third person, and that while en route to his wagon to go home he met the third person and the difficulty was rekindled, a charge that before the jury could give accused the benefit of his defensive matter they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that he had a legal right to carry the pistol was erroneous, for the reasonable doubt was in his favor as he could borrow the pistol and carry it home, and if after borrowing it he was en route to his wagon to go home, the mere fact that he had a difficulty did not affect his right. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1073.

19. — Sufficiency of application of law to whole case.—The doctrine of reasonable doubt given in charge with reference to the whole case, that is, with reference to the general issue of guilty or not guilty, is ordinarily sufficient, without applying it to each and every fact in proof. And it is not required that it shall be charged with regard to an affirmative independent defense. McCall v. State, 14 App. 353; Barr v. State, 10 App. 357; Ashlock v. State, 16 App. 13; Webb v. State, 8 App. 481; King v. State, 18 App. 519; McCullough v. State, 23 App. 629, 5 S. W. 173; McCay v. State, 25 App. 233, 22 S. W. 974; Cockrell v. State, 32 App. 355, 25 S. W. 421; Loggins v. State, 32 App. 364, 24 S. W. 512; Edwards v. State, 55 App. 342, 120 S. W. 894.

The doctrine of reasonable doubt need not be extended to each paragraph of the charge if the charge as a whole properly instructs the jury on that issue. Condron v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 253; James v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 727.

And doctrine of reasonable doubt in the case of manslaughter, as applicable to the whole case, an objection that it was not applied in the instructions on threats and self-defense is untenable. Powell v. State, 28 App. 383, 13 S. W. 599.

A general charge as to reasonable doubt is ordinarily sufficient. Carson v. State, 34 App. 312, 30 S. W. 799.

In a prosecution for rape, where the court applied the doctrine of reasonable doubt to the case as a whole, an instruction charging that, if accused ravished the prosecutrix without her consent, then he should be convicted, was not erroneous in submitting the question of reasonable doubt. Wade v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 246.

Where the court applied the doctrine of reasonable doubt to the whole case and gave an approved charge on circumstantial evidence, it was not necessary to apply the law of reasonable doubt to each fact in the chain of circumstances. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 138 S. W. 115.

20. — Instructions as to different degrees.—The rule of reasonable doubt should be charged as between the different degrees of homicide. Murray v. State, 1 App. 418; Eanes v. State, 10 App. 422; McCullough v. State, 14 App. 353.

In a prosecution for an offense of degree, when the evidence requires it, the rule of reasonable doubt should be charged with respect to the degrees. McCall v. State, 14 App. 353. But it is not always essential, in such cases that such instruction should be given. Hodges v. State, 6 App. 615.

Where court charges all degrees and reasonable doubt, it is not necessary to charge reasonable doubt between the degrees—once given. Edwards v. State, 39 App. 602, 47 S. W. 984; Matthews v. State, 42 App. 31, 58 S. W. 88; Edens v. State, 41 App. 522, 55 S. W. 816.

An instruction that, in order to warrant a verdict of murder in the second degree, must believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant committed the homicide with implied malice, etc., sufficiently applies the doctrine of reasonable doubt as between murder in the second degree and manslaughter. In the absence of a request for a special instruction. Powell v. State, 28 App. 393, 13 S. W. 599.

On a prosecution for murder, an instruction to find defendant guilty of murder in the second degree if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to the degree, and of manslaughter if they have a reasonable doubt as to whether to find him guilty of murder in the second degree, on implied malice, or of manslaughter, was proper. Tate v. State, 33 S. W. 121, 35 App. 231.

The court instructed the jury that if they had a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt they would acquit him; hold, this instruction extended to each degree of the offense and is sufficient. Little v. State, 39 App. 654, 47 S. W. 984.

It was proper to instruct that if the jury believed, beyond reasonable doubt, that accused was guilty of murder, but had reasonable doubt whether it was upon a prosecution for murder or manslaughter, he should be given the benefit of the doubt, and be found guilty of no higher offense than murder in the second degree. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

While it is better to charge on reasonable doubt as between different degrees of homicide, it is sufficient if the court charges on reasonable doubt as to the whole case, where no charge was requested as to reasonable doubt between the different degrees. Simpson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 999.

In a prosecution for rape, a charge submitting that offense and requiring the jury to believe the facts constituting it beyond a reasonable doubt before they could convict, and that, in case an acquittal of that offense, the question whether defendant was guilty of an assault with intent to rape should be considered, and result in the acquittal of facts constituting that offense beyond a reasonable doubt, and submitting the law of aggravated assault as applicable to the evidence with the application of the rule of reasonable doubt to that offense, together with the usual charge on presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, in view of a construction of the offense without mitigating circumstances not objectionable in not applying the rule of reasonable doubt to each specific offense mentioned in the charge. Turner v. State, 72 App. 649, 163 S. W. 768.

The burden of proof is not on the defendant in a criminal case in the sense in which it is understood to rest on the defendant in a civil suit. Where accused pleads not guilty, the burden is on the state to overcome the legal presumption of innocence of guilt is to be determined from the whole evidence without inquiring whether it was introduced by him or the state. Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 473; Lanera v. State, 12 App. 257.

The principle that the burden never shifts (Shafer v. State, 7 App. 338) relates to the establishment of the corpus delicti and the complicity.

The presumption of innocence and the presumption of the continuance of life neutralize each other, and in a prosecution for bigamy though the first wife is shown to have been living within seven years, the burden of proof does not shift but rests on the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that she was living at the time of the second marriage. Hull v. State, 7 App. 533.

Before there can be a conviction for any degree of homicide the State must show that deceased was killed, and that such killing was unlawful. Hunter v. State, 34 App. 599, 31 S. W. 674.

In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, taking judicial notice that beer is an intoxicating liquor is not indulging a presumption against accused, who was not having sold any without any evidence being introduced that beer is an intoxicating liquor. Moreno v. State, 64 App. 669, 143 S. W. 156.

In a prosecution for homicide, the burden is on the state to show that a threat by accused was directed against the deceased. Maclin v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 961.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, art. 509b, for attempting to procure a woman to enter a house of ill fame, the burden of proof was on the State. Currence v. State, 72 App. 143, 161 S. W. 478.

In a trial for homicide growing out of defendant's remark, provoking a renewal of a difficulty, defendant did not have the burden of showing that he went on a peaceful mission, such burden, as all other issues in a criminal case, being upon the state. Mason v. State, 72 App. 501, 182 S. W. 66.

On the question of sanity, under a plea of guilty in a prosecution for homicide, the burden of proof is on the state to show that accused was sane at the time he committed the offense. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 975.

22. — Non-age.—See notes under Pen. Code, arts. 34, 35.

23. — When on defendant.—See Pen. Code, art. 52.

25. — Instructions.—The general charge should include an instruction that, if the jury do not believe the defendant guilty, they should acquit, and this is especially true when the evidence is conflicting, or does not clearly establish the guilt of defendant. Lindsay v. State, 1 App. 327; Spears v. State, 2 App. 244; Steagald v. State, 20 App. 464, 3 S. W. 711; Pierce v. State (Cr. App.) 23 S. W. 637.

But where the evidence clearly establishes guilt the instruction is unnecessary. Rideus v. State, 41 Tex. 199.

It is error to refuse to instruct the jury to the effect that “the burden of proof never shifts to the defendant, but is upon the state throughout to first establish every constituent element of the offense.” Horn v. State, 39 App.
It is error to refuse a charge that the burden of proof is always upon the state in a capital case. Black v. State, 1 App. 368; or even in cases of theft. Chapman v. State, 1 App. 728.

A charge which directs the jury to acquit, if they can reasonably conclude from the evidence that the defendant is innocent, is erroneous. The jury need never conclude, reasonably or otherwise, that the defendant is innocent, but only that the evidence is insufficient to establish his guilt. McMillan v. State, 7 App. 142; Myers v. State, Id. 610; Smith v. State, 9 App. 159; Robertson v. State, Id. 299; Blocker v. State, Id. 279; Wallace v. State, Id. 299.

Where the charge is in the ordinary and technical terms and applies the doctrine of presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, the court need not go further and charge that the burden of proof never shifts. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 887.

A charge "that defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, and, if the jury have a reasonable doubt of his guilt, they should acquit him," sufficiently charges that the burden of proof is on the state. Huggins v. State, 42 App. 564, 60 S. W. 52.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, a charge that if defendant assaulted prosecutrix, but at the time of her doing she had made an attack on him which caused a reasonable expectation or fear of death or bodily injury, and that, acting under such fear, he assaulted her, then he should be acquitted, is erroneous, as placing the burden of proof on defendant to establish his defense. Stuart v. State, 57 App. 592, 124 S. W. 655.

In a trial for assault with intent to murder, an instruction that, if from the act or words of prosecutor there was created in the mind of accused a reasonable apprehension that she was in danger of losing, or of being caused serious bodily harm, she had the right to defend herself from such danger, viewed from her standpoint, etc., and that if accused committed the assault as a means of defense, i.e., that she was in due course of law acquitted, coupled with a charge that an accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt, was not erroneous, as shifting the burden of proof and requiring accused to establish affirmatively the facts constituting her defense. Edwards v. State, 58 App. 343, 125 S. W. 834.

In a prosecution for theft, where the state introduced exculpatory statements of accused, which were proven to be untrue and which accused denied making, a charge that the state had put such statements in evidence, and was bound thereby, unless they were disproved, was properly refused. Roberts v. State, 64 App. 135, 141 S. W. 235.

In a murder trial, an instruction that if accused in sudden passion, as explained in the charge, and not in self-defense, aroused by adequate cause, unlawfully shot decedent, he should be convicted of manslaughter, was not erroneous as shifting the burden of proof. Oldham v. State, 63 App. 527, 142 S. W. 13.

Where accused, on trial for murder by arsenio poisoning, showed that decedent might have been poisoned accidentally by eating food containing poison, the refusal to charge that the burden was on the state to show the guilt of accused was erroneous. Orner v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 925.

Defendant's requested instruction that the burden of proof is always on the state, and never shifts to defendant, should be given on a prosecution for mixing poison with a drink with intent to kill, it being a very close question whether defendant had anything to do with the matter. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 250.

An instruction that if deceased had attacked or was about to attack accused, etc., in addition to the charge on presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, immediately followed by a charge that in all criminal cases the burden of proof is on the state, was not objectionable as shifting the burden on defendant. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 766.

In a prosecution for the theft of cattle, an instruction that, if they were stolen as charged and found in the possession of defendants shortly thereafter, such possession and its explanation, if any, would be proper for the consideration of the jury on the guilt or innocence of the defendants under all the circumstances was objectionable, since it is the guilt and not the innocence that is to be determined under such circumstances. McKnight v. State, 70 App. 470, 156 S. W. 1188.

In a prosecution for making a false entry in an account book, a charge that if the entry was false and made by deceased, but was correct and was a proper entry, and not made with intent to defraud, he should be acquitted, is not erroneous in placing upon accused the burden of proving his defense. Pope v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 150.

Art. 785. [766] Jury are the judges of facts.—The jury, in all cases, are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight to be given to the testimony, except where it is provided by law that proof of any particular fact is to be taken as either conclusive or presumptive proof of the existence of another fact, or where the law directs that a certain degree of weight is to be attached to a certain species of evidence. [O. C. 643.]

See arts. 734, ante, 842, post.

See, ante, art. 128, as to charge of the court upon the evidence.
1. Comparative weight of positive and negative evidence. — See notes to art. 783, ante.

2. Jury as judges of the facts in general. — The jury are the judges of the issues of fact. Davis v. State, 64 App. S. 141 W. 264; Roberts v. State, 57 App. 159, 122 S. W. 385.

If a question arise as to the name of the assaulted party, the charge should submit it to the jury. Bell v. State, 25 Tex. 574.

The jury are not bound to give equal credit to the whole of a confession, but it is for them to decide how much of it under all the circumstances of the case they will believe. Riley v. State, 4 App. 538.

Question in prosecution for robbery as to whether the money was obtained by assault and violence or by putting witness in fear of bodily injury was properly submitted to the jury. Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 1018.

Where an accused, who pleaded not guilty, was properly tried by jury, it was improper for the court to instruct a verdict of guilty, even though the evidence warranted such finding. Manning v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 938.

3. Weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses. — The jury are the judges of the weight to be given the witnesses and the weight to be given to the testimony. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 162, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1141; Edgar v. State, 59 App. 141, 129 S. W. 141; Nash v. State, 61 App. 259, 134 S. W. 709; Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1096; Crowell v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 570; Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 975.

The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts proved and of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to the testimony. Newton v. State, 58 App. 516, 135 S. W. 908; Coffman v. State, 62 App. 38, 130 S. W. 775; Hernandez v. State, 64 App. 79, 141 S. W. 268; Hightower v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1168; Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

The trial court and the jury are the exclusive judges of the testimony, and the weight to be given thereto, and the credibility of the witnesses. Trimble v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 929; Johnson v. State, 64 App. 399, 142 S. W. 589.

Where the evidence, if not conflicting, at least tended to establish different and opposite conclusions, it was for the jury to find their verdict upon the evidence which in their judgment was entitled to credit. Williams v. State, 41 Tex. 288.

The jury are the judges of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, and, where the state's evidence is sufficient to prove a case, they have a right to believe the witnesses on either side. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 905.

The credibility of witnesses is for the jury, and an issue which has any evidence in its support may not be withdrawn from the jury. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 183 S. W. 331.

The jury is the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, and may properly discuss their testimony in the jury room. Claussen v. State, 70 App. 607, 157 S. W. 477.

It is the peculiar province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, and hence an instruction that the jury could not "weigh" the testimony was improper. Barrow v. State, 71 App. 549, 160 S. W. 458.

The proposition that "the witnesses being equal in credibility the greater number may decide," is unsound. The jury may give credibility to the witness against the positive testimony of two or more other witnesses. A mere numerical preponderance is unimportant. Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 62 Am. Dec. 560; Cox v. State, 22 Tex. 410; Farrish v. State, 45 Tex. 51; Brown v. State, 1 App. 184; Blake v. State, 3 App. 331; Simpson v. State, 1 App. 425. But in cases involving the issue of the sanity of the defendant, the jury would be warranted in giving more credit to the opinion of the many than the few. Web v. State, 5 App. 596.

The exclusive judges of the facts proved, and the weight to be given to the testimony, except where the law has otherwise provided. Jones v. State, 5 App. 86.

The weight to be given to the opinions of witnesses as to whether defendant had sufficient time to understand the nature and illegality of his acts, was a matter for the jury to consider and determine. Carr v. State, 24 App. 562, 7 S. W. 328, 5 Am. St. Rep. 965.

In a prosecution for robbery, where an accomplice testified positively as to defendant's participation, and was sufficiently corroborated to support a conviction, 687 the court properly refused to instruct an acquittal. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 262.

The jury must, if possible, reconcile all conflicts of evidence, and if they cannot, they may credit such testimony as, in their opinion, is most entitled to belief. They are not bound to believe the testimony of a witness merely because he is uncontradicted, nor to disbelieve it because he has been impeached. It is their province to determine what testimony shall be believed and what shall be disregarded. Riley v. State, 4 App. 129; Taylor v. State, 3 App. 1; Jones v. State, Id. 86; Brady v. State, Id. 343; Satterwhite v. State, 6 App. 609; Coward v. State, Id. 59; Cordova v. State, Id. 448; Cooper v. State, 7 App. 194; Seal v. State, 25 Tex. 491; Addison v. State, 3 App. 49; Johnson v. State, 5 App. 423.

It is for the jury and not for the court to judge as to the credibility to be given dying declarations, and it was error to charge that when such declarations were admissible they were the highest testimony known and must receive full faith and credit. Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 266.

It is unquestionably the privilege of the jury to give such credence to the witnesses as they see fit and they are not required and cannot be coerced by the court to regard testimony as true which they believe to be false or give credence to a witness who they are firmly convinced is not entitled to credence. Wharton v. State, 45 Tex. 2. The weight of the testimony of prosecutrix, based on the grounds that it is unreasonable in certain particulars, and because of contradictions of her testimony by W. Bailey v. State, 63 App. 394, 141 S. W. 224.

Though the main witness for the state on a trial for perjury may have been contradicted, the court may not, as a matter of law, charge that he is an incredible witness, but must leave that question to the jury. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 883.

In a prosecution for burglary, the credibility of defendant and of the officers testifying against him held for the jury. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

6. Uncontroverted evidence.—The jury is not at liberty to arbitrarily disregard uncontroverted, unimpeached, probable testimony. While it is the province of the jury to judge of the credibility of testimony, they must exercise judgment, and not will merely, in doing so. Satterwhite v. State, 6 App. 609; Jones v. State, 5 App. 86; Fisher v. State, 4 App. 181; Chester v. State, 1 App. 762; Conner v. State, 34 Tex. 659.

In a prosecution for murder, where there was conflicting evidence as to whether a witness handed defendant a pistol with which to shoot deceased, the court could not charge that such witness was an accomplice; the question being for the jury. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 936.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the state relied on circumstantial evidence and the presumption arising from accused's possession of recently stolen property, his bare explanation that he had purchased the property from a peddler is not sufficient to authorize a peremptory instruction for acquittal, but the case should have been submitted to the jury. Johnson v. State, 70 App. 621, 158 S. W. 284.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, where the evidence of the witnesses for the state, if believed, justified a verdict of guilty, though the testimony for accused would support a different finding, this contested issue of fact was properly submitted to the jury. Smith v. State, 72 App. 296, 162 S. W. 835.

Where five witnesses, in a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, swore that accused had the pistol, while accused and three other witnesses swore that he did not, the question was properly submitted to the jury, and their verdict will not be disturbed, especially in view of the charge on reasonable doubt given at accused's request. Uloa v. State, 72 App. 41, 153 S. W. 732.

In a prosecution for homicide, where the evidence on alibi was conflicting, the question was for the jury. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

Where, notwithstanding a plea of guilty, there was evidence pro and con on the issue whether defendant was insane at the time of the killing, the court erred in instructing the jury that, under the facts, they should find defendant sane. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 575.

8. Inferences.—Though it is the province of the jury to find the facts, they may not deduce from a given or admitted state of facts the more unfavorable deduction unless the favorable deduction is excluded as unreasonable. Croneans v. State, 56 App. 611, 129 S. W. 1129.

9. Presumptions.—Presumptions of fact are always for the consideration of the jury, and the court must not instruct that they are evidence of guilt. Sheffield v. State, 43 Tex. 378.

10. Judge sitting as jury.—When a jury is waived, as it may be in a misdemeanor trial, the court takes the place of a jury, and must determine the facts as well as the law of the case. Briggs v. State, 6 App. 144.
11. Directing verdict.—Refusal of the court to direct, on request, a verdict of acquittal, is not reversible error, though the evidence fails to make out a case, or shows affirmatively that accused is not guilty. Wilkerson v. State, 60 App. 388, 131 S. W. 1105, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 126.

12. Weighing evidence.—While the jury may not consider any particular fact known by them unless they testify to it at the trial, they may judge the weight of the evidence, or their own general knowledge, as ordinary men, of the subject of the inquiry. Molten v. State, 71 App. 130, 158 S. W. 550.

13. Instructions.—It is preferable to give the charge in the language of the statute, ordinarily omitting the exceptions. It was error to go further and lay down rules enabling the jury to call the testimony against defendant and find a verdict upon it, and arbitrarily reject the evidence produced on behalf of defendant. Wilbanks v. State, 10 App. 612.

Evidence held to demand an instruction that the jury were the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight to be given to the testimony. Jackson v. State, 22 App. 442, 3 S. W. 111.

A jury in a felony case shall always be instructed that they are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight to be given to the testimony. Barnes v. State, 25 App. 189, 4 S. W. 582.

The jury must be instructed that they are the judges of the facts. Weatherford v. State, 31 App. 530, 21 S. W. 251, 37 Am. St. Rep. 828.

It is error to refuse to charge that the jury is the exclusive judge of the credibility of witnesses, of the weight to be given their testimony, and of what is a reasonable doubt, when such doubt is specially requested. Lensing v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 572.

Where the jury were instructed that they were the exclusive judges of the evidence, and of the weight of, and the credibility of, the witnesses, and that what witnesses and how much of their testimony they would believe was left entirely to their minds and consciences, though unnecessary, was not error, as being on the weight of the evidence. Collins v. State, 46 S. W. 965, 39 App. 441.

14. Setting aside verdict.—Where there is no testimony to support the verdict; or, where the evidence is insufficient to rebut the presumption of innocence; or, where the verdict is contrary to the evidence, it will be set aside, though it is with reluctance that the court will disturb a verdict when there is any evidence to sustain it. Where, however, the verdict is manifestly wrong, and it is clear that injustice has been done the defendant, it will be set aside, though there is sufficient evidence. Walker v. State, 3 App. 335; Lockhart v. State, Id. 567; Blake v. State, Id. 581; King v. State, 4 App. 256; Jones v. State, Id. 426; Templeton v. State, 5 App. 338; Gamble v. State, Id. 421; Johnson v. State, Id. 423; Barnett v. State, Id. 113; Tollett v. State, 41 Tex. 95; Jones v. State, 7 App. 457. See, also, the following other decisions: Addison v. State, 3 App. 40; Bultzeuger v. State, 4 App. 552; Reardon v. State, Id. 602; Ridout v. State, 6 App. 249.

15. Review of questions of fact.—The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and of the weight of the testimony, and the court on appeal from a verdict or judgment on the ground of the insufficiency of the testimony to sustain it may only determine whether there is sufficient evidence, if, believed, to sustain it. Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 827; Whitehead v. State, 61 App. 558, 137 S. W. 356; Calderon v. State, 65 App. 699, 141 S. W. 251; Trumble v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 482; Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 167; Cain v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 147; Vick v. State, 71 App. 50, 159 S. W. 50; Robertson v. State, 70 App. 897, 159 S. W. 713; Calyon v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 591.

On appeal from a judgment of conviction, the court, in passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence, will consider only the incriminatory evidence, to ascertain whether, as a matter of law, it is sufficient, though the testimony for accused, if true, justifies an acquittal. Hearne v. State, 73 App. 390, 165 S. W. 596; Shamblin v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 718.

With the facts, an appellate court has but little concern except to see that the case went to the jury on proper and legal evidence and under proper instructions and that there is a sufficient amount of legal evidence to support the verdict. Addison v. State, 5 App. 40.

A verdict and judgment will not be disturbed on the facts unless clearly and manifestly wrong. Lockhart v. State, 3 App. 567.

A conviction will be set aside on appeal when it appears that it was not had upon evidence sufficient to support it. Jones v. State, 5 App. 86.

If the verdict of the defendant is not made to appear to a reasonable certainty, it is the duty of the court of criminal appeals to reverse the judgment. Mitchell v. State, 35 App. 575, 28 S. W. 475.

When the State's evidence is certain and that of defendant is uncertain the verdict will not be set aside. Lemax v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 999.

While the trial court should not hesitate in a proper case to set aside the verdict of the jury, though it is for them to determine the facts, the court on appeal is justified in setting aside the verdict only where it is without any evidence to support it. Smith v. State, 57 App. 111, 123 S. W. 389.

Where the record discloses a total absence of testimony to support the verdict, the court on appeal will set it aside. Walls v. State, 59 App. 340, 123 S. W. 1117.

The appellate court has power to inquire if there is any testimony, or that it is so sufficient to authorize a finding therein against the great preponderance of the testimony. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 616.
Where no error is pointed out in a motion for a new trial, a conviction will not be reversed on the strength of evidence, unless there is a preponderance of evidence, or it is so improbable that no unbiased person would be justified in arriving at the conclusion that defendant was guilty of the offense charged. Wooldridge v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 556.

An objection that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction presents for review on appeal only the question whether there is any evidence in the record which will justify the verdict. Lawless v. State, 72 App. 568, 128 S. W. 896.

The court, in passing on the question whether an issue is raised by the testimony, must view the testimony in its as favorable light to him as possible. McCampbell v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 345.

Where, though the evidence is conflicting, there was ample testimony, if believed, to support the verdict, a conviction will not be disturbed on appeal. Woodard v. State, 58 App. 412, 126 S. W. 271; Gonzales v. State, 62 App. 611, 25 S. W. 731; Cooper v. State, 72 App. 645, 163 S. W. 424.

Where the evidence for the state, if believed by the jury, is sufficient, a conviction will not be disturbed, unless no unbiased jury could have arrived at such a verdict. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 342; Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 871.

Where, in a prosecution for disturbing religious worship, there was some evidence justifying a finding of guilt, the judgment of conviction will be affirmed. Buckley v. State, 57 App. 284, 122 S. W. 546.

Where the question whether accused intended to sell whisky or was not for the jury, and the issue was fairly presented, the verdict will not be disturbed on appeal. McNorton v. State, 60 App. 449, 127 S. W. 188.

Where, though the testimony is unsatisfactory, yet, if true, would with the facts support the verdict, it will not be disturbed. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1062.

Where the state's evidence, if believed, is sufficient to support the verdict, it is conclusive on appeal, though contradicted and impeached by the testimony of accused. Walls v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 130.

A conviction for selling or furnishing alcohol in violation of the prohibition law will not be disturbed because of conflict in the evidence, where there was evidence of the purchase of the whisky from accused. Clay v. State, 73 App. 78, 161 S. W. 1.

When the punishment inflicted by the jury is within that prescribed by the Legislature, and the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction, it will not be disturbed on appeal. Boll v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1150.

The exclusive weight of the credibility of the judge and the weight of the testimony, and unless the testimony, considered in its most favorable light for the state, will not justify the verdict, the court on appeal will not disturb it. Sanders v. State, 63 App. 358, 140 S. W. 103; Roberts v. State, 60 App. 20, 129 S. W. 611; Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 139.

It is the province of the jury to weigh the evidence, and unless it appears that their finding is against the evidence it will not be disturbed on appeal. Shaw v. State, 27 Tex. 750; Baltzer v. State, 4 App. 552; March v. State, 3 App. 355.

An appellate court will not undertake to control the action of the district court unless there has been something more than a mere preponderance in the number of witnesses who testify to facts inconsistent with guilt. Blake v. State, 3 App. 551.

The district judge and the jury are in a better position to decide properly the weight and degree of credit to be attached to the testimony of the witnesses than the appellate court can be by an inspection of the record. Reardon v. State, 4 App. 602.

The errors of juries must be most palpable and apparent to justify an appellate court in reversing a judgment because they have given credence to one set of witnesses and disbelieved others. Cox v. State, 52 Tex. 610.

Being the judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight which should be given their testimony, the decision of the jury as to which of the theories advanced by defendant and the state is in fact true, is conclusive on appeal. Crow v. State, 33 App. 364, 28 S. W. 299.

A conviction will not be disturbed on appeal, though the court may believe that the preponderance as to defendant's alibi was in his favor. Willingham v. State, 62 App. 55, 136 S. W. 470.

The jury in the trial court are the judges of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony; and a conviction will not be disturbed on appeal, unless there is comparatively no evidence, or the great preponderance of the evidence is in favor of accused. Roberts v. State, 64 App. 135, 141 S. W. 236.

Where there are two theories, one favorable and the other unfavorable to accused, and the unfavorable theory shows a violation of the law, the court on appeal will not disturb a conviction, as the credibility of witnesses is for the jury. Jordan v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 851.

Code Cr. Proc. 1911, arts. 734, 786, prohibit the Court of Criminal Appeals from passing on the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony on appeal from a conviction. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 908.

Term of the judges: The credibility of witnesses, where accused's testimony is directly contradicted by that of two other witnesses, a finding of the jury will not be disturbed on appeal. McNndo v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 255. Where, if believed, was sufficient to support a conviction of assault to murder, and the court submitted the defense of absolute justification, a conviction would not be reversed as against the evidence, though it appeared to the appellate court that the evidence predominated in favor of the defendant. Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 865.

The jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of their testimony, and the court on appeal will consider only whether the evidence is sufficient as a matter of law if believed to sustain a conviction. Hogue v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 865.

Where defendant gives more than one explanation, the conflict in such statements may be considered by the jury in determining whether they are reasonable and probably true; and, under such circumstances, its verdict will not be reversed on appeal. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 998.

A verdict depending on the question of veracity between two witnesses cannot be reviewed. Wonnuck v. State. 70 App. 424, 157 S. W. 496.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, where defendant claimed that he was taking it to be repaired and showed that the gun was in part defective, a conviction cannot be disturbed on appeal, where the jury were charged that defendant had the right to carry the pistol to the shop for repairs and, when repaired, to return it to them; the jury having disregarded defendant’s testimony. Decker v. State, 72 App. 88, 160 S. W. 1192.

On a trial before the court without a jury on the charge of unlawfully carrying a pistol, the court seeing the witnesses and their manner of testifying is the judge of credibility and this court has no power to say that he shall believe or disbelieve the testimony of defendant and his witnesses, even though there was no direct contradicting testimony on the part of the state. Vincent v. State, 72 App. 133, 152 S. W. 840.

The credibility of the witnesses is for the jury, and the appellate court cannot, where the state’s testimony was not unreasonable, reverse a conviction on the ground that the testimony on which it was based was not worthy of the belief. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 435.

A verdict of guilty, on conflicting evidence, is conclusive on appeal, and the Court of Criminal Appeals can only determine whether accused was tried according to law. Chancey v. State, 58 App. 217, 124 S. W. 426; Millican v. State, 61 App. 410, 146 S. W. 1136.

A verdict of the jury on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal; the question of the veracity of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony belong to the jury. Curry v. State, 72 App. 448, 192 S. W. 831; Newcom v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 933.

When the evidence is conflicting and a balanced Court of Appeals will not disturb the verdict and judgment. Turner v. State, 57 App. 451, 35 S. W. 87.
In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, where the evidence of the accused is conflicting, while the evidence for the defendant, if true, constitutes a good defense, a verdict of guilty cannot be set aside on appeal. Anderson v. State, 61 App. 5, 133 S. W. 690.

Where the defendant's witnesses, if believed, established a case against accused, whose evidence was contradicted by the State witnesses, the court, and the trial court must determine the facts, and the court, on appeal, will not reverse a conviction. Sparks v. State, 64 App. 610, 142 S. W. 1183.

Where accused's explanation of his possession of the pistol she was accused of unlawfully carrying was contradicted by the evidence offered by the State, which, if true, was sufficient to support a conviction, the verdict will not be disturbed on appeal. Stallworth v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 255.

A conviction for a crime, where the evidence conflicted so that a conviction or acquittal would be sustained if the jury believed the evidence, the appellate court cannot disturb a verdict of conviction. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 808.

Though the evidence for defendant would have sustained an acquittal, where the evidence was conflicting, the appellate court cannot disturb their verdict. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 936.

Where, on a trial for homicide, the evidence for the State showed a cold-blooded killing, and accused's connection therewith was shown by the testimony of an accomplice, which was corroborated, the verdict could not be disturbed, though accused's testimony tended somewhat persuasively to show that the killing was by the accused. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 75.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, where the testimony was conflicting as to whether the accused struck the party assaulted with a rock, the question was one of fact, and having been fairly and fully submitted to the jury, the verdict will not be disturbed. McCraw v. State, 73 App. 45, 163 S. W. 967.

Where the State's case presented ample evidence to sustain a conviction of manslaughter, and accused's case presented the issue of self-defense, the jury's verdict, convicting accused of manslaughter, was conclusive on the facts. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 743.

19. Successive verdicts.—A verdict supported by evidence, and in accordance with the verdict of the jury on a former trial, will not be disturbed on appeal. Smith v. State, 61 App. 225, 135 S. W. 533.

20. Findings of trial judge.—Where a prosecution for disturbing religious worship was tried without a jury, the findings of the trial court on an issue of fact will not be disturbed on appeal. Buzan v. State, 59 App. 213, 123 S. W. 385; Hooper v. State, 62 App. 105, 136 S. W. 790.

The findings of the trial court on a motion for new trial on the ground of the jury's verdict being disturbed on appeal, when there is evidence to sustain them, notwithstanding contradictory evidence. Kemper v. State, 57 App. 355, 123 S. W. 131.

Where a jury is waived, and accused is tried by the judge, it being the judge's duty to determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony, a conviction will not be set aside on appeal, if there is sufficient testimony to authorize a conviction. Kirby v. State, 61 App. 1, 133 S. W. 652.

Where defendant in a misdemeanor case waives a trial, and the findings of fact by the trial court are affirmed on appeal, the verdict, if true, is not conclusive as to the charge of murder. Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 985.

A finding by the trial judge on conflicting evidence as to alleged representation made by accused's former attorney inducing a plea of guilty was conclusive on appeal. Payne v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 171.

A finding by the trial judge, sitting without a jury, made upon conflicting evidence, is conclusive on appeal, and accused cannot have it set aside, upon the theory that the testimony is false. A conviction should be reversed, merely because he denied the testimony of the prosecuting witness. Nagle v. State, 71 App. 255, 158 S. W. 530.

Where the jury gave credence to the two witnesses for the State in preference to the nine witnesses for defendant, whose testimony, if true, established an alibi, and the trial court refused to set aside the verdict, the appellate court could not interfere. Parrish v. State, 45 Tex. 51.

A verdict which has received the approval of the trial court will not be interfered with in the absence of abuse of discretion. O'Hara v. State, 57 App. 577, 124 S. W. 95.

Where there is evidence in the record to sustain the verdict, the appellate court will not, merely because of impeaching testimony, set aside the action of the trial court, affirming a verdict assessing defendant's guilt. Pratt v. State, 59 App. 167, 127 S. W. 827.

A conviction for rape, supported by the testimony of prosecutrix and corroborating circumstances, and approved by the trial judge, will not be disturbed on appeal merely because of contradictory evidence. Martin v. State, 73 App. 545, 192 S. W. 579.
Art. 787. [767] Judge shall not discuss evidence offered, etc.—In ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, the judge shall not discuss or comment upon the weight of the same or its bearing in the case, but shall simply decide whether or not it is admissible; nor shall he, at any stage of the proceedings previous to the return of a verdict, make any remark calculated to convey to the jury his opinion of the case.

See art. 736, ante, 842, post.

1. Remarks of judge in general.—No intimation of the opinion of the court of the truth or falsity of any part of the evidence should be communicated to the jury. Pharr v. State, 7 App. 472; Johnson v. State, 9 App. 558.

See an instance in which it was held that the judge violated the preceding article, in the prejudice of the defendant. Moncalo v. State, 12 App. 371.

It is error for the trial judge to violate the preceding article, but material error unless it be made to appear that it operated to the prejudice of the defendant. Rodriguez v. State, 77 App. 501, 5 S. W. 255. In ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, should severely abstain from anything beyond a simple announcement of the ruling. The court, in a trial of a case before it, is presumed to be, and should be, an impartial arbiter as to the legal rights of the parties, and if competent evidence is submitted to the jury, it is their exclusive province to consider that evidence, without any expression of opinion by the court as to whether it is of much or of little value. Wilson v. State, 17 App. 525.

On the jury stating, after being out 19 hours, that they had not disagreed as to the law, the court remarked: "It seems strange you would fall to agree, when there is so little conflict in the evidence. If it was a long, complicated case, with conflicting testimony, the court could readily see a cause for failure to agree." And they retired, and found a verdict of guilty. Held prejudicial error. Kelly v. State, 33 App. 31, 24 S. W. 295.

It is not improper for the judge to ask the jury in its room whether or not it would soon reach a verdict. Priest v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 611.

On trial for aggravated assault upon a female it is error for the court to remark that he is not sure but that the assault is one with intent to rape. Price v. State, 35 App. 501, 24 S. W. 622.

On cross-examination, defendant was asked whether he had ever been convicted and sent to the penitentiary. The court sustained an objection to the question, with the remark that the district attorney might go into the matter, but would do so at his peril. Held, that defendant was not prejudiced by the question, or the court's remark. Clemmons v. State, 39 App. 275, 45 S. W. 911, 73 Am. St. Rep. 923.

A statement by the court in the jury's presence, while accused's motion for a continuance was being considered, that a witness named therein had been indicted, is not objectionable, where it was made in response to an inquiry of accused. Gregory v. State (Cr. App.) 48 S. W. 577, denying rehearing. Id. (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 1017.

The action of the court in cross-examining accused with reference to evidence first properly rejected and subsequently admitted and then withdrawn, in such a manner as to discredit him before the jury, by indicating that it did not believe him, was in violation of this article. McMahan v. State, 61 App. 489, 155 S. W. 658.

Where the court remarked, on sustaining an objection to evidence, that it was the "rankest kind of hearsay testimony," there was no error. Yates v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1064.

Where accused's counsel was permitted to cross-examine the witness as rigidly as he desired, the court's remark, when he desired to call the prosecutrix, that the state enclosed, which was not erroneous, accused with an accusation to the prosecutrix as his own witness. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 523.

Where the court overruled an objection to a question directing prosecutrix to answer it if she could, and the prosecutrix stated she did not know how, the action of the court was not erroneous as suggesting the answer, where it did not appear that the prosecutrix could have answered such question. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

2. Examination of witnesses by judge.—Examination of witnesses in general, see notes to Vernon's Syl. Civ. St. 1914. art. 3837.

It was not error for the court to ask a witness who was testifying relative to dying declarations as to the condition of mind of deceased at the time he made the declarations, the court believing it possible that deceased's mentality was impaired by his drinking condition. Chalk v. State, 55 App. 115, 32 S. W. 344.

A prior question by the state on the same subject was objected to by defendant.
on the ground that it was leading, whereupon the judge prepared the proper questions, sat down, wrote them from his seat, and handed the questions to the interpreter, and told him to ask the questions as written. Held, that such conduct of the judge was not prejudicial to defendant. Malcek v. State, 33 App. 14, 24 S. W. 417.

The trial judge should refrain from the examination of witnesses, though such examination is not cause for reversal, unless prejudicial to the appellant. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1157.

It is not for the court to interrogate witnesses when it is not claimed that by his conduct he influenced the jury. Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 942.

Only when the trial judge is so inexperienced that he cannot understand the law, he should not, when evidence is being detailed before the jury, propound questions to witnesses. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1006.

On a trial for rape, where the prosecuting witness was a young, inexperienced girl, it was not error for the trial judge to examine her for the purpose of making clear certain features of her testimony, where his questions and conduct did not indicate to the jury his opinion of the merits of the case. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 512.

3. Comments on evidence.—In passing upon the admission or rejection of testimonial evidence or of objections to same, the court should refrain from expressing any opinion as to its weight or effect.

In discussing the admissibility of evidence in the presence of the jury, the court remarked to counsel: “Has it not already been sufficiently shown that a conspiracy existed to admit the evidence?” Held, a violation of this article. Crook v. State, 27 App. 195, 11 S. W. 444.

Evidence of defendant’s skill in shooting should have gone to the jury without comment as to its weight, where he was charged with shooting with intent to kill, but did not hit, and claimed that he was shooting to alarm merely. Moore v. State, 33 App. 396, 26 S. W. 403.

Upon the question of the materiality of the evidence offered by the State it is objectionable for the court to remark that he deems such evidence materially.

The court in the presence of the jury remarked, there is no higher evidence of a good reputation than the fact that such reputation has never been discussed; held, improper as being on the weight of the evidence. McCullar v. State, 36 App. 215, 26 S. W. 585, 61 Am. St. Rep. 517.

Where one prosecuted for illegal sales desires, on the theory that the state’s witnesses are mistaken as to the place they got the liquor, to introduce evidence as to the furnishings of two saloons near the place, it is error for the court to remark that one of them was not then running: as, if he is to testify, he should be first sworn.

Deen v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 193.

A remark by the court, in ruling upon an objection to a question, that he did not think it was material, but would permit it, was improper, as a comment by the judge on the effect of the evidence. Molton v. State, 36 App. 86, 124 S. W. 510.

In a prosecution for theft, where defendant produced a witness who testified that defendant was paid money a day or two before the alleged offense, which he had won on cards, and the prosecuting attorney asked the witness if it was not a fact that gamblers sometimes have money, and sometimes do not, it was error for the court to remark, in overruling defendant’s objections to this question, that it was the most material question that had been asked by the state. Blacker v. State, 55 App. 216, 123 S. W. 499.

Where the witnesses were under the rule, and one of them testified to a fact, and him, the remark of the judge, with a hint of criticism, as to the presence of the jury that the former witness had testified to the fact and that that settled it was in violation of this article. Newton v. State, 58 App. 315, 125 S. W. 906.

The remarks of the court on overruling objections to questions to a witness on redirect examination, that accused had refused to cross-examine, that after bringing out a part of the facts, was not objectionable as a comment on the weight of the evidence, or as giving his view of the testimony in violation of the statute.

Remarks by the court in excluding a question on cross-examination of a state’s witness as to whether he knew what the usual price of a half pint of whisky was at the time he bought from accused, that he did not consider that the price paid for the whisky, or what it was worth, was material to the case one way or the other, were improper as a direct comment on the weight of the testimony. Wal­ling v. State, 59 App. 279, 125 S. W. 624.

A remark by the trial judge upon objection to testimony in a homicide case that he had negro hair, “I do not know whether it takes an expert to tell about hair,” was not a comment on the evidence. Williams v. State, 60 App. 453, 132 S. W. 345.

The remarks of the trial judge in response to a motion to strike out the evidence of prosecutrix that she, under 15 years of age, had not had intercourse with any one but accused on trial for rape, that the evidence might not be admissible under the law, but that it ought to be, and that the evidence was in, and that accused could produce his authorities and the court would strike it out if the law required, were only a comment on the admissibility of the evidence and not an expression of opinion of the guilt or innocence of accused. Wofford v. State, 69 App. 624, 132 S. W. 929.

The case being one of circumstantial evidence, the remarks of the court, during the trial and while the question whether the law of circumstantial evidence should be charged was being discussed, that he did not know whether or not he would so charge was erroneous, as tending to make the jury believe he thought the facts sufficiently cogent to preclude the idea of charging on circumstantial evidence.

Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1191.
Where, in a prosecution for murder of a child by whipping it, the testimony reflected the views of witnesses who heard but did not see the whipping, a remark by the court "that a person could tell a thing as well by hearing * * * as seeing it", while true, was improper as tending to express an opinion on the weight of testimony. Betts v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 677.

As a witness had testified that a third person made a confession while he and accused were both under arrest, and that accused interrupted, and asked him what he was getting from the police department for the information, the court, in the presence and hearing of the jury, gave an opinion which he ordered incorporated in the record recalling the offer of such evidence, and holding that by his remark accused joined in the confession, and that the testimony would be admitted. Held, that the delivery of this opinion to the jury or in its presence and hearing was improper. Bradshaw v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 219.

And it is evident to compel a prosecution for abandonment after seduction and marriage, to give the names of her former fiancés, a remark of the court in admitting the evidence that he did not think it was serious, and the jury should weigh it for what it was worth, was not a comment on the evidence. Quals v. State, 73 App. 212, 165 S. W. 202.

A witness, in a prosecution for keeping a gaming house, testified, on questions by the court that he had spent much of his time on the premises, but had seen no gambling, whereupon the court ordered his arrest until a perjury indictment could be filed against him. He was immediately taken by the sheriff, led from the witness stand in the presence of the jury, and carried to jail. Defendant had pleaded not guilty to the gambling charge and had also moved for a suspended sentence. The statutes provide that the jury are the exclusive judges of the facts and the credibility and weight of the evidence and that the court shall rule without expressing his conclusion or belief as to the testimony. Held, that the court's action in arresting the witness constituted an expression of his opinion on the weight of his testimony in open court. Caruth v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 973.

In a prosecution for seduction, where the date of the intercourse was in controversy, a remark by the trial judge, in sustaining the state's objection to cross-examination of the prosecutrix, that the question asked had been asked the previous witness, was not error, but was a comment on the weight of the evidence: it appearing that the question in fact had been asked the preceding day. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

4. Remarks in absence of jury.—Pending the discussion and decision of the admission of testimony, the jury should have been in the court-room. Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444; Watts v. State, 18 App. 281.

A remark by the court, in the absence of the jury, that he did not see the bearing of certain offered proof on the case, was not error: the evidence excluded being irrelevant. Irvin v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 589.

5. Expression of opinion as to accused's guilt.—A statement by the trial judge addressed to the attorneys, but within the hearing of the jury, that he believed that defendant was guilty under his own statement, and would like defendant's attorney to find some law governing the matter, is a violation of the statute prohibiting the court, from making remarks as to the effect of the evidence, or stating his conclusion as to defendant's guilt or innocence. Dean v. State, 58 App. 98, 124 S. W. 924.

6. Remarks reflecting on accused or his counsel.—When accused in answer to a question stated that he had no recollection of the matter; held, error for the court to sustain objection to answer. Manning v. State, 77 S. W. 693.

Where appellant's attorney procured squirrel hair and horse hair and exhibited it to the jury it was error for the court to reflect upon the attorney for the manner of obtaining the hairs. House v. State, 45 App. 125, 57 S. W. 825.

When in a prosecution for perjury, a witness for the prosecution, reluctant to testify, it was error for the court to state in the jury's presence that the witness appeared to be evading the truth and to threaten to punish the witness, and to state to defendant's counsel that, while he would give them any exception they wanted, he was "not going to have the witness interfered with." Scott v. State, 72 App. 26, 160 S. W. 960.

7. Proceedings against witness or counsel.—Accused cannot complain of any prejudice resulting from his counsel being fined by the trial judge, in the presence of the jury, for disregarding instructions that, in cross-examining an accomplice, he must not inquire as to any offenses committed by the accomplice, not constituting a felony or involving moral turpitude. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 769, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

Where a court fined a witness who was willfully evading answering questions, and sent him to jail until he should answer them did not indicate the opinion of the judge as to defendant's guilt and was not injurious. Loan v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 304, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844.

Whenever it becomes necessary to punish a recalcitrant witness, the court should retire the jury before doing so, in order that they may not be affected injuriously against accused. Scott v. State, 72 App. 24, 160 S. W. 969.
8. Prejudice from remarks.—The court's remark in response to an objection to leading questions by defendant's counsel, "let him go on; I have cautioned him several times. I reckon the jury have sense enough to know whether the witness is telling the truth or not," was not being a reflection on the veracity of the witness. House v. State, 19 App. 227.

While it was error for the court to remark before the jury that it "would admit evidence of defendant's good character, though it did not see its relevancy;" it is not reversible since defendant had confessed the commission of the act charged. Young v. State, 31 App. 24, 19 S. W. 431.

While a witness was testifying as to the value of different articles alleged to have been stolen, the court remarked that much time was being consumed on very trifling issues and that, though it was not inquiring on the weight of the testimony, the remark did not warrant a reversal, in the absence of evidence that any injury was done defendant. Stayton v. State, 32 App. 33, 22 S. W. 38.

A remark by the court that a State's witness had been guessing at the length of a stick, could not be prejudicial to the defendant. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 352, 33 S. W. 871.

Remarks of the court on the admission of incompetent testimony; held, not prejudicial. Huntly v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 948.

Remark of the judge that the witness had already answered the question; held, not prejudicial. Bonners v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 669.

"If the court, in overruling an objection to evidence, to remark that "it is not necessary that it may go to the jury," is harmless error, where the testimony was in fact immaterial. McGee v. State, 37 App. 668, 40 S. W. 967.

Questions asked witnesses by the court held not prejudicial. Harrell v. State, 39 App. 264, 45 S. W. 551.

Remarks of the court as to nature and weight of evidence will not be ground for reversal where the character of the testimony and its materiality to the case is not shown and it is not made to appear that probable injury was done by the remark. Newman v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 230.

During the taking of evidence as to the character of accused, the question was asked as to his membership in a church, and, on objection being sustained, his counsel stated that such membership was no reflection on him, to which the court in a spirit of levity replied that it might be a reflection on the church. On objection, the court promptly withdrew the remark, and specially charged the jury not to consider it. Held, that defendant was not prejudiced thereby. Pilgrim v. State, 59 App. 231, 138 S. W. 128.

While, it is improper for the court to comment upon testimony, where, in a criminal prosecution, upon cross-examination of a witness by the accused, a question arose as to the responsiveness of the answer of the witness, and the court, during a colloquy of counsel, remarked that he thought the witness was doing the best he could, the remark was not calculated to injure the accused; and where the court immediately instructed the jury not to consider the remark it will not be ground for reversal. Renn v. State, 64 App. 638, 143 S. W. 167.

In a murder trial, it was not reversible error for the trial judge to tell an accomplice, who testified for the state, that his testimony must be voluntary and might be used against him, where the court instructed, at accused's request, that, where the state makes an agreement with an accomplice, as it did with witness, whereby he "turns state's evidence," the state is bound by the agreement, if the accomplice carrying out his part of it by testifying to the truth. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 769, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

Remarks of the court not shown to have influenced the jury do not present error. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 763.

Remarks of the court to counsel in discussing his rulings not bearing on the weight of evidence, nor indicating his opinion of the merits of the case, could not have prejudiced accused. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 763.

Where on a trial for assault to murder, a physician testified to the nature of the bullet wound received by prosecutor, and accused sought to question the witness as to the force of a bullet, the remark of the court on sustaining an objection that it did not appear that the witness was an expert on the force of bullets, and it made no difference whether the bullet hit prosecutor or not if the pistol used was a weapon that was reasonably calculated to produce death, was not prejudicial to accused. Wilson v. State, 70 App. 627, 158 S. W. 512.

Where defendant was cross-examining a witness, the court's remark, "Let him answer the question propounded before you butt in on him," qualified by the court's statement that his enthusiasm had several times interrupted the witness before he finished his answer, was not prejudicial as tending to influence the jury on the issue of defendant's guilt. Link v. State, 78 App. 82, 164 S. W. 987.

Where defendant, to lay a foundation for the introduction of the testimony of a witness at the examining trial, showed that the witness left the jurisdiction of the court because he did not wish to be bothered with the trial, etc., a statement of the court, "Gentlemen, it appears to me that the witness has skipped out of the country, by keeping away from the court," though improper, is not prejudicial to defendant. Echols v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 786.

10. Cure of error.—Where the court, in a prosecution for perjury, by his remarks in the jury's presence concerning two witnesses and also by punishment of one, clearly indicated that the witnesses were evading the truth or testifying falsely, the matter was not cured by his subsequent instructions that the jury should not consider such matters. Scott v. State, 72 App. 26, 160 S. W. 960.
2. OF PERSONS WHO MAY TESTIFY

Art. 788. [768] Persons incompetent to testify.—All persons are competent to testify in criminal actions, except the following:

1. Insane persons, who are in an insane condition of mind at the time when they are offered as witnesses, or who were in that condition when the events happened of which they are called to testify.

2. Children or other persons who, after being examined by the court, appear not to possess sufficient intellect to relate transactions with respect to which they are interrogated, or who do not understand the obligation of an oath.

3. All persons who have been or may be convicted of felony in this state, or in any other jurisdiction, unless such conviction has been legally set aside, or unless the convict has been legally pardoned for the crime of which he was convicted. But no person who has been convicted of the crime of perjury or false swearing, and whose conviction has not been legally set aside, shall have his competency as a witness restored by a pardon, unless such pardon by its terms specifically restore his competency to testify in a court of justice. [O. C. 644.]

17. Effect of incompetency.
18. Nature of offense for which convicted.
21. Conviction in another state.
22. Impeaching witness by proof of conviction.
23. Restoration of competency by pardon.
24. Credibility of pardoned convict.
25. Proof of disqualification.

IN GENERAL

1. Disqualification in general.—Seducer held not a competent witness against the female in prosecution for fornication. Spencer v. State, 31 Tex. 64.

Negroes are competent witnesses. Ex parte Warren, 31 Tex. 143. See post, art. 801.

An attorney who has interviewed witness while under the rule, can not be used to prove contradictory statements made by the witness to him in such interview. Brown v. State, 3 App. 294.

A statute which enlarges the class of persons who may be competent to testify as witnesses is not ex post facto in its relation to offenses previously committed, since it only relates to modes of procedure in which no individual has a vested right, and which the state, on grounds of public policy, may regulate at pleasure. Mroux v. State, 31 App. 597, 21 S. W. 784, 37 Am. St. Rep. 824.

The fact that a witness is drunk does not render his testimony inadmissible. It goes only to the weight of the same. Meyers v. State, 37 App. 208, 39 S. W. 111.

It was not error to permit a witness to testify to the marriage of defendant, over the objection that he was drunk at the time. Stevens v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 944.

2. Knowledge of witness or means of knowledge.—When a witness knows nothing of his own knowledge, of the matter inquired about, his testimony should be excluded. Harris v. State, 37 App. 441, 36 S. W. 88; Woods v. State, 37 App. 450, 36 S. W. 96.

Where a witness testified that on the night prior to the homicide accused was drinking heavily and on the point of having delirium tremens, but on cross-examination admitted that he did not know what delirium tremens was, it was proper to exclude his statement as to the delirium tremens. Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 134 S. W. 765.

It was not error to allow the mother of the prosecutrix in a statutory rape case to testify that her daughter was under the age of consent, where she did not know the year in which the daughter was born, but stated that she had kept track of the daughter's age by adding a year each birthday, and that the date of her birth was in a record kept at home. Vaughn v. State, 62 App. 24, 138 S. W. 476.

Where, in a prosecution of a wife for killing her husband, there was evidence that deceased had made threats to murder her and the children through a period of years, and that nearly every day he cursed and abused her, and had drawn a revolver on her several times, and threatened to cut her throat, evidence in rebuttal that deceased's reputation was that of a peaceable, law-abiding citizen was admissible, but witnesses, who only knew deceased in a business way, should not have been permitted to testify that they had never heard deceased curse his wife or any member of his family. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

In a prosecution for keeping a room in a hotel as a place in which to gamble, a witness testified that accused was proprietor, and on cross-examination testified that he had never lived in the hotel, or had a room there, but had eaten there; that he knew that accused was proprietor, because he looked after the interests of the hotel; that he had seen him around there, acting as if he was the proprietor; that he had never seen his boy in the hotel. The witness finally admitted that he did not know whether accused was actually proprietor, and said that his testimony was a conclusion. Held, that the testimony of the witness does not show that he had no personal knowledge, or that it was not proper testimony to go before the jury as general knowledge, that accused looked after the interests of the hotel. Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 138 S. W. 759.

In a prosecution of a tax collector for fraudulent converting public money, one of accused's deputy collectors could testify that he had cashed checks for money from the taxes collected for personal use, if he knew that he did so. Ferrell v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 901.

Where, on a trial for homicide, it was the contention of the state that accused should be tried as a coroner and that the bullet passed through her body, the testimony of a witness, who examined the premises the next morning, that he found a bullet hole in the door and a bullet in the wall opposite the door, was properly admitted; these being physical facts which could be testified to by any witness who saw them, and the next morning not being too remote in time. Dickson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 862.

--- Identification from hearing voice.—A witness, identifying accused as the person with whom a conversation over the telephone occurred, may properly testify to such conversation. White v. State, 61 App. 498, 136 S. W. 562.

When a telephone operator made the voices of accused and N. talking over the telephone, the conversation being material, the operator was competent to testify thereto. Streight v. State, 62 App. 463, 138 S. W. 742.

A witness, who had been well acquainted for a number of years with two persons, and who testified that she recognized their voices and heard what they said in a certain conversation, although she did not see them, could testify as to such conversation; the fact that she did not identify them by sight only going to the weight of her testimony. Reynolds v. State, 63 App. 278, 139 S. W. 977.

4. Determination of competency.—Whether a witness is competent, so as to justify the introduction of his testimony given on a former trial, depends on his status at the time the testimony is offered, and not at the time it was given. Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 709.

5. Review of competency on appeal.—See notes under art. 744.

SUBD. 1

6. Incompetency of insane person in general.—A conviction can not stand when based exclusively upon the testimony of a witness who is incapable of exercising a faculty necessary to a knowledge of the matter about which he has testified. Williams v. State, 44 Tex. 34. See, also, Ake v. State, 6 App. 396, 32 Am. Rep. 586; Williams v. State, 13 App. 127.

An insane woman cannot testify as to rape alleged to have been committed on her. Lopez v. State, 30 App. 487, 17 S. W. 1058, 28 Am. St. Rep. 935.

In an indictment for rape which charges that the woman was so mentally diseased at the time as to have no will to oppose the act of the prosecutrix is not a competent witness to prove the corpus delicti of the offense charged; as the allegation apprehends her insanity at the time charged as to the particular act. Lee v. State, 45 App. 288, 64 S. W. 1048.

7. Who not disqualified.—A person who can relate connectedly what happened to him while under the influence of some drug administered to him in a glass of beer was not insane at the time of the happening within the meaning of this article. Pones v. State, 42 App. 201, 62 S. W. 1021.

A witness, who, though he had been adjudged insane, had been out of the insane asylum for six years, and who satisfied the court that he had recovered and was in every way competent to testify intelligently, was competent, though the judgment establishing his lunacy was not shown to have been vacated. Singleton v. State, 57 App. 696, 124 S. W. 52.

8. Burden of showing disqualification.—Where there is nothing to show that a witness is insane when he is called to testify nor that he was insane when the event happened about which he is called to testify, the burden is on the party objecting on the ground of insanity to prove the same. Batterton v. State, 52 App. 841, 107 S. W. 827.
9. Charge of court.—Where a witness for the state on whose testimony a conviction rested was charged to be insane, an instruction that, if the jury found the witness insane, their verdict should be for the defendant, and that the degree of insanity required to render a person incompetent to testify was such a defect of reason as to render the person incapable of receiving a sound mental impression of the transaction on which he was called to testify, or if he had capacity to receive such impression, then such defect of mind as would render it impossible for him to impart such impression, or such defect of reason as would render it impossible for him to know and understand the nature and obligation of an oath, properly submitted the capacity of the witness. Batterton v. State, 63 App. 381, 107 S. W. 826.

Children or other persons, not possessed of sufficient intelligence to relate transactions about which they are interrogated, or who do not understand the obligation of a four year old to testify, are incompetent to testify. Ake v. State, 6 App. 299, 22 Am. Rep. 586; Holst v. State, 23 App. 1, 3 S. W. 757, 59 Am. Rep. 770; Williams v. State, 12 App. 127.

A girl nine years old, whose examination disclosed an utter want of anything like a knowledge of the nature or character and consequences of the oath she had taken, held incompetent. Williams v. State, 12 App. 127.

A witness may not know the criminality of an act on account of tender years, and yet be capable of testifying in court. Grayson v. State, 49 App. 554, 51 S. W. 246.

Prosecuting witness held incompetent to testify because even though intelligent enough to relate the transaction, she was not sufficiently intelligent to understand the obligations of an oath. Holst v. State, 28 App. 1, 3 S. W. 757; Italia v. State, 30 App. 12, 3 S. W. 770.

Objections to witnesses because of their youth, without objecting that they do not understand the obligation of an oath, are no objections. Hawkins v. State, 27 App. 273, 11 S. W. 409.

Where a boy 10 years of age is offered as a witness, and upon preliminary examination as to competency he appears to have an idea of future rewards and punishments, it should also be shown that he knows the pains and penalties of perjury. Musse v. State, 26 App. 24, 35 S. W. 174.

A conviction based in whole or in part upon the testimony of a witness under nine years of age cannot be sustained, on the ground that such a witness cannot be punished for perjury. Freasier v. State (Cr. App.) 84 S. W. 361.

A boy 14 years old incompetent to testify because he says that she does not understand the obligation of an oath, if by other answers, bearing and apparent intelligence she shows that she understands the nature and quality of truth as it is distinguished from falsehood. Anderson v. State, 53 S. W. 53.

A four year old child, apparently utterly unable to realize the meaning of an oath, is not a “competent witness.” May v. State, 55 App. 651, 127 S. W. 516.

11. Witnesses held competent.—Where a witness testified that he was only seven years old, that if he swore and lied the bad man would get him, that he meant the devil, and that he would go to the penitentiary, there was no error in permitting the testimony to go to the jury. Mason v. State, 97 S. W. 322.

An objection to a boy’s testimony, “because of ignorance,” is properly overruled, when such testimony is as clear and intelligent as that of most witnesses of mature years and ordinary education, and is strongly corroborated. Hawkins v. State, 27 App. 273, 11 S. W. 409.

It is not an abuse of discretion for a trial judge to permit a boy 12 years old to testify in a criminal case, when it appears that the boy, on his voir dire, stated that “it was wrong to tell a lie, and that, if he told a lie, he would be punished.” Frazier v. State, 38 App. 11, 21 S. W. 584, 22 S. W. 887.

A boy thirteen years old understanding the difference between truth and falsehood and comprehending the idea of future reward and punishment, is a competent witness. Partin v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 1067.

A deaf witness, whose reading of the oath after it is reduced to writing is substantially correct, and shows that he understands its meaning, is competent. Kirk v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 440.

Though a witness has had little religious training, and though his ideas of a future state of rewards and punishments are rather crude, if he understands that the oath or affirmation binds his conscience to speak the whole truth and nothing but the truth regarding the matter under investigation, that it is wrong to lie, and that it is a violation of this duty the law imposes punishment as for perjury, he is a competent witness. Colter v. State, 37 App. 224, 39 S. W. 576.

Where a 7 year old boy testified that he knew that he would be punished if he testified falsely, and that to hold up his hand and swear meant that he would be punished if he did not tell the truth, he was a competent witness, though he testified that he did not know the nature of an oath, or what it meant to swear. Munger v. State, 57 App. 334, 125 S. W. 874.

Where a Mexican boy stated that he was nine years old, that when he was required to hold up his hand it meant to tell the truth, and that it was wrong to tell a story, the court did not err in receiving his testimony, though he did not know what penalty would be inflicted for telling lies, or what became of boys that did not tell the truth, and though he had never gone to school, and was unable to read or write. Zumago v. State, 63 App. 58, 138 S. W. 713, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1665.

A child of six years of age may testify if he understands the obligation of an oath, and can relate the transaction. Finch v. State, 71 App. 345, 158 S. W. 510.

Where the girl whom the defendant was charged with raping was only nine years old, but gave a clear, concise recital of the event, and was fully informed that he would be punished if he swore falsely; she was a competent witness. Valdez v. State, 71 App. 457, 160 S. W. 341.

Notwithstanding the provision of Const. art. 1, § 5, that oath and affirmations shall be taken subject to the pains and penalties of perjury, an infant of under 16 years of age is competent to testify in a capital felony, even though under Pen. Code, arts. 34, 35, she is not subject to the punishment of death prescribed by art. 161, for perjury, in a capital case, where the death penalty is not inflicted upon the accused. Smith v. State, 73 App, 273, 164 S. W. 378.

A child under six years of age, who had sufficient capacity to remember ordinary occurrences, and understood that it was wrong to testify falsely under oath, and that she would not only be punished hereafter, but would be sent to the penitentiary for perjury, is competent to testify. Smith v. State, 73 App. 273, 164 S. W. 385.

A girl 10 years old, who shows that she has sufficient intellect to give her testimony, and who knows that she will be imprisoned for testifying falsely, is competent to testify. Cole v. State, 73 App. 457, 165 S. W. 529.

A child eight years old, who shows on her voir dire examination that she can relate the transactions as to which she will be interrogated as a witness, and understands the nature of an oath and that she will be punished if she does not tell the truth, is properly permitted to testify. Douglas v. State, 73 App. 355, 165 S. W. 933.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, the trial court's allowance of the testimony of prosecutrix, a girl six years old, who stated that she knew what was meant when she took the oath, that "it means to take an oath to God to tell the truth," that if she told a falsehood she would be punished, and who detailed the transaction very intelligently, was not an abuse of discretion. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 50.

There is no precise age under which a child is deemed incompetent to testify, but when under fourteen years of age competency is determinable by an examination, and the action of the court thereon will not be revised in the absence of a showing that its discretion was abused. Johnson v. State, 1 App. 699; Brown v. State, 2 App. 115; Mason v. State, Id. 192; Brown v. State, 6 App. 256; Ake v. State, 6 App. 398, 32 Am. Rep. 556; Burk v. State, 8 App. 336; Davidson v. State, 39 Tex. 129; Williams v. State, 12 App. 127.

A state's witness having disqualified herself upon her voir dire with regard to her knowledge of the nature and obligation of an oath, the state was permitted to take her to a private office and instruct her thereupon. She was thereupon returned into court, and replying that she had misunderstood the test, was held competent as a witness. Held, that the proceeding was erroneous. Taylor v. State, 22 App. 529, 3 S. W. 753, 55 Am. Rep. 656.

Whether a boy nine years old should be admitted to testify is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 158 S. W. 742.

The competency of a child as a witness is a question for the court, and a requested charge on that issue was properly refused. Valdez v. State, 71 App. 467, 160 S. W. 341.

14. Necessity of objection or exception.—See notes under art. 744.

15. Sufficiency of evidence.—See notes to art. 783, ante.

SUBD. 3

16. Incompetency in general.—Competency of person indicted jointly or separately for the same offense, see Pen. Code, art. 31; C. C. P., art. 791. See, also, art. 797.

A person convicted of a felony, unless such conviction has been legally set aside or he has been granted a legal pardon, is incompetent to testify in civil proceedings. Aria v. State, 25 App. 193, 9 S. W. 656; Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 310.

A defendant who has been convicted of a felony is not incompetent to testify as a witness in his own behalf. Williams v. State, 23 App. 201, 12 S. W. 1102; Shannon v. State, 22 App. 27, 13 S. W. 599; Quintana v. State, 29 App. 401, 16 S. W. 593, 25 Am. St. Rep. 730; Nicks v. State, 40 App. 1, 48 S. W. 186.

If the accused is convicted of the same crime and under a convict bond for the payment of the fine imposed, is not a competent witness for defendant. Baldwin v. State, 39 App. 245, 45 S. W. 714.

A witness who was serving a term in the penitentiary for participation in the same offense for which defendant was convicted was incompetent to testify that he (the witness) was the guilty person, and that accused took no part in the burglary in question. Bradford v. State, 62 App. 424, 138 S. W. 118.

It is immaterial when the witness was convicted, since he remains incompetent to testify until pardoned. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 244.
One jointly indicted with accused and first tried and convicted of the felony charged is not a competent witness for accused. Castenara v. State, 70 App. 496, 156 S. W. 1180.

17. -- Effect of incompetency.—Liability of convict to prosecution for perjury, see notes under Pen. Code, art. 304. Convict not disqualified by, or derived from, a convict can, so long as his disability exists, be treated as testimony by another, or used as evidence for any purpose against another. Long v. State, 10 App. 156. An application for a continuance to obtain the testimony of a convicted co-defendant was properly overruled. Magruder v. State, 25 App. 211, 25 S. W. 229.

That accused was a county convict and had been hired out on bond would not render inadmissible any statements he might make. Andrews v. State, 64 App. 2, 141 S. W. 229, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747.

Where one jointly indicted with accused was first tried and convicted of the felony charged, statements made by him to third persons about the crime were inadmissible in behalf of accused. Castenara v. State, 70 App. 436, 156 S. W. 1190.

18. Nature of offense for which convicted.—A felony is an offense which is punishable with death or imprisonment in the penitentiary either absolutely or as an alternative. Pen. Code, art. 55, and notes.

It is only a conviction of felony that disqualifies as a witness. Welsh v. State, 3 App. 114; Pitner v. State, 25 App. 368, 5 S. W. 210.

A conviction for driving stock from its accustomed range with intent to defraud the owner is a conviction for felony, though the punishment assessed is a fine. Woods v. State, 25 App. 496, 10 S. W. 104 (Hurt, J., dissenting).

App. 18. A convict is not disqualified by reason of his being convicted of an offense in a misdemeanor case, can after his conviction be used by the state as a witness against his co-defendant even though he has not satisfied the judgment of conviction. Burdett v. State, 51 App. 345, 101 S. W. 669.

A witness is not disqualified by reason of having been convicted under U. S. Statutes of illicit retail liquor dealing, a crime punishable by confinement in the penitentiary for more than a year, because it has been held that this is not a felony. Cabrera v. State, 56 App. 141, 118 S. W. 1052.

Evidence of witnesses who had testified against accused in a prior trial was, at the time of the subsequent trial, inadmissible in a penitentiary in a foreign state, without proof of the offense of which he had been convicted, nor whether such offense was a felony, since it was insufficient to show that the witness was disqualified so as to prevent the introduction of his testimony given at the former trial. Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 709.

19. What constitutes conviction.—“Convict” defined. Penal Code, art. 27. Convicted felon is not disqualified as a witness until sentence has been passed upon sentence, no matter for what reason he may not have been sentenced. If he has been sentenced he is not disqualified until judgment against him has been affirmed. Flournoy v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 505; Arca v. State, 26 App. 195, 9 S. W. 665; Jones v. State, 23 App. 132, 22 S. W. 464; Robinson v. State, 36 App. 194, 32 S. W. 621; Foster v. State, 24 App. 392, 48 S. W. 221; Underwood v. State, 38 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618; Stanley v. State, 39 App. 452, 46 S. W. 645.

A person convicted of a felony but not sentenced is a competent witness. Hurley v. State, 25 App. 222, 31 S. W. 354; Woods v. State, 26 App. 496, 10 S. W. 108; Evans v. State, 35 App. 485, 34 S. W. 258; Wright v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 723. Under Pen. Code, arts. 855b, 856, one whose sentence had been suspended was not a disqualifying convicted criminal as being a convicted felon. State, 73 App. 237, 165 S. W. 208; Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1064.

Where the punishment assessed for driving stock from its accustomed range was a fine sentence was not essential to complete the conviction and disqualify the person convicted. Woods v. State, 25 App. 496, 10 S. W. 108.

Conviction of felony does not render a witness incompetent before sentence, where the time for applying for a new trial has not expired. Luna v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 656.

It is not enough to show disqualification of a witness on account of conviction for a felony, to produce a judgment, entered as of course upon rendition of verdict of guilty. It is necessary to produce the record showing not only the entry of the judgment but that sentence has been recorded. G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Tex. 76, 81 S. W. 5.

Where a party seeks to disqualify a witness on the ground that he had been convicted of crime, he must show a valid judgment and sentence. Deckard v. State, 67 App. 359, 123 S. W. 417. Though a person has pleaded guilty to a charge of crime, and his punishment has been assessed by the jury, he is not disqualified as a witness until sentenced. Sheppard v. State, 65 App. 599, 140 S. W. 1090.

A person convicted of a felony who has appealed and after affirmance has moved for a rehearing, which motion is still pending, is not an incompetent witness especially in view of Pen. Code 1911, art. 27, defining “convict.” Bowles v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 626.

20. Necessity of conviction.—Competency of one indicted for the same offense prior to conviction, see art. 791, and Pen. Code, art. 91. A witness may not be impeached by showing merely that he has been indicted for a felony or for some misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, but the impeaching party must go further and show conviction. Wright v. State, 65 App. 429, 140 S. W. 1105.

Accused on trial for perjury, based on false testimony before the grand jury that he had not delivered intoxicating liquor to an infant, may not show that the infant testifying for the state had made one sale of intoxicating liquor, without attending to show that he had been indicted or convicted of a felony for unlawfully selling liquor. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 899.

Witnesses are competent to testify on the trial of an offense, though they are indicted for a separate and distinct offense, and it is not necessary to postpone the trial until the witnesses have been tried or to hear evidence to determine whether they are competent. McIlvsey v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 322.

21. Conviction in another state.—The words "any other jurisdiction," as used in the statute, do not limit the conviction to the tribunals of the United States exercising their jurisdiction in Texas, but a conviction of a felony is available to disqualify a witness, although such a conviction was not within the territorial limits of this state, but in such case it must be shown that the offense of which the witness was convicted was a felony by the laws of the state in which it was had, which fact may be proved by the laws of such state, and it must also appear from the judgment of conviction, or a valid judgment under the laws of the state in which it was rendered. Pitner v. State, 23 App. 566, § S. W. 210; Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 799.

22. Impeaching witness by proof of conviction.—Impeaching defendant, see notes to art. 799.

For the purpose of discrediting him, a witness may be asked if he had not been in the penitentiary, and was not sent there from a certain county. Ivey v. State, 41 Tex. 35, overruled. Lights v. State, 21 App. 398, 17 S. W. 428; Woodson v. State, 24 App. 155, 6 S. W. 154.

A witness was asked by defendant in a criminal case if he had not been in the penitentiary for a felony. The state objected before answer, on the ground that the witness could only be disqualified by the record of his conviction. The court then answered, but his answer might only be held to go to his credit, and not to his qualification. Held not error. McNeal v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 726.

Convictions which do not involve moral turpitude, or are below the grade of felony, are inadmissible to affect credibility of a witness. Hightower v. State, 60 App. 109, 131 S. W. 324.

Evidence that accused had served a term in the penitentiary was admissible to impeach him as a witness; the time of sentence and service not being too remote. Simpson v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 999.

The state may impeach one of accused’s witnesses by showing on cross-examination, that she had been convicted of the offense of running a disorderly house; the offense being one involving moral turpitude. Bogue v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 943.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault upon a woman, evidence of the fact that accused had been convicted of an assault with intent to rape some 23 years before is too remote to affect his credibility. McGill v. State, 71 App. 443, 160 S. W. 353.

In a prosecution for robbery by threats with a pistol, evidence that a certain witness had been convicted of carrying a pistol shortly after the date of the alleged robbery, offered to impeach him and to connect him with the offense charged against accused, was inadmissible for any purpose; accused having testified that he got the pistol used by him from such witness. Coker v. State, 71 App. 504, 160 S. W. 366.

Competency, by reason of pardon, may be shown, although the witness is dead, where it is desired to use his testimony taken before an examining court. Schell v. State, 2 App. 29.

It is only in cases of conviction for perjury or false swearing, that a pardon must specifically restore the competency of the convict to testify. In all other cases a full pardon effectuates the restoration of competency. Rivers v. State, 10 App. 277.

A pardon of one sentenced to the penitentiary for two years and who voluntarily went to the penitentiary before his appeal was decided, to take effect two years from the time he commenced service in the penitentiary, was a full pardon and not a mere remission of the punishment. Rivers v. State, 10 App. 127.

It is within the power of the governor to restore the competency of a witness laboring under the disqualification of a felony conviction, even after such person has suffered the penalty assessed against him, and a full pardon in such case fully restores his competency as a witness. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 488, 51 Am. Rep. 330.

A pardon, in order to have the effect of restoring competency as a witness, must be a full pardon. A conditional pardon will not have such effect. A pardon is full when it fully and unconditionally absolves the party from all the legal consequences of his crime and conviction, direct and collateral. See this case for a full discussion of the subject: Carr v. State, 19 App. 633, 53 Am. Rep. 395; Dudley v. State, 24 App. 152, 6 S. W. 619.

A full pardon renders the party competent to testify to facts which have come to his knowledge after his conviction, and before his pardon, as well as to any other facts within his knowledge. Thornton v. State, 20 App. 519.

A pardon is a witness, although obtained by means of fraud, though it states the date of a conviction incorrectly, if it was intended to cover, and does cover, the particular offense. Martin v. State, 21 App. 1, 17 S. W. 450; Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 330.

The delivery and acceptance of a pardon are complete when the grantor has parted with his entire control or dominion over the instrument, with the intention that it shall pass to the grantee, and the latter assents to it, either in person or by his agent. A pardon once delivered and accepted can not be revoked, but if obtained by fraud, practiced upon the governor, it is void. Rosson v. State, 25 App.
20. — Credibility of pardoned convict.—Instructions, see notes to art. 735 as to instructions on the weight of the evidence.

It is not essential, in order to warrant a conviction upon the testimony of a convicted felon whose competency to testify has been restored, that such testimony should be corroborated. Thornton v. State, 20 App. 519.

Though the pardon of one convicted of felony will in general restore his competency as a witness, the conviction may still be used to affect his credit. Bennett v. State, 24 App. 73, 6 S. W. 527; 8 Am. St. Rep. 512; Dudley v. State, 24 App. 163, 5 S. W. 649.

The disqualification of being a convicted felon must be shown by the judgment of conviction. It cannot be shown by parol testimony over the objection of the defendant. Cooper v. State, 7 App. 194; Perez v. State, 8 App. 610; Perez v. State, 10 App. 327.

Where defendant, on presentation by the state of a witness, is permitted without objection to elicit from him, for the purpose of showing his incompetency, that he was convicted of a crime, and had not been pardoned, he should be held incompetent, the right to have his conviction shown by the records thereof being waived by the state. Simkins, J., dissenting. White v. State, 33 App. 177, 26 S. W. 72.

When the competency of a witness on account of previous conviction for crime is in issue, his incompetency can not be proved by the witness himself. White v. State, 33 App. 177, 26 S. W. 72.

When a witness has testified and afterwards the court admits parol testimony that such witness has been convicted of a crime, but admits it only for the purpose of discreetly the witness and does not exclude the evidence therefore given by the witness there is no error. Batson v. State, 35 App. 606, 58 S. W. 48.

On cross-examination on voir dire, a witness states, in the presence of the court, that he is an unpardoned convict for felony, the party calling out such testimony cannot thereafter complain that such is not the best evidence; and, if no objection be made to the competency of the witness, that right is waived. Moore v. State, 29 App. 266, 46 S. W. 809.

It is not necessary to prove by the record that a witness has been convicted of a felony. He can be compelled to testify as to that. Keaton v. State, 41 App. 621, 67 S. W. 1125.

Where it appeared that a witness had not been arrested within the last 30 years, it was not error to sustain an objection to a question as to whether the witness had ever served a term on the poor farm. Deckard v. State, 57 App. 355, 123 S. W. 417.

Where defendant's attorney, in support of a motion for a new trial, alleged that he had failed to get a certified copy of the conviction of a witness against accused from a foreign state, because he had been informed by defendant's former attorney, that, pursuant to a conversation with the judge, the state would raise no question that the witness was not an unpardoned federal convict, and it appeared that at the time the witness was permitted to testify, over objection, all parties knew that he was an unpardoned convict, defendant was entitled to a new trial, though defendant's attorney misunderstood the effect of the conversation between defendant's former attorney and the court. Carden v. State, 42 App. 545, 138 S. W. 598.

Where the state, after a witness called by it had testified, in response to questions propounded by defendant, that he had been convicted of a felony, did not demand the record of conviction, or raise any question as to the existence of better evidence, such matters were waived; and the oral proof was sufficient for the purpose. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 243.

Upon proper objection, the state may prevent a witness from testifying orally as to his conviction, and may require the defendant to produce the proper judgment of conviction and sentence. Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 310.

In order to make a witness incompetent on the ground that she had been convicted of a felony, and not pardoned, such facts should have been shown by the court records; but it could be shown by other evidence than such records, if it was merely sought to be shown for impeachment purposes. Daly v. State, 72 App. 651, 162 S. W. 1153.
Art. 788

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

(Title 8)

Oval proof that a witness has been convicted of a felony and not pardoned, so as to make him incompetent, is competent to prove that fact, in the absence of timely objection, requiring that it be proved by the judgment of conviction. Matthews v. State, 72 App. 654, 163 S. W. 723.

Any error in excluding a witness from testifying on the ground that he had been convicted of a felony, and not pardoned, when that fact was not proven by the judgment, was not ground for reversal, where it is admitted that the witness was, in fact, incompetent on that ground, since on a new trial the witness would still be incompetent, and his conviction could be shown by the judgment of conviction. Matthews v. State, 72 App. 654, 163 S. W. 723.

The best evidence of the conviction in a foreign state of one offered as a witness is a copy of the indictment and final judgment of conviction, properly certified to, with a copy of the laws of that state showing that the acts constitute a felony under the laws of that state. Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 709.

26. Proof of pardon.—When a pardon is relied on to prove a restoration of competency, the pardon itself should be produced, or its nonproduction should be satisfactorily accounted for, in which case it may be proved by the next best evidence, which would be a certified copy thereof, or an exemplification from the records or register of the secretary of state. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 330; Cooper v. State, 7 App. 195; Schell v. State, 2 App. 30.

The court may hear proof, and even the statement of the party himself, to show that the pardon was intended to, and does cover, the particular offense of which he was convicted, notwithstanding discrepancies in the description of the conviction as recited in the pardon. Hunnicutt v. State, 20 App. 623; Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 498; 51 Am. Rep. 330; Martin v. State, 21 App. 1. 17 S. W. 430.

Where the court admits testimony of a witness that he has been convicted of a felony solely on the question of his credibility, and the witness also states orally at the time that he has been pardoned, it is not error to permit the witness to testify. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES IN GENERAL

See notes under art. 5657, Vernon's Sayles' CIV. ST. 1914.

Art. 789. [769] Female alleged to be seduced may testify.—In prosecutions for seduction, under the provisions of the Penal Code, the female alleged to have been seduced shall be permitted to testify; but no conviction shall be had upon the testimony of the said female, unless the same is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged. [Act 22d Leg., ch. 33, p. 34.]

1. Evidence in seduction cases in general.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1448.

2. Continuances.—See notes to arts. 605, 606, ante.

3. Competency of seduced female.—The seduced female is incompetent to testify against the defendant. Cole v. State, 40 Tex. 147. (This decision was made before the enactment of article 768.)

On a trial for seduction, where the offense was shown to have been committed before the passage of the act of 1891, permitting the seduced female to testify, held, that the court properly permitted the prosecutrix to testify, and that to do so would not be to make the said act ex post facto as to said offense. Mrous v. State, 31 App. 597, 21 S. W. 764, 37 Am. St. Rep. 834.

4. — Objections to competency.—Before the enactment of the preceding article it was held that the objection to the competency of the seduced female must be raised when she was placed on the stand. Cole v. State, 40 Tex. 147.

5. Testimony of prosecutrix—Admissibility.—Where the prosecuting witness has testified to the first act of intercourse, her testimony as to other acts of intercourse is admissible. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 616; Thacker v. State, 62 App. 294, 136 S. W. 1085; Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 278.

It is competent to ask prosecutrix whether she would have yielded to the sexual embrace of defendant if he had not promised to marry her, also to prove by her that he is the father of her child. Snodgrass v. State, 36 App. 267, 36 S. W. 477; Himman v. State, 59 App. 229, 137 S. W. 221.

Where prosecutrix testified that a child was born to her March 7, 1907, that the first act of intercourse with accused occurred in April or May, 1908, and that she had never had intercourse with any other man, it was proper to permit her to testify that she and accused had other acts of intercourse after the alleged seduction in explanation of her testimony of the birth of a child. Himman v. State, 59 App. 229, 137 N. W. 221.

The state was properly permitted to ask prosecutrix why she submitted to intercourse. Browning v. State, 64 App. 148, 142 S. W. 1.

Prosecutrix may testify that a child was born to her on a specified date. Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 278.

Prosecutor, having fully detailed the extent of her association with defendant, was properly permitted to testify that she had associated with defendant "like young people generally do." Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 278.

The prosecutor may testify that her pregnancy was caused by accused. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 114 S. W. 967.

A question to the prosecutor, as to whether she would have yielded to defendant had it not been on account of his promise to marry her, was not objectionable as leading and suggesting the answer desired by the prosecuting officer. Black v. State, 71 App. 521, 160 S. W. 720.

6. Impeachment of prosecutrix.—Mere reports and rumors in the neighborhood as to the character and conduct of prosecutrix are inadmissible in evidence unless such reports and rumors go to make up the prosecutrix's general reputation for chastity. A witness may if he knows state her general reputation; any act of other or other acts of the prosecutrix tending to show that she does not have the reputation of chastity is also admissible, but it must be testified to by the witness who saw the act or heard the statement. Parks v. State, 38 App. 378, 33 S. W. 872.

In a prosecution for seduction, where prosecutrix testifies that she has never had intercourse with any man except defendant, testimony of other men that they had had intercourse with her is admissible to impeach her. Davis v. State, 36 App. 548, 38 S. W. 171.

Where accused seduced prosecutrix by virtue of a promise of marriage, and she subsequently was guilty of improper acts with others, the fact of her subsequent misconduct may be considered on the question of her credibility as a witness. Walls v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 130.

Where accused's witnesses were allowed to testify that the reputation of the prosecutrix for virtue was bad, they cannot give specific facts showing the reputation to be deserved. Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 436.

There must be some fact, independent of the testimony of the prosecutrix, tending to connect accused with the offense, to justify a conviction. James v. State, 72 App. 155, 161 S. W. 472.

The prosecutrix is an accomplice, and her testimony must be corroborated by evidence tending to connect accused with the commission of the offense, to support a conviction. Hayes v. State, 72 App. 249, 162 S. W. 870.

8. Extent of corroboration required.—The testimony of the prosecutrix need not be corroborated in each of the necessary elements of the offense; but the corroborative evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect accused with the commission of the offense. Curry v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 319; Williams v. State, 59 App. 847, 128 S. W. 1120; Gillespie v. State, 73 App. 855, 166 S. W. 125; De Rosset v. State (Cr. App.) 182 S. W. 201; Slaughter v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 589.

Under this article and art. 801, a prosecutrix is sufficiently corroborated when there are any facts that tend to show that accused committed the offense, and it is error to attempt to lay down a rule as to what particular issues of the case shall be corroborated; the word "tending," meaning to be directed as to any end, object, or purpose. Nash v. State, 61 App. 259, 134 S. W. 709.

The corroborative evidence need not be direct and positive independent of the testimony of the prosecution witness, but proof of such facts and circumstances as may aid and support her testimony, and which satisfy the jury that she is worthy of credit as to the facts essential to constitute the offense and which tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, fulfills the requirements of this article and it is not necessary that the prosecution witness be corroborated both as to the act of intercourse and the promise of marriage. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 616.

An instruction that the corroborator of prosecutrix's testimony must extend to the promise of marriage, if any, and the act of intercourse, so that her testimony connecting defendant with the commission of the offense must not only be corroborated but the jury must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that it is true, that her testimony is true, and that she has been corroborated by other evidence "connecting" defendant with the offense charged, was not prejudicial to defendant, but was too onerous to the state. Bush v. State, 71 App. 14, 137 S. W. 944.

It is not necessary that the prosecuting witness be corroborated both as to the act of intercourse and the promise of marriage, although the fact of an accused having married her after prosecution against him had been begun for seduction, and to secure a dismissal of that case, would be a circumstance tending strongly to corroborate on both issues; it being a virtual admission of those facts. James v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 727.

9. Admissibility of corroborative evidence.—Declarations that prosecutrix made to her mother are not competent to corroborate her testimony on the trial. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 266.

It is not error for a prosecutrix to testify that she had borne a child; this being proper corroboration of the fact of intercourse with some man. Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 941.

Where the prosecuting witness had testified that accused gave her an engagement ring and it had been shown that he had purchased a ring at a store, testimony of another witness that the ring delivered to the prosecution witness was a package which was about an inch square and resembled a ring box was admissible. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

Circumstantial evidence of very slight probative value is admissible, owing to the nature of the crime, so that evidence of statements by accused wherein he boasted of his conquests are admissible as circumstances corroborative of the prosecution in view of his later he had gotten prosecutrix with child. Knight v. State, 64 App, 144 S. W. 967.

10. Sufficiency of corroboration.—Corroborative evidence in proof of seduction need not be direct and positive, or such evidence as is sufficient to convict independent of that of the prosecutrix, but simply such circumstances as tend to support and corroborate, and to satisfy the jury she is worthy of credit. Nash v. State, 11 App, 29 S. W. 736, 37 Am. St. Rep. 822; Caspash v. State, 72 App, 609, 166 S. W. 737.

See opinion for facts stated held to sufficiently corroborate the prosecutrix in her statements as to defendant's promise to marry her. Anderson v. State, 39 App, 83, 45 S. W. 15.

While the prosecutrix is an accomplice and must be corroborated before her evidence will justify conviction, she may be corroborated by merely circumstantial evidence. Host v. State, 61 App, 464, 144 S. W. 589.

Letters purporting to have been written by accused did not corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix, where there was no testimony except hers to show that they came from accused. James v. State, 72 App, 155, 161 S. W. 472.

In a prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, evidence of defendant's conduct toward her both prior and subsequent to the alleged seduction held sufficient to corroborate her testimony, that she yielded to him solely because she loved him, and he loved her, and had promised to marry her. Gillespie v. State, 72 App, 588, 166 S. W. 135.

11. Instructions as to corroboration.—Instructions in seduction cases in general, see notes to Pen. Code, art. 1418.

In a prosecution for seduction, the court instructed that the prosecutrix is an accomplice of defendant, and no conviction can be had on her testimony, unless corroborated by evidence sufficient to satisfy the jury of the truth of the evidence of prosecutrix. Held, that the instruction is erroneous, as not requiring the jury also to find the testimony of prosecutrix to be true. Lemmons v. State, 55 App, 290, 135 S. W. 496; Yantress v. State, 50 App, 258, 125 S. W. 385.

The court should charge clearly and explicitly that there must be testimony outside of that of the accused accomplice, tending to show that defendant induced the prosecutrix to have carnal intercourse with him by reason of his promise to marry her, and that by reason of such promise, she was induced to yield her virtue. Gith v. State, 55 App, 258, 125 S. W. 385, 56 App, 250, 154 S. W. 872.

An instruction that the prosecuting witness was an accomplice, and that defendant could not be convicted solely upon her evidence, unless the jury believed it to be true and that it showed the defendant to be guilty of the offense, and that even then defendant could not be convicted unless the jury believed there was other testimony tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged, is good. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 616.

An instruction that corroborative evidence need not be direct and positive, independent of prosecutrix's testimony, but may consist of such facts and circumstances as tend to support her testimony, and which satisfy the jury that she is worthy of credit to the facts essential to constitute the offense of seduction, as previously defined, etc., was erroneous for failure to require that such corroborating evidence be such as tended to connect defendant with the offense charged. Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 278.

A charge that the prosecutrix is an accomplice, that accused cannot be convicted on corroborated testimony, that the corroborated testimony alone can prove the offense but connect accused with its commission, taken in connection with a special charge requested by accused which instructed the jury that the prosecutrix was an accomplice and that her subsequent acts cannot be considered as corroborative of her testimony, is correct. Knight v. State, 64 App, 144 S. W. 967.

Where there was no evidence except the testimony of prosecutrix to show that letters purporting to have been written by accused came from him, an instruction held erroneous, as permitting the jury to judge for themselves whether they would consider the letters as corroborative, and allowing them to consider the letters, though not identified by other evidence than that of prosecutrix, in connection with other evidence, in determining the sufficiency of the corroboration. James v. State, 72 App, 155, 161 S. W. 472.

An instruction that no conviction could be had upon the testimony of the female alleged to have been seduced, unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect accused with the offense charged, that the corroborative evidence need not be direct and positive, independent of the prosecutrix, that such facts and circumstances as tended to support her testimony, and which satisfied the jury that she was worthy of credit as to the facts essential to constitute the offense of seduction, and that it was for the jury to say from all the facts and circumstances in evidence whether she had been sufficiently corroborated, was erroneous, and the court should have charged that the jury must find that her testimony was true, and also find that there was evidence, independent of her testimony, tending to connect accused with the commission of the offense. James v. State, 72 App, 155, 161 S. W. 472.

On a trial for seduction, there was no evidence, except the prosecutrix's testimony, to show that letters in evidence came from accused. Held, that instructions given were erroneous, and one requested improperly refused, because the jury should have been pointedly told that the letters could not be used as corroborative.
Art. 790. [770] Defendant may testify.—Any defendant in a criminal action shall be permitted to testify in his own behalf therein, but the failure of any defendant to so testify shall not be taken as a circumstance against him, nor shall the same be alluded to or commented on by counsel in the cause; provided, that where there are two or more persons jointly charged or indicted, and a severance is had, the privilege of testifying shall be extended only to the person on trial. [Act 21st Leg., April 4, 1889.]

2. Competency of defendant.—Relevancy of defendant's testimony, see notes to C. C. P., art. 785, and under particular offenses.

The defendant in a sine facias proceeding is a competent witness in his own behalf and in behalf of his codefendants. Reddick v. State, 21 App. 267, 25 S. W. 485.

The fact that the statute now permits a defendant to testify in his own behalf does not render admissible his declarations that are not a part of the res gestae. Gonzales v. State, 23 App. 130, 12 S. W. 130.

Defendant's testimony that he thought his appointment for the purpose of arresting a certain person authorized him to carry a pistol was properly excluded, such persons having been arrested and his case disposed of prior to the date of the carrying of the pistol. O'Neal v. State, 32 App. 42, 23 S. W. 25.

3. Severance.—The provision that where a severance is had the privilege of testifying extends only to the prisoner on trial, in no manner changes art. 791. Jenkins v. State, 30 App. 373, 17 S. W. 393.

4. Explanation of failure to testify.—That accused has been ill with pneumonia or not affected by his mind, and that he was still weak therefrom would not prevent him from telling what he knew, and his mother's testimony as to his physical condition, his illness, as explaining why he did not take the stand, was properly excluded. Joseph v. State, 59 App. 82, 127 S. W. 171.

Defendant's testimony in his own behalf is subject to the same tests as that of other witnesses. He is subject to be examined, cross-examined and impeached in precisely the same manner as other witnesses. Huffman v. State, 25 App. 174, 12 S. W. 588; Hargrove v. State, 32 App. 431, 26 S. W. 993.

When a defendant takes the stand as a witness he places himself in precisely the same position as any other witness and may be contradicted or sustained in the same manner as other witnesses. Ware v. State, 26 App. 597, 38 S. W. 198; Morales v. State, 36 App. 231, 39 S. W. 455, 846.

A defendant in a criminal case, who has taken the stand on his own behalf, is presumed to have done so after having advised with his counsel, and with full knowledge that he can become such witness, and that on doing so he is to be treated as any other witness, and also that his testimony so given can be used against him at any subsequent trial of such case. Collins v. State, 39 App. 441, 46 S. W. 103.

5. — Credibility of defendant.—In a prosecution for burglary, the credibility of defendant and of the officers testifying against him held for the jury. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

6. Self-incrimination.—See art. 4, and notes.

When defendant goes on the stand as a witness he is held to waive his constitutionally absolute privilege and can be cross-examined on any branch of the case, although he may not have been examined on such branch in chief. Grooms v. State, 40 App. 319, 50 S. W. 370; Tyland v. State, 23 App. 382, 26 S. W. 621.

A defendant in a criminal case who makes no affidavit that he had failed to testify when he was tried to testify when he was tried does not compel a defendant to testify in his own behalf. Holt v. State, 33 App. 282, 45 S. W. 1016, 46 S. W. 829.

The state has a right to recall a defendant, who took the stand in his own behalf, for further examination, as against the objection, as against the objection, that he cannot be compelled to testify against himself. Flowers v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 925.

Under Bill of Rights, § 16, providing that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself, a person cannot be compelled to testify in a criminal case pending against him, nor give testimony on the trial of another on which a prosecution may or can be founded against him. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 641, 162 S. W. 29.

Where the law of a state absolutely protects one from all punishment for the offense about which he is called to testify, he does not give evidence against himself, and Bill of Rights, § 16, providing that the accused in a criminal prosecution shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself, has no application. Ex parte Muncy, 72 App. 641, 163 S. W. 29.

Evidence as to testimony given by accused in another court in which he took the stand and testified voluntarily was not inadmissible, as compelling accused to testify against himself. Mooney v. State, 73 App. 121, 164 S. W. 829.

In a prosecution for forgery where the forged instrument is in the hands of accused, he cannot be compelled to produce it, for that would be compelling him to give evidence against himself. Meredith v. State, 73 App. 147, 164 S. W. 1019.

If accused takes the stand on the examining trial as a witness and is sworn, his testimony may be reproduced against him in any subsequent trial, whether he was warned or not, but where he makes a statement, as required by the statute, the state, before introducing such testimony, must show a warning. Kirkpatrick v. State, 57 App. 17, 121 S. W. 511.

The testimony of accused on his former trial is admissible in evidence on his subsequent trial, though he does not testify at such trial. Jones v. State, 64 App. 610, 143 S. W. 621.

In a prosecution with intent to kill, the state could prove accused's evidence on a charge which disputed his evidence at the present trial on a material point. Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 183, 157 S. W. 157.

A statement of facts in a former trial of the case containing the former testimony of accused was not inadmissible as against the objection that it was not the testimony of a witness who had heard the defendant so testify, or the objection that it was condensed in the statement of facts, or the objection that it was not in the form of question and answer as the stenographer made it, or that it was not signed by the defendant. Best v. State, 72 App. 201, 164 S. W. 996.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of a statement of facts in a former trial of accused containing his former testimony, which bill did not show that it was not agreed by the parties that the said admitted testimony had not been agreed to the testimony of accused on the former trial, and that what witnesses were introduced who testified that the accused had given such testimony on the previous trial, and did not by any means exclude the idea that the testimony was not proven in some of the methods prescribed by law to render it admissible, was insufficient to show error. Best v. State, 73 App. 201, 144 S. W. 904.

That the testimony of accused in a former trial of the case was contained in a statement of facts in that case would not make it inadmissible. Best v. State, 72 App. 201, 164 S. W. 997.

A statement of facts in a former trial of the case containing the testimony of the accused was not hearsay. Best v. State, 72 App. 201, 164 S. W. 997.

8. Examination of defendant.—After defendant testifies in his own behalf he is a witness for all purposes and after he has left the stand the case can be recalled by the State and questioned. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 69 S. W. 40; Mendez v. State, 29 App. 608, 16 S. W. 766. Defendant stated that he was shot in the left leg and exhibited it to the jury; held, that the state had the right to compel him to exhibit his right leg for the purpose. Thomas v. State, 35 App. 607, 28 Tex. 848.

It is not to recall defendant to ask him if he had made certain statements in his testimony. Lafferty v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 574. Trial for the court, while defendant was being examined as a witness in his own behalf, to permit the district attorney and sheriff or deputy sheriff to hold a consultation in the presence of the jury. Girtman v. State, 73 App. 158, 164 S. W. 1608.

9. — Direct examination.—On a trial for homicide, a question asked accused by his counsel as to what he meant if he stated to the first people he met that he had to do what he did in defense of his family was properly excluded, where accused positively and emphatically denied making such statement and had not withdrawn his denial. Hiles v. State, 73 App. 17, 163 S. W. 117.

10. — Cross-examination.—Defendant as a witness may be compelled to answer any question, however irrelevant or disgraceful, where the answer might expose him to a criminal charge. Crockett v. State, 40 App. 178, 49 S. W. 392.

On indictment for murder, a defendant, having testified on his own behalf, may be compelled to admit that he killed another man in the same conflict, such killing being part of the res gestae. Hargrove v. State, 33 App. 421, 26 S. W. 953.

On a prosecution for disturbing a religious meeting, testimony elicited from defendant on cross-examination, that he was drinking at the time of the disturbance, is admissible to show his mental condition, and as affecting the weight of his testimony. Lewis v. State, 33 App. 618, 28 S. W. 462.

When defendant takes the stand he becomes a witness for all purposes. The state is not confined in its cross-examination to matters elicited in chief. Brown v. State, 23 App. 257, 44 S. W. 176.

After defendant charged with keeping a disorderly house has made himself a witness in his own behalf, State can prove by him that he bought the house at a certain price. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 40.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, it was error to allow the district attorney to elicit from accused on cross-examination that certain eyewitnesses were not present in court, that all of them were present and testified for the state in a former trial, and that he did not know where they were and had not tried to get their depositions, since accused was not chargeable with the absence of state witnesses. Askew v. State, 59 App. 152, 127 S. W. 1037.

Where accused on a trial for passing a forged check testified that he had assumed a name for business purposes, evidence on cross-examination that he had gone by another name on a certain night, and that he had registered at a hotel under that name with a prostitute, because he did not desire to register under his correct name, as it might affect his business, was proper. Fineweillan v. State, 59 App. 234, 128 S. W. 621.

Where accused testifies in his own behalf, he subjects himself to cross-examination on all the facts relevant and material to the case, and cannot refuse to testify to any facts which would be competent evidence, if proved by other witnesses. People v. Lewis, 138 Cal. 262, 68 P. 940.

Where accused claimed that he killed deceased in self-defense, the state was properly permitted to cross-examine him as a witness in his own behalf, and show that prior to his surrender and trial he had never told any one that he acted in self-defense, and that, opportunity offering, he had not even told his brother. Edwards v. State, 61 App. 307, 135 S. W. 540.

In a homicide case, it was improper to permit the state to ask accused on cross-examination what a deceased witness testified to at a habeas corpus trial, and if accused did not wait until after that witness' death to deny the statement made by the witness. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 135 S. W. 1025.

Though the witnesses for the state on a prosecution for carrying a pistol stated that defendant left his own home with C., on March 3d, and on that occasion displayed the pistol, defendant, who testified that on that night he did not go home with C., but went with another and did not then have a pistol, may on cross-examination be asked if on March 4th he did not go home with C. and then have a pistol. Brown v. State, 61 App. 475, 149 S. W. 352.

On cross-examination of person accused of burglary, it was not error to permit a question as to whether he knew of any reason why the prosecuting witness would have had him arrested, unless because he entered his house. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 783.

Where a person accused of burglary testified that he went to the house of the chief of police selling a medicine, was asked by the chief if he had a license to sell and, upon answering that he did not know he had to have a license, was told to come to the chief's office, it was not error to permit cross-examination as to whether he knew he was selling a preparation manufactured by himself under the name of another preparation without a license, and whether he did not know that the preparation he manufactured and sold was the same preparation that he testified that he did not know he had to have a license, it was permissible for the state to show that he did know he should have had a license. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 785.

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

(Title 8)

Where the state claimed that defendant had slandered his wife to manufacture evidence that he might marry M., the court permitted him to cross-examine M. as to whether his lack of remembrance was due to a blow received prior to that hour.

Shaffer v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1052.

Where defendant testified that he could not remember after 10 o'clock on the night of the offense, the court properly permitted him to be cross-examined as to whether he kept intoxicating liquors in his drug store, to which answer was made that he kept alcohol, was proper.

Wrba v. State, 70 App. 211, 156 S. W. 1161.

In a prosecution for selling a half pint of alcohol in a prohibition county, the question of cross-examination of accused as to whether he kept intoxicating liquors in his drug store, to which answer was made that he kept alcohol, was proper.

The court should not have permitted the district attorney to ask defendant, in a prosecution for seduction, if he had not left another county because indicted for rape on a certain girl, when the attorney at the time was aware that no such indictment had ever been presented, or arrest made.

Capshaw v. State, 75 App. 669, 166 S. W. 727.

In a prosecution for rape, where defendant went into the matter as to whether prosecutrix had accused him, cross-examination as to that fact was proper.

Where accused became a witness voluntarily in his own behalf, he was subject to cross-examination as any other witness.

Serrato v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1133.

Where one accused of adultery with his wife's niece admitted that she had been living in his home, but denied having intercourse with her, and introduced testifying a witnessrod he knew of any reason why she would falsely testify against him. Bodkins v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 216.

Where, in a prosecution for theft of property from a cotton gin owned by a company, defendant testified that he owned stock in the company, the state might, on cross-examination, ask him when he purchased the stock and what he paid for it, to ascertain if his claim was made in good faith. Schenk v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 357.

In a prosecution for burglary, where the defendant pleaded guilty and filed a plea asking that sentence be suspended, taking the stand to testify that he had never been convicted of a felony, the action of the court in permitting the state to cross-examine the defendant about the burglary was proper, since the defendant in a criminal prosecution voluntarily takes the stand he may be questioned about any matter legitimately connected with that under inquiry, as well as about matters he testified to on direct examination. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1161.

11. Harmless error.—Where the court sustained objections to improper questions asked accused on cross-examination, and the questions were not answered, and at the request of accused's counsel the court admonished the district attorney not to ask such questions again, and he complied, the conduct of the district attorney was not ground for reversal, and to justify a reversal the bill of exceptions must show that there were answers to the questions and that the answers were injurious to accused. Huggins v. State, 60 App. 214, 131 S. W. 596.

Where the district attorney did not attempt to prove defendant was guilty of other offenses to affect his credibility, though the court ruled that such testimony was admissible, and did not attempt to prove that accused had made a statement to a justice, but accepted accused's testimony that he had not made the statement, the rulings on the evidence presented no error. Siurra v. State, 63 App. 567, 140 S. W. 777.

Though the fact, that the state attempted to elicit by a question to defendant, was inadmissible against him, allowing the question, which in and of itself was not of a harmful nature, was not prejudicial; he having answered against the existence of the fact. Wyrse v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1150.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, the questioning of defendant as to whether he did not, shortly before the alleged sale, get off a train with liquor and get into a closed carriage and drive away rapidly, was not reversible error, where objection to the question was sustained. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 895.

In a prosecution of one accused as accomplice to murder, a question by the district attorney, asked the defendant on cross-examination, if he had not debouched the dead man's wife, to which question the defendant's objection was sustained, was not error, where the defendant had admitted illicit intercourse with the woman. M'Ilner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

Where, in a prosecution for cattle theft, one jointly indicted turned state's evidence, and the case was dismissed against him, and defendant proved that such codefendant's reputation was bad, he was not prejudiced by a question on cross-examination as to why, under such circumstances, he associated with the codefendant, to which he answered that the latter wanted to buy beef, and that he would as soon sell to him as any one. Swafford v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 225.

12. Impeachment of defendant.—Impeachment of witnesses generally, see notes to Sec. 15 of Title 25. Swales' Civ. St. 3914, art. 3667.

Use of confession for purpose of impeachment, see notes to art. 510.

Where accused testifies in his own behalf, he assumes the character of a witness and may be contradicted, discredited, and impeached like any other witness.
except that a statement made while under arrest cannot be introduced to impeach him. (State v. 148 S. W. 805; Bell v. State, 28 S. W. 149; Gonzales v. State, 21 App. 508, 21 S. W. 225.

On the trial of a man for the murder of his wife, it is not error to permit the state, on cross-examination, to ask defendant, as a witness, if his wife did not believe on the ground of adultery with the woman who stayed at his house. Meleck v. State, 33 App. 14, 21 S. W. 417.

Defendant cannot be asked, for the purpose of impeaching him as a witness, if he was not convicted of the offense for which he is on trial at a former trial. Richardson v. State, 33 App. 518, 21 S. W. 125.

It is not competent to prove or to attempt to prove by defendant why his wife left him. Williford v. State, 36 App. 414, 37 S. W. 761.

On trial for an assault with intent to rape, testified in his own behalf, it was error to show extraneous matters having no tendency to affect his credibility as a witness, but only to create a prejudice against him as being an immoral man. Campbell v. State, 62 App. 561, 135 S. W. 606.

13. Character or reputation.—The inquiry as to character must be limited to the general reputation of the person in the community of his residence or where he is best known, and the witness must speak from his knowledge of this general character and not from his own individual opinion. Brownlee v. State, 13 App. 255.

When defendant has voluntarily put his character in issue, the prosecution may introduce evidence in rebuttal as to his general reputation, but not as to particular acts. Such evidence should be confined to defendant's character, and not that of his associates. Holsay v. State, 24 App. 35, 5 S. W. 522.

It was not prejudicial error for the attorney general, in addressing the jury on a trial for murder, to refer to the fact that defendant had not put in issue his own character. Coyle v. State, 31 App. 604, 21 S. W. 765.

A man who had been in the state but two years, put his character in evidence, a witness who up to three years before had known him in another state may testify that he knew his general reputation there, and that it was not good. Thomas v. State, 33 App. 607, 25 S. W. 544.

On trial for burglary, the fact that defendant slept with lawd women does not tend to impeach his veracity and is not admissible. The question of chastity has no hearing on defendant's veracity. Hudson v. State, 41 App. 433, 55 S. W. 492, 96 Am. St. Rep. 739.

It is inadmissible to prove on cross-examination of defendant why his wives left him, it being shown that he had been married three times and that two of his wives had quit him. Jenkins v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 819.

In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol wherein it was claimed by defendant and the city marshal that the marshal went to defendant and informed there was a show coming to town and that he wanted him to get his pistol and go to meet the train, to protect the town from thugs, and that thereupon he procured a pistol, walked to the back door of a saloon, and fired it off, evidence that he and the marshal got drunk and went on the streets, and whooped and howled, knocked one or two men down, and made considerable noise, was admissible to impeach and contradict him. Schuh v. State, 58 App. 165, 121 S. W. 905.

On trial of accused for whipping his wife, the court erred in requiring him to answer how many times he had been married, and how many living wives he had, etc.; his conduct toward such other women not being in issue. Treadway v. State, 61 App. 546, 135 S. W. 147.

A question to accused, after he had put his character as a law-abiding citizen in evidence, "You broke a couple of S.'s ribs, didn't you?" referring to another difficulty he had had, answered in the negative, was improper. Ward v. State, 79 App. 393, 155 S. W. 272.

In a prosecution for larceny from the person, the fact that defendant was a prostitute can always be drawn out upon her cross-examination. Wilson v. State, 71 App. 425, 160 S. W. 967.

In a prosecution for homicide, where defendant had denied having had an altercation with a road overseer, even though the state might show that defendant previously had been convicted for such altercation, it was error to permit all the details of that transaction to be presented to the jury. House v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 290.

14. Reputation for veracity.—When a witness testifies to defendant's reputation for veracity he may further testify that defendant is unworthy of belief. Ware v. State, 36 App. 597, 35 S. W. 198.

When defendant testifies as a witness, his general reputation for truth and veracity at time of trial can be shown. Renfro v. State, 42 App. 395, 56 S. W. 1018.

Evidence of other offenses in general, see art. 753, ante.

Where accused testified in his own behalf, evidence that he had been indicted for several offenses was admissible as bearing on his credibility. Bellford v. State (Cr. App.) 70 S. W. 727; Ware v. State, 35 App. 502, 26 S. W. 1672; Butherford v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 271; Chance v. State, 63 App. 602, 141 S. W. 113.

An accused, who testifies in his own behalf, can be forced to testify that he has previously been convicted and served a term in the penitentiary, unless such conviction was for an offense so remote as to be inadmissible. Keets v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 149; Darbyshire v. State, 36 App. 547, 38 S. W. 199; Campbell v. State, 62 App. 561, 135 S. W. 607.

Offenses showing moral turpitude which defendant has committed can be proved to discredit him. Ross v. State, 49 App. 352, 50 S. W. 336; White v. State, 51 App. 498, 135 S. W. 562.

TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

It is not competent to prove by defendant as going to his credit that he has been tried of such misdemeanors as do not impeach his credibility, Green v. State, 22 App. 555, 34 S. W. 102; Williford v. State, 36 App. 414, 37 S. W. 701; Brittain v. State, 36 App. 408, 37 S. W. 753; Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 App. 20, 38 S. W. 806.

A defendant who makes himself a witness may, like any other witness, on cross-examination have his credibility attacked by questions as to whether he had not been previously arrested for crimes. Jackson v. State, 33 App. 281, 26 S. W. 194, 222. 47 Am. St. Rep. 305. 250.

A defendant who testifies in his own behalf may be asked, for the purpose of attacking his credibility, if he has been accused of other crimes. Oliver v. State, 33 App. 541, 28 S. W. 202.

For the purpose of impeaching defendant he may be asked on cross-examination whether he had been convicted of a felony, and it is not necessary to introduce the record of the conviction. Britton v. State, 34 App. 477, 31 S. W. 379.

The defendant, while on the stand in a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, was asked how many times he had been indicted in that county, and how many fines he had paid, and the question and answer were limited by the court to felonies, and the jury was directed not to consider any answer to any other grade of offense. Held that, as limited by the court, the question and answer were properly allowed as impeaching evidence. Green v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 126.

While it is permissible to show on cross-examination of accused that he has been charged in another case with a felony or an offense involving moral turpitude, it is improper to ask him concerning facts tending to show that he was in fact guilty of the other offense. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 141 S. W. 598.

Though when a former crime is admitted, the circumstances attendant upon it cannot, yet when a defendant himself brings it up in answer and seeks to arouse sympathy for himself by showing that he was led into crime as a mere boy by older persons, then the state may show the real facts. and, if on cross-examination of such defendant it develops that defendant committed another crime, which lawyer immediately asked the court to instruct the jury not to consider, there is no error. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 394.

Where accused testifies he is subject to examination as any other witness, and can be compelled to testify to previous indictments or convictions for felony, if not too remote. Turner v. State, 71 App. 477, 100 S. W. 327.

It was error to compel accused as a witness in his own behalf to testify that he had been convicted on a prior trial of the same case though he invoked the benefit of the suspended sentence law. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 109 S. W. 299.

It is not competent to show on cross-examination of accused that he has been tried of a defense pending against him, the indictment is admissible though only on the question of his credibility. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 519.

16. -- Accusation of particular offenses.—That a defendant is under other indictments for assault and battery or for carrying weapons, cannot be shown to impeach his testimony as a witness, the offenses charged being misdemeanors not involving moral turpitude, and not legitimately affecting his credibility. Brittain v. State, 35 App. 496, 27 S. W. 228.

On prosecution for an assault with intent to commit rape, evidence that defendant had been indicted and acquitted of a similar offense is admissible, going to his credit as a witness. Clark v. State, 38 App. 39, 49 S. W. 902.

On trial for unlawfully using a pistol, when defendant becomes a witness in his own behalf, it is not admissible for the state to ask him if he has not been charged with like offenses a number of times. The fact that a man has carried a pistol cannot affect his credibility as a witness. Balm v. State, 33 App. 655, 44 S. W. 518.

The state may prove by a defendant who takes the stand on his own behalf that he is then under indictment for perjury. Bruce v. State, 39 App. 26, 44 S. W. 582. In other, where accused, on manslaughter, where an answer to a question as to his reason for firing a second shot into a saloon after shooting decedent, stated that his purpose was to keep any one from coming out and shooting him down, and that he did not shoot at one C., son of decedent, it was competent to ask him if he had been indicted for intent to murder C. to show his motive for the statement and to affect his credibility. Davis v. State, 57 App. 165, 121 S. W. 1108.

As a means of attacking his credibility, it is legitimate to show by accused on cross-examination that he has been indicted for felonies in other cases. Doyle v. State, 59 App. 33, 128 S. W. 1131.

Evidence that accused, on trial for burglary, had theretofore been indicted for burglary, was admissible to affect his credibility. Diischer v. State, 59 App. 149, 127 S. W. 1033.

On cross-examination of accused, it was error to permit questions as to previous arrests for intoxication and for fighting, for the purpose of impeachment. Fowl v. State, 60 App. 201, 131 S. W. 590.

It is error to require accused, on trial for murder, to show on his cross-examination that 14 years before he had been charged with an assault with intent to murder. Thomas v. State, 63 App. 98, 138 S. W. 1018.

In a homicide case, it was improper to ask accused on cross-examination if he had not been indicted for illegally taking money from negroes. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 138 S. W. 1025.

In a prosecution for assault to murder, it was proper for the court to permit the state to examine defendant concerning his prior arrest for theft from the person of another; such offense being a felony. Lacoume v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 625.
The state on a trial for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the prohibition laws, may show on the trial that he has been indicted for selling intoxicating liquors in counties where the making of a single sale is a felony to affect his credibility as a witness. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 280.

In a prosecution for hog theft, the state could show by accused that he had been indicted for cattle theft and for illegally marking a cow, the court having charged that the evidence was admissible solely for impeaching accused's credibility as a witness, and could not be considered as substantive evidence to prove guilt. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 908.

The fact that an indictment was pending against accused for seduction was admissible as affecting his credibility in a prosecution for theft, but it was error to permit question "Are you not under arrest, charged with seducing R. C.'s little girl?" since only the fact of the pending charge of seduction could be shown, and not that the girl was "little," or whose daughter she was. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 181.

The defendant having testified, the state could properly show that he had been arrested on a charge of burglary. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1063.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicants in violation of the local option law, evidence that other indictments for felony in violating the local option law were pending against accused in certain counties was admissible to affect accused's credibility as a witness. Ross v. State, 72 App. 611, 103 S. W. 433.

Where accused testified in his own behalf, the court properly permitted the district attorney to ask him on cross-examination if he had been under indictment for assault with intent to murder. Girtman v. State, 73 App. 155, 164 S. W. 1008.

Where accused, charged with selling whisky in a prohibition county, testified in his own behalf, the state could attack his general reputation and show that he had been indicted for various offenses, including sales of intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, and that indictments therefore were pending against him, to affect his credibility. Novotny v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 349.

On a trial for assault to murder, where accused testified in his own behalf, evidence that he had been twice indicted for murder was admissible to affect his credit as a witness. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 584.

In a prosecution for theft of goats, where defendant took the stand for himself, it was permissible to show that there was another indictment for felony pending against him, as affecting his credit as a witness. Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1864.

17. Conviction of particular offenses. Where defendant, on trial for embezzlement, had not put his character in issue, it was error for the trial court to permit a judgment of conviction against defendant for burglary to be introduced and read in evidence in order to overcome defendant's application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness by whom it was expected to prove the good character of defendant. Feltsenall v. State, 30 App. 675, 18 S. W. 644.

In a prosecution for selling liquors on Sunday the prosecuting attorney may ask defendant on his cross-examination as a witness how many times he had been convicted for violating the liquor and Sunday laws. Levine v. State, 35 App. 647, 34 S. W. 969.

Evidence of a prior conviction of horse theft is competent to affect the credibility of defendant. Ray v. State (Cr. App.) 46 S. W. 77.

It was competent, as affecting his credit as a witness on his own behalf in a trial for an assault, to prove by defendant, on cross-examination, that he had theretofore been sent to the reformatory for the offense of sodomy. McCray v. State, 35 App. 605, 44 S. W. 170.

In a prosecution for theft, evidence that accused had been sent to the penitentiary 24 or 25 years before for robbery was not admissible, being too remote; but evidence of pleaded guilty to the crime of theft 4 or 5 years before was admissible. WHITE v. State, 57 App. 196, 122 S. W. 391.

The offense of swindling involves moral turpitude, and accused, testifying in his own behalf, may, on cross-examination, be required to show that he has been convicted thereof. WHITE v. State, 61 App. 498, 155 S. W. 562.

On a trial for cattle theft, where it appeared that accused explained his possession of the stolen cattle by stating that he purchased them and had a bill of sale and a check showing payment, and the bill of sale was in evidence, accused's conviction for a felony and imprisonment for 18 months 15 years prior to the trial was too remote to justify proof thereof on his cross-examination. Turner v. State, 71 App. 477, 160 S. W. 687.

In a trial for homicide committed August 15, 1912, as the outcome of defendant's illegal conduct with deceased's wife begun some 18 months prior thereto and continued to the homicide, the admission of defendant's testimony on cross-examination that he was convicted of an assault with intent to murder on August 12, 1908, for which he served a penitentiary term of two years, leaving about August, 1909, was proper for purposes of impeachment only. Lane v. State, 73 App. 266, 161 S. W. 378.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, a statement by accused in the grand jury room, while the grand jury was investigating the case, that she had paid two fines for being "vag," was not admissible to impeach her testimony. Bowman v. State, 73 App. 194, 164 S. W. 816.

Where a conviction of accused of forgery had been set aside, the indictment quashed, and the case dismissed, evidence of such conviction was not admissible to affect the credibility of accused as a witness in his own behalf. Bedford v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 727.

On a trial for murder committed in an attempt to rob a train, where defendant has testified that the conspiracy to rob was formed in a certain part of the country, and not in the penitentiary, the state may impeach him by proving his declarations that while he was confined he and his co-conspirators were confined in the penitentiary. May v. State, 33 App. 74, 24 S. W. 910.

A defendant testifying in his own behalf stands as other witnesses and may be impeached by the same methods. Contradictory statements made by defendant while under arrest, though he had not been warned, were admissible to impeach him. Cerla v. State, 33 App. 464, 26 S. W. 992.

An accused, who does not admit on his examination that he made certain contradictory statements as to a material matter, may be impeached by the person to whom they were made. Gonzales v. State, 35 App. 29, 29 S. W. 1081, 29 S. W. 224.

In the examination of certain persons charged with robbery, and before his arrest as an accomplice therein, defendant willingly testified, without claiming his privilege to refuse to give evidence which might criminate him. Held, that such testimony was admissible against defendant on his own trial. Armstrong v. State, 34 App. 248, 30 S. W. 235.

Where statements of defendant are sought to be admitted in evidence against him, it is proper to show the question asked defendant as explanatory of his answer. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 446, 34 S. W. 623.

Statements by defendant while in jail are admissible in evidence to discredit his testimony. Thompson v. State, 35 App. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

On impeachment, the accused gave in his own behalf, his evidence, given in open court proceedings, was properly admitted for purposes of impeachment. Renn v. State, 61 App. 639, 143 S. W. 167.

After one accused of crime had testified in his own behalf, testimony of one who heard a conversation between the defendant and another before the defendant was charged with the crime is admissible to impeach the defendant's testimony, even though the third person made notes of the conversation which were not signed by the defendant. Anderson v. State, 71 App. 27, 155 S. W. 547.

19. — Confessions.—See notes under art. §10.

It is not admissible for a defendant to testify as a witness in his own behalf as to a confession made by him while in jail without being warned, for the purpose of laying a predicate for his impeachment, and then show by witnesses that he made the confession. Morin v. State, 36 App. 284, 36 S. W. 345, 346; Quintana v. State, 29 App. 498, 34 S. W. 258, 25 Am. St. Rep. 739; and Ferguson v. State, 32 App. 72, 19 S. W. 901; distinguished. Phillips v. State, 35 App. 490, 34 S. W. 272, overruled.

20. — Laying predicate.—After defendant has testified and left the stand the state can recall him to the stand to lay a predicate for his impeachment. Clay v. State, 40 App. 661, 51 S. W. 370.

21. — Examination of impeaching witnesses.—A witness called to testify to a conversation denied by accused should be examined in the language of the predicate laid for accused's impeachment; the witness being improperly permitted to state the conversation between himself and accused. Kemper v. State, 63 App. 1, 133 S. W. 1025.

22. — Harmless error.—Permitting accused, as a witness, to be asked if he had not, during a certain period, run a house of ill fame at a certain place, and came to another place to get women to take there for immoral purposes, was not reversible error, in view of accused's answer in the negative. Hart v. State, 57 App. 21, 121 S. W. 508.

When the evidence showed that accused shot decedent, under circumstances eliminating self-defense, the admission of testimony of accused, in answer to a question whether his house had not been raided by officers as a gambling house and he arrested, and whether he had not pleaded guilty, that his house was not raided, for shooting craps, and that guilty was not reversible error, where the court withdrew the evidence from the jury and instructed them not to consider it, and the jury found accused guilty only of manslaughter, with the minimum punishment. Hart v. State, 57 App. 21, 121 S. W. 508.

Even if admission of testimony on accused's cross-examination of his indictment for another offense was error, it was harmless, where the jury gave accused the minimum punishment. Davis v. State, 57 App. 165, 121 S. W. 1108.

It was prejudicial error to admit evidence to contradict accused on a collateral and immaterial matter, where there was a sharp conflict in the testimony on the main issue. Holland v. State, 60 App. 117, 131 S. W. 563.

The admission of a question whether accused had ever been indicted was not error, where he answered that he did not know, as no papers had ever been served on him. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 765.

On defendant's cross-examination he was asked if he had not been convicted of a felony and sentenced to the penitentiary within 8 or 10 years, to which he answered in the negative. He was then asked, "How long has it been?" Held, that the asking of such question to which an objection was promptly sustained was not prejudicial. Clayton v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 118.

Error in compelling defendant to testify as a witness in his own behalf that he had been convicted on a prior trial of the same case was not rendered harmless because he had accepted jurors after they had testified on their voir dire that they had heard of the former conviction, nor because accused had filed certain pleas before the jury was impaneled in which such prior conviction appeared. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 259.

Where a conviction of accused of forgery had been set aside, the indictment quashed, and the case dismissed, and in a prosecution for another offense evidence of such conviction was erroneously admitted to impeach him, the error was harmless. He is permitted having permitted him to testify that the conviction had been set aside and the case dismissed. Bedford v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 727.
23.       Rebutting impeaching evidence.—Testimony of accused that former prosecutions had been dismissed was admissible to rebut the assumption arising from evidence of former indictments. Diseren v. State, 59 App. 149, 137 S. W. 1038.
Where one accused of a crime testified on cross-examination that he had been indicted several times before for embezzlement, he should be permitted to testify on redirection into details, that the indictment had been dismissed, and that he was not guilty of the charges, especially where the statute provides that the defendant has a right to explain any act or circumstances intro-24.       Limiting impeaching evidence.—Where proof that accused had been indicted for an offense was admitted solely to affect his credibility as a witness, the court must limit the purpose for which the proof was admitted. Clay v. State
When the confession of defendant is offered for the purpose of impeaching him the court should instruct the jury to consider such confession only for that purpose.

Defendant, on a trial for murder, denied while testifying in his behalf that he had made threats to kill decedent and statements indicating a deadly animosity towards decedent, evidence of accused's threat to kill and of his statements implying animosity was admissible as original testimony, and the court was not required to limit the testimony to impeach accused. Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 553, 132 S.
W. 783.

It is not necessary to limit evidence of extraneous crimes to affect accused's credibility of a witness if evidence of the extraneous crimes might be used by the jury against accused. Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 534, 132 S. W. 783.
Defendant testified to an alleged conversation with deceased before she stabbed him, during which she claimed he started toward her with a knife. She also testi-ﬁed after the killing the constable and sheriff arrived, and they were putting her in jail she told them that deceased had cut her in two or three places on the back and had threatened to kill her. The sheriff, in rebuttal, testified that she said nothing about deceased having cut her on the back when they saw her in jail and that he did see a bruised place on one limb, but did not see any sign of any cut on her, and the constable testified that he saw no bruises or marks on her at all. Held, that such evidence in rebuttal was not limited to impeachment, but was original testimony, and the court did not err in refusing to limit the jury's consideration thereof to defendant's impeachment. Young v.
State, 61 App. 303, 135 S. W. 127.

It was error to not to limit evidence that accused had been indicted and acquitted
306, 137 S. W. 703.

If impeaching evidence is admitted to affect accused's credibility as a witness, the jury must be instructed that it was admitted for that purpose, so that it was error to maintain charge in a rape case that evidence of other offenses by accused was admitted for the "impeachment of defendant as a witness, and for no other purpose," without stating whether the evidence was for impeaching accused's credibility, or character as a man of chastity, honesty, etc. Edmondson v. State (Cr.
App.) 159 S. W. 917.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of a mortgaged chattel, where it was shown by the state, upon cross-examination of the defendant, that he had been indicted several times for embezzlement and the unlawful sale of the chattel, and that, when asked whether the evidence was not impeaching accused's credibility, the evidence was not admissible as original evidence; and, when introduced for the purpose of impeachment, it was error for the court to refuse to limit the effect of the testimony to that purpose, upon proper request by the defendant.

25.       Bill of exceptions.—See art. 744, and notes.
26.       Contradicting defendant.—Where defendant was charged with having a pistol when he committed the offense, and denied ever having carried a pistol, it is competent to prove that he had a pistol after the robbery. Williams v. State, 34
App. 523, 51 S. W. 405.

It was prejudicial error to admit evidence to contradict accused on a collateral and immaterial matter, where there was a sharp conflict in the testimony on the major issue. Holland v. State, 60 App. 117, 131 S. W. 582.

Where accused testified that he had not been drinking on the night of the killing, the state could show that 39 minutes after the killing his breath smelled strongly of whisky, as a circumstance affecting the accuracy of his testimony detailing the cir-

Where accused, testifying in his own behalf, was cross-examined to affect his credibility on a matter about which he had not been indicted, and the questions did not indicate facts justifying an indictment, his answers could not be contradicted.

In a prosecution for theft of a beef, testimony of a person who saw the property alleged to have been stolen in the pen of the defendant and told another person about it on a certain day, and of such other person that the first witness did so tell him, is admissible to show the time the beef was in the pen, and thereby disseminate testimony of defendant to the effect that on the day before the witness saw the beef he purchased it from a traveler in another county. Chance v. State, 63 App. 602, 141 S. W. 138.

In a prosecution for homicide, for which accused and another were originally jointly indicted, evidence by the codefendant's brother that the codefendant and accused were together on the day of the shooting, and that accused knew that the codefendant and decedent were likely to have trouble, and that witness asked him to go with his brother to the hotel to keep him out of trouble, was admissible to show that accused knew of the existence of trouble between decedent and the codefendant, as well as to impeach accused's statement that he did not know of such

715
A person accused of crime who becomes a witness can have his credibility tested on the same as any other witnesses, and the same as any other witnesses, by his cross-examination, if it can, that statements on direct examination were not true. Weaver v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 785.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill in which accused claimed that his arm was broken a few days before the difficulty that he could not use it, evidence that he had used an ax the day before the trouble, to break open a salt barrel, and carry part of the salt home on his shoulder, was admissible to impeach accused. Lott v. State, 70 App. 185, 177 S. W. 157.

Where, in a prosecution of a father for the rape of his daughter, the daughter testified that it occurred about 8 o'clock in the evening, while her mother was at a neighbor's, and defendant testified that his wife was not away from home that evening, testimony of the neighbor was admissible to rebut defendant's testimony.

Where, in a prosecution of a father for the rape of his daughter, the daughter testified that it occurred about 16 o'clock one morning, and defendant testified that on the morning he left home at 9 o'clock to go to a neighbor's to help kill a hog, testimony of the neighbor was admissible in rebuttal of defendant's testimony.

27. Corroboration.—Defendant should be allowed to corroborate his own evidence by statements by prosecutrix. Wherry v. State, 32 App. 577, 26 S. W. 557.

Where the state showed contradictory statements by accused for the purpose of impeaching him, defendant was entitled to show statements by him shortly after the transaction, under investigation, consistent with his testimony. Campbell v. State, 35 App. 160, 32 S. W. 724.

A person charged with theft of property which he sold and claimed to have authorized from the owner to sell, should be allowed to introduce, as tending to corroborate his statement, testimony that the owner had procured and tried to procure the services of other persons to sell such property. Kimball v. State, 27 App. 239, 39 S. W. 297, 66 Am. St. Rep. 779.

Where defendant's explanation is attacked and made to appear to be a recent fabrication, he can show that he made the same statement at one time when there was no motive to fabricate. Bellow v. State, 42 App. 263, 58 S. W. 1924.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state had accused testify that she had not told the neighbors of deceased's improper conduct as charged by her, she was entitled to prove as supporting testimony that she had told a cousin with whom she was raised, and her attorney, and had acted on his advice in remaining with her husband. Streight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742.

Defendant prosecuted for sale of a bottle of whisky, which he claimed he had not seen, but was taken, could not, after testifying that the bottle belonged to him and D., and had been ordered for their own use, in the absence of any effort to impeach him by proof of contradictory statements or otherwise, corroborate his testimony by testimony of D. that he reported to D. that some one had taken their bottle of whisky, and run off with it. Carver v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 914.

Where accused took the stand and contradicted the prosecutrix, he cannot, his reputation for veracity not having been attacked, show that he told other witnesses of statements of corroborating evidence which tended to corroborate his own testimony. Hunt v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 436.

28. Proving reputation for veracity.—Where accused was permitted to prove his general reputation as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, and no effort was made to impeach his testimony, the fact that defendant's evidence and that of the witnesses who agreed to furnish further evidence of defendant's general reputation for veracity. Allen v. State, 64 App. 225, 141 S. W. 953; Winskoski v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 316.

In a prosecution, that there is a conflict between defendant's testimony and that of the state does not entitle defendant to introduce evidence of his reputation for veracity. McGrath v. State, 35 App. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 411. Though one accused of murder testifies in his own behalf, he is not entitled to show an reputation for truth and veracity, if the state has not attempted to impeach him. Lacey v. State, 63 App. 189, 140 S. W. 461.

It was proper to exclude testimony for accused as to his reputation for truth and veracity where the state had not sought to impeach him, though two witnesses testified that accused made certain statements to them, and in their presence at the time of the homicide, which statements defendant denied he made. Pettis v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 790.

29. Reference by counsel to accused's failure to testify.—Improper argument in general, see notes to arts. 724, 725, ante.

The district attorney in his argument said: "I know to defendant's face chal­lenge him to explain his possession. He sits there silent; silence speaks louder than words and the defendant is silent." Held, a more palpable violation of the statute prohibiting allusion to defendant's failure to testify can not well be imagined. Bills v. State, 32 App. 136, 22 S. W. 498.

The prohibition against arguments on defendant's failure to testify does not ap
The prosecuting attorney read to the jury art. 1069, Pen. Code, vis.: When an injury is caused by violence to the person the intent to injure is presumed; and it rests with the person inflicting the injury to show the accident or innocent intent. This could not be construed as an attack on the defendant's failure to testify. Jacob v. State, 27 App. 428, 55 S. W. 578.

Where defendant introduces the fact for the consideration of the jury that he has failed to testify he cannot complain because the state's counsel comments upon it in considering and passing upon his rights discusses the same in all its phases. Wade v. State, 42 App. 297, 63 S. W. 575, 579.

A remark by the state's attorney that, if accused would take the stand, the state would prove certain facts by him, whether strictly erroneous or not, is unnecessary and likely to result in reversible error. Stidmore v. State, 57 App. 497, 128 S. W. 1129, 26 L. A. (N. S.) 466.

The statement of the assistant county attorney, in the presence of the jury, that he could not prove a fact because accused did not testify, made in interpreting the argument of counsel for accused, is reversible error as alluding to accused's failure to testify. Morgan v. State, 62 App. 129, 136 S. W. 1065.

A prosecuting attorney's statement to the jury that, although accused had offered no testimony under his defense, the attorney did not intend to refer to his failure to testify was erroneous, as making such reference. Wilcock v. State, 64 App. 1, 141 S. W. 88.

State's counsel may comment upon the fact that a witness subpoenaed by accused and in court did not testify. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 113 S. W. 263.

A statement by the district attorney that she (meaning the wife of the decedent) knows better than any other person except accused that he was the man who killed her husband is not, taken alone, a reference to the failure of accused to testify. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 114 S. W. 1004.

Where, in a prosecution for violating the liquor law, evidence of various trips made by defendant to a railway station, where he got whisky, was introduced to show his system, a statement by the district attorney in argument that he was not sure what kind of an explanation defendant's lawyer would make of those trips, that he could not imagine what explanation they would attempt to make, and if they make any explanation "they will be going some," was not objectionable as a reference to defendant's failure to testify. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 904.

A statement of the state's counsel in objecting to certain evidence as hearsay, that, if defendant's counsel desired to prove such fact, they should place defendant on the stand, was harmless. Doles v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 578.

The argument of defendant's counsel authorized the defendant's counsel to refer to the fact that he could not attack defendant's reputation until defendant had first raised the issue did not justify the state's attorney, in the same connection, in referring to defendant's failure to testify. Manley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1138.

In a prosecution for burglary, where it appeared that a watchman had fired three times at the alleged burglar, and that defendant when arrested had been shot through the arm, and defendant did not explain how he received the wound, although he contended that it would have been impossible for the watchman to have shot him, the district attorney's language, to the effect that if defendant was not wounded in the store the jury might like to know where he was wounded, was no more than an indirect reference to defendant's failure to testify, and not reversible error. Cullen v. State, 70 App. 166, 156 S. W. 629.

Where accused, on a trial for selling intoxicating liquor in prohibition territory, did not testify, the statement of the state's attorney in his argument to the jury that the jury might as well expect accused to testify as that he sold intoxicating liquor, to so testify was an insinuation of accused's failure to testify. Jones v. State, 70 App. 243, 156 S. W. 1191.

Where, in a prosecution for horse theft, the district attorney refused to permit a witness to state a conversation with accused, saying, "I'm here and can tell it himself, that would be hearsay," defendant having failed to testify, such statement did not constitute such a reference to his failure to do so as would warrant a reversal; the court having charged the jury should not consider or allude to defendant's failure to testify. Guttin v. State, 72 App. 516, 165 S. W. 428.

In a criminal case the remark of the assistant prosecutor, enumerating the witnesses for the prosecution and those for defendant, who had not himself testified, and his inquiry of the county attorney as to whether there was any one else who testified, eliciting the response that there was no one else, was not such an indirect reference to defendant's failure to testify as to direct the jury to such fact, within the rule that if the remarks relate to some circumstance or statement about which the defendant alone could be expected to testify, and the language is such as to call the jury's attention to the fact the he alone could dispute the matter, and that he had not done so, there would be an indirect reference to his failure to testify, but that if that was not the legitimate and necessary construction of the language used, it would not be held such a reference. Little v. State, 73 App. 81, 164 S. W. 957.

In a prosecution for slander, where accused did not take the stand in his own behalf, argument of counsel referring to accused's failure to take the stand, and his particular friend, who was present when the alleged slander was uttered and was also present at trial, is not objectionable as a reference to accused's failure to testify himself, though it was stated in the last of the argument that it was not denied accused uttered the slander. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1582.
30. Reference to failure to deny or contradict testimony.—State’s attorney may comment upon a failure to contradict a witness. Kelly v. State, 37 App. 641, 40 S. W. 860.

Where state’s witnesses testified to an admission by accused when no one else was present, the statement of the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury that no one had denied the testimony was a reference to the failure of accused to testify. Flores v. State, 60 App. 25, 129 S. W. 1111.

The statement of the county attorney that accused had put no witness on the stand to deny the testimony of a witness for the state, made after the court had told the attorney that the only man that could deny certain testimony of a witness for the state, and had not done so, was improper, was an allusion to the failure of accused to testify, and was ground for reversal. Deary v. State, 62 App. 255, 137 S. W. 609.

In a prosecution for placing corpses, when there were present only defendant, state’s witness, and another, who was not permitted to testify, argument by the prosecuting attorney that defendant was asking acquittal because his friends had sworn to the bad reputation of the state’s witness, and that, “in the face of the fact that no living man has taken the stand to deny that the defendant is guilty, they are going to ask you to acquit him,” was objectionable, for commenting on accused’s failure to testify. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 168.

Argument of prosecuting attorney in an inquest prosecution, that they say that the prosecuting witness has not been corroborated, but they dare not put a witness on the stand to contradict her testimony, is error, as commenting on failure of accused to testify. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 578.

In a criminal prosecution, where accused did not take the stand, it is reversible error for the county attorney, in summing up the evidence, to state how the various witnesses testified that accused committed the crime, and that accused did not deny it. Cober v. State, 72 App. 574, 162 S. W. 809.

A statement by the prosecuting attorney in argument that a witness had identified as the one who roomed with his wife at the home of the mother of the witness, and that the witness had not been impeached nor contradicted, was not objectionable, as a direct or indirect reference to the failure of accused to testify. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 43.

In a prosecution for misdemeanor, the county attorney’s statement in argument that no witness had impeached the prosecuting witness, and that his testimony was uncontracted by any witness or circumstance in this case, was not improper as being a direct or an indirect allusion to the failure of the defendant to testify. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1067.

Statement of a prosecuting attorney that complaining witness “has testified to all these facts, which have not been denied,” is not a reference to the failure of accused to testify. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 662.

31. Reference to lack of proof.—The statement to jury by counsel for State that defendant has introduced no evidence, is not an allusion to failure of defendant to testify. Henry v. State (Cr. App.) 54 S. W. 594.

In a prosecution for violating the local option law, accused and two others were all who had any knowledge as to the transaction. The other two became witnesses for the state and testified to drinking liquor from a bottle which one of them had purchased from accused, who did not testify. The county attorney, in his closing argument, stated “with the town full of witnesses, the defendant produced no witnesses to show that he did not sell the whiskey to G.” and, after exception, stated: “I wish the defendant would produce some witnesses to show that it was not whisky or brandy. Held, that such statements could not but refer to defendant’s failure to testify, and were therefore error. Shaw v. State, 57 App. 474, 122 S. W. 691.

In a prosecution for forgery, the remark of the district attorney, “Where is the proof in this case that any one had any interest in this transaction except the man who is the instrument in his possession’” (referring to accused), was not objectionable as a comment on defendant’s failure to testify. Reeseman v. State, 59 App. 430, 128 S. W. 1126.

A statement by the prosecuting attorney that accused had offered no evidence save some letters and the testimony of his mother is a statement of fact and not a comment on accused’s failure to testify. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

A remark by the prosecuting attorney in his argument, where the defendant did not testify, that the burden of proof was on defendant, and he must come in and show his reasons, etc., and he knew better than any one else whether he sold beer, etc., is prejudicial, and violative of the statute. Minter v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 783.

Defendant’s attorney having argued that there was no evidence that defendant intended to kill deceased, the district attorney in his address in reply stated that the jury could only judge of defendant’s intent from his acts, and then asked on whose theory defendant’s attorney based his statement, stating that certain witnesses specified did not so testify, and that defendant did not put certain other witnesses named on the stand to so testify, and then stated that there was no evidence that the gun that killed deceased was accidentally discharged, and that defendant intended to kill him. Held, that such argument was not erroneous as a reference to defendant’s failure to testify in his own behalf. Henson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 89.

Where accused did not testify in his own behalf, but introduced testimony tending to show that between two certain hours on the evening accused was not at the place where it was committed, by the state’s attorney that the testimony did not show where accused was prior to those two hours was not erroneous as a comment on defendant’s failure to testify. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 115.
On a trial for playing cards at a place other than a private residence occupied by a family, where the defendant testified that he gave defendant permission to go to his residence in his absence for the purpose of playing dominos, the statement of the state's counsel in argument that the testimony of C. was all the testimony defendant had brought to contradict the state, that the defendant in latching the door window were not perpetrading a joke on the other, and that they brought no evidence that it was a joke, was not such a direct or indirect reference to defendant's failure to testify as necessitated a reversal. Sloan v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 156.

32. Reference to failure to call witnesses or produce evidence.—See Ray v. State, 35 App. 551, 23 S. W. 889. The district attorney may comment on accused's failure to produce material witnesses. Sweeney v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 885; Wurd v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1672.

On trial for incest, the female accomplice refused to testify. The district attorney commented upon the fact as being a circumstance tending to show defendant's guilt: hold, improper and the court should so have instructed the jury. Waggoner v. State, 35 App. 199, 22 S. W. 986.

It is error to permit counsel to refer to the fact that the defendant did not use a witness that he had present on a former trial. Glenn v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 897, 898.

The mere absence of witnesses for the state from a trial should not be used in argument against an accused person, unless he was instrumental in some way in keeping them away. Askew v. State, 59 App. 152, 137 S. W. 1067.

In a prosecution for homicide, in which accused relied on self-defense, he testified that at the latter he was cutting the latter. The defense opened the sleeve of his shirt, that the arm of the shirt showed where he had cut, that there was blood on the shirt, that he had this shirt, and it was then in the possession of his wife, but the shirt was not introduced in testimony. Held, that counsel was justified in commenting on the failure to introduce the shirt in evidence, and on the fact that accused's wife had the shirt in her possession and refused to produce it. Eggleston v. State, 59 App. 542, 128 S. W. 1165.

In a prosecution for forgery, where the attorney for defendant argued that there was no evidence that the defendant could write, a reference of the district attorney to the failure to put defendant's mother, who was present in court, and his school teacher, on the stand to prove that he could not write, was not objectionable as a reference to defendant's failure to testify. Recessman v. State, 59 App. 430, 123 S. W. 1126.

In a prosecution for seduction, where it appeared that prosecutrix had written accused three letters, one of which he introduced in evidence, counsel for the state were justified in commenting upon accused's failure to introduce them, and insisting that they were unfavorable to him, for, where a defendant is on trial for a crime, the absence of any testimony wilfully withheld by him forms a predicate for any legitimate deduction, especially where testimony relating to the letters was elicited on cross-examination of the prosecutrix, who hesitated to identify the letter introduced claiming it was part of two different letters. Bost v. State, 64 App. 589, 144 S. W. 539.

On a trial for receiving stolen goods, where the state did not claim that accused personally received them, but only that he directed that they be placed in his barn, it was proper to permit the county attorney in his argument to refer to accused's failure to call as witnesses several relatives of his who were present when the goods were placed in the barn and when they were found and taken therefrom. Kavan v. State, 70 App. 438, 45 S. W. 789.

33. Wife of accused.—Where the defendant's wife must have known important facts favorable to the defendant, if such facts had existed, and it was within the power of the defendant to introduce her as a witness, but he failed to do so, it was held not beyond the limit of proper argument for the prosecuting counsel to refer to and comment upon these facts, it being not within the power of the state to introduce her as a witness against him. Mercer v. State, 17 App. 453.

In a prosecution of accused as a participant in a homicide committed by another, it was proper for the district attorney to comment on the fact that while the wife of the person committing the homicide was in the courtroom, and had not been sworn as one of the witnesses, accused could have called her as a witness but she did not. Burnam v. State, 61 App. 616, 135 S. W. 1775.

Where, though a bill of exceptions shows that an accused, in a prosecution for murder, and his wife were not living together at the time of the trial, it does not show, either that she would not have testified truthfully, or that she would not testify at all, being sought as a witness by the accused, or that she was living with persons unfriendly to him, there is nothing shown which would render improper the refusal of an instruction, directing the jury not to consider remarks of counsel for the state, commenting on the failure of the accused to put his wife on the stand. Renn v. State, 64 App. 639, 143 S. W. 167.

Where a defendant was granted a continuance to take the deposition of his wife, whom he was charged with assaulting and with whom he had left, the court did not err in permitting the prosecuting attorney to comment on his failure to take such deposition. Yates v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1064.

In a prosecution for rape of a daughter a remark of the prosecuting officer that: "The mother did not testify; the law seals her lips—he is her husband. I could have proven what she told her, but it is inadmissible evidence, and the law won't permit"—was improper. Ulmer v. State, 71 App. 579, 160 S. W. 1388.

In a prosecution for procuring a woman for another man to have sexual intercourse with, where it appeared that the woman changed her clothing in the room of accused before she was brought to the other man, it is not improper for the prosecutor to refer to the fact that accused failed to introduce his wife; she being competent for him, and incompetent for the state. Bybee v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 526.
ART. 790  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS (Title 8

34. Character witnesses.—The prosecuting attorney in his argument remarked: "Any man not a stranger in the county would have noticed his character. Tom Pollard has lived in Dallas county for more than twenty years; he was raised in Dallas county, yet he has brought no witness to speak in behalf of his character." Held improper and prejudicial. Pollard v. State, 33 App. 197, 28 S. W. 78.

35. Reference to failure to deny charge.—On a trial for libel, defendant having testified in the case, the district attorney said defendant knew that his name appeared in this paper as business manager and if he did not write or circulate this libel why did he not come out in his paper and disavow his connection with so scurrilous an attack; held, not improper. Noble v. State, 28 App. 285, 39 S. W. 89.

The district attorney, in his argument, could comment on the fact that accused when charged with the crime when arrested did not deny it. Adams v. State, 64 App. 541, 142 S. W. 715.

In a prosecution for a district attorney's remarks as to what defendant said when the father of the murdered girl asked him why he had said to her that if she would not run away with him he would kill her and if she told what defendant said he would kill her, that defendant did not deny it, as if he would if it had not been true, and that the jury knew he would have denied it, but instead he said they would go to law, were not objectionable as a reference to defendant's failure to testify. Guerrero v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 731.

36. Reference to failure to testify on former trial or hearing.—Reference to conviction on former trial, see post, art. 845, and notes. The inhibition is not limited or restricted to the pending trial but includes the failure of defendant to testify at a former trial. Richardson v. State, 35 App. 516, 27 S. W. 135; Wilson v. State, 54 App. 567, 115 S. W. 528; Hare v. State, 56 App. 6, 118 S. W. 545, 135 Am. St. Rep. 569.

It was error to permit the state, for the purpose of descrediting, as being of recent fabrication, a defense brought out for the first time on the second trial on defendant's examination, to show that defendant did not testify at the former trial. Dorris v. State (Cr. App.) 49 S. W. 311.

Where accused, relying on self-defense, testified that decedent cut him across the breast with a knife, cutting through his two top shirts and an undershirt and grazing the skin, and a witness for him merely testified that he had noticed his shirt and noticed a place torn in the shoulder of it, questions asked accused on cross-examination as to what persons he had exhibited his clothing, and as to whether at the examining trial his clothing was in the same condition as immediately after the killing, and whether he had ever produced the clothing, or offered it in evidence, were proper, and not open to objection that they alluded to the failure of accused to testify or make any statement at the examining trial. Welch v. State, 57 App. 111, 122 S. W. 850.

It is improper for the district attorney to state in argument that accused failed to testify in the examining trial and that the record failed to show that he had denied the killing until the present trial, when he admitted it. Eds v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 592.

It was improper for the district attorney to ask accused whether he had testified at a hearing on habeas corpus; since he had the right to testify or not at such hearing, as he saw proper, and his failure so to do was not a circumstance against him. Swilley v. State, 73 App. 615, 104 S. W. 733.

In the third trial of a prosecution for incest, where the accused, who did not testify either of the former trials, was asked whether he had ever, before having an opportunity to give a reason for certain things concerning which he had testified, and an objection to the question was sustained by the court without the ground being made known to the jury, there was not such a reference to the failure of defendant to testify at the previous trials as to require a reversal, especially where the court charged the jury not to consider anything they might know about the former trials. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 669.

Where the prosecuting attorney was permitted to ask defendant whether he had been informed at his preliminary examination that he could make a statement if he desired to do so, but was not permitted to ask whether he did make such statement, and the court, at defendant's request, instructed the jury that defendant's failure to make a statement at that time must not be considered by them, the fact of the failure to make such statement was brought before the jury by the defendant, and he cannot assign error thereon. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 839.

37. Cure of error.—When the district attorney in his argument alludes to defendant's failure to testify, the case will be reversed, although the court may instruct the jury to disregard such allusion. Hunt v. State, 25 App. 149, 12 S. W. 737, 19 Am. St. Rep. 815 (reaffirmed Wilkins v. State, 33 App. 320, 26 S. W. 490; Braszell v. State, 33 App. 333, 26 S. W. 723; Hankins v. State, 39 App. 261, 45 S. W. 857.

It is reversible error for the prosecuting attorney to ask defendant whether he testified in a former trial, though the court withdrew the matter and instructed the jury not to consider the same. Brown v. State, 57 App. 269, 122 S. W. 505.

38. Review on appeal.—Necessity of statement of facts, see art. 844, and notes.

Argument commenting on the failure of accused to take the stand cannot be reviewed on appeal in the absence from the record of any request for a special charge instructing the jury not to consider such statement. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

39. Instructions.—See notes to article 735, ante.

40. Reference by jury to failure to testify.—Where jury discuss in retirement failure of defendant to testify, case will be reversed. Rogers v. State, 55 S. W. 517; 50 S. W. 256; Tate v. State, 30 App. 40, 52 S. W. 256. Where, on reference by a juror to the fact that defendant had not testified, another juror stated that they could not consider this matter for any purpose, and it was considered, and the trial court concluded that no injury was shown, defendant having received the lowest penalty, such reference by the juror was not ground for reversal. Probst v. State, 60 App. 696, 133 S. W. 262; Powers v. State (Cr. App.) 60 App. 866, 159 S. W. 286.

The failure of accused to take the stand as a witness should not be considered against him or alluded to by the jury in their deliberations. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 223; Portwood v. State, 71 App. 447, 106 S. W. 358.

If the jury discuss in a trial for murder or after the evidence had come in, the two jurors read a newspaper which contained an accurate synopsis of the evidence, and also correctly stated that "defendant was not placed on the stand," it is not ground for a new trial. Williams v. State, 53 App. 125, 55 S. W. 626, 28 S. W. 958, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21.

The fact that a conviction of one charged with the larceny of a cow was brought about by the argument of a minority of the jury that accused, if innocent, could have taken the cow, amounted to an improper reference to the failure of accused to testify, requiring the setting aside of the verdict. Richards v. State, 59 App. 263, 127 S. W. 823.

A juror's remark, after the jury had retired, that he wondered why accused was not on the stand, to which another juror stated that it was not necessary, and they did not have to unless they wanted to, and usually did not, or language to that effect, was such a comment upon accused's failure to testify as to require a reversal of the judgment of conviction. Wailing v. State, 59 App. 279, 138 S. W. 924.

A conviction cannot be impeached for the declaration of a juror, after verdict and after the jury had dispersed, if defendant had testified in his own behalf, and stated that his family were hungry, and that he killed the cow in question to get something to eat, he would have acquitted him. La Flour v. State, 59 App. 645, 129 S. W. 351.

Evidence as to making and effect of remark in jury room as to defendant's failure to testify held not to show a matter of importance enough to require a new trial. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 128.

That the foreman of the jury upon retiring stated to the others that they could not consider the fact that accused did not testify does not, where there was no discussion of the matter, constitute misconduct authorizing a new trial, being a mere reiteration of the charge of the court. Veatch v. State, 71 App. 181, 109 S. W. 1069.

Evidence in support of a motion for a new trial that, during the consideration of the case, one of the jurors wondered why defendant did not testify, that some one accused him of murder, that he admitted it, "we can't talk about that," while other jurors heard no such remarks at any time, did not constitute ground for reversal. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 266, 162 S. W. 364.

Where, on a trial for pandering, accused's failure to testify was referred to by the jurors in their deliberations more than one occasion, one of them remarked that if he had gone on the stand and testified and showed that he ever worked they would not convict, and another stated that if he had anything good in his past record his attorney was too good a lawyer not to have shown that fact, a new trial should be granted. James v. State, 72 App. 496, 162 S. W. 1142.

A discussion by the jurors during their deliberations of the fact that defendant had offered no evidence is proper, and not a comment on the failure of the defendant to testify in his own behalf. Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 783.

Where the evidence in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder was conflicting as to whether accused or the prosecutor was the aggressor, a conviction cannot stand, where the jury discussed and considered accused's failure to take the stand and explain why he was armed. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 84.

Art. 791. [771] Principals, accomplices and accessories.—Persons charged as principals, accomplices or accessories, whether in the same indictment or different indictments, can not be introduced as witnesses for one another, but they may claim a severance; and, if any one or more be acquitted, or the prosecution against them be dismissed, they may testify in behalf of the others. [O. C. 230.]

See Pen. Code, arts. 89-91; C. C. Pr., arts. 788, subd. 3, 801, and notes.

1. Acts and declarations of conspirators.—See notes under art. 783.

2. Effect of other statutes.—This article is in no manner changed by art. 790, which provides that where two or more are jointly indicted, and a severance is had, the privilege of testifying extends only to the prisoner on trial. Jenkins v. State, 39 App. 370, 17 S. W. 938.

The codefendant is not competent as a supporting witness on a motion for new trial, unless no evidence was developed against him. Delaney v. State, 41 Tex. 601; nor is he a competent witness for the defense, unless he has been tried and acquitted. Warfield v. State, 35 Tex. 765; or has been and paid it. Elledge v. State, 24 Tex. 78; Tilley v. State, 21 Tex. 200; Titiey v. State, 21 App. 605, 16 S. W. 513; Baldwin v. State, 39 App. 245, 45 S. W. 711.

The defense cannot use an accomplice as a witness pending indictment. Myers v. State, 3 App. 8; unless the prosecution has been dismissed. Morris v. State, 5 App. 477.

An indicted adulterer is not a competent witness for the paramour. Mott v. State, 5 App. 447; Rutter v. State, 4 App. 57.

Where it appears that an indictment against a defendant's witness has been obtained, not in good faith, but for the purpose of depriving the defendant of the testimony of such witness, the disqualification provided by the preceding article does not obtain, and such witness will be held competent. See the case cited below in an illustration of this rule, and for the further holding that where the depositions of a witness were taken at a time when he was competent to testify, they cannot be rejected when obtained by the defendant because of a disqualification of the witness produced by the act of the prosecution. Doughty v. State, 15 App. 175, 51 Am. Rep. 303.

If the proposed witness stands indicted for any character of complicity in the commission of the offense for which the defendant is on trial, he is an incompetent witness for the defendant. Clark v. State, 18 App. 461.

As a witness one A., who had been a witness with another for the same theft, and convicted of driving stock from its accustomed range, and his parole attested at a pecuniary fine. The state objected to the witness upon the ground that he was a convicted felon, and that he had not paid the fine assessed against him as penalty. Held, that, though separately indicted, he was not competent as a principal to the same offense, and unless he had been acquitted was not competent to testify in behalf of the defendant. Woods v. State, 26 App. 490, 10 S. W. 109.

When State uses accomplice as a witness, defendant has the right to cross-examine him then or to recall him for purpose of cross-examination without restriction. Duffy v. State, 41 App. 591, 55 S. W. 177.

A witness who was charged by information with having committed the same offense at the same time and place, is incompetent to testify in behalf of the defendant. Robertson v. State, 62 App. 268, 140 S. W. 105.

Under this article, one convicted for permitting a theatrical performance to be given on Sunday, and who had not paid his fine, but whose appeal was pending, was competent to testify in a prosecution of another employed for the same offense, on the same day, and at the same theater. Oliver v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 994.

The accused, charged with assault with intent to murder, cannot introduce his brother as a witness in his behalf, where the brother was an active participant in the same affray out of which grew the prosecution, and was himself under indictment. Carter v. State, 73 App. 244, 163 S. W. 298.

In a trial of one charged as an accomplice for murder, where the codefendant, also indicted as accomplice, was not called to testify, a statement by the district attorney in the hearing of the jury that the codefendant was not a competent witness could not prejudice the defendant. Sillinger v. State, 144 S. W. 299.

A person charged, in a separate indictment, with the same felony as defendant, and convicted thereof, was incompetent to testify on defendant's behalf, though sentence had been suspended. Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 292.

On a trial for theft the defendant offered his mother as a witness in his behalf. The state objected to her testifying, because an indictment was pending against her charging her with receiving and concealing the property alleged to have been stolen. The objection was sustained. Held error. The witness was not biased as an accomplice as a principal nor as an accomplice of her relationship to the defendant, she could not be an accessory, and she was therefore a competent witness in his behalf. Gray v. State, 21 App. 611, 7 S. W. 339. But see Crutchfield v. State, 7 App. 65.

5. No one can be an accessory after the fact, such as disqualifies him as a witness, unless he comes within the letter and spirit of Penal Code, art. 86; that is, he must give some aid and assistance to the principal before he can be guilty. The evidence going to disqualify a witness must be sufficient to convict him as accessory before such witness would be an accessory. Chenault v. State, 46 App. 261, 51 S. W. 972.

The provision of the statute against pandering that the female for whom a room in a house of prostitution is alleged to have been procured may testify for or against the accused, shows an intention not to bring such witnesses within the purview of the governing accomplice's testimony, since, under the law, an accomplice cannot testify for a codefendant, and hence the court properly refused to charge that such female and the proprietor of the house of prostitution were accomplices. Jones v. State, 72 App. 496, 152 S. W. 1142.

5. — Competency after acquittal or dismissal.—If the indictment against the witness has been dismissed, or if the witness has been tried and acquitted, he is a competent witness for the defendant as well as for the state. Rich v. State, 1 App. 259; Novell v. State, 8 App. 447; Hallin v. State, 24 App. 626, 7 S. W. 320; Brooks v. State, 26 App. 87, 9 S. W. 355; Scroggin v. State, 30 App. 92, 16 S. W. 651; Jenkins v. State, 39 App. 372, 17 S. W. 928.

6. — Competency after conviction and payment of fine.—See art. 797.

7. — Necessity of indictment to disqualify.—A person who, although a participant and a principal in the offense for which the accused is on trial, if he has never been charged with the offense by indictment or information, a competent witness for the accused. Brooks v. State, 26 App. 87, 9 S. W. 355; Scroggin v. State, 20 App. 93, 16 S. W. 651; Campbell v. State, 65 App. 634, 16 S. W. 467.

A person charged jointly with accused, who had been arrested and bound over to await the action of the grand jury, but had not been indicted, could testify in behalf of accused, although it was anticipated that the grand jury which had adjourned would be recalled during the same term. Ponder v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 244.

8. — Identity of offense.—A witness to be incompetent to testify in behalf of a defendant upon the ground that he was under indictment for the same offense must appear to have been indicted for participation in the very same criminal act for which the defendant is being tried. It will not suffice to disqualify him that he is indicted for a similar offense. Day v. State, 27 App. 143, 11 S. W. 36; Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 878.

Because two parties are charged separately with the same statutory offense, this will not render them incompetent as witnesses unless the offenses were part of the same transaction. Secker v. State, 28 App. 479, 13 S. W. 774; Barnes v. State, 28 App. 29, 11 S. W. 679.

A person is not disqualified to testify as a witness for defendant, on trial for unlawfully carrying knuckledud, metal, by his being under charge for similar offense. Coleman v. State, 58 App. 461, 126 S. W. 573.

Where, in a prosecution for playing craps, the state's witness testified that, while B. was present, B. came in, borrowed the money, and played and won, and then played with witness in a game in which the defendant did not engage, it was error to refuse to permit B. to testify for defendant, on the ground that he was an accomplice. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 189.

9. — Declarations of codefendant.—Unless part of the res gestae, or part of an act or declaration put in evidence by the state, the acts and declarations of a co-conspirator are not admissible as evidence when offered by the defendant. Wright v. State, 10 App. 476; Blain v. State, 24 App. 626, 7 S. W. 239.

Since persons jointly charged with murder were not competent witnesses for each other, evidence by the sheriff as to what accused's codefendant had told him as to the way the killing occurred, and as to accused's conduct, was properly excluded, being indirect testimony by the codefendant. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 147 S. W. 578.

The statement of one indicted for the same offense made while in jail under indictment, that he alone had anything to do with the crime, is inadmissible for defendant. Wyres v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 1150.

In the trial of one accused as accomplice to murder, where it appeared that the principal came to accused the morning after the homicide, and was taken by defendant to his hiding place, and the defendant was allowed to testify that at that time he did not know that the deceased had been killed, it was not error to exclude testimony as to what the principal said to the defendant on that occasion. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

In the trial of one charged as accomplice to murder, declarations made by the principal as to what the accused's codefendant had told him as to the way the killing occurred, and as to accused's conduct, was properly excluded, being indirect testimony by the codefendant. Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 147 S. W. 578.
is not competent to testify on behalf of defendant. Sunday v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 97.

10. Proof of incompetency.—In a murder case it was held competent for the state to introduce in evidence, in order to sustain objections to a proffered witness, a indictment charging such witness as a principal in the commission of the same murder for which the defendant was on trial; and that such indictment, in the event of a contrary showing, identified the murder therein charged as the same for which the defendant was on trial, and the court had judicial knowledge that the proposed witness had not been tried upon said indictment. It was also further held, that it was competent for the state to show all that such indictment, those murders, participation in the murder, and thus establish his incompetency to testify in behalf of the defendant. Moore v. State, 15 App. 1.

It is not permissible for the state to introduce in evidence an indictment against a witness, charging a different offense than that for which the defendant is on trial. Clark v. State, 18 App. 467.

The defense in this case offered a witness by whom to prove an alibi. The witness was rejected, upon the state's motion, upon the ground that he was charged by a separate indictment with the same offense. The ouse of establishing incompetency by showing that the indictment against the witness covered the same criminal act for which the defendant was on trial rested on the state; and, the state failing to establish that fact in this case, the presumption obtained in favor of the competency of the witness, and the ruling of the court was error. Day v. State, 27 App. 143, 11 S. W. 36.

A mere statement by the county attorney that a witness was incompetent because under indictment charged with the same offense as accused would not authorize the rejection of the witness without requiring proof of that fact. Thomas v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 878.

11. Competency as witnesses for the state.—A witness indicted for the same offense with defendant may testify for the state pending prosecution against the witness. 503, 51 S. W. 618; Myrick v. State, 40 App. 503, 51 App. 3; Underwood v. State, 38 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618; Freeman v. State, 33 App. 568, 28 S. W. 471; Bolten v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 984; Stanfield v. State, 73 App. 250, 105 S. W. 216.

In cases of severance, the prosecution, upon the trial of one, may call up that of another and enter a dismissal, and then make him a witness. Johnson v. State, 33 Tex. 576.

A co-conspirator may, as a witness, testify to the conspiracy against the defendant and to all matters material to the issue. Coleha v. State, 11 App. 133.

The disqualification prescribed by the preceding article does not apply to witnesses produced in behalf of the state, but only to those who are produced in behalf of the defendant. In so far as the prosecution is concerned, the same is true of common law, with regard to the admissibility of such evidence, has not been changed by said article. Rangel v. State, 22 App. 612, 3 S. W. 788; Meyers v. State, 3 App. 8; Myers v. State, 8 App. 321; Rutter v. State, 4 App. 57; Morgan v. State, 44 Tex. 513.

A person indicted with another, or separately, for the same offense in a misdemeanor case, can after his conviction be used by the State as a witness against his co-defendant even though he has not satisfied the judgment of conviction. Burdett v. State, 51 App. 325, 101 S. W. 399.

An accomplice is a competent witness for the state. McGinsey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 288.

Sustaining the claim of privilege of one indicted for the same offense as defendant, when called as a witness for the state, was not prejudicial to defendant, who claimed such witness was alone guilty. Wyres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1150.

12. — Competency of testimony.—A witness who had testified in a prosecution for burglary of a store that he and accused hid knives taken therefrom at a place where the burglary was properly allowed to testify that just after he was before the grand jury he went to such place, and that the knives were gone. Pinkerton v. State, 71 App. 195, 160 S. W. 97.

13. — Impeachment of accomplice.—The defendant may prove by the witness that he was indicted for the same offense for which the defendant was on trial, but that the prosecution had been dismissed upon condition that he would testify as a witness for the state. Hinds v. State, 11 App. 238.

The defendant may show that a witness for the state is under indictment, or is suspected of the same offense, in order to show that he is interested. Clark v. State, 18 App. 467.

It is not competent to prove that an accomplice's general reputation for honesty is bad. Coffelt v. State, 19 App. 436. But the defendant may impeach an accomplice by any state's evidence, accused cannot complain that the court, upon excluding the other person charged as a witness for accused, refused to permit accused to withdraw his announcement of ready for trial, so that he might move to have the other person tried first, pursuant to article 727. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 196.

Art. 792. [772] Court may interpolate witness touching competency.—The court may, upon suggestion made, or of its own opinion, interrogate a person who is offered as a witness, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is competent to testify, or the competency or incompetency of the witness may be shown by evidence. [O. C. 645.]

Examination by judge.—On a trial for rape, where the prosecuting witness was a young, inexperienced girl, it was not reversible error for the trial judge to examine her for the purpose of making clear certain features of her testimony, where the same question was made to the jury, and did not indicate to the jury his opinion of the merits of the case. Wragg v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 342.

See, also, notes to art. 737, ante.

Evidence as to competency.—Where the witnesses for the state, on a trial for homicide, were some distance from the shooting, and accused contended that they could not see the difficulty between him and deceased, testimony that from the point where such witnesses placed themselves they were in plain view of the point where the difficulty occurred was properly admitted. Bankston v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1068.

Art. 793. [773] All other persons competent witnesses.—All other persons, except those enumerated in articles 798 [788] and 805 [795], whatever may be the relationship between the defendant and witness, and witness, is competent to testify, except that an attorney at law shall not disclose a communication made to him by his client during the existence of that relationship, nor disclose any other fact which came to the knowledge of such attorney by reason of such relationship. [O. C. 646.]

See notes under art. 788.

Privileged communications.—It is a settled rule of the law, founded upon public policy, that communications made by a client to his attorney, in the course of their relationship and with respect to the business about which the attorney had been employed by the client, shall not be disclosed. This rule has been most rigidly, and with great unanimity, adhered to by the courts, and the tendency has been to contract rather than relax it. Sutton v. State, 16 App. 490.

An attorney is not only not allowed to disclose any communications made to him by his client during the existence of that relationship, but is also disqualified to testify to any other fact which may have come to his knowledge by reason of such relationship from any source whatever. Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 295. But to render the communications inadmissible they must have been made to the attorney, counsel, or solicitor acting for the time being in the character of legal adviser. The privilege does not extend to information received in the character of friend, and not as counsel; nor to a law student in the office of the attorney; nor to third persons present at a conference between the attorney and client. Walker v. State, 19 App. 176; Rahm v. State, 30 App. 310, 17 S. W. 416, 28 Am. St. Rep. 911; Everett v. State, 30 App. 652, 18 S. W. 674; Russell v. State, 23 App. 590, 44 S. W. 155.

Privileged communications are subject to two rules: 1. To be privileged they must pass between the attorney and his client in professional confidence, and in the legitimate course of the professional employment of the former. 2. If the communications were made before the commission of the offense, and for the purpose of being guided or helped in its commission, they are not privileged, and this second rule is not affected by the fact that the attorney was wholly without blame. Orman v. State, 22 App. 604, 4 S. W. 498, 53 Am. Rep. 662; Orman v. State, 24 App. 495, 6 S. W. 544.

The state desiring a deed of trust to introduce in evidence called the attorney for accused, and, over his objection and claim of privilege that his knowledge concerning the deed was secured through his relationship as attorney for accused, and under a threat of commitment for contempt for refusing to testify, compelled him to state that the deed was in the possession of the wife of accused. Held, that the court erred. Downing v. State, 61 App. 519, 135 S. W. 471.

Where defendant's attorney got possession of certain forged notes from others than defendant, and under circumstances excluding the idea that defendant was in any way connected with the attorney's possession, or had knowledge that the attorney had obtained them, the attorney's professional relation with defendant did not render his evidence as to obtaining the notes privileged. Jordan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 623.

A witness consulted by the defendant as an attorney, and who advised the defendant, understanding that the relation of attorney and client existed as to the matter, cannot be questioned about matters as to which he advised defendant, since they are exempt as confidential communications. Menee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 135.

Statements by accused, while carrying on a general conversation in the presence of his attorney and a third person, made to both, are not privileged communications to the attorney. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1017.

Communications to physician.—Declarations made by a defendant to, or in the hearing of, his attendant physician, are not privileged communications. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771.

Art. 794. [774] Husband and wife shall not testify as to, etc.—Neither husband nor wife shall, in any case, testify as to communications made by one to the other, while married; nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be made witnesses as to any such communication made while the marriage relation subsisted, except in a case where one or the other is prosecuted for an offense; and a declaration or communication made by the wife to the husband, or by the husband to the wife, goes to extenuate or justify an offense for which either is on trial. [O. C. 647.]

Privileged communications—in general.—One spouse can not be used to impeach the testimony of the other, by proving contradictory statements, as this would be allowing testimony of communications made while the marriage relation subsisted between them. Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 261.

Defendant's spouse testifying for defendant cannot be cross-examined relative to privileged communications. Owen v. State, 7 App. 329.

On a prosecution for murder the defense was that accused had been laboring under an insane delusion that his wife had been intimate with deceased. The wife testified that after the arrest her husband told her that he wanted her to testify that defendant proposed to her and that she was afraid of him if she did not. Held, that this testimony should have been excluded. Swayne v. State, 45 App. 496, 77 S. W. 445.

A statement by accused to a husband made on the latter's request as to the cause of the estrangement between accused and the husband's wife, that accused had heard that the wife had had intercourse with other men, was privileged as a confidential communication. McDonald v. State, 73 App. 125, 161 S. W. 831.

In a prosecution for murder, defendant's wife testifying to the identity of a knife found near deceased's body, and as to a threat made by deceased, may be cross-examined in reference thereto. Stacy v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 114.

Competency of testimony after termination of relation.—The testimony of a divorced wife to a threat made by her former husband against one with whose murder she is charged, in the course of a conversation with the witness prior to the divorce, is inadmissible. Davis v. State, 45 App. 292, 77 S. W. 451.

A wife will not be permitted to testify as to threats made by her deceased husband in her presence alone against the defendant. Gant v. State, 55 App. 284, 116 S. W. 884.

A confession by a husband to his wife that he killed a man is absolutely privileged and cannot be used, even though he be dead. Pace v. State, 61 App. 436, 135 S. W. 379.

Confidential communications of a wife to her husband cannot, after their divorce, be testified to by him for the state on a prosecution of her. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 239.

Communications in presence of third persons.—An exclamation of the husband immediately on firing the shot that killed deceased made in the presence of his mother is not a confidential communication between husband and wife, but a part of the res gestae and the wife can testify against the husband concerning same, she having since the homicide obtained a divorce from the husband. The exclamation was the transaction voicing itself in the presence of the wife and another. Cole v. State, 48 App. 429, 88 S. W. 343, 344.

A wife divorced at the time of trial is not inhibited from detailing a conversation between herself, her husband (the defendant), and her father (the deceased). It was not a conversation between the husband and wife as inhibited by this article. Cole v. State, 51 App. 89, 101 S. W. 218.

Communications or statements between husband and wife in the presence of others are not confidential and therefore are not privileged. Richards v. State, 55 App. 278, 116 S. W. 587.

Threats against defendant made by deceased husband to his wife in the presence of others are not privileged. Gant v. State, 55 App. 284, 116 S. W. 884.

On a trial for bigamy, evidence of declarations and communications between the alleged husband and wife in conversation before a third person, showing intimacy between the parties, is admissible. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 200, 139 S. W. 931.

In a prosecution for crime committed with defendant's stepdaughter, defendant's confession in the presence of his wife and daughter is not a "confidential communication." Cowser v. State, 70 App. 265, 157 S. W. 758.

Competency of testimony of third persons.—A letter by a husband to his wife is privileged communication, and the privilege having attached cannot be defeated by allowing one who has read the letter to testify as to its contents. Gross v. State, 61 App. 176, 125 S. W. 373, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

A letter of defendant, on trial for bigamy, to his alleged former wife, which she had used as evidence against the defendant, is inadmissible as being a privileged communication. Walker v. State, 64 App. 70, 141 S. W. 248.

In a prosecution for bigamy, where the mother of the first alleged wife can identify and, without the connivance of such wife, saw letters to her from him, she might identify them as his, but she could not so testify as to letters which the wife had received and had sent to the district attorney, who was in possession of them. Harris v. State, 72 App. 117, 161 S. W. 125.

Legitimacy of children.—On a trial for inceint, where the defendant was being prosecuted for marriage with the daughter of his half-sister by the same father, he proceeded to prove the declarations of his deceased mother and his deceased father that (defendant) was not the son of his supposed father; that there was no blood relationship existing between himself and his supposed half-sister; and the further declaration of his deceased mother, that "if defendant got into trouble by his marriage, she would protect him," and that the evidence was inadmissible, there being no evidence of non-access between the supposed parents, nor that they were not living together, nor of impotency on the part of the putative father when defendant was conceived in his mother's womb. Simon v. State, 112 App. 276, 11 S. W. 259, 27 Am. St. Rep. 392.

It is a well established rule, and supported on the highest considerations of public policy, that the facts of parentage are sealed to any testimony which would assail the legitimacy of their children born in wedlock. Id.

Declarations of defendant's deceased mother that he was illegitimate, though born in wedlock, made to him about the time of his marriage, were inadmissible to prove good faith on his part in entering into the marriage. The general rule as to the admissibility of declarations of deceased persons as to relationship, birth, and marriage, and establishing pedigree, is not applicable, because if the mother were living she could not testify as a witness to the facts proposed. Id.

Competency of wife's testimony in general.—See notes under art. 736.

Where, in a prosecution against a husband for perjury, it appeared that a deed of divorce was introduced in evidence to destroy the possession of the wife, it was error under this article the following article to compel the wife's appearance by subpoena duces tecum, and to require her to produce the deed to be evidence against her husband over his objection, on the ground of incarceration for contempt in case of her refusal. Downing v. State, 61 App. 519, 130 S. W. 471.

Under arts. 734 and 735, a wife, in a prosecution against the husband for inceint with her half-sister, may not testify on her former husband's divorce, that she was pregnant at the time of the offense, to show the likelihood that accused committed the offense. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 578.

Under arts. 734, 735, a wife who testifies for her husband on his trial for crime is not impeached thereby as an offense witness, except that when impeaching evidence cannot be brought out against the husband, but she can be impeached in the same way and to the same extent as any other witness. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 56.

Art. 795. [775] Same subject.—The husband and wife may, in all criminal actions, be witnesses for each other; but they shall, in no case, testify against each other, except in a criminal prosecution for an offense committed by one against the other. [O. C. 648.]

See Pen. Code, art. 506c, and notes thereunder.

See, also, note to article 734.

1. Witness for defendant. 7. Consent or failure to object.
2. Cross-examination. 8. Reference to failure of wife to testify.

On trial for conspiracy to commit arson, the object being to get insurance money on articles of personal property stored in a house, defendant is entitled to the testimony of his wife who stored the articles and made an inventory of them, and when she is sick and can not attend court he is entitled to a continuance for her testimony. Dawson v. State, 28 App. 9, 49 S. W. 731.

It was not error to refuse to permit defendant, in a prosecution for rape, to call his wife to testify in his behalf, after both sides had rested and the state admitted all that defendant stated that he desired to prove by her. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 521, 163 S. W. 67.

The usual questions may be asked on the cross-examination of an accused's wife as to all matters pertinent to her direct examination as in all other cases. Swift v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 518; Brown v. State, 81 App. 241, 126 S. W. 265; Ward v. State, 70 App. 333, 159 S. W. 272.

Where, in a murder trial, accused's wife testified on an issue of his insanity that he had falsely accused her of murder, it was not error to permit her to be asked on cross-examination if accused was "mad and mean" on such occasions. Kirby v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 455.

Where accused's wife was attempting to show that the killing was a sudden affair, without any pre-existing unfriendly feeling between accused and his family, the state could show, on her cross-examination, that she did not inquire as to decedent's condition after he was cut, or attend his funeral, though he was her son-in-law. Ward v. State, 70 App. 333, 159 S. W. 272.

Where a defendant introduces the wife of another defendant, who testifies to facts material to the defense, she may be cross-examined as to the matters testified to by her on direct examination, and subjected to the usual test of cross-examination as to all matters pertaining to her examination. Link v. State, 73 App. 92, 184 S. W. 987.

3. Impeachment and contradiction.—A spouse called as a witness can be impeached in the same way and to the same extent as any other witness. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 56; Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 662; Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154; Macruder v. State, 35 App. 214, 136 S. W. 233; Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 109.

The wife may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing the truth of her testimony for the defense. Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 662.

The prosecution may examine the wife as to her testimony on a former trial or examination of the same case. Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154.

The wife may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing the truth of her testimony for the defense. Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 662.

The prosecution may examine the wife as to her testimony on a former trial or examination of the same case. Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154.

The wife may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing the truth of her testimony for the defense. Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 662.

The wife may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing the truth of her testimony for the defense. Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 662.

Where accused's wife testifies to witnessing the shooting, and is asked on cross-examination if about the time thereof she was not telephoning the other party to the telephone conversation may testify rebuttal concerning it, since the testimony of the defendant's wife is subject to the same attack as that of any other witness. Reagan v. State, 70 App. 498, 157 S. W. 483.

Where the wife of the defendant testified to witnessing the shooting, it was proper for the wife to be cross-examined if, about the time of the shooting she was not telephoning to a certain woman, since that tends to show the falsity of her testimony on direct examination. Reagan v. State, 70 App. 498, 157 S. W. 483.

In such cases the wife may be impeached by proof of contradictory statements as to material matters testified to by her on her direct examination. Link v. State, 73 App. 82, 164 S. W. 987.

Where accused, on his preliminary examination, testified that he killed decedent some time thereafter, and called him a vile name immediately before the killing, and on the trial his wife testified that decedent had, on the night before the killing, insulted her, and that she had told accused of it that night, and the state, on her cross-examination for purposes of impeachment, could show that decedent had previously insulted her, and that she had not told accused of it, and could ask her whether she had told a third person that she did not know why accused killed decedent. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 56.

The state, for the purposes of impeaching the wife of accused, who testified that decedent had, on the night before the killing, insulted her, and that she had immediately told accused of it, asked her whether she had not told a third person immediately after the killing that she did not know why accused killed decedent, and she replied that she did not think that she used those words, the testimony of the third person that she informed him immediately after the killing that she did not know why accused killed decedent was admissible. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 56.

The bias of a witness is admissible, and the extent thereof can be shown, and, if denied by the witness, the same can be proved by others, and this rule applies although the witness is the wife of accused. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 108.

4. Incompetency as witness for state.—The husband and wife are incompetent to testify against each other or against a joint offender with either, and a dismissal of the wife or wife on trial, after such illegal testimony has been admitted, will not cure the error. Dill v. State, 1 App. 275; Dungan v. State, 29 App. 115, 45 S. W. 19.

The husband or wife is not competent to testify for the state, unless the prosecution offense committed by one against the other. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 125, 11 S. W. 34; Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 332.
A husband cannot testify as to the loss of the marriage bond in a prosecution against the wife. Republic of Texas v. Munford, Dal. 291.

When one spouse is not disqualified from testifying by reason of the marital relation, neither is the other. Daffin v. State, 11 App. 76.

The husband or wife of a party prosecuted for adultery is not competent to testify against him or her in a prosecution for perjury. Johnson v. State, 14 App. 78; Compton v. State, 13 App. 271, 44 Am. Rep. 763.

It is permissible to contradict the testimony of one spouse by that of the other, even though the effect be to discredit the one contradicted. Chubb v. State, 14 App. 192.

The wife is incompetent to testify against her husband for aggravated assault upon her daughter, defendant's stepdaughter. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 135, 11 S. W. 34.

Where a witness for defendant was asked on cross-examination whether she knew the result of the trial of her husband and she answered that she did, and objection was sustained to the further question as to what the result of such trial was, no error or prejudice to defendant's rights was committed. Williams v. State, 50 App. 354, 17 S. W. 496.

Testimony of the wife that she knew her husband was going to kill deceased, was opinion evidence and incompetent. Skaggs v. State, 31 App. 563, 21 S. W. 257.

Proof by the wife of deceased, in a prosecution for murder, that her husband had a policy of insurance on his life for her benefit was inadmissible, there being no evidence of conspiracy by her and defendant to take the life of deceased, nor any evidence that he was instrumental in instigating, promoting or causing the death of his husband. Barry v. State, 37 App. 363, 29 S. W. 577.

Where, in a prosecution against a husband for perjury, it appeared that a deed of trust which the state desired to introduce in evidence was in the possession of the wife, it was error under this and the preceding article, to compel the wife's appearance and to require her to produce the deed to be used in evidence against her husband over his objection, on penalty of incarceration for contempt in case of her refusal. Downing v. State, 61 App. 519, 136 S. W. 471.

A wife, by whose testimony her husband is sought to be impeached as a witness, cannot be compelled to testify that her husband has been guilty of a criminal offense, involving moral turpitude. Pinkard v. State, 62 App. 602, 138 S. W. 601.

Testimony of defendant's wife, given before the grand jury under process and with her full knowledge of defendant, not competent against defendant, nor competent against deceased, cannot be used against him indirectly as testimony tending to impeach the wife by a contradiction between her testimony before the grand jury and at the trial. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 328.

In a prosecution for perjury committed in a divorce suit by the plaintiff therein, by his testimony that his wife was afflicted with a natural and incurable impotency, it was not error to admit evidence of an examination of the wife's person over an objection that this would permit the wife to testify against her husband. Edward v. State, 71 App. 417, 109 S. W. 709, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

But if either spouse becomes a competent witness the other is also competent. Daffin v. State, 11 App. 76; Dill v. State, 1 App. 278; Bluman v. State, 33 App. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

On trial of an accomplice, the principal offender had gone on the stand and fully confessed his guilt. Here it was not error to permit the wife or the principal to testify as a witness in the case against the accomplice. Bluman v. State, 33 App. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

The wife is competent to testify against her husband's codefendant where the prosecuting officer has agreed to dismiss as to her husband, especially where her testimony was exculpatory of the husband. Rios v. State, 39 App. 675, 47 S. W. 957.

6. Existence and severance of marriage relation.—The husband cannot be examined as to statements made by his wife for the purpose of impeaching her testimony, regardless of the time the relation commenced. Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 261.

The disqualification of husband and wife as witnesses against each other extends only to those who are lawfully married, and does not extend to those who are living together unlawfully, although they may recognize each other as husband and wife. Mann v. State, 44 Tex. 612.

In a prosecution for murder, the prosecution could prove by the divorced wife that defendant had not charged her with improper relations with deceased, claimed to be the cause of the hostility. Giebel v. State, 28 App. 151, 12 S. W. 591.

Divorced parties occupy same relation towards each other that they did before marriage, as witnesses. White v. State, 40 App. 371, 50 S. W. 705.

The incompetency of a spouse as a witness for the state is not affected by a mere separation without a legal severance of the marriage relation. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 135, 11 S. W. 34.

Evidence, in a prosecution for bigamy, held to show prima facie that accused was previously married to another, so as to make the evidence of his second wife admissible. Bryan v. State, 26 App. 299, 128 S. W. 581.

Where the evidence in a bigamy case showed prima facie a previous marriage by accused, evidence of the second woman he attempted to marry was admissible to the effect that she married accused on a certain date, together with her identification of her signature to the marriage certificate, he representing himself as an unmarried man, and that they lived together until she left him, and that accused confessed that he was married and had told her the maiden name of his first wife. Bryan v. State, 82 App. 200, 139 S. W. 953.

Under arts. 791 and 795, a wife, in a prosecution against the husband for incest with the wife's daughter by a former husband, may not testify, though since divorced, that she was pregnant at the time of the offense, to show the likelihood that accused committed the offense. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 578.

7. Consent or failure to object.—The wife cannot testify against her husband, even with his consent, except in a case where she has been charged with some offenses against her person. Brock v. State, 44 App. 355, 71 S. W. 21, 60 L. R. A. 465, 100 Am. St. Rep. 859.

The testimony of the husband or wife against the other is not admissible and its inclusion in the record would be error unless the other, even if that other consented to the admission of the testimony. (See Brock v. State, 44 App. 355, 71 S. W. 20, 60 L. R. A. 465, 100 Am. St. Rep. 859.)

Davis v. State, 45 App. 252, 77 S. W. 452.

Though no exception is reserved, the testimony of the wife, either directly or through hearsay, cannot be used by the state as a predicate for the conviction of the husband in cases which do not involve any act of violence towards the person of the wife. Woodall v. State, 58 App. 572, 126 S. W. 541.

A wife cannot be used as a witness against her husband, even though no objection is urged at the time. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 329.

Disqualification of a wife to testify against her husband in a criminal case other than for an offense committed against her, cannot be waived by the husband. Ends v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

8. Reference to failure to wife to testify.—Accused applied for a continuance because of the absence of his wife as a witness, and at the close of his testimony, while he was on the stand, he stated that his wife had at all times desired to live with him but had never lived with him. "Q. If you do not desire her to live with you, A. I think I could. Q. Well, * * * she is now in attendance, and I now tender to you your wife to use as a witness." And accused objected to such statement. Held, that argument and allusion could be made to an accused's failure to use his wife as a witness for him, so that the showing that his wife was present was not error. Coffey v. State, 60 App. 73, 131 S. W. 216.

Though accused had asked a continuance to obtain his wife's testimony, it was improper to place her on the stand and offer her as a witness for accused: her presence being subject to proof in other ways. Holland v. State, 60 App. 117, 131 S. W. 563.

In a prosecution of accused as a participant in a homicide committed by another, it was proper to comment on the fact that while the wife of the person committing the homicide was in the courtroom, and had not been sworn as one of the witnesses, accused could have called her as a witness, but the state could not. Burnum v. State, 61 App. 416, 125 S. W. 1175.

Where, though a bill of exceptions shows that an accused, in a prosecution for murder, and his wife were not living together at the time of the trial, it does not show, either that she would not have testified truthfully, or that she would not testify at all, upon being sought as a witness by the accused, or that she was living with persons unfriendly to him, there is nothing shown which would render improper the refusal of an instruction, directing the jury not to consider remarks of counsel for the state, commenting on the failure of the accused to put his wife on the stand. Brown v. State, 64 App. 829, 143 S. W. 1672.

Where, in a prosecution of accused as an accomplice to abortion, accused introduced his wife as a witness and asked her questions concerning the operation alleged to have produced the abortion, it was not improper, on cross-examination, for her to say, "They have not offered to talk to her about this operation, and for that reason we cannot do it"; the court on objection having instructed the jury not to consider the remark. Fondren v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 411.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, accused testified to threats alleged to have been made by deceased against him and communicated by accused's wife, but did not call the wife to testify, such omission was a proper subject of argument by the state's attorney as bearing on the effect of such evidence. Ends v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

It was error for the state's attorney, on cross-examining accused, to ask him if he did not know that his wife could not testify unless he waived his objection to her testimony, and on objection to state that the authorities held that a wife could testify unless accused objected, and that the state could tender the wife as a witness, and if he objected, her mouth was closed, and, having forced accused to object, should produce the wife on the stand, to argue to the jury that accused had closed her mouth by his wife by refusing to waive objections to her testimony. Ends v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

Where accused's wife, who was present at a homicide and in attendance on cross-examination, was not called by accused for the district attorney in his argument to refer to accused's failure to call her, as the state could not introduce her. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

9. Offenses by defendant against spouse.—Bigamy, adultery and kindred offenses are not "offenses against each other,” wherein spouses are competent witnesses. Joint trial of such cases; Joint trial of such cases. Texas v. Mumford, Dallam, 374: Boyd v. State, 23 App. 470, 26 S. W. 1688.

One spouse is not a competent witness against the other in a prosecution against either for adultery, for incest, or for fornication, these not being offenses committed by one against the other. Compton v. State, 12 App. 271, 44 Am. Rep. 763, overruling upon this point Morrill v. State, 5 App. 447, and Roland v. State, 9 App. 277.
One spouse cannot testify against the other in a prosecution for the theft of his or her property. Overton v. State, 43 Tex. 616. But one may testify against the other in a prosecution for an assault by one upon the other. Matthews v. State, 32 App. 32b; Navarro v. State, 7 App. 383; 6 S. W. 542.

The wife is an incompetent witness against her husband who is prosecuted for slander against her. Baxter v. State, 34 App. 516, 31 S. W. 394, 53 Am. St. Rep. 720.

When the husband is charged with assault to murder his wife, the wife is a competent witness for the state. Brummett v. State, 21 App. 611, 2 S. W. 765, 57 Am. Rep. 622.

The wife is a competent witness for the state in a prosecution against her husband for abortion up her produced by his violence. Navarro v. State, 24 App. 378, 6 S. W. 542.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder defendant's wife, the wife held properly allowed to testify to previous assaults and separations. Hall v. State, 31 App. 565, 21 S. W. 385.

Wife of one joint defendant in adultery is not a competent witness. McLean et al. v. State, 32 App. 521, 24 S. W. 568.

Spouses are competent witnesses against each other when the prosecution involves acts of personal violence by one against the other. Baxter v. State, 34 App. 516, 31 S. W. 394, 53 Am. St. Rep. 720, and cases cited.

Abortion upon and with consent of one who subsequently became defendant's wife is not "personal violence" against defendant's "wife." Miller v. State, 37 App. 575, 40 S. W. 313.

The declarations of one spouse are evidence against another when they are part of the res gestae of the offense, or when the parties are co-conspirators in the offense, under the same rules governing other conspirators. Cook v. State, 22 App. 515, 3 S. W. 743.

Dying declarations of a daughter to her mother that her father had caused her death in attempting to procure an abortion could be proved by the mother who was divorced subsequent to the making of such declarations. Ex parte Fatheree, 34 App. 494, 31 S. W. 402.

Where one uses what purports to be a declaration of the wife in order to obtain from defendant an incriminating statement, such declaration and the answer of the defendant thereon are inadmissible in evidence. Stiles v. State, 44 App. 143, 65 S. W. 994.

Where a husband is on trial for killing his wife, the offense is one committed against her, such as is contemplated by this article, and her declarations are admissible against him as res gestae and dying declarations. Rice v. State, 54 App. 140, 112 S. W. 307.

In a prosecution for false swearing, testimony by a grand juror, detailing statements made before the grand jury by defendant's wife and her father, to the effect that the wife was under 18 years of age, was inadmissible. Woodall v. State, 53 App. 513, 126 S. W. 591.

Evidence that after an alternation with deceased and before the shooting, accused had a conversation in his wife's presence, and that when he shot deceased she was where she could see the shooting, offered to show a preconceived killing did not require her to give testimony against her husband contrary to the statute, where she was not called as a witness. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 783.

In a prosecution of a husband for practicing medicine without a license, evidence that the defendant treated witness, and that in his presence he paid defendant's wife money therefor, and that she accepted it after witness had offered the money to defendant directly and he had declined to take it, was not objectionable as compelling the wife indirectly to testify against her husband. Mueller v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1142.

Where the defendant killed his wife and another at the same time, declarations by the wife, just after the shooting and prior to her death, which were part of the res gestae, were admissible, in a prosecution for the killing of the other, notwithstanding they were uttered by the defendant's wife. Robbins v. State, 73 App. 367, 106 S. W. 625.

On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, the acts and statements of accused's husband, proved by the testimony of other witnesses, were not inadmissible, on the ground that to admit them permitted or compelled the husband to testify against the wife. Farris v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 318.

Admission against defendant of the acts and declarations of his wife as a co-conspirator is not compelling her to testify against her husband, in contravention of the statute. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1192.

Art. 796. [776] Religious opinion, etc., does not disqualify.—No person is incompetent to testify on account of his religious opinion or for the want of any religious belief. [Bill of Rights, § 5.]

See Const., art. 1, sec. 5.

See, also, ante, arts. 12, 788, subd. 2.

Art. 797. [777] Defendant jointly indicted may testify, when.—A defendant jointly indicted with others, and who has been tried and convicted, and whose punishment was fine only, may testify for the other defendant after he has paid the fine and costs.

See Aldrich v. State, 29 App. 335, 16 S. W. 251.

Competency in general.—A co-defendant is competent when the judgment against him was a fine and the same has been paid. Tilley v. State, 21 Tex. 200; Ellege v. State, 21 Tex. 78.

In misdemeanor, a defendant who has been convicted and has satisfied the punishment imposed, is a competent witness for his co-defendant. Jordan v. State, 29 App. 534, 16 S. W. 543. And see Baldwin v. State, 29 App. 215, 45 S. W. 714.

Competency for state.—A person indicted with another, or separately, for the same offense in a misdemeanor case, can after his conviction be used by the state as a witness against his co-defendant even though he has not satisfied the judgment. Burdett v. State, 51 App. 345, 101 S. W. 959.

Incompetency before conviction.—See art. 791; Pen. Code, art. 91.

Incompetency of one convicted of felony.—See art. 788, subd. 3.

Art. 798. [778] Judge of the court is a competent witness.—
The judge of a court trying an offense is a competent witness for either the state or the defendant, and may be sworn upon the trial and examined. [O. C. 650.]

Postponement of trial—Oath.—The judge may decline to testify, and postpone the case for trial before some other judge; but, if he testifies, he must do so under oath as other witnesses. Valentine v. State, 6 App. 439.

Art. 799. [779] Judge not required to testify, when.—When it is proposed to offer the testimony of a judge in a cause pending before him, he is not required to testify if he declares that there is no fact within his knowledge important in the cause. [O. C. 651.]

Art. 800. [780] Oath administered to the judge by the clerk.—
When the judge of a court is offered as a witness, the oath may be administered to him by the clerk. [O. C. 652.]

Art. 801. [781] Testimony of accomplice not sufficient to convict, unless, etc.—A conviction can not be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense committed; and the corroborating is not sufficient, if it merely shows the commission of the offense. [O. C. 653.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 928.
See ante, art. 791, and notes; Pen. Code, arts. 74 to 91, inclusive, and notes.

The word "accomplice" is used in the preceding article in a different sense from its technical meaning defined in article 79, of the Penal Code. As used in the preceding article, it includes principals and accessories, and persons who are particeps criminis. It means a person who, either as a principal, accomplice, or accessory, is connected with the crime by unlawful act or omission on his part, transpiring either before, at the time of, or after the commission of the offense, and whether or not he was present and participated in the crime. Phillips v. State, 37 App. 109; Harrison v. State, Id. 412; House v. State, 18 App. 25; Zollicoffer v. State, Id. 312; Hornsberger v. State, 19 App. 355; Anderson v. State, 20 App. 312; Rouch v. State, 4 App. 46; Jones v. State, 2 App. 575; Davis v. State, 2 App. 658; Irvin v. State, 1 App. 301; Kelly v. State, Id. 628; Barrara v. State, 45 Tex. 260; Williams v. State, Id. 262; Thomas v. State, 24 App. 570; 6 S. W. 183; Boyd v. State, 24 App. 470; 6 S. W. 183; Hines v. State, 27 App. 404, 10 S. W. 448; Crook v. State, 27 App. 198.
In a prosecution for the theft of a watch, the evidence showed that the stolen watch when found was in possession of a state's witness; but the defendant asserted claim to it, and charged that said witness had stolen it from him. It was held that while the witness may have stolen the watch from the defendant, that did not make him an accomplice in the original theft of it. Smith v. State, 3 App. 39.

Where a defendant was on trial for conveying tools into a jail to aid the escape of a prisoner therein confined, another prisoner who also escaped by using the same tools, was held not to be an accomplice with respect to the offense for which the defendant was on trial. Peeler v. State, 3 App. 553.

Complicity with the defendant in other crimes than that for which he is on trial, does not render a witness an accomplice with respect to that crime. Ham v. State, 4 App. 645.

In a prosecution for the theft of a watch, the evidence showed that the stolen watch when found was in possession of a state's witness; but the defendant asserted claim to it, and charged that said witness had stolen it from him. It was held that while the witness may have stolen the watch from the defendant, that did not make him an accomplice in the original theft of it. Smith v. State, 3 App. 39.

Where the witness, knowing of the unlawful intent of the defendant to commit the offense, furnished him transportation to the place where the offense was committed, it was held that such witness was an accomplice. Phillips v. State, 17 App. 169.

A joint offender in betting or gaming is not an accomplice. P. C., art. 574; Wilson v. State, 2 App. 213, 5 S. W. 117.

A person charged with a similar offense is not an accomplice. Day v. State, 27 App. 143, 11 S. W. 36.

A witness learning that defendant had had intercourse with prosecutrix concealed himself, and away from them in the act of intercourse, the defendant's consent to the intercourse, was permitted to testify to his having intercourse with her by threatening to divulge what he had seen; held, he was not an accomplice in the seduction of the prosecutrix. Anderson v. State, 39 App. 83, 45 S. W. 15.

In the case of a defaulting witness, as a witness on the trial of the defendant, testified that money furnished him by defendant for the purpose, she gave the witness the country, and it was shown that at no time and place did defendant personally offer to bribe the witness. Held, that the sister was an accomplice, and the court should have charged the law of accomplice testimony. Humphries v. State, 40 App. 69, 48 S. W. 181.

A justice of the peace and a constable were not accomplices to the crime of false swearing, committed by a witness before the justice to obtain a marriage license, though they knew the affidavit was false, and their testimony did not require a charge on accomplice testimony. Wilson v. State, 49 App. 496, 53 S. W. 647.

A witness, testifying that he saw accused and a third person coming out of a field, were driving cattle, that they went out of sight in the bushes, where a gun was fired, that when witness came in view of accused and the third person they picked up a hog and threw it in the creek, that the hog belonged to the witness, was not an accomplice with accused and the third person in the large or in the refusal to charge on the subject of accomplice was proper. Fields v. State, 67 App. 613, 124 S. W. 652.

In a prosecution for homicide, a witness who pulled his pistol at the time of the shooting, and handed it to the defendant, would be either a principal in the commission of the offense, so as to require his testimony to be corroborated. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 936.

One who was the manager of the bank of which accused was president, and had personal charge of its business, receiving all moneys and paying all checks, and knew that the bank was insolvent, was an accomplice to the crime of receiving moneys on deposit during the bank's insolvency, charged against accused. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 561.

A witness testifying that on the morning after the burglary he walked to accused's stable and talked to him and an accomplice, and advised them to look out because of tracks around the depot building, and that the accomplice immediately changed his shoes and gave the witness whisky out of a bottle, is not an accomplice. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 495, 157 S. W. 497.

As regards necessity of corroboration, one was an accomplice to any burglary, from which defendant obtained whisky, he having after the transaction got from defendant, and drunk some of the whisky, knowing beforehand that the "raid," as termed it, was to be made, and understanding that the whisky came from H. Joebe v. State, 72 App. 163, 161 S. W. 966.

The term "accomplice" signifies a guilty associate in crime, and is strictly defined as one who is associated with others in the commission of a crime; the test being whether the alleged accomplice could be indicted and punished for the crime for which the accused is being tried. Liegois v. State, 73 App. 142, 161 S. W. 882.

Where defendant was charged with procuring another to burn his building, a witness who was an accomplice, as provided by the statute, who was a material witness for the prosecution, and whose only connection with the prosecution was that after his brother's arrest he aided in procuring an attorney and induced defendant to pay the attorney's fees and part of the amount he agreed to pay for starting the fire, was not an accomplice whose testimony must be corroborated to sustain a conviction. Arnold v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 122.

A witness, who testified that, after accused struck deceased with an iron bar, he himself stabbed him, was an accomplice. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

2. Knowledge and concealment of crime.—A witness loaned his gun to the defendant, the defendant declaring at the time that he intended to kill one M. After the defendant started off with the gun, the witness pursued him and tried unsuccessfully to recover the gun. After the defendant had killed M., the witness went to a house where defendant had stopped and advised him to leave. Held, that the witness was an accomplice. Barnes v. State, 36 Tex. 635.

In a trial for theft of money a witness for the state, who was a daughter of the defendant, had freely denied that she knew of the stolen money. Held, that this did not make her an accomplice. Rhodes v. State, 11 App. 563.

If a witness implicates himself as a participe criminis, he is an accomplice, notwithstanding he claims that he was coerced. Thus, where two witnesses fabricated facts of the crime and the state of concealing the guilt of a party of murder, it was held that they were accomplices, although they claimed that they had been told and induced to so testify by the murderer, and did so through fear of him. Blakely v. State, 24 App. 616. 7 S. W. 255, 5 Am. St. Rep. 912. See also, Dodson v. State, 24 App. 514; S. W. 648; Mercer v. State, 17 App. 452; Freeman v. State, 11 App. 92. 40 Am. Rep. 787; Davis v. State, 2 App. 558.

Where a witness leaves the state to keep from testifying, he is not an accomplice. Stephens v. State, 25 App. 655, 28 S. W. 653.

Evidence that D. came up with accused and another on the evening of the homicide, but some time before it was committed, and, after they had all drunk whisky, accused, referring to the place where the homicide was committed, remarked "I will do the work to-night," to which D. replied, "I'll hush," and left and at the time of the killing was conclusively shown to have been in a place where it would have been impossible for him to have taken any part in the murder or to have done any act in furtherance of the crime, was not to be held, under the rule that concealment of knowledge that a crime is to be committed will not make the concealing party an accomplice or accessory before the fact. Spates v. State, 62 App. 532, 138 S. W. 893.

A witness testifying for the state, on a trial for burglary of a depot building and the stealing of beer and whisky therein, to the finding on his premises of whisky after the burglary and putting the whisky into his barn, but not reporting the facts to the officers, is not an accomplice. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 425, 157 S. W. 487.

Where parties, after committing a homicide, went to the home of a woman from whom they had rented rooms, and while there told her the facts concerning the killing, not appearing that it was paid the room rent, and that she was paid the stolen whisky, she was not an accomplice, though she concealed her knowledge of the killing for some time. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 75.

Accused, deceased, and two other persons, who were present when accused struck deceased with a blow from which he subsequently died, agreed to say nothing about the matter, so that the officers would not learn of it. At the time none of them knew or believed that deceased was fatally injured. Held, that one of such persons was not an "accomplice," and on the trial of accused for homicide, corroboration of his testimony was not required. Diacken v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 725.

3. Agreements not to prosecute or testify.—A witness who agrees with the defendant not to prosecute if he will pay for the stolen property, is an accomplice. Gatlin v. State, 40 App. 117. 49 S. W. 87.

Where the owner of the goods taken promises the defendant that if he will return the goods he will let him go, but if not he will prosecute him, he is an accomplice in law, and a charge on his evidence as that of an accomplice is required. Campbell v. State, 42 App. 27. 57 S. W. 287.

Where witness agrees that if defendant will pay a debt which he owes him that he will not testify against him, and it does not appear that defendant accepted the offer, the witness is not an accomplice so as to require his testimony to be corroborated. Robertson v. State, 46 App. 441. 80 S. W. 1000.

A witness is not an accomplice merely because he received from accused a specified sum to procure prosecutrix to write a letter asking for the dismissal of the prosecution for rape, or merely because he or anyone else obtained a part of the amount so paid. Burgo v. State, 73 App. 555, 157 S. W. 62.

4. Detectives and informers.—Where one receives money from an officer to bring about violations of the law, and in accordance with the agreement he brings about such violations, he is an "accomplice," and when used as a witness must be corroborated to support a conviction; but, where one who, believing that a crime is in contemplation, takes steps to detect it, or to procure evidence by which the guilty person may be punished, he is not an accomplice because his connection with the crime is after its inception. Bush v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 554; Wright v. State, 7 App. 574, 32 Am. Rep. 599. See also, Allison v. State, 14 App. 122; Steele v. State, 19 App. 425; Ausbroom v. State, 70 App. 289, 156 S. W. 117.

A witness who sought and accepted a bribe from the defendant to leave the state, but did so to secure testimony to convict defendant, did not come within the category of an accomplice so as to require charge on accomplice testimony. Chitester v. State, 33 App. 655, 28 S. W. 683.

Where the prosecution witness encouraged the conspiracy and helped prepare for the commission of the offense, even though he was informing the officers of the same, his testimony would be that of an accomplice, and uncorroborated would be insufficient to support a conviction. Dever v. State, 27 App. 190, 28 S. W. 1071.

Where an assistant county attorney made the first proposition and induced accused to offer a bribe, even though he did not intend to accept it, and was merely seeking to entrap or detect accused in the commission of an offense, he was an accomplice in the evidence tending to show such was the case, the court should have charged that if such were the facts the assistant county attorney's testimony must be corroborated as to those facts connecting accused with the commission of the offense. Davis v. State, 70 App. 524, 138 S. W. 488.

5. Receiving stolen goods.—Parties who knew, when they received goods from defendant, that they had been stolen from a certain store, and who secreted them, were accomplices. Gutierrez v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1035; Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 495. The thief is an accomplice in the offense of receiving stolen property, and a conviction can not be sustained upon his testimony unless it is corroborated. Miller v. State, 4 App. 255; Kaufman v. State, 70 App. 423, 135 S. W. 58.

Where the facts, considered together, were such as of necessity to carry notice to a witness, on a trial for burglary in which larceny was committed, that the property offered for sale by accused had been stolen, the witness, buying the property, was chargeable with knowledge that it had been stolen, and the fact that he denied such knowledge did not prevent him from being an accomplice. Johnson v. State, 58 App. 214, 125 S. W. 16.

6. Participation in adultery, fornication, incest or rape.—In a prosecution against a man for incest, the female is an accomplice, if she knowingly, voluntarily, and of her own free will,诱使 him, united with him in the commission of the crime. But if, in the commission of the incestuous act, she was the victim of force, threats, fraud, or undue influence, so that she did act voluntarily and of her own free will, she was not an accomplice. Mercer v. State, 17 App. 453; Freeman v. State, 11 App. 32, 40 Am. Rep. 757; Dodson v. State, 24 App. 514, 6 S. W. 544; Jones v. State, 23 App. 506, 6 S. W. 138; Blanchette v. State, 23 App. 450, 50 App. 550, 17 S. W. 1007; Green v. State, 59 App. 695, 18 S. W. 646; Mullinix v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 504; Stewart v. State, 35 App. 474, 32 S. W. 766, 60 Am. St. Rep. 35; Skidmore v. State, 57 App. 497, 123 S. W. 1125, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401; Watkins v. State, 58 App. 110, 124 S. W. 132; Am. St. Rep. 656; Jordan v. State, 62 App. 235, 297 S. W. 114; Burford v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 538.

The testimony of the paramour in adultery when introduced in behalf of the state is of that an accomplice, and uncorroborated will not support a conviction. Merritt v. State, 10 App. 492; Merritt v. State, 12 App. 295; Wiley v. State, 22 App. 406, 26 S. W. 723.

On a trial for fornication, the female is an accomplice, and the court at the request of accused must charge that the jury, to convict, must find her evidence true and corroborated, or the conviction will be set aside. Deary v. State, 63 App. 363, 137 S. W. 690.

In a prosecution for rape on a female under the age of consent, prosecutrix, though having consented, was not an accomplice. Battles v. State, 63 App. 147, 149 S. W. 733.

In a prosecution for fornication by means of habitual carnal intercourse without living together, the testimony of the female must be corroborated, for she is an accomplice. Wallace v. State, 63 App. 611, 141 S. W. 55.

In a trial for rape of a girl under 15 years old, she cannot be deemed an accomplice, but must be regarded as an accomplice on a charge of adultery. Price v. State, 64 App. 448, 142 S. W. 586.

The provision of the statute against pandering that the female for whom a room in a house of prostitution is alleged to have been procured may testify for or against accused shows an intention not to bring such witnesses within the rule governing accomplices' testimony, since, under the law, an accomplice cannot testify for a codefendant, and hence the court properly refused to charge that such female and the proprietor of the house of prostitution were accomplices. Jones v. State, 72 App. 496, 182 S. W. 1115.

In a prosecution for pandering, the female procured is not an accomplice within the statute relating to corroboration of accomplices. Smith v. State, 70 App. 145, 104 S. W. 299.

On a trial for keeping a house of assignation, two witnesses who arranged to, and did, meet two girls at accused's house ostensibly for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, one of whom was a policeman, and claimed that his sole purpose was to obtain evidence, and neither of whom were in any way, directly or indirectly, aiding or abetting accused in keeping the house for any purpose, were not accomplices. Hearn v. State, 73 App. 250, 165 S. W. 594.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 498, making it unlawful for any person to procure any female to visit a room for immoral purposes, a female inducing accused for a moment to visit her room for an immoral purpose, is an accomplice of accused, and he cannot be convicted on her uncorroborated testimony. Denman v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 322.

A prostitute, who came to a hotel with a man as her husband and so registered, and who remained after he left, and who then employed for a money consideration a porter in the hotel to locate men in the hotel with whom she could have sexual intercourse, and who located men and directed them to her room, was an accomplice of the defendant, indicted for harboring a female to visit a room for immoral purposes, in violation of Pen. Code 1911, art. 498. Dooms v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 334.

8. — Perjury and false swearing.—Trustees of a common school district signed a check or voucher, and delivered it to the defendant, in order to enable him to draw from the county treasury certain funds which were not due him, but which they contemplated would become due him in the future. Said teacher was indicted for perjury in making the requisition to obtain said funds, and it was held that said fund, who testified as witnesses in said prosecution, were accomplices. Anderson v. State, 20 App. 313.

In prosecution for false swearing as to the age of a girl in obtaining a marriage license, the girl is an accomplice within the rule requiring an accomplice's testimony to be corroborated. Smith v. State, 37 App. 488, 36 S. W. 586.

9. — Corroboration of seduced female.—See art. 789, and notes.

Giving away whisky on election day. Keith v. State, 38 App. 650, 44 S. W. 817. A purchaser of liquor is not an accomplice of the seller in his illegal sale, though soliciting the sale to be made to him. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1191.

11. — Persons jointly indicted.—One jointly indicted with another is not necessarily an accomplice. Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. 120; PItner v. State, 23 App. 566, 5 S. W. 210; Sharp v. State, 29 App. 211, 15 S. W. 176. But if one who is jointly indicted testifies in behalf of the state to prove against him as is an accomplice. Barbour v. State, 42 Tex. 261; Williams v. State, Id. 392; White v. State, 39 App. 652, 18 S. W. 462; Smith v. State, 28 App. 399, 12 S. W. 1194.

12. — Evidence as to complicity.—In all cases in which the law treats a witness as an accomplice, there must appear facts or circumstances which may reasonably be regarded as establishing, as to him, that he must be regarded as an accomplice. Irvin v. State, 1 App. 302; Kelly v. State, Id. 629; Freeman v. State, 11 App. 93, 40 Am. Rep. 787; Phillips v. State, 17 App. 169; Dubose v. State, 13 App. 418; May v. State, 23 App. 585, 5 S. W. 781.

If a witness denies complicity, it is competent to contradict him. Butler v. State, 7 App. 635.

Defendant may prove a witness's complicity by any character of evidence, which would be admissible if the witness himself were on trial for the offense. Dubose v. State, 19 App. 259.

Where the evidence in no way connected a witness with the crime charged, he was not an accomplice, so as to authorize or require the submission to the jury of the question whether he was an accomplice. Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 825.

Where accused, in an attempt to show that a witness was an accomplice, asked him if he had not been discharged by his employer on account of his connection with the burglary, the witness, after answering "No," and after defendant proved that he did not work for several days thereafter was properly permitted to explain that the reason he did not work was because his employer let him off for a few days for fear that, when defendant learned of his conduct, there might be trouble. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1175.

Where accused endeavored to show that a detective was an accomplice, evidence as to his employment, and that he made daily reports to his employers, and promptly reported the burglary, was admissible. Hyde v. State, 73 App. 452, 156 S. W. 155.

Evidence held insufficient to show that one of the state's most material witnesses was an accomplice so as to require an instruction thereon. Womack v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 128.

13. — Questions for jury.—Directing acquittal for insufficiency of corroboration, see art. 895, and notes.

When the evidence clearly shows that the witness is an accomplice it is proper for the court to state to the jury in his charge that he is an accomplice. If the evidence leaves the matter in doubt the issue should be submitted to the jury. Wilkerson v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 965; Zollicoffer v. State, 16 App. 312; Williams v. State, 33 App. 125, 25 S. W. 630; 28 S. W. 582, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21; Brown v. State, 55 App. 394, 155 S. W. 215.
If the proof tends to raise the question whether or not a state's witness is an accomplice, the offense on the trial, can the proof, refuse to submit to the jury the question of accomplice vel non, together with proper instructions upon the corroboration of accomplice testimony? If so, it must not only be because the proof that the witness is an accomplice is meager, but because the other evidence is so strong so as to make the case fairly worthy of the two state's witnesses, the trial court in refusing to instruct the jury upon the law of accomplice testimony. Hines v. State, 25 App. 184, 10 S. W. 418; O'Connor v. State, 28 App. 258, 13 S. W. 14; Money v. State, 29 App. 155, 15 S. W. 691.

The question as to whether the witness is an accomplice is for the jury. Delavan v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 385.

In a prosecution for homicide, a witness testified that after the killing, the witness, accused, and C. entered into an agreement to manufacture a defense by getting another person to testify that he was out riding on the day of the homicide; that, as he approached the house of the deceased, he saw C. shoot deceased; and that before the shooting deceased stated to him, C. and grabbed for his gun. Held, that whether the witness was an accomplice was properly submitted to the jury. Pace v. State, 58 App. 96, 121 S. W. 499.

In a prosecution for the bribery of a witness, evidence held insufficient to show that the witness was an accomplice of accused so as to take the question to the jury. Smalley v. State, 59 App. 95, 127 S. W. 225.

In a prosecution for murder, where there was conflicting evidence as to whether a witness handed defendant a pistol with which to shoot deceased, the court could not charge that such witness was an accomplice; the question being for the jury. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 938.

If proof of ownership of stolen property rests upon accomplice's testimony, it must be corroborated. Hanson v. State, 27 App. 140, 11 S. W. 37; Crowell v. State, 24 App. 494, 6 S. W. 318.

When the evidence tends to show the consent of prosecutrix, a conviction of incest cannot stand on her uncorroborated testimony. Coburn v. State, 36 App. 257, 35 S. W. 442; Blanchette v. State, 29 App. 46, 14 S. W. 392; Dodson v. State, 24 App. 514, 6 S. W. 548; Schoenfeldt v. State, 30 App. 695, 18 S. W. 649.

A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect accused with the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient where it merely shows the commission of the offense. Jones v. State, 59 App. 559, 129 S. W. 1118; Jordan v. State, 62 App. 588, 137 S. W. 114.

On a criminal trial, if a witness for the state was an accomplice, or if the jury had a reasonable doubt whether he was an accomplice or not, they could not convict upon his testimony, unless they believed that it was true, that it connected accused with the offense charged, and that there was other testimony corrobative thereof, tending to connect accused with the commission of such offense. Goldstein v. State, 73 App. 558, 166 S. W. 149; Deary v. State, 62 App. 363, 137 S. W. 699.

A conviction is not warranted, and will not be supported by the uncorroborated testimony of any number of accomplices. Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. 120; Heath v. State, 7 App. 464.

At common law a conviction would be warranted upon uncorroborated accomplice testimony, but it was the practice to advise against it. Hoyle v. State, 4 App. 239.

The burden of proof to corroborate an accomplice witness, so as to warrant and sustain conviction upon his testimony, is upon the state; and it is not incumbent upon the defendant to disprove the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. House v. State, 15 App. 522.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—47 737
Where all the testimony of a witness is in favor of defendant an acquittal may be had thereon without corroboration. Josef v. State, 54 App. 445, 20 S. W. 1067.

Witness testified that he and defendant had stolen certain cattle and on the night of the theft met parties in the road and inquired for a certain pasture. After the night the thief was alleged to have been committed, he met some persons who inquired about the pasture mentioned, but he could not identify the defendant. Held, the corroboration was insufficient. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 1041.

When principal is used as a witness as to receiving stolen property his testimony must be corroborated both as to theft and the receiving the stolen property by the accused. Johnson v. State, 42 App. 440, 60 S. W. 638.

There can be no accomplice in a misdemeanor case, there can be no conviction in such a case on the testimony of a confessed actor and participant with defendant in the crime, equally guilty with him, without other testimony than that of one who had no personal knowledge concerning defendant's participation, that his milk was polluted, evidencing merely that some one had done the act charged against defendant. Huffman v. State, 51 App. 395, 122 S. W. 596.

Evidence on a trial for murder held insufficient to support a conviction, in that there was no corroboration of an accomplice's testimony connecting accused with the crime. Fair v. State, 72 App. 95, 160 S. W. 1187.

In a prosecution for offering to bribe a witness, testimony of such witness, alleged to be an accomplice, that defendant, after his indictment, offered to bribe him was competent. But testimony against defendant did not require corroboration. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 730.

Defendant, indicted for burglary, could not be convicted upon the testimony of an accomplice alone, nor could two accomplices corroborate each other. Gutierrez v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1025.

In a prosecution for the burglary of a box car and the taking of certain clothes therefrom, where the testimony of an accomplice that he and defendant had previously taken certain clothes and taken to an empty house, the facts of the system of the offenses, the state, by other than accomplice evidence, should have identified the articles taken on the former breaking. Nowlin v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1070.

One of several co-conspirators cannot be convicted on the testimony of his confederate, unless the jury believe their evidence, and there is other testimony tending to connect him with the offense. Dillard v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 99.

The corroboration evidence to be sufficient, must, of itself, and without the aid of the accomplice testimony, tend in some degree to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense for which he is on trial, but it need not be sufficient to establish his guilt. It must tend to connect him with the offense committed. It must be as to a material matter. It must tend directly and immediately, not merely remotely, to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. Corroboration as to immaterial facts, having no tendency to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, is not corroboration. It may be as to a criminal fact or facts. But it need not be corroboration of any particular statement made by the accomplice. The corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense by some person; it must go further, and tend to connect the defendant with its commission. The accomplice testimony need not be corroborated circumstantially and in detail, and if corroborated in material matters, it is unimportant that it was also corroborated in immaterial matters, as it is permissible to strengthen such testimony by proof of connected incidents tending to show its reasonableness and consistency. Dill v. State, 1 App. 278; Nourse v. State, 2 App. 304; Davis v. State, Id. 588; Jones v. State, 3 App. 575; Hoyle v. State, 4 App. 239; Jones v. State, Id. 529; Jackson v. State, Id. 292; Tooney v. State, 5 App. 163; Myers v. State, Id. 640; Sims v. State, 8 App. 220; Roach v. State, Id. 473; Bruton v. State, 21 Tex. 337; Warner v. State, 9 App. 237; Welden v. State, 10 App. 460; Jernigan v. State, Id. 546; Harper v. State, 11 App. 1; Cohea v. State, Id. 622; Powell v. State, 15 App. 441; Dunn v. State, Id. 560; Zollenhoff v. State, 17 App. 160; Harrison v. State, Id. 442; Tisdale v. State, Id. 444; Blakely v. State, 24 App. 616, 7 S. W. 233, 5 Am. St. Rep. 912.

The corpus delicti of theft cannot be established by the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, but upon that issue the accomplice must be corroborated by other evidence tending to show the commission of the offense, and the defendant's connection with the commission of the same. It will not suffice to corroborate the extent only to the extent of connecting the defendant with the commission of an act alleged to be an offense. In this case the ownership of an animal alleged in the indictment was proved only by the uncorroborated testimony of the accomplice. Held, insufficient on the issue of ownership, and therefore insufficient to support a conviction. Crowell v. State, 24 App. 404, 6 S. W. 318.

The element of the offense as testified to by the accomplice need not be corroborated. Williams v. State, 59 App. 347, 128 S. W. 1120.
Under this article and art. 739, a prosecutrix is sufficiently corroborated when there are any facts that tend to show that accused committed the offense of seduction, and it is error to attempt to lay down a rule as to what particular issues of the case shall be corroborated; the word "tending," meaning to be directed as to any end, object, or purpose.

Chap. 7
TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS
Art. 801

In a prosecution for adultery by means of habitual carnal intercourse without living together, corroboration of the female as to one act of intercourse will not warrant a conviction on her testimony. Wallace v. State, 63 App. 611, 141 S. W. 55.

If an accomplice, who testified as to sales in a prosecution for the business of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory, was corroborated as to more than one sale, the jury could convict on his evidence, irrespective of a sale to any one else, and, if his testimony was corroborated as to only one sale, the state could convict on that showing; in addition to that sale, a sale to others proven by other evidence. Highetover v. State, 73 App. 258, 165 S. W. 184.

Under this article and art. 738, one accused of seduction may be convicted upon the testimony of an accomplice alone, if the testimony of other persons corroborate of her testimony and connecting accused with the offense charged, though there is no specific corroborative evidence as to marriage. Slaughter v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 580.

The testimony of an accomplice may be corroborated by that of his wife, when her testimony is admissible in the case. Dill v. State, 1 App. 278; Bluman v. State, 33 App. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

Where prosecutrix alone testified that certain letters offered in evidence at the trial had been written to her by defendant, such letters could not furnish corroborative evidence, since the accused could not corroborate herself. Bishop v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 521; Smith v. State, 55 App. 106, 124 S. W. 919.

The testimony of an accomplice cannot be corroborated by inadmissible evidence. Long v. State, 30 App. 357, 47 S. W. 363.

In a prosecution for incest, testimony of witnesses that prosecutrix told them that accused had sexual intercourse with her was not competent to show the fact of intercourse, or as corroborative of the testimony of prosecutrix. Jordan v. State, 59 App. 205, 123 S. W. 139.

A motive for doing a criminal act is not of itself evidence corroborating the testimony of an accomplice, and the mere fact that one may have an ill will towards a third person, as indicated by his statements, is not evidence corroborating the testimony of an accomplice in an assault on the third person. Vails v. State, 59 App. 340, 123 S. W. 1117.

In a murder trial, the state properly showed that a gun shell was found in a tree top, where an accomplice testified accused was when he shot decedent, and the body of shot, contained in such a shell, of the size found on decedent's body. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 760, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

In a murder trial, to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice that accused killed decedent, the state was properly permitted to introduce testimony that witnesses saw two men traveling along the road and one of them accused said he and accused traveled; that some of the witnesses recognized accused; and other, who did not know accused, were of the opinion, when accused was pointed out to them, that he was one of them, they saw, judging from his stature, complexion, etc. Grant v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 760, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

In a homicide case, where there was an issue whether a body run over by a train and found on the track was the body of the person alleged to have been killed by defendant, and as corroborative of the testimony of witnesses claimed by defendant to be accomplices that it was such person, the state was properly permitted to prove the height of deceased and the measurements of those portions of the body unmanled by the train. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 928.

Witnesses, alleged by defendant to be accomplices, testified that defendant killed deceased because he would not agree not to go to court to testify against him, and that he was killed shortly before he was arrested, at the request of defendant, he had failed to attend court for two terms, but now he was under bond and was going. Held, that the state was properly permitted to prove that deceased had refused to obey process twice, and had been placed under bond, as it was corroborative of the testimony of the alleged accomplices. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 926.

In a prosecution for robbery, where it was necessary for the state to corroborate testimony of an accomplice, who had testified that an agreement to rob had been made at a certain place and time, testimony that accomplice worked for witness and that defendant was with witness at such time and place was admissible. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263.

Where an accomplice testified as to the road traveled, the kind of vehicle and horses driven, etc., and said that defendant had offered him a pistol, testimony of the officer who arrested him that he had a pistol was admissible as corroborative of the testimony of the accomplice. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1173.
Art. 801  TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS  (Title 8)

An accomplice cannot be corroborated by declarations made by him. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1173.

Witness testified that she and her stepfather were chopping cotton in a field and that defendant made her go with him to a "peach break" and there had incestuous intercourse with her; that she was barefooted and defendant was shoes. Another witness testified that defendant and his stepdaughter were chopping cotton in the field and that later he followed the tracks of two persons, one a barefoot and the other a shoe track from where they were chopping cotton to the "peach break" where he saw an impression like some one had been sitting on the ground.

Held, the corroboration was worthless. Ceasar v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 756.

Testimony of prosecutrix in incest is sufficiently corroborated when the whole evidence shows that defendant is the only person who had the opportunity to have intercourse with her, and that she was pregnant. Jackson v. State, 37 App. 612, 40 S. W. 498.

Where on the trial of an accomplice the principal testified that the accomplice urged him to steal oats and said after each oat was stolen, the testimony of the principal's wife that she heard defendant tell her husband not to forget was not a corroboration of the principal. Denson v. State, 47 App. 433, 63 S. W. 820.

There was no sufficient corroboration where the evidence merely showed a burglary and that the goods stolen were found at the place shown by the testimony of the accomplice. Franklin v. State, 53 App. 388, 110 S. W. 64.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence held insufficient to corroborate accomplice, so to connect accused with the commission of the offense as a principal. Maibaum v. State, 59 App. 336, 125 S. W. 378.

An accomplice is not corroborated merely that she is worthy of credit in general, or of good reputation. Becson v. State, 69 App. 39, 130 S. W. 1006.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence held to sufficiently corroborate the testimony of accomplices to connect accused with the commission of the crime. Brown v. State, 69 App. 33, 131 S. W. 327.

Where the prosecuting witness testified that his watch was stolen while he was in a saloon, that accused was the only person close enough to him to have taken it, and that accused's accomplice to whom the watch was delivered, and who pawned it, remained seated in a chair some distance away during the entire time he was in the saloon, there is sufficient corroboration to support a conviction of the accomplice and the accomplice's testimony that accused took the watch and delivered it to him to pawn.

Forward v. State, 73 App. 561, 166 S. W. 725.

Testimony that a knife found by the body of deceased, who had been stabbed and beaten to death, belonged to accused, was sufficient corroboration of the testimony of a self-confessed accomplice to justify a conviction upon the accomplice's testimony. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 250.

Evidence that defendant had tried to get to the girl's brother to induce her to withdraw her charge, agreed to give her money and to marry her, and lied stated that he knew he had done wrong and wanted to show he was a man, is sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice. Bodkin v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 216.

On the trial of an alleged accomplice to a homicide committed by R., evidence held to corroborate R.'s testimony connecting accused with the homicide sufficiently to support a conviction. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 875.

18. Impeachment of accomplice.—See notes under art. 791.

19. Corroboration of accomplice impeached as witness. —In a prosecution for burglary, a codefendant, on cross-examination, was permitted to testify that, when arrested and when before the grand jury, he made the same statement touching the crime as at the trial. This declaration was allowed to be corroborated by the witnesses. Held, that as the witness had been attacked by the defense, upon the theory that he had made contradictory statements, the self-serving declarations were admissible. Pitts v. State, 60 App. 524, 132 S. W. 801.

Where it is sought to show that an accomplice, testifying for the state, was testifying from corrupt motives, he can be corroborated by showing that before the motive existed he had made the same statement. Gusemiano v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 217.

A showing that a case against an accomplice, testifying as a witness for the state, is an after showing of a corrupt motive, so that the state may introduce corroborative evidence. Gusemiano v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 217.

Where defendant, to affect the credibility of a witness who was an admitted accomplice, proved by cross-examination of the witness that he had been promised immunity from punishment in the case, there was no error in permitting the witness to state that he had made the same statement to the county attorney the day after the alleged burglary before he had been promised immunity as he had made on the prior accomplice can be sustained by proof the same as any other witness. Holmes v. State, 70 App. 214, 156 S. W. 1173.

Where an accomplice testified on cross-examination that the state had agreed to let him off for four years in the penitentiary on four cases they had against him, provided he would testify for the state in the case, the court properly permitted the state on redirect examination to ask him if any one had tried to get him to testify to anything except the truth. Holmes v. State, 76 App. 423, 157 S. W. 487.

20. Necessity of instructions as to accomplice testimony.—See notes to article 735, ante.

In a misdemeanor case defendant must ask the court to give a charge on accomplice testimony before he can complain of failure to give such charge. Williams v. State, 53 App. 296, 110 S. W. 64.

21. Instructions as to who are accomplices.—When the court leaves to the jury the question whether a witness is an accomplice, it should give the jury a guide to determine the question. Face v. State, 53 App. 296, 124 S. W. 949.

It is unnecessary to define what it was unwise as the court charged that the witness was an accomplice. Pitts v. State, 60 App. 524, 132 S. W. 801.

In a homicide case, it was unnecessary for the court, under the evidence, to instruct as to who were principals, having already charged that "an accomplice is one who is connected with the crime, either before, at the time, or after the commission of the offense." Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 396.

Where the prosecution is against two or more defendants, the court is not required to instruct that if the accomplice testimony has not been corroborated as to all of the defendants, it is not sufficient as to either of them. Dill v. State, 1 App. 278.

The charge need not define "corroborating evidence," nor instruct that the corroboration must relate to "some material matter." Hoyle v. State, 4 App. 293; Hooper v. State, 6 App. 591.

For an approved form of a charge upon accomplice testimony, see Willson's Cr. Forms, 929. See, also, an approved charge in Avery v. State, 10 App. 199. For erroneous charges, see Crowell v. State, 24 App. 404, 6 S. W. 318; Spears v. State, 24 App. 257, 7 S. W. 248.

Whether or not a witness is an accomplice, can not be made to depend upon the conclusion of the jury as to the truth or falsity of his testimony, and it is error to instruct the jury that if they find the testimony of the accomplice to be true, he is an accomplice. Hornsberger v. State, 19 App. 225.

To charge that "the witness is an accomplice with the defendant," is error, it being tantamount to instructing that the defendant, as well as the witness, was guilty of the offense. Spears v. State, 24 App. 537, 7 S. W. 245.

On trial for perjury, when the court has instructed as to the quantum of proof and the law on testimony of an accomplice, it is not error to refuse a special instruction telling the jury to disregard the witnesses' testimony if he be not a credible person. Beach v. State, 35 App. 240, 22 S. W. 796.

Charge held sufficient. West v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 227.

And that the jury could not convict accused on the testimony of H. alone, unless they first believed his testimony to be true and that it connected accused with the offense charged, and not then unless they believe that there was other testimony corroborative of H.'s testimony connecting defendant with the offense, and that the corroboration was insufficient if it merely showed the commission of the offense, was equivalent to charging that H. was an accomplice, and was sufficient on such subject. King v. State, 37 App. 363, 123 S. W. 135.

An instruction that certain witnesses were accomplices, and that defendant could not be found guilty on their testimony, though the jury was satisfied that it was true, and showed or tended to show that defendant was guilty as charged, unless the jury further believed that there was other evidence, outside the accomplices' testimony, tending to connect defendant with the commission of the offense charged, was proper. Makauhm v. State, 35 App. 257, 177 S. W. 738.

A charge that, though the accomplice has testified to the essential facts of the crime, there cannot be a conviction on her evidence alone, but there must be other evidence tending to show such fact, and that the corroborative evidence need not be direct, but such facts and circumstances as tend to support her testimony, and which satisfy the jury that she is worthy of credit as to the esso-

tral facts, are sufficient corroboration, and that it is for the jury to say, from all the evidence and circumstances in evidence, whether she has been assisted and advised, or whether she was an accomplice, that the jury could not convict on her evidence alone, but that her evidence must be corroborated by other evidence tending to show the commission of the offense and accused's connection therewith, and that, if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused had habitual carnal intercourse with her, they should convict, but, if they did not so believe, they should acquit, was not erroneous as not requiring the jury to find that the accomplice's testimony was true, as well as finding that it was corroborated. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 915.

Where, in a prosecution for being an accomplice to arson, the state offered evidence corroborative only of the fact that the alleged principal burned the house, and the court charged generally as to accomplice testimony and the necessity for corroboration, a refusal of a requested charge that by corroboration, as used in the general charge, was meant that the evidence must connect the defendant with the procuring and hiring of the principal to burn the building, as charged in the indictment, and that it was not sufficient if it merely showed that such principal burned the building, was improper, as such a charge made clear the real issue. Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 560.

The court refused a requested charge, in a prosecution for pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicants in prohibition territory, that, if W. procured whisky to be ordered for the purpose of sale by accused, and assisted in the sale and participated in its proceeds either by receiving whisky or money, he would be an accomplice, and accused could not be convicted upon his accomplice's testimony alone, nor other corroborative testimony tending to connect accused with the transaction at leged to have been had with W., and the corroboration was not sufficient if it merely tended to connect the accused with the commission of the offense. Held, that the charge was properly refused, for not stating that the corroboration might be as to one of the two or more sales required to be proved, if a second sale was shown by other evidence, or that a corroboration as to two or more sales would authorize a conviction on the accomplice testimony alone. Hightower v. State, 73 App. 239, 110 S. W. 118.

Where the prosecuting witness had testified to acts of incest prior to the one charged in the indictment, a charge that the witness was an accomplice, and that defendant could not be convicted upon her testimony unless it was corroborated by other testimony, tending to connect him with the commission of the offense, and that the evidence of prior acts could only be considered for the light it might show upon the act charged, was correct and sufficient, and it was not error to refuse a requested charge that one part of the accomplice testimony could not be considered in evidence. Held, that her testimony as to prior acts was not corroboration of the testimony as to the act charged. Vickers v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 699.

23. — Authorizing conviction on accomplice testimony tending to show guilt. — The court should charge that the jury cannot convict accused unless they believe that the accomplice's testimony is true and connects accused with the offense, and unless there is other corroborative testimony tending to connect accused with the offense, and the corroboration is sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense, and an instruction that the jury can convict if the testimony of the accomplice "tends" to connect accused with the offense; was erroneous. Campbell v. State, 57 App. 301, 123 S. W. 585; Pace v. State, 58 App. 90, 124 S. W. 949; Dorham v. State, 58 App. 283, 125 S. W. 367; Ware v. State, 60 App. 38, 129 S. W. 836; Shrewder v. State, 60 App. 659, 125 S. W. 281; Cope v. State, 60 App. 438, 128 S. W. 1022; Franklin v. State, 62 App. 657, 138 S. W. 762; Newton v. State, 62 App. 522, 138 S. W. 788; Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1136; Oates v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 1194; Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 736.

An instruction that a witness was an accomplice, and that before the jury could consider his testimony, for the purpose of showing or "tending" to show the guilt of defendant, they must first find that such testimony was true, and that it had been corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses in the case "as to matters, if any, connecting the defendant with the facts proved," is erroneous. Long v. State, 60 App. 540, 129 S. W. 461.

24. — Requiring finding that accomplice testimony is true. — An instruction that the jury could not convict accused, unless it found from the evidence that the testimony of an accomplice had been corroborated by other evidence connecting accused with the offense charged and that the corroboration was not sufficient to connect accused with the commission of the offense charged, was erroneous. Time v. State, 60 App. 58, 130 S. W. 1903; Snelling v. State, 57 App. 416, 123 S. W. 619.

In a prosecution for incest with accused's illegitimate child, the court instructed that if the jury was satisfied from the evidence that prosecutrix was an accomplice to the intercourse, or had a reasonable doubt whether or not she was, they could not find accused guilty upon her testimony alone, unless it had been corroborated as to the offense. Held, that the charge was erroneous for permitting a conviction if there was evidence corroborating the prosecutrix showing that accused committed the offense, and also for not charging that before the jury could convict on the testimony of prosecutrix they must believe that it was true and showed accused's guilt as charged. Wadkins v. State, 58 App. 110, 124 S. W. 965, 107 Am. St. Rep. 923, 21 Ann. Cas. 556.

In a prosecution for incest, a charge that, if the female was an accomplice, accused could not be convicted upon her testimony, unless the jury believed her testimony, or tended to show, was erroneous, unless there was further evidence outside her testimony connecting accused with the commission of the offense, but, if force was used and she did not voluntarily join in the act, she would not be an accomplice, and a conviction could be had upon her uncorroborated evidence, was erroneous, as it laid down a rule for the determination of the accomplice's testimony weaker than that required by law; the proper charge being that if the jury believed the testimony of the accomplice to be true, and it showed accused's guilt, and there was other testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, etc. Jordan v. State, 50 App. 208, 128 S. W. 139.

An instruction, in a prosecution for seduction, that the prosecuting witness was an accomplice, and that defendant could not be convicted solely upon her evidence, unless the jury believed it to be true and that it showed the defendant to be guilty of the offense, and that even then defendant could not be convicted unless the jury believed there was other testimony tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged, is good. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 616.

Instructions that, in order to convict accused of fornication, the state must prove habitual carnal intercourse beyond a reasonable doubt, that the complaining witness was an accomplice, that the jury could not convict on her evidence alone, but that her evidence must be corroborated by other evidence tending to show the complaining witness's connection with accused, that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused had habitual carnal intercourse with her, they should convict, but, if they did not so believe, they should acquit, was not erroneous as not requiring the jury to find that the accomplice's testimony was true, as well as finding that it was corroborated. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 916.

If there was any error in such instructions, it was harmless, and under the express provisions of art. 745, was not ground for reversal, where accused's own testimony, in connection with that shown to have been voluntarily given by him before the grand jury and which he did not contradict, showed that the testimony of the complaining witness was true. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 916.

Art. 802. [782] In trials for forgery, etc.—In trials for forgery, the person whose name is alleged to have been forged is a competent witness; and, in all cases, not otherwise specially provided for, the person injured, or attempted to be injured, is a competent witness. [O. C. 658.]

See, ante, art. 782.

3. Evidence as to Particular Offenses

Art. 803. [783] Must be two witnesses, etc., in treason, or, etc.—No person can be convicted of treason, except upon the testimony of at least two witnesses to the same overt act, or upon his own confession in open court. [O. C. 654.]

Art. 804. [784] What evidence not admitted in treason, etc.—Evidence shall not be admitted in a prosecution for treason as to an overt act not expressly charged in the indictment; nor shall any person be convicted under an indictment for treason, unless one or more overt acts are expressly charged therein. [O. C. 655.]

Art. 805. [785] In case where two witnesses are required.—In all cases where, by law, two witnesses, or one with corroborating circumstances, are required to authorize a conviction, if the requirement be not fulfilled, the court shall instruct the jury to render a verdict of acquittal, and they are bound by the instruction. [O. C. 656.]

See, ante, art. 801, and notes.

Directing acquittal.—This article is an exception to the general rule that the jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of evidence. It requires the court to pass first upon the competency and the sufficiency of the evidence, and to instruct the jury to acquit, when the requirements of the law as to the quantum of the evidence have not been fulfilled. This responsibility can not be shifted by the court upon the jury. Gabrielsky v. State, 13 App. 425; Cox v. State, 13 App. 479; Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 236; Waters v. State, 30 App. 284, 17 S. W. 411.

Where the required proof is not forthcoming, it is fundamental error for the court to fail to instruct for acquittal. Kitken v. State, 29 App. 45, 14 S. W. 392; Smith v. State, 22 App. 196, 2 S. W. 542.

Insufficiency of corroboration—Instructions.—Where the issue whether a witness was the accomplice was for the jury, and there was no substantial evidence corroborating the witness, the court should charge that if the jury found that the witness was an accomplice they should acquit, because of the absence of sufficient evidence of corroboration. Jones v. State, 59 App. 559, 129 S. W. 1118.

Art. 806. [786] Perjury and false swearing; two witnesses, etc., required.—In trials for perjury, no person shall be convicted except upon the testimony of two credible witnesses, or of one credible witness, corroborated strongly by other evidence as to the falsity of the defendant's statement, under oath, or upon his own confession in open court. [O. C. 657.]

Perjury cannot be sustained upon proof that at other times when not on oath defendant made statements contradictory of the alleged perjury. Brooks v. State, 29 App. 582, 16 S. W. 543; Waters v. State, 30 App. 284, 17 S. W. 411; Agar v. State, 29 App. 605, 16 S. W. 761; Miles v. State, 73 App. 492, 165 S. W. 567.

Evidence held insufficient to support a conviction, under the rule that perjury must be proved by two credible witnesses, or one credible witness with strong corroborative circumstances. Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 671; Billingsley v. State, 49 App. 630, 95 S. W. 639; Cleveland v. State, 50 App. 6, 84 S. W. 521.

This provision is but a statutory declaration of the common law. If the evidence presents "only oath against oath," it does not warrant a conviction. Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 134, 61 Am. Rep. 296; Smith v. State, 22 App. 136, 2 S. W. 542.
A credible witness," as used in the statute, means "one who, being competent to testify, is worthy of belief." Wilson v. State, 32 App. 22, 1 S. W. 419; Am. Jur. 284, 252, 33 S. W. 947.

It is not the character of the proof required by the statute, but the number and character of the witnesses, that is made to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction. Adams v. State, 49 App. 361, 91 S. W. 230.

An accomplice being a discredited witness cannot be a credible witness, there must therefore be one credible witness independent of the accomplice. Conant v. State, 51 App. 610, 103 S. W. 899.

Evidence in a prosecution for false swearing held not to justify a peremptory challenge to a juror. Urbene v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 514.

There may, however, be evidence technically circumstantial, yet virtually direct and positive. Mains v. State, 26 App. 14, 9 S. W. 51. And one witness may be corroborated by circumstantial evidence sufficient to support a conviction. Beach v. State, 33 App. 249, 23 S. W. 976.

And see Butler v. State, 36 App. 483, 38 S. W. 746; Scott v. State, 34 App. 41, 28 S. W. 947.

Sufficiency of corroboration.—If a conviction is sought on the testimony of a single witness, with corroboration, the corroboration must be as to a material matter. State v. Bule, 43 Tex. 532.

The term "corroborated strongly by other evidence" means that this other evidence shall come from another source than from the witness who is to be corroborated. The witness to be corroborated, cannot be corroborated by proof of his own declarations. Gabriesky v. State, 13 App. 51. But the corroborating evidence must tend to show the falsity of the defendant's oath in a material matter, and, in the opinion of the court and the jury, must be cogent, and calculated to convince. But such corroboration may be by circumstantial evidence, corroborated of independent facts, which taken together tend to show the falsity of the oath, and which together strongly corroborate the testimony of the single witness who has testified to its falsity. Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 194, 51 Am. Rep. 256; State v. Bule, 43 Tex. 532; Anderson v. State, 20 App. 312; Plummer v. State, 35 App. 294, 33 S. W. 234.

An affidavit of defendant held not sufficient to corroborate the only state's witness in the absence of proof that defendant could and did read it, or that it was read to him before signing. Scott v. State, 34 App. 41, 28 S. W. 947.

Confession in open court.—A confession in another court as a witness in another case is extra-judicial. Butler v. State, 36 App. 483, 38 S. W. 746.

False swearing.—This article applies to false swearing as well as perjury. Aguierre v. State, 31 App. 519, 21 S. W. 256.

Instructions.—Cited, Miles v. State, 73 App. 493, 165 S. W. 567.

To charge the jury in felony cases upon the law applicable to the case, whether mandatory or permissive, or under our law, as the trial judge. The trial being upon the plea of not guilty, and not upon confession in open court, the omission of the trial court to give in charge to the jury the substance of the above statutory provisions was error. Washington v. State, 32 App. 256, 3 S. W. 258; Miller v. State, 27 App. 477, 11 S. W. 485; Wilson v. State, 27 App. 477, 10 S. W. 749; 11 Am. St. Rep. 180; Smith v. State, 27 App. 50, 19 S. W. 751; Tracy v. State, 27 App. 496, 11 S. W. 481; Brookin v. State, 27 App. 701, 11 S. W. 645; Grandison v. State, 29 App. 196, S. W. 174; Holt v. State, 48 App. 559, 89 S. W. 838.

This article or the substance thereof, should be given in charge to the jury, where the defendant has not confessed guilty in open court. Gartman v. State, 16 App. 315; Aguierre v. State, 31 App. 519, 21 S. W. 256; Knight v. State, 71 App. 56, 168 S. W. 543.

Where but one witness testifies to the falsity of defendant's statement, it was error to refuse to instruct that if the jury believed that such witness was not a credible witness they should acquit. Smith v. State, 22 App. 196, 2 S. W. 542; Kitcken v. State, 29 App. 45, 14 S. W. 392.

A charge on the quantum of evidence being otherwise correct, it is not necessary that it further instruct the jury to disregard the testimony of a witness they did not regard a credible person. Beach v. State, 32 App. 241, 22 S. W. 916, citing Muelly's Case, 31 App. 158, 18 S. W. 411, 19 S. W. 915.

Instruction held incorrect in law, and upon the weight of evidence. Hughes v. State, 22 App. 579, 28 S. W. 893, citing Muelly's Case, 31 App. 158, 18 S. W. 411, 19 S. W. 915.

And see, also, Whitaker v. State, 27 App. 479, 36 S. W. 233.

When three witnesses testify to defendant's guilt an instruction based on this article is unnecessary. Montgomery v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 896.

Where, on a trial for perjury, the alleged perjured person and the falsity thereof were clearly established by two or more witnesses, the court having charged that no one can be convicted for perjury except on the testimony of two credible witnesses, and if no person be named in the declaration therefor, define a credible witness.

Art. 807. [787] Proof of intent to defraud in forgery.—In trials of forgery, it need not be proved that the defendant committed the act with intent to defraud any particular person. It shall be sufficient to prove that the forgery was, in its nature, calculated to injure or defraud any of the sovereigns, bodies corporate or politic, officers or persons, named in the definition of the offense of forgery in the Penal Code. [O. C. 659.]

See P. C. art. 924. See ante, art. 454, and notes; Garza v. State, 38 App. 317, 42 S. W. 563; McGlasson v. State, 38 App. 351, 43 S. W. 93.

4. OF DYING DECLARATIONS AND OF CONFESSIONS OF THE DEFENDANT

Art. 808. [788] Dying declarations, evidence, when.—The dying declaration of a deceased person may be offered in evidence, either for or against a defendant charged with the homicide of such deceased person, under the restrictions hereafter provided. To render the declarations of the deceased competent evidence, it must be satisfactorily proved:

1. That at the time of making such declaration he was conscious of approaching death, and believed there was no hope of recovery.

Consciousness of impending death.—It is not necessary that the declarant should state, at the time of making the statement, that it is made under a consciousness of approaching death. It is enough if it satisfactorily appears in any mode that it was made under that sanction, whether it be proved by the express language of the declarant, or inferred from his evident danger, or by the opinions of his medical or other attendants stated to him, or from his conduct, or other circumstances of the case; all of which may be resorted to in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind. But where it appears that the declarant, at the time of making the declaration, had any expectation or hope of recovery, however slight it may have been, and though death actually ensued an hour afterward, the declaration is inadmissible. And his belief that he will not recover, is not itself sufficient unless there also be the prospect of almost immediate dissolution. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 290; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; Edmondson v. State, 41 Tex. 496; Lister v. State, 1 App. 733; Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Green v. State, 8 App. 71; Pierson v. State, 25 App. 14, 17 S. W. 166; Lister v. State, 25 App. 247; In re Johnson, 25 App. 262, 17 S. W. 705; Testard v. State, 26 App. 350, 9 S. W. 883; Miller v. State, 27 App. 63, 10 S. W. 445; Cahn v. State, 27 App. 709, 11 S. W. 723; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 13 S. W. 790; Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 204, 26 S. W. 196; Belcher v. State, 38 App. 487, 43 S. W. 527.

It must appear that at the time of making such declaration the declarant was conscious of approaching death, and believed there was no hope of recovering.

If deceased gives a statement which is reduced to writing, and afterwards when he realizes that he is dying he refers to and approves such statement it is admissible as dying declarations. Bryan v State, 35 App. 394, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 725; Smith v. State, 35 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 13 S. W. 750, and cases cited; Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 204, 26 S. W. 196; Morgan v. State, 54 App. 542, 113 S. W. 534; Furgason v. State, 55 App. 611, 127 S. W. 193.

If deceased gives a statement which is reduced to writing, and afterwards when he realizes that he is dying he refers to and approves such statement it is admissible as dying declarations. Bryan v. State, 35 App. 394, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 725; Smith v. State, 35 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 13 S. W. 750, and cases cited; Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 204, 26 S. W. 196; Morgan v. State, 54 App. 542, 113 S. W. 534; Furgason v. State, 55 App. 611, 127 S. W. 193.
Where deceased stated that he was fatally shot, whether he made the statements after his alleged dying declarations, all occurring in the same conversation, is immaterial. King v. State, 34 App. 223, 29 S. W. 1086.

Immediately after the shooting deceased stated that he would get even with defendant, but a short time after he stated to his companion that the wound was mortal and he could not recover, and continued to make this statement until his death; held, that his dying declarations were admissible. Polk v. State, 35 App. 465, 34 S. W. 633.

Whatever others thought or said is immaterial, provided deceased himself entertained no hope of living. Brande v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 17.

There is no form of phraseology in which a party making a dying declaration must indicate the fact that he is conscious of approaching death. If this appears with reasonable clearness it is sufficient. Keaton v. State, 41 App. 621, 57 S. W. 1128.

Where deceased, on being informed by the attending physician that he had no hope of recovery, stated that he did not think so either, but wanted the physician to do all he could for him, a dying declaration made thereafter is not inadmissible on the ground that deceased had a lingering hope of recovery. Beckham v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 564.

Signature.—As the statutory requisites of a dying declaration are merely that the declarant was conscious of approaching death and believed there was no hope of recovery, that the declaration was voluntarily made, that it was not in answer to interrogatories calculated to lead deceased to any particular statement, and that at the time of making it the declarant was of sane mind, a statement made by deceased and reduced to writing is admissible in evidence, although because of weakness it was not signed by him. Beckham v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 564.

2. That such declaration was voluntarily made, and not through the persuasion of any person.

Voluntary character of declaration.—It must appear that such declaration was voluntarily made, and not through the persuasion of any person. Lister v. State, 1 App. 740; Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Ledbetter v. State, 23 App. 247, 5 S. W. 226; Garza v. State, 3 App. 285; Piersen v. State, 21 App. 41, 17 S. W. 468.

3. That such declaration was not made in answer to interrogatories calculated to lead the deceased to make any particular statement.

Answer to interrogatories.—It must appear that such declaration was not made in answer to interrogatories calculated to lead deceased to make any particular statement. Lister v. State, 1 App. 740; Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Garza v. State, Id. 287; Ledbetter v. State, 23 App. 247, 5 S. W. 226. Interrogatories to a dying person are not prohibited, nor will they invalidate the declarations unless they be of a character calculated to lead the declarant to make the particular statement. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 330. The mere fact that certain of the dying declarations were made in response to questions asked, does not take from them their voluntary and spontaneous character unless they lead to or suggest the particular answer. Piersen v. State, 18 App. 534; White v. State, 30 App. 652, 18 S. W. 462; Testard v. State, 26 App. 260, 9 S. W. 888; Taylor v. State, 38 App. 419, 5 S. W. 1019; Williams v. State, 10 App. 523; Brande v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 17; Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 150 S. W. 272.

A statement reduced to writing by another, from decedent's answers to questions, which was not read to or approved by him, is not admissible as a written dying declaration. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 125.

A dying declaration made by deceased in response to questions by the attending physician as to whether deceased knew who shot him, and if the man who shot him knew whom he was shooting, is not inadmissible as being made in response to interrogatories calculated to lead to any particular statement. Beckham v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 564.

4. That he was of sane mind at the time of making the declaration. [O. C. 600.]

Mental condition of declarant.—It must appear that the declarant was of sane mind at the time of making the declaration. Garza v. State, 3 App. 287; Ex parte Fatheree, 34 App. 594, 31 S. W. 403.

That, when he made the declarations, the declarant was of sane mind, conscious of impending death, and that he made the declarations voluntarily, and not in answer to questions calculated to elicit any particular statement, is a sufficient predicate. Miller v. State, 27 App. 63, 10 S. W. 445; Cahn v. State, 27 App. 798, 11 S. W. 723; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 13 S. W. 759.

Evidence of mental capacity held insufficient. Ledbetter v. State, 23 App. 247, 5 S. W. 226.

On examination of a witness as to dying declarations, inquiry by the court as to the condition of mind of deceased was not error. Chalk v. State, 35 App. 116, 32 S. W. 534.

Dying declarations appearing to be an intelligible, continuous, and logical statement of how the killing occurred are admissible though declarant for part of the time was under the influence of opiates and had to be aroused from time to time to continue the statement. Taylor v. State, 38 App. 552, 43 S. W. 1019.

On necessity for charge on condition of declarant, see Poschal v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1057.

This article lays down no new rule, but is merely declaratory of the common law rules of evidence with relation to dying declarations. Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. 579; Black v. State, 1 App. 308.

The name of the deceased may be proved by his dying declaration. Listor v. State, 1 App. 738.

These are not evidence when the homicide charged is that of any other person than the declarant. Thus, if two persons are killed in the same onslaught, the declarations of one are not admissible in a prosecution for the murder of the other. Kreb's v. State, 3 App. 348.

Nothing can be evidence in a dying declaration that would not be so if the declarant were testifying as a witness on the trial. The mere opinion of the declarant is, therefore, inadmissible. But the declaration that the accused "killed me for nothing," is the statement of a fact, and not of opinion, and was held admissible. Roberts v. State, 5 App. 141.

Where a statement as to the cause of a quarrel is so interwoven with the thread of the narrative that it can not be separated without destroying the sense, this will be considered a declaration inadmissible. West v. State, 1 App. 772.

Dying declarations may be communicated by the deceased otherwise than by articulate speech: but, however expressed, they must relate facts which deceased, if himself a witness, would be competent to attest. Warren v. State, 9 App. 619, 35 Am. Rep. 748.

They are not competent to prove former or extrinsic transactions, nor to show the mere opinion or belief of the deceased; and a fortiori, a witness' opinion as to what the deceased meant by an indefinite expression is not competent evidence. Warren v. State, 9 App. 619, 35 Am. Rep. 748.

Dying declarations are received in evidence from the necessity of the case, for the purpose of identifying the accused, establishing the circumstances of the res gestae, and proving the transactions which resulted in the homicide; but declarations relating to former and distinct transactions are not admissible. Temple v. State, 15 App. 304, 49 Am. Rep. 290.

A statement of the deceased of a distinct fact, not connected with the circumstances of the death, or the immediate cause of it, is not admissible as a dying declaration, though competent and legal evidence if established by any other competent witness. Ex parte Barber, 16 App. 369; West v. State, 7 App. 150.

A statement made by deceased that "they had no occasion to shoot me," meaning the defendants, was held to be not a mere inference or opinion of the declarant, but was admissible as the statement of a fact. Pierson v. State, 21 App. 14, 17 S. W. 468.

The dying declaration was not admissible to prove that defendant was the father of his dying daughter's child, but if, at the time he was inflicting the injury which caused her death, he stated he was the father of her child, that fact could be proved. Ex parte Fatheree, 34 App. 594, 31 S. W. 403.

The state may show, as a part of defendant's dying declarations, that he stated they killed him for nothing, and that he could not run out of it, or beg out of it. Craft v. State, 57 App. 257, 122 S. W. 547.

For evidence not admissible as a dying declaration, having no relation to the cause or facts of the killing, see Jackson v. State, 63 App. 351, 139 S. W. 1156.

A declaration of a dying party, procuring or assisting in the preparation of a written dying declaration, stating that accused's codescendant shot him, to the effect that accused was in the room, and giving additional details not conflicting with the written declaration, Ryan v. State, 64 App. 628, 142 S. W. 878.

A declaration that the declarant was going to die, and his request to the witness to tell his mother that he was going to die like a man, that a coward shot him, is inadmissible, being such as he would not be permitted to testify to, if living. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1157.

A statement made by deceased, "this trouble came up over nothing. We had been quarreling about the books and I started to get up and go away and he cut me while I was getting up" is admissible. Corbitt v. State, 72 App. 356, 163 S. W. 436.

A statement by a witness to deceased after he had been shot and while he was giving a dying declaration that deceased should have known better than to have gone out with defendant to the place where the shooting occurred was inadmissible. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 299.

Dying declarations are not res gestae, and such element prescribed by this article must be proved to establish the predicate for their admission. Ledometer v. State, 23 App. 247, 5 S. W. 226; Irby v. State, 25 App. 203, 7 S. W. 705; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 18 S. W. 750; Ward v. State, 70 App. 393, 159 S. W. 272.

This practice is, when a dying declaration is procured, to introduce evidence by the state, for the court to ascertain by a preliminary examination of the witnesses the condition of the declarant at the time of making such declaration and the writing the same in evidence. Benavides v. State, 31 Tex. 573.

If a dying declaration was reduced to writing when made, it is not competent for the prosecution to prove such declaration by parol evidence, without accounting for the nonproduction of the writing. But, if the deceased made a declaration on more than one occasion, the fact that one of his declaration was reduced to writing, does not preclude parol evidence proving his declaration made on another occasion, but not reduced to writing. Krebs v. State, 8 App. 1.

A witness to dying declarations, if he is not able to state the precise language used by the declarant, may state the substance of the declarations. Krebs v. State, 8 App. 1.

Objections to the introduction of dying declarations in evidence must be made on the trial. They come too late when made for the first time on a motion for new trial, and will not be considered. Thomas v. State, 11 App. 154; Caldwell v. State, 12 App. 392; Black v. State, 1 App. 368; Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 578.

Where the dying declarations had been reduced to writing, a portion thereof being inadmissible was excluded by the court, and the remainder was admitted without expounding from the writing that portion held to be incompetent. Held correct. That when a written instrument contains both legal and illegal evidence, the court cannot be required to expunge that which is illegal. If the court points out to the jury the illegal testimony, and designates it so that the jury can identify it, it is all that can be required. Ex parte Barber, 15 App. 368.

On the preliminary investigation as to the admissibility of the dying declaration, a. witness being able, the half of the statement sworn to by the declarant said he was dying. The defendant proposed to contradict the testimony of this witness by proving that the declarant did not say he was dying. The judge refused to hear the proposed contradictory testimony, but stated that he would admit it to go before the jury on the question of admissibility, as evidence tending to impeach the declarant's witness. Held that these rulings were correct. Hunnicutt v. State, 20 App. 632.

One of the essential predicates to the competency of dying declarations as evidence is that the time they were made, the declarant was not in a condition of approaching death, and had no hope of recovery. See the opinion in extento and the statement of the case for a predicate totally insufficient in this respect; wherefore the declarations of the deceased were erroneously admitted in evidence as dying declarations. Irby v. State, 25 App. 293, 7 S. W. 765.

If a dying declaration was reduced to writing when made, it is not competent for the prosecution to prove it by parol without accounting for the nonproduction of the writing. See this case in extento upon the subject of dying declarations, predicate, etc. Drake v. State, 25 App. 293, 7 S. W. 858.

As far as the introduction in evidence of the dying declarations of the deceased, the state proved that deceased was conscious and sane when he made them; that he knew his speedy death was inevitable, and that he made the said declarations voluntarily, and not in reply to questions calculated to lead him to make any particular statement. Held, that the predicate was sufficient to admit the declarations in evidence as dying declarations being made immediately after the shooting. Moreover, the statements were res gestae. Testard v. State, 26 App. 265, 9 S. W. 888.

As a necessary predicate for the admission in evidence of dying declarations it must be established that the declarant, when he made them, was under the sense of impending death, and was sane. Consciousness of approaching death is provable by the testimony of the dying man, protest by any circumstance which sufficiently shows that when he made the declarations he was under the sense of impending death. See the opinion and the statement of the case for evidence held sufficient to establish the necessary predicate for the proof of dying declarations. Miller v. State, 27 App. 63, 10 S. W. 380; Walker v. State, 27 App. 74.

Dying declarations of the injured female to her mother, the wife of defendant, that her father, defendant, had caused her death, could be proved by the mother, who, subsequent to the declaration, was divorced from defendant. Ex parte Fatherree, 34 App. 594, 31 S. W. 463.

It is not error for the court to stop the witness when he is detailing statements made by deceased and inquire the condition of deceased when he made the statements. Calk v. State, 35 App. 116, 32 S. W. 534.

Testimony that deceased was rational, and that he stated that he could not recover, but was bound to die, is sufficient foundation for admitting his dying declarations. Folk v. State, 35 App. 495, 34 S. W. 633.

For evidence held to justify the admission of dying declarations, see Sims v. State, 36 App. 154, 36 S. W. 256.

On evidence as to declarant's competency as a witness, and as to his intelligence and mental condition, see Hunter v. State, 59 App. 493, 129 S. W. 125.

If there are several dying declarations, an oral and dying declarations at a time distinct from the time the written declaration was made is admissible: the rule that secondary evidence of the contents of writings is not admissible not applying. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 493, 129 S. W. 125.

Where defendant contests the right of the state to introduce the dying declaration of deceased, he cannot complain that, in showing that the deceased was sane and was conscious of approaching death, his physical and mental condition are described by witnesses, and his expressions in regard to his knowledge that death must ensue, stated. Lyles v. State, 64 App. 621, 142 S. W. 395.

Where testimony is admitted as a predicate for the introduction of a dying declaration, it should be limited to that purpose. Hays v. State, 73 App. 58, 164 S. W. 841.

Where deceased after being shot came into a yard and stated that he was killed, asking for a bed to die on, such statement constituted a sufficient predicate for the admission of his subsequent statements with reference to the difficulty as a confrontation. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 779.

Where the state had shown that just after the shooting, when deceased made certain declarations he realized that his wound was fatal, and that he was then in his right mind, and that the same conditions existed two days later just before his death, when he made other statements, it may be inferred that they also existed during the interval at which time he made a written declaration. Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 779.

Impeachment and contradiction.—The admission and subsequent withdrawal of dying declarations will not entitle the accused to introduce contradictory statements made by the deceased, which were neither res gestae, nor dying declarations, but merely hearsay. Sutton v. State, 2 App. 342, cited in Felder v. State, 23 App. 477, 5 S. W. 145, 59 Am. Rep. 777, and held to be not inharmonious therewith.

It is competent for the defendant to impeach the dying declarations, by proving statements made by the declarant contradictory of his dying declarations. Felder v. State, 23 App. 477, 5 S. W. 145, 59 Am. Rep. 777.

Where accused introduces written dying declarations, he may show by parol other contemporaneous declarations, not reduced to writing, though they contradict the written declaration. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 125.

Evidence tending to impeach or contradict declaration held admissible. Lyles v. State, 64 App. 631, 142 S. W. 692.

Effect of evidence.—It is error for the court to instruct the jury that dying declarations constitute the highest testimony known, and must receive full faith and credit. Walker v. State, 37 Tex. 366.

Charge.—A charge that, before the jury could consider the evidence of dying declarations, they must find that decedent made them, if he did, when he was conscious and sane, and was conscious of impending death without hope of recovery, held, not objectionable as unduly emphasizing such declarations and leading the jury to believe that it was not necessary that they should have been made voluntarily. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 439, 129 S. W. 125.

Accused's right to confront witness.—See notes to Bill of Rights, § 10 (art. 4, ante).

Though dying declarations are ex parte and are taken when accused does not have the right of cross-examination, they are not objectionable for that reason. Lane v. State, 59 App. 695, 129 S. W. 353.

Res gestae declarations.—See notes to art. 783, ante.

Art. 809. [789] Confession of defendant.—The confession of a defendant may be used in evidence against him if it appear that the same was freely made without compulsion or persuasion, under the rules hereafter prescribed. [O. C. 661.]

Art. 810. [790] When confession shall not be used.—The confession shall not be used, if, at the time it was made, the defendant was in jail or other place of confinement, nor while he is in the custody of an officer, unless made in the voluntary statement of accused, taken before an examining court in accordance with law, or be made in writing and signed by him; which written statement shall show that he has been warned by the person to whom the same is made: First, that he does not have to make any statement at all. Second, that any statement made may be used in evidence against him on his trial for the offense concerning which the confession is therein made; or, unless in connection with said confession, he makes statements of facts or circumstances that are found to be true, which conduce to establish his guilt, such as the finding of secreted or stolen property, or the instrument with which he states the offense was committed; provided, that where the defendant is unable to write his name and sign the statement by making his mark, such statement shall not be admitted in evidence, unless it be witnessed by some person other than a peace officer, who shall sign the same as a witness. [O. C. 662; amended, Act 1907, p. 219.]

1. Nature and sufficiency of confession as admission of guilt.
2. Confession distinguished from exculpatory statements.
3. Admissibility of confession in general.
4. Admissibility of entire confession.
5. Confession by party not in confinement or in custody.
6. Confession while in confinement or in custody.
7. ___ Caution.
8. ___ Voluntary statements before examining court.
9. ___ Voluntary character of confession in general.
10. ___ Threats, fear, promises or other inducements.
11. ___ Written confession.
12. ___ Truth of statement of inculpatory facts or circumstances.
13. Confessions by co-defendants or by persons other than defendant.
14. Preliminary evidence as to admissibility of confession.
15. Determination of question of admissibility of confession.
16. — Province of judge and jury.

That a document is signed by one while in custody does not make it incompetent as a standard of comparison of handwriting. Ferguson v. State, 61 App. 352, 56 S. W. 176; Jones v. State, 73 App. 152, 165 S. W. 115.

When the accused was asked by the owner of an animal which had been shot, "What made you shoot my mare?" and in reply said, "I did not shoot her with shot," it was held that such reply was not a confession of guilt. Dover v. State, 32 Tex. 84.

Confessions can not be deduced from mere circumstantial evidence, but must flow from positive statements. Eckert v. State, 9 App. 105; Conner v. State, 17 App. 1; Fowers v. State, 23 App. 42, 6 S. W. 153.

The falsity of exculpatory statements to the future commission of an offense in pursuance of a conspiracy, made prior to the commission of an offense, is not a confession.

Banks v. State, 13 App. 152.

Before the silence of the defendant can be construed into acquiescence or confession of the truth of any language or conduct of another in his presence inculpatory of himself, it must clearly appear that the language was heard, or the conduct understood by him at the time. Long v. State, 13 App. 211; Sauls v. State, 30 App. 227, 17 S. W. 1058. And the circumstances must have made it clear that the defendant was afforded him an opportunity to act or speak, but such as would also properly and naturally call for some action or reply from men similarly situated. Ingle v. State, 1 App. 307.

A confession is a voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a crime, of the agency or participation which he had in the same; an admission or acknowledgment that he committed, or was concerned in, the commission of the offense with which he is charged. It is not necessary, in order to make the statement a confession, that it should be a direct acknowledgment of guilt.

Acts, as well as words, may constitute a confession, and even silence, under certain circumstances. And these characters of confession are governed by the same rules as to their admissibility, as the usual confession by words.

A promise on the part of an accused to pay the owner for the alleged stolen property, although a circumstance that will tend to establish his guilt of theft, is not a confession that he took the property, and hence is not a confession of theft. Willard v. State, 26 App. 126, 9 S. W. 353.

Defendant on being told that another person would have him arrested said: "If he does I will kill him;" held, that the statement was admissible as a tacit confession of guilt. McAdoo v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 966.

Defendant under arrest need not contradict statements made by another in his answer to law officer. Such statements, though not contradicted by him, are not admissible against him. Denton v. State, 42 App. 427, 60 S. W. 673.

A statement by accused to an officer several hours after the alleged offense is not admissible in his behalf merely because he was warned at the time that what he said might be used against him, where the state did not seek to elicit any part of the statement. Cyrus v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 679.

Although a first confession may be inadmissible in evidence, a subsequent one may be free from objection and admissible. See the following cases in relation to subsequent confessions: Thompson v. State, 19 App. 553; Walker v. State, 7 App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 555; Maddox v. State, 41 Tex. 205; Walker v. State, 8 App. 38; Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1082.

When a confession of the main fact would be inadmissible, a confession of

A defendant is not entitled to put in evidence his confession in the first instance. It must be introduced by the state. Cock v. State, 8 App. 655.

The perjury assigned against the accused was an alleged false statement made by him as a witness for the defense on the trial of one C. for the murder of one J. The defense in evidence the statement of the accused as a witness at the inquest upon the body of said J., and also his subsequent statement to one H. with respect to the killing of J. by C. Held, that the evidence was competent as bearing directly upon the falsity of the statements upon which the perjury was assigned. Cookway v. State, 25 App. 405, 8 S. W. 676.

The state having proved that, on the day after the killing of J. by C., the accused told one H. that J. was unarmed when he was killed by C., the defense proposed, but was not allowed to prove, that two or three days subsequent to the homicide he told one McM. that J. had a pistol in his hand when he was shot and killed by C. Held, that exclusion of the proposed evidence was correct. Cordway v. State, 25 App. 405, 8 S. W. 676.

In the same conversation in which accused confessed to forging the instrument in question, he confessed embezzling other funds. Held that the latter confession was admissible to show intent. Strang v. State, 32 App. 219, 22 S. W. 680.

Where accused was indicted for rape and incest, but the incest count was dismissed, the relevancy and admissibility of a confession must be determined as though defendant stood charged with rape only. Pilgrim v. State, 59 App. 231, 125 S. W. 129.

Error in admitting a confession containing material facts is reversible. Majors v. State, 63 App. 488, 140 S. W. 1095.

A written confession made shortly after accused's arrest, stating her connection with the codefendant and all surrounding circumstances, was properly admitted in evidence. Campbell v. State, 63 App. 555, 141 S. W. 232, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 855.

In a prosecution for robbery, a confession stating on its face that it was obtained after accused was informed that he was charged with the offense of theft, but showing together with the evidence that it was the identical offense charged in the indictment for robbery, was properly admitted. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 190.

A confession not admissible on the trial of accused is inadmissible against him in subsequent prosecution for perjury committed as a witness in his own behalf in such trial. Murf v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 235.

Confession of the principal is admissible on trial of an accomplice, but only to prove the principal's guilt. Aven v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 82.

4. Admissibility of entire confession.—See note to art. 811, post.

5. Confession by party not in confinement or in custody.—The mere fact that the officer intended to arrest defendant will not render a confession made by him to another inadmissible. Holmes v. State, 38 App. 361; Coleman v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273; Snider v. State, 70 App. 16, 155 S. W. 233; Turner v. State, 72 App. 469, 163 S. W. 705; Hiles v. State, 73 App. 17, 163 S. W. 717; Girtman v. State, 73 App. 158, 164 S. W. 1098.

When the confession was freely and voluntarily made, without compulsion or persuasion, and when the person making it was not in confinement, or in the custody of an officer, it is admissible against the defendant. weller v. State, 16 App. 209; Womack v. State, id. 178; Williams v. State, 19 App. 276; Penland v. State, id. 265; Allen v. State, 12 App. 198; Picket v. State, 5 App. 522; Speer v. State, 4 App. 474; Conolly v. State, 2 App. 412; Johnson v. State, 24 App. 203; Baum v. State, 60 App. 628, 133 S. W. 271; Tores v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 525; Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 554.

In the absence of statutory provisions regulating confessions not made when the defendant was in confinement, or in the custody of an officer, the common law rule on the subject controls. That rule is as follows: To be admissible, the confession must be voluntary, not obtained by improper influence, nor drawn from the party by means of threats or promises, of a character and under circumstances such as might have influenced the person making the confession. The essence of the rule is, that to qualify the confession as evidence, it must have been made without the appliances of hope or threat by any other person.

When a defendant not under arrest or in confinement, the common law rule governs. Cook v. State, 22 App. 27, 22 S. W. 33, 40 Am. St. Rep. 758.

That defendant believed one of the crowd an officer did not render his confession inadmissible. Lopez v. State, 37 App. 649, 49 S. W. 972.

Evidence of accused's statement to the grand jury held admissible, though not reduced to writing; he not having been under arrest. Browning v. State, 64 App. 145, 142 S. W. 1.

Statements made by defendant in his testimony in the preliminary hearing of another charged with the same burglary were properly admitted in evidence, where at the time of making such statements defendant was not under arrest or charged with same. Spicer v. State (Ct. App.) 164 S. W. 548.

Testimony before the grand jury by defendant before he was under arrest, and when he had no information that he would be arrested, which was reduced to writing and sworn to, was not a written confession by defendant under arrest within Art. 169, Rogers v. State, 71 S. W. 462.

When the person making a confession is in confinement, or in custody of an officer, such confession is not admissible evidence against him, unless it is shown to have been made in one of the exceptions specified in the preceding article. Ake v. State, 30 Tex. 462; Adams v. State, 34 Tex. 526; Barnes v. State, 36 Tex. 356; Williams v. State, 37 Tex. 474; Haynie v. State, 2 App. 169; Angell v. State, 8 App. 451; Williams v. State, 19 App. 528; O'Connell v. State, Id. 567; Kennon v. State, 11 App. 356; Lopes v. State, 12 App. 27; Harris v. State (Ct. App.) 174 S. W. 334.

It is immaterial that the offense for which the defendant was confined, or was in custody when the confession was made, is a different offense than that for which he is on trial. O'Connell v. State, 10 App. 567; Taylor v. State, 3 App. 357; Nieder­ luck v. State, 21 App. 320, 17 S. W. 497; Grosse v. State, 11 App. 364; Davis v. State, 19 App. 201.

If a witness, in an examining trial, is charged or suspected of the crime under investigation, and is aware of the fact that he is so charged or suspected, his testimony on such investigation is not admissible against him when on trial for the offense investigated. Wood v. State, 22 App. 431, 3 S. W. 336. For it is shown that he was sent for, and brought to a certain place, but it is shown he was not actually under arrest, and was not at such place against his will, his confessions and declarations made at the place are admissible against him. Moore v. State, 39 App. 266, 45 S. W. 899.

Confessions made under arrest are not admissible unless made voluntarily in the examining court, in accordance with law, or in writing, and signed by defendant. Gaston v. State, 55 App. 270, 115 S. W. 582. And see Martin v. State, 57 App. 553, 124 S. W. 661.

Evidence of a statement by accused while under arrest for a misdemeanor previous to the homicide held admissible to prove motive. Lane v. State, 59 App. 595, 128 S. W. 353.

Accused held not under arrest so to make a confession inadmissible for failure to observe statutory requirements. Hinsley v. State, 60 App. 565, 132 S. W. 779.

Where the sheriff took accused and his brother to the scene of the homicide, they were under arrest. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

Where accused is under arrest, and is not warned, his confession is inadmissible. Collins v. State, 57 App. 410, 123 S. W. 582; Raines v. State, 33 App. 294, 25 S. W. 898; White v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 189; Carlisle v. State, 37 App. 195, 38 S. W. 631; State, 71 App. 1, 158 S. W. 1117; Hill v. State, 72 App. 109, 101 S. W. 118; Perrett v. State, 72 App. 212, 162 S. W. 582.

A voluntary statement cannot be used against the defendant, unless it was made after a proper caution, and proof must be made of the verity and genuineness of such statement. De Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 484; Powell v. State, 37 Tex. 438; Brez v. State, 39 Tex. 95.

Where the prisoner wrote out a confession and handed it to an officer, who, without his knowing it, warned him that it might be used in evidence against him, it was held that such confession was admissible, as the prisoner, after being cautioned, evinced no desire to retract it; but that if he had evinced such desire, the confession would not have been admissible. Harris v. State, 5 App. 97; Waite v. State, 15 App. 166.

Ordinarily, a confession made when the party is in confinement or in custody, is not admissible unless, before it was made, the defendant was informed or cautioned, or might be useful in evidence against him. And it must be shown by a prisoner unconfined, can not be made evidence by proving that the same was repeated in his presence and he made no reply thereto. Jackson v. State, 7 App. 563.

Shivers v. State, 1 Id. 450.

When the confession by words is inadmissible, because the defendant was uncautioned, his acts or his silence would, for the same reason, be inadmissible. Nolen v. State, 14 App. 474, 46 Am. Rep. 247, overruling Rhodes v. State, 11 App. 583.

An application for a continuance, made when the defendant was in custody, can not be used in evidence against him, unless before making it he was cautioned that it might be so used. Austin v. State, 15 App. 383. See, also, Gonzales v. State, 37 App. 145. Vickers v. State, 7 App. 657. Wimberly v. State, 22 App. 588, 3 S. W. 717; Adams v. State, 16 App. 162.

Admonition made to defendant by magistrate, does not apply to confessions made by defendant at any other time than when making statement before the examining court. Baker v. State, 25 App. 1, 8 S. W. 29, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427. While a person is in jail no statement made by him either written or verbal is admissible in evidence unless he has been duly cautioned that it may be used against him. Mixon v. State, 36 App. 66, 35 S. W. 394.

Defendant cannot be cross-examined about a confession made without warning while under arrest. Wright v. State, 36 App. 427, 37 S. W. 732.

Defendant was twice cautioned before he was warned and could afford no ground for rejecting such confessions. Carlisle v. State, 37 App. 108, 35 S. W. 391.

When defense is insanity; held, error to admit a confession without warning. It is v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 254.

Written statement by defendant which he had in his pocket when arrested and which he intended to give his counsel is not privileged communication and is admissible, although he was under arrest and had not been warned when it was taken from him. Renterio v. State, 42 App. 398, 56 S. W. 1816.

Testimony of physicians appointed on a lunacy commission held admissible, as against the objection that it was derived from statements made by accused without proper warning. Lane v. State, 56 App. 558, 125 S. W. 853.

Evidence of a sheriff and constable, in rebuttal, that accused did not make certain statements to them, and that they saw no marks of violence on her, except a bruised place on one of her eyes, held not objectionable as a confession not in writing, made under arrest and without warning. Young v. State, 61 App. 909, 35 S. W. 127.

Where accused, after being warned that he need make no statement, voluntarily went before the grand jury and testified, his statement was admissible though the warning was not in accordance with the statute. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

8. -- Voluntary statements before examining court.—And a confession made before an examining court and reduced to writing, but not properly authenticated, if otherwise competent evidence, may be proved by parol. Guy v. State, 9 App. 154; Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39.

An oral plea of guilty, made before an examining court, preceded by a proper caution, is admissible in evidence against the defendant as an extra-judicial confession, if voluntarily made. Rice v. State, 22 App. 654, 3 S. W. 791.

That defendant was intoxicated is not a valid objection, unless it be shown that at the time he made the statement he was intoxicated to such a degree that he was incapable of understanding the warning and caution given by the magistrate. Lewis v. State, 29 App. 179, 12 S. W. 688. The defendant must be warned and cautioned by the magistrate. Walker v. State, 28 App. 112, 12 S. W. 553.

When defendant is duly cautioned, his statement is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that he wanted to waive further examination after he had made such statement. Shaw v. State, 22 App. 156, 22 S. W. 588.

When defendant voluntarily testifies at an examining trial his statements are admissible against him whether he was cautioned or not, although he may have been under arrest at the time. Dill v. State, 35 App. 246, 33 S. W. 126, 66 Am. St. Rep. 37.

Defendant made a statement before an examining court which was reduced to writing and sworn to by him and the justice of the peace told him that his statement might be used against him; held, the statement was admissible. Williams v. State, 37 App. 147, 38 S. W. 998.

Statement made by defendant to justice of the peace after being duly warned, reduced to writing and signed by defendant is in compliance with this law and admissible. So also is a statement made before an examining court and jury reduced to writing and signed. Pierce v. State, 54 App. 424, 115 S. W. 148.

Where the accused is taken before a justice of the peace and waives examination and is requested to make a statement and does so and swears to it, such statement is not a voluntary statement under this article and is not admissible in evidence against the accused in a prosecution for perjury. Biard v. State, 54 App. 446, 113 S. W. 275. While, if accused takes the stand on the examining trial as a witness and is sworn, his testimony may be reproduced against him in any subsequent trial, whether he was warned or under arrest or not, yet where he makes a statement in the examining trial, the testimony producing such testimony, must show a warning. Kirkpatrick v. State, 57 App. 17, 121 S. W. 611.

Accused's testimony before the examining magistrate is admissible against him on his subsequent trial, though he does not then testify. Pressley v. State, 64 App. 127, 141 S. W. 215.

A sworn statement, held admissible, as accused's testimony given on the examining trial, irrespective of whether it was admissible in evidence or was made after the statutory warning. Pressley v. State, 64 App. 127, 141 S. W. 215. For a full discussion of the requisites to the admissibility of a "voluntary statement," see Kirby v. State, 23 App. 13, 5 S. W. 165. And as to manner, etc., of making voluntary statement, see arts. 294, 295, ante.

9. - Voluntary character of confession in general.—The mere fact that a confession was made in answers to questions propounded by an officer does not show that it was not voluntary. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 144, 159 S. W. 255. But see Pinckard v. State, 62 App. 608, 138 S. W. 601.

A confession, to be admissible in evidence, if the party was in confinement or custody when it was made, must be freely made, without compulsion or persuasion, voluntarily and after the person making it has been cautioned that it may be used against him.

To render a confession inadmissible upon the ground that it was induced by compulsion, it is not sufficient that the person making the confession was influenced by fear of legal punishment. Gentry v. State, 24 App. 80, 5 S. W. 669; Thompson v. State, 24 App. 693. But see, also, Womack v. State, 17 App. 178.

Confession to be admissible must be made voluntarily without compulsion or persuasion. Lauderdale v. State, 31 App. 46, 19 S. W. 679, 37 Am. St. Rep. 788; Clay v. State, 31 App. 489, 21 S. W. 255. And defendant's confession may be used against him. Kirby v. State, 23 App. 13, 5 S. W. 165.

When defendant is cautioned that his confessions may be used against him, and voluntarily, and without hope of reward makes statements, they may be admitted as evidence against him. Nichols v. State, 32 App. 293, 24 S. W. 658.

10. - Threats, fear, promises or other inducements.—To render a confession inadmissible, upon the ground that it was induced by a promise of some benefit, the promise must be positive, and must be made or sanctioned by a person in authority, and must be of such character as would be likely to influence the party to confess. Gentry v. State, 24 App. 80, 5 S. W. 669; Rice v. State, 22 App. 654, 3 S. W. 791; Thompson v. State, 19 App. 593.

A particeps criminis who, to secure exemption from prosecution, agrees to testify against his co-defendant, and when presented as a witness refuses to so testify, fairly and fully in good faith, cannot claim the benefit of such agreement. His confession, made under such agreement, if freely and voluntarily made, without persuasion or compulsion, can be used in a prosecution against him. Neely v. State, 27 App. 224, 11 S. W. 378. Also on the subject: Baker v. State, 25 App. 1, 8 S. W. 22, 3 S. W. 791; Searcy v. State, 28 App. 513, 13 S. W. 783; 19 Am. St. Rep. 851; Jackson v. State, 29 App. 455, 16 S. W. 247; Cannon v. State, 29 App. 537, 18 S. W. 341. And see, also, Bell v. State, 31 App. 376, 20 S. W. 549; Clay v. State, 31 App. 489, 21 S. W. 255.

If the confession was made through hope of immunity, or drawn out by persuasion, it is inadmissible. Lauderdale v. State, 31 App. 46, 19 S. W. 679, 37 Am. St. Rep. 788.

Where the defendant made a confession after being properly warned, the fact that the officer to whom confession was made was required to the defendant, that from the way the defendant complained in his (the officer's) opinion he would be dead in an hour, did not render the confession inadmissible. Jackson v. State, 49 App. 319, 51 S. W. 788.

A charge to the effect that if the accomplice's statements, made in accused's absence, were found to be true the jury would be justified in considering accused's own confession against him, though it may have been made by persuasion or compulsion, held erroneous. Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 620.

A confession which does not recite a legal warning, does not name the person so warning, and does not contain the statement that it could be used on the trial, is not admissible as a written confession under the statute. Boyman v. State, 84 App. 123, 138 S. W. 1142; Robertson v. State, 84 App. 21, 131 S. W. 742; Jenkins v. State, 60 App. 224, 131 S. W. 542; Henzen v. State, 62 App. 336, 137 S. W. 746.
STATEMENTS while under arrest, not reduced to writing are inadmissible. Fry v.
State, 58 App. 169, 134 S. W. 920; Rodriguez v. State, 58 App. 297, 126 S. W. 264;

A written confession must be complete in itself; and omissions therefrom cannot be supplied by evidence. Overstreet v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 630; La Fell v. State (Cr. App.) 103 S. W. 884.

It being shown that a defendant's voluntary confession before an examining court was made in conformity with law, but was not so authenticated as to render it admissible in evidence, it was admissible to prove the statements therein con­

An unwritten confession, made before enactment of the present law is inadmissible though it may have been admissible when made. Askew v. State, 59 App.
152, 127 S. W. 1097.

A confession made voluntarily after due warning, and signed by accused and afterwards read over and explained to him, is admissible though not written by

A voluntary confession made out of court and reduced to writing, which does not show to whom the confession is made, and which is not signed by accused and witnessed by any one, though two persons were present, is inadmissible. Baggett
v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1136.

A confession reduced to writing and proved by three witnesses is properly ad­

12. — Truth of statement of inculpatory facts or circumstances. — The facts must be found to be true in pursuance of the statement made by defendant and 817, where a confession made, sworn to as a result of continued use of immaterial whether or not defendant was under arrest. Smith v. State, 34 App.
124, 29 S. W. 775. See, also, Martin v. State, 57 App. 596, 124 S. W. 651; Boyman
v. State, 59 App. 23, 136 S. W. 1142; Nunn v. State, 60 App. 86, 131 S. W. 320;
Smith v. State, 136 S. W. 65, 139 S. W. 486; Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 897; Manley v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W.
1138; Moran v. State, 75 App. 525, 168 S. W. 161.

When in connection with a confession, the party makes a statement of facts, or of circumstances that are found to be true, which conduces to establish his guilt, such confession is admissible against him, whether it was voluntarily made or not, or whether he was first cautioned or not. The entire confession, together with such statements of facts or circumstances found to be true, are admissible in evidence against him. Weller v. State, 15 App. 200 (overruling, in so far as they 33; Massey v. State, 10 App. 645; O'Connell v. State, 1 App. 567; Kenyon v. State, 11 App. 356). See, also, Walker v. State, 2 App. 236; Davis v. State, Id. 583; Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 370; Selvidge v. State, 30 Tex. 60; Strait v. State, 42 Tex.
486; Speights v. State, 1 App. 551; Collins v. State, 24 App. 141, 5 S. W. 448;

3 App. 519; Binyon v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 340.

To render the confession admissible under this exception, the facts or circumstances must be found by means of the statement made. If they had already been discovered when the confession was made, they are not discoverable by means of the information afforded by the defendant, the confession is not admissible.
Walker v. State, 2 App. 326; Allison v. State, 14 App. 122; Nolen v. State,

The truth of the inculpatory facts or circumstances must be shown by evidence,

If the statement be with regard to where the fruits of a crime, or the instruments with which the crime was committed, are secreted or to be found, it is not essential, in order to render the confession admissible, that such property or instruments be found in the exact place stated; but it is sufficient that they be found in the immediate vicinity of such place, and be found in consequence of the information afforded by the defendant. Buntain v. State, 15 App. 488; Davis v.
State, 8 App. 510.

The facts or circumstances stated and found to be true, must be such as conduce to establish the guilt of the defendant, and if they are not of this character, the confession will not be admissible. But a single fact or circumstance stated and found to be true, and which is inculpatory of the defendant, conducing to es­ establish his guilt of the crime for which he is on trial, will render the confession admissible. Owens v. State, 16 App. 448. Irrelevant facts or circumstances, which cannot conduce to the establishment of guilt, are not admissible, even though found to be true. Warren v. State, 29 Tex. 269.

After his voluntary statement and the examination of witnesses on the examiing trial, accused made a confession of guilt which, pending examination, was sworn to by him before the magistrate. In that statement he confessed to the murder of the child, and proposed to show the place where he buried it. He afterward pointed out to the magistrate and others a place where bones, or clothing resembling those of a child were found, that the confession was admissible as a judicial confession. Jackson v. State, 29 App. 458, 16 S. W. 347. Other decisions on this subject: Neeley v. State, 27 App. 324, 11 S.
State, 20 App. 574, 18 S. W. 85; Brown v. State, 26 App. 398, 9 S. W. 613. When as a result of the confessions the clothing of deceased is found, they are admissible though he was not warned by the officer. Stearns v. State, 34 App. 279, 20 S. W. 328; Williams v. State, 34 App. 257; 30 S. W. 663.

The confession of a defendant acknowledged the killing and pointed out the place of the burial of the body. The confession was properly admitted. Jackson v. State, 29 App. 488, 18 S. W. 247; Hawkins v. State, 27 App. 273, 11 S. W. 469.

Prohibitions obtained by undue means were off the means of his statement, money of which deceased was robbed, was found; this would make the confession admissible. Jones v. State, 60 App. 329, 96 S. W. 931.

On the theory that the fruits of the crime were discovered by means thereof, if the fruits were known independent of the confession. Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1135.

A declaration by one of two defendants, leading to the finding of part of the property, was not inadmissible while both defendants were under arrest. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 392.

Where the sheriff to whom accused had confessed while in jail testified that defendant admitted the theft and told him he had given a portion of the money to one, who surrendered it to the sheriff, the confession was admissible, though not in writing. Windham v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 613.

Evidence that the defendant, while under arrest and unwarned, gave information from which the officers found deceased's watch, a fruit of the crime and an indication of defendant's guilt, was properly admitted in a murder case. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1056.

The fact that the defendant in a homicide case by request takes persons to the place where the thing stolen is found body is admissible in evidence, although he was under arrest and unwarned. Ortiz v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1056.

A confession voluntarily made held properly admitted to establish the identity of deceased, and to show how and by what means he was killed. Belcher v. State, 71 App. 464, 161 S. W. 459.

Evidence that, on the arrest of a conspirator, he told where the others could be found, and that they were found there, was not objectionable as a confession made to officers after arrest. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1153.

13. Confessions by co-defendants or by persons other than defendant.—The general rule is, that a person's confession cannot be used against any other person than himself. Draper v. State, 22 Tex. 400; Hightower v. State, Id. 605; Ake v. State, 30 Tex. 466; Ake v. State, 31 Tex. 416; Armstead v. State, 22 App. 51, 2 S. W. 627; Perigo v. State, 25 App. 533, 8 S. W. 660. See, also, Couch v. State, 55 App. 505, 136 S. W. 896.

A confession made by a co-conspirator with the defendant, if admissible against such co-conspirator, is also admissible against the defendant, if it was made pending the conspiracy and in furtherance thereof; but not if made after the conspiracy. Zumwalt v. State, 5 Tex. 523; Haney v. State, Id. 549; Allen v. State, 8 App. 67; Cohea v. State, 11 App. 153; Armstead v. State, 22 App. 51, 2 S. W. 627; Willey v. State, 22 App. 498, 3 S. W. 570; Martin v. State, 25 App. 557, 8 S. W. 682.

Where a defendant is on trial, charged as an accomplice or accessory, it is competent for the state to prove confessions made by the principal in the crime, for the sole purpose, however, of establishing the guilt of such principal; and when a confession is admitted for this purpose, the jury must be instructed that it is not evidence against the defendant for any other purpose than to establish the guilt of the principal. Simms v. State, 19 App. 131.

Where two defendants are being tried jointly, a confession made by one may be admitted in evidence against him, but the jury must be instructed that they cannot consider such confession against the other defendant. Collins v. State, 24 App. 141, 5 S. W. 418.

The confession of the principal is admissible in evidence on the trial of the accomplice. Bluman v. State, 23 App. 42, 21 S. W. 1067; 23 App. 43, 21 S. W. 628.

A conspiracy cannot be proven by confessions of one of the co-conspirators, the existence of the conspiracy must be proven by other evidence. Sessions v. State, 27 App. 62, 38 S. W. 633.

One of two co-defendants made a confession after being warned, the other one said nothing; held, such confession could not be used against the one who kept silent. Wright v. State, 37 App. 627, 40 S. W. 491.

On a trial for burglary, evidence that while a third person in accused's presence, both he and accused being under arrest, was making a confession, accused interrupted and asked him what he was getting from the police department for his information, was inadmissible, Bradshaw v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 218.

The written confession of the principal, voluntarily made, and admissible against the principal, is admissible against the defendant, however it may be obtained. The instructions to the sole purpose of proving the guilt of the principal. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.

14. Preliminary evidence as to admissibility of confession.—The burden is upon the state to show that the confession proposed to be given in evidence by it is admissible. And until the proper predicate is laid, the confession should not be received. Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 297; Greer v. State, 31 Tex. 129; Angell v. State, 8 App. 451. But a contrary doctrine to the above seems to have been held in Williams v. State, 19 App. 276, without reference to the cases above cited. In the Williams case, the evidence left it doubtful whether the confession was made at a time when the defendant was under arrest, and it was held that the burden devolved upon the defendant to show that he was, at the time of the confession, under arrest.

After a confession has gone to the jury, it is the undisputed right of the prisoner to show, if he can, that it was not in fact voluntary, and this he may do by any evidence which conduces, in any degree, to establish that conclusion. Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 297.
Burden of proof is on the state to show competency. Note the several facts to be proved as predicate. Thomas v. State, 35 App. 178, 32 S. W. 771.

Though accused contended that his confession was secured by coercion and coaxing and influence of intoxicating liquors, it was properly introduced where the testimony of the officers and two subscribing witnesses was to the effect that it was voluntarily made. Williams v. State (Crim. App.) 144 S. W. 537.

A county attorney to whom accused made a confession, cannot testify as to its contents, unless a compliance with the statutory requirements is shown. Roberts v. State (Crim. App.) 159 S. W. 637.

The testimony of the owner that he heard that his store had been burglarized, given preliminary to proving a confession by defendant to witness, made the next morning, is admissible as fixing the time. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 300.

And, generally, on the subject, see Angell v. State, 8 App. 451; Burks v. State, 24 App. 326, 6 S. W. 300; Womack v. State, 16 App. 178, which, compare with Williams v. State, 19 App. 278.

15. Determination of question of admissibility of confession.—In a capital case, when the defendant, to be offered, the proper practice is to retire the jury from the court room until the admissibility of the confession has been determined by the judge. Carter v. State, 37 Tex. 362.

Where testimony was intended to be objected to on the ground that when the statements were made accused was under arrest, but the fact of his arrest was not stated either as a ground of objection nor certified by the court as true in fact, there is no merit in the objection. Lott v. State, 58 App. 694, 127 S. W. 191.

The fact that testimony was hearsay and irrelevant does not suggest the objection that it was given by a witness under arrest who had not been warned. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

16. — Province of judge and jury.—See notes to art. 734, ante.

17. Best and secondary evidence of confession.—See notes to art. 783, ante.

18. Effect of confession.—Where the state introduces a confession, it is bound by such confession unless disproved. Menefee v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 158; Winkler v. State, 58 App. 564, 126 S. W. 1134.

The state can not use part of the defendant's confession, but all he said at the time is admissible, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 165, 62 Am. Dec. 550; and if it should appear, even on motion for new trial, that the confession as used was incomplete, the motion should prevail. Powell v. State, 37 Tex. 348. The whole confession must be taken together, though the jury need not attach equal credit or belief to all parts of it. McHenry v. State, 40 Tex. 46; though it seems to have been held that if the state puts the declarations of accused in evidence, it is bound by them unless they are proved to be false. Gardiner v. State, 33 Tex. 692.

The jury may believe that part of the confession which is inculpatory of the defendant, and reject that which is in his favor, if they see fit. Brown v. State, 2 App. 130; McHenry v. State, 46 Tex. 46.

In considering a confession the jury may accept one portion of it as true, and reject as untrue that which has been contradicted by other testimony. Carr v. State, 24 App. 562, 7 S. W. 328, 5 Am. St. Rep. 396; Fulcher v. State, 28 App. 465, 13 S. W. 780.

The whole of the confessions introduced by the state must be taken together, and the state is bound thereby, unless the confessions are shown to be untrue by the evidence, and the confessions must be considered as evidence in connection with other facts of the case. Pratt v. State, 39 App. 635, 129 S. W. 664.

Where the state introduces a confession, it is bound by all the statements therein except such as are proven untrue, but it is only bound by such statements as it introduces and, where a written statement made by accused before the grand jury introduced, its additional oral statements are not binding on the prosecution. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

19. — Corroboration, and proof of corpus delicti.—See notes to Pen. Code, art. 1084, as to proof of corpus delicti in cases of homicide.

A confession alone is not sufficient to support a conviction, but may be used to aid the proof of the corpus delicti, and the conviction will be sustained if it, with the other evidence, satisfies the jury of accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Meek v. State, 71 App. 333, 160 S. W. 605; Dunn v. State, 34 App. 201, 30 S. W. 227, 53 Am. St. Rep. 714; Gilbert v. State, 37 App. 301, 39 S. W. 672; Nolan v. State, 60 App. 5, 129 S. W. 1198, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1218; Harris v. State, 64 App. 594, 144 S. W. 252.

A confession should be received with great caution, and a jury should hesitate to convict upon it in the absence of some corroboration, and in cases of murder, without proof of the corpus delicti, a confession of guilt, uncorroborated by other evidence, is not sufficient to warrant a conviction. Fields v. State, 41 Tex. 25; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 165, 62 Am. Dec. 550; Gay v. State, 2 App. 127; Riley v. State, 4 App. 628.

But the foregoing should not be given in charge to the jury, as that would be charging upon the weight of evidence. Thuston v. State, 18 App. 26; Collins v. State, 40 App. 599.

Confession in case of theft is not sufficient to support conviction without proof of corpus delicti. Hill v. State, 11 App. 122.

When a person charged with burglary voluntarily goes before a grand jury and confesses his guilt, he should be found guilty. Jones v. State, 33 App. 7, 25 S. W. 783.

The confessions of a party are sufficient to convict when the offense has been proved allunde. Attaway v. State, 35 App. 403, 34 S. W. 112.

It is well settled that the corpus delicti of murder cannot be proven by the uncorroborated confession of the party charged therewith; but if the fact that a
A charge of burglary was committed can be proved against the confession of the party is sufficient to connect him with the offense. Attaway v. State, 35 App. 182, 34 S. W. 112.

On trial for theft of cattle the evidence was a confession of defendant corrobated by the fact that he was seen going from the direction in which the animal was slaughtered, carrying fresh beef; held, sufficient to support a conviction, although the confession was made under persuasion. Logan v. State, 36 App. 1, 34 S. W. 925.

That the daughter of defendant, in incest, gave birth to a child is not corroboration of defendant’s extrajudicial confession, so as to warrant a conviction. Nolan v. State, 69 App. 5, 129 S. W. 1108, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1248.

The birth of a child may, in connection with other circumstances, be considered on the question of corroboration of defendant’s confession of incest with the mother. Penland v. State, 64 App. 954, 144 S. W. 232.

In a prosecution for bigamy, defendant’s prior marriage cannot be established by confessions or admissions of the defendant alone. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 926.

Where defendant made a written confession that he had taken a pistol from one of the witnesses, shot at another witness, and then hid it, and that it was the pistol found by the police, evidence of independent facts germane to the question whether he was carrying a pistol was admissible, as corroborative of the confession. Wilson v. State, 70 App. 497, 157 S. W. 495.

20. Charge.—See notes to art. 765, ante.

Art. 811. [791] When part of an act, declaration, etc., is given in evidence.—When part of an act, declaration or conversation or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other, as, when a letter is read, all other letters on the same subject between the same parties may be given. And when a detailed act, declaration, conversation or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration or writing which is necessary to make it fully understood or to explain the same may also be given in evidence. [O. C. 664.]

It is permissible to bring out the circumstances under which threats were made, and the cause thereof at the time forming a part of the same conversation, but without going into detail. Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655; Singleton v. State, 57 App. 560, 124 S. W. 92; Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 779.

If the state proves an act of the defendant material to be understood, either party is entitled to accompanying declarations explanatory of such act. Davis v. State, 3 App. 91; Stockman v. State, 24 App. 357, 6 S. W. 298; 5 Am. St. Rep. 894; Gaiter v. State, 21 App. 527, 1 S. W. 456.

When a portion of a writing is put in evidence, it is the privilege of the other party to put the whole of such writing in evidence. Early v. State, 9 App. 476; Giles v. State, 43 App. 561, 67 S. W. 412.

This article expands the common law rule. At common law, when a confession or admission is introduced in evidence against a party, such party is entitled to prove the whole of what he said on the subject at the time of making such confession or admission. But this article does not restrict the explanatory act, declaration, conversation or writing to the time when the act, declaration, conversation, or writing sought to be explained, occurred, but extends the rule so as to render such acts or statements admissible, if necessary to a full understanding of, or to explain, the acts or statements introduced in evidence by the adverse party, although such acts may have transpired at a time so remote even as to not be admissible as res gestae. Greene v. State, 17 App. 395 (overruling Shivers v. State, 7 App. 450, in so far as it conflicts with the above). See, also, Rainey v. State, 20 App. 455; Harrison v. State, 20 App. 357, 54 Am. Rep. 529; Smith v. State, 45 App. 807; 81 S. W. 596, 108 Am. St. Rep. 381.
WHERE the evidence sought to be introduced as the balance of the conversation is purely hearsay and self-serving, it is not admissible upon him, and Chinnault v. State, 46 App. 351, 81 S. W. 972; Hutchinson v. State, 58 App. 228, 123 S. W. 19.

WHERE a defendant on cross-examination may properly ask what was done with such indictment. Green v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 126; Cowart v. State, 71 App. 116, 158 S. W. 899.

WHERE except of the testimony given by a witness is introduced for impeachment, the adverse party is entitled to the admission of the balance. Straight v. State, 62 App. 453, 138 S. W. 742; Allen v. State, 64 App. 225, 141 S. W. 983.

If part of an act is given in evidence by one party, the whole act may be introduced into by the other party. Straus v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 663; Cole v. State, 70 App. 459, 156 S. W. 929.

WHERE the state elicited certain words and actions of the defendant preparatory to the difficulty, and that a remark was made by him as he took up the weapon with which the assault was alleged to have been committed, he was entitled to have that remark in evidence on cross-examination. Taliaferro v. State, 40 Tex. 525.

WHERE the assaulted party testifies that he has no ill-feeling toward the defendant, his declarations to a contrary effect made before the difficulty are admissible. McFurlin v. State, 41 Tex. 23.

WHERE the state proves the defendant's declarations, the defendant is entitled to prove by his own witness the declarations testified about by the state's witness. Neyland v. State, 13 App. 526.

For testimony offered under this rule, but held to be inadmissible, see Pendleton v. State, 19 App. 365; also, Kunde v. State, 22 App. 65, 3 S. W. 225; Rainey v. State, 20 App. 459.

This article is not intended to operate against a defendant, and can not be invoked by the state to exclude the declarations of the defendant made when in custody, if the same be otherwise admissible as res gestae. Harrison v. State, 20 App. 387, 54 Am. Rep. 529.

WHERE declarations or statements are full and complete, and there is nothing left in doubt concerning them, other declarations or statements are not admissible to explain them. Craig v. State, 30 App. 619, 18 S. W. 297.

WHERE evidence of the flight of a defendant, he may, in explanation thereof prove by a witness that he had informed defendant that a mob was being organized to arrest and hang him, and that he advised him to flee. Lowden v. State, 33 App. 412, 26 S. W. 352.

That the state introduced evidence of a conversation between defendant and another will not render admissible a subsequent conversation upon the same subject between defendant and still another person, which is an entirely new and distinct conversation, having no connection with the previous conversation. Atkinson v. State, 34 App. 424, 30 S. W. 1064.

WHERE the state, on a prosecution for murder in the perpetration of robbery proved that about a month before the homicide deceased had sold cattle for a certain sum of money, which fact was known to defendant, it was incompetent for defendant to go back of that transaction, and prove that long prior thereto deceased complained of hard times and a need of money. Lancaster v. State, 36 App. 16, 33 S. W. 165.

WHERE the acts and declarations of the defendant were introduced in evidence as res gestae, subsequent explanations thereof were held to be inadmissible. Gibson v. State, 23 App. 414, 5 S. W. 314; distinguished from Greene v. State, 17 App. 295, and Harrison v. State, 29 App. 387, 54 Am. Rep. 529.

The defense asked a witness why he informed the deceased that he (the witness) thought that the deceased would get well. The witness replied that deceased asked him if he would recover, and that he replied that he would, whereupon the deceased said that if he did get well the defendant would "pay for this." Upon the ground that the defense had proved this part of the conversation, the state was permitted, upon cross-examination, to prove by the witness other statements of the deceased in that conversation, detailing the circumstances of the shooting. Held, that the question of the defense did not call for any part of the conversation between the witness and the deceased, but only for the latter's reason for assuring the former of his recovery, and this did not authorize the proof admitted for the state. Irby v. State, 25 App. 203, 7 S. W. 765.

The proposition having been proved statements made by defendant soon after the homicide, the defense proposed to prove a different statement made by the defendant to his brother and also the fact that he then told his brother that he had made different statements, and explained to him the reasons for making them. Held, that the exclusion of the proposed evidence was error, as it clearly came within this article. Bonnard v. State, 25 App. 173, 7 S. W. 862, 8 Am. St. Rep. 431. And further on evidence within this article, see Rogers v. State, 26 App. 404, 9 S. W. 765; Wood v. State, 29 App. 4, 12 S. W. 405; Gaffaher v. State, 28 App. 247, 12 S. W. 1087; Epson v. State, 29 App. 667, 16 S. W. 789; Suits v. State, 30 App. 319, 17 S. W. 458; Craig v. State, 30 App. 619, 18 S. W. 297; Simmons v. State, 31 App. 227, 20 S. W. 572; Jackson v. State, 31 App. 552, 21 S. W. 367.

WHERE the introduction of contradictory statements made by the prosecutrix, defendant should have been permitted to introduce her testimony given at the examining trial. Bozeman v. State, 34 App. 503, 31 S. W. 389.

WHERE statements made by defendant are offered in evidence, it is proper to show the questions to which they were an answer. Harvey v. State, 35 App. 545, 34 S. W. 623.

WHERE defendant in cross-examination of a State's witness brings out part of the testimony in connection with record evidence of a former trial the State may on re-examination bring out the remainder of such evidence. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 App. 20, 35 S. W. 906.

When there were prior encounters in which several parties were engaged, and which led up to the killing, and the State confines its testimony to the immediate killing, the defense should be allowed to bring out the whole matter on cross-examination. Shumate v. State, 28 App. 266, 45 S. W. 690.

Where State offers part of a statement made by a witness in court, defendant cannot offer the whole statement, but only such parts as bear on the part offered by the State. Ford v. State, 41 App. 1, 51 S. W. 977, 53 S. W. 889.

Hedges made a statement at time of homicide stating that a statement of his wife made at the same time is admissible for purpose of a full understanding of defendant's declaration. Jennings v. State, 42 App. 78, 57 S. W. 643.

It is a fact that defendant asks improper questions at one time does not give the State the right to prove statements highly prejudicial to defendant, even though these latter are part of same conversation brought out by defendant in the first place. Woodward v. State, 42 App. 188, 58 S. W. 141.

In no case has it introduced in evidence the admission of defendant that he killed deceased it is admissible to prove on cross-examination his explanation of the circumstances of the homicide made at a different time from that of the admission. Pratt v. State, 53 App. 281, 169 S. W. 139, 140.

When witness to the house of the deceased and of the witness, made threatening remarks against the deceased and the witness, the defendant was entitled to show that the threatening remarks toward the witness were made by the deceased himself, during the same conversation. Hodge v. State, 60 App. 157, 131 S. W. 577.

This article announces a proper rule of evidence in civil, as well as in criminal, cases. Cotton v. Morrison (Civ. App.) 140 S. W. 114.

It being the state's theory that accused killed decedent for delivering to accusing party a letter containing compromising information, by the wife that he became angry because she refused to tell him from whom she received the letter, the State was entitled to show whether accused at that time had threatened to cut her wife's throat. Lacy v. State, 63 App. 150, 149 S. W. 461.

Where the state introduces evidence indicating flight, a witness for the defendant may testify that defendant explained that he was not avoiding arrest. Ballenger v. State, 63 App. 657, 141 S. W. 91.

When accused offers only such parts of a dying declaration as relate to the offense for which he is tried, the state is not entitled to introduce other parts referring to a different transaction occurring several years before, except that the former difficulty might be shown to establish malice, intent, or to throw any light on offense. Hinton v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 617.

Where accused relies on a part of a statement admitted as dying declaration, the whole statement is admissible. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 165.

Accused's wife, having testified on cross-examination that she told accused of abusing decedent, what accused said by decedent, when told of such conduct was admissible. Pettis v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 790.

And so if one admits on cross-examination that he had been arrested on a criminal charge, the adverse party, on redirect examination, may elicit the fact that he was indicted. Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1062.

The state may inquire into the acts and statements of accused's father, who had a quarrel with deceased only a short time before the killing, where the transaction was brought out by accused. Coulter v. State, 72 App. 602, 162 S. W. 885.

The state is not required to introduce all of defendant's statement or testimony introduced before the grand jury, but may introduce a portion thereof, and leave to defendant the introduction of the remainder. Shaw v. State, 73 App. 337, 165 S. W. 930.

Where counsel for defendant in a homicide case elicited from a witness on cross-examination a partial answer to a question as to why he did not have defendant arrested on learning that he had stolen his hog, the court properly permitted the witness to answer in full, though this included advice given him by a third person. Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 672.

It is not error to admit evidence respecting a matter which accused injected into the case on cross-examination of a witness, and concerning which he voluntarily testified on his own direct examination. Onstott v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 301.

Where accused, on cross-examination of the state's witness alleged to have been bribed, and to impeach his credit, showed that such witness had signed defendant's name to an order to checks, it was proper for the state to show why he had signed defendant's name. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 730.

An ex parte written statement made by a witness for defendant was properly admissible on rebuttal, over defendant's objection that it was hearsay. Where defendant had previously elicited testimony as to the contents of a portion thereof. Watts v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 202.

Where, in a prosecution for cattle theft, defendant claimed he had bought the animal from N., and on a former trial proved by G. that N. had sought to bribe
M. to testify that defendant had admitted to him that he had stolen the animal, but the trial in question C. testified for the state that his former statement was untrue, and that he in fact, representing himself as X., went with defendant’s brother to M. and sought to bribe him to testify that defendant had told him that he in fact went to M.’s house or made any such proposition to him. Swafford v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 222.

Where one of accused’s witnesses who confessed to participating in the robbery stated that accused was not a participant, he may be contradicted by proof of contrary statements, although such evidence is limited to the contradiction. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

Where one of accused’s witnesses testified that he did not sign a written statement concerning the crime and could not write his name, he may be impeached by contradictory evidence. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 345.

Art. 812. [792] Written part of an instrument shall control, etc.—When an instrument is partly written and partly printed, the written shall control the printed portion when the two are inconsistent. [O. C. 665.]

Writing defined.—See Pen. Code, art. 39.

Art. 813. [793] When subscribing witness denies execution, etc., of instrument.—When a subscribing witness denies or does not recall the execution of an instrument to which his name appears, its execution may be proved by other evidence. [O. C. 665.]

Art. 814. [794] Evidence of handwriting by comparison.—It is competent in every case to give evidence of handwriting by comparison, made by experts or by the jury; but proof by comparison only shall not be sufficient to establish the handwriting of a witness who denies his signature under oath. [O. C. 667.]

Admissibility of evidence as to handwriting.—This article expressly authorizes the proof of handwriting by comparison made by experts. Speiden v. State, 3 App. 156, 30 Am. Rep. 126; Hughes v. State, 39 App. 294, 129 S. W. 837. But such proof is not alone sufficient to establish handwriting where the person whose handwriting it is alleged to be denies the same under oath. Spicer v. State, 53 App. 177, 105 S. W. 815; Brooks v. State, 57 App. 251, 122 S. W. 356; Batte v. State, 57 App. 120, 122 S. W. 561; Reeseman v. State, 59 App. 430, 128 S. W. 1126. Proof of handwriting by comparison has always been deemed feeble and unsatisfactory. Jones v. State, 7 App. 427; Heacock v. State, 12 App. 97.

Competency of witnesses.—As a general rule a witness, who is not an expert, is not competent to prove the handwriting of another person unless he has seen the person write or is conversant with his acknowledged handwriting. But when handwriting of the person in question has been received from him, or has been seen write he may testify. Haynie v. State, 3 App. 168; Long v. State, 10 App. 156; Haun v. State, 13 App. 383, 44 Am. Rep. 790; Manning v. State, 37 App. 189, 39 S. W. 118; Chappell v. State, 58 App. 401, 126 S. W. 96, 143 S. W. 577; Bell v. State, 61 App. 90, 143 S. W. 582. And see Britt v. State, 38 App. 121, 41 S. W. 622.

To entitle a witness to be examined as an expert in the comparison of handwriting, he must, in the opinion of the court, have special practical acquaintance with the immediate line of inquiry, and the question of his competency as such expert is one for the court and not the jury, to determine. A witness offered as an expert to prove handwriting by comparison, testified that he was not experienced in the comparison of handwriting, that he was not expert in that respect, but thought he could tell whether or not two different instruments were written by the same individual; he was held to be not qualified to testify as an expert. Heacock v. State, 12 App. 97. As to qualification of witness, see, also, Walker v. State, 14 App. 609; Chester v. State, 23 App. 577, 5 S. W. 125. Experienced tellers of banking houses, whose daily duties require them to pass upon signatures, etc., and who consider themselves qualified to judge of handwriting, are competent expert witnesses to prove handwriting by comparison, and their opinions with reference to such matter are admissible. Speiden v. State, 3 App. 156, 39 Am. Rep. 126, distinguished from Haynie v. State, 2 App. 156. And see Crow v. State, 35 App. 244, 26 S. W. 299; Crow v. State, 37 App. 295, 39 S. W. 574.

A letter written by a convicted felon can not be used as a standard of comparison. Permitting an expert witness to give a letter as one of the signatures in question, which, together with a genuine signature, were, over defendant's objections, exhibited to the jury, for the purpose of showing how easily the genuine signature could be counterfeited, is improper. Thomas v. State, 18 App. 213. It is error to permit comparison of handwriting, from the bill of sale, with a genuine set of handwriting, when the accused could not show another bill of sale signed by such other person by his wife. Taylor v. State, 62 App. 611, 138 S. W. 615.

...that may offer in evidence, for the purpose of comparison, a letter written by himself before the accusation was made. Mallory v. State, 37 App. 482, 36 S. W. 781, 66 Am. St. Rep. 808. An application for an attachment, signed by defendant, offered as a standard for comparison of handwriting, is not objectionable because it was signed by defendant while he was under arrest and unaware that it was to be used as evidence against him. State v. State, 33 App. 555, 26 S. W. 206. Where, in a prosecution for rape, defendant introduced a letter alleged to have been signed by B. to one H., claiming that the letter was written by prosecutrix, and that she signed it B.'s name thereto, and prosecutrix wrote the name of B. for comparison, the court did not err in admitting genuine letters shown to have been written and signed by B. as standards of comparison. Battles v. State, 63 App. 147, 140 S. W. 785.

On a trial for murder the state was properly permitted to introduce in evidence a piece of paper which was found pinned to the fence of deceased at the point whence the fatal shot was fired, and on which there was certain writing in pencil, the proved handwriting of defendant being used as a standard of comparison, and the piece of paper being shown to be a leaf from a notebook found in defendant's house, and belonging to him. Caldwell v. State, 38 App. 566, 14 S. W. 122.

Comparison of handwriting by jury.—On comparison of handwriting by the jury, see also Hatch v. State, 6 App. 284.

Standards of comparison used by expert witnesses should not be permitted to go into the hands of the jury to be used by them as proof of the handwriting on an alleged forged instrument. See the facts upon which this ruling was based: Chester v. State, 22 App. 577, 5 S. W. 125.

Cross-examination of expert.—See Barber v. State, 64 App. 89, 142 S. W. 682.

Art. 815. [795] Party may attack testimony of his own witness, when and how.—The rule that a party, introducing a witness, shall not attack his testimony is so far modified as that any party, when facts stated by the witness are injurious to his cause, may attack his testimony in other manner, except by proving the bad character of the witness. [O. C. 668.]

Impeachment of witness.—The party introducing a witness (including the state) can not attack his testimony in any manner, unless the witness has stated facts injurious to such party. Mere failure to prove a given fact by a witness will not authorize an impeachment of such witness. This is the only modification of the common law rule which denies a party the right to attack the testimony of his own witness. White v. State, 10 App. 331; Clanton v. State, 13 App. 139; Tyler v. State, 13 App. 205; Thomas v. State, 14 App. 70; Bennett v. State, 21 App. 73; W. C. Lack v. State, 13 S. W. 476; Williams v. State, 22 App. 476, 7 S. W. 663; Self v. State, 28 App. 393; 13 S. W. 602; Thompson v. State, 29 App. 208, 15 S. W. 206; Erwin v. State, 32 App. 510, 24 S. W. 904; Kirk v. State, 33 App. 224, 32 S. W. 566; Willard v. State, 36 App. 414, 37 S. W. 329; 36 App. 414, 37 S. W. 329; 37 App. 458, 38 S. W. 190; Bailey v. State, 37 App. 579, 40 S. W. 281; Storms v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 439; Dunnigan v. State, 38 App. 614, 44 S. W. 145; Young v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 835; Ross v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 898; Finley v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 1015; Harvand v. State, 46 App. 77, 73 S. W. 955; Andrews v. State, 64 App. 2, 141 S. W. 220, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747; De Leon v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 247; Holmes v. State, 70 App. 423, 157 S. W. 487; Cunningham v. State, 73 App. 565, 166 S. W. 518; Evans v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 795. And a mere failure to testify is not sufficient. Largin v. State, 37 App. 574, 40 S. W. 250; Price v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 243. And of course it follows that a party cannot put a witness on the stand knowing the testimony will be contrary to another statement without impeaching it. Perrett v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 316. That the testimony of one's own witness contradicts the testimony of another witness of the party is not sufficient to entitle such to impeach the witness. Goss v. State, 67 App. 557, 121 S. W. 107; not to the right to impeach a witness with respect to his State, 38 App. 377, 43 S. W. 197. The State cannot impeach its own witness nor the defendant's witness on collateral matters. Jones v. State, 51 App. 472, 101 S. W. 996; Wright v. State, 63 App. 423, 149 S. W. 1105. And further as to the statement of the State, 69 App. 860; Baum v. State, 77 S. W. 543; State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 263; Hightower v. State, 70 App. 48, 155 S. W. 533; Loicano v. State, 72 App. 515, 163 S. W. 64.

...cross-examining the witness held injurious and subject to contradiction. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 807; Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1071.

When the cross-examiner seeks to draw out new matter, the witness becomes his enemy and may insist upon the right to cross-examine upon the new matter. Bassham v. State, 35 Tex. 622. But a party does not make a witness his own if he merely recalls him for the purpose of cross-examination. Harvey v. State, 37 Tex. 355.

When defendant voluntarily introduces evidence which tends to impugn the character of his own witness he can not complain that he was not subsequently allowed to introduce testimony to show that the said witness's reputation for truth and veracity is good. Mealer v. State, 22 App. 162, 22 S. W. 142.

When court on cross-examination refuses to allow question on ground that it is not in reference to any matter brought out by State and defendant makes witness his own as to the matter, he cannot impeach him when he denies having made a statement. Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 624.

The State has the right to contradict its own witness and show that he has made statements contradictory of his testimony on the witness stand. But the testimony is only admissible for the purpose of attacking the credibility of the witness and not to establish any fact necessary for the State to prove. Brown v. State, 55 App. 9, 114 S. W. 522.

Where, in a murder case, the question whether defendant got his pistol from his room before or after the commencement of his controversy with deceased was material, and a witness for the State, testifying contrary to the testimony given by her at the preliminary hearing, stated that he got the pistol before the commencement of the controversy, the state had a right to introduce evidence tending to discredit her by showing what occurred between the witness and the prosecuting attorneys just before they placed her on the stand, and that after the killing she lived several months with the family of defendant's father-in-law. Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 503.

Accused is not entitled to have the jury charged to disregard evidence which she brought out on cross-examining a state's witness. Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 237.

Art. 816. [796] Interpreter shall be sworn to interpret, when.
—When a witness does not understand and speak the English language, an interpreter must be sworn to interpret for him. Any person may be subpoenaed, attached or recognized in any criminal action or proceeding, to appear before the proper judge or court to act as interpreter in such criminal action or proceedings, under the same rules and penalties as are provided in the case of the witnesses.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 683.

Interpreters.—This article does not provide an interpreter for a non-English speaking defendant. Livar v. State, 26 App. 115, 9 S. W. 552. But see Zunago v. State, 40 App. 58, 133 S. W. 718, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 656.

Motion for new trial on the ground that the interpreter was not impartial; held, properly refused. Ramos v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 376.

There is nothing requiring an interpreter to be unbiased as far as the defendant is concerned. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 1118.

It is within the judge's discretion to permit a complaining witness to serve as interpreter. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 140, 134 S. W. 348.

Objection that an interpreter did not fairly interpret the testimony held insufficient. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 140, 134 S. W. 348.

CHAPTER EIGHT OF THE DEPOSITIONS OF WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY TAKEN BEFORE EXAMINING COURTS AND JURIES OF INQUEST

Art. 817. Defendant may have deposition taken when examination, etc.

818. May also be taken, when.

819. Deposition of witnesses within the state may be taken by whom.

820. May be taken out of the state by whom.

821. Deposition of non-resident witness temporarily within the state.

822. Shall be taken as in civil cases.

823. Objections to depositions.

824. How defendant shall proceed in taking depositions.

825. Written interrogatories shall be filed and notice given as in civil cases.

Art. 826. Certificate of officer taking depositions.

827. When two officers act, each shall sign and seal.

828. Deposition before examining court may be taken without interrogatories.

829. May be taken without commission.

830. Duty of officer to attend.

831. How deposition shall be returned.

832. Deposition shall not be read unless oath be made that, etc.

833. District or county attorney may make oath.

834. Testimony taken before examining court may be read in evidence, when.

Article 817. [797] Defendant may have deposition taken when examination, etc.—When an examination takes place in a criminal action before a magistrate, the defendant may have the deposition of any witness taken by any officer or officers hereafter named in this chapter; but the state or person prosecuting shall have the right to cross-examine the witnesses; and the defendant shall not use the deposition for any purpose, unless he first consent that the entire evidence or statement of the witness may be used against him by the state on the trial of the case. [O. C. 764.]

Constitutional right to confront witnesses.—See notes to art. 4, ante, and art. 834, post.

Continuance on showing diligence as to deposition.—See notes to art. 608, subd. 2, ante.

Art. 818. [798] May also be taken, when.—Depositions of witnesses may also, at the request of the defendant, be taken in the following cases:
1. When the witness resides out of the state.
2. When the witness is aged or infirm. [O. C. 765.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 584.

Infirm witness.—A woman who has been confined in childbirth is not “infirm.” Davis v. State, 64 App. 8, 141 S. W. 261.

Art. 819. [799] Depositions within the state, taken by whom.—Depositions of witnesses within the state may be taken by a supreme or district judge, or before any two or more of the following officers: The county judge of a county, notary public, clerk of the district court and clerk of the county court. [O. C. 766.]

Art. 820. [800] May be taken out of the state, by whom.—Depositions of a witness residing out of the state may be taken before the judge or chancellor of a supreme court of law or equity, or before a commissioner of deeds and depositions for this state, who resides within the state where the deposition is to be taken. [O. C. 767.]

Officers authorized to take depositions.—A consul of the United States is qualified to take depositions in foreign countries for use in this state. Adams v. State, 19 App. 350.

A notary public is not authorized to take depositions in criminal cases beyond the limits of this state. Lienpo v. State, 28 App. 179, 12 S. W. 588.

Art. 821. [801] Depositions of non-resident witness temporarily within the state.—The deposition of a non-resident witness who may be temporarily within the state, may be taken under the same rules which apply to the taking of depositions of other witnesses in the state. [O. C. 768.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 884.

Art. 822. [802] Shall be taken as in civil cases.—The rule prescribed in civil cases for taking the depositions of witnesses shall, as to the manner and form of taking and returning the same, govern in criminal actions, when not in conflict with the requirements of this Code. [O. C. 769.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 823, 888, 890.

Art. 823. [803] Same objections to depositions as in civil cases.—The same rules of procedure as to objections to depositions shall govern in criminal actions which are prescribed in civil actions, when not in conflict with this Code. [O. C. 770.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 885, 890.

Objections.—Objections must be in writing, and are governed by the same rules which obtain in civil cases. Blake v. State, 38 App. 377, 43 S. W. 107. See, also,
Art. 824. [804] How defendant shall proceed in taking depositions.—When the defendant desires to take the deposition of a witness at any other time than before the examining court, he shall, by himself or counsel, file with the clerk of the court in which the case is pending a statement on oath setting forth the facts necessary to constitute a good reason for taking the same; and, in addition there- to, state in his affidavit that he has no other witness whose attendance on the trial can be procured, by whom he can prove the facts he desires to establish by the deposition. [O. C. 771.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§1.

Art. 825. [805] Written interrogatories filed, etc., as in civil cases.—In cases arising under the preceding article, written interrogatories shall be filed with the clerk of the court, and a copy of the same served on the district attorney, or county attorney of the proper district or county, the length of time required for service of interrogatories in civil actions. [O. C. 765.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§5, §§6, §§8.

Art. 826. [806] Certificate of officer taking deposition.—In every case where depositions are taken under commission in criminal actions, the officer or officers taking the same shall certify that the person deposing is the identical person named in the commission, and is a credible person; or, if they can not certify to the identity of the witness, there shall be an affidavit of some person attached to the deposition proving the identity and credibility of such witness, and the officer or officers shall certify that the person making the affidavit is known to them, and is worthy of credit. [O. C. 773.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§8-§80.

Art. 827. [807] Where two officers act, each shall sign and seal.—In cases where it is required that two officers shall act in executing a commission to take depositions, the official seal and signature of each shall be attached to the certificate authenticating the deposition. [O. C. 774.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§8, §§80.

Art. 828. [808] Deposition before examining court, taken how.—The deposition of a witness taken before an examining court may be taken without interrogatories; but whenever a deposition is so taken it shall be done by the proper officer or officers; and there shall be allowed, both to the state and to the defendant, full liberty of cross-examination. [O. C. 775.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§8.

Proper officers.—The officers authorized to take depositions before an examining court are enumerated in art. 819, ante.

Art. 829. [809] May be taken without commission.—The depositions of witnesses taken before an examining court may be taken without a commission; and, if such examining court be held by a supreme or district judge, he shall, upon request, proceed to take depositions of the witnesses. [O. C. 776.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, §§8.

Art. 830. [810] Duty of officer to attend.—Where any of the officers, other than a supreme or district judge, are called upon to take a deposition before an examining court, it is their duty to attend and take the same. [O. C. 777.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 888.

Art. 831. [811] How deposition shall be returned.—A deposition taken in an examining court shall be sealed up and delivered by the officer or officers, or one of them, to the clerk of the court of the county having jurisdiction to try the offense; in all other cases the return of depositions may be made as provided for depositions in civil actions. [O. C. 778.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 888.

It was urged, against the admissibility of the written testimony of a witness, that it was not sent to the clerk of the district court sealed up in an envelope, etc. Held, that the objection was untenable in view of the fact that the said testimony was identified as that of the witness by the magistrate who reduced it to writing, and was properly certified to by him at the time it was subscribed and sworn to by the witness. Cowell v. State, 16 App. 57.

Art. 832. [812] Depositions shall not be read, unless oath be made that, etc.—Depositions taken in criminal actions shall not be read, unless oath be made that the witness resides out of the state; or, that, since his deposition was taken, the witness has died; or that he has removed beyond the limits of the state; or that he has been prevented from attending the court through the act or agency of the defendant; or by the act or agency of any person whose object was to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the testimony; or that, by reason of age or bodily infirmity, such witness can not attend. [O. C. 779.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 881.

Admissibility of depositions in evidence.—Depositions can not be admitted in criminal cases except upon the conditions and with the restrictions prescribed by this chapter. The consent of the district attorney and the defendant to the taking of a deposition otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the code will not make the deposition admissible, if objected to at the trial. Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 758. Unless one of the contingencies enumerated in this article is shown to have occurred depositions are not admissible. Evans v. State, 12 App. 370. Sufficiency of proof of predicate, see McGee v. State, 31 App. 71, 19 S. W. 764. As to distinction between depositions and testimony taken at examining trial, see Cline v. State, 33 App. 526, 56 S. W. 1099, 37 S. W. 722, 61 Am. St. Rep. 650. See, also, notes to art. 831, post.

An affidavit that “the witness resides out of the state of Texas, and is a resident of the Indian Territory,” was held sufficient to admit his deposition. Hallinger v. State, 11 App. 323. And so an affidavit that the witness was out of this state and was a resident of another state, was held sufficient. Kerry v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

The statement of a witness, that he “did not know where the witness was,” and the further showing, by the record, that attachment for said witness had been issued to several counties and returned not found, and that said witness appeared to be a railroad hand with no permanent place of abode, and that the state had no reasonable expectation of ever being able to procure his attendance, were held to not furnish a sufficient predicate for the admission of the deposition of said witness. Pinkney v. State, 12 App. 352.

A predicate, sufficient to admit a deposition in evidence, is not established by proof merely that the witness is absent from the state. Menges v. State, 21 App. 415, 7 S. W. 812; Cooper v. State, 7 App. 194. Or that the witness had left for parts unknown, and that ineffectual search had been made for him. Evans v. State, 12 App. 370.

The “bodily infirmity” which will authorize the admission of a deposition need not amount to a permanent disability. Thus, when a witness was at home, forty miles distant from the court, confined to his house from the effects of an attack of measles, which had destroyed one of his eyes and left him a chronic invalid, and he was also afflicted with constant pain in his head, and with palpitation of the heart, it was held that his written testimony was properly admitted. Collins v. State, 24 App. 141, 5 S. W. 848.

Depositions taken in a civil suit are inadmissible on a criminal trial. Luckie v. State, 33 App. 563, 28 S. W. 533. This statute only permits the introduction of depositions. The stenographer’s notes taken at a former trial are not admissible, even if a proper predicate has been laid. Smith v. State, 48 App. 66, 85 S. W. 1154.

Former testimony of witnesses inadmissible where they are alive and within jurisdiction of court. Swilley v. State, 73 App. 619, 166 S. W. 733.

Art. 833. [813] District or county attorney may make oath.—
When the deposition is sought to be used by the state, the oath prescribed in the preceding article may be made by the district or county attorney, or any other credible person; and, when sought to be used by the defendant, the oath shall be made by him in person.

[O. C. 780.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 831.

Art. 834. [814] Testimony taken before examining court may be read in evidence, when.—The deposition of a witness taken before an examining court or a jury of inquest, and reduced to writing, and certified according to law, in cases where the defendant was present when such testimony was taken, and had the privilege afforded him of cross-examining the witness, may be read in evidence as is provided in the two preceding articles for the reading in evidence of depositions. [Act Nov. 10, 1866, p. 160.]

Admissibility of testimony of deceased or absent witnesses.—As to taking testimony on examining court, see arts. 192, 193, ante. As to taking testimony before a jury of inquest, see arts. 1065, 1078, post.

Circumstantial evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of establishing the removal of a witness from the state, in order to the admission of his evidence given before the examining court; but, to be sufficient, it must be clear and convincing on the issue. Martinez v. State, 26 App. 91, 9 S. W. 368, holding an affidavit of the district attorney, to the effect that he had good reason to believe the witness had removed beyond the limits of the state, and that he had caused attachments for the witness to be issued to all of the counties in the state. All of which had been returned not executed, was insufficient as proof of the removal of the witness beyond the limits of the state. And see McCollum v. State, 29 App. 162, 14 S. W. 1020.

A witness called to reproduce the testimony of the deceased witness may state the substance thereof, and it is not essential that he should be able to repeat the exact words of it. Black v. State, 1 App. 363; Greenwood v. State, 35 Tex. 587; Simms v. State, 10 App. 131; Avery v. State, Id. 159; Potts v. State, 26 App. 603, 14 S. W. 456.

Evidence held sufficient to authorize introduction of the testimony given by a witness at the preliminary examination. Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899; Millner v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 348.

If the witness, at the time he testified, was a convicted felon, his testimony is not admissible, unless it be shown, unless it be shown, that his competency had been restored by a pardon. Schell v. State, 2 App. 36.

When a sufficient predicate has been laid for the admission of written testimony taken before an examining court or a jury of inquest, and such testimony has been reduced to writing, but has not been so authenticated as to render it admissible in evidence, or if it has not been reduced to writing, parol evidence is admissible to reproduce evidence of the testimony of the witness. O'Connell v. State, 10 App. 667; Davis v. State, 9 App. 363; Dunlap v. State, Id. 179, 35 Am. Rep. 738.

When a deposition has been taken before an examining court, or has been reduced to writing and certified according to law, the defendant having been present when it was taken, and having had the privilege of cross-examination afforded him; and it is shown by oath, that since said deposition was taken the witness has died, or has been removed beyond the limits of the state, or has been prevented from attending by reason of age or bodily infirmity, or through the act or agency of the defendant, or by the act or agency of any person whomsoever it was or is for the defendant to deprive the defendant of; and the deposition is admissible in evidence for the defendant or for the state.

The same rules which govern the admissibility of depositions are applicable to the written testimony of witnesses, taken before an examining court or a jury of inquest. Those rules require that oath be made to some one or more of the facts supposed to be within the scope of an affidavit, nor is a formal, independent oath necessary; but the fact or facts relied upon to render the deposition or testimony admissible may be proved by the testifying fact in the case, or, in any other State. 11 Am. St. Rep. 352: Parker v. State, 18 App. 72: Post v. State, 10 App. 579: Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771: Martinez v. State, 26 App. 91, 8 S. W. 356.

Article 332, ante, prescribes five alternative contingencies upon which a predicate may be laid for the introduction in evidence of a deposition. Unless the predicate be laid in conformity to one or more of these prescribed contingencies, the deposition cannot be used in evidence. A fortiori it is not competent to reproduce oral testimony, taken before an examining court or jury of inquest, without first laying such predicate. In this respect the Code is restrictive of the common law.

Where the testimony of a deceased witness, on a former trial of the case, had been reduced to writing and filed in the court in which the case was then pending, it was held that a duly certified copy thereof would be admissible, in behalf of the defendant, to reproduce the testimony of the deceased witness, on a trial held in a county to which the venue of the case had been changed. Walker v. State, 12 App. 614, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note.

In the trial of a defendant charged with murder, it was held competent for the state, after laying a proper predicate, to read in evidence the testimony of a witness, wherein the defendant was charged with assault with intent to murder. It was shown that the wounds inflicted in said assault were an efficient cause for the death of the deceased, subsequent to said examining trial, the assault and the murder being, in fact, the same transaction. Hart v. State, 15 App. 295, 49 Am. Rep. 168: Dunlap v. State, 9 App. 179, 25 Am. Rep. 736.

The word "deposition," the second word in this article, is a manifest mistake on the part of the revisers, and was used by them inadvertently for the word "evidence," or the word "evidence," and the article should read, and be construed to read, "the testimony," etc., or, "the evidence," etc. Kerry v. State, 17 App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

It is not necessary that the magistrate's certificate to testimony should show affirmatively that the testimony was read by or to the witness. No particular form for such certificate is prescribed by law, and the presumption obtains that the magistrate complied with the directions of the law. Golden v. State, 22 App. 1, 2 S. W. 521: O'Connell v. State, 10 App. 567. See, also, Clark v. State, 28 App. 189, 12 S. W. 728, 10 Am. St. Rep. 317: McFadden v. State, 28 App. 241, 14 S. W. 128.

The state offered the written testimony of certain witnesses, who had testified before an examining court, after having laid the predicate, that said witnesses had removed from the state. Defendant objected on the ground that the witnesses were in service of the attorney and procurement of the state. The proof showed that the witnesses were helpless and destitute women, who, after coming to Texas at the instance of the defendant, had been swindled by him out of all their money, and that they were aided to return to their homes in another state, by the county attorney, from motives of charity, and not for the purpose of depriving the defendant of their testimony. It was held that the testimony was properly admitted. Golden v. State, 25 App. 1, 2 S. W. 531.

The form of testimony: restates the character of testimony necessity, and the rule as to its admission is a guarantee of an accused's constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him. Such being the case, it is important that the facts which authorize its use be proved to exist, and such proof may be Rebuilt and contended, and shown to be insufficient, and this may be done without filing a counter-affidavit controverting the same. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771: Menges v. State, 21 App. 413, 2 S. W. 812. But it is too late, after verdict, to controvert the truth of the predicate. Ballinger v. State, 11 App. 232.

A sufficient predicate is laid by proof that the witness lives out of the state, or has removed beyond the limits of the state. Where the proof showed that the witness was an officer of the United States army; that he was temporarily on duty in this state at the time he testified; that his command, at that time, was stationed in the Indian Territory; that since he testified he had left this state to return to his command, and that a telegram, announcing his arrival there, had been received, it was held that a sufficient predicate was laid that he was no state to admit his testimony. Conner v. State, 33 App. 378, 5 S. W. 189. See, also, Parker v. State, 24 App. 61, 5 S. W. 653, holding that the evidence that the witness was a non-resident was insufficient.

The essential part of the predicate whereunder it is competent to reproduce, on trial, by oral proof, the evidence delivered upon the examining trial by a witness who has since died, and the record of whose testimony has been lost, is affirmative proof, not only that the defendant was present as the party on trial at the examining trial, and that he was afforded the opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Failing in this latter respect, the predicate in this case was insufficient, and the

The record of testimony before the examining court, and delivered to the clerk by the magistrate who held the said court, is not an "original paper" within C. C. P. art. 630, and therefore is not a paper of which the clerk is required to keep a copy, and for this reason, the record is not a valid objection that before resorting to parol reproduction of the testimony of the deceased witness, the state should first have produced a certified copy of said testimony from the clerk of the court whence the venue was changed, or account for its nonproduction. Byrd v. State, 26 App. 374, 9 S. W. 755.

Evidence that a witness who testified at the coroner's inquest is a resident of another state is sufficient to render admissible his testimony before the coroner. Johnson v. State, 27 App. 351, 10 S. W. 255.

As a predicate for the introduction in evidence of the written testimony of a witness as delivered at the examining trial, it was proved that the witness was a nonresident of the state at the time of the examining trial and at the time of the final trial. Held, that the predicate was sufficiently established. Crook v. State, 27 App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

As a predicate for the oral reproduction of the testimony given before an examining court by a since deceased witness, the state proved the death of the witness, and that in all probability the record of his testimony had been destroyed by a fire, which consumed other records deposited in the courthouse. Held, that the predicate was sufficient. Potts v. State, 26 App. 663, 14 S. W. 496. See, also, Gilbreath v. State, 26 App. 515, 9 S. W. 638.

Where, on a trial for murder, it appears that the testimony of two state's witnesses had been reduced to writing in due form at an inquest during a regular proceeding before a justice of the peace, and opportunity afforded defendant for cross-examination, and that the witnesses have moved out of the state, their testimony at the inquest is admissible. Hobbs v. State, 53 App. 71, 112 S. W. 508, following Porch v. State, 51 App. 7, 99 S. W. 1122.

Predicate for the introduction of the testimony of a witness taken at the former trial, Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1906. The record of the testimony of an absent witness taken on the examining trial is not objectionable when offered in evidence, because the clerk of the court had placed his seal mark and the date thereof on the back of the testimony when taken. Milner v. State, 14 App. 45, 102 S. W. 348.

It is only when a witness has permanently gone beyond the jurisdiction of the court that his testimony given at the examining trial can be received. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 142.

A sheriff's return on a subpoena, which stated that he was informed at the witness' last place of employment that the witness had left for another state, is not admissible as a foundation for the admission of the testimony of the witness taken at examining trial, being only hearsay. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 142.

Letters purporting to have been written by a witness who testified at the examining trial are inadmissible to show that he was without the state until identified as written and signed by the witness. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 142.

An alleged stenographer's report of the evidence of witnesses who had gone out of the jurisdiction should not have been admitted until some proof had been given that the report was in fact the testimony given by the witnesses on the former trial. Eade v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 148.

In a prosecution for murder, where it was sought to impeach the defendant's witnesses as to material facts and incidents at the time of the homicide by proof that he gave no such testimony at the inquest and on a former trial, such impeachment was not inadmissible because the defendant was not present at the coroner's inquest, since, where one seeks to impeach a witness by proof of former statements inconsistent with his evidence, it is immaterial whether the defendant was present or not. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 525.

In a prosecution for homicide, where a witness, who testified at a former trial, had died, testimony given on such former trial, that would have been admissible if the witness living, was admissible. Sweat v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 554.

Accused's statement on his examining trial given through an interpreter was not inadmissible merely because the interpreter or whoever wrote out the statement as given by the interpreter made a mistake in one particular, as the jury would hear the whole evidence as to the claimed mistake, and might disregard the statement in the particular shown to be a mistake. Galan v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 124.

For other decisions under this section, see Kirby v. State, 22 App. 13, 5 S. W. 165; McCulm v. State, 29 App. 162, 14 S. W. 1026; Peddy v. State, 31 App. 547, 21 S. W. 544.

And further as to accused's right to confront witnesses, see Bill of Rights, § 10, art. 4, ante.
TITLE 9
OF PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT

CHAPTER ONE OF NEW TRIALS

Article 835. [815] Definition of "new trial."—A "new trial" is the rehearing of a criminal action, after verdict, before the judge or another jury, as the case may be. [O. C. 669.]

Nature of remedy in general.—Defendant cannot, in his motion for new trial, for the first time complain that he was not ready for trial, but should have moved for postponement or continuance. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 971.

Necessity of motion.—See art. 844, post.

A motion for a new trial is not essential to the defendant's right to appeal. Cotton v. State, 29 Tex. 186.

Errors in instructions must be reserved in a motion for new trial to be available on appeal, and in absence of a motion for a new trial in the record such errors will not be reviewed. Harvey v. State, 57 App. 7, 121 S. W. 695.

Errors not complained of in the trial court by making them a ground for new trial cannot be taken advantage of on appeal. Berg v. State, 61 App. 612, 142 S. W. 884.

Where there is no motion for a new trial in the record, all that the Court of Criminal Appeals can consider is the sufficiency of the evidence in the statement of facts and the bill of exceptions allowed by the trial court. Rupard v. State, 71 App. 255, 158 S. W. 285.

Matters presented by the accused in his brief, but not complained of in his motion for a new trial, were not reviewable. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 273.

All matters of exception urged on appeal must have been first submitted to the trial court in a motion for new trial. Thompson v. State, 72 App. 6, 169 S. W. 685.

Necessity of previous objection on exception.—See art. 744, and note.

Effect of denial of motion in arrest.—A motion for a new trial may be entertained after a motion in arrest of judgment has been made and overruled. Mathews v. State, 33 Tex. 102. The case of State v. Mann, 13 Tex. 62, holding to the contrary, having ceased to be authority since the adoption of the Code.

Necessity and effect of ruling on motion.—The overruling of a motion for new trial, being unnecessary, presents no question for review further than would be presented by the motion itself. Miller v. State, 72 App. 194, 161 S. W. 128.
Art. 835  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT

A motion for a new trial, in a criminal case, could not be considered on appeal unless it was overruled by the court indicating that it was overruled on the motion docket. Suesberry v. State, 72 App. 439, 162 S. W. 819.

Art. 836. [816] Granted only to a defendant.—A new trial can in no case be granted where the verdict or judgment has been rendered for the defendant. [O. C. 670.]

Proceedings on forfeited bail bond.—Where judgment was rendered for defendant on a forfeited bail bond, it was error to award a new trial to the state. Perry v. State, 54 App. 186; Robertson v. State, Id. 211; Jeter v. State, 86 Tex. 555, 26 S. W. 49, which overrule Gary v. State, 11 App. 527; Holt v. State, 20 App. 271. This provision is applicable in a proceeding on a forfeited bail bond or recognition bond in which the judgment is rendered for the defendant. Robertson v. State, 14 App. 211; Perry v. State, Id. 166. These cases virtually, though not expressly, overrule Gary v. State, 11 App. 527; Drake v. State, 29 App. 266, 15 S. W. 725.

Art. 837. [817] New trial in felony cases granted, for what causes.—New trials, in cases of felony, shall be granted for the following causes, and for no other:

1. Where the defendant has been tried in his absence, or has been denied counsel.

[See arts. 4 and 446, ante. and notes thereunder. See, also, sec. 10, Bill of Rights; Davis v. Texas, 139 U. S. 651, 11 Sup. Ct. 675, 35 L. Ed. 300.]

Appointment of counsel.—See art. 555, ante.

Where no objection was made to the counsel appointed for defendant, such objection could not be raised by motion for new trial. Barton v. State, 34 App. 613, 81 S. W. 671.

Denial of counsel.—See arts. 297, 558, 647, 996, 1020, 1021.

Where the evidence was clearly sufficient to sustain a conviction of a felony, accused was not entitled to a new trial on the ground that he was not represented by an attorney, in the absence of anything to show that he was fraudulently imposed on, preventing the employment of an attorney. Hayden v. State, 61 App. 211, 131 S. W. 763. A defendant’s failure to employ counsel when not prevented by the state or court, is not ground for a new trial, as the statute contemplates that the denial should be by the court or state. Patton v. State, 62 App. 28, 136 S. W. 42.

Triial without counsel.—A conviction would not be reversed, because accused was not represented by counsel at the trial, preventing him, as fairly preventing his defense, where it did not appear that he was prevented from securing counsel by the court or by outside influences, and the character of his defense was not shown by a statement of facts or otherwise. Cobb v. State, 71 App. 397, 160 S. W. 78.

Where an offense was committed some time before court convened, and the case was postponed to allow defendant to arrange for counsel, and where defendant had ample time to secure counsel before it was subsequently called, a refusal to postpone again to allow him to secure counsel, and his trial without counsel, was not reversible error. Allen v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 388.

Absence of counsel.—Counsel for defendant, after filing a motion for a new trial, were imprisoned for contempt by the court, and, on a subsequent day, were brought before the court to argue said motion, while they were still in custody. Held, error, which entitled the defendant to a new trial without regard to the merits of the case. Robertson v. State, 38 Tex. 187; Roe v. State, 25 App. 32, 8 S. W. 462; Washington v. State, 25 App. 357, 8 S. W. 642; Leeper v. State, 29 App. 61, 14 S. W. 308; Estrada v. State, 29 App. 269, 15 S. W. 644; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 265, 15 S. W. 591; Lincecum v. State, 29 App. 325, 15 S. W. 818, 25 Am. St. Rep. 727; Young v. State, 30 App. 298, 17 S. W. 413; Gibbs v. State, 30 App. 581, 18 S. W. 88.

Absence of counsel is no cause for a new trial, when a postponement of the trial on that account was not asked, and the result does not appear to have been affected by it. Houston v. State, 4 App. 207; Williams v. State, 10 App. 572; Walker v. State, 13 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note; Madden v. State, 1 App. 204. See Stockholm v. State, 24 App. 598, 7 S. W. 328.

Abandonment of case.—A judgment of conviction will not be set aside on the ground that accused, as shown by his verification alone in support of his motion for new trial, was taken by surprise, in that his attorneys, who had been employed by his relatives, refused to go into the case at the last moment, and before he had opportunity to employ other counsel, and that he was thereby deprived of witnesses who could establish a defense. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1048.

2. Where the court has misdirected the jury as to the law, or has committed any other material error calculated to injure the rights of the defendant.

1. Reception of report of grand jury.
    2. Denial of change of venue.
    3. Omission of arraignment.
    4. Denial of continuity.
    5. Error in rulings on evidence.
    6. Error as to instructions.

1. Reception of report of grand jury.—The reception of the final report of a grand jury pending a trial, accompanied by a few complimentary remarks by the court, is not a ground for a new trial. Phillips v. State, 6 App. 44.

2. Denial of change of venue.—See arts. 626-611. The denial of facts which demanded of the trial court to change the venue of the cause upon its own motion, and having failed to do so, a new trial should have been granted. Stegeard v. State, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771; Roe v. State, 25 App. 53, 8 S. W. 468; Washington v. State, 25 App. 387, 8 S. W. 942; Leeper v. State, 29 App. 64, 14 S. W. 395.

3. Omission of arraignment.—See arts. 555-567. The court's omission to have accused arraigned before a change of venue is no ground for a new trial. Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86; Good v. State, 57 App. 230, 123 S. W. 597.

4. Denial of continuance.—See art. 608, subd. 6, and notes. See, also, arts. 603, 609, subd. 2, and 636.

5. Error in rulings on evidence.—The admission over the defendant's objection, of illegal evidence of an important fact, material and pertinent to the issue, though but cumulative, is good ground for a new trial, no matter how probable it may be that the jury would have convicted on the legal evidence alone. McWhorter v. State, 1 Tex. Fl., 12; Draper v. State, 4 App. 185; McKnight v. State, 6 App. 158; Tyson v. State, 14 App, 388; Haynie v. State, 2 App. 188; Hester v. State, 15 App. 567; Jackson v. State, 20 App. 190; Saddler v. State, Id. 198; Jones v. State, 7 App. 457; Harper v. State, 11 App. 1; Goss v. State, Id. 266; Long v. State, 15 App. 128; Chumley v. State, 20 App. 547. See, also, Segura v. State, 16 App. 221; McKnight v. State, 6 App. 158; Malcolmson v. State, 25 App. 387, 8 S. W. 468; Ware v. State, 36 App. 607, 38 S. W. 198; Webb v. State, 56 App. 41, 58 S. W. 390.

A defendant cannot complain of illegal evidence elicited by himself or counsel, and the admission of illegal evidence at his instance, or the instance of his counsel, or the admission of illegal evidence without objection made to it at the time will not be good ground for a new trial. Speights v. State, 1 App. 551; Moore v. State, 6 App. 556; McEude v. State, 27 App. 641, 11 S. W. 673, 11 Am. St. Rep. 216.

Where no objection was reserved at the trial to the fact that a witness was not sworn, it was too late to raise such objection on motion for new trial. Goldsmith v. State, 39 App. 112, 25 S. W. 405.

The rejection of competent and material evidence offered by the defendant, or its exclusion after admission, is good ground for new trial; but if the evidence rejected or excluded be of a character which could not reasonably have influenced the result favorably to the defendant, a new trial should be refused. Jinks v. State, 29 App. 388; Goss v. State, 6 App. 121; Black v. State, 9 App. 358; Arnold v. State, Id. 455; Greta v. State, 10 App. 36; Hinds v. State, 11 App. 228; Baker v. State, Id. 262; Russell v. State, Id. 288; Stone v. State, 12 App. 219; Logan v. State, 17 App. 26; Duke v. State, 10 App. 14; Phillips v. State, Id. 158; Boyd v. State, Id. 448; Lilly v. State, 29 App. 1; Favors v. State, Id. 156; Hovley v. State, Id. 455; Boote v. State, 4 App. 202; Boon v. State, 42 Tex. 237; Self v. State, 23 App. 398, 13 S. W. 602. On harmless error, see Stayton v. State, 32 App. 33, 23 S. W. 38; White v. State, 32 App. 926, 35 S. W. 784; Hamblin v. State, 34 App. 368, 30 S. W. 1076.

Aliibi is available not alone upon the main issue in the case, but upon any criminating fact relied upon by the state. Having excluded competent evidence on question of alibi, new trial should have been awarded. Taylor v. State, 27 App. 46, 11 S. W. 35.

Objections to evidence come too late when first presented by motion for new trial. Wright v. State, 63 App. 644, 141 S. W. 238.

6. Error as to instructions.—Where a charge, though erroneous, is favorable to the defendant, or where it has been given at the request of the defendant, he cannot be heard to complain of it, and the error does not constitute good ground for a new trial, ordinarily. Cocker v. State, 31 Tex. 428; Collins v. State, 5 App. 35; Powell v. State, Id. 244; Templeton v. State, Id. 398; Pierce v. State, 17 App. 230; 52 Am. Rep. 397; Thomas v. State, 30 App. 300.

If a charge be applicable to the case, and in other respects sufficient, it is not a ground for a new trial that the same charge had been used on the trial of another case. Austin v. State, 42 Tex. 356.

That the charge read to the jury bore the style and file mark of another crim. 773 nal cause did not raise any presumption that it had been used on the trial of another party, or constitute ground for new trial. Austin v. State, 42 Tex. 355, cited in Lowe v. State, 11 App. 253.

That the charge of the court was filed nunc pro tunc is not a ground for a new trial. Nettles v. State, 4 App. 257.

Newly discovered evidence of threats not communicated, held not ground for new trial. Williams v. State, 7 App. 163.

Newly discovered evidence of improper relations, without proof that they came to defendant's knowledge, held not ground for new trial. Williams v. State, 7 App. 182.

A motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence should state that such evidence was unknown to defendant, not merely unknown to his counsel. Williams v. State, 7 App. 163.

When the court in its charge has misdirected the jury as to the law of the case, a new trial should be granted. And when the court, with respect to its charge, has violated any of the provisions of the statute relating to charges of the court, and the error is excepted to at the time by the defendant, a new trial should be granted. When the error is not excepted to, but is for the first time called to the attention of the court in the motion for a new trial, it will not be error for which the judgment will be reversed on appeal, to refuse a new trial upon such ground, unless the error in the charge is of a fundamental nature, or was calculated to prejudice the rights of the defendant, in which case a new trial should be granted. Ante, art. 744; Washington v. State, 25 App. 387, 8 S. W. 612.

Newly discovered evidence of uncommunicated threats made by deceased, held not ground for new trial. Pitts v. State, 28 App. 374, 16 S. W. 189.

A conviction will not be reversed because of an erroneous charge which is harmful to defendant. Green v. State, 33 App. 298, 22 S. W. 1094, overruling Surrell's Case, 29 App. 321, 15 S. W. 816; White's Case, 28 App. 71, 13 S. W. 496; Jenkins' Case, 28 App. 86, 12 S. W. 411, and Habel's Case, 28 App. 688, 13 S. W. 419. See art. 737, and notes. See, also, Nettles v. State, 4 App. 377; Roe v. State, 25 App. 33, 8 S. W. 463; Wolfforth v. State, 31 App. 357, 29 S. W. 741.

Receiving, by the jury, of additional evidence other than that introduced on the trial, if it injuriously affects, or could injuriously affect, accused's rights, is ground for reversal. Bailey v. State, 68 App. 1, 121 S. W. 1120, 125 S. W. 576.

7. — Misconstruction of charge by jury.—A juror will not be permitted to impeach his verdict by testifying that he misunderstood the charge of the court. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1065; McCulloch v. State, 35 App. 268, 33 S. W. 239; Davis v. State, 43 Tex. 189.

Misconstruction of a charge by the jury is not a ground for a new trial. Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 758; Davis v. State, 43 Tex. 189; Rockhold v. State, 16 App. 577.

8. — Harmless error in general.—See art. 745, and notes.

9. Misconduct of court.—It is not cause for reversal, as prejudicing the rights of the defendant, that on the first trial the court required the counsel for the defendant to testify, and forthwith caused his arrest for perjury, of which charge the counsel was subsequently acquitted, the record failing to show that the evidence sought by the state was of a confidential nature, or was otherwise improper. Johnson v. State, 31 App. 480, 28 S. W. 955.

There being a presumption against the purity of the verdict, where the jury has been exposed to an improper influence, defendant, tried for violation of the local option law, is sufficiently shown to have been injured by the adjournment after the delivery of the charge, and the presence of the jury, of a campaign speech of an hour and a half in favor of prohibition, to require the conviction to be set aside, there being no showing that the jury were not impressed unfavorably to defendant. Rigsby v. State, 64 App. 594, 142 S. W. 561, 58 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116.

Where a trial had been proceeding for several days, and the record showed a course of delay by defendant's counsel from the beginning, it was not reversible error for the court, in view of the number of cases on the docket, to refuse defendant's counsel time to consult with his client before putting him on the stand, and to fine counsel for delay when he refused to proceed with the case as ordered. Creech v. State, 70 App. 239, 158 S. W. 277.

That the judge during the trial vacated the bench, walked down to the state's attorneys, and talked with them in the presence of the jury, but not in their hearing, was not error. Gorrell v. State, 73 App. 322, 164 S. W. 1012.

The act of the court in permitting prosecutrix, on a trial for rape, to remain in the presence of the jury during the argument of the prosecuting attorney was not prejudicial, though prosecutrix cried during the argument, but not loud enough to interrupt the orderly proceedings of the court. Burge v. State, 73 App. 565, 167 S. W. 63.

10. Deprivation of statement of facts.—See note under art. 844. One convicted of an offense is entitled to a new trial, where he has been deprived of a statement of facts through no fault or neglect of his own. Barr v. State, 62 App. 58, 138 S. W. 464.

11. Inconsistent findings.—Any inconsistency of an implied finding in fining, at the trial, an absent witness, and finding on testimony of defendant's counsel, on a new trial, that the person summoned was not such witness, cannot be complained of by defendant. Swilley v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 734.
3. Where the verdict has been decided by lot, or in any other manner than by a fair expression of opinion by the jurors.

Verdict decided by lot.—Where the jury, after having found the defendant guilty, arrive at the punishment to be assessed, by averaging the several assessments of the jurors, that assess the punishment and dividing the sum assessed by each juror and dividing the aggregate by the number of the jurors, and agreeing that the result of such calculation shall be the verdict of the jury absolutely, such verdict, or the punishment to be assessed, may be set aside and a new trial granted to the defendant.

But where a verdict is arrived at in such manner, there being no agreement among the jurors to be bound by the result, and such result is agreed to by the jury after it has been thus ascertained, the verdict is not vitiated by the mode adopted to arrive at the punishment to be assessed. That is, if it appear that such a verdict, in the opinion of the jurors, is a true representation of their sentiment, and that such a verdict, consisting of the vote of the jurors entered into before ascertaining the punishment in such manner, to be bound by the result. Leverett v. State, 5 App. 213; Hunter v. State, 8 App. 197; Witty v. State, 3 App. 619, 35 Am. Rep. 745; Wood v. State, 12 App. 315, 44 Am. Rep. 701; Ulrich v. State, 9 App. 61, 16 S. W. 763; Pruitt v. State, 10 App. 155, 16 S. W. 776; White v. State, 11 App. 651, 40 S. W. 785; McAulay v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 833; Dawson v. State, 72 App. 65, 161 S. W. 499.

A verdict should be the result of reason, deliberation, and honest conviction, and not the offering of chance or accident. If a juror, therefore, should so far forget a sense of duty and the obligations of their oath as to determine their verdict by the right and duty of the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. Leverett v. State, 3 App. 213.

The complaint against the verdict is that the term of punishment was reached by "lot." The term appears to be greater than the quotient reached by the calculation; the vice is in averaging the verdict reached by such ballots. Barton v. State, 34 App. 613, 31 S. W. 671.

A new trial will not be granted because the jury in fixing the term of imprisonment agreed that each juror should write his verdict in a book of poetry, and that the sum total divided by twelve should be the term. Barton v. State, 34 App. 613, 31 S. W. 671.

The jurors each placed on a piece of paper the number of years he thought the defendant should be imprisoned, the two next to the right and duty of the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.driver v. State, 37 App. 100, 38 S. W. 1020.

When the jury arrives at their verdict by lot, the burden is upon the state to show that the jury did not agree to be bound by the verdict arrived at in that manner and the verdict not aban- doned, a new trial should have been granted. -Id. See also White v. State, 37 App. 651, 49 S. W. 789.

Eleven jurors favored assessing punishment of accused at two years in the penitentiary, while the twelfth favored three years. After discussing the matter, the twelfth juror proposed that, if the eleven would come to two years and one month, he would agree to that, to which they all agreed. Held, that such agreement was a removal of their differences, and did not result from a new, unobjectionable, as having been arrived at by lot or chance. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 486.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence held to require a finding that the jury, though having arrived at the term of punishment by the quotient method, had not agreed to be bound thereby, and hence that the verdict was not void for that reason. Lamb v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1158.

On finding the defendant guilty of any degree of murder it is improper for the jury, in fixing the penalty, to decide the same by lot. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 229.

A verdict improperly influencing assent to verdict.—That two of the jurors agreed to the verdict upon the agreement that the jury would sign a petition for the pardon of the defendant, is not such conduct as will authorize a new trial. Montgomery v. State, 3 App. 74.

It is no ground for new trial that one of the jurors made an affidavit that the reason he agreed to convict defendant, he feared he would otherwise incur the displeasure of the other jurors. Pilot v. State, 35 App. 515, 48 S. W. 112, 1024.

The fact that a conviction was brought about by the argument of jurors that acceded to conviction would have an opportunity to a new trial, both before the trial court and on appeal, was not misconduct requiring a new trial, where the reference to the possibility of a new trial by the jurors was only of the most general nature. Richards v. State, 59 App. 208, 127 S. W. 833.

It was of a juror that, after the jury had been out from Thursday evening till Saturday afternoon, the jury were informed that the presiding judge was going home, and would not return till the following Tuesday, and would leave instructions that he would not return, unless he was discharged till at a verdict, whereupon the affiant gave his consent to the verdict, was not sufficient to authorize a new trial. Bacon v. State, 61 App. 206, 134 S. W. 690.

An affidavit of a juror that he would likely have voted to acquit the defendant, had he been told that the other jurors could try for a new trial, and then have the right of appeal, which he thought would eventually amount to an acquittal, is no ground for a new trial. Vaughn v. State, 62 App. 24, 136 S. W. 476.

An affidavit of a juror that he would not have agreed to a verdict of guilty unless the other jurors had agreed to sign a recommendation for defendant's pardon was insufficient to authorize or require a new trial. Rogers v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 46.

Where the sole defense is insanity, and an agreement on a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree is procured as a result of the argument of certain jurors that there is a lunacy commission at the penitentiary, and that this commission is better able to pass upon defendant's insanity than the doctors who testified thereon, and that if defendant is insane he will not be placed in the penitentiary, the case will be reversed. White v. State, 72 App. 185, 161 S. W. 977.

A juror may not impeach the verdict, after it has been accepted by the court and the jury discharged, by proving that he yielded his judgment in an effort to agree with the other jurors. Chant v. State, 73 App. 345, 166 S. W. 513.

Insufficient consideration.—A juror may not impeach a verdict of guilty by declarations after the discharge of the jury that, if he had had more time, he would not have consented to a conviction. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1017.

Verification of application for new trial.—Though this article does not expressly authorize attacking a verdict by matter extraneous to the judgment or conviction, such matter as provided in article 26, providing that whenever the Code fails to provide a rule of procedure the rules of the common law shall govern, it is necessary to the consideration of a ground of motion attacking the verdict on the ground that it was a verdict of corruption or gross negligence, that the matter be supported by affidavit. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

4. Where a juror has received a bribe to convict, or has been guilty of any other corrupt conduct.

Bias or prejudice of jurors.—See art. 692 (5-13), and notes thereunder.

When the bias or prejudice of the juror is shown by the acts of the jury to be impeachable, he cannot make objection to him in a motion for a new trial. Givens v. State, 6 Tex. 343; McGee v. Sloan, 9 Tex. 29. But a defendant is not precluded from making such objection a ground for a new trial if he did not examine the juror upon his voir dire as to his bias or prejudice, unless gross negligence on his part is shown. Hankins v. State, 21 Tex. 526.

Where a juror, before he was impaneled, said to the alleged injured party: "I will do all I can for you," it was held that a new trial should have been granted the defendant, it being shown that the prejudice of the juror was unknown to him until after the trial. Hankins v. State, 21 Tex. 526. But see And v. State, 36 App. 76, 35 S. W. 671, as to opportunity objection.

The fact that a juror is not indicative of a sentiment of a juror, nor as to the merits of a particular cause, or a mere juror remark that "he thought the defendant ought to have been hung twenty years ago" will not entitle the defendant to a new trial. Monroe v. State, 28 Tex. 210, 76 Am. Dec. 55; Hankins v. State, 21 Tex. 526; And v. State, 35 App. 289. And, where the juror said, "I think the judge ought to remove the shoes of the defendant for ever so much," or that "he was going to the penitentiary anyway," it was held that these remarks did not show prejudice of the juror. Nash v. State, 2 App. 362. But, where the juror said before the trial that defendant had killed a poor innocent soldier, and that he ought to have his neck broke, it was held, that in the absence of any explanation by the juror or other evidence, showing the absence of prejudice to the defendant on the part of the juror, a new trial should have been granted the defendant. Hensley v. State, 41 Tex. 572.

Where it appeared that a juror was so prejudiced against the defendant that he could not have a fair and impartial trial, a new trial should have been granted. Washburn v. State, 31 App. 552, 20 S. W. 715.

A new trial sought because of a previously expressed opinion of a juror held prejudicial not the foreman and other jurors that the defendant could try for a new trial was held not from the foreman and other jurors that the defendant could not have a fair and impartial trial, a new trial should have been granted. Washburn v. State, 31 App. 552, 20 S. W. 715, distinguished.) Shaw v. State, 32 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588.

When a juror qualified himself on his voir dire and it was afterward shown that at the time he was impaneled he had a fixed opinion as to defendant's guilt a new trial should have been granted. McWilliams v. State, 35 App. 129, 20 S. W. 752.

A verdict will not be set aside for prejudice of a juror summoned on a special vent, and shown to be an honorable man, unacquainted with either defendant or deceased, the facts of the case, on evidence that he said to another venire man that he lived so far away that he hoped to be called on some case so as to pay expenses, and that defendant "ought to have his d——neck broke," he testifying that he said "they would keep hauling him on the jury until he would get A motion for a new trial, based on an allegation, supported by affidavit, that a certain juror had expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, is properly denied. Where the affidavit makes a subsequent affidavit stating that the juror did not express any such opinion, and the juror himself denies the expression of such opinion, and states that he had not formed any, and knew nothing of the facts before A motion for a new trial was granted that a corrupt juror had qualified on his voir dire, that such juror had stated that if he got on the jury he would give defendant what belonged to him. The juror testified that he was unbiased and only meant he would give defendant a fair trial; held, new trial properly refused.
Driver v. State, 27 S. W. 419, 38 S. W. 1096.
That the foreman of the jury was prejudiced against accused, being related to accused's enemy, should have been brought out before the juror was accepted, and was not ground for a new trial. Woodland v. State, 57 App. 532, 123 S. W. 645.
It is no ground for a new trial that before the trial the juror had expressed the belief that his opinion as to defendant's guilt disqualified him, where there is no showing that he was examined on his voir dire touching the matter. Speer v.
State, 57 App. 297, 132 S. W. 415.
That a juror said, when leaving for the courthouse, that he would be back soon, and that he knew too much about this thing to be taken on the jury, did not indicate prejudice one way or another, and there was no error in refusing a new trial Where two jurors had expressed opinions as to the guilt of accused, and one of them had heard the testimony on a former trial, and both testified on their voir dire that they had not formed nor expressed an opinion, and did not hear any thing about the case, and accused and his attorney were ignorant of the facts until after trial, a new trial must be granted. Robbins v. State, 70 App. 52, 155 S. W. 936.
See, also, Kugant v. State, 38 App. 681, 44 S. W. 989; Self v. State, 39 App. 455,
5. Where any material witness of the defendant has, by force, threats or fraud, been prevented from attending the court, or where any written evidence, tending to establish the innocence of the de-defendant, has been intentionally destroyed or removed so that it could not be produced upon the trial.
Deprivation of testimony.—Where a material witness is incapacitated to testify by being insane, struck or by being intoxicated, a new trial should not be granted unless, when discovered, the party desiring to use the witness, informs the court the condition of the witness so that the court may have an examination made A motion for a new trial based on the ground that defendant was deprived of the testimony of a witness for whom process had been issued and who had not appeared, held properly overruled where he had proceeded to trial without objection. Carrel v. State, 52 App. 91, 22 S. W. 147.
Pending a prosecution for robbery, the sheriff told accused's counsel that a certain person was being held in custody as being an escaped convict, for which rea-on he was not summoned as a witness. Later it was discovered that such person was not convicted, and he was released on habeas corpus after accused was convicted. Held, that accused could not obtain a new trial under the statute providing that such may be granted where accused was prevented from securing material testimony by reason of artifice or fraud, in the absence of any showing of bad faith on the part of the sheriff. Jackson v. State, 69 App. 275, 131 S. W. 1076.
6. Where new testimony material to the defendant has been discovered since the trial. A motion for a new trial, based on this ground, shall be governed by the same rules as those which regulate civil suits.

1. In general.
2. Discretion of trial court.
3. Time of discovery.
5. Possibility of exculpating evidence.
6. Nature and purpose of evidence in general.
7. Relevance, materiality, and competency.
9. Impeachment of witness.
10. Conflicting or contradicted evidence.
11. Credibility and probable effect.
13. Requisites of application.

1. In general.—It is incumbent on the defendant, who asks a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, to satisfy the court: 1. That the evidence has come to his knowledge since the trial. 2. That It was not owing to a wanton of diligence on his part that it was not discovered sooner. 3. That on another trial it would probably produce a different result, or that it is competent, material to the issue, going to the merits, not merely cumulative, corroborative, collateral, or to impeach a witness. If the application is defective in establishing any of these essentials, a new trial will be refused. Burns v. State, 12 App. 289;
Walden v. State, 19 App. 167; Childs v. State, 1d. 152; Burton v. State, 9 App. 608;
Duval v. State, 8 App. 376; Hutto v. State, 7 App. 44; Williams v. State, 1d. 488;

Alleged newly discovered evidence that the offense was committed within the county not the ground for a new trial; Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 555. See the following cases in which it was held, on appeal, that new trials should have been granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence: Bell v. State, 1 App. 598; Strickland v. State, 13 App. 361; Heshek v. State, 14 App. 686; Bird v. State, 16 App. 543; Burton v. State, 17 App. 115; Moore v. State, 18 App. 374; Montressor v. State, 19 App. 281; Holm v. State, 20 App. 41; McClelland v. State, 24 App. 329, 5 S. W. 664; Roy v. State, 24 App. 395, 6 S. W. 566; Hart v. State, 21 App. 163, 17 S. W. 421; Bullock v. State, 32 App. 42.

When newly discovered evidence is assigned as cause for a new trial, the application is subject to the same rules as govern in civil cases. (For the rules which govern in civil cases, see Vernon’s Saylor’s Civ. St. 1914, p. 1024, art. 2011.) Such an application is to be closely scrutinized, and the action of the trial court refusing it cannot be reversed, unless it be apparent that the trial court could not have been influenced by the evidence, which, if true, would have entitled the defendant to a new trial; and if so, the new trial should have been granted. Burns v. State, 12 App. 269; Bell v. State, 1 App. 598; Templeton v. State, 5 App. 338.

When a trial court entertains a reasonable doubt in regard to the right of the defendant to a new trial, where the ground of the motion is an application for a continuance, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the defendant. Miller v. State, 18 App. 232. But where the ground of the motion is newly discovered evidence, and the trial court has a doubt upon the point of diligence to discover the evidence, or as to its character, materiality, etc., the new trial should be refused. Brown v. State, 2 App. 46.

Evidence held not to be newly discovered where it could have been secured before trial by the use of diligence and could have been obtained from sources other than those stated in the motion. Reagan v. State, 28 App. 227, 12 S. W. 691, 19 Am. St. Rep. 833.

Denial of a new trial held proper where the testimony sought was not newly discovered. Bruce v. State, 21 App. 590, 21 S. W. 651. Evidence which could have been known to counsel for defendant before trial is not newly discovered. Burton v. State, 33 App. 135, 28 S. W. 782.

Motion for new trial to introduce certain evidence; held, properly denied. Childers v. State, 36 App. 125, 35 S. W. 596.

Newly discovered evidence for which a new trial was asked in a murder case, combined with that shown on motion for continuance for an absent witness, the denial of which was also made a ground for asking a new trial, held to show that the new trial was improperly denied. Rhea v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 578.

If the testimony of a state’s witness, given on the preliminary trial, affects his testimony at the trial, defendant, having it in his possession, should then offer it, and not wait to do so on motion for new trial. White v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 36.

As regards a new trial, the testimony of one for whom defendant had issued process, and of which he knew before trial, and of whose absence he knew, when announced ready for trial, was not newly discovered. Howe v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 437.

Testimony of previous good character is not newly discovered, for purpose of new trial. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 971.

2. Discretion of trial court.—The refusal of a motion for a new trial for newly discovered evidence in a felony case will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it appears the trial court abused its discretion. Gray v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 288; Shaw v. State, 27 Tex. 750; Burns v. 778
State, 12 App. 270, and cases cited; Green v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 593; McGough v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 387; Taylor v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 672.

3. Time of discovery.—If the materiality of absent testimony is first disclosed on the trial, the circumstances may be such as to entitle the defendant to a new trial. Dunham v. State, 3 App. 465.

A new trial will not be granted to permit a witness to testify that accused and the complaining witness had adjusted their difficulties, this evidence not being newly discovered, since, if true, accused must have known of it. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 903.

Motion for new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, may not be based on matters which defendant knew, as well before as after trial, that witness knew; but, in case of surprise, defendant should have taken steps for a postponement. Barnett v. State, 73 App. 477, 169 S. W. 581.

Where accused claimed that he was not advised that he was being charged with making an unlawful sale of intoxicants, he is not, upon conviction, entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered testimony, that the new witness with him on the day of the sale from one place to another; for such fact must have been within accused's knowledge. De Lecosa v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 312.

If an application shows upon its face that the evidence is not newly discovered, or if the facts alleged show that it is improbable that the defendant was ignorant of the existence of the evidence, if it in fact existed, a new trial should be denied. It should be made clearly to appear that the defendant was ignorant of the evidence at the time of the trial, and that the newly discovered evidence, if not the result of a want of diligence on his part to discover it. Robinson v. State, 15 Tex. 311; Dansby v. State, 34 Tex. 392; Brown v. State, 16 Tex. 123; Walker v. State, 3 App. 70; Williams v. State, 4 App. 275; Collins v. State, 6 App. 72; Thomas v. State, 2 App. 550; Duval v. State, 8 App. 375; Childs v. State, 19 App. 183; Koons v. State, 41 Tex. 470; Ponce v. State, 43 Tex. 454; Davidson v. State, 22 Tex. 247; Wheeler v. State, 15 App. 607; Makinson v. State, 16 App. 133; McVe v. State, 23 App. 659, 5 S. W. 174; Smith v. State, 22 App. 350, 3 S. W. 238; Gross v. State, 4 App. 249; Blount v. State, 34 App. 646, 31 S. W. 692; Butts v. State, 35 App. 364, 33 S. W. 866; Esher v. State, 12 App. 607; Evans v. State, 6 App. 513; Price v. State, 36 App. 496, 37 S. W. 743.

New trials will not be granted for newly discovered evidence unless defendant by reasonable diligence could not have discovered the evidence at the former trial. Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 525.

The allegations of the motion should be such as would have sufficed for a continuance. They should disclose the source of defendant's information, as to the newly discovered evidence, and his belief in the truth of such information, and show that there has been no lack of diligence on his part with respect to discovering and obtaining the evidence in time for the trial. It is not sufficient merely to show diligence, but it must be shown to the trial that the evidence was known before the trial and was not discovered because of any want of diligence. Confinement of the defendant in jail is not good excuse for the want of such diligence must be shown. Confinement of the defendant in jail is not good excuse for the want of diligence in the absence of a showing that he had no one outside to assist him in using the necessary diligence.

Where the defendant prevented his counsel from interposing the defense of insanity on the trial on the ground that evidence was elicited therein tending to prove that defense, and a motion for new trial exhibited material and newly discovered evidence of the same character, it was held that a new trial should have been granted, notwithstanding no diligence had been used to obtain the newly discovered evidence. Schuessler v. State, 12 App. 472.

A new trial sought for newly discovered evidence tending to reduce the grade of the offense, held properly denied where it appeared that there was a total want of diligence and the motion admitted defendant's guilt. Timatis v. State, 31 App. 587, 31 S.W. 392.

A new trial sought for newly discovered evidence was properly denied where the proposed evidence had been subpoenaed but not put on the stand. Powell v. State, 56 App. 377, 37 S.W. 722.

A motion held not to disclose diligence where it merely alleged that the facts were not known to defendant and could not have been discovered by ordinary diligence. Wilson v. State, 57 App. 556, 38 S.W. 1053.

When no request or motion for continuance has been made for evidence of defendant's good character, a motion for new trial to allow defendant to introduce such testimony will be overruled. Robinson v. State, 35 App. 131, 32 S.W. 900.

A new trial for unlawfully carrying weapons will not be granted because defendant after the trial first discovered that he was on his own land when he carried the weapon. Owens v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S.W. 614.

Facts which defendant could have known before trial are no ground for a new trial. Wheeler v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S.W. 942.

Testimony as to the character of a prosecution witness for chastity was such that it could have been discovered by due diligence. Woodland v. State, 57 App. 352, 123 S.W. 141.

On a trial for robbery, a new trial for alleged newly discovered evidence that the night on which the robbery occurred was dark, even, properly denied. It appearing that the time of the robbery, the location of the lights, and the state of the weather were matters known to most witnesses, and that information concerning such matters could have been obtained from a large number of persons on the slightest inquiry. O'Hara v. State, 57 App. 577, 121 S.W. 35.

On a prosecution for carrying a pistol, the evidence showed that defendant carried the pistol to a certain place in company with T., and on a motion for a new trial, based on the testimony of T., claimed to have been newly discovered, defendant alleged that T. was not on good terms with him. Held, that the motion was properly denied for lack of diligence. Nicholas v. State, 58 App. 243, 125 S.W. 39.

Where a person was not called as a witness, because defendant erroneously supposed him to be disqualified by being under a charge for a similar offense, his testimony after acquittal cannot be considered as newly discovered. Coleman v. State, 58 App. 451, 126 S.W. 573.

Where defendant must have known that a witness who is to furnish the alleged newly discovered evidence was present at the alleged unlawful sale of liquor, and the indictment was pending nearly a year before the trial, without any effort by defendant to ascertain what knowledge of the transaction the witness had and to procure his evidence, a new trial was properly denied. Cooper v. State, 53 App. 585, 126 S.W. 862.

In a prosecution for cattle theft, alleged newly discovered evidence relating to weather conditions during the period of the alleged theft, and expert testimony as to a freshness which identification was supposed to set up in which such prior identification was not established, was improperly allowed. Where a defendant had been properly convicted for new trial, in the absence of proof that the testimony could not have been procured by the use of due diligence before or during the trial. LaFlour v. State, 59 App. 645, 129 S.W. 551.

Where accused knew of the existence of a part of the testimony of a witness, but did not summon the witness because he believed that his testimony would not be favorable to him, accused was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of favorable testimony of the witness. Hughes v. State, 60 App. 214, 131 S.W. 599.

Accused is not entitled to a new trial for newly discovered testimony of witnesses who were with him the night of the difficulty, where slight diligence would have discovered the importance of their testimony. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 140, 134 S.W. 248.

Where defendant was convicted of violating the local option law, he is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence of a witness who had moved to another town, where he did not show any attempt to have him present on the trial, or issue process for him. Lee v. State, 61 App. 607, 135 S.W. 1174.

When defendant was convicted of violating the local option law, and there was no attempt to produce a certain person as a witness on the trial, although defendant knew of his presence when the liquor was sold, he is not entitled to a new trial. Lee v. State, 61 App. 607, 135 S.W. 1174.

In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, it was not error to refuse a new trial for newly discovered evidence, where the witnesses who were present at the search of the premises for liquor at which time it was stated that another person than defendant claimed he owned the liquor, where defendant was also present, and he failed to show that he did not know what this testimony would be, and no diligence was shown in procuring the testimony. Sullivan v. State, 61 App. 557, 136 S.W. 456.
An accused who has been negligent in failing to procure evidence should not be granted a new trial for evidence discovered after conviction which might probably change the result. Johnson v. State, 62 App. 254, 136 S. W. 1058.

Defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence of two witnesses was properly overruled where defendant's attorney had talked to these witnesses before the trial, and had caused them to sign affidavits which he allowed to be sworn as witnesses, and had placed one of them on the stand. Drake v. State, 62 App. 120, 136 S. W. 1064.

A new trial, asked on account of newly discovered evidence, is properly denied accused, where he had six months in which to procure his witnesses and by using diligence could have discovered the evidence before the trial. Wilson v. State, 63 App. 81, 138 S. W. 408.

Where defendant's attorney, in support of a motion for a new trial, alleged that he had failed to get a certified copy of the conviction of a witness against accused from a foreign state, required to prove his incompetency, because he had been informed by defendant's former attorney, who was unable to defend him because he had been appointed county attorney of such county, that, pursuant to a conversation between such former attorney and the judge, the state would raise no question that the witness was not an unpardoned federal convict, and it appeared that at the time the witness was permitted to testify, over objection, all parties knew that he was an unpardoned convict, defendant was entitled to a new trial, though defendant's attorney misunderstood the effect of the conversation between defendant's former attorney and the court. Carden v. State, 62 App. 545, 138 S. W. 585.

A new trial should not be awarded on the ground of newly discovered evidence, unless diligence is shown. Franklin v. State, 63 App. 435, 140 S. W. 1091.

Where the court, when the case was set for trial, offered to appoint counsel for accused, but the court held that he would try his own case, and he appealed his trial of evidence establishing an alibi, relied on as a ground for new trial, but he made no effort to procure the evidence, and did not represent to the court before or at the time of the trial that there was any testimony he desired to obtain, the court properly denied a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Adams v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 155.

An assault was committed in March, an indictment being returned in May, and trial had in July. The accused requested no postponement or continuance in order to learn the names of parties who witnessed the assault. Held that, having ascertained those names after the trial, he was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence; it appearing that he knew from the time of the alleged assault that other persons saw the affair and exercised no proper diligence to obtain their testimony. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 610.

A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence where the new witness lived in the same neighborhood as accused, and could have been produced on the first trial if due diligence had been exercised. Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 941.

An affidavit, on motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, which, if true, shows that when the offense was committed defendant was at work for the affiant at a certain place and time and could not have been the person who committed the offense, shows no newly discovered evidence, since, if true, it must have been known as well or better to defendant himself. Gotcher v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 574.

Accused applied for a new trial for newly discovered evidence of the fact that prior to the removal of the piano in question he had consulted with his attorney and been informed that he might lawfully do. The attorney stated that he had forgotten such fact, and for that reason did not testify on the trial. Accused also showed nothing of the C. Jessup was accused was arrested, and refused to be a witness for him; that he was not subpoenaed, though accused before trial told his attorney about him. Held, that a denial of the application was proper. Height v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 968.

Where a witness has been subpoenaed, attends court, and is placed on the witness stand, such diligence is not used as would authorize a new trial. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 919.

The absence of a witness was not ground for a new trial, where accused, though not tried for four months after his arrest, and though he must have known of the witness' testimony at the time of the arrest, did not apply to have the witness summoned, or move for a continuance. Pech v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 998.

On a motion for a new trial, where there was attached to the motion the affidavit of a person who did not testify on the trial, the court might have considered not only the evidence but the entire record, and, if the record disclosed that accused was guilty of no violation of law, the conviction should not be permitted to stand, even though proper diligence was not used to obtain such person's testimony on the trial. Cockrell v. State, 71 App. 443, 160 S. W. 948, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001.

An application for a new trial for newly discovered evidence was properly denied where there was no showing of diligence to procure the evidence at the trial. Madrid v. State, 71 App. 450, 161 S. W. 35.

Where accused desired to take advantage of the suspended sentence law, a new trial cannot be granted for newly discovered evidence that he was a law-abiding citizen, where there was no attempt to secure the attendance of witnesses to those facts, and no affidavit that this was newly discovered evidence, or that similar evidence could not have been produced at the trial. Walker v. State, 73 App. 99, 164 S. W. 3.

In a prosecution for homicide, the state having denied that deceased had a pistol when he was killed, and having claimed that he then owned only a small automatic, newly discovered evidence that in December, 1912, just prior to the killing, M., in payment of a debt, gave deceased a 35 black Colt's pistol, and that neither of the witnesses testifying to this had ever disclosed their knowledge to anyone. It was sufficient, therefore, that the accused should have been entitled to a new trial; it sufficiently appearing that no reasonable diligence could have discovered their testimony at the time of the trial. Henson v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 99.

At the new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence tending to support his claim of alibi, where some of the evidence must have been within the knowledge of accused, and the other could have been discovered by diligence during the five years preceding trial. McCabe v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 259.

Where accused knew during the three years the case against him was pending that his defense was that decedent had assaulted him with a knife and had cut his suspenders and that he met a third person immediately after the difficulty, a newly discovered evidence of the third person, to the effect that he met accused and saw that his suspenders were cut, was properly denied for want of diligence to procure the testimony at the trial. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 227.

Where, on a trial for selling liquor in local option territory, a state's witness testified to having heard from accused in the presence of two men whose names he did not know, accused could not obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered testimony of two persons claiming to have been present at the time testified to by the state's witness: the two persons being present in the courtroom during the trial, and one of them aiding accused's counsel in selecting the jury. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 979.

An accused, who heard a witness testify to a fact at the preliminary examination held a year and a half before the trial, may not obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence to contradict the witness. Arias v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 349.

There was lack of diligence, depriving defendant of any right to new trial for newly discovered evidence of H. and R. that they did not see defendant at a certain time and place; they having been in attendance at the first trial, and other witnesses having testified that, when with H. and R., at such time and place, they saw defendant. White v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 92.

As regards a new trial for testimony of persons who were at the scene of the homicide, there was lack of diligence in not discovering it for the trial, which was three months after the killing; defendant's father and younger brothers, interested in his case, living in the neighborhood. Howie v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 497.

5. Possibility of obtaining evidence.—If, on the trial, the defendant's witnesses testify differently from what he had expected, he must show, by his motion for a new trial, that the desired testimony is accessible from other sources. Mayfield v. State, Jordan v. State, 10 Tex. 475.

6. Nature and purpose of evidence in general.—It is not a ground for new trial that since the trial it has been discovered that the place of the offense was not within the county of conviction. Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 525.

Where a state's witness recanted what she had testified against the defendant, and it was shown that she was unreliable by the affidavit of her mother, it was held that this was newly discovered evidence for which a new trial should have been granted. Mann v. State, 44 Tex. 618. But where the defendant's guilt is sufficiently established by other testimony than that of a recanting witness, it seems that a new trial should not, for such cause, be granted. Young v. State, 7 App. 461. See, also, in this connection, Brown v. State, 13 App. 59, where it was held that a new trial should have been granted on account of an explanation made by the witness of his testimony given on the trial.

 Newly discovered evidence may entitle a defendant to a new trial, although it may merely tend to show that he has been convicted of a higher grade of offense than the one he actually committed. Moore v. State, 18 App. 213.

A new trial will not be granted to allow defendant to prove statements made by him which he did not remember while on the stand. Shell v. State, 32 App. 512, 24 S. W. 466.

New trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence sought to be used in rebuttal. Franklin v. State, 34 App. 203, 29 S. W. 1088.

For a case where it is held that a new trial should have been granted for testimony in rebuttal of an absent witness not found before the trial, see Owens v. State, 35 App. 345, 33 S. W. 375.

Testimonial of a witness who had testified at the trial cannot be considered as newly discovered evidence. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 271.

When defendant was convicted on circumstantial evidence, he should have been granted a new trial for the testimony of an absent witness by whom he expected to prove an alibi. Curtis v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 265.

Where, on a trial for aggravated assault, the evidence was conflicting on the issue whether accused swore at and threatened prosecutrix, and ran after her with an ax, a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence disclosing the fact that a third person had told prosecutrix that she must swear that accused took up an ax and attempted to strike her, should be granted, because the newly discovered evidence showed a conspiracy of the third person and prosecutrix to bring about a conviction on perjured testimony. Piper v. State, 57 App. 605, 124 S. W. 661.

In a statutory rape case, an affidavit by a witness that another witness would testify that prosecutrix was over the age of consent affords no ground for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, where the second witness was not produced when the motion for new trial was heard, nor her affidavit attached to the record; the mere hearsay affidavit of the first witness not bringing it within the rule of newly discovered evidence. Vaughn v. State (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 476.

The evidence of the mother and father of the accused, who lived in the town where he was on trial, and with whom he made his home, was not newly discovered evidence. Dillard v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 590.

That a witness who at the trial, in which the question of its being light or dark at the time of the homicide was fully gone into, testified that it was dark, and in effect that a person could not be seen any distance, would testify that it was not true that the witness could not have seen what she testified to have seen, is not newly discovered testimony, as regards right to a new trial. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 597.

A conviction for a violation of the local option law cannot be set aside because of a discrepancy between the testimony of the prosecuting witness upon the final trial and that given in the examining trial, where this testimony was not introduced to discredit the prosecuting witness, although accused and his counsel were aware of the same, as it cannot be considered as newly discovered evidence. Dobson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 546.

Where accused, charged with violating the local option law, did not know that prosecutor would testify that he purchased whisky from accused, and secured a bottle of whisky, who was present, and when prosecutor so testified accused could not obtain the attendance of the third person, who, if present, would testify that the prosecutor never obtained a bottle from him, and that the third person was never present when accused sold any whisky, accused was entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Ferguson v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 239.

Where a witness for the state was subsequently also put on the stand and testified for the defense, matters about which he was not then examined are not newly discovered evidence warranting a new trial. Black v. State, 71 App. 624, 146 S. W. 720.

The overruling of a motion for a new trial, presenting affidavits of two witnesses that they heard a conversation in which the prosecuting witness authorized defendant to shoot the animal, was not error. He was by the court's statement that it was not filed until 30 days after trial, was contradictory of defendant's own testimony, and was not newly discovered evidence, in that defendant knew or could have known of their testimony, was not error. Smith v. State, 73 App. 129, 164 S. W. 825.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to murder, in which defendant relied on self-defense, the evidence was conflicting as to the making of threats against accused by the prosecuting witnesses, a new trial should have been granted because of the absence, due to illness, of a witness, whose affidavit was attached to the motion therefor, showing that she would have given material evidence on this point, and whose attendance defendant used due diligence to procure. Cooley v. State, 73 App. 325, 165 S. W. 192.

Additional evidence of a witness who was present at the trial, and whom defendant knew was with deceased shortly before the killing, could not be regarded as newly discovered, so as to form the basis of an application for a new trial. Henson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 89.

The testimony of a witness that accused was with her the night a burglary was committed was not such newly discovered testimony as entitled accused to a new trial, as accused was as well aware of this fact, if true, as the witness. Guyton v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1063.

Where the materiality of the alleged newly discovered evidence of threats was not shown, inasmuch as the threats were not shown to have been communicated to defendant, a new trial was properly denied. Williams v. State, 7 App. 163.

Affidavit of the assaulted party, that defendant cut her by accident, held not to require a new trial where the testimony of other witnesses authorized the conviction. Young v. State, 7 App. 461.

Newly discovered evidence which did not tend to justify or mitigate the homicide, held not ground for new trial. Escareno v. State, 16 App. 85.

Newly discovered evidence, which was inadmissible because hearsay, held not ground for new trial. Dillard v. State, 31 App. 67, 19 S. W. 885.

A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence of uncommunicated threats. Pitts v. State, 29 App. 374, 16 S. W. 192.

Where the evidence tended strongly to show that the main prosecuting witness was an accomplice, a new trial should have been granted. Dawson v. State, 32 App. 545, 35 S. W. 21, 40 Am. St. Rep. 791.

A new trial will not be granted when the newly discovered evidence appears to be immaterial. Magruder v. State, 35 App. 214, 33 S. W. 233. See, also, Sargent v. State, 35 App. 325, 33 S. W. 384.

On trial for rape, a witness testified that he and one T. saw defendant and prostitute in the act of copulation. The whereabouts of T. was unknown to both parties, and defendant was in no way put on notice of such testimony. Defendant afterwards moved for a new trial, which motion was supported by affidavit of said T. denying that he had ever seen such parties engaged in an act of carnal intercourse; held, a new trial should have been granted. Owens v. State, 35 App. 348, 33 S. W. 875.

To support a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence it must be shown that it is material, and on another trial would probably produce a result more favorable to defendant. Beicher v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 429.
ART. 837  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT  (Title 9)

A new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be granted when such evidence is merely hearsay. Turner v. State, 37 App. 451, 36 S. W. 87.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, where the evidence showed that accused, in his presence on a street, told him that they wanted to get some whisky, and accused said, "All right," and told them to be at a certain place in half an hour, where they received the whisky from accused, and paid him for it, and not until he had bought the liquor did he deliver the intoxicating liquor for those to whom he delivered it, newly discovered evidence of a person who claimed that he was present when accused received the whisky from the third person, saw him pay for it, and heard him say that the whisky was for friends of his, and knew accused deliver the whisky to others who received it, relating wholly to the transaction between accused and the third person, was not ground for a new trial. Ross v. State, 57 App. 372, 123 S. W. 419.

Where the principal witness testified that he and defendant committed a burglary before 12 o'clock, evidence by another that the witness was drinking with him between 12 and 1 o'clock was wholly immaterial, and a new trial cannot be granted because of this newly discovered evidence. Pitts v. State, 60 App. 524, 132 S. W. 591.

In a prosecution for burglary, where all the evidence showed that the crime was committed between 10 and 2, newly discovered evidence that another person had seen the witness and a large negro on the railroad track about 12 o'clock, and that they acted suspiciously, etc., was irrelevant, and therefore insufficient to secure a new trial, on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Pitts v. State, 60 App. 524, 132 S. W. 591.

Newly discovered evidence as to age and birthplace of accused held not ground for a new trial, Johnson v. State, 53 App. 140, 44 S. W. 1093.

Where, accused, killing an officer attempting to execute a writ of sequestration and discharge him, justified his conduct on the ground that the judge raised the flag and his assistant came to accused's premises, that he did not know who they were; that defendant, as accused was fired, fired shots, in the belief that, after going to the barn, accused and his assistant followed accused, who thought that his life was in danger, and killed accused just as accused was about to be discovered—the fact that defendant and his assistant had on the evening of killing shot at a target was not a defense, and newly discovered evidence of that fact was not ground for new trial. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 203, 141 S. W. 598.

Where the prosecuting witness, on the morning after the offense, positively identified accused as the person committing the offense, a new trial on the ground of newly discovered witnesses, who would testify that they met a man on the night, of the commission of the offense who admitted he was guilty of the offense, without identifying the prosecuting witness as the person on whom the offense was committed, and without describing the man in such a way as to suggest that the prosecuting witness was mistaken in identifying accused, was properly denied. Adams v. State, 64 App. 501, 142 S. W. 918.

One accused of homicide and his wife lived with another family consisting of deceased and his son and others, and the homicide was committed by placing arsenic in coffee, the drinking of which resulted in the death of deceased. Held, that newly discovered evidence that accused's wife had been seen alone with deceased's son, and that she had gone after the son in a buggy when he was working on the ground that the wife was not showing in appearing to take the life of the son or his father, and so was not ground for a new trial. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

Where for prosecution for homicide where accused had developed testimony that a calf was mortgaged, newly discovered evidence that his wife had sold a yearling is immaterial and does not entitle accused to a new trial. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

A new trial for homicide should be granted, where it appears that a witness will testify that he killed deceased in self-defense, that accused was not present and had nothing to do with the killing, and it also appears that such witness could not testify on the first trial, because he was then under indictment, but that he has since been tried and acquitted, Sylvas v. State (Cr. App.) 130 S. W. 906.

A new trial for theft from the person would not be granted for newly discovered evidence consisting of the testimony of a witness that he and accused left a moving picture show together on the evening of the crime, where it appeared that they had separated before the occurrence of the offense. Johnson v. State, 70 App. 347, 156 S. W. 1181.

Evidence is cumulative, as to which, though newly discovered, new trial will not be granted, where it only multiplies witnesses as to one or more facts sworn to at the trial, or only adds other circumstances of the same general character. Howe v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 497; Garza v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 590.

Defenses at trial were insanity, and the motion for new trial was on the ground of newly discovered evidence showing insanity; the witnesses by whom such evidence was to be proved being accused's father and sister, who, it was clear, had considerable influence. It was the accused's father who said that the accused's brother had epilepsy. The only affidavit filed was by accused's attorney, which stated that the testimony was unknown to his attorneys at trial and not noticed until after the trial. But it was not shown whether accused was claimed to have epilepsy, or whether it was, or that he was not, or that he was not accused of it.

The newly discovered testimony may have been only cumulative, and, in some cases, the Court of Criminal Appeals could not review a denial of the motion. Carbone v. State, 122 S. W. 248.

Where, in a homicide case, there was considerable evidence introduced, pro and con, as to whether there was sufficient timber, weeds, and brush to obscure the body when it was shot, so that accused claimed, alleged newly discovered testimony, relating to the physical condition of the ground and surroundings of the scene of the tragedy, embracing photographic views taken of the place from different angles of view, was merely cumulative, Roberts v. State, 57 App. 199, 122 S. W. 739.

It was not error to refuse one convicted of murder a new trial, asked on the ground of newly discovered evidence that decedent was supposed to be a quarrelsome man and a fugitive from justice, where the motion was supported by accused's affidavit only, where both parties had lived in the same community, and where a witness for accused testified on the trial that decedent had said he was a fugitive. Lancaster v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 290.

In a homicide case, where a person wilfully withheld his knowledge that defendant did not shoot deceased, knowing that the brother of defendant did, and there was no evidence that the brothers acted together, testimony of such person although cumulative of the testimony of defendant's brother at the trial, is ground for a new trial; the rule as to cumulative testimony not applying, where the newly discovered testimony may be of such force that it might show the defendant to be innocent. Spencer v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 858, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 903.

Where, in a prosecution for aggravated assault on a female while sitting in a theater chair by defendant's running his hand between the chairs and over her back, and in the testimony that the space between the chairs where accused was sitting was too small to admit his hand between them, and that he had touched her with his foot only, additional evidence showing that the space was too small to admit the hand was cumulative, and not newly discovered so as to authorize a new trial on that ground. Cuellar v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 228.

Where there have been several trials and continuances, a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered testimony which is only cumulative. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 290.

In a prosecution for homicide, newly discovered evidence, that deceased had hired an auto and chauffeur to search for accused after making threats against his life, is not ground for new trial, where the evidence on the trial clearly showed that accused was informed that deceased was looking for him, as it was cumulative. Quinn v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 783.

In a prosecution for homicide, newly discovered evidence of a witness, who testified at the trial that accused had rented a revolver at a pawnshop, is not ground for new trial, where the defense at the trial cross-examined another witness as to the fact of rental and such witness denied knowledge of it. Quinn v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 782.

A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of the testimony of a witness, merely cumulative to a fact not disputed, is properly denied. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 227.

Where one indicted with defendant for the same robbery, and who was not a competent witness for defendant, was tried and acquitted, so as to make his testimony newly discovered evidence, his testimony on his first trial, which the court attached to the bill of exceptions, placing defendant where the state's evidence showed, the robbery occurred, was cumulative, and not a ground for a new trial. Bruce v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 301.

Where several persons besides members of accused's own family testified in support of his defense of alibi, newly discovered testimony of other witnesses tending to support the defense is cumulative, and affords no ground for new trial. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 590
Where the state's principal witness made an affidavit stating that her testimony was true, and the witness' mother stated that she was unreliable, a new trial should have been granted. Mann v. State, 41 Tex. 642.

An exception to the rule that a new trial will not be awarded for newly discovered evidence to contradict inculpatory testimony is when the newly discovered evidence tends to impeach the credibility of the witness, but does not show that he was mistaken as to a material fact about which he testified at the trial. Estrada v. State, 29 App. 169, 15 S.W. 644.

Defendant applied for a new trial on account of newly discovered evidence to disprove the testimony of a witness whose testimony had been a surprise to the defendant; held, the application should have been granted. Phillips v. State, 35 App. 489, 34 S.W. 272.

Alleged newly discovered evidence that prosecutor's reputation for virtue and charity was bad was unavailable as ground for a new trial, being impeaching in character. Woodland v. State, 57 App. 352, 123 S.W. 141.

A new trial may not be had for newly discovered evidence that the state's main witness to the assault by defendant was not at the place of the difficulty; it being merely collateral to impeach a witness. Haley v. State, 59 App. 528, 128 S.W. 113.

A new trial may not be had on newly discovered evidence that a witness for the state was untruthful and an enemy of defendant, which fact was unknown to defendant and his counsel. Haley v. State, 59 App. 538, 138 S.W. 1133.

A new trial of a charge of seduction will not be granted for newly discovered evidence consisting of the testimony of a witness that, during the time prosecuted claimed to be engaged to marry accused, she told the witness that she did not love him, and so the witness would not marry accused. A trial which simply tends to impeach other witnesses, and does not support the testimony of the moving party. Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S.W. 511.

In a prosecution for homicide committed by means of poison, newly discovered evidence of the state's witnesses had attempted to testify that a horse on which accused had insurance had died of strychnine poison did not entitle accused to a new trial, because tending only to impeach the state's witness. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S.W. 996.

Newly discovered evidence is not ground for a new trial, where its effect is to impeach a witness, as by denying prosecuting witnesses' identification of accused. Tate v. State (Cr. App.) 140 S.W. 169.

Newly discovered evidence, tending merely to impeach a witness, presents no ground for a new trial. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S.W. 1073.

Newly discovered testimony, impeaching the prosecuting witness on an immaterial issue, is not ground for new trial. McHenry v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S.W. 1020.

10. Conflicting or contradicted evidence.—Denial of a new trial held error where the affidavit of the principal witness for the state, stating that he was mistaken in his testimony. Brown v. State, 13 App. 59.

When a charge of seduction will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, consisting of the testimony of a witness that she was present when the child was born eight months after the alleged intercourse, and that it was a fully developed child, where a physician called for the accused had testified on the trial that a woman does frequently deliver her first child in eight months. Stapp v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S.W. 341.

When considered in the light of the testimony adduced on the trial, if the newly discovered evidence is not probably true, and would not be likely to change the result on another trial, a new trial should be refused. Lewis v. State, 15 App. 647; Cole v. State, 16 App. 461; Caldwell v. State, 12 App. 302; Jones v. State, 23 App. 503, 5 S.W. 138; McVey v. State, 23 App. 659, 5 S.W. 174. But when it is doubtful how it would affect the verdict, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the defendant. Lindley v. State, 11 App. 283.

Alleged newly discovered evidence of decedent's wife that whoever shot decedent when he shot, and was not attempting to conceal himself, that she was sitting on the gallery of the house 200 or 300 yards distant, and when she heard the firing looked up and saw the person who shot with a smoking gun in his hand stepping toward the fence toward deceased's dead body, was thought to be unreliable, and would not have probably produced a conviction or a conviction of a lesser offense than manslaughter of which accused was found guilty.
on a new trial, the witness having testified at the examining trial that the gun fire at which she was called, he had to keep her from the field. He saw his mule coming up the cotton rows with the plow, and went near enough to see that her husband was killed when she went for help, without having stated who it was that fired at deceased. Reagan v. State, 57 App. 642, 124 S. W. 685.

In a prosecution for murder, the state put in evidence a written declaration of decedent, a 10 year old boy, who was shot with his father, to the effect: That he saw accused and his son, and told his father that they were going to kill him, but his father said they were not, and, when they had drawn near accused and his son, he ran up and fired on them, and they ran off. The state also put in evidence a statement by decedent's father was wounded, when accused said to his son, "Shoot the little son of a bitch! Don't let him get away!" and accused's son stopped and shot decedent; that as decedent and his father approached accused in the wagon he told his damned head, and stuck up his arse and shot him. After trial accused discovered a written statement made by decedent after the shooting, at a different time, to a justice of the peace, to the same effect as the oral declaration, except that he stated in the writing that accused ordered declarant to set off the wagon, and then ordered his son to shoot him, and that accused's son fired the first shot. The statement was not signed by decedent, but was reduced to writing by the justice from his answers. Held, that the written statement would not have materially aided accused or changed the result of the trial, so that the court was not required to grant a new trial on the ground that the written dying declaration excluded the oral one, and hence that the written declaration was newly discovered evidence, requiring a new trial. Hunter v. State, 59 App. 629, 129 S. W. 135.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, it is no ground for new trial that prosecutrix before the grand jury testified "that the offense was committed while she was asleep, and that she did not know anything about it until it was all over, when she awoke, who told her not to mention it at all, so as that evidence would tend to show that defendant had intercourse with the prosecutrix. Vaughn v. State, 62 App. 24, 136 S. W. 476.

Accused was indicted for theft of money in the fall of 1909, and was not tried until 1915. One of the witnesses, to procure a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, worked near the courthouse, and could easily have been procured at trial, no attempt having been made to have him testify. Accused also desired to procure the evidence on the new trial of a witness who he claimed would testify that he had given accused two show tickets for a show in another town, in order to corroborate accused's testimony that he went to such town on the night of the theft to attend a show, and not in flight. He also claimed that another witness would testify on the new trial that he learned of the theft of $20 on the night of the theft, so that accused, 837 claimed it was on the night of the robbery a man did certain things, but it was not shown that such persons knew the man was prosecuting witness, which was necessary to make the evidence material. The prosecuting witness positively identified accused as the person who robbed him. Held, that there was no abuse of discretion in denying a new trial. Johnson v. State, 62 App. 284, 136 S. W. 1058.

One convicted of seduction was properly denied a new trial for newly discovered testimony relating to circumstances creating merely a suspicion that prosecutrix had been indiscreet after the offense. Browning v. State, 64 App. 146, 149 S. W. 1.

In a prosecution for homicide by poisoning with arsenic, newly discovered evidence that accused's wife had kept arsenic in her possession does not entitle accused to a new trial, not being of such a character as would probably produce a different result. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

In a prosecution for forging an order, newly discovered evidence that J. had been arrested a number of times in D. county for forgery, and in the order defendant was charged with having forged was made payable to him, was insufficient to entitle defendant to a new trial, in the absence of further showing that defendant received the order from J., or had ever met him, or showing any connection between him and the order in question. Gibson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1090.

The fact that a doctor, after testifying in an inquest trial to making an examination of the person and clothing of prosecutrix, in which he discovered a certain state of facts, subsequently testified at the hearing on a motion for new trial that he made another examination after accused's conviction and discovered a different state of facts, did not present ground for a new trial, where there was no evidence that the conditions discovered at the later examination existed at the time of the former examination, especially where the facts discovered at the former examination were corroborated by other testimony and accused's confession, made shortly after the alleged occurrence. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 315.

Newly discovered evidence that affiant, while passing the home of prosecutrix, had seen her pull her dress up to her knees and kick up her heels in a way to attract his attention, has too slight weight on the issue of her chastity to warrant a new trial. Black v. State, 71 App. 621, 160 S. W. 720.

Newly discovered evidence, in a seduction case, that one H. had received a letter from prosecutrix, after he had called on her, was no ground for new trial, in the absence of any showing of any improper language in the letter. Black v. State, 71 App. 621, 160 S. W. 720.

Newly discovered evidence, after conviction for seduction, that persons other than affiant had made statements adverse to prosecutrix's chastity, are not ground for new trial, in the absence of showing that the witnesses of such statements were present at the former trial, or would in fact testify on a new trial that the alleged statements by them were true. Black v. State, 71 App. 621, 160 S. W. 720.

Newly discovered evidence, in order to afford ground for a new trial, must in fact have been, and could not by reason of previous circumstances have been, discovered in time for the trial. It must also be probably true and of such a nature as would probably produce a different result. Madrid v. State, 71 App. 420, 161 S. W. 93.

A new trial for newly discovered evidence not tending to discredit the testimony of a witness, and not contradicting the state's testimony, is properly denied. Cyrus v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 679.

A new trial on the ground of newly discovered testimony, which will not tend to impeach the witness' truth, will not be granted. Brown v. State, 6 App. 226.

12. Acquittal of co-defendant.—To entitle a party to a new trial to obtain the testimony of an acquitted co-defendant, it must appear that the testimony which such co-defendant can give is not only important and material, but that it is also legal and competent. Brown v. State, 6 App. 226.

If a co-defendant is tried and acquitted, or the prosecution against him is dismissed, after the defendant's conviction, a new trial will be granted the defendant to obtain the testimony of his co-defendant, if it be material, competent, and would probably change the result on another trial. But the state may show that such testimony is not credible, and would not be likely to change the result. Helm v. State, 20 App. 41; Rucker v. State, 7 App. 649; Williams v. State, 4 App. 5; Edward v. State, 5 App. 458; Jones v. State, 23 App. 581, 5 S. W. 139; Lykes v. State, 41 Tex. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 58; Rich v. State, 1 App. 280; Dawson v. State, 16 App. 298; Ellis v. State, Id. 540.

Where two defendants, who are jointly indicted and one is tried and convicted and subsequently the other is tried and convicted, a new trial will be granted the former to obtain the testimony of the latter when it appears that the new evidence is legal and competent and material to his defense. Gills v. State, 39 App. 551, 13 S. W. 88.

In the absence of a statement of facts, a motion for a new trial to obtain the testimony of a co-defendant whose case had been dismissed, could not be considered. Childers v. State, 26 App. 125, 55 S. W. 959.

Defendant filed a motion for a new trial for the testimony of his codefendant who had after defendant's conviction been tried and acquitted. Held that where it was shown that the evidence was material a new trial should have been granted. Chumley v. State, 22 App. 255, 26 S. W. 466.

In a prosecution for burglary, there was evidence by an accomplice as to defendant's participation in the burglary and his subsequent possession of a pistol alleged evidence was practically without corroborative value. Subsequent to defendant's trial, a co-defendant had been tried and acquitted, and his affidavit, presented on a motion for a new trial, covered every question testified to by the accomplice, and was contradictory to a large part of it. Held, that the evidence which the codefendant would give was superior and entitled defendant to a new trial. Cox v. State, 63 App. 494, 140 S. W. 445.

Where the state's case was that a co-defendant, acquitted after the conviction of accused, was a principal and assisted in the crime, accused was entitled to a new trial to obtain the material testimony of the codefendant; the credibility of his testimony being for the jury. Baggett v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1136.

No error is shown in refusing accused a new trial, claimed on a showing that a co-defendant had pleaded guilty and had stated that he would make a confession exculpating guilty and acquitte, co-defendant disqualified himself as a witness, and since, through the absence of a showing as to what evidence was offered on the trial, it cannot be said that accused's guilt was not overwhelmingly established. Cross v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1987.

Where defendant and S. were jointly indicted for burglary, and, a severance being ordered, defendant was convicted largely on the evidence of J. and wife that defendant and S. on the night of the alleged burglary appeared at his residence in a buggy with the stolen property, after which S. was tried and acquitted, accused was entitled to a new trial to obtain the testimony of S. that the evidence given by J. and wife was untrue. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 213.

Accused was convicted of concealing stolen property taken from a burglarized store. The state's evidence was given principally by H., an accomplice, who, with D., was arrested for the burglary. H. turned state's evidence, and testified that D. was present and participated in the burglary. After accused was convicted, D. was discharged after trial, and accused's motion for a new trial contained a written statement by D. that he would testify that he was not present at the burglary, as testified by H., and had nothing to do with it. When accused was tried, D. was in jail, so that he could not then testify for accused under the statute. Held that, since D.'s testimony was material, and accused had no previous opportunity to procure it, it was error not to grant accused a new trial on that ground. Barker v. State (Cr. App.) 164 S. W. 382.

13. Requisites of application.—See notes under art. 840, post.

7. Where the jury, after having retired to deliberate upon a case, have received other testimony; or where a juror has conversed with any person in regard to the case; or where any juror, at any time during the trial or after retiring, may have become so intoxicated as to render it probable his verdict was influenced thereby. But the mere drinking of liquor by a juror shall not be sufficient ground for granting a new trial.

As to separation of the jury, see ante, art. 745.

Receiving other testimony.—Sending of bloody clothing to the jury room held not good for new trial where the clothing had been introduced in evidence and it was not used by the jury in any manner not authorized by the evidence. Spencer v. State, 29 S. W. 328; W. 496, 23 S. W. 46, 32 S. W. 562.

Proper case. The clothing worn by deceased when killed was inadvertently left in the room where the jury, deliberating on their verdict, afterward found and examined it. Here, reversed. Hendricks v. State, 28 App. 416, 43 S. W. 672.

If the jury after having retired to deliberate shall receive testimony against the defendant, the court will not stop to inquire as to its effect on the jury but will reverse the judgment. McWilliams v. State, 32 App. 269, 24 S. W. 978.

On trial for murder when the clothing of deceased had been introduced in evidence it was held no error to allow the jury to take such clothing with them to their room. Bell v. State, 32 App. 436, 24 S. W. 418.

The fact that the jurors deliberating read a newspaper account of the trial giving the evidence adduced on trial without comment is not a ground for a new trial. Williams v. State, 33 App. 138, 28 S. W. 629, 26 S. W. 555, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21.

After the jury had retired, one of them got a paper stating that one of the defendants arrested charged with perjury had been arrested on the trial. The motion does not show that the jury was affected by such statement; held, the motion was properly overruled. Snodgrass v. State, 36 App. 297, 36 S. W. 177.

Defendant was charged with stealing a calf. After the jury had retired it was stated to them that defendant had been in the habit of stealing calves; held, that a new trial should have been granted. Terry v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 988.

When introduced in evidence to show belonged to and were worn by defendant on the night of the alleged assault, it was not error to allow the jury to carry the clothing to the jury room for purposes of inspection, where it did not appear that they were used by the jury in a manner inconsistent with the testimony. Gresser v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 545.

On trial for murder, after the jury had retired to consider their verdict, they were taken for private purposes to some stalls in the vicinity of and from which they could and did view the locus in quo of the homicide, and they discussed the circumstances as they saw them with reference to the testimony of important witnesses; held, this was tantamount to receiving other testimony and was evidently hurtful to defendant and will reverse the case. Dartor v. State, 33 App. 40, 44 S. W. 530.

New trial should be granted where jury went to the scene, examined relative positions of parties to killing and of eye-witnesses, and commented thereon. This was getting other and additional evidence than that introduced upon the trial. Nelson v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 156.

This article appears to be mandatory and when the jury has received other material evidence, whether from one of their number or others, after they have retired to consider their verdict, the judgment will be reversed. Blocker v. State (Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 292.

If the jury after retrying receive other testimony, it is such misconduct as to require the granting motion for new trial. Tutt v. State, 49 App. 262, 91 S. W. 585.

Where the jury, on a trial for rape on a female under 15 years of age, could not agree upon the verdict of the prosecution, the confinement of the witness with her mother, and agreed that the former should take the testimony of a witness as fixing the age of the prosecutrix, and from that return a verdict, and after rendition of a verdict of guilty the former ascertained that the witness had testified that prosecutrix was over 15 years of age at the time of the offense, accused was entitled to a new trial. Rix v. State, 61 App. 416, 135 S. W. 150.

Statements by one juror to other jurors.—It is shown by the affidavit of a jurymen who tried the case that after the jury had retired to consider of their finding, one of the jurors (the foreman) stated to the jury that he knew one of the defendant's witnesses who testified in the case, and that the said defendant's witness' character was bad and that he was unworthy of belief, and affiant stated that his verdict was materially affected thereby. This witness, who was thus being impeached by the foreman of the jury, was one of, if not the most important witness for defendant. One of the grounds expressly enumerated in the statute as being sufficient to entitle a defendant to a new trial is "where the jury, after having returned to deliberate upon a case, have received other testimony," etc. With regard to the impeaching of a witness the same rule obtains in all cases: the defendant should be confronted with the impeaching witnesses and be afforded an opportunity to cross-examine them. When the right is not accorded him the law presumes that he is injured, and will not permit a verdict to stand where such testimony used against him in the jury room, and many other circumstances have not been explained, nor attempted to be explained, by counter-affidavits supporting the integrity of the verdict; which was the case in this instance. McKissick v. State, 26 App. 672, 9 S. W. 299.

The same irregularity was held reversible error in the case of Wharton v. State, 45 Tex. 2, and in Anschicks v. State, 6 App. 524. The court should have sustained the motion for a new trial upon the ground of the motion, and because of error in overruling said motion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. McKissick v. State, 26 App. 673, 9 S. W. 299.
It is well settled that misconduct of a jury will not be ground for a new trial, unless it be shown to have affected the fairness and impartiality of the trial. Austin v. State, 42 Tex. 355; Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 758; Jack v. State, 26 Tex. 1; Ansichke v. State, 6 App. 524; Allen v. State, 17 App. 687; Jack v. State, 20 App. 556; McDonald v. State, 15 App. 483. A mere statement made by one juror in reference to the character of the defendant is not, per se, ground for a new trial. Austin v. State, 42 Tex. 355. Nor is a statement made by one juror to the others that he had once been robbed by a porter, the defendant being a porter and on trial for theft, it appearing that such statement did not influence the verdict of the jury, 20 App. 658. But if the verdict was influenced by the statement of a juror to his fellows as to the character for credibility of a witness for the defendant, a new trial should be granted. Ansichke v. State, 6 App. 524. Or if the juror stated to the jury a material fact within his knowledge, but which was not in evidence, it might be cause for a new trial.

Wyers v. State, 13 App. 57.

Where it appears that a verdict was probably influenced by the statement of a juror to his fellows as to the character or credibility of a defendant, a new trial should be granted. Lucas v. State, 27 App. 322, 11 S. W. 442.

A mere statement by one juror to his fellows in reference to the character of defendant, is not ground for a new trial, unless it appears that the verdict was probably influenced thereby. Cox v. State, 26 App. 92, 12 S. W. 493.

Statements made by juror to his fellow jurors, after the verdict had been agreed upon, held not ground for new trial. Gonzales v. State, 32 App. 611, 25 S. W. 781.

Statements by juror to his fellows that defendant had previously been in the penitentiary, held not to require a new trial in the absence of a showing that defendant was prejudiced thereby. Ray v. State, 35 App. 554, 33 S. W. 869.

Statement by juror to his fellows, after the verdict had been agreed on, held not to require a new trial. Angley v. State, 35 App. 472, 31 S. W. 728.

After retiring to consider their verdict two of the jurors told the others that defendant was the biggest rogue in the state and would be willing to hang him if they could; held, a new trial should have been granted. Holmes v. State, 35 App. 370, 42 S. W. 306.

A mere statement by a juror that defendant has previously been convicted and his punishment assessed at a certain number of years in the penitentiary, will not require a new trial unless it be shown that defendant was prejudiced thereby. Morgan v. State, 29 App. 419, 47 S. W. 205.

On a trial for rape when the jury stood six for conviction and six for acquittal, one of the jurors said that a few years before, defendant had gone into the bedroom of one of his neighbors where his wife was, and that he (the juror) heard the husband tell defendant he would kill him if he did not leave the country immediately thereafter the jury came in with a verdict of guilty. Held, that a new trial should have been granted. Ellis v. State, 33 App. 508, 27 S. W. 533. After verdict agreed on one of the jurors stated that he had certain antecedents of the witness for defendant had been in the penitentiary once before. Held, no cause for new trial. Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 553.

On trial for murder, while the jury were considering the case, some of the jurors stated that the reputation of defendant, his father and brother, as peaceable citizens was bad. Held, that a new trial should have been granted. Hargrove v. State, 32 App. 431, 26 S. W. 992.

Statements of one juror to the jury that defendant had killed a certain man; held, such misconduct as would require new trial. Mitchell v. State, 34 App. 275, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 456.

When after the jury retired one of them made derogatory remarks concerning defendant and his antecedents, a new trial should be granted. Mitchell v. State, 36 App. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 50 S. W. 456.

A statement of one juror to the others, during the progress of the trial, that he was on a former grand jury that indicted defendant for another crime, is ground for new trial. Phipps v. State, 36 App. 216, 36 S. W. 733.

On a motion for a new trial, defendant appended the affidavits of four jurors, to the effect that one of the jurors, while the jury were considering of their verdict, said that the case would have been tried last term if W., a witness, had not feigned sickness, and remained away from court; and that said W. remained away at the instance of defendant, in order to prevent a conviction at the last term. Held, that the communication did not impair the rights of defendant. Gallinar v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 529.

The defense had attacked and impeached the main state's witness. After the jury had retired one of the jurors stated that he knew said witness, that he was a good boy and was honest and truthful; held, a new trial should have been granted. Cox v. State, 36 App. 261, 42 S. W. 595.

Where it is brought to the attention of the court that the jury had discussion of the matter of a former conviction before they found the verdict, a new trial should have been granted if the court was not satisfied from the evidence he should have prevented, Yaguirre v. State, 42 App. 253, 61 S. W. 456.

Where the jury in retirement discussed facts material to accused which were not in evidence on the trial, a new trial should be granted. Fyvor v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 885.

Where the only jurors who could under the evidence have been influenced by discussion in the jury room of the fact that accused had been three times before convicted and sentenced to death, and that his codefendant had been hung for the same matter of such facts when they were taken into consideration, held, that they could and would give defendant a fair and impartial trial and were voluntarily accepted, such discussion was not fatal to a conviction. Oates v. State, 56 App. 571, 121 S. W. 370.

In a prosecution for homicide, defendant, though claiming he shot deceased in self-defense, also testified that he sought deceased, who was the stepfather of de-

Defendant's wife, to renounce with him for his criminal intimacy with defendant's wife and to obtain such a release from him to him. Held, that statements made by jurors while considering their verdict that it seemed that defendant's wife was anxious "to do it or to confess" as decedent was, and "I do not think a man ought to be shot down about a damned whose like that woman is," were not objectionable testimony after deliberations of the case, but where justifiable expressions of the jurors' conclusions on the proposition submitted to them. Remnant v. State, 57 App. 642, 124 S. W. 888.

Another situation of betting at a pool table, where defendant testified that he frequented the pool room, played there a great deal, and might be regarded as a booster for the house, the jury had a right to consider these things in determining a penalty; and it was not ground for a new trial that a juror, during the deliberations, stated, that defendant was one of the leaders in the business, which ought to be broken up, and that he and alone would not do it. Thilor v. State, 58 App. 321, 125 S. W. 891.

Where, after a verdict had been reached, one of the jurors stated to the others that after he had been in the jury box for a time, defendant's face looked familiar, and that he did not think it was defendant's first offense, it was not ground for a new trial. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 162, 129 S. W. 1109.

It is ground for reversal of a conviction that the jury, in deliberating, discussed the fact, not brought out in the evidence, that defendant had been previously convicted of another crime. Maples v. State, 60 App. 169, 131 S. W. 567.

Where, on a trial for selling intoxicating liquor at a drug store, the testimony of the identity of accused as the person making the sale was not clearly shown, and the evidence for accused made it impossible for him to have made the misconduct of the jury in discussing, after retirement, facts outside of the evidence, that accused kept his sister-in-law, and that the drug store openly violated the law, and that accused had bought an interest therein to sell liquor, necessitated the reversal, Williamson v. State, 62 App. 175, 131 S. W. 737.

That some one of the jurors may, while they were deliberating, have stated one of the state's witnesses was known by him and was a good man, is not cause for reversal, all the jurors saying that it did not influence their verdict. Allen v. State, 52 App. 552, 135 S. W. 538.

Under the statute prohibiting reception of evidence after the jury has retired, one of the jurors should not tell the others what he knows about defendant. Dunn v. State, 72 App. 170, 161 S. W. 457.

Where, after the jurors had agreed on a verdict, one of the jurors remarked that accused had once separated a man and his wife, and the punishment fixed by the jury was less than that fixed by the jury on a former trial, there was no misconduct justifying the setting aside of the conviction. Burgo v. State, 73 App. 560, 167 S. W. 63.

Where the evidence of all the jurors showed that there was no discussion of accused's former conviction, though one juror incidentally mentioned the fact, there was no misconduct of the jurors warranting the setting aside of the conviction. Burgo v. State, 73 App. 565, 167 S. W. 63.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, a question asked by one juror of another during their deliberation, whether defendant was the man who had a fight with the deputy sheriff, which question was answered in the affirmative, does not entitle the defendant to a new trial, where the evidence showed that some of the jurors did not hear the question and all of the jurors stated that it did not influence the verdict. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 855.

Conversing with persons other than jurors.—Conversation had by a juror with another than a member of the jury, in order to vitiate the verdict, must be such as was calculated to impress upon the mind of the juror a view of the case different from that made by the evidence, to the probable injury of the defendant. March v. State, 61 Tex. 457, 1 S. W. 440; Rames v. State, 62 App. 155, 22 S. W. 588; Pickens v. State, 61 App. 552, 21 S. W. 362. The refusal of a juror to talk with an outside party is not "conversing." Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 755; see, ante, art. 748.

A stranger passing near the jury said: "Don't give him more than ten years," held, no ground for new trial. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 978.

Where jurors communicated with third persons, without the consent of the court, the burden is on the state to show that no injury occurred to accused. Parshall v. State, 62 App. 177, 188 S. W. 759.

Where jurors, after being impaneled, communicated with third persons over the telephone, without the consent of the trial court, and there was nothing to show that they had been tampered with or that they were not fair and impartial, it will not be presumed that the jurors, when testifying as to these conversations, will perjure themselves or that their evidence will be of little weight. Parks v. State, 62 App. 177, 188 S. W. 759.

That jurors informed their families by telephone that they were serving on the jury was not ground for a new trial, where the state showed that accused was not injured thereby. Bryan v. State, 63 App. 200, 139 S. W. 891.

That a juror talked over the telephone before the verdict was returned into court, but after agreement, is not, as a matter of law, ground for new trial, especially where the officer in charge of the jury was present and heard what the juror said. Tores v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 523.

That the brother-in-law of one of the jurors, while in the street, called to the jury in the third story of the courthouse and asked them if they wanted some water, to which one of the jurors replied, "We have two, and they are fine; that's enough for a while," etc., was not ground for a new trial. Latham v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 797.
Presence of persons other than jurors during deliberation.—See art. 748, ante, and notes.

The fact that a bailiff was present with the jury during their deliberations is not, per se, a ground for a new trial. But such violation of duty may be attended with circumstances that would entitle the defendant to a new trial. Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 410; Daniels v. State, 34 Tex. 322; Martin v. State, 5 App. 298; see, also, ante, art. 750.

Use of intoxicating liquors.—Prior to the adoption of the Code the mere drinking of ardent spirits by a juror was sufficient to vitiate the verdict. Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 570. But now, to entitle the defendant to have the verdict set aside and a new trial granted him upon this ground, it must appear that such misconduct probably influenced the verdict. Jack v. State, 24 Tex. 1; March v. State, 44 Tex. 64; Webb v. State, 5 App. 956; Tuttle v. State, 2 App. 558; Allen v. State, 17 App. 637; Davis v. State, 9 App. 91; Rider v. State, 26 App. 231, 3 S. W. 685.

8. Where, from the misconduct of the jury, the court is of opinion that the defendant has not received a fair and impartial trial; and it shall be competent to prove such misconduct by the voluntary affidavit of a juror; and a verdict may, in like manner, in such cases be sustained by such affidavit.

Misconduct in general.—Mere hesitation of a juror on being polled, or answering conditionally, and with doubts, is not cause for a new trial, if he finally answered that it was his verdict. Gose v. State, 6 App. 131.

For misconduct of the jurors to constitute ground for a new trial, it must have affected the fairness of the trial. Anschicks v. State, 6 App. 424.

Misconduct of the jury is not ground for a new trial unless the fairness and impartiality of the trial was affected thereby. Jack v. State, 20 App. 636.

That a juror procured a volume of reports and read a case therewithin held not ground for a new trial where it did not appear how the jurors were affected thereby or how defendant was injured. Munos v. State, 34 App. 472, 31 S. W. 350.

A discussion by the jurors relative to defendant’s failure to testify held to require a new trial. Wilson v. State, 29 App. 363, 46 S. W. 291.

That a juror did not hear, or misunderstood part of the evidence, is no ground for a new trial. Keith v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 629.

New trial should be granted where a juror was present at the scene immediately at the time of the killing, located the wound in the body of deceased, and knew the main features of the case when he was taken as juror. Nelson v. State (Cr. App.) 53 S. W. 108.

Where there was a discussion of a former verdict and former punishment before the jury agreed on a term of years, and under the circumstances this discussion might have had some influence on the jury the case will be reversed. Casey v. State, 51 App. 433, 102 S. W. 726.

A new trial should be granted where it is shown that at least one juror was prejudiced against defendant: that the jurors discussed defendant’s failure to testify in his own behalf; that some of the jurors asserted that defendant had recently abandoned his young wife, of which there was no evidence in the case; and that some of the jurors asserted that, if any injustice should be done defendant by the verdict, he could appeal. Tuller v. State, 58 App. 571, 120 S. W. 1158.

That the jury, in considering a case, discussed the fact that accused was a professional man, and was a good party to make an example of, did not require a reversal. The evidence showed that some of members of the jury believed him guilty, the discussion arose only over the question of punishment, the state’s evidence justified the punishment assessed, and the defense was submitted by a proper instruction. Fletcher v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1134.

Where several of the jury, after retirement, discussed and talked about the defendant’s failure to take the stand in his own behalf, contrary to the charge of the court, such misconduct was reversible error. Huddleston v. State, 70 App. 260, 156 S. W. 1168. See Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 607.

That the foreman of the jury upon retiring stated to the others that they could not consider the fact that accused did not testify does not, where there was no discussion of the matter, constitute misconduct authorizing a new trial, being a mere reiteration of the charge of the court. Veach v. State, 71 App. 131, 138 S. W. 1099.

Notwithstanding the statute that the failure of an accused to testify in his own behalf shall not be taken against him or commented on by counsel, the mere fact of commenting, and nothing more by some of the jurors on accused’s failure to take the stand, will not necessitate a new trial. Coffman v. State, 73 App. 296, 165 S. W. 939.

Discretion of trial court.—Whether accused should be granted a new trial for alleged misconduct of the jury is particularly cognizable by the trial court, whose discretion in the matter will not be interfered with, unless it is clearly shown to be an abuse of discretion and unsupported by the testimony. Douglas v. State, 55 App. 129, 124 S. W. 935, 157 Am. St. Rep. 930; Barber v. State, 64 App. 96, 142 S. W. 577; Jones v. State, 72 App. 496, 162 S. W. 1126, 162 S. W. 1142.

Where the motion for a new trial raised the question of the bias of a juror, which was denied by him, the question cannot be reviewed, the issue having been found against accused by the trial court. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 996.

Passion and prejudice.—See note under this article, subd. 4.

Separation of jury.—See arts. 745 and 746, and notes.
Evidence in general, and examination of jurors.—When a jury is being polled, the court cannot interrogate a juror as to the misconduct of the jury. Rus­ham v. State, 38 Tex. 622; ante, art. 768.

An affidavit seeking to attack the verdict of a jury for misconduct on the part of the jury should set out the acts complained of. Morrison v. State, 39 App. 519, 47 W. 259.

Verbal sworn statements before the judge as to misconduct of jury are sufficient without written affidavits, though it is best to follow the statute in regard to the matter. Long v. State, 48 App. 176, 88 S. W. 208.

The ultimate intent of this article is to inform the court with the sworn statements either written or verbal of the facts attending and manifesting the misconduct of the jury. While it is always best to follow the statute and present written affidavits, if this is not done and the witness is not present before the judge hears their sworn statements, and the defendant is not injured in his rights thereby, the case will not be reversed on this account. Long v. State, 43 App. 175, 88 S. W. 208.

Where a person makes an affidavit as to statements made to him by a juror showing misconduct of the jury, and defendant's counsel had all the jurors in court and craved permission of the court to go into an investigation of the matter, explaining that he was unable to get any affidavit of any juror because the jurors had agreed among themselves not to talk to him on the subject, it was the duty of the court to investigate the matter in order to remove any suspicion of unfairness in the trial. Kannmacher v. State, 51 App. 118, 101 S. W. 210, 211.

The affidavit of one not a member of the jury as to misconduct of the jury raises an issue, which the court should hear and determine in order to remove any suspicion of unfairness in the trial. Kannmacher v. State, 51 App. 118, 101 S. W. 240, 241.

The trial court having examined into the charge of misconduct of jurors, and the court having found that there was no misconduct, and there being evidence to sustain the finding, the judgment will not be disturbed on this account. Fox v. State, 53 App. 156, 169 S. W. 372.

Where affidavits in support of an application for a new trial for alleged misconduct of the jury were not specific, and it was uncertain from the record whether the misconduct in fact occurred, the motion, in so far as it was based on such grounds, was properly denied. Reagan v. State, 47 App. 647, 124 S. W. 658.

The denial of a motion for a new trial for the jury's misconduct will not be disturbed on appeal, where the testimony on which the ruling is based is conflicting. Williams v. State, 58 App. 294, 134 S. W. 916.

A finding on conflicting evidence that a juror was not guilty of misconduct, supported by the statement of the juror and the other jurors, will not be disturbed on appeal. Blount v. State, 63 App. 509, 126 S. W. 579.

A conviction cannot be impeached for the declaration of a juror, after verdict and after jury had dispersed, that defendant had testified, that his family were hungry, and that he killed the cow in question to get something to eat, he would have acquitted him. La Flour v. State, 59 App. 619, 129 S. W. 351.

Where, on reference by a juror to the fact that defendant had not testified, another juror stated that they could not consider this matter for any purpose, and it was not considered, and the trial court concluded that no injury was shown, defendant having received the lowest penalty, such reference by the juror was not ground for reversal. Probest v. State, 60 App. 669, 131 S. W. 263.

Where defendant moved for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had referred to the fact that defendant did not take the stand, and the motion was not verified, nor accompanied by the affidavit of any juror, though five of the six were juiced at the hearing of the motion and were opposed to the stand to question, and being sworn and questioned by the court, testified that they had not considered such fact, and had not referred to it, though one juror thought the defendant's failure to take the stand, the matter was not presented in such a way that the appellate court can consider the action of the trial court in overruling the motion. Smith v. State, 62 App. 281, 136 S. W. 1063.

Where the issue was whether jurors were guilty of misconduct in considering excluded evidence during their deliberations, and the juror charged with referring to such evidence positively testified that he made no such statement, and heard no one else making it, a finding of the trial court that there was no misconduct would not be disturbed on appeal. Sandoloski v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 351.

Evidence that during a trial the sheriff took the jury to a restaurant for dinner where they were seated at tables at which no other customers sat, and that one or two persons passed by where they were standing without speaking to the juryman or the jurymen to them, was insufficient to show misconduct, there being other evidence that the case was not discussed even among the members of the jury while in the restaurant. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 783.

An application for a new trial for alleged misconduct of the jury must be presented by affidavit of the defendant or some other person, and, if not so presented, such ground will not be reviewed on appeal. Waters v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

Evidence as to making and effect of remark in jury room as to defendant's failure to testify held not to show a matter of importance enough to require a new trial. Rhodes v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 128.

Objection, on appeal from a conviction of robbery, that the jury discussed the possibility of the offense being committed in another city where the offense was committed is not reversible if not supported by the affidavit of any one purporting to know of such discussion. Serop v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 557.

Evidence on the issue whether the jury, before agreeing upon their verdict, had referred to defendant's failure to testify, contrary to the instructions of the court, held to show that a juror's reference to such failure was made after the jury had occurred before the fixing of the time of punishment.

Pullen v. State, 76 App. 156, 156 S. W. 935.

Where some of the jurors in a murder case had filed affidavits to the effect that other jurors had commented on and considered the failure to testify of accused and his relatives, and all of the jurors were in court when the affidavits were considered, it was error to refuse accused' request to examine the jurors orally under oath as to the truth of the charges of misconduct. Bonds v. State, 71 App. 483, 169 S. W. 190.

Evidence in support of a motion for a new trial that, during the consideration of the case, one of the jurors wondered why defendant did not testify, that some one else remarked "that wasn't admissible," and some one else said, "Yes; we can talk about that," while the other at any time did not constitute ground for reversal. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 226, 152 S. W. 364.

Where, in a homicide case, a ground of a motion for a new trial, complaining that the jury was allowed to separate during its deliberation, was not supported by affidavit, and there was no bill of exceptions reserved, the appellate court could not consider the objection. Cant v. State, 73 App. 379, 166 S. W. 142.

An affidavit on knowledge, information, and belief in support of motion for new trial for misconduct of the jury commenting on accused's failure to testify, will not be entertained on a motion for a new trial. Bernum v. State, 35 Tex. 296.

Disqualification of jurors.—That one of the jurors rendering a verdict in a criminal case has been convicted of a felony and never pardoned, so that his citizenship had never been restored, would entitle accused to a new trial after the overruling of his original motion therefor and notice of appeal, unless the court had lost jurisdiction of the case; neither accused nor his counsel having knowledge of the disqualification until after such proceedings had been taken. Bandick v. State, 59 App. 9, 127 S. W. 543.

Where a juror well known to defendant's counsel, and whom he had peremptorily excused as a fact not on the jury, but was not discharged from the panel, was later refused, it was too late then for defendant to take advantage of the error as ground for a new trial; the juror having qualified himself on his voir dire. Cooper v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 587.

Affidavits and testimony of jurors as to misconduct.—An affidavit of a juror should not be received to show misconduct impugning the verdict. Patterson v. State, 42 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1113; McCulloch v. State, 35 App. 266, 33 S. W. 229; Hamilton v. State, 64 App. 147, 141 S. W. 566.

If the juror answers that he is a freethinker, and his affidavit to the contrary effect will not be entertained on a motion for a new trial. Bernum v. State, 33 Tex. 299.

Misconduct in the jury room may be shown by the voluntary affidavit of a juror. Anschicks v. State, 6 App. 521.

When there has been misconduct of the jury and such misconduct is of a nature that the trial has not been fair and impartial, and the fact cannot be established from any other source then it may be proved by the voluntary affidavit of a juror; but when the conduct of the jury is attacked from any other source and cannot be explained by other testimony, then the conduct is to be considered in like manner. Hodges v. State, 103 Tex. 419.

A juror cannot impeach his verdict by an affidavit stating that it was agreed by the jury that defendant would on petition of the jury be pardoned and that the verdict was found with that understanding. Montgomery v. State, 13 App. 74, holding the jury without permission or consent of counsel may be shown by the voluntary affidavit of a juror. Kelly v. State, 28 App. 109, 12 S. W. 695.

Affidavits of jurors showing misconduct in the jury room should be discouraged. Mitchell v. State, 30 App. 278, 25 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 466.

The affidavit of a juror stating that he assented to the verdict through fear of being grossly insulted by the other jurors if he refused to do so, held not to disclose ground for new trial. Pilot v. State, 35 App. 515, 43 S. W. 112, 1024.

Misconduct of a juror not shown by affidavits of jurors cannot be considered on appeal. Wheatly v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 672.

An affidavit stated that after retirement one juror made statements derogatory to the character and reputation of defendant; held, too indefinite to entitle it to consideration there being nothing in the record showing what such alleged derogatory statements were. Harris v. State, 39 App. 484, 46 S. W. 647.

A conviction on a prosecution for perjury, based on defendant's testimony on a prosecution for shooting craps, in which he testified that he did not shoot craps, will not reverse misconduct of the juror making affidavit and there being no affidavit to the contrary, that the jury appropriated defendant's convictions for shooting craps as a basis for his conviction for perjury. Warren v. State, 57 App. 518, 125 S. W. 1115.

It would be against public policy to affirm on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence.
believed accused to be insane, but convicted him because of their belief that, if acquitted, he would probably hurt some one else. Turner v. State, 61 App. 97, 133 S. W. 1052.

This subdivision does not authorize the filing or consideration of an affidavit of a juror that his consent to the verdict was procured by representation that the jury disagreed and dissented, and a reasonable length of time in case of further disagreement. Bacon v. State, 61 App. 206, 134 S. W. 690.

A juror cannot impeach his verdict by affidavit to the effect that he would not have agreed to the verdict of guilty, unless the other jurors had agreed to sign a recommendation for defendant's pardon. Rogers v. State, 71 App. 149, 156 S. W. 49.

Where 11 jurors denied any misconduct arising from the fact that the jury during deliberations discussed another case, and the testimony of several jurors in support of the charge of misconduct was uncertain, a finding that there was no misconduct would not be disturbed on appeal. Oliver v. State, 70 App. 140, 159 S. W. 255.

Where a motion for a new trial was supported by an affidavit of certain jurors that the jury commented on the defendant's failure to testify, but nine other jurors made affidavit that the only mention was a statement by one juror, after the reading of the instructions, that they could not consider the failure to testify, the motion for a new trial was properly overruled. Mason v. State (Cr. App.) 103 S. W. 115.

In a prosecution for refusing to support his destitute minor children, the act of some of the jurors, who had the day previous sat on a jury which convicted another of wife desertion, in stating that the penalty imposed in this case should not be so severe, the first, does not warrant reversal, while 98 of the jurors denied that the matter had any effect upon them, and accused was not given as severe a penalty as was imposed upon the wife deserter. Noddleman v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 710.

Counteracting affidavits or evidence.—Defendant moved for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had formed an opinion before the trial, the juror made affidavit that he had formed no opinion, and that he had at first voted for an acquittal; held, that the motion was properly denied. Duke v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 43. See, also, Driver v. State, 37 App. 169, 38 S. W. 1920.

Nothing a private prosecuting counsel nor any counsel interested in the case can take the affidavits of jurors in order to contest defendant's motion for new trial. Maples v. State, 60 App. 169, 131 S. W. 567.

It cannot be said the court erred in overruling a motion for new trial, though E. filed an affidavit that he talked with B., one of the jurors, about the case, and at his request detailed to him the facts within his knowledge, and that B. expressed the opinion that defendant should be severely punished; E having in his testimony, on the hearing of the motion, refused to positively identify B. as the man he talked with, who was clean shaven, while E. at the hearing had wrinkles, and B. by affidavit and at the hearing having denied any such conversation with E. or any one else. Howe v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 497.

Where in motion for a new trial, affidavits are presented tending to show prejudice and prior opinions of jurors as to the guilt of accused, evidence on the hearing should disprove such affidavits conclusively to justify a refusal of a new trial. Haggart v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 328.

9. Where the verdict is contrary to law and evidence. A verdict is not contrary to the law and evidence, within the meaning of this provision, where the defendant is found guilty of an offense of inferior grade, but of the same nature as, the offense proved. [O. C. 672.]

See Wilkerson's Cr. Forms, 969.

Verdict contrary to evidence.—As to the sufficiency of evidence to support a conviction, see ante, art. 783 and notes.

Where the only evidence against the defendant is that of the private prosecutor, and his testimony is directly contradicted in material points by other witnesses, a new trial should be granted. Owens v. State, 35 Tex. 361. And where the principal witness against the defendant stuffled himself, and there were other circumstances favorable to the defendant, it was held that a new trial should have been granted. Hasselmeyer v. State, 1 App. 690; see, also, Spears v. State, 2 App. 344; Jones v. State, 4 App. 436; Jones v. State, 7 App. 457.

Trial courts have both the jury and the witnesses before them, and whenever it appears that justice has not been done; that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, or is against the weight of the evidence, such courts should, without heating a new trial. Much new trial expense would be saved to the parties and the state, and the ends of justice would the more likely be attained, if the trial courts would adopt a more liberal practice in granting new trials than at present prevails. Cases frequently go before the appellate court in which the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence so weak and uncertain as to leave every sound and correct mind in doubt of the guilt of the defendant. In all such cases the trial courts should grant new trials. The discretion confided by the law to trial courts to grant new trials is almost the only protection the citizen has against wrongful convictions of prejudiced, careless, or ignorant jurors. The appellate court can not always set aside a wrong verdict, but the trial court can. Where the evidence is conflicting, but there is sufficient, if credible, to support the conviction, the appellate court must affirm the conviction, unless the rule with the trial court in passing upon a motion for a new trial. The trial judge may pass upon the credibility of the witness in determining the motion, but this the appellate court can not do. While the enforcement of the criminal law is absolutely demanded for the protection of private and public rights, the protection of the citizen from the effects of law illegally administered is equally demanded by every sentiment of justice and principle of law. The refusal of a trial judge to grant a new trial in a proper case can not be fully corrected by appeal, and the considerations should have proper weight with trial judges in the exercise of their discretion upon motions for new trial. State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67; Turner v. State, 38 Tex. 166; Mullins v. State, 37 Tex. 277; Owens v. State, 35 Tex. 361.

Nurseries are the exclusive judges of the facts, and of the weight of the evidence, and the credibility of the witnesses, yet the court, on a motion for a new trial, must set aside the verdict if it is contrary to the evidence, or is not supported by it. If the court is not satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to warrant the grant of a new trial, Loza v. State, 25 Am. Rep. 415; Tollett v. State, 44 Tex. 95; Gazley v. State, 17 App. 267. Where the evidence supporting the conviction was contradictory in material respects and untrustable preponderated against the favor of the defendant's innocence, it was held that a new trial should have been granted. Spears v. State, 2 App. 244.

Convictions can not be sustained upon mere suspicions and possibilities. There must be evidence of the defendant's guilt such as that which would create a reasonable doubt. If there is no such evidence, there can be no error in overruling a motion for a new trial. State v. Webb, 41 Tex. 67; Turner v. State, 38 Tex. 166; Mullins v. State, 37 Tex. 277; Owens v. State, 35 Tex. 361.

The defendant in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder applied for a continuance to secure the testimony of one J. The continuance being refused, and the case proceeding to trial, the prosecuting witness testified that the wounds upon his person were inflicted by the defendant, and denied that he had ever stated that the said wounds were inflicted by J., the person named in the defendant's application for a continuance. The witnesses for the defense testified that some of the wounds were inflicted by the prosecution witness, but the others were inflicted by said J. Other testimony established the presence and participation of J. in the difficulty. Held, that in the light of the proof a new trial should have been granted. Brooks v. State, 25 App. 82, 2 S. W. 158.

Where false testimony is given on the trial on a material issue, a new trial should be granted. Brown v. State, 24 App. 176, 55 S. W. 131.

Where defendant moves for a new trial, after conviction for burglary, upon the ground that none of the stolen property, but his own confession showed that he was with the other two parties who were shown to have committed the burglary in the nighttime, he is also shown to have been drinking that night, there is no error in overruling his motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. Kelly v. State, 61 App. 66, 135 S. W. 58.

On a trial for murder, it was the state's contention that accused killed deceased because deceased had superseded him in the affections of B., to whom accused had been engaged to be married. Accused testified that they were engaged at the time of the homicide, that he saw deceased and B. in an attitude which led him to believe that deceased was trying to rape B., that he had loosed B.'s pistol, and deceased took the pistol and snapped it at him, and pursued him, cursing him, and that, when he saw B. later, she told him that deceased had tried to rape her, and had threatened to kill him (accused), and in corroboration of his testimony that deceased at the time of the killing made a threatening gesture, and swung towards him, a witness testified that deceased's knife was lying on the ground open at the place where he fell. E. contradicted all of this testimony. On a motion for a new trial, she swore that her testimony at the trial was false; that she was induced by others to give such testimony; and that events happened subsequent to accused's trial. Aside from her testimony, the evidence tended strongly to show that the killing grew out of what accused believed was an attempt by deceased to rape her. Held, that a new trial should be granted, as the conviction was apparently based on false testimony, and had B. testified differently, or not testified at all, the jury might have reached a different conclusion. Carter v. State (Cr. App.) 179 S. W. 729.
Conviction of degree of offense lower than that charged.—See notes under art. 743, ante. See Burnett v. State, 53 App. 515, 112 S. W. 74, and cases cited, and High v. State, 54 App. 333, 112 S. W. 935, and cases cited. Where the accused might have been convicted of murder, but was in fact convicted of manslaughter he was not harmed by a charge on manslaughter. High v. State, 54 App. 333, 112 S. W. 940.

Under the statute stating that the fact that defendant has been convicted of a lower grade of offense than that of which he was found guilty in the trial, where, in a prosecution for homicide defendant was found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree, he cannot complain of error in the court’s charge on manslaughter upon sudden impulse on the ground that the evidence does not suggest sudden impulse, since it could not be sudden impulse. It authorized the jury to find a lower grade than he was guilty of and which the evidence warranted. Barbee v. State, 58 App. 129, 124 S. W. 961.

A conviction of manslaughter should be sustained, though the evidence does not establish that offense, if the evidence does show murder. Wysong v. State (Cr. App.) 116 S. W. 941.

Under art. 771, providing that, on a prosecution for an offense consisting of different degrees, accused may be found guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment, that as not erroneous. W. v. Rapier, 33 App. 37, 96 S. W. 1049; v. Turnrod, 32 App. 94, 95 S. W. 279. Where an indictment is not entitled to a new trial on the ground that the issue of insanity had been tried and found against him. Branch v. State, 1 App. 99. It is not a ground for a new trial that the jury was summoned by a state’s witness, unless it be shown that the defendant was not aware of the fact, and could not, by reasonable diligence, have known it in time to exercise his right of challenge, and unless it be further shown that he was probably prejudiced thereby. Allen v. State, 4 App. 581; see, also, Baker v. State, 4 App. 272.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground that the state’s witness made contradictory statements, Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 372. Nor upon affidavit that they did not understand a plain question. Colloch v. State, 35 App. 358, 33 S. W. 230. A new trial will be granted where record fails to show proof of venue. Hutto v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 233. The fact that defendant was under 16 years of age and did not at the time of his trial know that he could have been sent to the reformatory instead of the penitentiary is not a ground for a new trial. Davis v. State, 39 App. 681, 47 S. W. 978.

One of the prosecuting officers in a murder case in discussing the character of defendant said, “Good character amount to nothing. Any one can prove a good character.” Another prosecuting officer stated to the jury that it was a matter of common knowledge that the people of the country were being criticized for not performing their duties and convicting criminals, and that he hoped such criticism would not be made concerning the actions of this jury after this case should be disposed of. The court as to the first remark objected of its own motion, stated that it was a flagrant breach of duty, and admonished and warned the speaker not to repeat his offense, instructed the jury not to consider what he had said, and that they must try the case on the evidence, and refuse any apology or further allusion to the matter. The remarks of the other officer were promptly stated to the court that the argument by the court that the argument and consideration only the quality of the evidence, and as to both remarks the court offered to give a written charge, if desired, by defendant’s attorneys, which charge was not requested, the improper argument is cured by the action of the parties and the court at the time, and hence is not reversible error. Leech v. State, 63 App. 339, 139 S. S. 1147.

Misconduct of third persons.—Where it was shown that immediately after the verdict the prosecuting witness secretly paid another state’s witness a sum of money, and there was no explanation made of this transaction, it was held that a new trial should have been granted. Bostick v. State, 10 App. 705.

Artifice, trickery, and fraud on the part of a prosecuting officer whereby a defendant has been induced to go to trial to his injury, are held to constitute ground for a new trial. Eldridge v. State. 12 App. 208; March v. State, 44 Tex. 64.
And so may be such conduct on the part of a state's witness. Adams v. State, 10 App. 677.

A new trial will not be granted because the evidence applauded state's counsel, when the demonstration was promptly suppressed by the court. Parker v. State, 33 App. 111, 21 S. W. 694, 25 S. W. 987.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground that a witness was mad and did not tell the truth. Pursley v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 683.

When persons in the audience manifest applause at statements made by the prosecuting attorney, if it appears probable that the jury was probably influenced thereby, the court should grant a new trial. Hamilton v. State, 35 App. 372, 37 S. W. 431.

The mere fact that, on a trial for the murder of a teacher, the school adjourned and attended a portion of the trial, does not require a reversal of the conviction on the ground that the teachers and children attended by concert of action with a view of influencing the jury. Long v. State, 59 App. 103, 137 S. W. 551, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

That a witness' testimony varied from his testimony given on a previous trial is no ground for new trial. Newton v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 638.

That bystanders applauded on one occasion during the trial of accused, was not ground for reversal, where the court at once suppressed the demonstration, and stated that if it occurred again the room would be cleared. Milliner v. State, 72 App. 45, 162 S. W. 348.

On a trial for seduction, it was highly improper for the prosecuting witness to kneel in the presence of the jury and offer the prayer: "Oh, dear Jesus, I do pray with me during this my hour of trial. Oh, just let me say the words Thou would have me to say"—and, after being cautioned, to again utter the prayer, "Dearest Jesus, I pray Thee to be with me," though this in itself might not justify a new trial. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 445, 163 S. W. 424.

Intoxication of defendant.—As to whether a new trial will be granted because defendant was drunk at the time of the trial is within the discretion of the trial court, and its actions will not be revised. Branch v. State, 35 App. 304, 33 S. W. 356.

The granting of a new trial on account of infirmity of mind of defendant caused from drinking is in the discretion of the court. Branch v. State, 35 App. 304, 33 S. W. 356.

A new trial will not be granted because a witness does not swear what was expected of him where it does not appear that on another trial any other witness will swear differently. Mayfield v. State, 44 Tex. 55.

The denial of a new trial sought to procure evidence, the materiality of which was first disclosed by the state's evidence, held error. Dunham v. State, 3 App. 465.

Surprise occasioned by the state's testimony is not ordinarily ground for new trial. Robbins v. State, 33 App. 573, 28 S. W. 473; Adams v. State, 10 App. 677; Garner v. State, 34 App. 356, 30 S. W. 783.

That defendant was surprised by the evidence of his own witness is not ground for a new trial. Simmacher v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 512.

Absence of testimony.—The mere fact that there is absent testimony which might be procured on another trial is no ground for a new trial. Brown v. State, 16 Tex. 122.

Where accused's counsel, on the morning that a seduction case was set for trial, learned of two persons who claimed to have had sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness prior to the time accused became acquainted with her, and endeavored to locate them without success, but did not ask for a continuance because the trial judge had stated that if such motion was made he would change the venue to another county, though because of the failure to make such motion the absence of such witnesses as a legal ground for a new trial was waived, their absence presented strong, equitable grounds, justifying a new trial, if the ends of justice would be best served, especially where the evidence was in irreconcilable conflict and other matters prejudicial to accused occurred, though not sufficient in themselves to require a new trial. Cooper v. State, 72 App. 445, 163 S. W. 424.

Speedy trial.—A new trial will not be granted on the ground that defendant was too speedily tried, though the record shows that he was convicted on the same day that he was indicted, if he was represented by counsel, and went to trial without objection. Butler v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 757.

Trial jury.—Irregularities in forming the trial jury are not ground for new trial, unless the fairness of the trial is thereby affected. Grant v. State, 3 App. 1. Illegal organization of the trial jury is not ground for new trial. McMahon v. State, 17 App. 224.
Disqualification of a trial juror is not ground for new trial, unless it appears that such injury to juror resulted therefrom. Leeper v. State, 29 App. 196; Boren v. State, 22 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Leeper v. State, 27 App. 513, 11 S. W. 689, 4 L. R. A. 566. The fact that a juror who sat upon the trial was neither a householder nor a freeholder is not a statutory ground for new trial, and an appeal does not constitute reversible error unless injury to the defendant be shown. Leeper v. State, 29 App. 196; Boren v. State, 22 App. 28, 4 S. W. 463. And see, also, Sutt v. State, 26 App. 318, 17 S. W. 458. A new trial shall not be granted because one juror was neither a householder nor a freeholder. Williamson v. State, 26 App. 225, 36 S. W. 444.

Review of ruling on motion.—See notes under art. 538, post.

Art. 838. [818] In misdemeanors, granted when.—New trials in cases of misdemeanor may be granted for any of the causes specified in the preceding article, except that contained in subdivision one of said article.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 555.

See notes under art. 537.

Art. 839. [819] Must be applied for within two days, except.—A new trial must be applied for within two days after the conviction; but, for good cause shown, the court, in cases of felony, may allow the application to be made at any time before the adjournment of the term at which the conviction was had. When the court adjourns before the expiration of two days from the conviction, the motion shall be made before the adjournment.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 559.

Time for filing.—This article confides to the discretion of the court the determination whether an application for a new trial made after the two days shall be allowed, and the exercise of such discretion will not be revised unless abused. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 365; White v. State, 10 App. 167; Bullock v. State, 12 App. 42; Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 255; Leach v. State, 22 App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 55 Am. Rep. 635; Smith v. State, 15 App. 339. If the motion was made after the expiration of two days, and no sufficient excuse was shown, it will not be entertained. If it be entertained upon its merits by the trial court, it will be presumed, on appeal, that good cause was shown why it was not filed in time. Valentine v. State, 6 App. 439; Hart v. State, 21 App. 163, 17 S. W. 421; Hernandez v. State, 18 App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 255.

Striking of supplemental motion for new trial held not an abuse of discretion. Spencer v. State, 34 App. 65, 29 S. W. 159.

If motion for a new trial is not filed within two days after the conviction, reason for the delay must be shown. Holloway v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 884.

Where motion for new trial is not filed within two days after conviction, if no good reason is shown why it was not filed in time, the case will be treated as if no motion was filed. Young v. State, 54 App. 379, 115 S. W. 17. A new trial for want of proper transfer from one county court must be made in limine. Miller v. State, 59 App. 249, 123 S. W. 117.

A motion to strike a motion for new trial, because not filed within two days after the trial, nor until after sentence, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and its action in sustaining the motion will not be disturbed, unless the result of prejudice, and injustice resulted. Moray v. State, 61 App. 549, 135 S. W. 568.

Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant's attorneys were granted all the time they desired in which to file a motion for new trial. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Where an application for a new trial, filed after two days after conviction, is not sworn to, and does not pray for permission to file it, the court on appeal will presume that the trial court in the exercise of discretion properly refused to allow it, in the absence of any evidence presented by bill of exceptions or otherwise on the motion to strike the application from the record. Burton v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 365.

Assignments of error filed, four months subsequent to the adjournment of the term of court at which accused was convicted, could not be considered. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 888.

A motion for new trial filed after the term at which the conviction occurred comes too late. Kinch v. State, 70 App. 419, 156 S. W. 619.

Where the judge absented himself during a prosecution for felony, and accused desired to present the question on appeal, the court's action should be excepted to and reversed by the court as not being the motion for new trial, and cannot be raised by affidavit not filed until 80 days after adjournment, even though the judge's absence was a ground of the motion for new trial, though by agreement with the court this matter was not urged for new trial. Romero v. State, 72 App. 1029, 160 S. W. 1198.

Must be disposed of during term.—A motion for new trial must be disposed of at the term at which it was made. Wilcox v. State, 31 Tex. 556.

Amendment of motion.—Whether an amended motion for new trial would be permitted after the time allowed by law for the filing of a motion for new trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and, in the absence of an abuse of discretion, the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal. Torrez v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 523; Carusales v. State, 47 App. 1, 92 S. W. 1035; Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 257.

A motion for new trial must be made during the term at which the conviction was had, and hence an amendment made at a subsequent term was properly overruled. Wilkins v. State, 15 App. 430.

An objection to the admissibility of evidence comes too late, and will not be considered, when first made in the amended motion for new trial. Stars v. State, 62 App. 556, 140 S. W. 777.

Filing evidence.—Where the testimony relied upon as a ground for a new trial was not filed until after adjournment of the term of court at which the accused was convicted, such ground could not be reviewed. Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 906; Ewald v. State, 60 App. 295, 133 S. W. 283; Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 324; Cloud v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 892; Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 75; Francis v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 779; Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 753.

A Court of Criminal Appeals will not consider ex parte affidavits secured after adjournment of the trial term. Boyce v. State, 62 App. 374, 137 S. W. 116.

Evidence taken on the question whether the jury discussed defendant's failure to testify before arriving at their verdict, not filed until after term time, cannot be considered on appeal. Pulley v. State, 70 App. 126, 159 S. W. 935.

Art. 840. [820] Motions for new trial shall be in writing.—All motions for new trial shall be in writing, and shall set forth distinctly the grounds upon which the new trial is asked.

For forms of such motions, see Wilson's Cr. Forms, 599, 560.

1. Jurisdiction.
2. Statement of grounds.
3. — Reference to bill of exceptions.
4. — Competency of jurors.
5. — Rulings on evidence.
6. — Charge of court.
6 1/2. — Verdict contrary to law and evidence.
7. — Newly discovered evidence.

10. — Oath administered by attorney in case.
11. — Amendment of motion.
12. — Affidavits and other proofs in general.
13. — Affidavits as to newly-discovered evidence.
14. — By proposed witnesses.

1. Jurisdiction.—If, after conviction, the presiding judge exchanges with another, the latter may hear and determine the motion for a new trial. State v. Womack, 17 Tex. 297.

Where no notice of appeal was given until after the motion for a new trial was overruled, the giving of an appeal recognition intended to be only temporary, and which was set aside on the hearing of the motion, a new recognizance being then given, did not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction of the motion. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 567.

2. Statement of grounds.—Where a motion for new trial was based upon the ground that appellant did not have sufficient time in which to prepare his defense, and the only thing specified was the overruling of a motion for continuance, which the appellate court holds was properly overruled, no ground is shown for reversal. Kuykendall v. State, 60 App. 254, 131 S. W. 1099.

An objection embodied in a motion for a new trial must point out the error relied upon that the court may know in what the complaint consists. Ellington v. State, 63 App. 420, 140 S. W. 1102.

Where the court is called on by motion for new trial to reconsider the refusal of a continuance, the truth, materiality, and sufficiency of its allegations are to be considered in connection with the evidence adduced at the trial. Wade v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 216.

A motion for a new trial in a homicide case on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the testimony, that the court failed to charge all the law of self-defense, to charge as to defendant's knowledge of deceased's character and disposition from what occurred just prior to the killing, as to deceased's threats and condition, the proof showing him to be boisterous and under the influence of liquor, and that he followed up defendant and renewed the difficulty, or to charge with regard to deceased's taking defendant's money without his consent, and because of newly discovered evidence, was too general to present any question for consideration on appeal. Jackson v. State, 71 App. 297, 158 S. W. 813.

Discretion not appearing in accused's motion for new trial cannot be considered on appeal. Haynes v. State, 71 App. 31, 159 S. W. 1059.

Where neither the motion for a continuance, which admittedly did not conform to the statutory requirements, nor the motion for a new trial, stated what the defendant intended to prove by the witnesses which he might desire to use, and it did appear that those witnesses knew nothing of the immediate transaction, the action of the court in overruling the motion will not be reviewed. Valdez v. State, 71 App. 487, 106 S. W. 411.

Under Supreme Court rules (142 S. W. 71 et seq.), providing that in a motion for a new trial all grounds relied on shall be stated, or the court on appeal will not consider such grounds, the court on appeal will not consider bills of exceptions complaining of matters not presented to the trial court in the motion for a new trial. Grant v. State, 75 App. 279, 165 S. W. 142.

In a motion for a new trial in a criminal case every error upon which the defendant intends to rely should be presented to the trial court. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 899.
A motion for a new trial should always contain each ground relied upon, that the trial court may have the chance to correct its own error, if any has been committed.

3. — Reference to bill of exceptions.—Ground of motion for new trial, assigning error in admitting evidence and referring to a bill of exceptions omitted from the transcript, cannot be reviewed.

4. — Competency of jurors.—New trial may not be had on the ground that a juror in the case was disqualified because of insufficient residence in the county; there being nothing to show what statement the juror made, or what effort to discover what matter of his residence was made, no direct statement that his disqualification was unknown, nor any direct proof that his residence had not been sufficient, but merely an averment that the fact of his disqualification was unknown to defendant when the jury was impaneled, that his answers to questions propounded by the court were supposed to be true, and therefore he did not feel that diligence required him to interrogate the juror on questions to which he had already made answer to the court, and that subsequent to the trial, on a voir dire examination of the juror, it developed he had not lived six months in the county, and the court held him disqualified as a juror.

5. — Rulings on evidence.—An objection in a murder case to the introduction of a divorce decree in favor of defendant's wife, that it was immaterial and irrelevant, was too general.

Clayton v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 119.

It cannot be said that the court erred in denying a motion for new trial on the ground that the defendant was not refused a sufficient opportunity to present his own evidence, when the defendant is not relieved on this ground, or his case is not insufficiently proved, or insufficient in any manner, where the time of confinement was not shown in the motion.

Peters v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 212.

6. — Charge of court.—A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the court erred in refusing special charges specified as requested by accused, was too general.

Where a motion for new trial merely complained that the court erred in its charges, the assignment of error was too general to be considered on appeal.

Objections, on a motion for new trial, that the court erred in paragraphs of his charge, specified by number, are too general to be reviewable.

Wright v. State, 63 App. 664, 141 S. W. 238; Keeton v. State, 59 App. 316, 123 S. W. 404; Lemons v. State, 59 App. 299, 123 S. W. 415; Phillips v. State, 59 App. 554, 128 S. W. 1190; Fifer v. State, 64 App. 298, 141 S. W. 993; Rippeto v. State (Cr. App.) 118 S. W. 811; Objection in new trial, that the court erred in instructing on accused's rights to prevent decedent from taking accused's money, is insufficient to present any question of accused's right to act in defense of the property.

Objection in a motion for new trial, that the charge as a whole is upon the weight of the evidence, is too general to be considered.

When error is assigned upon the charge either by the bill of exceptions or the motion for new trial, the specific error relied upon must be pointed out, and it is not sufficient to copy the charge complained of into the bill or motion.

Beauchamp v. State, 63 App. 263, 140 S. W. 104.

Where a charge given in a prosecution for burglary is set out, objection in a motion for new trial that "said definition is inaccurate, misleading and calculated to mislead the jury to defendant's prejudice," is too general. Dowling v. State, 63 App. 266, 146 S. W. 724.

Objections, in motion for a new trial, that the court erred in charging upon an issue of aggravated assault, in defining assault and battery rather than aggravated assault, in failing to define the law governing manslaughter and malice aforethought, etc., are too general to point out any specific error. Teel v. State, 62 App. 460, 140 S. W. 346.

A ground for new trial that the court erred in not charging that the witness was an accomplice, and in submitting to the jury the issue whether he was an accomplice, is too general for consideration on appeal. Franklin v. State, 62 App. 438, 140 S. W. 1991.

A ground for new trial that the court erred in his main charge, wherein he attempted to charge the law defining who are principals, is too general to be considered. Jgb. v. State, 62 App. 416, 140 S. W. 1905.

An objection that the trial court erred in a paragraph of the main charge where he attempted to charge on circumstantial evidence is too general. Ellington v. State, 63 App. 424, 140 S. W. 1190.

Objection that the trial court in a larceny trial "erred in defining what is meant by 'fraudulent taking' " is too general. Ellington v. State, 62 App. 424, 140 S. W. 1190.

Objection that the trial court erred in that part of the charge wherein he attempted to define principals, because the definition is incorrect, misleading, confusing, and tends to prejudice accused's rights, is too general to be reviewed. Ellington v. State, 63 App. 427, 140 S. W. 1191.

Objection that an instruction is not and never was the law is too general. Ellington v. State, 62 App. 420, 140 S. W. 1192.

Complaint in a motion for new trial after conviction for an assault with intent to commit rape that the court erred in its charge because it was confusing and misleading is not sufficiently explicit to require consideration. Conger v. State, 63 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

A ground for a motion for new trial that "the court erred in failing to charge the jury on manslaughter, as requested by the defendant, because the evidence fully sustained such charge," without any requested charge, is too general to be considered. Luster v. State, 63 App. 541, 141 S. W. 299, Ann. C. 1913D, 1058.

Objection to an instruction in a criminal case is not reviewable where the bill of exceptions and the motion for new trial fail to specify the ground of objection. Adams v. State, 64 App. 61, 141 S. W. 557.

A motion for new trial, complaining of the refusal of instructions, should state some reason or fact to show the applicability of the instructions. Fifer v. State, 64 App. 203, 141 S. W. 985.

A motion for a new trial in a criminal prosecution, which simply says that the court erred in refusing to grant a party's special charge "in one paragraph," is too general to preserve the alleged error for review on appeal. Baumgarner v. State, 64 App. 165, 142 S. W. 4.

A ground of motion for a new trial in a criminal prosecution that a paragraph of the court's charge was vague, indefinite, and unintelligible, and was calculated to and did mislead the jury, is too general to require consideration on appeal. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 178.

A motion for a new trial alleged error in refusing accused's special charge No. 1, "which is a peremptory instruction of the defendant, instructing them to find a verdict for said defendant," and in refusing special charge No. 2, "to the effect that the innuendoes set out in the indictment form no part of the same," and alleged manner in refusing other charges named. Held, that the motion was not sufficiently specific to require the appellate court to review error in refusing the charges, even had the case been a felony case. Curl v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 652.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the court erred in the instructions, and in every part thereof, raises no question for review on appeal, being too general. Henry v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 879.

Assignments of error in a motion for a new trial "because the court erred in each and every paragraph of his general charge beginning with paragraph 6 and ending with paragraph 12, as said paragraphs did not present the law applicable to the facts proven on the trial," and "because the court erred in failing to instruct the jury in his general charge all the law applicable to the issues involved in the case," are too general to be considered. Hogue v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 905.

Assignments of error in a motion for a new trial "because the court erred in each and every paragraph of his general charge beginning with paragraph 6 and extending to and including paragraph 12, in which charge the issue of murder in the first degree was submitted, because such issue was not raised by the evidence and permitted the jury to find defendant guilty of a crime not supported by the evidence, such error being material and calculated to injure defendant's rights, and similar objections to other parts of the charge dealing with murder in the second degree and manslaughter, were too general to be considered on appeal. Vines v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 727.
An allegation on a motion for a new trial that "the court erred in not instructing the jury that defendant had the right to presume that deceased was going to attack him with a deadly weapon" is too general to require consideration. Blue v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 726.

A complaint on appeal that the court erred in failing to charge on the law of manslaughter, and in submitting that issue under the facts in the case, was too general to require consideration. Summers v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 774.

An objection to the charge as a whole, and to each paragraph therein, without a statement of any grounds or reasons for the objection, was insufficient. Waters v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

A ground in a motion for a new trial in a prosecution for homicide that the court erred "in its charge to the jury, especially in reference to insanity and discretion, is insufficient for its generality to present the case or the charge on insanity and drunkenness." Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1061.

A ground for a motion for a new trial in a prosecution for homicide, which charges that the court erred "in its charge to the jury * * * in failing to submit manslaughter," is insufficient because of its generality. Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1062.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, there were 17 special charges requested, 2 of which were given by the court, a ground in a motion for a new trial that the court erred "in refusing the several special charges" requested by defendant is too general. Teague v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1063.

An assignment that the court "misdirected the jury as to the law in the charge" given is insufficient. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 119 S. W. 190.

An assignment of error on the ground that a charge was confusing, disconnected, and not applicable to the facts in the case is too general to be considered. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 827.

An assignment of error in accused's motion for a new trial, stating merely "that the special charge was too general to be considered, since the motion for new trial must so definitely specify the reasons why the action complained of is erroneous as to direct the court's attention to the precise error complained of." Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 926.

An assignment of error, on the ground that "the court erred in its charge to the jury in defining manslaughter," is too general to require attention. Alexander v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 897.

Error in instructing on the law of manslaughter, induced by the reading by the state's counsel of certain inapplicable decisions, should have been taken advantage of by accused in his motion for a new trial. Huffman v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 636.

An assignment of error based on the denial of a new trial, because the court did not charge on impeaching testimony generally, and did not limit the effect of the testimony of a witness contradicting the testimony of an impeaching witness, and did not charge on the impeaching testimony of prosecutrix given before the grand jury, is too general, and will not be considered on appeal. Cain v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 147.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the court erred in not charging on mutual combat, defendant's testimony warranting such charge, was too general to present any question for review on appeal. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 886.

An assignment of error in an instruction that the court erred in failing to give special charge numbered as stated, is too general to be considered, since the motion for new trial must so definitely specify the reasons why the action complained of is erroneous as to direct the court's attention to the precise error complained of. Annewill v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1511.

In a prosecution for homicide, an assignment of error in the motion for new trial that the court erred in not submitting to the jury in its charge the issue of manslaughter is too general to require consideration on appeal. Garrett v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 251.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the court erred in failing and refusing to give a requested instruction because such instruction was not applied to the case, was too general. Dunn v. State, 71 App. 89, 158 S. W. 361.

A motion for a new trial on the ground that the court erred in his charge to the jury was too general, not pointing out what part of the charge was erroneous, or in what respect. Kimball v. State, 71 App. 482, 156 S. W. 396.

An objection to charges numbered on first and second degree murder, manslaughter, and self-defense, on the ground that the charge violated accused's rights, in that the issues were not raised by the evidence, and because the charge was "incomplete, improper, and incorrect as propositions of law, and hurtful to the rights of defendant." was not sufficiently specific to authorize a review of the charge. Matthews v. State, 72 App. 654, 163 S. W. 723.

Where the motion for a new trial merely stated that the court erred in refusing to give certain specified charges, and in giving certain charges without pointing out the error in the charge as given, or assigning any reason why the requested charges should have been given, the alleged errors would not be reviewed; there being no fundamental error complained of, since the errors must be pointed out to the trial court or they cannot be urged on appeal. Berry v. State, 72 App. 203, 163 S. W. 964.

A motion for a new trial because the only incriminating testimony was that of accomplice, and was not corroborated, and because the court erred in refusing to give a charge submitting the issue as to whether or not one of such witnesses was an accomplice, sufficiently raised the contention that the evidence made an issue as to whether the witness was an accomplice, and that the court erred in refusing to submit that issue. Goldstein v. State, 52 App. 558, 188 S. W. 149.

An objection that an instruction was misleading and calculated to prejudice accused is too general. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 457.

6/2. — Verdict contrary to law or evidence.—A motion alleging that the conviction for nonpayment of poll tax was not warranted by the evidence, is too general to review on appeal. Murphy v. State, 50 App. 552, 121 S. W. 168.

The ground of motion for new trial, "Because the verdict is not supported by the facts and the judgment is contrary to the law," is not sufficient to point out mistakes in the charge in respect to the punishment, so as to make it available on appeal. In the absence of exception to it at the trial. Robbins v. State, 57 App. 8, 121 S. W. 504.

Objections in a motion for new trial that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence, and that the instructions were contrary to the law and evidence, are too general to be reviewed. Springer v. State, 63 App. 266, 140 S. W. 98.

The motion on the ground of newly discovered evidence must be sworn to by the defendant, or by his counsel, and when sworn to by his counsel must negative the defendant's knowledge of the existence of the evidence at the time of the trial, and that the defendant could not have discovered it in time for the trial by the use of ordinary diligence. Tuttle v. State, 6 App. 550; Campbell v. State, 23 Tex. 490; Williams v. State, 7 App. 163.

A motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence should disclose such evidence. Miller v. State, 39 App. 436, 37 S. W. 728.

On motion for new trial a statement that certain facts were not known before trial and could not have been discovered does not show diligence. Wilson v. State, 37 App. 61, 38 S. W. 619.

A motion does not show diligence by simply alleging that the facts were not known to defendant, and could not have been discovered by the use of ordinary diligence. Wilson v. State, 37 App. 156, 38 S. W. 1015.

On motion for a new trial in a homicide case on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the motion set out that immediately after the killing and while accused was under great excitement he made a statement to the absent witness tending to explain the cause of the homicide, but did not otherwise set out the circumstances under which the statement was made. Held, that the motion did not point out error of law or of fact. This statement if admissible as a res gestae statement, so that there was no error in refusing a new trial. Davis v. State, 60 App. 629, 132 S. W. 932.

Where a motion for new trial in a homicide case on the ground of newly discovered evidence does not disclose facts that would excuse the defendant from the diligence necessary in procuring the attendance of a witness whose testimony was desired, there was no error in refusing a new trial. Davis v. State, 60 App. 630, 132 S. W. 933.

A motion for new trial for newly discovered testimony is insufficient which fails to show what, if any, diligence was used to secure such testimony, and fails to state in terms that it could not have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Turner v. State, 51 App. 147, 132 S. W. 1052.

A motion for new trial in a criminal cause, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, is insufficient, where it wholly fails to show diligence. Milam v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 185.

It was not error to refuse accused a new trial, asked on the ground of newly discovered testimony, where he did not certify that the witness would have testified to anything, or what the testimony would have been. Lancaster v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 301.

An application for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show that it was not owing to want of diligence that the evidence was not discovered, and that it did not come to accused's knowledge before the trial, and the allegations must, at least, be sufficient to entitle accused to a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness. Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 227.

New trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was properly denied, where neither accused nor any one else swore to the motion, and the newly discovered witness did not make any affidavit. Fears v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 615.

Objections to the charge, not made a ground of motion for new trial, will not be considered on appeal. Frazier v. State, 61 App. 647, 135 S. W. 583.

A motion for new trial on a trial for statutory rape alleged that the court sustained an objection to evidence, and stated that it did not want to hear the theory of accused's counsel on which the evidence would be admissible, accused on appeal could not urge that the court erred in refusing to permit his attorney to state at the time what he expected to prove. Kearse v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 827.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict and judgment are contrary to the law and the evidence, only raises the question on appeal whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 386.

Under the new rules of procedure, effective since July 1, 1913, only such matters as are presented in accused's motion for new trial can be considered by the Court of Criminal Appeals. Jones v. State, 72 A1 152, 165 S. W. 256.

A motion for a new trial not sworn to by defendant nor his counsel, when the ground stated is newly discovered evidence, is entirely insufficient. Barber v. State, 55 App. 70, 31 S. W. 949; Tuttle v. State, 6 App. 566; Campbell v. State, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 403; Akins v. State (Cr. App.) 163, 59 S. W. 345.

An appellate court cannot say that defendant, who alleges in a motion for new trial that he was forced to trial when he did not have sufficient time to hire counsel, and, who at his request were appointed for him did not have time to prepare for trial, was forced to trial without the necessary preparations, where the motion for new trial is not sworn to and there is nothing in the record to show whether it was true or not. Robinson v. State, 58 App. 556, 128 S. W. 278.

Errors alleged in the motion for new trial, that the verdict was by lot and that the county attorney read the entire indictment to the jury, containing counts for both incest and rape, where accused only pleaded guilty to the incest count, cannot be considered on appeal, where such matters were not verified in any manner. Pilgrim v. State, 59 App. 498, 129 S. W. 363.

Where accused moved for a new trial on the ground that the foreman of the jury had been a member of the grand jury that presented the indictment, and that no plea of not guilty had been filed, but neither ground was verified, neither ground could be reviewed. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 625.

A motion for new trial, on the ground that the court erred in permitting witnesses named to testify, cannot be considered on appeal, when in no way verified. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 158.

In a criminal case, a ground of motion for a new trial, that a certain person, during the trial, gave unsworn, inflammatory, and prejudicial information to the jury, cannot be considered, where the motion was not verified, there were no affidavits that such incident took place, and the evidence in the ground of the motion was filed after adjournment of the term. McWhirter v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 189.

An unverified motion for new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury is insufficient. Bryant v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 1156.

A ground for motion for a new trial after conviction that some of the jurors were disqualified because they had expressed an opinion as to accused's guilt should be sworn to. Decker v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 564.

Where defendant contends in his motion for a new trial that the verdict of the jury was reached by lot, but the motion was not sworn to or in no way supported by any affidavit, the court need not consider it. Salmon v. State (Cr. App.) 161 S. W. 1025.

A motion for new trial for misconduct of the jury should be sworn to or supported by affidavit. Brice v. State, 72 App. 219, 162 S. W. 874.

A new trial for misconduct of the jury in commenting on defendant's failure to testify was properly denied, where the motion was not sworn to, and was not supported by affidavit or other evidence. Gorrell v. State, 73 App. 232, 164 S. W. 1012.

A motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant had learned that he could prove by the father of prosecutrix that she was over the age of consent prior to the alleged offense was properly overruled, where the motion was not sworn to by any person, and there was no attached affidavit that the father would so testify, or any reason why, if he would so testify, an affidavit to that effect was not so attached. Magee v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 96.

A motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was reached by lot, not sworn to by appellant or any one else, and not supported by the independent affidavit of any one, was insufficient; and even though sworn to was a nullity, if made before appellant's attorney, and could not be considered by the Court of Criminal Appeals. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

Denial of motion for new trial on the ground that a juror was not qualified because he had not resided in the county six months, prior to the time he served.
as juror, not verified or supported by any evidence, presents no error. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 149.

Where defendant's bill of exceptions to the overruling of his motion for new trial showed that one of the grounds of the motion was that the attorney who represented the state was one of the grand jury panel which found the indictment, but this was in no way substantiated other than by a ground of the motion, signed by defendant's attorney and not sworn to by any one, no error was presented. Chumley v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 345.

Affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial for newly discovered evidence cannot properly be taken before the applicant's attorney. Cuellar v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 225; Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 610; Gordon v. State, 72 App., 156 S. W. 528.

An affidavit made by accused in connection with a new trial for newly discovered evidence should not be made before accused's counsel, but before a court reporter. Peters v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 212; McGinsey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 285.

In a criminal proceeding, neither a private prosecuting counsel nor any counsel interested in the case can take the affidavits of jurors in order to contest defendant's motion for new trial. Maples v. State, 60 App., 163 S. W. 567.

Affidavits by jurors setting up that the jury returned a quotient verdict, where the accused's attorney who was a notary, must be disregarded; the notary being a court officer. Crutchfield v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 114.

Where the affidavits raising the issue whether the jury discussed defendant's failure to testify before arriving at their verdict were sworn to before one of the attorneys in the case, they were properly stricken from the record. Pullen v. State, 79 App., 166 S. W. 926.

11. Amendment of motion.—Time for filing, see art. 839, and notes. The proposition as well as the reasons for an assignment of error must be stated in the motion for a new trial in a criminal case; it not being permissible to subsequently file assignments of error pointing out the error claimed. Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 928.

Assignments of error filed after the adjournment of the court for the term at which accused was tried, raising questions not presented to the trial court in a motion for new trial, will not be reviewed. 157 S. W. 152.

An amended motion for a new trial could not be filed without leave of court after the denial of the original motion; defendant's remedy being by an application to the court to set aside the order overruling the original motion and to grant the motion as amended. Brasher v. State, 72 App., 163 S. W. 129.

A document filed after the adjournment of the term at which the trial was had, and upon a motion for new trial, certified by the court reporter, but not approved by the court, would not be considered. Graham v. State, 79 App., 166 S. W. 726.

12. Affidavits and other proofs in general.—A codefendant is not competent as a supporting witness on a motion for a new trial, unless no evidence was developed against him. Delaney v. State, 41 Tex. 606.

In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, where a motion for new trial was denied on the ground that there was no evidence upon which the failure of defendant to take the stand, but was not verified by defendant's affidavit, or other proof offered to support it, it was properly overruled, where the affidavit of all the jurors distinctly negative this ground for the motion. Ray v. State, 69 App., 131 S. W. 342.

Denial of a motion for a new trial on the ground that a juror could not read or write English, not supported by proof, is not erroneous. Gentry v. State, 61 App., 126 S. W. 59.

Where an application for a continuance is overruled, it and its contents will be considered from the standpoint of the facts as introduced before the jury, when raised on motion for new trial. Davis v. State, 64 App., 6, 141 S. W. 264.

A statement in a motion for new trial that accused believes a state of facts to exist does not present a matter for review, unless there is some evidence in support of the statement. Jones v. State, 64 App., 510, 145 S. W. 621.

An allegation in a motion for a new trial as to a disqualification of a juror will not be considered on appeal from a conviction where neither supported by evidence nor affidavit. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 622.

Where it appeared that the trial court heard evidence on defendant's motion for a new trial, but the evidence so heard was not in the record, the Court of Appeals would conclude that the testimony did not sustain the motion. Hoskins v. State, 73 App., 107, 163 S. W. 426.

13. Affidavits as to newly-discovered evidence.—The motion must be accompanied by the affidavits of the witnesses by whom it is alleged the newly discovered evidence was produced, detailing the facts they will testify to, or if such affidavits cannot be obtained, good cause for failing to obtain them must be shown. West v. State, 2 App., 210; Blake v. State, 3 App., 651; Love v. State, 1d, 501; Evans v. State, 8 App., 513; Polesor v. State, 1d, 510; Dill v. State, 1d, 113; Williams v. State, 7 App., 163; Stanley v. State, 16 App., 362; Parker v. State, 65 App., 464, 140 S. W. 337; McGinsey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 268; McDowell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 521; Clay v. State, 75 App., 184 S. W. 1; O'Fallon v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 897; Arias v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 946; Spikes v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 614.
The refusal of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is not error where there was no proof of the newly discovered evidence by affidavit, and no reason stated why affidavits were not procured. Laird v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 260; Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 622; Bracher v. State, 72 App. 195, 161 S. W. 124.

A motion for a new trial averring that one jointly indicted with accused had been discharged subsequent to accused’s trial, and that he would testify to alleged facts exonerating accused, was insuficient, where no affidavit of the proposed witness was incorporated in the record, and there was nothing to verify any statement to which he would testify, and the motion was not sworn to by accused. Martin v. State, 57 App. 595, 124 S. W. 651.

An affidavit as to new evidence on application for a new trial as to what a member of the grand jury told affiant is not proof of the record, and is hearsay. Vaughn v. State, 62 App. 24, 136 S. W. 476.

On motion for rehearing, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider affidavits filed for the first time in that court, alleging that since the judgment was affirmed newly discovered evidence has come to accused’s knowledge. Since the appellate court cannot consider matters not brought to the attention of the trial court. Wood v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 134.

Where the record did not show the affidavit of accused, or of a witness, that the latter would testify as claimed by accused in his motion for new trial, and accused, trying the case without the assistance of an attorney, did not account for his failure to have the witness so testify at the trial, otherwise than by the unsworn statement in the motion that he did not know how to bring out his defense, a new trial was properly denied, in the absence of any showing why he was not represented on the trial by an attorney. Bellov v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 642.

14. By proposed witnesses.—Where the affidavits of the witnesses were not attached to the motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and no evidence was offered on the hearing of the motion, its denial cannot be reviewed on appeal. Stallworth v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 233; Burrell v. State, 65 App. 64, 138 S. W. 707.

A new trial for newly discovered evidence, supported by an affidavit of accused averring that he had been informed by a former sheriff after his conviction that he could prove by a third person that accused did not alight from a train at a station as proved by the state, but not supported by the affidavit of the former sheriff or by the testimony or the hearing of the motion because of his failure to remember the particulars of the conversation had with the third person, was properly denied. Polk v. State, 60 App. 462, 132 S. W. 134.

Forced error, for which a new trial is asked, in denying a first application for a continuance to procure absent witnesses is entitled to greater consideration if the affidavit of the witness that he would testify as alleged is attached to the motion for new trial. Sharp v. State, 71 App. 633, 180 S. W. 369.

Art. 841. [821] State may controvert truth of causes set forth, etc.—The state may take issue with the defendant upon the truth of the causes set forth in the motion for a new trial; and, in such case, the judge shall hear evidence, by affidavit or otherwise, and determine the issue.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 960. See ante, art. 613, and notes.

Former practice.—The practice seems to have been in accordance with this article before its adoption. Dignowitty v. State, 17 Tex. 531, 67 Am. Dec. 670; Reynolds v. State, 7 App. 816.

Right of state in general to controvert grounds for new trial.—Counter affidavits may be received on behalf of the state. Dignowitty v. State, 17 Tex. 521; Childs v. State, 10 App. 183; Richardson v. State, 22 App. 216, 12 S. W. 870; Ulrich v. State, 30 App. 61, 16 S. W. 768; Reynolds v. State, 7 App. 516.

On motion for a new trial the state may controvert the application for a continuance as to diligence, when the refusal of such application is made a ground for a new trial, although the application was not controverted upon this ground in the instance. Walker v. State, 33 App. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 716, note.

Affidavits contesting the materiality and truthfulness of the alleged absent testimony are permissible only on motion for new trial, and not on a motion for continuance. Attaway v. State, 31 App. 475, 20 S. W. 925.

A county attorney has the right to contest any ground of the motion for new trial that suggests itself to him as not being well taken, or about which there might be a controversy as to the facts attending the grounds of the motion. Johnson v. State, 59 App. 11, 127 S. W. 559.

Under this article the court may hear counter affidavits and oral proof on a motion for a new trial. Dougherty v. State, 59 App. 464, 128 S. W. 393.

Contents of counter affidavits.—The controverting affidavits may show that the newly discovered testimony is not material, that the motion was made for the day, or that the witness is a fictitious person or was absent by defendant’s procurement. Sargent v. State, 35 App. 325, 23 S. W. 364.

Answer to counter affidavits.—Where accused desires time to answer controverting affidavits, he should ask for same before commencement of argument on the motion. Lawrence v. State, 36 App. 173, 36 S. W. 294.

Failure of state to take issue on motion.—It is only when the state has taken issue with the defendant upon the truth of the matters set forth in the motion for a new trial.
new trial, that the trial judge is required to hear evidence by affidavit or otherwise. And when not controverted by the state, the supporting affidavit is required, except where the ground of the motion is newly discovered evidence, in which case the supporting affidavit of the proposed witness is required, if it can be obtained. Stanley v. State, 15 App. 292. And also that of the defendant's. Terry v. State, 4 App. 276.

Where in a motion for a new trial, verified by the affidavit of the defendant, it was alleged that the defendant had entered the plea of guilty without being advised of the consequences of such plea, and under improper influences, it was held that the new trial should have been granted, notwithstanding the judgment entry reciting that the defendant "in open court duly entered his plea of guilty," the state not having controverted the truth of such ground. Harris v. State, 17 App. 530.

In a trial for the theft of hogs, where the value of the hogs was a material issue, and the evidence upon that issue was uncertain, the defendant moved for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, which tended strongly to show that the hogs were of less value than twenty dollars, the conviction being for a felony, which motion was accompanied by the affidavits of witnesses, and showed diligence, etc., and was sworn to by the defendant, and not controverted by the state; it was held that the new trial should have been granted. Moore v. State, 18 App. 212; Richardson v. State, 22 App. 216, 12 S. W. 870; Ulrich v. State, 39 App. 61, 16 S. W. 760; Kelley v. State, 31 App. 211, 20 S. W. 365.

Newly discovered evidence.—When a motion based upon the ground of newly discovered evidence has been contested by the state in the trial court, and testimony heard thereon, the refusal of the motion will not be reviewed on appeal, unless it clearly appears that such ruling was erroneous. White v. State, 19 App. 313.

A new trial sought for newly discovered evidence held properly refused where the state's affidavits showed that the evidence was not worthy of credit or likely to change the result. Smith v. State, 38 App. 446, 12 S. W. 1184.

Misconduct of Jury.—See notes under art. 837, subd. 8.

Oral evidence.—When issue has been joined on the truth of the causes assigned in the motion, the trial judge is required to hear evidence by "affidavit or otherwise," and this authorizes him to hear oral evidence. Childs v. State, 10 App. 184; Reynolds v. State, 7 App. 516; Rucker v. State, 17 App. 516; Wilson v. State, 17 App. 515; Richardson v. State, 28 App. 216, 12 S. W. 870; Kelley v. State, 31 App. 211, 20 S. W. 365; Calyon v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 591.

Review of ruling on motion.—See notes under art. 556, post.

The determination of a motion for new trial on conflicting affidavits will not be disturbed on appeal, unless clearly erroneous. White v. State, 19 App. 313.

Art. 842. [822] Judge shall not discuss the evidence, etc.—In granting or refusing a new trial, the judge shall not sum up, discuss or comment upon the evidence in the case, but shall simply grant or refuse the motion, without prejudice to either the state or the defendant.

See arts. 734, 736, 756, 787, ante.

Effect of disregard of article.—The inhibition contained in this article should, in the interest of justice be strictly observed, but the disregard of it will not necessitate the reversal of conviction on appeal when no error to appellant's prejudice is discovered. Rocha v. State, 48 App. 199, 63 S. W. 1026; Rains v. State, 7 App. 388.

One of the grounds of prejudice set up in the motion to transfer this case was that at the former trial the jury, upon a verdict of guilt, assessed a fine of $50 against the defendant, and that in awarding the new trial applied for, the judge refused it on the ground set up in the motion, but granted it upon his own motion, as a matter of law, from the bench, because the penalty assessed was totally inadequate. This action of the trial judge was not an abuse of his discretion, and does not constitute cause for reversal. It would have been otherwise had the judge made his statement in the presence of the persons subsequently impaneled as jurors for the trial of this case. Johnson v. State, 31 App. 486, 20 S. W. 353.

It is not cause for reversal that immediately after setting aside the first verdict the trial judge increased the defendant's bail bond to an amount beyond his ability to give. The defendant's remedy by habeas corpus to reduce bail was not affected by this action of the court. Johnson v. State, 31 App. 486, 20 S. W. 353.

Art. 843. [823] Effect of a new trial.—The effect of a new trial is to place the cause in the same position in which it was before any trial had taken place. The former convictions shall be regarded as no presumption of guilt, nor shall it be alluded to in the argument. [O. C. 674.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 931.

See art. 945, post.

Effect in general.—Where, on appeal, a new trial is ordered, the case stands in the same condition as it if the new trial had been granted in the trial court. Cox v. State, 7 App. 456; Drake v. State, 29 App. 366, 15 S. W. 725; Fuller v. State, 30 App. 671; House v. State, 6 App. 567.

This article is self-expressive, and trial de novo on merits, as though the case had never been tried, follows the granting of a new trial. Beardall v. State, 8 App. 263.

Where the accused has been acquitted of murder and convicted of manslaughter and a new trial has been granted the same evidence used on the first trial is admissible on the second. Cornelius v. State, 54 App. 173, 113 S. W. 1651.

With prejudice in several counts with violations of the liquor law was convicted on one count only, a new trial should proceed alone on that count. Broadnax v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1183.

The Constitution gives the district court exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal cases grade of a felony, and Code Cr. Proc. 1911, arts. 98, 771, 812 respectively, provide that upon the trial of a felony case, whether the proof develop a felony or misdemeanor, the court shall determine the case as to any offense included in the charge; that where for prosecution is as for offenses of several degrees, the jury may find the defendant guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment; and that the effect of a new trial is to place the cause in the same position as it was before any trial had. Held that, where accused was indicted for assault with intent to murder, the reversal on appeal of a conviction of an aggravated assault will not, in view of Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 945, providing that, where the Court of Criminal Appeals awards a new trial, the cause shall stand as it would have stood if a new trial had been granted by the court below, deprive the district court of jurisdiction to hear the case upon retrial, though the county court has original jurisdiction of misdemeanors. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 912.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 993, providing that, in all appeals from convictions for felony where bail is allowed, the form of recognizance therein set forth, and which recites that accused and the sureties acknowledge themselves indebted to the state conditioned that accused shall appear before the court from day to day and remain in term to term and not depart therefrom without leave. In order to abide a judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals shall be sufficient, and article 842, providing that the effect of a new trial is to place the accused in the same position in which he was before any trial had taken place, a bond given, to secure the defendant to be convicted of the offense as for offenses of the same degree as for offenses of the same grade, the trial court in giving a charge that the defendant is not liable upon accused's nonappearance on the new trial, even though no bail bond was given prior to the first conviction, in view of the fact that article 993 was enacted 21 years after the Court of Criminal Appeals had so held with reference to appeals in misdemeanor cases, and uses precisely the same language in specifying the form of a recognizance in felony cases as article 919 uses with reference to misdemeanor cases, and also in view of the long and uninterrupted acquiescence in that decision by the bench and bar. Sanders v. State, 79 App. 542, 128 S. W. 291.

Entry of pleas.—Dilatory pleas are available to a defendant on his second trial. Cox v. State, 7 App. 495.

The effect of a new trial is plainly laid down in the preceding article, and entering a plea in the former trial does not preclude a motion to set aside, exceptions, or any dilatory plea, on the subsequent trial. Cox v. State, 7 App. 495.

Request for instructions.—If special instructions requested on first trial are not asked on the second, they will be considered waived. Bracken v. State, 29 App. 362, 16 S. W. 192.

Setting aside order granting new trial.—After the court has granted a new trial he cannot set aside the judgment and then overrule the motion for a new trial. Mathis v. State, 49 App. 317, 59 S. W. 368.

New trial at same term.—When a motion for new trial is granted, the cause must be tried at the same term, but the defendant should not be unduly hurried to his prejudice. Lott v. State, 41 Tex. 121.

Allusion to or consideration of former conviction.—The court should not allude to the former conviction in its charge, though it is not improper in an offense of lesser grade to inform the jury that the defendant had been acquitted of a higher grade of the offense, and was on trial only for the lower grade. West v. State, 155, App. 150; Pharr v. State, 10 App. 485.

This article applies only where defendant is a second time on trial after conviction and new trial granted. Hargrove v. State, 33 App. 431, 26 S. W. 993.

State cannot bring out in examination of witness the fact that defendant has been convicted in a former trial of the case. Hamilton v. State, 46 App. 409, 51 S. W. 217.

On a second trial for the same offense the district attorney should not be allowed to mention the former trial, neither should any evidence of the same be admitted. Richardson v. State, 33 App. 518, 27 S. W. 129.

Witness on second trial may be contradicted by evidence given by him on former trial. This does not violate rule that former trial shall not be referred to. Tollett v. State (Cr. App.) 60 S. W. 994.

Where there is a casual or accidental allusion to a former conviction, and no discussion of the same is had, it will not affect cause for reversal. Moore v. State, 52 App. 336, 107 S. W. 543.

Counsel for State is not permitted to refer to former conviction in cross-examination of a witness even if the defendant's counsel has incidentally alluded to in such a way as probably not to have injured rights of defendant. Benson v. State, 56 App. 52, 118 S. W. 1059.

It is reversible error for the county attorney to ask defendant: "Have you not been convicted and given 10 years in this case?" though the question was not answered, and the court at once reinforced the attorney, and instructed the jury.
that the question should not be considered for any purpose. Wyatt v. State, 58 App. 141, 127 S. W. 928, 17 Am. St. Rep. 970.

On a trial on appeal for violating the local option law, remarks of the city attorney to the effect that the case was an appeal from a corporation court, where defendant was convicted, and for that reason the city attorney was in the case, were improper and in violation of the statute; a conviction in an inferior court being required to be tried de novo on appeal. Kirksey v. State, 58 App. 155, 122 S. W. 15.

The act of the prosecuting attorney in compelling accused to admit that he had been convicted in the case on a former trial before the court could make a ruling on objections interposed was misconduct necessitating a reversal. May v. State, 59 App. 141, 127 S. W. 822.

It was not error to permit the state to ask one of defendant’s witnesses, on cross-examination whether he had testified at a former trial. Grimes v. State, 64 App. 64, 141 S. W. 281.

Where on a criminal trial the result of former trials was not in evidence, but the jury discussed the former conviction and the punishment assessed and at least one juror agreed to a conviction because of the former convictions, the judgment would be reversed. Clements v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1127.

On the second trial of a prosecution for homicide a witness who plainly showed her prejudice to accused referred to the imposition of the death sentence on the first trial. The court instructed her not to volunteer testimony, and informed the jury to disregard her statement. Held, that while this article rendered the witness’ statement erroneous, the error is not prejudicial where accused declined to withdraw his announcement of ready and to consent to a continuance as suggested by the state, but merely objected to the whole matter, for accused having taken his chances on obtaining a favorable verdict below, cannot on appeal object to an error while a trial is still in progress. Coffman v. State, 72 App. 102, 103 S. W. 356.

It was error to compel accused as a witness in his own behalf to testify that he had been convicted on a prior trial of the same case though he invoked the benefit of the suspended sentence law. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 289.

Filing defendant to testify as a witness in his own behalf that he had been convicted on a prior trial of the same case was not rendered harmless because he had accepted jurors after they had testified on their voir dire that they had heard of the former conviction, nor because accused had filed certain pleas before the jury was impaneled in which such prior conviction appeared. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 299.

Where a former conviction has been set aside, reference thereto in argument on a subsequent trial is a violation of this article, and it is the court’s duty to see that the law is complied with in that regard. Ends v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 145.

Where a court stenographer was introduced by the state to prove for impeachment purposes that he had taken and transcribed the testimony of a witness on a former trial, the admission of his statement, that the copy of the testimony identified by him was the one filed in the Court of Criminal Appeals, thus disclosing defendant’s former conviction, was cured by an instruction that such statement should not be considered for any purpose. Witty v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 299.

Ground for new trial.—See art. 837, and notes.

Art. 844. [824] When new trial is refused, statement of facts, etc.—If a new trial be refused, a statement of facts may be drawn up and certified, and accompany the record as in civil suits. Where the defendant has failed to move for a new trial he is, nevertheless, entitled, if he appeals, to have a statement of the facts certified, and sent up with the record. [O. C. 673.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 982, 1027, 1028.

1. Right to statement of facts.

1. Right to statement of facts.—A defendant appealing after conviction held entitled to have a statement of facts certified and sent up, though he had not moved for a new trial. Babb v. State, 5 App. 172; Longley v. State, 5 App. 611.
One prosecuting his appeal in a criminal case has, under the statute, a right to a statement of facts certified as required by law and sent up with the record. Shaffer v. State, 58 App. 646, 127 S. W. 297.

Where accused was deprived, without his fault, and despite all reasonable diligence, of a statement of facts because of the oversight of the trial judge failing to approve a statement of facts as he intended to do when in the hands of the trial judge, the judgment of conviction will be reversed. Shaffer v. State, 58 App. 647, 127 S. W. 206.

Where, on appeal, the trial judge certified that, not agreeing that a statement of facts presented by accused was correct, he did not approve the same, but did not contradict accused's affidavit that on timely presentation of such statement and bill of exceptions he requested the judge, if he found the same incorrect, to prepare and file the same, and the judge replied, "All right," it sufficiently appeared that accused was without his fault deprived of such statement and bill, and the judgment of conviction will be reversed, and the cause remanded. Haak v. State, 60 App. 366, 132 S. W. 558.

A statement of facts was signed and approved by the attorneys on both sides, and the trial judge certified that he read and approved the facts, but neglected to sign it, but filed it with the proper officer, accused was entitled to a reversal to enable him to have a properly certified statement of facts before the court. Rawls v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 451.

Where a state's attorney lost one statement of facts submitted by counsel of one convicted of a misdemeanor, refused to agree to another, and failed to comply with one when requested to do so by the court, on advice of the opposing counsel that the court did not make such a statement of its own accord, but certified that the failure to include it in the record was through no fault of counsel for the defendant, all due diligence in endeavoring to have such a statement filed is shown to have been exercised, and the appellant is entitled to have the cause reversed and remanded. Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 902.

An appellant has the burden of preparing a complete statement of facts; consequently, where accused accepted a statement of facts which did not include a written statement, made by him to the prosecuting attorney and introduced in evidence by such attorney, he cannot complain of the loss of the statement by the prosecuting attorney after the trial, it appearing that the statement of facts was signed by the court and agreed to by counsel. Nobles v. State, 71 App. 121, 158 S. W. 1133.

Where the attorney for defendant and the county attorney agreed on a statement of facts and presented it to the county judge, the judge should approve it if correct, and, if not approved and filed, and his failure to do so authors reversal of a conviction. Sims v. State, 72 App. 533, 162 S. W. 1154.

Where in a case tried in May accused relied on the court stenographer to present the statement of facts to the district judge for approval, but through an oversight the statement was filed without hand, so effort to cure this defect was made until October when the district judge wrote the Court of Criminal Appeals, stating that he would have approved it, the judgment could not be reversed because accused was deprived of a statement of facts, as it was the duty of his attorney to place the statement of facts in the hands of the trial judge, with a request that he either approve it or prepare and file a statement of facts. Gomez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 711.

Where defendant was convicted of robbery, a capital offense, and on appeal was entitled to a copy of the notes of the court stenographer, so that his counsel might make out a statement of facts, and the stenographer furnished a complete statement of facts in narrative form, which his counsel refused to file because he claimed that it was not correct in some particulars, the denial of a deprivation of a statement of facts, so as to require a reversal. Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

3. — Requisites of motion for reversal.—A motion, not signed nor sworn to, to reverse and set the case, without consideration, because accused was denied his bills of exceptions by the trial court, without fault on his part, cannot be considered. Wooten v. State, 57 App. 89, 121 S. W. 703.

Where a motion for rehearing, filed after a judgment of conviction had been affirmed for want of a bill of exceptions and statement of facts in the record, charged that the delay was due to the fault of the trial judge, and that affidavits of the attorneys in support thereof would be filed, but no such affidavits were ever filed, there was no sufficient showing that the appellant was deprived of his bill of exceptions without fault on his part, and the rehearing will be denied. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 391, 159 S. W. 48.

4. — Diligence of accused.—See art. 845, and notes as to diligence.

Where the bills of exceptions are so modified by the court as to deprive accused of what he believes to be fair and correct, he must take the statutory steps to protect himself, and it is not sufficient to have the court certify that he signed the bills with his explanations, without the knowledge of accused. Wooten v. State, 57 App. 59, 121 S. W. 703.
Art. 844  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT  (Title 9)

While it may be ground for reversal that the accused is deprived of a statement of facts without any want of diligence on his part, a conviction will not be reversed, if the record does not show there is no evidence showing that he was unable to secure the statement, or was in any manner deprived of securing same. Abbott v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 169.

Where it did not appear that defendant ever filed an affidavit stating that he was unable to pay the stenographer to make out a statement of facts, or that, after refusal of his verbal application to the court to require the furnishing of such a statement, he failed to agree with the stenographer, he presented it to the trial judge, informing him of such disagreement and requesting him to prepare and file a statement, he was not entitled to have the judgment reversed for failure to secure a statement of facts. Smith v. State, 70 App. 241, 156 S. W. 224.

Where appellant's affidavit showed that he presented to the county judge a statement of facts for his approval, that the county judge refused to approve it and failed to make out and file a statement of facts in the cause, so that it was not appellant's fault that there was no statement of facts in the record, he was deprived of a statement of facts without negligence on his part, for which his conviction will be reversed. Cruz v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 790.

5. Decisions not reviewable without statement of facts.—In the absence of a statement of facts or bill of exceptions in the record, on appeal, the court will only consider such evidence, or information of the indications of the charge of the court thereunder, with respect to any statement of facts which could legally have been proved, and such bills of exception, if there be any, as can be derived from all the evidence and knowledge of it. It will be presumed that all the material averments in the indictment were proved by

Where no error appears in a record containing no statement of facts or bill of

A judgment of conviction will be affirmed where there is no bill of exceptions or statement of facts in the record, and the motion for new trial raised no question which could be considered without a statement of facts. Shockley v. State, 512.

In a statement of facts the court, on appeal, will, in support of the judgment, presume that the material allegations of the indictment were proven. Lega v. State, 36 App. 38, 34 S. W. 935, 35 S. W. 381.

In the absence of a statement of facts it will be presumed that the want of consent was shown. Lega v. State, 26 App. 38, 24 S. W. 926, 35 S. W. 381.

Where, on appeal from a conviction, the record contains neither a bill of exceptions nor a statement of facts, and the motion for a new trial is not set up in the transcript, and the transcript contains only the judgment upon a motion for a new trial, a notice of appeal, and an order granting time in which to prepare a bill, the judgment will be affirmed. English v. State (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 389.

Where the indictment, judgment, and sentence are regular in form and show accused guilty as charged, the judgment of conviction must be affirmed, in absence of a statement of facts or bills of exception. Roberts v. State, 62 App. 7, 136 S. W. 452.

Where a writ of certiorari was granted to perfect the record in a criminal appeal, and to supply lost papers, and defendant had ample opportunity to supply the lost papers, but made no effort to do so, an affirmance of the conviction will be granted on a motion of the state, in the absence of a statement of facts and bill of exceptions. Rapard v. State, 71 App. 556, 158 S. W. 285.

Where defendant was arrested six months before trial, an objection that he was forced to trial without an attorney to represent him cannot be considered, in the absence of a statement of facts. North v. State, 73 App. 577, 101 S. W. 757.

Where the evidence is not in the record, it must be presumed that evidence in support of a motion to strike out accused's plea of former jeopardy supported the action of the court in striking such plea. Woodard v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 309.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the court can only pass on the motion to quash the information. Rutherford v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1550.

In the absence of a statement of facts, it is impossible to determine whether the issue of manslaughter in a criminal case was raised, so as to render the court's failure to submit it erroneous. Matthews v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 48.

An order overruling accused's motion for new trial will not be disturbed where it appears that evidence, heard on the motion, is not preserved by a statement of facts, or otherwise. Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 140 S. W. 1128.

Where the judgment of the trial court overruling a motion for new trial showed that the court heard evidence submitted on the hearing and overruled the motion, the court on appeal, in the absence of a statement of facts, will presume that the trial court's action was sustained by evidence. Treadaway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 655.

Where no bill of exceptions and statement of facts or evidence was in the record, a question which arose between the attorneys, on motion for a new trial, as to an agreement on a plea of guilty, and which was settled by the trial court, could not be reviewed. Muckleby v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 199.

An order overruling a motion for new trial relating to the statement of facts cannot be considered on appeal in the absence of the evidence. Lamont v. State, 72 App. 77, 164 S. W. 3.

A matter simply alleged in the motion for new trial, not verified by affidavit, bill of exceptions, or statement of facts, cannot be considered on appeal. Lamont v. State, 73 App. 22, 164 S. W. 3.
Unless the statement of facts contains the evidence presented by accused in support of his motion for new trial, it will on appeal be presumed that the lower court correctly ruled in denying the motion. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 1152.

In the absence of a showing by the statement of facts or bill of exceptions that a certain person testified as a witness, alleged error in refusing to take a recess, in order to produce the court records showing a former conviction of such person for felony, cannot be reviewed by the Court of Criminal Appeals. Dudy v. State, 72 App. 531, 162 S. W. 1152.

8. Incompetency of jurors.—In the absence of a statement of facts and bills of exception, the denial of a motion for new trial, requested on the ground that the grand jury was not organized according to law, cannot be reviewed, it appearing that the lower court heard the evidence on that issue. Fowler v. State, 71 App. 1, 158 S. W. 1117.

In the absence of a statement of facts and bills of exception, it must be presumed that the lower court correctly disposed of accused's motion to quash the venire drawn to compose the grand jury; evidence being heard on that issue. Fowler v. State, 71 App. 1, 158 S. W. 1117.

Where the lower court heard evidence on the question of the fitness of a juror, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of a statement of facts, that the court determined and that it correctly overruled a motion for new trial on that ground. Vick v. State, 71 App. 50, 169 S. W. 50.

Where defendant alleged the incompetency of a juror, and the court, in overruling his new trial, stated that he heard and considered evidence thereon and overruled it, without the evidence it will be presumed that the ruling was correct. Gowan v. State, 73 App. 223, 164 S. W. 6.

A prosecuting witness in a prosecution for unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors was allowed over defendant's objection to answer questions claimed to be inadmissible and leading, and the court qualified the bill of exceptions by stating that the questions were asked upon cross-examination of the witness upon matters brought out by the defendant, and that they merely sum up the previous testimony, without showing the entire examination of the witness. Held that, in the absence of any facts showing the impropriety of the questions, the court could not say that they were erroneously allowed. Green v. State, 62 App. 345, 137 S. W. 126.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the court on appeal cannot consider matters of evidence referred to in the motion for new trial. Hogan v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 184.

Objections that the court permitted the state to use defendant's wife as a witness against him, could not be reviewed, in the absence of a statement of facts. O'Malley v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1904.

10. Rulings on instructions.—Where there is neither a statement of facts nor bills of exceptions in the record, it will be presumed that the trial judge charged the jury with the facts proved applicable to the case. App. 63, 136 S. W. 453; Bonners v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 668; Lige v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 329; Wright v. State, 37 App. 146, 38 S. W. 1094; Balls v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 891; Gonzales v. State, 58 App. 257, 123 S. W. 335; Choute v. State, 59 App. 624; Parley v. State, Id. 188; St. Lou. v. State, 60 App. 311, 131 S. W. 597; Fisher v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 564; Frazier 814
In the absence of a statement of facts, if the charge is applicable to any state of facts that might be proven under the indictment, the court will assume that the law of the case was properly submitted. Shrewder v. State, 62 App. 493, 136 S. W. 461, 1300; Cunningham v. State, 61 App. 232, 124 S. W. 728; Campbell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 566; Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 324.

If the indictment is for simple assault, and the court instructs that if committed with a whip, the conviction should be for aggravated assault, a general verdict of guilt, with the fine assessed at $100, will be sustained as for simple assault, in the absence of a statement of facts and the full charge of the court.

Error in giving a charge not based on facts which would not give jurisdiction will not work a reversal in absence of statement of facts. Thurman v. State, 37 App. 464, 40 S. W. 792.

Where the charge given is applicable to a state of case provable under the allegations of the indictment, and the record does not contain a statement of facts, the judgment cannot be disturbed on the ground that the court failed to charge all the law applicable to the cause. Nava v. State (Cr. App.) 341.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the action of the court refusing to give appellant's requested instructions cannot be revised. McNair v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 957.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the court cannot say whether a paragraph in the charge of the trial court was harmful, or whether a special charge requested should have been given. Danner v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 921.

Assignment of error in the instruction for new trial in an offense of theft of lost property by general charge, when that was an issue under the evidence, and in refusing requested instructions, cannot be considered, in absence of statement of facts. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 137 S. W. 364.

An objection is taken to a positive error in a charge as to the testimony and corroboration of an accomplice shown to have testified in the case, and a bill of exceptions to the charge is allowed, the case will be reversed, although there is no statement of facts. Long v. State, 42 App. 546, 128 S. W. 401.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the failure of the trial court to charge on circumstantial evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal. Banks v. State, 62 App. 552, 123 S. W. 406.

Without a statement of facts containing the evidence, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot reverse an objection to the charge that it failed to apply the law of aggravated assay and battery, alleged to have been raised by the evidence. Simmons v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 560.

In the absence of a statement of facts, exceptions, in a motion for a new trial, to the charge, and to the court's action eliminating or erasing certain expressions from the charge, cannot be reviewed. Simpson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 312.

Where an indictment charged in separate counts an assault with intent to kill, an assault with intent to rob, with intent to rob, and an attempt to use a firearm, an instruction that if defendant did unlawfully make an assault on prosecuting witness, "and did then and there exhibit a firearm, to wit, a gun," to him, with intent by such assault and violence and putting in fear of death and bodily harm his prosecuting witness, persons and possession personal property belonging to him with intent to appropriate the property to his own use, then he would be guilty as charged, etc., could not be held improper for failure to show how defendant exhibited, as to how he threatened the prosecuting witness was put in fear thereby, in so far as it contained the language quoted, without a statement of facts. Evans v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 572.

Where there is no statement of facts in the record, an instruction that, to constitute an assault with intent to rape, accused must assault the female with intent to have carnal knowledge of her without her consent and against her will, by the use of threats, either decretal or otherwise, or by the use or threatened use of force, for want of evidence thereof, especially since the court, in applying the law to the facts, only submitted the theory of force. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1173.

Where the record on appeal from a conviction of murder in the first degree contains no statement of facts, the refusal to submit a lesser degree in the charge cannot be reviewed on appeal. Morgan v. State (Cr. App.) 101 S. W. 1048.

Because there is no charge on the issue of aggravating or mitigating circumstances and the insufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction cannot be considered, in the absence of a statement of facts. Jackson v. State, 70 App. 292, 156 S. W. 1152.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot determine whether a second degree murder was committed in the case. Thomas v. State, 71 App. 183, 159 S. W. 1135.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the court, on appeal from a conviction of assault with intent to murder, cannot review the refusal to charge that if the assault was made with intent to rob, accused must be acquitted. Daniels v. State, 72 App. 236, 162 S. W. 609.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot determine whether it was error to refuse a requested instruction, in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, that, if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether a certain person other than defendant was a lessee of the property, they should acquit. Hughes v. State, 72 App. 498, 163 S. W. 71.

Refusal to give a request to charge limiting the jury's consideration of certain evidence cannot be reviewed, where the evidence sought to be limited is not given in the charge, nor in connection therewith, and the court could not tell from the record whether the charge was thereby, 164 S. W. 1177.

On appeal from a conviction for unlawfully carrying a pistol, the refusal of a special charge, based on accused's contention that he was on his own premises, could not be reviewed, in the absence of a statement of facts, as it could not be determined whether such issue was raised by the testimony. Boren v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 144.

The materiality and probable truth of absent testimony, for which application for a new trial was made, cannot be determined without a statement of facts. Trevino v. State, 2 App. 90; Close v. State, 30 Tex. 621; ante, art. 616.

Motion for new trial stated as a ground that a co-defendant whose case had been dismissed would testify to certain facts. There was no statement of facts filed with the record; held, without such statement the action of the trial court will not be disturbed. Childers v. State, 36 App. 128, 35 S. W. 980.

In the absence of the testimony from the record, the denial of a new trial for newly discovered evidence cannot be reviewed. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 82.

Defendant was convicted of forgery upon his confession, and thereafter a new trial was sought on the ground that he was mentally unsound; supporting affidavits heard to the motion and evidence of the court in overruling the motion could not be reviewed, where the evidence heard was not presented by statement of facts; the affidavits attached to the motion not being considered as evidence, unless introduced as such when the motion is heard. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 108 S. W. 896.

12. Misconduct of jury, prosecuting attorney, and others.—Where with his motion for new trial defendant filed an affidavit of a juror setting up misconduct of the jury, and the district attorney filed a denial, in the absence of bill of exceptions and statement of facts it will be presumed that the court inquired into the matter and found the charge to be untrue. Pickett v. State, 56 App. 65, 115 S. W. 1039.

Where the record on appeal is not accompanied by any statement of facts as to what the jury transpired at a picture show attended by jurors while they were deliberating in a murder case, which act is alleged as misconduct warranting a new trial, except a statement in an affidavit that one of the pictures portrayed a killing, and the motion for new trial recites that the court heard the evidence on the motion, and overruled it, the court's action will not be disturbed. Phillips v. State, 59 App. 534, 123 S. W. 1100.

The matter of improper remarks of the district attorney to the jury, set out as misconduct for new trial, cannot be considered on appeal, there being nothing in the record to show he used such language, or a request to have the jury instructed to disregard it. Allen v. State, 62 App. 557, 135 S. W. 593.

In a prosecution for crime, where the court in overruling a motion for a new trial, refused to consider conduct of a juror and supporting affidavit of defendant which is denied by the affidavit of the juror, states that he heard the evidence, the appellate court will presume that the trial court acted properly, in the absence of the evidence upon which he based his ruling. Black v. State, 71 App. 43, 158 S. W. 592.

The refusal to disturb a verdict on the ground that the jury was affected by outside influences from a mob could not be disturbed on appeal in a criminal case, where the evidence heard by the trial court on that point was not brought out. Hayter v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 674.

Where accused fails to present by bill of exceptions the question of a juror's misconduct on which he relied as one ground for a new trial, and does not show by any amendment of facts the testimony introduced thereon to the motion for new trial, the denial of a new trial will not be reviewed, though accused has filed a statement by the official stenographer, purporting to give such testimony, but not agreed to by the attorneys or approved by the court. Womack v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 139.

Whether the evidence was sufficient to justify a conviction, could not be reviewed in the absence of a statement of facts. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 517; Id. (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 518.

14. Variance between indictment or information and proof.—Where there is an order of the Supreme Court in any case, the Supreme Court will inquire into and determine whether the conviction has been had on a good indictment sustaining the charge and verdict except as to matters presented by a bill of exceptions and determinable without a statement of facts, or where it appears that the conviction has been had in due course of law. But in a felony case, the Supreme Court will not reverse the trial court's charge where it is not warranted by the indictment and under any state of the evidence would be manifestly erroneous and likely to prejudice defendant's rights. Pyron v. State, 62 App. 633, 138 S. W. 705.

In the absence of a statement of facts or bill of exceptions preserving the testimony, the appellate court cannot revive the insufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction or the mental status of the accused. Pyron v. State, 62 App. 633, 138 S. W. 705.

An alleged variance in the name of the person injured could not be considered on appeal from a conviction of murder, where the evidence was not in the record. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 365, 131 S. W. 1062.

An alleged variance in the name of the person injured could not be considered on appeal from a conviction of murder, where the evidence was not in the record. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 365, 131 S. W. 1062.

In the absence of a statement of facts, the question that the evidence discloses an offense not charged in the indictment, is not reviewable. Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 111.

15.— Matters appearing in bill of exceptions.—In the absence of a statement of facts, the bill of exceptions must show on its face that it contains all of the matters complained of. Brown v. State, 57 App. 269, 122 S. W. 565; Wood v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 195.

The prosecuting attorney's reference, in violation of art. 790, to defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf on a former trial, is available on review, even in the absence of a statement of facts, where such reference appears from the bill of exceptions. Brown v. State, 57 App. 269, 122 S. W. 565.

The action of the trial court in entering a nunc pro tunc order allowing the state to substitute an information for one which has been lost, where the recitals of that order show that the proceedings were regular, that a motion was presented, and that the court heard evidence, must be presumed to be correct, in the absence of a statement of facts, even though defendant preserved a bill of exception, which merely objected to the order. Banks v. State, 62 App. 552, 128 S. W. 498.

A motion to strike remarks of the county attorney in his argument is not reviewable, in the absence of a statement of facts. Gamble v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 551.

16. Denial of change of venue.—See art. 634, and notes.
17. Habeas corpus proceedings.—See art. 950, and notes.
18. Motion for new trial where motion for new trial is not filed.—A motion for new trial is not essential to the right of a defendant to have his case considered on appeal both as to questions of law and of fact. Cotton v. State, 29 Tex. 383; Maloy v. State, 53 Tex. 599; Babb v. State, 8 App. 173.

A convicted defendant, whether he moves for a new trial or not, has a right, if he appeals, to have a statement of the facts certified and incorporated in the record. It is the duty of counsel engaged in the trial of the cause for the state and for the defendant to aid the court in according to the defendant his legal right, and when necessary, the court may, and should, require counsel to prepare and submit their respective statements of the facts within the proper time, and should punish them for contempt of court upon their refusal to do so. Babb v. State, 173; Longley v. State, 3 App. 611.

In view of the provision that where defendant has failed to move for a new trial, he is, nevertheless, entitled if he appeals, to have a statement of facts certified and sent up with the record, accused’s failure to move for a new trial on relief before habeas corpus is not ground for disorien the appeal in the Court of Criminal Appeals. Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 365, 121 S. W. 1133.

19. Filing.—As to filing out of time and extension of time of filing, see art. 845, post.

A bill of exceptions, which does not appear to have been filed, cannot be considered on appeal. Oliver v. State, 55 App. 50, 121 S. W. 637; Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 250.

Neither the statement of facts nor the instructions will be considered unless filed in the lower court. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 172; Anz v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 174.

A statement of facts filed more than a year after the adjournment of the term of court cannot be considered. Reed v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 323.

Where the clerk of the trial court certified that he erroneously omitted the file marks from the transcript, the statement of facts must be considered on appeal. Nolen v. State, 72 App. 450, 162 S. W. 869.

20. Preparation in general.—When a defendant appeals, if he desires a statement of facts to go up in the record, it is his duty, or that of his counsel, to make out a written statement of the facts given in evidence on the trial, and submit the same to the prosecuting counsel for inspection and agreement. If the state so agrees upon, the attorneys for the state and defendant or his attorney, shall sign the same, and it shall then be submitted to the judge, who shall, if he find it correct, approve and sign it, and it shall be filed with the clerk of the court. If the statement is not agreed upon, or if the judge will not approve it as agreed upon, the parties may submit their respective statements to the judge, who shall, from his own knowledge, with the aid of such statements, make out and sign and file with said clerk a correct statement of the facts proven on the trial. The trial judge is not required in the first instance, of his own motion, to make out the statement, but it devolves upon the defendant to take the initiative, and use diligence to obtain the statement. Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 2065, 2069; Longley v. State, 3 App. 611; Turner v. State, 22 App. 42, 2 S. W. 619; Carter v. State, 5 App. 458.

In the absence of any showing that defendant has been deprived of a full, fair and true statement of the facts, an objection that the statement of facts was prepared without the aid of the statement prepared for defendant, will be overruled where it appears that it was prepared from an agreed statement of facts. Drake v. State, 29 App. 285, 15 S. W. 725.

21. Form, contents, and requisites of statement.—The statement of facts must contain a full and complete statement of all facts in evidence on the trial of the cause, including copies of all papers, documents, and exhibits adduced in evidence, also the venue and identification of the defendant. Rule 115 for District Courts (142 S. W. xxv). Commissions, notices, and interrogatories in deposition adduced in evidence, must not be incorporated in the statement of facts. Rule 77 for District Courts (142 S. W. xxxii); Ballinger v. State, 11 App. 523. Nor shall depositions or testimony relating depositions of other courts or coroners' inquests be incorporated in a statement of facts. Kirby v. State, 23 App. 13, 5 S. W. 165. Exceptions to evidence admitted over the defendant's objection may be embraced in a statement of facts in connection with the evidence objected to, but exceptions to evidence rejected or excluded cannot not be embraced in a statement of facts. Rule 56 for District Courts (142 S. W. xxi). McWhorter v. State, 13 App. 523; Green v. State, 12 App. 511; Keeton v. State, 10 App. 656; Cooper v. State, 17 App. 194; Castanedo v. State, id. 582.

Statement of facts must show the venue. Massey v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 818.

Statement of facts made up entirely of questions and answers, where there is nothing to bring it within rules prescribed in this section, indicating that the trial judge deemed it necessary to an understanding of the case to so make and constitute said statement of facts cannot be considered. Hargrove v. State, 54 App. 147, 109 S. W. 164.

As the court could not take judicial notice that a city is incorporated, on appeal from a conviction of an alleged poll tax delinquency for failure to appear for work ordered to be done when legally summoned by a road commissioner, where the road commission was a city over whose streets the county would have no control, would be insufficient. Eluito v. State, 56 App. 525, 121 S. W. 168.

In a prosecution for forgery, where defendant made a motion in the trial court for a new trial and in arrest of judgment on the ground that there was a variance between the check set out in the indictment and that offered in evidence, and the record does not show whether the contention is correct, and the statement of facts shows that the check was introduced in evidence, but does not show the check itself, it will be assumed on appeal that the check as described in the indictment was the one introduced in evidence. Gherke v. State, 59 App. 568, 128 S. W. 380.

Where, though the instrument claimed to have been forged was set out in the record, as alleged in the indictment, the instrument produced at trial was not in the record, the statement of facts merely reciting that it was offered in evidence and heard, and the instrument alleged and that proved at trial cannot be considered on appeal. Forcy v. State, 60 App. 206, 131 S. W. 595, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327.

If the alleged libelous article is not contained in the statement of facts, in a prosecution for libel, the judgment of conviction will not be affirmed. Samper v. State, 73 App. 375, 166 S. W. 511.

Where the attorneys failed to agree upon a statement of facts, and the county judge in the presence of the attorneys and the court made a complete statement of the facts, the evidence on the main trial and then made a separate statement of the facts of the evidence heard on the motion for new trial, which was placed after the principal statement, there was no error. Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1152.

In prosecution for violating the local option law, when the local option of facts on motion for new trial showed that the contest was directed to the question of defendant’s guilt in making a sale, and not to the question whether the local option law was in effect in the county at the time of the alleged sale, such latter contention could not be relied on on appeal from denial of the motion. Dodson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1048.

The stenographic report of proceedings at a criminal trial, including the testimony in question and answer form, cannot be considered on appeal as a statement of facts. Stephens v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 92.

A writing contained in the record in a criminal case, but signed by no one, cannot be considered as a statement of facts. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 492.

A statement by defendant in the nature of a history of the case, without evidence to sustain it, unverified, and with the record not showing exceptions said to have been taken, cannot be considered. Pritchard v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 950.

Without the signature of the trial judge there can be no statement of facts. A signed only by the counsel for the state and the counsel for the defendant, but not purporting to be a statement of facts, will not be considered on appeal, and is of no avail for any purpose. Bennett v. State, 16 App. 236; White v. State, 9 App. 41; Myers v. State, 9 App. 157; Lawrence v. State, 7 App. 192; Hemanus v. State, 10 App. 92; Long v. State, 7 App. 147; Long v. State, 10 App. 38; Gindrat v. State, Id. 573; Trevino v. State, 2 App. 99; Brooks v. State, Id. 819.
A statement of facts not signed and approved by the judge of the trial court will be stricken from the record. (Staten v. State, 62 App. 592, 141 S. W. 575; Humphries v. State, 71 App. 521, 160 S. W. 485; Gerrate v. State, 71 App. 531, 169 S. W. 695.

The judge before whom the case was tried is the only person who can authenticate the statement of facts. (Graham v. State, 10 App. 684; Myers v. State, 9 App. 157; Porter v. State, 72 App. 71, 160 S. W. 1194.

When the statement is signed by the judge but not by the parties, he need not certify that the parties failed to agree to such statement, though it is the common practice to so certify. Bowden v. State, 2 App. 56; Williams v. State, 4 App. 178. And where the statement of facts is signed by the judge, though signed by but one of the parties, it is sufficiently authenticated. Trammell v. State, 1 App. 121.

Where the trial judge simply wrote "Approved" with his official signature, such indorsement is insufficient to authenticate the statement of facts. (Hess v. State, 30 App. 1099, 30 App. 477.

A statement of facts held insufficiently authenticated, where it was merely indorsed "Examine, approved and ordered filed as part of the record of this case." (Wilson v. State, 34 App. 555, 32 S. W. 529.

"Signing" is synonymous with "subscribing," and the judge must sign the statement and indorsement thereon. A certificate preceds the statement of the facts that "the foregoing is a correct statement of the facts proved on the trial," is not a sufficient authentication to entitle the document to be considered as a statement of facts. Wade v. State, 22 App. 256, 2 S. W. 675. (The judge, at the conclusion of the statement of facts that such statement is "a correct statement of the facts proven," is sufficient. It need not certify that it is a correct statement of all the facts proven. And the fact that the statement of facts was approved and certified by the judge after it had been filed by the clerk was a mere irregularity which did not affect its validity. (Kerrigan v. State, 21 App. 487, 2 S. W. 756.

Where a conviction had been affirmed because the statement of facts and bills of exceptions had not been approved by the trial judge, and on rehearing it was shown that the negligence or fault of the stenographer was attributed to the clerk, and the record was reinstated on the docket, and the affirmance set aside. (King v. State, 59 App. 511, 129 S. W. 626.

Where it appears in the record that a statement of fact has not been signed or agreed to by counsel for the state and appellant, but has been indorsed "Approved" by the trial judge, and has no caption other than the statement of facts, etc., it is not so fatally defective that it will not be regarded. Follock v. State, 60 App. 295, 131 S. W. 1094.

Where a statement of facts in a criminal case was not signed by the judge, it cannot be considered, even though his failure to sign it arose out of a mistake made by counsel of accused and the county attorney. (Douglas v. State, 62 App. 599, 133 S. W. 385.

A statement of facts heard and shown by the record on motion for new trial is not embraced by an order for filing of statement of facts and bills of exceptions on the main trial after adjournment of court. (Patterson v. State, 63 App. 297, 116 S. W. 1128.

Where a statement of facts was not approved by the regular judge of the court nor the judge who tried the case, and no reason was given therefor, and the statement of facts did not bear the true file mark, but was dated back, it could not be considered for any purpose. Campbell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 966.

On appeal in a misdemeanor case, a purported statement of facts, indefinitely identified as such, will not be considered. (Drake v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 622.

Where the trial court was not presented with a statement of facts, or with a certification that counsel were unable to agree with the district attorney, and requesting him to prepare a statement of facts, an instrument sent up in the record could not be considered as a statement of facts; nor could the case be reversed for want of a statement of facts. (Love v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 183.

A made out by the stenographer, but not signed or agreed to by any of the attorneys, nor approved in any way by the court, in a criminal prosecution, is insufficient for review. (Hardie v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 610.

A statement of facts, signed only by counsel for accused and not approved by the court, could not be considered. (Flagg v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 552.

Under this article providing for the filing of a statement of facts as in civil cases, and under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1579, 1580 [art. 845 et seq., post] providing for the filing of statements of facts in civil cases by the judge, the parties disagree, a statement on a criminal appeal, signed by the county attorney and approved by the district judge, is subject to consideration though not signed by counsel. (Bennett v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 557.

In view of the provision that the same proceeding shall be had as to statements of fact as in civil cases; and Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 2068, 2069, providing that, if the parties agree upon a statement of facts, it shall be submitted to the judge, who shall approve and sign it, if correct, and if the parties do not agree, or if the judge does not approve the same, the parties may submit their

23. Statement of facts in misdemeanor cases.--"The stenographers' act" not applying to misdemeanor cases tried in the county court, the statement of facts must be copied into the record and properly certified by the clerk. Carney v. State, 63 App. 370, 146 S. W. 440; Wagoner v. State, 63 App. 180, 140 S. W. 239; Brogdon v. State, 63 App. 472, 140 S. W. 582; Guill v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 158.

24. Conclusiveness and effect.—The certificate of the judge is conclusive as to the matters contained in the statement, and such statement cannot be impugned by affidavits dehors the record, or in any other extraneous manner. Rainey v. State, 29 App. 472; Crist v. State, 21 App. 361, 17 S. W. 269.

Statement of facts, as it appears in the record on appeal, will control the action of the court, and no presumption or inference will be indulged as to matters not contained in that statement. Rainey v. State, 29 App. 473; Crist v. State, 21 App. 361; Parker v. State, 24 App. 48, 5 S. W. 652; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 195, 15 S. W. 657. And on habeas corpus, see Ex parte Dick, 25 App. 73, 7 S. W. 533.

Affidavits to cure and supply fatal defects as to the authentication of a statement of facts cannot be considered on appeal. Hess v. State, 39 App. 477, 17 S. W. 1099.

The mere statement of a fact in the motion for new trial is not equivalent to a finding that the fact is true, so that, where the statement of facts did not describe the alleged forged instrument, so as to show that it varied from that alleged, and there was no finding of variance, the appellate court cannot presume a variance from a statement in the motion for new trial that there was a variance. Forey v. State, 60 App. 206, 131 S. W. 585.

The court, on appeal, must take the record as it is filed; and it cannot take cognizance of any mistakes in the statement of facts as agreed to. Sambolaski v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 551.

On appeal in a criminal prosecution, the court is bound by the record as agreed to on by counsel, and certified to by the court. Betts v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 477.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will take the record and the statement of facts shown by the trial judge's qualification thereof as true against a conflicting affidavit by accused on his motion for a new trial and in arrest. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 1161.

The motion of facts approved by the trial court is binding on the court on appeal. Lester v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 661.

Where the statement of facts showed that when the state introduced the orders of the commissioners' court showing that local option had been adopted, defendant admitted that "the orders pertaining to local option being in force be considered read," and waived their reading, it sufficiently showed that the orders were introduced in evidence, and that they showed that local option was in force, especially that the court charged that the orders established that fact, and accused made no complaint of such charge in the motion for a new trial or on the original argument on appeal, but contended for the first time on motion for a rear-hearing that the adoption of local option was not proved. Pierce v. State (Cr.
App.) 154 S. W. 559.

A statement of facts, agreed to by the county attorney and accused's counsel, and approved by the county judge, cannot be impeached by ex parte affidavits;
but if on appeal must take the record as made at the trial of the case, and certified to it. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 452, 162 S. W. 850.

25. — Relation to bill of exceptions.—The bill of exceptions controls the state-

697.

An adoption of statement in other case.—The statement of facts in another case cannot even by agreement be adopted as or made a part of the statement in the case at bar. Trevino v. State, 2 App. 90.

27. Amendment or correction.—It is the duty of the judge to see that the statement of facts is in all respects correct, and he may, at any time before it is certified and filed, add to or take from the same, so as to correct it according to the truth of the matter. But after the statement has been agreed to, certified, and filed, a correction should never be made except in a most palpable case of error, or upon the most satisfactory proof of same. Stephens v. State, 10 App. 120; Deggs v. State, 7 App. 359; Courtney v. State, 2 App. 297; King v. Russell, 49
Tex. 124.

An approved and certified statement of facts cannot be amended by the trial where the statement of facts in the record of a prosecution for violating the local option law does not show that local option was in force where the sale was made, it cannot be aided by a statement in the court's charge that it was an admendment. Trevino v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 879.

An omission in a statement of facts, made by agreement to contain all the facts proved, cannot be cured by a statement in the court's charge that the omited fact was admitted on the trial. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 834.

A statement in a time authorized by law has expired for the trial local option law has expired for the trial time authorized by law has expired for the statement of facts on appeal, in a criminal case, he cannot make a change in or an addition to said statement. Brande v. State (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 17.

A defendant, appealing in a criminal case, cannot, after the record is made up, and after the statement of facts has been approved, have the statement of facts

The statement of facts cannot be changed or added to, and hence, where the statement of facts, in a prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory, failed to show that the local option law had ever been adopted, the conviction must be reversed. Lewis v. State, 73 App. 16, 163 S. W.
705.

28. Compelling district clerk to send up original statement.—The motion of defendant on appeal from a criminal case in a district court for certiorari to require the district court clerk to send up the original statement of facts if the appellate court should strike out a certified copy thereof contained in the record will be denied where the court holds that there is a proper statement of facts. Conger
v. State, 83 App. 512, 140 S. W. 1112.

29. Incorporation in record.—See notes under art. 814c.

Papers copied into the transcript, purporting to be a statement of facts will be struck on motion; it being essential that the original statement of facts be brought

Where an appeal of a criminal case, a statement of facts is not embodied in the transcript, it will not be reviewed. Jenkins v. State, 64 App. 86, 141 S. W.
222.

A statement of facts which is not filed in the lower court and copied in the record by the clerk cannot be reviewed on a conviction for a misdemeanor. Jenkins v. State, 64 App. 88, 141 S. W. 223.

Where an original statement of facts is sent up instead of being incorporated in the transcript, it cannot be considered. Skinner v. State, 64 App. 84, 141 S. W.
231.

Since, in Harris county, jurisdiction over misdemeanors has been conferred upon the criminal district court, in a misdemeanor prosecution in that court, the original statement of facts should be sent up with the record. Doyle v. State (Cr.
App.) 143 S. W. 423.

Where, owing to confusion incident to the separation of the offices of district and county clerk, the bills of exception and statement of facts taken by accused were lost in the course of the county clerk, and so were not copied in the record, a subsequent transcript containing them, certified by the district clerk, will be considered on appeal. Scott v. State, 71 App. 41, 158 S. W. 814.

30. Affidavits.—The certificate of the trial judge to the statement of facts is cumulative and hence affidavits are inadmissible. Crist v. State, 21 App. 361, 17
S. W. 431; Rainey v. State, 20 App. 472; Arola v. State, 28 App. 198, 12 S. W. 299.

Affidavits held unavailable to supply fatal defects relative to authentication of An approved statement of facts cannot be attacked by ex parte affidavits. Big-ham v. State, 30 App. 483, 17 S. W. 725.

In the absence of a statement of facts affidavits in the record are unavailing.
Hudson v. State (Cr. App.) 37 S. W. 325.

31. Effect of judicial precedent.—Where a statement of facts was made up in violation of all the rules applicable thereto, the fact that the court considered it is open to consideration for the consideration of similar statements in other cases.
Tucker v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 191.
Art. 844a. Time for presentation of statements of fact and bills of exception; time for preparation of findings; authority of judge after expiration of term of office.—That parties to causes tried in the district and county courts of this state may, by having an order to that effect entered on the docket, be granted twenty days after the adjournment of the term at which said cause may be tried to present and have approved and filed a statement of facts, bills of exception, and the judges of such courts shall also have ten days after adjournment of the term at which said causes may be tried, in which to prepare their findings of fact and conclusions of law in cases tried before the court; when demand is made therefor. And judges whose terms of office may expire before the adjournment of the term of said court at which said cause is tried, or during said period of twenty days after the adjournment of the term of the may approve such statement of facts, bills of exceptions, and file such findings of facts and conclusions of law, as above provided. [Act Mar. 8, 1887, p. 17; Act 1903, ch. 25; Act 1907, S. S., p. 446, ch. 7, § 1.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revised Code of Criminal Procedure, in such decisions as Borry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 625; Meulzer v. State, 61 App. 544, 135 S. W. 571; Mosher v. State, 62 App. 42, 136 S. W. 497, is included in this compilation.

Applicable to county courts and district courts not having official stenographers.—In a misdemeanor or minor civil cause tried in a court not providing official stenographers, the statement of facts must be filed during the term unless an order of the court is made during the term authorizing it to be filed within 20 days after adjournment, in which case it must be filed within such 20 days, which time cannot be again extended, since this article was not repealed by Rev. Civ. St. 1911, or Code Cr. Proc. 1911, arts. 845, 846, re-enacting Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39, §§ 7, 15, relative to the appointment of official stenographers and prescribing the time and method of making and filing statements of fact and bills of exception, nor by the act of March 31, 1911 (Acts 22nd Leg. c. 119), [arts. 844b-846c] with regard to the same matter, all of which apply only to courts having official stenographers. Durham v. State (Cr. App.) 185 S. W. 222; Kuny v. State, 62 App. 67, 136 S. W. 822; Whittaker v. State, 62 App. 45, 136 S. W. 466; Smith v. State, 62 App. 375, 146 S. W. 775; Farrell v. State, 64 App. 200, 141 S. W. 535; Hall v. State, 79 App. 249, 156 S. W. 644.

Acts 31st Leg. c. 39 [arts. 845-846, post] providing for the appointment of official stenographers in certain district courts, and that upon such appointment the other provisions of the act shall apply, section 7 of which provides that, when appeal is taken from a judgment in a district or county court, the parties shall have 30 days after the adjournment of the term in which to prepare and file a statement of facts, repealed Acts 30th Leg. c. 24, providing for the appointment of official stenographers for district courts, but did not repeal chapter 7 [art. 844a], providing that parties to a cause in the district or county court may, by having an order entered to that effect on the docket, be granted 20 days after adjournment of court to prepare and file a statement of facts which act remains in force as to county courts and to district courts not appointing official reporters under Acts 31st Leg. c. 39; and in a county court case, where the term adjourned October 11th and the statement of facts was not filed until November 9th, such statement cannot be considered on appeal. Mueller v. State, 61 App. 644, 135 S. W. 571.

Acts 1903, c. 25, following Rev. St. 1895, art. 1382, which permitted the Courts of Civil Appeals, but not the Court of Criminal Appeals, to consider statements of facts filed after 10 days from adjournment, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 1381, which empowered the court to extend the time for filing statements of facts, and authorizing county and district courts in civil and criminal cases to allow 20 days after adjournment for the filing of statements of facts, re-enacted without material change, Acts 1907 (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 7 [art. 844a, art. 7] with added authority to the court to take 10 days after adjournment to file findings of facts and conclusions of law when demanded, was not repealed by Acts 1907 (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 24, of the same session, which repealing Acts 1903, c. 60, and Acts 1906, c. 112, relating to court stenographers, authorized statements of facts in the district courts only to be filed 30 days after adjournment of court, nor by Acts 1909 (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39 [art. 846, post] relating to appointment of court stenographers, which, by section 7, allows 30 days after adjournment for filing statements of fact, that act applying only to such district courts as have appointed official stenographers and to county courts in civil cases only having special court stenographers, and therefore in all criminal cases in the county courts only 20 days allowed for filing the statement is allowed for and bill of exceptions, and, if filed after 20 days, they will be stricken from the record. Mosher v. State, 62 App. 42, 136 S. W. 497.

Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 7 [this article] which granted to parties to causes in the district and county courts 20 days after adjournment to file a statement of facts and bills of exception, was repealed, so far as it related to filing statements of facts in civil actions in the county court, by Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 24, which repealed all laws in conflict therewith. Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39, repealed Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 24, and provided by section 7 [art. 845, post] that on appeal from the judgment in any case in the district or county court the parties should have 30 days after adjournment to prepare and file a statement of facts and bills of exception, and which empowered the court to allow an additional time; and by section 13 [art. 845, post] declared that its provisions as to the time allowed for filing of the statement of facts and bills of exceptions should apply to all civil cases tried in the county court. An appeal was taken in a civil case in county court at a term which adjourned January 28th; plaintiff being given 30 days to file bills of exception and statement of facts. By a later order, the time was extended an additional 30 days, and the statement of facts and bill of exceptions was filed March 28th. Held, that the statement of facts and bills of exceptions were filed within the time prescribed by law, Shepherd's Home v. Wood (Civ. App.) 140 S. W. 354.

Pursuants' Act of 1909 (Acts 31st Leg. 1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39 § 7 [art. 845, post] providing that on an appeal from the district or county court the parties shall have thirty days after adjournment of court in which to prepare and file a statement of facts and bills of exception, by the express provisions of section 1 [art. 1929, Vernon's Saylor's Civ. St. 1914] of that act only applies where the official shorthand reporters have in fact been appointed. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 348.

A statement of facts and bills of exception, not filed until 60 days after the adjournment of court in a misdemeanor prosecution, will be stricken on motion, in view of the stenographer's act of 1911 [arts. 844a-846]. Phillips v. State, 72 App. 160, 161 S. W. 459.

Time allowed for filing in general.—When the term of the county court at which a conviction was had ended December 5, 1908, a statement of facts filed Jacob v. State, 87 S. W. 169, 123 S. W. 1114.

The statement of facts and bill of exceptions filed in a prosecution for violating the local option law were filed in the county court on December 5th, court having adjourned on November 5th. Held, that the statement and bill were filed too late, and will be stricken on motion; it being necessary under Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 7, § 1 [this article] that they be filed within 20 days after adjournment, upon procuring an order for that purpose in term. Looper v. State, 62 App. 26, 126 S. W. 793.

The statement of facts and bill of exceptions filed in a prosecution for violating the local option law were filed in the county court on December 5th, court having adjourned on November 5th. Held, that the statement and bill were filed too late, and will be stricken on motion; it being necessary under Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 7, § 1 [this article] that they be filed within 20 days after adjournment, upon procuring an order for that purpose in term. Looper v. State, 62 App. 26, 126 S. W. 793.

Where accused was convicted of misdemeanor in the county court, and the term of court ended July 1st, a statement of facts filed on July 27th is too late and will not be considered on appeal. Thompson v. State, 64 App. 514, 142 S. W. 908.

Bills of exception not filed within 20 days after the adjournment of the county court wherein appellant was convicted of a misdemeanor, cannot be considered on appeal. Thompson v. State, 64 App. 514, 142 S. W. 908.

A bill of exceptions in a misdemeanor case not filed until 28 days after adjournment cannot be considered on appeal. Gavina v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 594.

On appeal from a conviction, a statement of facts filed December 5th is not subject to consideration, where the trial term adjourned November 16th. Decker v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 566.

A statement of facts, not filed till 24 days after adjournment of the term at which defendant was tried, is too late, and so cannot be considered. Partridge v. State, 71 App. 393, 158 S. W. 549.

Where the term of the county court at which accused was convicted adjourned May 3d, a statement of facts and bills of exception, not approved and filed until July 2d, cannot be considered, coming more than 20 days after adjournment. Stubbs v. State, 71 App. 390, 160 S. W. 87.

Where the term at which defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor adjourned May 28th, a statement of facts and bill of exceptions, not filed until July 30th, could not be considered, either in passing on alleged errors or as the basis for supporting the judgment. Hall v. State, 72 App. 161, 161 S. W. 467.

Where a term of the county court adjourned on May 31st, a statement of facts and bills of exception filed June 30th could not be considered, since such papers must be filed within 20 days after adjournment of court. Hart v. State, 72 App. 160, 161 S. W. 468.

Where accused was convicted at a term of the county court which adjourned August 16th, and his statement of facts was not filed until September 15th following, it was not filed within the required 20 days after adjournment of the court and could not therefore be considered. Hampton v. State, 72 App. 159, 161 S. W. 966.

On appeal from a conviction for petty theft, in the county court, a statement of facts filed more than 20 days after the adjournment of the court could not be considered. Staha v. State, 72 App. 385, 162 S. W. 521.

Where accused was convicted at a term that adjourned September 20, 1913, and the statement of facts was not filed until October 17th, and the bills of exceptions were not filed until the 18th, the bills could not be considered, and hence matters set up in a motion for new trial could not be reviewed. Joiner v. State, 72 App. 620, 163 S. W. 436.

Where a statement of facts and bills of exception were not filed until nearly 90 days after adjournment of the court at which defendant was tried, they were subject to a motion to strike. Whitehead v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 629.

Where, in a prosecution for impersonating an officer, neither the statement of facts nor the bills of exceptions were filed within the time allowed by law in misdemeanor cases, they would be stricken on motion. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 714.

In a county court case, the statement of facts and bills of exception must be filed within 20 days after adjournment or they cannot be considered. Whitten v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 719.

Extension of time for filing.—See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1028.

Where accused was tried in county court, where there was no court stenographer, the court had no power to extend the time for filing bills of exception and the statement of facts longer than 20 days after adjournment. N-Gowen v. State, 62 App. 58, 158 S. W. 497; Eardley v. State, 62 App. 537, 178 S. W. 256; Wagoner v. State, 63 App. 150, 140 S. W. 339; Richards v. State, 65 App. 176, 140 S. W. 459; Morris v. State, 63 App. 375, 140 S. W. 805; State v. State, 65 App. 618, 140 S. W. 146; Whitten v. State, 64 S. W. 267; Toliver v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 1128; Gavina v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 594; De Friend v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 881; Butler v. State, 72 App. 51, 160 S. W. 1191.

A statement of facts filed out of term time cannot be considered unless such filing was allowed by an order of court. Williams v. State, 35 App. 291, 32 S. W. 1080.

Whether such an order shall be made is discretionary with the trial judge. Irby v. State, 34 App. 283, 20 S. W. 221.

Such order must be entered of record and brought up with the transcript on appeal: not even the certificate of the judge that he granted the ten days and ordered the entry, will suffice. Blackshire v. State, 32 App. 160, 25 S. W. 771.

And when statement of facts must be filed within the ten days allowed, Yungman v. State, 35 App. 80, 31 S. W. 663; Bonner v. State, 38 App. 599, 44 S. W. 172. And see Spencer v. State, 34 App. 238, 30 S. W. 46, 32 S. W. 690.

The ten days' time which may be allowed after the adjournment of the court for filing a statement of facts, are ten days exclusive of the day of adjournment. Moore v. State, 7 App. 42.

If the trial court, by order entered of record, allows a statement of facts to be prepared and filed within ten days after the adjournment of the court, exceptions to evidence admitted over defendant's objection may be embodied in it, and will be considered on appeal. Keeton v. State, 10 App. 656.

A statement of facts must be authenticated and filed during the term of court at which the trial was held, unless during such term an order was made allowing the same to be certified and filed within ten days after the adjournment of the term. Durley v. State, 11 App. 172; Brown v. State, 16 App. 245; Brown v. State, Id. 397. Where an order has been made authorizing the filing of a statement of facts within ten days after the adjournment of the court, such order must appear in the transcript sent up on appeal, or a statement of facts filed after adjournment of the court will not be considered. And when such order has been made and appears in the transcript, a statement of facts filed after the expiration of the time allowed by such order will not be considered. Holt v. State, 39 App. 271; Henderson v. State, Id. 394; Gerrold v. State, 13 App. 345.

The court, of its own motion, may make and have entered the order allowing time after adjournment for the term to prepare, certify, and file a statement of facts, such time not to exceed ten days after the adjournment. Henderson v. State, 29 App. 304; Babb v. State, 8 App. 172.

Entry of ten-day order on judge's short minutes is not sufficient, unless carried forward in the minutes of the court. Pangburn v. State (Cr. App.) 56 S. W. 72.

A statement of facts may, in the discretion of counsel to see that the interest of counsel to 20 days after adjournment in which to file statement of facts is entered by the judge on the docket, and inadvertence or neglect on part of judge will not excuse counsel for failure to have the order entered. Sampson v. State, 45 App. 550, 78 S. W. 926.

And if the term granting defendant twenty days to file statement of facts and bills of exceptions, such order cannot be made at next succeeding term. Nichols v. State, 55 App. 211, 115 S. W. 1197.

A statement of facts in the record on appeal in a misdemeanor case prosecuted in the county court, which shows that it was agreed to and signed by the attorney for the state and the defendant, approved by the judge, and filed, all after the expiration of the 20 days allowed by law therefor, though within the limits of time granted by the court, does not authorize the court to consider it. Gull v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 198.

The court adjourned for the term at which accused was tried on March 16, 1912. An order was granted on the 16th, allowing 20 days from and after April 17, 1912, in which to file a statement of facts and bills of exception. Held, that a bill of exceptions to the refusal of an application for a continuance, filed May 15, 1912, was too late. Wilcox v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 586.

Where the order of the county court overruling accused's motion for new trial allowed him 30 days from adjournment to prepare and file bills of exception and a statement of facts, bills of exceptions and a statement of facts filed subsequently thereto cannot be considered. Terry v. State, 70 App. 463, 157 S. W. 764.

In a misdemeanor case, where the court by verbal order extended the time within which to file a statement of facts and bills of exception, such order could not be entered nunc pro tunc after an appeal had been perfected. Smith v. State, 72 App. 206, 162 S. W. 835.

Where, in a misdemeanor case, the only authority to file a statement of facts and bills of exception after term was a verbal order of the judge, a statement and bills filed within the time so extended could not be considered. Smith v. State, 72 App. 206, 162 S. W. 835.
Approval by judge after his term of office has expired.—The provision of Rev. Cl.L. § 2576, and this article that any judge, whose term of office may expire during the time prescribed for the filing of the statement of facts and bill of exceptions may approve the same, the statement of facts and bill of exceptions must be approved and signed by the trial judge after his term of office, providing his signature and approval can be obtained. Richardson v. State, 71 App. 111, 148 S. W. 517.

Diligence of defendant and matters excusing failure to file in time.—To be entitled to the provisions of the act of March 8, 1887, it must be shown that due diligence has been used to secure the approval of the trial judge to the statement, and that the period prescribed for the filing of the same within the period prescribed, and that his failure was not the fault of the party or his counsel, but was the result of causes beyond his control. George v. State, 25 App. 229, 8 S. W. 25; Spencer v. State, 25 App. 566, 8 S. W. 618.

Such diligence does not appear in this case, and hence we cannot consider the statement of facts found in the record. Farris v. State, 26 App. 105, 9 S. W. 487.

A statement of facts, to be sufficient, must be approved by the trial judge and filed in the trial court, either in term time, or under an order of court, duly entered, within ten days after the adjournment of the court. This rule, however, has been so far qualified as that when the statement of facts is filed after the times specified, and the appellant shows to the satisfaction of this court that he has used due diligence to secure the approval of the trial judge and the filing of the same within the period prescribed, and that his failure was not the fault of himself or his attorney, but was the result of causes beyond his control, the said statement will be received as a part of the record in the cause, and will be considered as the original opinion and the opinion on rehearing for all purposes, held not to bring the statement of facts tendered in this case within this rule. George v. State, 25 App. 229, 8 S. W. 25.

Statement of facts approved by the trial judge and filed after the adjournment of the term of the subsequent expiration of the time in court, will not be considered on appeal, unless the appellant, under the provisions of the act of March 8, 1887, shows to the satisfaction of this court that he used due diligence to procure the approval and the filing of the same within the time prescribed by law, and that his failure to do so was not due to the fault or lack of diligence of himself or his attorney, but was the result of causes beyond his control. See the opinion in extenso for a showing under this act held insufficient. Spencer v. State, 25 App. 565, 8 S. W. 618.

Counsel for appellant by his affidavit shows in substance that he was very busy during the ten days next after adjournment, but that on the tenth day he completed his statement and handed it to the district attorney at 12 m. of that day; that the district attorney at 3 p. m. told counsel that he could not agree. Counsel told the district attorney that he would agree to such corrections as the district attorney would make, and also informed him that he must leave on the train at half past six p. m.; that the district attorney said he was busy and could not then make the necessary alterations, but would do so later in the day. Counsel left the statement with the district attorney, with the request that the alterations be made and then presented to the judge for approval, and then be filed. Counsel on his way to take the train again saw the district attorney, who informed him that he would not agree to any part of said statement. Counsel then left on the train. Other parts of the affidavit relate to matters occurring after the ten days had passed, and, as they do not affect the question of diligence, need not be stated.

Farris v. State, 26 App. 105, 9 S. W. 487.

If a statement of facts be not filed in time, it will not be considered on appeal, unless the act of March 8, 1887, and this article, in compliance with the statement of facts tendered in this case, will be considered on appeal, even though the judge certifies that the bill was not filed in time and he had misplaced it. Riojas v. State, 36 App. 395, 36 S. W. 263; Mitchell v. State, 35 App. 278, 35 S. W. 367, 36 S. W. 466; McCormick v. State, 36 App. 212, 36 S. W. 568, 61 Am. St. Rep. 847; Russell v. State, 35 App. 8, 29 S. W. 43.

Statement of facts filed after expiration of the time will be considered if the delay was caused by fault of the judge. Henderson v. State, 37 App. 79, 38 S. W. 617.

Bill of exceptions will not be considered because county attorney agreed that it might be filed after term time. Nichols v. State, 37 App. 616, 49 S. W. 562.

Where the term of court at which accused was tried adjourned December 10, 1910, and the statement of facts was not filed until January 6, 1911, and though defendant's attorneys filed an affidavit that the statement was presented to the county judge within 20 days after adjournment of the court, the judge made a certificate that he had no recollection when the statement was delivered to him, the bills not having been approved by the court until January 6, 1911, and there being nothing to show when they were in fact presented to the judge before the day they were approved and filed, they could not be considered. Sullivan v. State, 62 App. 416, 137 S. W. 709.

Presenting bills of exceptions to the county judge does not constitute a filing thereof, but it is the duty of the appellant to follow up the bill and see that it is approved by the judge and presented to the clerk for filing during the term at which it was tried. Diggs v. State, 64 App. 132, 141 S. W. 709.

That the county court in a misdemeanor case, authorized under the statute to allow only 20 days after the adjournment for filing the statement of facts and bills of exceptions, made an order allowing 30 days therefor, and at the time convicted defendant's counsel that he was not, as in a motion to strike them, a legal excuse for not filing them in the 20 days. Butler v. State. 72 App. 81, 169 S. W. 1191.

During the following week after court adjourned on August 18th, accused prepared a bill of exceptions and sent it to the county attorney's office several times to submit the bill to him, and learned that he was in another city, and then took the papers to the county judge who declined to act upon them until the county attorney had seen them. On the 19th day after adjournment the county attorney claimed that he was then too busy to pass upon the bill, but would do so later. Accused then left the papers with the county attorney and did not again present them to the judge, and they were not presented to the judge until September 12th, 27 days after adjournment, when they were signed and returned. However, he did not show such dilinclence in having the bill of exceptions approved and filed as required by statute and the law, so that it cannot be considered on appeal. Laws v. State, 73 App. 286, 164 S. W. 1015.

Where the county attorney declined to agree to the statement of facts because it was made up from the evidence in a companion case, and the county judge, on being informed of such fact, and being asked to prepare a statement of facts, declined to do so, because there was a stenographic record in the companion case and the parties ought to be able to agree, but said that he would see that an agreement was made, all of which occurred within 20 days after the adjournment of the court, accrued was either entitled to have the record considered or to have a reversal because deprived of fact, though the statement of facts and bills of exception were not filed until more than 20 days after adjournment of the court. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 1146.

In a prosecution for misdemeanor tried in the county court, statements of fact and bills of exception filed after the adjournment of the court will be stricken, unless permission of the court to so file them appears of record. Sharp v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 945; Icard v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 547; Dillard v. State, 82 App. 221, 137 S. W. 958; Brogdon v. State, 63 App. 473, 140 S. W. 353; Diggs v. State, 64 App. 123, 141 S. W. 100; Collins v. State, 72 App. 44, 151 S. W. 115; Ferguson v. State, 72 App. 494, 163 S. W. 65; McAdams v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 792; Henderson v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 793.

A statement of facts filed after the adjournment of the trial court without an order therefor is no part of the record. Purlin v. State (Cr. App.) 100 S. W. 1067. A statement of facts filed after term time without consent is not part of the record. Vails v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 372.

Statement of facts filed after time allowed cannot be considered. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 39 S. W. 370.

Statement of facts and bills of exceptions, filed more than 20 days after adjournment, will be stricken out. Moon v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 796.

Duplicate statement.—Under Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) cc. 7, 24, and Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39, prescribing the time and method of filing statements of facts and bills of exception, a statement of facts on appeal from criminal cases tried in the district court must be filed in duplicate, while in criminal cases tried in county court, the statement of facts need not be filed in duplicate, and must be copied in the transcript. Morris v. State, 63 App. 63, 140 S. W. 775.

Under the statute authorizing the court to grant 20 days after adjournment for filing statements of fact, a statement of facts in county court misdemeanor cases is not a stenographer's copy made to duplicate, but only a stenographer's copy to be used by the attorneys or the court, and must necessarily be copied into the record, and not sent up separately. Salinas v. State (Cr. App.) 142 S. W. 998.

Art. 844aa  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT

Art. 844aa.  Duties of reporter.—It shall be the duty of the official shorthand reporter to attend all sessions of the court; to take, full shorthand notes of all the oral testimony offered in every case tried in said court, together with all objections to the admissibility of testimony, the rulings and remarks of the court thereon, and all exceptions to such rulings; to preserve all shorthand notes taken in said court for future use or reference for four years, and to furnish to any person a transcript in question and answer form of all such evidence or other proceedings or any portion thereof, upon the payment to him of the compensation hereinafter provided. [Rev. St. 1911, art. 1923, superseded. Act 1911, p. 264, sec. 4.]

See notes under art. 844c.

Recording objections to charge.—See Jefferson Cotton Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Pridgen & Congleton (Civ. App.) 173 S. W. 729.

Art. 844b.  Duty of shorthand reporter to transcribe notes on appeal being taken; duplicate; fees.—In case an appeal is perfected from the judgment rendered in any case, the official shorthand reporter shall transcribe the testimony and other proceedings recorded by him in said case in the form of questions and answers, certifying that such transcript is true and correct, and shall file the same in the office of the clerk of the court within such reasonable time as may be fixed by written order of the court. Said transcript shall be made in duplicate; for which said transcript the official shorthand reporter shall be paid the sum of fifteen cents per folio of one hundred words for the original copy and no charge shall be made for the duplicate copy, said transcript to be paid for by the party ordering the same on delivery, and the amount so paid shall be taxed as costs. [Act 1903, ch. 60; Act 1905, ch. 112; Act 1907, 1st S. S. ch. 24, § 5, repealed; Act 1909, p. 376, § 5, repealed; Act 1911, p. 265, ch. 119, § 5.]

Explanatory.—Act 1909, p. 376, §§ 5, 6, 8, 9, 13, were omitted from the revision of 1911, and the act amendatory thereof is, for convenience, inserted in this compilation as arts. 844b—844b, the provisions thereof having reference to criminal cases.

Construing provisions together.—This article and articles 844c and 845c must be construed together, and, where the parties on appeal have agreed to a statement of facts by virtue of article 845c, they lose the right to object that this article and article 844c have not been complied with. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Prazer (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 899.

Recording objections to charge.—See Jefferson Cotton Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Pridgen & Congleton (Civ. App.) 172 S. W. 739.

Form and contents of statement.—See notes under art. 1924, Vernon's Sayles Civil St. 1914.

Under this article and the following article, the statement of facts must be reduced to a narrative, and not in question and answer, form. Mooney v. State, 73 App. 121, 164 S. W. 828.

What constitutes independent transcript.—Under this article, and articles 844c and 845c, where appellant, without ordering any transcript of the testimony in the form of questions and answers, and without any such transcript having been prepared or filed, procured the official reporter to prepare a narrative form of statement of facts, which was agreed to by the parties and approved by the trial judge, and which was presumably prepared from the notes taken at the trial, and not from any transcript thereof, the reporter did not act officially in preparing such transcript, but unofficially as the agent of appellant, and the statement constituted a statement of facts independent of the transcript of the notes of the reporter," as permitted by article 845c. Canode v. Sewell (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 271.

Authentication in addition to certification by stenographer.—A copy of a statement of facts, certified by the official stenographer and filed in the trial court, but not authenticated, cannot be considered on appeal. Kemp v. State, 57 App. 366, 123 S. W. 131.

When the record contained what purported to be the alleged newly discovered testimony presented on motion for new trial, certified by the stenographer alone, and in no way authenticated or approved by the trial judge, or agreed to by the parties, it could not be considered for any purpose. Herrin v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1198.

Filing stenographer’s transcript.—Under this article the stenographer’s transcript was never intended to be filed in the appellate court, but was to be used by the party ordering the transcript in preparing the statement of facts. Rader v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 157 S. W. 718.

Preparation of statement of facts.—Under this article, and articles 844c and 845c, where appellant, without ordering any transcript of the testimony in the form of questions and answers, and without any such transcript having been prepared or filed, procured the official reporter to prepare a narrative form of statement of facts to be filed by the parties and preserved which was presumably prepared from the notes taken at the trial, and not from any transcript thereof, the reporter did not act officially in preparing such transcript, but unofficially as the agent of appellant, and the statement constituted a “statement of facts independent of the transcript of the notes of the reporter,” as permitted by article 845c. Canode v. Sewell (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 271.

A statement of facts prepared by the stenographer’s notes, no transcript of which had been filed, should be stricken, where the parties have not agreed to a statement prepared in some other manner as authorized by article 845c. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Prazak (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 859.

The party appealing from a judgment where the testimony below was taken down as prescribed by this article, without requesting any transcript in that form or in narrative form, prepared a statement of facts to which appellee did not agree, but which was approved and ordered filed. Held, in view of article 844c, that article 845c only meant that the parties might agree to dispense with the official transcript and not give the appellant the right to prepare a statement of facts which, without being considered as a statement of facts, would not be considered as a statement of facts.—Buffalo Bayou Co. v. Lorentz (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 1052.

In view of articles 844c and 845c, an appellant might, without having the reporter prepare a statement of facts, prepare a statement approved by the trial judge, will be considered, though the appellee did not agree thereto. Pt. Worth Pub. Co. v. Armstrong (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 1113.

Filing transcript in duplicate, and sending up original statement of facts.—Under the provision requiring the official reporter to transcribe the testimony, certifying that the transcript is correct, and file it with the clerk; and article 844c requiring appellant to prepare a statement of facts in duplicate, and that the original shall be sent up as a part of the record on appeal. Held, that where it was not agreed with the record, a prepared statement of facts which, when the record will be stricken on motion. Hardgraves v. State, 61 App. 422, 135 S. W. 144; Davis v. State, 61 App. 301, 135 S. W. 129; Slatter v. State, 61 App. 243, 136 S. W. 770.

The law now requires the statement of facts to be filed in duplicate in felony cases, and the original to be sent with the papers to the appellate court. La Grone v. State, 61 App. 170, 135 S. W. 121.

In the county courts a statement of facts must be copied into the record and certified to by the clerk, instead of the original statement being sent up, as in felony cases. Loopier v. State, 62 App. 96, 136 S. W. 791.

Under Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 7, 24, and Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 39 (acts. 844a–846) prescribing the time and method of filing statements of facts and proof of facts on appeal from district court, the statement of facts must be filed in duplicate, while in criminal cases tried in the county court the statement of facts need not be filed in duplicate, and must be copied in the transcript. Morris v. State, 63 App. 375, 140 S. W. 775. (Civ. St. § 1451.)

In former Acts (Vernon’s S. B. and C. S.) c. 113, (art. 1902) which provides that, “for the purpose of preserving a record in all cases for the information of the courts, jury, and parties, the judges of the district courts shall appoint official shorthand reporters for such courts,” and this article and article 844c, which provide that the transcript of the evidence in question and answer form, as well as the statement of facts in narrative form, “shall be filed in duplicate,” the statement of facts should be made out in duplicate, one of which should be filed in the district court. Witherspoon v. Crawford (Civ. App.) 155 S. W. 633.

Art. 844c. Party appealing may make statement from transcript filed by shorthand reporter; agreement of parties; shorthand reporter may make statement of facts; fees.—Upon the filing in the office of the clerk of the court by the official shorthand reporter of his transcript as provided in Section 5 of this Act [art. 844b], the party appealing shall prepare or cause to be prepared from the transcript filed by the official shorthand reporter, as provided in Section 5 of this Act, a statement of facts, in duplicate, which shall consist of the evidence adduced upon the trial, both oral and by deposition, stated in succinct manner and without unnecessary repetition, together with copies of such documents, sketches, maps and other matters as were used in evidence. It shall not be necessary to copy said statement of facts in the transcript of the clerk, on appeal, but the same shall, when agreed to by the parties and approved by the judge, or in the event of a failure of the parties to agree and a statement of facts is prepared and certified by the judge trying the case, be filed in duplicate with the clerk of the court, and the original thereof shall be sent up as a part of the record in the cause on appeal. Provided, however, that the official shorthand reporter shall, when requested by the party appealing, prepare from the transcript filed by the official shorthand reporter, as provided in Section 5 of this Act, a statement of facts in narrative form, in duplicate, and deliver the same to the party appealing, for which said statement of facts he shall be paid by the party appealing the sum of fifteen cents per folio of 100 words for the original copy, and no charge should be made for the duplicate copy, and such amount shall not be taxed as costs in the case. [Act 1903, ch. 60; Act 1905, ch. 112; Act 1907, 1st S. S., ch. 24, § 6, repealed; Act 1909, p. 376, § 6, repealed; Act 1911, p. 265, ch. 119, § 6.]

See notes under art. 844b. For notes as to civil cases arising under this article, see Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2976.

Sufficiency of statement of facts.—In view of this article and article 844aa, a statement of facts, which merely recited that “the following facts were proven in the trial,” giving a narrative statement of what purported to be some of the evidence, was insufficient for not showing that it contained all of the evidence at trial. Witherpoon v. Crawford (Civ. App.) 153 S. W. 623.

that the court trying such cause shall have the power in term time or vacation, upon the application of either party, for good cause, to extend the several times as hereinbefore provided for the preparation and filing of the statement of facts and bills of exception, but the same shall not be so extended so as to delay the filing of the statement of facts, together with the transcript of record, in the appellate court within the time prescribed by law, and when the parties fail to agree upon a statement of facts, and that duty devolves upon the court, the court shall have such time in which to do so, after the expiration of thirty days, as hereinbefore provided, as the court may deem necessary, but the court in such case shall not postpone the preparation and filing of same, together with the transcript of the record, in the appellate court within the time prescribed by law. Provided, if the term of said court may by law continue more than eight weeks, said statement of facts and bills of exception shall be filed within thirty days after final judgment shall be rendered, unless the court shall by order entered of record in said cause extend the time for filing such statement and bills of exception. Provided, further, that when the parties fail to agree upon a statement of facts, the judge shall not be required to prepare such statement of facts, unless the party appealing, by himself or attorney, within the time allowed for filing, shall present to the judge a statement of facts, and shall certify thereon, over his signature, that to the best of his knowledge and belief, it is a full and fair statement of all the facts proven on the trial. Provided that any statement of facts filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires, shall be considered as having been filed within time allowed by law for filing same. 1. Explanatory.—Art. 845, as it appeared in the revision of 1911, is superseded by Act 1911, ch. 119, § 13, which repeals Act 1909, p. 374, ch. 39, the act from which the superseded article was taken.
2. This article not applicable to county courts and district courts having no official shorthand reporter.—See art. 844a, and notes thereunder.
3. Does not repeal article 844a.—See notes under art. 844a, ante.
4. Time allowed for filing in general.—A statement of facts and bill of exceptions, filed November 15th, while the term at which accused was convicted adjourned on August 20th preceding, will not be considered on appeal. Russell v. State, 58 App. 157, 125 S. W. 24.
5. Where the term of court at which accused was convicted convened on September 20, 1909, and adjourned on December 4, 1909, bills of exceptions filed on May 10, 1910, cannot be considered on appeal. Oliver v. State, 60 App. 123, 131 S. W. 215. Acts 50th Leg. (1st Ex. Ses.) c. 7 [art. 844a, ante] which granted to parties to causes tried in the district and county courts 20 days after adjournment to file a statement of facts and bills of exception, was repealed, so far as it related to filing of facts in civil actions in the county court, by Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 35, repeated Acts 34th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 24, and provided by section 7 of this article) that on appeal from the judgment in any cause in the district or county court the parties should have 30 days after adjournment to prepare and file their exceptions, and to file their bills of exception, and to file a statement of facts within 30 days after adjournment. Where an appeal was taken in a civil cause in county court at a term which adjourned January 25th: plaintiff being given 30 days to file bills of exception and statement of facts. By a later order, the time was extended an additional 30 days, and the statement of facts and bill of exceptions were filed March 4th. Held, that the statement of facts and bills of exceptions were filed within the time prescribed by law. Sheppard's Home v. Wood (Civ. App.) 140 S. W. 394. But see art. 814a, and notes thereunder.

The provision of this article that statements of fact filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires is filed in time allows 90 days in which to file such statements of fact in criminal cases. Gavinia v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 594.

A statement of facts, filed October 25th, while court adjourned on July 1st preceding, is not filed in time, in the absence of any showing why the order, allowing 30 days after adjournment in which to file the statement, was not complied with, or any request for an extension of time. Griego v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 613.

Where a conviction was had at a term which adjourned on the 14th of October, a statement of facts complying that accused was placed in jail, which was filed December 12th, is too late to present any matter for review. Jacobs v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 558.

Where the statement of facts and bills of exception were not filed until 130 days after the entry of sentence at a term of court which continued more than 8 weeks, they could not be considered, though the trial court granted extensions of time. Know v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 268.

Under this article a bill filed August 31, 1911, cannot be considered where the trial term adjourned April 21, 1911. Crowell v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 570.

A purported statement of facts, filed on defendant's motion for a continuance, contained in the record, but which was not filed until after adjournment of the term, cannot be considered on appeal. Gotecher v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 574.

A statement of facts filed after sentence, entered non pro tunc at a term subsequent to that at which conviction was had, cannot be considered on appeal: for a statement of facts must be filed at the term at which the jury returned the verdict and judgment entered. Kinch v. State, 70 App. 419, 156 S. W. 649.

Where the term of court is more than eight weeks long, the time in which to file bills of exceptions and statement of facts begins to run from the date of sentence. Roberts v. State, 70 App. 558, 157 S. W. 1193.

A bill of exceptions, not filed in the trial court until more than 90 days had elapsed from the adjournment of court for the term, cannot be considered on appeal; the time for filing not having been extended. Richardson v. State, 71 App. 411, 158 S. W. 517.

In view of this article and rules 1 and 2, adopted by the Supreme Court for the Court of Criminal Appeals (142 S. W. xvii), requiring the filing of transcripts within 90 days, bills of exceptions and statement of facts in a criminal prosecution, tried at a term of court which began August 5th and adjourned November 2d, cannot be considered, where accused's motion for new trial was overruled on August 26th, were not filed until 30 days after November 2d. Held, that the time for filing the bill of exceptions in the criminal prosecution was not filed until May 4th following, they were too late and cannot be considered. Johnson v. State, 71 App. 391, 159 S. W. 448.

Where court adjourned on January 4th, after judgment of conviction, a statement of facts not filed until April 14th was filed too late, and cannot be considered on appeal. Thomas v. State, 71 App. 183, 159 S. W. 1183.

A statement of facts must be filed in the lower court within 90 days after adjournment, and hence a statement of facts not filed until September 17th comes too late to be considered on an appeal from a judgment convicting accused of murder at a term which adjourned May 30th. Smith v. State, 72 App. 12, 160 S. W. 661.

Where in a criminal case the bills of exception were filed 183 days after the adjournment of court and the statement of facts 150 days after the adjournment, and no motion for the delay was given, the matters contained in the bills and statement cannot be considered. Bradford v. State, 72 App. 5, 160 S. W. 631.

Where sentence was pronounced upon accused on the 25th day of January, the record in his appeal should be filed with the Court of Criminal Appeals not later than April 25th. Meyer v. State, 72 App. 98, 160 S. W. 1190.

A purported statement of facts, not filed in the trial court until six months after adjournment, cannot be considered on a criminal appeal, and will be stricken. Arrechea v. State, 72 App. 45, 161 S. W. 118.

Bills of exceptions not filed in the trial court in a criminal prosecution until the sixtieth day after adjournment for the term, and after appellant had, within 30 days allowed for filing a statement of facts and bills of exceptions, attempted to extend the time for another 30 days, were too late, and will be stricken on motion. Boyd v. State, 72 App. 159, 161 S. W. 459.

A statement of facts and bills of exception, not filed 60 days after the adjournment of court in a misdemeanor prosecution, will be stricken on motion, in view of the Supreme Court's act of 1910. Phillips v. State, 72 App. 459.

The statement of facts and bills of exceptions must be filed within 90 days after... the adjournment of the term at which accused was convicted, and, if subsequently filed, will be stricken. Des v. State, 72 App. 239, 161 S. W. 973.

Where the court in which defendant was convicted of violating the local option law adjourned February 21st, and the statement of facts and bills of exception were not filed until March 12th, after the record contained no showing of any adjournment for filing of the facts and bills, as is necessary in a misdemeanor case, none of the matters set forth for revision could be considered. Messer v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 340.

Where the time for filing the bills of exception and statement of facts expired January 22d, and they were not filed until February 9th, no sufficient excuse appearing therefor, the judgment must be affirmed. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 98.

A statement of facts not filed until 63 days after the adjournment of the term of the county court, and a bill of exceptions not filed until 60 days after adjournment, cannot be considered on appeal. Schanhiro v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 638.

A bill of exceptions, filed after adjournment, and allowing a statement of facts and bill of exceptions cannot be considered where no order of extension was procured. Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1150.

Where the term at which the case was tried adjourned May 9, 1914, and there was no order allowing any time after the term to file a statement of facts, a purported statement of facts filed May 21, 1914, would be stricken, because not filed in time. Hatcher v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 725.

A statement of facts, not filed until four months after the adjournment of the term of court at which defendant was convicted, could not be considered on appeal. Romano v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 201.

Under Acts 32d Leg. c. 119, § 7 (this article), allowing the filing of bills of exception after adjournment without order thereof and proving to the court, by order authorizing their filing, a bystanders' bill proven up and filed 38 days after adjournment of court would not be considered, where the only order in the record was one granting defendant 30 days after adjournment, a statement of facts and bill of exceptions. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 755.

A bill of exceptions, unlike a statement of facts which can be filed within 90 days after adjournment, must be filed within the time limited, and, unless so filed, cannot be considered. Glasper v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 555.

Bills of exception and statements of facts, not presented to the trial court until more than 160 days after adjournment, cannot be considered. Matthews v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 48.

Appellant was tried during a term of court which adjourned January 23, 1915. During the term no order was made authorizing the filing of a bill of exceptions or a statement of facts. On February 22d, 1915, appellant filed a bill of exceptions. On February 22d, in vacation, the court extended the time for filing a statement of facts for 30 days. The statement was not filed until March 29th. Held, that the bill of exceptions and statement of facts could not be considered, because filed too late and without an order permitting it during term time. Becker v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 566.

On appeal in a habeas corpus proceeding, a statement of facts filed over 100 days after adjournment of court could not be considered, there being no showing that the failure to get the statement of facts was not due to the relator's fault. Ex parte Richie (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 60.

A purported statement of facts delivered by the court stenographer to the appellee on October 5, 1914, and some weeks afterward to the district attorney, who signed it as correct, but did not agree that it should be filed as of the proper time, which had expired September 15, 1914, and afterwards presented to the court for approval, would not be considered. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 972.

Where the term of court continued more than eight weeks, the time in which bills of exception could be filed must be calculated from the date on which sentence was pronounced. Demarco v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1024.

5. Motion for new trial.—Where an issue of fact is raised by the motion for new trial, statements of fact or bills of exception relating to testimony heard must be filed within term time, or, while this article allows bills of exception and statements of fact to be filed after adjournment, such act refers exclusively to statements of fact adduced on the trial itself. Bailey v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 286; Treadway v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 44; Brewster v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 622; Lucas v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 627; Robbins v. State, 70 App. 62, 155 S. W. 856; Hall v. State, 70 App. 590, 158 S. W. 207; McLaughlin v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 877; Viola v. State, 71 App. 150 S. W. 50; Johnson v. State, 71 App. 620, 190 S. W. 655; Matthews v. State, 71 App. 374, 190 S. W. 1185, 1186; Rice v. State, 72 App. 219, 162 S. W. 784; Hoskins v. State, 73 App. 107, 163 S. W. 426; Graham v. State, 73 App. 28, 163 S. W. 728; Knight v. State; Bain v. State, 73 App. 528, 166 S. W. 426; Dukes v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 96; Ethridge v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1152; Guerrero v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 731; Merkel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 748; Dodson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1048.

Even on new matter in the motion for new trial not reserved by a bill of exceptions, but simply copied in the transcript, signed by neither the district attorney nor the attorney for defendant, and bearing filing marks 30 days after the term, cannot be reviewed. Kinney v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 15.

Under Act March 31, 1911 (Acts 32d Leg. c. 119) § 7, giving the parties to a suit 30 days after the adjournment of the term in which to prepare the statement of facts.
facts and bills of exception, and authorizing the court to extend the time, but not so as to delay the filing of the transcript within the time fixed by law, but, if the term continue for more than 8 weeks, giving 30 days after the entry of final judgment to file the statement of facts and bills of exception, unless the court shall extend the time, a statement of facts and bills of exceptions in a criminal case, tried term, continued more than 8 weeks, which continued more than within the time fixed for the filing of the transcript after the motion for new trial was overruled, must be stricken. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 971.

6. Motion for change of venue.—See art. 634, ante, and notes.

7. Completion of record by certiorari.—Under Court of Criminal Appeals rule 2 (102 Tex. xxvi, 67 S. W. xxv), and Courts of Civil Appeals rules 8, 11 (102 Tex. xxvi, xxvii, 67 S. W. xiv), providing that motions for certiorari to perfect the record on appeal must be filed before the day on which the cause is not too late, after submission and decision of the record by certiorari, where accused through his attorney knew before and at the time of the submission of the defects in the record. Farrell v. State, 141 S. W. 558.

8. Erroneous dating, and extrinsic evidence to show time of filing.—Neither the trial judge nor any other person has authority to antedate bills of exception and statement of fact. Gowen v. State, 73 App. 222, 161 S. W. 6; Sandifer v. State, 63 App. 561, 129 S. W. 1155; Campbell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 966.

Though the judgment on the statement of facts and bill of exceptions, "Filed September, 1909," does not show that they were filed within 30 days of the adjournment of the trial court, August 21st, so as to entitle them to consideration, this may be aided by affidavit showing the time of filing. Sargent v. State, 61 App. 34, 125 S. W. 886.

Where it reasonably appears that a statement of facts was within the time allowed, though the file mark placed thereon makes it one day late, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, and the statement should be considered. Elfr. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 921.

A statement of facts, bearing no file marks and not showing when it was filed in the trial court, cannot be considered on appeal. Nolan v. State, 72 App. 469, 161 S. W. 565.

This court will on appeal, whenever necessary, go behind the file marks on a statement of facts or on bills of exception to determine whether such statement and bills were in fact legally filed. Gowen v. State, 73 App. 222, 161 S. W. 6.

Where defendant's statement of facts, though appearing to have been filed on January 26, was not made out and certified by the stenographer until March 7th, allowing 11 days for presentation to the district attorney and trial judge and for filing within the time allowed by law, and was not presented to the trial judge or the prosecuting officer or filed within that time, it will be stricken from the record. Gowen v. State, 73 App. 222, 161 S. W. 6.

An order of the trial court that the statement of facts, filed in a criminal case on September 26th, be filed as of July 27th, being unauthorized the clerk properly refused to obey such order. Wertheimer v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 254.

The trial court has no right to order the clerk of court to place on bills of exception a different file mark from that which they should bear. Demarco v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 1024.

This article entitles the appellant to thirty days after adjournment in which to file statement of facts, which time may be extended by the judge for good cause. Such extension being granted, and the statement of facts being filed within the extension, it was error to strike out such statement not filed within the time required by law. Pace v. State, 58 App. 90, 124 S. W. 949.

Where the court adjourned on the 16th day of September, and an application to extend the time to file a statement of facts was granted by the judge to November 16th, and a statement of facts which it expired time required by law. Pace v. State, 58 App. 90, 124 S. W. 949.

Where the court adjourned on February 28th, the 30 days allowed for filing bills of exceptions and a statement of facts expired March 27th, so that an order extending the time made on March 25th was without authority, there being nothing to extend, and the bills of exceptions and a statement of facts filed after such date cannot be considered on appeal. Griffin v. State, 59 App. 424, 128 S. W. 1134.

An order extending the time must be made within the time originally fixed, and, after the expiration of time, the court may not extend the time. Sanders v. State, 60 App. 34, 129 S. W. 605.

The term of court at which accused was tried began October 1, 1909, and adjourned January 1, 1910. The trial was on October 4, 1909. Sentence was pronounced December 19, 1909, and the bill of exceptions was filed February 15, 1910, and the statement of facts on February 17, 1910. On February 16, 1910, an order was entered extending the time for filing bills of exception and statement of facts. Held, that the court did not have authority after the expiration of the term, to order the extension of the time for filing bills of exception and statement of facts; and, even if it had such authority, it could only be exercised within 30 days after filing of the order, prescribed by this article, and the order not having been entered thereafter, was ineffective. Armstrong v. State, 60 App. 59, 139 S. W. 1111.

Whether the time to file the statement of facts in a criminal case shall be extended in is the discretion of the trial court. Frazier v. State, 61 App. 647, 135 S. W. 583.

Accused's motion for a new trial was overruled on March 25, 1910, and notice of appeal then given. The court adjourned on April 2d, when the term ended, there being four terms, each beginning, respectively, on the first Mondays in January, April, July, and October. Without application, orders were entered on May 23, May 29, July 4, and August 26th, giving those dates for filing a statement of facts, but none was filed, and sent up in the record which was filed in the Court of Criminal Appeals on December 2, 1919. No statement is claimed to have been made out until September 23rd or 24th, and it was not delivered to the court until about October 1st, and was never presented to the trial judge. Held, that accused was at fault in not having a statement of facts in the record; be not having presented a statement to opposing counsel or the trial judge within a reasonable time. Roberts v. State, 62 App. 7, 136 S. W. 483.

Chap. I  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT  Art. 845

In view of articles 844 and 910, this article is mandatory, and, construed in view of the other statutes, does not authorize the trial court to grant extensions of time for filing a statement of facts beyond 30 days after the adjournment of the term of court at which accused was tried must be stricken from the record. Arling v. State, 62 App. 357, 137 S. W. 669.

Under this article, a district judge cannot, during vacation, when the cause was tried at a term lasting more than eight weeks, extend the time for filing. Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Cox, 104 Tex. 556, 140 S. W. 1978.

Statement of facts and bills of exceptions filed 51 days after adjournment are too late. The court attempted to allow 30 days after adjournment for their filing. Bryant v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 251.

This article requires bills of exceptions filed more than 30 days after the adjournment of the trial term, except that for good cause shown the trial court may extend the time for filing, but the statute granting 90 days extension of time was to delay filing of the record in the appellate court. Transcripts in civil cases must be filed within 90 days from adjournment, and art. 930, requires transcripts in criminal cases to be prepared in prefect courts within 90 days after adjournment. Held, that courts are powerless to authorize filing of bills of exceptions after expiration of the 90-day period. Crowell v. State, 104 Ark. 298, 148 S. W. 570.

Where accused was convicted at a term which lasted more than eight weeks, and upon the overruling of his motion for new trial on August 26th, the court granted him 30 days' additional time in which to file his bills of exceptions and a statement of facts, a statement of facts and bills of exception not filed until the last of November cannot be considered, because coming too late; accused only having and the 30 days additional allowed by the court in which to file those instruments. Harrison v. State, 71 App. 40, 158 S. W. 1130.

Under this article allowing the filing of bills of exception within 30 days after adjournment without order of court, and providing that if bills are not filed within such 30 days they cannot be legally filed unless the court, by order authorizes their filing, a bystanders' bill proven up and filed 30 days after adjournment of court would not be considered, where the only order in the record was one granting defendant 30 days after adjournment in which to file a statement of facts and bill of exceptions. Hicks v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 255.

10. Making an entry of order.—A statement of facts cannot be considered by the Court of Criminal Appeals, where it was filed after adjournment of the trial term, if the record shows no order authorizing filing after adjournment. Gamble v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 561; Squieres v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 932.

Under the statute, where the trial court continues in session more than 8 weeks, the statement of facts must be filed in 30 days after sentence, unless an order be entered directing the time. Erkies v. State, 59 App. 254, 118 S. W. 504.

An order extending the time for filing a statement of facts, in order to be available, must be entered before the expiration of 30 days allowed for that purpose, on adjournment of the court. Presley v. State, 69 App. 192, 151 S. W. 532.

Where a statement of facts is filed after 30 days from final judgment or adjournment, the record must show that an extension of time for filing was properly granted by the trial court, and must also show such extension where the statement is filed after 60 days from final judgment or adjournment. Roberts v. State, 62 App. 7, 136 S. W. 483.

The provision that if the term of court may be continued more than 8 weeks, bills of exceptions shall be filed within 30 days after final judgment, unless further time is granted by a order entered of record, is mandatory and where there is no order in the transcript extending the time, bills filed more than 30 days after the entry of final judgment could not be considered. Gibson v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1099.

A bill of exceptions, not filed within 30 days allowed by law, cannot be considered, unless the record contains an order extending the time. Gaines v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 199.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 845, giving to the trial court jurisdiction both in term time and vacation to extend the time for filing bills of exceptions for not longer than 90 days, the court having granted an order allowing accused 30 days' additional time to file bills of exceptions, but the clerk, by oversight, having failed to enter that part of the order on his record, and such oversight not having been discovered until some 60 days had expired, during which time an extension as taken, the trial court was authorized to grant a motion directing the clerk to enter the order granting the extension nunc pro tunc. Muff v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 228.

11. Extrinsic evidence of order of court.—The practice of requiring the Court of Criminal Appeals to consider affidavits to determine whether orders extending the time for filing the statement of facts or bills of exception have been newly made, is considered.

Robertson v. State,

82 App. 7, 126 S. W. 183.

12. Agreement of parties affecting time of filing.—Bills of exceptions and statement of facts not filed in the trial court within the time prescribed by statute will not be considered on appeal, notwithstanding any agreement of attorneys or order of district judge; but, if the delay be through fault of the prosecuting officer, a reversal will be given. Birch v. State, 72 App. 496, 74 S. W. 886; State v. (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 886; Kemper v. State, 57 App. 355, 123 S. W. 131; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Cox (Civ. App.) 136 S. W. 560; Shrewder v. State, 62 App. 492, 136 S. W. 461, 1290. Under the provision that, when a term of court may by law continue more than 8 weeks, the statement of facts and bills of exception shall be filed within 30 days after final judgment, unless the court, by order entered of record, shall extend the defendant's time to file a statement of facts not extended by a written agreement between counsel, approved by the trial judge, but not entered of record, that they may be filed after such time, nor by oral representations byappellee's counsel that he had 90 days in which to file. Harris v. Cox (Civ. App.) 148 S. W. 597.

13. Extension by appellate court.—In a prosecution for murder, where the trial court at the next term after denial of a new trial and after an appeal was taken refused to conform the judgment to the verdict, time for filing bills of exception and a statement of facts cannot be granted by the appellate court, the statute requiring such instruments to be filed at the term in which the conviction occurs or within a specified time after adjournment. Robison v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 912.

14. Approval and authentication of statement or bill.—See notes under arts. 744 and 814, ante.

A statement of facts approved and certified by the judge, "The foregoing statement of facts is by me approved as a full and complete statement of all the facts proved on the trial," is sufficiently authenticated so as to authorize a holding that the judge so made it because the attorneys did not agree. Hopkins v. State, 81 App. 559, 135 S. W. 553.

Where the certificate of the trial judge stated that a statement of facts was already on file in the case, and that it was signed by the counsel for all the parties, and that the same is correct, and this certificate is approved with a certain qualification, and none of the attorneys had signed the certificate, it will be considered as a valid certificate by the trial judge, for Acts 1st Leg., 1st Ex. Sess. c. 122 (V. A. S.) did not prescribe any form, and it is evident that the parties failed to agree on the certificate, and the trial court neglected to strike out the statement that it was signed by the attorneys. Rader v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. (Civ. App.) 137 S. W. 718.

14½. Certificate of party to proffered statement of facts.—Under the provision of this article that, when the parties fail to agree upon a statement of facts, the judge shall not be required to prepare such statement, unless the party appealing, by himself or attorney, within the time allowed for filing, shall present a statement of facts and certify thereon his signature that to the best of his knowledge and belief it is a full and fair statement of all the facts proven on the trial, where appellant's attorney, presenting the statement of facts to the judge for approval upon disagreement of the parties, failed to append the indicated certificate, such omission did not render the statement of facts, as approved and certified by the judge, insufficient to be considered on appeal, since the statute is directory in the sense that the certificate is for the benefit of the trial judge, and he may waive noncompliance. McLane v. Hayden (Civ. App.) 178 S. W. 1197.

15. Effect of failure to present and file in time.—Under this article, a statement of facts or bill of exceptions filed more than 30 days after adjournment of court without any order having been entered authorizing the same to be so filed cannot be considered on appeal. Cofield et al v. Supreme Camp of American Woodmen (Civ. App.) 151 S. W. 341; Patrick v. State (Cr. App.) 126 S. W. 911; Campbell v. State, 57 App. 301, 123 S. W. 583; Oliver v. State, 58 App. 50, 124 S. W. 637; Ewing v. State, 59 App. 147, 127 S. W. 885; Vaughn v. State, 59 App. 423, 125 S. W. 1134; Brunk v. State, 60 App. 203, 131 S. W. 1135; Phillips v. State, 60 App. 431, 122 S. W. 356; Roberts v. State, 62 App. 7, 139 S. W. 482; Seibert v. State, 62 App. 538, 135 S. W. 399; Mansfield v. State, 62 App. 40, 138 S. W. 501; Hart v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 198; Giles v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 907; Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1175; Sanders v. State, 70 App. 199, 158 S. W. 927; Lisenbe v. State, and subject to striking on motion to the Court of Civil Appeals, since the statute is directory in the sense that the certificate is for the benefit of the trial judge, and he may waive noncompliance.

A purported statement of facts cannot be considered where the attorneys failed to agree upon it, and it was not presented to the trial judge within the time required by law.

Where the statement of facts was filed too late to be considered, it will be presumed on appeal that the venue was properly proved. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 724.

16. Affirmance of judgment.—The filing, pending an appeal, of the statement of facts 20 days after the term at which conviction was had, was too late, so that the appellate court must affirm the judgment. Sewall v. State (Cr. App.) 130 S. W. 1066.

Where the record showed that the trial court heard evidence on motions to quash the grand jury venire on specified grounds, and overruled them, and a purported statement of the evidence, not agreed to by the attorneys nor approved by the file after the adjournment of the term, the finding on appeal could not review the ruling, but must assume that the trial court found in accordance with the evidence. Washington v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 276.

Where accused was convicted at a term of court which continued more than 8 weeks, 20 days elapsed after the motion to reverse was filed, and the affidavit thereto and sentence pronounced, and no statement of facts or bills of exception have been filed in the trial court, the judgment will be affirmed. Carden v. State, 70 App. 271, 156 S. W. 683.

17. Dismissal of appeal.—That bills of exception and the statement of facts were not filed until more than 16 months after adjournment of the term at which appellant was convicted warrants dismissal of his appeal on motion by the Attorney General. Brinson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 776.

19. Deprivation of statement of facts as ground for reversal.—See notes under arts. 837 (2) and 844.

Where accused is deprived of a statement of facts without neglect on his part and without his diligence to procure it, he is entitled to a reversal to enable him to have his case fairly tried on the facts adduced against him. Rawls v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 421; Edwards v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 346; Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 347.

Where a failure to file a statement of facts in a criminal cause within the time granted was due to no negligence of the appellant's counsel, but rather to a failure of the state's attorney to agree to one prepared, and his refusal to do anything in the way of getting such a statement, when requested to do so by the court, appellant was deprived of a statement without his fault, and a reversal is warranted. Lyster v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 392.

Defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and, on counsel's affidavit of his inability to pay for a statement of facts, the court refused an order to make up a statement, on the ground that more than 30 days had elapsed from the overruling of the motion for a new trial, and offered to approve any statement agreed upon by defendant and the district attorney, and, though defendant's attorney left a statement of facts with the district attorney, he did not report their failure to agree in which case the court would have made the statement, and it was excluded in the record. Held, that the conviction would not be reversed, on the ground that defendant had been deprived of a statement of facts; it being only in the nature of a failure of the fault or negligence of the state's attorney or the wrongful acts of the trial judge, such statement being lacking, that a reversal is authorized. Green v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 621.

Where, immediately on the overruling of accused's motion for a new trial, three days before adjournment accused called to the court's attention that he was entitled to a statement of facts under the Stenographers' Act of 1911 (Acts 32d Leg. c. 119, arts. 844a-816 C. C. P.), and within 12 days after adjournment filed an affidavit stating those facts and praying the immediate preparation and forwarding of a transcript of the record to the Court of Criminal Appeals, is not entitled to a reversal on the ground that he was deprived of a statement of facts; it not appearing that after adjournment he made any effort to procure it, and it being apparent that he prayed the preparation of the transcript without it, though there was no such documents to which it could be filed. Archer v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 857.

Where accused, through no fault of his own, but through the refusal of the judge to consider the matter, because leaving on his vacation, is unable to file a statement of facts until after expiration of the 90 days allowed, the judgment should be reversed on appeal. Werthermel v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 224.

20. Diligence and matters excusing failure to file in time.—Where a statement of facts has not been filed in time, it may, nevertheless, be considered on appeal, if it be shown to the court of appeals that the defendant used due diligence to have the same authenticated and filed in time, and that the failure to file in the same time was not due to the fault or laches of the defendant or his attorney, but was the result of causes beyond their control. Vernon v. Skyes' Civ. St. 1914, 25 App. 532, 8 S. W. 427; King v. State, 55 App. 585, 8 S. W. 648; Lynn v. State, 25 App. 515, 13 S. W. 867; Johnson v. State, 29 App. 216, 15 S. W. 205; Ratcliff v. State, 29 App. 248, 15 S. W. 956; Drake v. State, 29 App. 269, 15 S. W. 725; Suit v. State, 59 App. 313, 17 S. W. 458; Hess v.

It is the imperative duty of the appellee and his counsel to secure the approval of the judge to bills of exception, and to see that they are filed in time. Roberts v. State, 30 App. 140, 96; Sullivan v. State, 62 App. 410, 137 S. W. 700; St. Clair v. State, 72 App. 37, 160 S. W. 333; Gowan v. State, 73 App. 223, 164 S. W. 6.

In considering question of diligence in not getting statement of facts filed in time, each case must rest on its own peculiar facts viewed in the light of all the surroundings at the time the party is exercising diligence in preparing it. Cannon v. State, 41 App. 467, 56 S. W. 355.

The failure of the clerk of the trial court to place his file mark on the original statement of facts filed, together with a copy thereof, in time, does not preclude the court on appeal from considering the statement. Campbell v. State, 57 App. 301, 123 S. W. 583.

Counsel for accused presented the statement of facts to the county attorney during the term at which accused was convicted, asking the county attorney to agree to the statement. The county attorney signed the statement, and later informed defendant’s counsel that it had been filed and approved. Defendant’s counsel did not have the authority of the county attorney to sign the statement with their names, and neither did they present the statement to the court. Held, that they had not exercised such diligence as to excuse a failure to have the statement approved within time. Douglas v. State, 62 App. 599, 133 S. W. 355.

A statement of facts will be considered on appeal, though not filed within the time required by law, where the trial judge certifies that he caused the failure to file in time. Mansfield v. State, 62 App. 631, 135 S. W. 591.

A copy of facts, filed one day too late, could not be considered on the ground of the illness of the district attorney and accused's attorney, and the statement was agreed to by the parties and approved by the trial court, the court on appeal will consider it. Villa v. State, 63 App. 537, 141 S. W. 104.

To avoid the insertion of a mere statement, it will be considered sufficient under article 562a, by the accused under article 562a, that bills of exception, filed earlier on the ground that he is too poor to pay for it, was not presented to or acted on by the court, he did not tender the fees for a statement of facts, and no motion for an extension of time within which to file such statement was made until 50 days after the adjournment of the term, but the judgment will not be reversed for failure to furnish him such statement. Negrete v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 587.

Where a defendant in a criminal prosecution complied with the provision of article 545a, that a filing pauper affidavit is not required when the facts are taken down, and the official stenographer makes a transcript in duplicate, the neglect of the stenographer to comply with the order of the trial judge within a time fixed by law, will not preclude the defendant from having the court on appeal pass on his case, and it will upon showing of the stenographer’s misconduct make an order for the preparation of the statement. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 587.

The overruling of a motion to continue and the absence of a witness cannot be considered on appeal, unless the motion is excepted to and preserved by bill of exceptions filed within the time permitted by law: and the mere fact that the bill was presented to the trial court within the time, and that it did not approve it until after the time, does not authorize the court, on appeal to consider the bill. Gove v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 191.

On an appeal in a criminal case, statement of facts and bills of exception, filed four months after the adjournment of the term at which accused was convicted, could not be considered, where no application for an extension of time was made for the adjournment, and where, although application, it was not granted, and claimed that the failure of their original attorneys to file such bills and statement was without their knowledge, it was not shown that they had made any inquiry within the time allowed by law. Martinez v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 586.

Where the bill of exceptions filed by the attorneys on both sides and handed to the judge for his approval on the thirtieth day after court adjourned, and the judge promised to approve and file the statement within the time allowed, but did not do so owing to a misapprehension of the length of time within which the statement must be filed, and it appeared that the statement filed out of time was correct, it would be considered on appeal. Gibbs v. State, 70 App. 215, 136 S. W. 657.

Where the stenographer in a case not capital fails to perform his duty of preparing a statement of facts as ordered by the court, the remedy of accused is by mandamus, which must be applied for within the time fixed for the filing of a statement. Williams v. State, 70 App. 588, 157 S. W. 84.

Where the stenographer prepared a transcript of the proceedings for accused, who was a pauper, before the expiration of the 90 days within which he was required by this article to file his statement of facts, the failure of the stenographer to prepare it within the 90 days allowed by the court does not deprive accused of a statement so as to entitle the unapproved transcript to consideration on appeal. Romero v. State, 72 App. 105, 160 S. W. 1136.

Where accused employed his own attorney to defend him in a criminal case, the negligence of such attorney in failing to present a statement of facts to the judge for approval in time will be imputed to accused. Bracher v. State, 72 App. 159, 151 S. W. 124.
That the trial Judge, after receiving the bill of exceptions within the time allowed, should have ruled that the alleged days upon which the statement of facts did not excuse the failure of accused to secure the transcript of the record in the appellate court, where he made no application for extension of the time, being obligatory upon counsel to follow up bills of exception and see that they are prepared by the court reporter, was held, in Chavarro v. State, 72 App. 218, 161 S. W. 99, that the appellant is chargeable with lack of diligence, where the statement of facts is not presented to the trial judge for his signature within the time allowed by law, though it was prepared and delivered to the state's attorney in ample time, and through his neglect it was not seasonably filed. Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 1105, L. R. A. 1915A, 572.

That the stenographer made affidavit that the delay in the preparation of the transcript of the record in the appellate court was occasioned by his wife's sickness, by his wife's sickness for not filing a statement in time, as an appellate should have mandamused the stenographer, or his attorney, should have prepared a statement as permitted by Stenographer's Act (Acts 1911, 1st Ex. Sess.) c. 99 § 13 [&art; 325, post], especially as the stenographer's affidavit showed that he was in attendance at court every day. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 98.

21. Filing within time required by law for filing transcript.—The provision that a statement of facts filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires shall be considered as filed in time does not apply to bills of exceptions. Gavina v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 594.

The provision that any statement of facts, filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires, shall be considered as filed in time, authorizes the Court of Criminal Appeals to consider a statement filed within 90 days; but time on the trial judge the duty of the trial judge to make within 90 days a statement not filed within the time limited by other provisions of that statute. Harris v. Camp (Civ. App.) 148 S. W. 597.

Under the provision that the trial court may extend the time for filing the statement of facts in the trial court, but that it shall not be so extended as to delay the filing of the record in the appellate court within the time prescribed by law, the time for filing the statement of facts in a criminal case may, at most, not be extended more than 90 days beyond the adjournment of the term of the trial court. In a bill requiring the transcript in a civil case to be filed in the appellate court within 90 days from the adjournment of the term of the trial court, and while fixing no time for filing the transcript in a criminal case in the appellate court, providing that on adjournment of the court the clerk shall "immediately" make out, and forward to the appellate court, the transcript, and that transcripts in criminal cases shall be made out before those in civil cases. Maxwell v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 324.

A statement of facts is filed within time if filed as required by this article providing that, if the statement of facts is filed in the trial court before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court, it is deemed to have been filed within time, though it was not in fact filed within 90 days after adjournment of the trial court. Witherspoon v. Crawford (Civ. App.) 153 S. W. 633.

The provision that any statement of facts filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires shall be considered as having been filed within the time allowed by law, applies to a writ of error as well as to appeals, and hence a statement of facts filed at any time within 12 months after final judgment is in time in case of a writ of error. Louisiana-Rio Grande Canal Co. v. Quinn (Civ. App.) 169 S. W. 151.

The provision that any statement of facts filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court shall be considered as having been filed within the time allowed by law, has no reference to bills of exception, and will not justify an extension of the time of filing. Louisiana-Rio Grande Canal Co. v. Quinn (Civ. App.) 169 S. W. 151.

Under the provision that the statement of facts may be filed at any time before the time for filing the transcript in the Court of Criminal Appeals, an accused person has 90 days in which to file his statement of facts. Romero v. State, 72 App. 196, 180 S. W. 1193.

In view of the provision that a statement of facts in a felony case may be filed, at any time before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires, which, in counties where the term of court exceeds eight weeks, is 90 days after sentence, held, that where, in such a county, accused was sentenced on February 24th and a statement of facts was not presented to the trial judge until August 28th following, it was too late. Bracher v. State, 72 App. 198, 161 S. W. 124.

The filing of a statement of facts and bills of exception within 90 days from adjournment of term of court, would entitle them to consideration, when they were not approved until after the expiration of 90 days, since the filing was not authorized until they were approved. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 75.

Where court adjourned April 8th, and about July 1st the trial Judge went to G. on his vacation, first advising the county attorney that if any disagreement as to statements of facts or bills of exception arose he would immediately return and take up the matter, and counsel neither notified him in order that he might return nor went to G. to have the bills and statement approved and, though filed July 2d, not approved until after the expiration of 90 days, the adjournment of court, they could not be considered, as no diligence to procure their approval in time appeared. Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 75.

Where a bill of exceptions and the statement of facts are not filed within the 90 days allowed by statute, and there is no adjournment allowed by law, if it was not done, they cannot be considered. Armstrong v. State, 72 App. 635, 164 S. W. 331.

Under the provision of this article that any statement of facts filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires shall be considered as filed within the time allowed by law, and irrespective of Courts of Civil Appeals rule 19 (142 S. W. xiv), relating to motions as to informants in bringing a case into court, a statement of facts on appeal from a final judgment rendered April 22d, not filed within the 60 days granted for the filing of a statement of facts and bills of exception, but before expiration of the time for filing the transcript in the Court of Civil Appeals, was duly filed: but the bills of exception did not fall within such rule. Tyler v. Sowders (Civ. App.) 175 S. W. 99.

Under the provision that any statement of facts, filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires, shall be considered as having been filed within the time allowed by law, where a case was tried at the March term of the county court, which adjourned on the 2lst, no order appearing in the record extending the time for filing the statement of facts, which was shown to have been filed July 17th, such statement of facts was filed in time. McLane v. Haydon (Civ. App.) 178 S. W. 1197.

The provision that any statement of facts, filed before the time for filing the transcript in the appellate court expires, shall be considered as having been filed within the time allowed by law, applies to the manner of filing the statement of facts and the time therefor when the cause is taken to the appellate court by petition in error. McLane v. Haydon (Civ. App.) 178 S. W. 1197.

22. Time allowed where parties are unable to agree as to facts.—Where accused and the county attorney were unable to agree on the statement of facts, and accused presented a statement of facts to the judge within the time required, whereupon the judge made out and signed a statement of facts himself, accused was entitled to have such statement considered on appeal, though it was not filed in time. Biggs v. State, 64 App. 122, 141 S. W. 109.

23. Consideration of original statement of facts.—The case may, on rehearing, be considered with the statement of facts, the original, filed in time, having, since the first hearing, been sent up separately, as required by the statute in a felony case, though at the former hearing the statement of facts as copied in the transcript was stricken out because of noncompliance with such statute. Leggett v. State, 62 App. 99, 108 S. W. 784.

Art. 845a. Compensation of shorthand reporter; affidavit of inability to pay fees; false affidavit.—The official shorthand reporter shall receive a per diem compensation of five dollars for each and every day he shall be in attendance upon the court for which he is appointed, in addition to the compensation for transcript fees as provided for in this Act, said compensation shall be paid monthly by the commissioners court of the county in which the court sits, out of the general fund of the county, upon the certificate of the district judge. Provided, however, in districts of two or more counties the official shorthand reporter shall receive a salary of $1500.00 per annum, in addition to the compensation for transcript fees as provided for in this Act to be paid monthly by the counties of the district in proportion to the number of weeks provided by law for holding court in the respective counties. Provided that in a district wherein in any county in the district the term may continue until the business is disposed of, each county shall pay in proportion to the time court is actually held in such county. Provided, that when any criminal case is appealed and the defendant is not able to pay for a transcript as provided for in Section 5 of this Act [art. 844b], or to give security therefor, he may make affidavit of such fact, and upon the making and filing of such affidavit, the court shall order the stenographer to make such transcript in duplicate, and deliver them as herein provided in civil cases, but the stenographer shall receive no pay for same; provided, that should any such affidavit so made by such defendant be false he shall be prosecuted and punished as is now provided by law for making false affidavits. In any civil case where the appellant or plaintiff in error has made the proof required to appeal his case without bond, such appellant or plaintiff in error may make affidavit of such fact, and upon the making and filing of such affidavit, the court shall order the stenographer to make a transcript as provided in Section 5 of this Act, and deliver same as herein provided in other cases, but the stenographer shall receive no pay for same; provided that should any such affidavit so made by such appellant or plaintiff in error be false he shall be prosecuted and punished as is now provided by law for making false affidavits. [Act 1903, ch. 60; Act 1905, ch. 112; Act 1907, S. S. ch. 24; Act 1909, p. 376, § 8, repealed; Act 1911, p. 267, ch. 119, § 8.]

For notes in civil cases arising under this provision, see Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1927, 1931.

Reversal for deprivation of statement of facts.—See notes under arts. 844 and 845.

A conviction will not be reversed for failure of the official stenographer to furnish a statement of facts within 30 days from adjournment of the term, affidavit of appellant's inability to pay therefor having been filed, as required by Act 1909, Leg. (1st Ex., Sect. 67), where, instead of presenting the stenographer's report for approval when received, within 90 days of adjournment, and attempting to procure an extension of time, affidavits seeking to show improper conduct by the trial judge were filed. Buzzanno v. State, 62 App. 137, 136 S. W. 257.

In order to obtain a reversal of a conviction, on the ground that accused was deprived of a statement of facts, the record should affirmatively show that the court made an order on an affidavit that accused was unable to pay for a statement of facts, so as to require the stenographer to furnish such statement. Wood v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 194.

If the stenographer did not comply with the judge's order requiring him to furnish a statement of facts to an indigent accused upon affidavit, accused is required to sue out mandamus to compel the issuance of the statement by the stenographer, to enable accused to procure a reversal for failure to have a statement of facts. Wood v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 194.

Where, on accused's affidavit of inability to pay, the court rightfully refused a free transcript, because he could not pay employment fees, without attempting to make up a statement of facts from memory of the evidence, and no attempt to show why a statement of facts was not made up by counsel, nor any showing that they were unable to do so, it cannot be held that accused was deprived of a statement of facts through no fault on his part. Jackson v. State, 70 App. 292, 156 S. W. 1183.

Where the official stenographer failed to comply with the order of the court to furnish a transcript of his notes, and the court took no steps to compel him to do so, or to comply with the order of the court of Criminal Appeals because he had lost a part of his notes, the case must be reversed and remanded. Burden v. State, 76 App. 319, 156 S. W. 1197.

Where the court, after accused had filed a pauper's affidavit, ordered the stenographer to make out a statement of facts, the stenographer's refusal to make out same on the ground that he was entitled to pay thereof did not excuse the want of a statement of facts in the record, where accused did not resort to mandamus or any other proceeding to compel obedience to the order, and there was ample time before adjournment of the court and also within the time allowed for filing the statement to have resorted to such proceedings. Chavarro v. State, 72 App. 240, 161 S. W. 972.

Where a pauper defendant, convicted of a capital crime, secured an order for the preparation of a statement of facts by the official stenographer, but the statement was not furnished, and he then, within the time allowed, wrote out a statement from memory, which the trial judge did not approve, the conviction will be reversed, and the time to file reversed. Gonzales v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 708.

Excuses for failure to file statement or bill in time.—See notes under art. 845.

Affidavit of inability to pay.—Certiorari does not lie to bring a statement of facts into the record, where it does not appear that appellant exhausted his statutory remedies to obtain the statement; mere alleging that an affidavit was filed showing his inability to pay for the statement, and requesting that the stenographer be ordered to prepare one, being insufficient. Olivas v. State, 61 App. 191, 134 S. W. 694.

Where accused declined to make an affidavit that he was not able to give security for a transcript, so as to entitle him to a free statement of facts, under this article, but merely made an affidavit that he was not able to pay for a transcript, he cannot assign error to a refusal to order a statement of facts to be made without cost. Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 225.

Under Act March 31, 1911 (Acts 52d Leg. c. 119) § 8, providing that on an affidavit in forma pauperis, seeking to have the court stenographer make a report of the trial without pay, the court shall make an order as in civil cases, such order is within the discretion of the court after hearing the affidavit and the evidence thereon, and where an affidavit was never presented to or acted upon by the court, and showed no reason why appellant had not made out a statement of facts within the time allowed, the language of the record is not sufficient to show that the stenographer's report within the 90 days allowed by law, a purported statement of facts delivered to defendant by the court stenographer would not be considered. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 972.

Art. 845b. Duty of shorthand reporter to make transcript of evidence on request; fees.—At the request of any party to the suit it shall be the duty of the official shorthand reporter to make a transcript in typewriting of all the evidence and other proceedings or any portion thereof, in question and answer form, as provided in Section 5 of this Act [art. 844b], which transcript shall be paid for at the rate of fifteen cents per folio of 100 words by and be the prop-
Diligence of accused.—Where, after 60 days' additional time was granted accused for procuring a statement of facts and bill of exceptions upon the stenographer's failure to furnish them within the 30 days after adjournment, the only effort accused made to procure the statement, etc., from the stenographer was to offer to pay for them when made out, there was not sufficient diligence shown, as he should have applied to the court for process to compel the stenographer to prepare them. Peddy v. State, 68 App. 483, 140 S. W. 229.

Art. 845c. Repeal; proviso.—That Chapter 39, page 374, Acts of the First Called Session of the Thirty-first Legislature of the State of Texas, providing for the appointment of court stenographers, prescribing their duties and regulating their charges and compensation, and all other laws or parts of laws in conflict with this Act be, and the same are hereby expressly repealed; provided, however, that nothing in this Act shall be so construed as to prevent parties from preparing statements of facts on appeal independent of the transcript of the notes of the official shorthand reporter. [Act 1911, p. 268, ch. 119, § 13.]

See notes under arts. 844b-845b and art. 2672, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914.

Explanatory.—Laws 1909, ch. 39, § 14, the act above repealed, repeals the former act (Laws 1897, 1st S. S., ch. 24) but provides "that no statement of facts be so construed as to prevent parties from preparing statements of facts on appeal-independent of the transcript of the notes of the official shorthand reporter."

Certification of statement of facts by defendant's attorney.—Acts 1st Leg. (1st Ex. Session) c. 39 [art. 1911], Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, authorizes the judges of the district courts to appoint official stenographers, but that the act shall not prevent parties from preparing statements of facts on appeal independently of the official stenographer, and that a statement of facts made by a court stenographer should be in duplicate and certified, both of which should be filed in the court below, the duplicate preserved there and the original sent up on appeal. Held, on appeal from a criminal case in a district court which was not shown to have any official stenographer, that a certified copy of the original statement of facts prepared by defendant's attorney and approved by the judge would not be stricken out. Conger v. State, 68 App. 312, 140 S. W. 1112.

Unofficial preparation of transcript by stenographer.—Where appellant, without ordering any transcript of the testimony in the form of questions and answers, and without any such transcript having been prepared or filed, procured the official reporter to prepare a narrative form of statement of facts, which was agreed to by the parties and approved by the trial judge, and which was presumably prepared from the notes taken at the trial, and from not from any transcript (hereof, the reporter did not act officially in preparing such transcript, but unofficially as the agent of appellant, and the statement constituted a "statement of facts independent of the transcript of the notes of the reporter," as permitted by this article. Canode v. Sewell (Civ. App.) 170 S. W. 271.

Repeal of provisions in civil statutes.—Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2688, authorizes a statement of facts to be made up by agreement, and article 2690, authorizing submission, where the parties cannot agree of their respective statements to the judge, who shall make out, sign, and file a correct statement, were not superseded by this article; the word "parties" referring to the parties appealing, and such proviso not meaning that the official stenographer's report can be dispensed with only by the agreement of the parties. Camden Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Civ. App.) 175 S. W. 816.

Art. 846. Shorthand reporter shall keep stenographic record of trial of felony cases; duty in case parties cannot agree as to testimony; condensation; furnishing transcript to attorney appointed to represent defendant.—In the trial of all criminal cases in the district court in which the defendant is charged with a felony, the official shorthand reporter shall keep an accurate stenographic record of all the proceedings of such trial in like manner as is provided for in civil cases, and should an appeal be prosecuted in any judgment of conviction, whenever the State and defendant cannot agree as to the testimony of any witness, then and in such event, so much of the transcript of the official shorthand reporter's report with reference to such disputed fact or facts shall be inserted in the statement of facts as is necessary to show what the witness testified to in regard to the same, and constitute a part of the statement of facts, and the same shall apply to the preparation of bills of exception; provided, that such stenographer's report when carried into the statement of facts or bills of exception, shall be condensed so as not to contain the questions and answers, except where, in the opinion of the judge, such questions and answers may be necessary in order to elucidate the fact or question involved. Provided, that in all cases where the court is required to and does appoint an attorney to represent the defendant in a criminal action, that the official shorthand reporter shall be required to furnish the attorney for said defendant, if convicted, and where an appeal is prosecuted, with a transcript of his notes as provided in Section 5 of this Act [art. 844b], for which said service he shall be paid by the State of Texas, upon the certificate of the district judge, one-half of the rate provided for herein in civil cases. [Act 1907, ch. 24, § 5; Act 1909, p. 379, repealed; Act 1911, p. 268, ch. 119, § 14.]

Explanatory.—Act 1911, ch. 119, § 13, repeals Act 1909, 1st S. S., p. 371, ch. 39. As art. 846, as it appeared in the revision of 1911, was constructed from the repealed act, such article is superseded. The new provision is given the same article number in this compilation.

Duty of stenographers to make transcript.—It is only in a case where one is charged with a capital offense and the court appoints an attorney for him that he is to have the stenographer make out a transcript of his notes, and in all other cases he must use diligence to see that the stenographer complies with the order requiring him to make out a statement of facts. Brown v. State, 70 App. 588, 157 S. W. 1192.

Copying evidence into transcript.—The evidence in a felony case being required by the statute to be sent up separately from the transcript, the facts being copied into and sent up in the transcript cannot be considered. Leggett v. State, 62 App. 59, 126 S. W. 731.

Condensation.—A literal transcript of the stenographer's notes of the evidence taken at the trial will not be considered on review as a statement of facts. Brown v. State, 57 App. 369, 123 S. W. 566.

A statement of facts, wholly made up of questions and answers and a verbatim copy of the stenographer's notes, is made up in violation of the statute, and cannot be considered on appeal. Kemper v. State, 57 App. 365, 123 S. W. 131.

A statement of facts with reference to the denial of an application for a change of venue was objectionable, where for the most part it was a reproduction of the stenographer's notes in the form of questions and answers. King v. State, 57 App. 363, 123 S. W. 132.

A statement of facts on appeal in a felony case, consisting of a verbatim stenographic report of the evidence, cannot be considered in the absence of a showing that the trial judge deemed a statement in such form necessary; Acts 26th Leg. c. 24, § 5, prohibiting such form except when he deems it necessary. Felder v. State, 59 App. 144, 127 S. W. 1065.

A purported statement of facts consisting of the stenographer's report, showing the questions and answers of the witnesses but other unnecessary matter, will be stricken out on motion. Chassen v. State, 70 App. 607, 157 S. W. 477.

A stenographic report of the trial of a case, made out in the form of questions and answers and including the objections and arguments of counsel on both sides on the objections, together with the remarks and rulings of the court, cannot be considered as a statement of facts on appeal. Criner v. State, 71 App. 369, 150 S. W. 1555.

A purported statement of facts made up entirely of questions and answers, and not approved either by counsel or the trial judge, though certified to be correct by the official stenographer, cannot be considered. King v. State, 72 App. 294, 162 S. W. 890.

Where there is no possibility that the attorneys or the court below could not have agreed on the testimony without the questions and answers, the trial judge's certificate that they are necessary to elucidate the fact or question involved is not conclusive, and their inclusion is improper. Cooley v. State, 73 App. 325, 165 S. W. 192.

Transcript for attorney appointed by court.—The provision of this article that in all cases where the court is required to and does appoint an attorney to represent the defendant in criminal action the official reporter shall be required to furnish the attorney with a transcript of his notes, etc., when construed with section 8 [art. 845a] does not authorize the furnishing of a transcript of the evidence to an accused who was represented by employed counsel. Jackson v. State, 70 App. 295, 156 S. W. 1182.

Under art. 558, requiring the court in capital felony cases to appoint counsel for accused too poor to employ counsel, and the provision of this article that court stenographers, when an appeal is perfected, shall transcribe the testimony and that where the court appoints an attorney for accused the stenographer shall furnish a transcript, the court, in a capital felony case, must, where it appoints an attorney for accused because he is too poor to employ counsel, require the official stenographer when an appeal is perfected to furnish a transcript, and where the court orders the stenographer so to do it must see that the order is complied with.

Burden v. State, 70 App. 249, 156 S. W. 1197.
CHAPTER TWO

ARREST OF JUDGMENT

Article 847. [825] Definition of "motion in arrest of judgment."—A "motion in arrest of judgment" is a suggestion to the court on the part of the defendant that judgment had not been legally rendered against him. The motion may be made orally or in writing, and the record must show the grounds of the motion. [O. C. 675.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 961, 983.

Art. 848. [826] Must be made in two days, etc.—The motion must be made within two days after the conviction; or, if the court adjourn before the expiration of two days from such conviction, then it may be made at any time before the final adjournment of the court for the term. [O. C. 676.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 961.
See art. 861, subd. 3, and notes.

In general.—A motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the party making the affidavit on which the information was based made his mark instead of signing his name, filed more than two days after the verdict of the jury comes too late, though a motion to quash might be entertained. Lewis v. State, 56 App. 361, 97 S. W. 481, 482.

It is not error to strike out a motion in arrest of judgment, not filed within two days after judgment of conviction is rendered. Reno v. State, 56 App. 242, 120 S. W. 430.

An objection that an information for selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory does not show that the election putting prohibition into effect was held before the passage of the Act of April 24, 1903, c. 35 [art. 357, Pen. Code], making such sale a felony, is an objection to the form of the information, and to be available an exception must be taken before announcement for trial and a motion in arrest of judgment filed within two days after judgment, as required by this article, and a conviction under such an information will be sustained where the information is first attacked by a motion in arrest of judgment filed eight days after judgment. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 348.

Practice on appeal.—A motion for new trial could not be considered where it was filed more than two days after verdict and no excuse was assigned for the delay. Valentine v. State, 6 App. 439. And see Reno v. State, 56 App. 229, 130 S. W. 429.

Art. 849. [827] Shall be granted for what cause.—A motion in arrest of judgment shall be granted upon any ground which would be good upon exception to an indictment or information for any substantial defect therein. [O. C. 678.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 961.

As to distinction between substantial defects and defects of form in indictments and informations, see ante, arts. 574, 576, and notes.

Defective verdict.—Where the indictment charged an offense divided into degrees, a general verdict assessing a penalty applicable only to an inferior degree and not finding defendant not guilty of the higher degrees, was ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 419.

A motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict was not responsive to the indictment and did not show defendant's guilt, could, if necessary, be regarded as a motion in arrest of judgment. Senterfield v. State, 41 Tex. 186.

Where the verdict is insufficient to support a judgment, a motion in arrest of judgment is proper and should be sustained. Howell v. State, 10 App. 298.
Defects in indictment or information.—See notes under art. 451, ante, "Requisite 5," and see Slaughter v. State, 24 Tex. 419; Calvin v. State, 25 Tex. 789; Senterfit v. State, 41 Tex. 186.

Where the indictment or information is substantially defective, a motion in arrest of judgment should be sustained. See the following instances: Strickland v. State, 19 App. 618; Longenotti v. State, 22 App. 61, 2 S. W. 620; Hickman v. State, 22 App. 441, 2 S. W. 640; Anderson v. State, 20 App. 595; Trimble v. State, 16 App. 115.

It is not a good objection in arrest of judgment that the indictment is not marked "filed." Reynolds v. State, 11 Tex. 120.

The failure of an indictment to allege that it was presented in court is a defect of form and is not available on motion in arrest of judgment. Jones v. State, 32 App. 116, 22 S. W. 149.

Different dates in different counts do not vitiate conviction nor require arrest of judgment. Shuman v. State, 34 App. 69, 29 S. W. 160.

A motion to quash information because there is no file mark on the complaint must be made before the trial, and not in arrest of judgment. Jossel v. State, 42 App. 73, 57 S. W. 826.

Objections to the sufficiency of an indictment may be raised by motion in arrest of judgment. Brown v. State, 60 App. 505, 32 S. W. 789.

An indictment being presented, received by the court, and entered upon the minutes, remains pending until it is tried by the court or dismissed by the district attorney; so that it is no ground for quashing it, or arrest of judgment, that, defendant having been arrested, it was placed on the retied docket to be brought forward on the trial docket when defendant should be arrested. Allen v. State, 62 App. 557, 138 S. W. 593.

An information charging a gift of intoxicating liquor while an election was being held was not defective so as to furnish a ground for arrest of judgment because it also charged that the defendant informed the other person of the whereabouts of the intoxicating liquor; it being permissible by the use of the conjunction "and" to allege that a misdemeanor was committed in any of the ways defined by statute. Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 315.

The defect in an information bearing no file mark, and not specifically charging that the offense was committed before presentation, cannot be taken advantage of by motion in arrest, but only by motion to quash. Hall v. State, 79 Tex. 240, 156 S. W. 644.

The fact that the word "capable," in a sentence in an indictment for selling liquor charging that the liquor was capable of producing intoxication, was misspelled, was not ground for arrest of judgment. Green v. State, 70 App. 490, 849, 850, providing that such motion can only be granted for substantial defects: the word having been correctly spelled in the complaint, and the information providing that it was preferred in connection with the complaint. Figueroa v. State, 71 App. 371, 139 S. W. 1188.

A defective and insufficient indictment may be assailed by a motion in arrest of judgment. Robertson v. State, 31 Tex. 36.

A motion in arrest complaining that the record did not show return of the indictment into court, held properly overruled where the indictment had been substituted without objection for one that had been destroyed, and the objection was made for the first time after change of venue and trial. Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86.

A defective indictment held to vitiate the conviction, though no objection was made by motion in arrest of judgment. Ryan v. State, 3 App. 354.

A motion in arrest of judgment held not available to present the objections that the finding and return of the indictment was not entered on the minutes, and that the names did not show the ordering and drawing of a special venire. Rather v. State, 25 App. 623, 9 S. W. 69.

An indictment held sufficient, on motion in arrest of judgment, to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. Green v. State, 27 App. 244, 11 S. W. 114.

A motion in arrest complaining of variance in the names of defendants in different allegations of the indictment, held properly overruled. Wampler v. State, 28 App. 352, 13 S. W. 114.

A motion in arrest held properly overruled when based on the ground that a prior indictment was pending against defendant for the same offense. Donner v. State, 20 App. 223, 13 S. W. 821.
A motion in arrest of judgment held well taken where the indictment for theft of a cow was wholly insufficient for failure to allege want of consent. Swink v. State, 32 App. 590, 24 S. W. 893.

Use of word "at" for "in" in an information in stating the place at which the aggravated assault was committed, held not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. Blackwell v. State, 25 App. 375, 26 S. W. 297, 22 S. W. 158.

Oversizing of motion in arrest of judgment which complained of a fatal variance between the purport and tenor clause of the indictment, held error. Fite v. State, 36 App. 4, 34 S. W. 932.

In prosecutions for violations of the local option law, objections that the indictment failed to allege that the law was in operation in the county where the violation was charged to have occurred are matters of form only, and cannot be raised on motion in arrest, but must be raised in limine on motion to quash. Dobson v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 546.

Objection waived.—An objection by motion in arrest on the ground that no copy of the indictment was served, held too late when first made after verdict. Bonner v. State, 29 App. 222, 15 S. W. 821.

Where defendant pleaded to the indictment without moving to quash same or filing plea to the jurisdiction, it is too late thereafter to make such objection by motion in arrest of judgment. Bonner v. State, 38 App. 599, 44 S. W. 172.

Variances between allegations and proof.—Where there is a material variance between the allegations of an information and the complaint upon which it is based, the judgment should be arrested on motion. Lanham v. State, 9 App. 233; Smith v. State, Id. 475.

Variances between complaint and information.—The fact that a complaint alleges an offense to have been committed "on or about" a certain date, and the information omits the phrase "on or about," is no ground for arrest of judgment. Dave v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 1095.

Verdict.—A general verdict of guilty on an indictment containing good and bad counts will be sustained, in the absence of a motion to quash the defective counts, or of objections to evidence tending to support them. Fry v. State, 36 App. 582, 37 S. W. 741, 35 S. W. 368.

A motion in arrest brings in review the sufficiency as to matter of substance of the indictment to support a judgment, but does not raise the question as to the want of evidence or its sufficiency. It is a suggestion merely that judgment cannot be legally rendered on the verdict. Washington v. State, 41 Tex. 582; Berliner v. State, 6 App. 181; West v. State, Id. 485.

Order of transfer.—The order of transfer under article 482, ante, cannot be questioned by motion in arrest of judgment. Coker v. State, 7 App. 83; Bonner v. State, 38 App. 599, 44 S. W. 172, citing Friedlander v. State, 7 App. 204.

Art. 850. [828] Shall not be, etc.—No judgment shall be arrested for want of form. [O. C. 679.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 961.

See notes under art. 849.

Cited, Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 348.

Art. 851. [829] Effect of arresting a judgment.—The effect of arresting a judgment is to place the defendant in the same position he was before the indictment or information was presented; and, if the court be satisfied from the evidence that he may be convicted upon a proper indictment or information, he shall be remanded into custody, or bailed, as the case may require. [O. C. 680.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 983.

Art. 852. [830] Court may discharge defendant, when.—Where the court is not satisfied from the proof that, upon a proper indictment or information, the defendant may be convicted, he shall be discharged. [O. C. 681.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 983.
ART. 853. [831] Definition of "judgment."—A final judgment is the declaration of the court entered of record, showing—

1. The title and number of the case.
2. That the case was called for trial and that the parties appeared.
3. The plea of the defendant.
4. The selection, impanelling and swearing of the jury.
5. The submission of the evidence.
6. That the jury was charged by the court.
7. The return of the verdict.
8. The verdict.
9. In the case of a conviction, that it is considered by the court that the defendant is adjudged to be guilty of the offense as found by the jury; or, in case of acquittal, that the defendant be discharged.
10. That the defendant be punished as has been determined by the jury in cases where they have the right to determine the amount or the duration and the place of punishment in accordance with the nature and terms of the punishment prescribed in the verdict.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 962, 963, 965, 969, 973-975, 998.

In general.—As to diligence of counsel respecting the record. see district court rule 119 (142 S. W. xxvi): Dement v. State, 39 App. 271, 45 S. W. 917.

Form and requisites of judgment.—Judgment will be reversed if it does not show defendant's plea. Gilmore v. State, 37 App. 178, 105, 29 S. W. 105; Wood v. State, 37 App. 85, 38 S. W. 625; Click v. State, 39 S. W. 370.

The appeal will be dismissed for want of a final judgment where this article has not been complied with. Mireles v. State, 13 App. 346; Pennington v. State, 11 App. 281; Calvin v. State, 23 Tex. 577.

Judgment failing to recite that plea was entered is insufficient to sustain conviction. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 253; Boggs v. State, 38 App. 52, 41 S. W. 642.

In capital cases all the prescribed forms of law, however apparently unimportant in themselves, must be observed. The right to exact the ultimate penalty must appear clear and perfect in every particular, both in form and substance. Burrill v. State, 16 Tex. 147; Calvin v. State, 25 Tex. 789; Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519.

A final judgment of conviction may be said to consist of two parts: 1. *The facts judicially ascertained, together with the manner of ascertaining them, entered of record. 2. The recorded declaration of the court pronouncing the legal consequences of the facts thus judicially ascertained. Both of these parts are equally essential. In the first part there should be set forth the title and number of the case, the calling of the case for trial, the appearance of the parties, the plea of the defendant, and, if "not guilty," the selection, impaneling, and swearing of the jury, the reading of the evidence, the trial of the verdict and the finding of the jury. In the second part it should be declared upon the record, in connection with the verdict, that it is considered by the court that the defendant is adjudged to be guilty of the offense as found by the jury, and that the defendant be punished as it has been determined by the jury, setting forth the amount, or the duration and place of punishment, in accordance with the nature and terms of the punishment prescribed in the verdict. Mayfield v. State, 40
Tex. 239. This article was framed by the revisers from the decision above quoted.

If the record recites that "the following jury was impaneled," setting out only eleven names, the error is fatal. Rich v. State, 1 App. 296; Huelber v. State, 3 App. 458. The names need not be recited in the judgment, though, if exception be taken to any juror, it is good practice to set them out. Morton v. State, 3 App.

The requisite of a final judgment of conviction prescribed in the ninth clause of this article, that the defendant is adjudged to be guilty of the offense as found by the jury," has reference to felony cases, and does not apply in misdemeanor cases.
Hill v. State, 11 App. 373.
The judgment entry in felony cases should show that the judgment was entered in The judgment entry must be in substantial compliance with the requirements of this article. Mireles v. State, 13 App. 346, citing Pennington v. State, 11 App. 251;
Calvin v. State, 23 Tex. 578.
It is not required that the fact that the indictment or information was read to the jury, shall be recited in the judgment entry as is directed with regard to the defendant's plea. The proper practice, however, is to make the judgment entry, immediately preceding the plea, set forth such fact. Nevertheless, such fact may be sufficiently authenticated in any part of the record, as in the charge of the
The proper practice is to make the judgment entry immediately preceding the plea, set forth the fact that the indictment was read to the jury; but this is not one of the statutory requisites of the judgment, and its omission will not invalidate the judgment. White v. State, 18 App. 57.
A judgment erroneously awarding costs against a defendant convicted of murder in the first degree will be reformed on appeal. Jackson v. State, 25 App. 314, 7 S. W. 872.
Final judgment must show that evidence was introduced. Creswell v. State, 37
App. 225, 39 S. W. 458, 935.
The final judgment must show compliance with subv. 9. Galther v. State, 21
App. 521, 1 S. W. 456; Mireles v. State, 13 App. 346; Anschincks v. State, 43 Tex.

The final judgment in capital conviction need not recite the mode of execution.
Steagald v. State, 22 App. 484, 3 S. W. 771.
In a capital conviction the judgment need not declare the manner in which the denial penalty shall be executed. Steagald v. State, 22 App. 484, 3 S. W. 771. Nor should it adjudge costs against the defendant. Lanham v. State, 7 App. 126, post, art.
1388.
In capital felonies the record must show an arraignment and plea, but these are usually shown by a separate entry upon the minutes, and not in the judgment entry, though it would be sufficient to set them forth in the judgment entry.
A judgment of conviction must recite that a jury was selected, impaneled, and

To sustain a conviction record must show making and entering of plea, selection

In a misdemeanor it is not necessary that the judgment show an offense conomine of which appellant has been convicted. Kiefel v. State, 49 App. 308, 94 S.

The record must contain a final judgment. The recital in the record that "it is ordered adjudged and decreed by the court that the defendant Caskey be fined $50 and costs" is not a final judgment. Even the verdict is not set out in the record.
Caskey v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 666.
Under this article a judgment consists of the facts judicially ascertained, together with the manner of ascertaining them, entered of record, and the recorded of the court the pronouncing the legal consequence of the facts thus judicially ascertained, and both of these parts are equally essential. Robinson v.
State, 3 App. 550, 126 S. W. 276.
In view of the verdict of guilty, as charged, copied in the judgment, and the indictment properly charging the engaging in and pursuit of the business of selling interesting liquor after the prohibition law was properly and legally put in force, held, the judgment and sentence, when taken together, were insufficient, as not showing that defendant had been convicted of any offense. Velezana v. State, 72 App. 4, 160 S. W. 731.

Conformity to indictment, verdict, or other parts of record.—The judgment must agree to the indictment, even as to the form. Tex. 508. A misrecital therein as to the date of the verdict is immaterial. Alexander v. State, 4 App. 261; see, also, Stewart v. State, 4 App. 410; Mills v. State, Id. 263, for instances of other immaterial errors. It need not recite the names of the jurors who tried the case, nor the exact oath which was administered to the jury. The usual form is, "thereupon a jury, to wit: A. B., and eleven others, were duly selected, impaneled, and sworn," and this is sufficient. If the entry undertakes to set forth the names of the jurors, it must set forth the local number, no mistake, or the judgment will be set aside. If it undertakes to recite the oath administered to the jury, and recites a different oath than that prescribed by law, the judgment will be bad. Ante, arts. 698, 760.

That the word "years" was omitted after the figure designating the number of years in the verdict as copied in the judgment, did not require a reversal. Long v. State, 1 App. 709.

If the indictment and verdict are for "conspiracy to commit burglary," the judgment is erroneous if it adjudges the accused guilty of "conspiracy to commit robbery." Johnson v. State, 3 App. 599.

In entering a verdict upon the minutes, the clerk should copy it verbatim et literatim, and should so transcribe it into the transcript on appeal. It is an unwarranted tampering with the record for him to do otherwise. Crockett v. State, 14 App. 236.

Record of judgment.—That the term of imprisonment was omitted from the verdict as copied in the judgment did not require a reversal where the verdict as rendered was complete and in proper form. McInturf v. State, 29 App. 325.

The attempt to commit an assault through mistake sentenced him for arson, held immaterial. Ex parte Strey (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 811. See, also, Smith v. State, 34 App. 123, 29 S. W. 774.

Defendant, a female under the age of sixteen years, was convicted of murder in the second degree, and the jury assessed her punishment at confinement for life in the state reformatory. The court entered judgment confining defendant in the penitentiary for life; held, incorrect. The law does not authorize the confinement of females in the reformatory. Ex parte Mathews, 38 App. 617, 44 S. W. 153.

When an offense committed was assault with intent to rob, and a general verdict of guilty was returned, it was error to render judgment for assault with intent to murder. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 382, 131 S. W. 1091.

The court cannot accept a verdict and permit it to stand and yet refuse to abide by it and impose a sentence not authorized thereby. Baker v. State, 70 App. 618, 138 S. W. 598.

All judgments of court must be entered of record, and this necessarily includes interlocutory judgments as well as judgments on exception or demurrer to pleadings. Rust v. State, 31 App. 75, 19 S. W. 762. And see, also, Rejna v. State, 26 App. 656, 14 S. W. 455.

A judgment by a court of record can only be evidenced by its records. Gustie v. State, 41 App. 272, 70 S. W. 751.

Correction of judgment.—In a misdemeanor case, as in a civil case, the court has full control over its judgment until the adjournment of the trial term, and may, upon its own motion, set aside or reform the same, or grant a new trial according to the justice of the case, upon the merits as well as matters of form. McCall v. State, 17 S. W. 134, 12 S. W. 143. But this power extends to cases where punishment has already been inflicted in whole or in part under the judgment rendered. See an instance in which it was held that the power could not legally be exercised: Grisham v. State, 19 App. 564; Cunningham v. State, 26 App. 53, 13 S. W. 613. And see Ex parte Cox, 29 App. 54, 14 S. W. 596; Ex parte Dockery, 33 App. 293, 44 S. W. 509.

The court has authority to correct its judgments at any time during the term. Bruce v. State, 36 App. 55, 25 S. W. 383.

A court has power to, at any time during the term, correct the record so as to correspond with the facts in the case. Carr v. State, 36 App. 539, 37 S. W. 426.

The court may correct the record so as to show that sentence was pronounced immediately at defendant's request. Doane v. State, 26 App. 456, 37 S. W. 751.

A judgment may, on motion, be corrected to correspond with the indictment and the verdict. Kingsbury v. State, 37 App. 259, 39 S. W. 266.

In view of articles 559 and 533 the appellate court has power to reform the judgment to conform to the facts, where it had all the data necessary to do so, since by this article, the lower court had power to amend and reform the judgment after the term, there was no reason why the appellate court, having all the data before it, could not also do it. Robinson v. State, 85 App. 550, 126 S. W. 273.

During term time the district court has jurisdiction to alter, modify, or correct its judgments and decrees rendered during the term. Ex parte Ogden, 63 App. 380, 140 S. W. 345.

The Court of Criminal Appeals may, after an appeal has been taken, conform the judgment to the verdict. Robinson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 912.

What constitutes final judgment.—See notes under art. 994, post.

A judgment overruling a motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, or disposing of exceptions to an indictment, is not a final judgment. State v.Paschal, 29 App. 570; Tolbert v. State, 2 App. 47; State v. Thornton, 33 Tex. 194.

An entry, "it is, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the sheriff take the defendant in custody until the fine and costs are paid," is not a final judgment. Butler v. State, 2 App. 329.

In felony cases, the sentence is in fact the final judgment; it must be pronounced before appeal can be prosecuted. Arcia v. State, 26 App. 193, 9 S. W. 685. See Mapes v. State, 13 App. 32.

Sentence is the final judgment in our practice. Arcia v. State, 25 App. 193, 9 S. W. 685.

A judgment is final where it terminates the rights of the parties and the case. Though it fails to order execution, a judgment in a misdemeanor case imposing a fine, is final. (Overruling on this point Heath v. State, 14 App. 21; Braden v. State, Id. 22, and Want v. State, Id. 24.) Terry v. State, 30 App. 408, 17 S. W. 1075. Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 118, 17 S. W. 1076.

A judgment is always final if it terminates the right of the parties with reference to the particular suit. It is not necessary that it be a judgment upon the merits; if it definitely puts the case out of court, it is final. Terry v. State, 30 App. 408, 17 S. W. 1075.

A judgment rendered against sureties on a bail bond, is not a final judgment from which an appeal will lie, where no provision has been made of the case as to the principal. Cox v. State, 34 App. 34, 29 S. W. 273, and cases cited.

A judgment in a felony case, not containing the ninth and tenth requisites of this article, is defective and not final. Longoria v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1089.

See this case for a judgment in a misdemeanor case held not to be a final judgment. Trauyler v. State (Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 142.

Conclusiveness and collateral attack.—A final judgment can be collaterally attacked only when it is void. Johnson v. State, 39 App. 655, 48 S. W. 70.

Every presumption to uphold the judgment of the trial court will be invoked by the appellate court. The party attacking such judgment on appeal must show sufficient to set it aside. Gordon v. State, 29 App. 410, 36 S. W. 337; Brown v. State, 32 App. 119, 22 S. W. 596; Hall v. State, 33 App. 537, 28 S. W. 209.

The affidavit of the defendant setting out that he did not plead to the indictment will not suffice to controvert the recital in the judgment that he did plead to it. The recital must be supported by proof. Id.

Every presumption is indulged in favor of the correctness of judgments of the court, and a person attacking such judgment must overcome all of such presumptions. Heflin v. State, 31 App. 484, 46 S. W. 647.

A verdict reading, "We * * * find the defendants * * * guilty of murder in the first degree * * * and assess their punishment at death," held not to import a joint verdict which would be satisfied by the death of either defendant. Mooty v. State, 35 App. 456, 33 S. W. 877, 34 S. W. 126.

A verdict reading, "We * * * find the defendants * * * guilty of murder in the first degree and assess their punishment at life imprisonment," held to separate finding relative to the punishment of each defendant. Polk v. State, 35 App. 495, 34 S. W. 632.

Final judgment prerequisite to appeal.—See notes under art. 856, post.

Art. 854. [832] Definition of "sentence."—A "sentence" is the order of the court, made in the presence of the defendant, and entered of record, pronouncing the judgment, and ordering the same to be carried into execution in the manner prescribed by law.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 964.

Minutes of pronouncement.—Sentence may be entered without memoranda in judges' minutes, to show that it has been pronounced. Gonzales v. State, 35 App. 115, 34 S. W. 323, 30 Am. St. Rep. 51.

Requisites of judgment of sentence.—A judgment of conviction recited that the defendant is guilty as confessed in his plea of guilty, and, his punishment having been fixed at "five years confinement in the penitentiary," he is to be punished "in the penitentiary for five years." The judgment of sentence, after reciting the provisions of the judgment of conviction, ordered that defendant be delivered to the superintendent of penitentiaries, by whom he "shall be confined in said —— for five years, in accordance with the provisions of the law governing the subject of said sentence." Held, the sentence was not ground for reversal. Patton v. State, 62 App. 28, 136 S. W. 42.

That such judgment of sentence was not numbered or dated was not ground for reversal. Patton v. State, 62 App. 28, 136 S. W. 42.

Practice.—Fletcher v. State, 37 App. 198, 30 S. W. 116.

Art. 855. [833] Judgment and sentence, when.—If a new trial is not granted, nor the judgment arrested, in cases of felony, the sentence shall be pronounced in the presence of the defendant at any time after the expiration of the time allowed for making the motion for a new trial or the motion in arrest of judgment. [O. C. 682.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 964.

Reargument of motion for new trial.—After motion for new trial was overruled and sentence pronounced, a reargument of the motion did not affect the sentence.

Presence of defendant.—In felony cases the judgment must be entered in the presence of the defendant and preceding the pronouncing of the sentence, and the judgment entry should show a compliance with this requirement. Mapes v. State, 13 App. 85; Gordon v. State, Id. 196.

Defendant must be present at the hearing of a motion to enter judgment nunc pro tunc after dismissal of an appeal, unless he waives the right to be present.

Art. 856. [834] In cases of appeal, sentence shall be pronounced.—When an appeal is taken in cases of felony, where the verdict prescribes the death penalty, sentence shall not be pronounced, but shall be suspended until the decision of the court of appeals has been received. In all other cases of felony, sentence shall be pronounced before the appeal is taken; and, upon the affirmance of the judgment by the court of appeals, the clerk thereof shall at once transmit the mandate of the court to the clerk of the court from which the appeal was taken, there to be duly recorded in the minute book of said court; and a certified copy of this record, under the seal of the court, shall be sufficient authority to authorize and require the sheriff to execute the sentence without further delay. [O. C. 683.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 964-967, 995.
See art. 68, ante; art. 917, post.

Historical.—Before the enactment of this article, when the defendant appealed, sentence was in all cases suspended until after the affirmation of the judgment of conviction in the appellate court. Smith v. State, 41 Tex. 352; Bozier v. State, 5 App. 221; Brown v. State, Id. 546; Pate v. State, 21 App. 191, 17 S. W. 461; O'Connell v. State, 15 Tex. 348.

An rendition of final judgment after retrial or re试ial, 1 App. 516. See Downs v. State, 7 App. 483; Longoria v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 1059.

An appeal will lie after conviction of murder in the first degree only after rendition of judgment and entry of judgment. Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 5 S. W. 522; Washington v. State, 31 App. 84, 19 S. W. 900, and cases cited; Estes v. State, 35 App. 966, 43 S. W. 982; Robinson v. State, 58 App. 556, 126 S. W. 276.

An appeal can be prosecuted only from a final judgment of conviction. There is no conviction until judgment has been rendered and entered adjudging defendant to be guilty of an offense. Washington v. State, 31 App. 84, 19 S. W. 900; Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 5 S. W. 522.

The record in all felony cases must show final judgment and sentence, except that where the death penalty is assessed, sentence will be suspended until decision of court of criminal appeals has been received. Boone v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 267.

Sentence after conviction is essential to a final judgment; and, in the absence, an appeal must be dismissed. Woolridge v. State, 61 App. 324, 135 S. W. 124.

Under this article one at whose instance sentence was suspended had no right of appeal before sentence was pronounced. Bierman v. State, 73 App. 234, 164 S. W. 840.

Jurisdiction after appeal perfected.—The trial court cannot conform the judgment to the verdict after an appeal has been taken. Robison v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 912.

Judgment before sentence.—In felony cases the judgment must be entered before the pronouncing of the sentence. Mapes v. State, 13 App. 85; Gordon v. State, 13 App. 196.

Time in which appeal must be taken.—In death penalty cases in order to give court of criminal appeals jurisdiction, the appeal must be taken at the term at which the defendant was convicted. Toan v. Stich (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1069.

Time for pronouncement of sentence.—When the verdict is for murder with the death penalty, and an appeal is taken, sentence must be suspended until the decision has been received. On a conviction of murder, with a life term in the penitentiary, sentence may be pronounced after notice of appeal has been given. Taylor v. State, 14 App. 340.

Where defendant on conviction of murder in the first degree gave no notice of appeal, a sentence imposed upon him on the same date was not void. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 115 S. W. 959.

Correction of sentence.—A sentence providing that it should be carried into execution after expiration of the term of imprisonment in another suit, instead of from date, could be corrected by the Supreme Court. Prince v. State, 44 Tex. 460.

Art. 857. [835] Where two days do not intervene before adjournment.—In cases where a conviction takes place so late in the term of the court as not to allow the two days' time for making a motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, the sentence may be pronounced at any time before the court finally adjourns; provided, that in every case at least six hours shall be allowed for making either of these motions. [O. C. 684.]

See Ex parte Parker, 35 App. 12, 29 S. W. 440, 760.

Art. 858. [836] Same subject.—If, at the time a verdict is returned into court, there be less than six hours remaining before the court, by law, must adjourn, it shall be lawful, and shall be the duty of the district judge, to sit during the whole of Saturday night and Sunday for the purpose of enabling the defendant to move for a new trial or in arrest of judgment, and prepare his cause for the court of appeals. This article shall not require the district judge to sit longer than six hours after verdict rendered, if a motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, shall not have been filed. [O. C. 685.]

Reception of verdict on Sunday.—A verdict can not be received on Sunday, the day after the term of the court has legally expired. Such a verdict is a nullity, and will not support a judgment and sentence. Harper v. State, 43 Tex. 491.

Where the term ended at 12 o'clock p. m. Saturday, March 30, a verdict and judgment rendered on the next day were void. Ex parte Juneman v. State, 25 App. 486, 13 S. W. 733, and cases cited, and see Ex parte Parker, 35 App. 12, 29 S. W. 460, 760.

Art. 859. [837] Where there has been a failure to enter judgment.—Where, from any cause whatever, there is a failure to enter judgment and pronounce sentence upon conviction during the term, the judgment may be entered, and sentence pronounced, at any succeeding term of the court, unless a new trial has been granted, or the judgment arrested, or an appeal has been taken. [O. C. 686.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1065, 1068.

Effect of perfection of appeal.—Motion for new trial was overruled, and notice of appeal given, but no final judgment entered; held, the appeal having been perfected, the lower court had lost jurisdiction and a judgment entered nunc pro tunc is void. Estes v. State, 35 App. 506, 43 S. W. 982.

Entry nunc pro tunc.—For forms relating to a judgment nunc pro tunc, see Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1065-1068.

A defendant may also cause final judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc and appeal therefrom, even when a former appeal was dismissed because of his escape. Smith v. State, 1 App. 495-516.

If an appeal has been taken, but no final judgment has been entered, and the appeal is dismissed, it is the proper practice to cause the final judgment to be entered at a subsequent term in the court a quo nunc pro tunc, and from such judgment the defendant may again prosecute an appeal. Where the state desires to have a judgment nunc pro tunc entered, a motion for that purpose must be filed, and notice of such motion must be served upon the defendant at least three days before the motion is acted upon, and the defendant must be personally present when such motion is disposed of, unless the defendant, in person, should waive such notice and personal presence. Madison v. State, 17 App. 477; Mapes v. State, 19 App. 55; Vestal v. State, 3 App. 648.

Under art. 916 (providing that an appeal in effect suspends all further proceedings in the court in which the conviction was had, except so far as it may be necessary to restore any portion of the record lost or destroyed, after appeal taken), the trial court cannot enter a recognizance on the minutes nunc pro tunc. Quarles v. State, 27 App. 362, 39 S. W. 668.

After an appeal before final judgment, judgment nunc pro tunc cannot be entered, and the appeal must be dismissed. Tucker v. State, 62 App. 46, 138 S. W. 255.

—— Special judge.—A special judge, who tried the case equally with the regular judge, may enter the judgment nunc pro tunc even at a subsequent term. Pennington v. State, 11 App. 281.

Correction of judgment at subsequent term.—The court has no authority at a subsequent term to correct a judicial error in a judgment rendered at a former term in proceedings on a forfeited bail bond. Collins v. State, 16 App. 274.
The statute does not authorize the correction of the judgment at a subsequent term, so as to authorize the prosecution of an appeal, and the notice of appeal must be entered during the term at which the judgment was entered. Offield v. State, 61 App. 330, 135 S. W. 568.

Sentence after term or at subsequent term.—When a motion for new trial is presented and overruled just before time for court to adjourn on the last day of the term, judgment and sentence entered up immediately, but after the expiration of the term, is valid. Ex parte Parker, 35 App. 12, 29 S. W. 450, 700. Where a defendant has been convicted, and motion for new trial overruled, and notice of appeal given and the court adjourns without having passed sentence, the court cannot sentence defendant at a succeeding term, because the power of the district court over the case has ceased except to substitute lost or destroyed records as provided in article 584. Hinman v. State, 54 App. 434, 113 S. W. 231.

Err.—Where the indictment, verdict and judgment are before the court, sentence may be entered without any memoranda in the judge's minutes or other record to show that sentence has been pronounced. Gonzales v. State, 53 App. 333, 33 S. W. 363, 00 Am. St. Rep. 51.

On appeal.—See McCordvade v. State, 54 App. 344, 98 S. W. 379. In view of this article and article 938 the appellate court had power to reform the judgment to conform to the facts, where it had all the data necessary to do so, since if, under section 525, the lower court had power to amend and reform the judgment after the term, there was no reason why the appellate court, having all the data before it, could not also do it. Robinson v. State, 58 App. 550, 126 S. W. 276.

Art. 860. [838] Before sentence, defendant shall be asked, etc.—Before pronouncing sentence in a case of felony, the defendant shall be asked whether he has anything to say why the sentence should not be pronounced against him. [O. C. 687.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 964.

Presumptions.—It is not essential that the record on appeal should affirmatively show that, before pronouncing sentence, the defendant was asked if he had anything to say why the sentence should not be pronounced against him. If the record be silent as to this, it will be presumed that the trial court performed its duty and asked the defendant the statutory question. Bohannon v. State, 14 App. 271. To authorize the reversal of a conviction for noncompliance with the preceding article, it must be made to appear that the trial judge refused to ask the defendant the statutory question, and thereby deprived him of his legal right to be heard in bar thereof. Johnson v. State, 14 App. 306.

Art. 861. [839] Reasons which will prevent the sentence.—The only reasons which can be shown, on account of which sentence can not be pronounced, are:

1. That the defendant has received a pardon from the proper authority, on the presentation of which, legally authenticated, he shall be discharged.

   As to authentication of pardon, see post art. 1057.

2. That the defendant is insane; and, if sufficient proof be shown to satisfy the court that the allegation is well founded, no sentence shall be pronounced. And where there is sufficient time left, a jury may be impaneled to try the issue. Where sufficient time does not remain, the court shall order the defendant to be confined safely until the next term of the court, and shall then cause a jury to be impaneled to try such issue.

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 989. See post, arts. 1017-1030, and notes. And see Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 5 S. W. 522.

3. Where there has not been a motion for a new trial, or a motion in arrest of judgment made, the defendant may answer that he has good grounds for either or both of these motions, and either or both motions may be immediately entered and disposed of, although more than two days may have elapsed since the rendition of the verdict.

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 990.

Necessity of motion.—In order for a defendant to bring himself within the terms of this subdivision he must allege and prove that he had not previously filed a motion for a new trial or a motion in arrest of judgment, either or both as the case may be. Hinman v. State, 44 App. 319, 70 S. W. 356.

Merititious motion.—When defendant had no counsel until about 13 days after his conviction, and when called up for sentence he interposed a motion for a new trial which showed merit, during the same term of court, the motion should have been heard. Bird v. State, 48 App. 188, 87 S. W. 147.

4. When a person who has been convicted of felony escapes after conviction and before sentence, and an individual supposed to be the same has been arrested, he may, before sentence is pronounced, deny that he is the person convicted, and an issue be accordingly tried before a jury as to his identity. [O. C. 688.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 975, 988-991, 1009.

Appeal under subdivision 4.—In criminal cases the right of appeal exists only where the defendant has been found and adjudged to be guilty of an offense. An appeal only be prosecuted from a final judgment of conviction. It is clear that it is the intention of the statute (C. C. P., subdivision 4, of article 361) that the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the trial court upon the issue of identity shall be final and conclusive, and no appeal therefrom lies to this court. Washington v. State, 33 App. 84, 79 S. W. 960.

Additional grounds of objection.—In addition to the above statutory matters, which will bar the sentence, an objection that there is no indictment in the case charging him with an offense, is a valid bar to sentence. Fute v. State, 21 App. 191, 17 S. W. 461; Beardall v. State, 4 App. 631; Beardall v. State, 9 App. 262.

Art. 862. [840] Two or more convictions of same defendant at same term.—When the same defendant has been convicted in two or more cases, and the punishment assessed in each case is confinement in the penitentiary or the county jail for a term of imprisonment, judgment and sentence shall be rendered and pronounced in each case in the same manner as if there had been but one conviction, except that the judgment in the second and subsequent convictions shall be that the punishment shall begin when the judgment and sentence in the preceding conviction have ceased to operate, and the sentence and execution thereof shall be accordingly. [Amended by Act Feb. 12, 1883, p. 8.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 967, 986, 987, 1002, 1009.

Historical.—Prior to the enactment of this article, cumulative punishment could not be assessed and adjudged against a defendant. Baker v. State, 11 App. 262; Hannah v. State, 7 App. 664; Prince v. State, 44 Tex. 450.

Constitutionality.—This article does not conflict with section 13 of the Bill of Rights, and is not unconstitutional. Lillard v. State, 17 App. 114. See also, Shumaker v. State, 10 App. 117; Lockhart v. State, 29 App. 35, 13 S. W. 1012; Ex parte Cox, 29 App. 84, 14 S. W. 396; Ex parte Hunt, 28 App. 361, 13 S. W. 145.

Application and purpose of article.—To authorize the cumulative punishment under this article, it is not essential that the cases should have been tried at the same term of court. Ex parte Mosley, 30 App. 236, 17 S. W. 215. Nor is it essential that the cumulative punishment be assessed in the original judgment of conviction; it is sufficient if it be assessed in the final judgment. Id. And on the subject, see Ex parte Rice, 26 App. 348, 9 S. W. 615; Ex parte Cox, 29 App. 85, 14 S. W. 396.

The trial court is authorized to make a sentence in one case cumulative of that pronounced against defendant in a preceding conviction. C. C. P. art. 500. Smith v. State, 24 App. 123, 29 S. W. 774.

This article applies to all cases where parties are punished by confinement in the county jail. Stewart v. State, 57 App. 135, 38 S. W. 1142.

The law authorizes a cumulative sentence where defendant has been convicted of a felony in some other county or at some former term of court. Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 162.

A cumulative sentence upon two or more convictions against a defendant is valid. Paris v. State, 61 App. 508, 125 S. W. 351.

The object of this article is to provide for cumulative punishment; and where one is sentenced to the penitentiary pending his motion for new trial after conviction of another offense, the sentence on the latter conviction is properly made to begin on the termination of the former sentence. Culpwell v. State, 78 App. 396, 157 S. W. 765.

Under this article the second or subsequent sentence, which is cumulative, may be a jail sentence for a misdemeanor. Ex parte Davis, 71 App. 585, 160 S. W. 499.

Where accused, who was convicted of felony, had been convicted about a year before for another offense and sentenced to two years' confinement in the penitentiary, and the record did not show that she had not been pardoned, the court, in accordance with this article properly sentenced accused to confinement in the penitentiary for a term of years to begin at the expiration of the first term. Forrester v. State, 72 App. 61, 163 S. W. 87.

This article applies only where there has been a final conviction in the first case, and hence not where an appeal in that case is pending. Law v. State, 73 App. 5, 163 S. W. 90.

Necessity of order of court.—Where the court does not order in its judgment that two or more sentences in different prosecutions shall be cumulative, as permitted by this article, the terms of imprisonment run concurrently. Ex parte Davis, 71 App. 583, 160 S. W. 499.
Sufficiency of information.—Where an information charging the offense of keeping a disorderly house was intended to charge only one offense as having been committed in two different ways, only one punishment is authorized; but, if each count was intended to and did charge a separate and distinct offense, a conviction might be had under all and punishment assessed for each count. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 209, 156 S. W. 927.

Where an information consisted of two counts, the first charging defendant with keeping a disorderly house in which immoral women were permitted to reside, and the second charging the keeping of a disorderly house in which intoxicating liquors were sold without a license, and the jury found accused guilty, under each count, assessing a separate punishment, the judgment will be sustained; the information, instructions, and verdict showing that accused was found guilty of two distinct offenses and was not receiving double punishment for the same. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 209, 156 S. W. 927.

Cumulation of sentence alone.—When subsequent sentences were cumulated in the sentence only, and not in the judgment they are not void. Ex parte Crawford, 35 App. 190, 36 S. W. 92.

Computation of sentences.—Accused was arrested and charged with theft and burglary, and at his examining trial for burglary on June 15th was bound over and remanded to jail in default of giving bond, and on June 20th was convicted of theft, and sentenced to four months in the county jail. Held, that the time accused was in jail after his conviction for theft and commitment until he was tried and sentenced to the penitentiary for burglary should be considered as a part of the four months' jail sentence, since the sentence for theft could not be cumulated, because there had then been no prior conviction. Ex parte Davis, 71 App. 588, 100 S. W. 459.

Presumption.—On passing sentence the judge remarked, “This sentence will begin at the expiration of the sentence you are now serving out.” It was objected that there was no proof of former conviction. Held, in absence of proof it will be presumed that the court's action was proper under this article. King v. State, 32 App. 463, 24 S. W. 514.

Art. 863. [841] Sentence of death.—Where the sentence of death is pronounced against a convict, a time shall be set for the execution of the same, not earlier than thirty days from the date of the sentence. [O. C. 689.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 964.
See art. 938, and notes.

Art. 864. [842] Warrant for execution of death penalty.—The clerk of the district court shall issue a warrant for the execution of the sentence of death, which shall recite the fact of conviction, setting forth specifically the offense, and the judgment of the court, the time fixed for its execution, and the manner in which it is to be executed. [O. C. 690.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1099.

Art. 865. [843] Another warrant may issue, when.—When, from any cause, the warrant provided for in the preceding article can not be executed at the time specified therein for the execution of the same, the sheriff shall forthwith return such warrant to the clerk who issued the same, indorsing thereon the reason why the same has not been executed, and shall, at the same time, report in writing to the judge of the district court having jurisdiction over the case, either in term time or in vacation, the fact that such warrant has not been executed, and the reason why the same was not executed; and such judge shall thereupon fix another time for the execution of such sentence, and shall issue his written order to the proper clerk, directing such clerk to issue another warrant for the execution of such sentence, specifying in such order the time fixed for the execution thereof; and the clerk shall file such order among the papers in the case, and immediately issue a warrant accordingly; and the execution of such warrant shall proceed, as in the first instance.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1010-1013.
See post, art. 1056; Ex parte Lawson (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 698.

1½. Indeterminate and Suspended Sentences

Art. 865a. Indeterminate sentences of persons convicted of certain felonies.—That whenever any person seventeen years of age or over shall be on trial for any felony, the jury trying said cause shall not only ascertain whether or not said person is guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, but shall also in the verdict assess the punishment or penalty within the period of time fixed by law as the maximum and minimum penalty for such offense, provided, if the jury shall assess the punishment for such offense at a longer period of time than the minimum period of imprisonment in the penitentiary for such offense, then the judge presiding in such cause, in passing sentence on such person, instead of pronouncing a definite time of imprisonment in the penitentiary, fixing in such sentence the minimum and maximum terms thereof, fixing in said sentence as the minimum time of imprisonment in the penitentiary the time now or hereafter prescribed by law as the minimum time of imprisonment in the penitentiary, and as the maximum time of such imprisonment the term fixed by the jury in their verdict as punishment for such offense; provided, that if the punishment assessed by the jury shall be by pecuniary fine only, or imprisonment in the county jail, or both fine and imprisonment in the county jail, then the provisions of this act shall not apply. [Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 1, superseding Act 1913, p. 262, sec. 1.]

Constitutionality of acts.—Indeterminate sentence law (Acts 33d Leg. c. 132).—Instead of pronouncing a definite term of imprisonment or verdict of guilty, the court trying the case shall pronounce an indeterminate sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term, stating in such sentence the minimum and maximum limits thereof, fixing as the minimum time for such imprisonment the time now or hereafter prescribed by law as the minimum time of imprisonment for the punishment of such offense, and as the maximum time the maximum time now or hereafter prescribed by law as a penalty for such offense. Held, that such act necessarily applied to offenses, the minimum punishment for which in many instances was a mere fine, and hence the act was void, within Pen. Code 1911, art. 6, providing that whenever it appears that a provision is so indeterminately framed or of such doubtful construction that it cannot be understood, either from the language in which it is expressed or from some other written law of the state, it shall be regarded as wholly inoperative. Ex parte Marshall, 72 App. 83, 161 S. W. 112.

The constitutional provision entitling accused to trial by jury does not preclude the Legislature from providing that the jury shall only pass on the question of guilt or innocence and that the punishment shall be assessed by the court. Ex parte Marshall, 72 App. 83, 161 S. W. 112.

The indeterminate sentence law passed at the regular session of the 33d Legislature (Acts 33d Leg. c. 132) having been declared unconstitutional, accused, charged with murder alleged to have been committed October 1, 1901, for which he was tried and convicted in July, 1913, was entitled as of right to have his punishment assessed by the jury, as provided by Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 770. Johnson v. State, 72 App. 178, 161 S. W. 1098.

The Indeterminate Sentence Law (Acts 33d Leg. c. 132) is invalid. Davis v. State, 75 App. 572, 164 S. W. 849.

In view of the invalidity of Suspended Sentence Act April 3, 1913 (Acts 33d Leg. c. 132), the court may direct the jury to assess the penalty, instead of merely finding accused guilty, and the court may then afterwards impose the punishment. Lopez v. State, 73 App. 624, 166 S. W. 154.

Repeal of statutes imposing death penalty.—The indeterminate sentence law (Acts 33d Leg. 1st Called Sess. c. 5), amending Acts 33d Leg. c. 132, did not operate to implicitly repeal those statutes, authorizing the assessment of the death penalty for specified offenses. Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 657.

Application to crimes committed before passage of act.—Under Pen. Code 1911, arts. 15-19, providing that, where a penalty is ameliorated by a subsequent law, a party committing an offense prior to the adoption of the subsequent law shall be punished under the later law unless he shall elect otherwise, but that in other respects the defendant shall be tried under the old law, where a defendant was charged with committing a murder before Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1140, 1141, defining murder, were amended by Act April 3, 1913 (Acts 33d Leg. c. 132), the court should charge the jury as to the definition of murder under the old law, but, as to the penalty, under the new law. Robbins v. State, 74 App. 567, 168 S. W. 528.

Nature of offense.—Where accused was convicted of violating the local prohibition law, he was entitled to an indeterminate sentence. Jarrot v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 86.

Functions of court and jury.—Though the indeterminate sentence law is not a question for the jury, that the court in response to their request informed them as to its operation is not reversible error, where he correctly informed them and the jury imposed almost the minimum punishment. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 354.

Form and requisites of verdict.—A verdict convicting accused of manslaughter and fixing the punishment is not objectionable because not indeterminate, since, under the indeterminate sentence law, the jury finds the verdict, and the court fixes the punishment from the lowest term specified to the amount fixed by the jury.

Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 748.

Form and requisites of sentence.—Under the second indeterminate sentence law, an accused, whose punishment was fixed by the jury at three years in the penitentiary, should be sentenced to imprisonment for a period of not less than two and one third years. Simmons v. State, 73 App. 285, 104 S. W. 1078.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, the jury assessed the punishment at 35 years, the court should have, under the indeterminate sentence law, sentenced defendant for not less than 5 nor more than 99 years. Tate v. State, 75 App. 273, 164 S. W. 1078.

Under the indeterminate sentence law, the punishment of one convicted of murder, fixed at 17 years in the penitentiary, must be modified so as to provide for confinement therein for not less than 5 years nor more than 17 years. Cole v. State, 73 App. 475, 105 S. W. 929.

Under Act Aug. 15, 1913 (Acts 33d Leg. [Extra Sess.] c. 5), the court, on sentencing one convicted of selling whisky in a prohibition county, cannot sentence accused for two years, the time fixed by the verdict; but the sentence must be made in accordance with the statute. Martoni v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 949.

Under the indeterminate sentence law, where the jury assessed the punishment for burglary at five years' imprisonment, accused should have been sentenced for not less than two nor more than five years. Bering v. State (Cr. App.) 108 S. W. 100.

The jury having adjudged 25 years' imprisonment to the defendant, the court should have given an indeterminate sentence of from 5 to 25 years instead of a fixed term. Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 225.

Where defendant was convicted of murder, the judgment should have been under the indeterminate sentence law, sentencing him to the penitentiary for not less than five years nor longer than his natural life. Orange v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 297.

A sentence of imprisonment must not be for a specified term, but must follow the indeterminate sentence law (Acts 33d Leg. c. 152). Guyton v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1082.

The verdict being for two years, the court cannot, under the indeterminate sentence law, pronounce sentence of not less than two years nor more than five years; for the punishment cannot exceed that fixed by the jury; and, if this exceeds the minimum, the sentence should be not in excess of that fixed by the jury, nor less than the minimum. Ford v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 970.

In a prosecution for running a gambling house, evidence that defendant after his arrest was again seen at such house is inadmissible on a plea of suspended sentence; other transactions than that with which defendant stands charged being material only as to his reputation or standing. Caruth v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 972.

Where one, who pleaded guilty of burglary, filed a plea asking that sentence be suspended, the state could cross-examine him, after his taking the stand to testify that he had never been convicted of a felony, as to the mode and manner of committing the offense, as an aid to the jury in determining whether they should suspend sentence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1161.

Sentence for an indeterminate period of from 2 to 45 years on a conviction for 45 years for pandering would be reformed, by entering a sentence in accordance with the indeterminate Sentence Law (Acts 33d Leg. c. 122), providing a punishment of not less than 5 years. Lustrees v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 492.

Art. 865b. Suspended sentence.—That when there is a conviction of any felony in any district court of this state, except murder, perjury, burglary of a private residence, robbery, arson, incest, bigamy and abortion, the court shall suspend sentence upon application made therefor in writing by the defendant, which shall be sworn to and filed before the trial begins, when the punishment assessed by the jury shall not exceed five years confinement in the penitentiary; and in all cases where defendant is charged with felonies other than those named in section 1 hereof [this article], when the defendant has no counsel, it shall be the duty of the court to inform the defendant of his right to make such application, and the court shall appoint counsel to prepare and present same if desired by defendant; provided, that in no case shall sentence be suspended except when the proof shall show and the jury shall find in their verdict that the defendant has never before been convicted of a felony in this state or any other state. This Act is not to be construed as preventing the jury from passing on the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but he may enter 857 his plea of not guilty at the same time with said affidavit. [Act 1911, p. 67, superseded. Act 1913, p. 8, sec. 1.]

Constitutionality and validity of acts.—Const. art. 4, § 11, provides that, in all criminal cases except treason and impeachment, the governor shall have power after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc. Acts 5, 19, provided that the discretion of the governor to grant reprieves, or certain offenses at defendant’s request submit to the jury the issue as to whether or not the defendant has ever been charged with or convicted of crime, and, if the jury finds that he has not been, the judge may suspend the sentence or commutate a sentence as a matter of discretion. Such suspension is for an indefinite time with the power in the court to revoke on a violation of a requirement of good behavior, and compel the convict to undergo the penalty of the original sentence, or on good behavior for a time equal to that which the party has served, or to bring the party to the former judgment. Held, that a pardon is an act of grace which exempts an individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime which he has committed, and, although the word “pardon” is not used in the statute, as that is the effect of the statute, it is void within the constitutional provision prohibiting the exercise of powers delegated to one of the departments of government by either of the other two departments. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 162, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1141.

Such act is invalid as a contravention of Const. art. 16, § 2, which commands the legislature to enact laws to exclude from office, serving on, and the right of suffrage, those convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, or other high crimes. Id. Such act is not valid as an exercise of the court’s power to grant a new trial, as it does not contemplate another trial of the defendant, but rather a discharge regardless of the fact that guilt has been established in a court of competent jurisdiction beyond question, and as it contemplates action by the court at a time after the end of the term at which the judgment was entered, since under arts. 2823, 2735, no court may grant a new trial or change its judgment at a subsequent term. Id.

Such act is not unconstitutional in authorizing district courts to suspend sentences in certain cases as an invasion of the right to “reprieve” or grant “commutations of punishment” reserved to the governor by Const. art. 4, § 11, as a “reprieve” postpones the execution of a sentence to a day certain, whereas a “suspension” is for an indefinite time, and a “commutation” is the changing of the punishment assessed to a less punishment (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 615, 616). Id.

Under Const. art. 5, § 5, which gives the right of appeal only under such regulations and restrictions as the legislature may prescribe, Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is not unconstitutional as a suspension of the right of appeal, as the legislature has that power. Id.

The word “conviction,” in Const. art. 4, § 11, which provides that in all criminal cases, except treason and impeachment, the governor shall have power after conviction to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc., means simply the determination of guilt by the jury, and does not embrace the sentence, so that a person becomes subject to pardon whenever that issue is finally determined, and a court has no inherent authority by postponement of sentence to relieve a person legally convicted of crime of the punishment fixed by law, and Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is not constitutional as within that power. Id.

Const. art. 1, § 28, provides that no law shall be suspended except by the legislature itself. Held, Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is unconstitutional as an authorization to the district courts to suspend a law or right of appeal. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 178.

Such act confers upon the district courts the discretionary power not only to grant a “conditional pardon,” which is an indefinite suspension of sentence on condition the person convicted and restored to good behavior, which is an essential element of the pardoning power, and it is unconstitutional as an invasion of the governor’s prerogative. Id.

Though the Constitution provides that no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title, but in amending laws the section amended shall be re-enacted, the Legislature may by a general law provide that no punishment shall be assessed on the jury finding that it is accused’s first offense, and thereby make such provision applicable to the statutes punishing offenses. Baker v. State, 70 App. 618, 158 S. W. 995.

The act of the Thirty-Third Legislature providing that if, before trial, accused request in writing that the issue whether he has been convicted of a felony shall be submitted to the jury, and if they find he has not been convicted, they may pronounce no punishment shall be assessed, if within a given period he commits no further offense, is within the legislative power vested by Const. art. 3, § 1, in the Legislature to fix by law the punishment of offenses, and merely provides that in given contingencies no punishment shall be suffered for the first violation of a law, but does not interfere with the pardoning power conferred by the Constitution on the Governor. Baker v. State, 70 App. 618, 158 S. W. 995.

The act of the Thirty-Third Legislature authorizing a suspension of sentence on the jury finding that it is accused’s first offense is a part of each article of the Code prescribing punishment and provides that the jury in passing on the guilt or innocence of accused shall hear evidence as to the life of accused and determine the facts, and preserves inviolate the right of trial by jury guaranteed by Const. Bill of Rights. Baker v. State, 70 App. 618, 158 S. W. 995.

Acts 33d Leg. c. 7, providing for the suspension of sentence in certain cases upon condition of the jury, is valid, since there is a broad distinction between the suspension of sentence which would interfere with the pardoning power and the suspension of the judgment or its execution by preventing the passing of sentence, which does not interfere with such power as that power does not affouch or become operative until after the final judgment or sentence. King v. State, 73 App. 394, 162 S. W. 890.

The statute authorizing suspension of sentence on recommendation of the jury is constitutional. Carter v. State, 73 App. 545, 165 S. W. 572.

Repeal of prior acts.—The Indeterminate Sentence Act April 3, 1913 (Acts 23d Leg. c. 132), being void, did not repeal the Suspended Sentence Act Feb. 11, 1913 (Acts 23d Leg. c. 7), which act is expressly declared to be unaffected by the Second Indeterminate Sentence Act enacted August 18, 1913 (Acts 33d Leg. 1st Called Session, c. 51 § 10), and hence it is improper to deny the submission of an accused's plea, made in accordance with the Suspended Sentence Act. Carter v. State, 73 App. 331, 165 S. W. 200.

Crimes included in act.—The act providing for the suspension of sentence does not apply to burglary, and, on a trial for burglary, it is not error to refuse to submit to the jury the question of suspension of sentence, in case of a conviction. Black v. State, 73 App. 415, 165 S. W. 571.

Propriety of suspension.—That accused has previously been convicted of a felony bars him of the right to file a plea for suspension of sentence under Acts 23d Leg. c. 7; but, where he has not been convicted of a felony, he may file a plea, and where his reputation justifies the suspension of the sentence on the theory that he will reform, if clemency is extended, and that society will not suffer, it may be done, but, where his reputation as shown by the life he has lived is such that there is but little or no hope of reform without punishment, and that the best interests of society demand his imprisonment, the punishment should not be suspended. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 369.

"Conviction of felony."—The term "conviction of a felony," referred to in the suspended sentence law, means a final conviction, and hence the fact that accused involuntarily did not place on himself the burden of proof thereby did not preclude that a former conviction on the prior trial of the same case had returned a verdict of guilty, which, for some reason, had been vacated; and hence it was error to compel accused as a witness in his own behalf to testify that he had been convicted on a prior trial of the same case. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 269.

Appeal from order setting aside order suspending sentence.—An appeal lies from an order setting aside an order suspending sentence during good behavior. Ex parte Lawson (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 698.

Act of 1911 not applicable to causes pending.—Where, after accused was convicted of following the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition territory, and during the pendency of his appeal, passed a new suspended sentence law (Acts 23d Leg. c. 44), which provided that if a person on trial requests in writing that his general reputation be inquired into, and the proof shall show and the jury shall find that he has never before been convicted of a felony, and the jury shall recommend that the sentence be suspended, the court shall suspend the sentence, the accused is not entitled to any benefit from such act; it appearing that it did not expressly apply to offenders whose appeals were pending, and the act expressly insisted upon a demand in writing prior to trial in order to give an accused the benefit of its provisions, and did not give the trial judge any authority to suspend sentence upon his own motion. Monroe v. State, 70 App. 245, 157 S. W. 154.

Art. 865c. Testimony as to defendant's reputation and criminal history.—The court shall permit testimony and submit the question as to the general reputation of defendant to enable the jury to determine whether to recommend the suspension of sentence, and as to whether the defendant has ever before been convicted of a felony; such testimony shall be heard and such question submitted only upon the request in writing by the defendant; provided, that in all cases sentence shall be suspended if the jury recommends it in their verdict. Provided further, that in such cases, neither the verdict of conviction nor the judgment entered thereon shall become final, except under the conditions and in the manner and at the time provided for by section 4 of this Act. [Id. sec. 2.]

Section 4, above referred to, is art. 6905f, Vernon's Sayers' Civ. St. 1914.

Necessity and sufficiency of application by accused.—Under Act Feb. 11, 1913 (Acts 23d Leg. c. 7), requiring a defendant seeking to take advantage of the suspended sentence law to file his sworn plea before the trial begins, such a plea was filed too late, and the court was not required to submit it to the jury, where it was filed after the motion for a continuance was overruled, and the selection of the jury had commenced. Muldrew v. State, 73 App. 462, 166 S. W. 156.

Under Acts 23d Leg. c. 7, § 1, providing that before a sentence can be suspended, an application for suspension must be made in writing, a recommendation in the verdict that sentence be suspended may be disregarded by the judge, where no application for suspension was filed before the verdict was rendered. Barnett v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 143.

Where no application for suspended sentence was made by accused, the jury has no right to recommend such suspension. Speer v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 201.
“General reputation.”—Under this article the “general reputation of defendant” is such reputation for a peaceable, law-abiding man. Campbell v. State, 73 App. 138, 164 S. W. 859.

Submission of matter to jury.—Where the evidence of the bad reputation of accused, who filed a plea for suspension of sentence, based on his arrest for offenses not involving moral turpitude, was received to enable the jury to determine whether he would suspend punishment in case of his conviction, the court should specifically charge that the testimony should not be considered as affecting the credibility of accused as a witness. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 349.

In a criminal prosecution, where accused introduced no evidence which would impair the weight of the evidence against him, his plea for a suspension of sentence is harmless. Hawkins v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 91.

Where, on a criminal trial, accused filed a plea for a suspended sentence, but the court failed to instruct in regard thereto, except in giving the form of verdict, and refused a special charge to disregard the statement of the district attorney, in his argument, that the jury could not recommend a suspension of sentence because of the lack of proof as to accused’s good reputation, the conviction would be reversed. Onstott v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 391.

Proof as to prior reputation.—Accused, charged with selling whisky in a prohibition county, which accused his sworn plea for suspension of sentence, if convicted, thereby put his general reputation in issue, and the state could show that he had been indicted for various offenses, including unlawful sales of liquor in prohibition territory, and that indictments other than the one on which he was being tried were pending against him. Martoni v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 349.

Where accused, charged with selling whisky in a prohibition county, filed a plea for suspension, and testified, that he had obtained a license to sell whisky in prohibition territory was admissible to aid the jury in determining whether, under the circumstances, they would suspend the sentence. Martoni v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 349.

Where a plea for suspended sentence, and testified in his own behalf, the state on cross-examination could ask him as to the number of times he had been arrested and confined in jail, though the offenses did not involve moral turpitude. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 269.

Where accused files a plea for a suspended sentence he puts his reputation in issue, and any legitimate evidence bearing thereon is admissible, and the state may show his bad reputation as a law-abiding citizen by proving his arrest for offenses not involving moral turpitude. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 269.

Where witnesses for accused, who filed a plea for a suspended sentence, testified that accused’s reputation for truth, veracity, honesty, and as a law-abiding citizen was good, the state on cross-examination could ask them whether they had not heard of accused being charged with violations of the law, though such violations did not involve moral turpitude. Williamson v. State (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 360.

On a trial for violating the prohibition law in which accused filed a plea for a suspended sentence, it was not error to permit the state to ask of accused’s witnesses whether the witness knew that accused was running an inn; house, especially where no objection was made to a question asked accused whether he was running such a house. Connts v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 614.

The only prerequisite to the right of the jury to suspend a sentence is that the offense of which accused was convicted be a misdemeanor committed before the effective date of the prohibition law, and while evidence of his prior reputation is admissible on that issue, it is not a prerequisite to a right to suspend a sentence. Simonds v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1064.

Recommendation by jury.—Where the jury found that the present conviction of theft was accused’s first offense and recommended suspension of sentence, the trial court could not sentence accused to the penitentiary but must release him upon such recognizance as is provided by Acts 30d Leg. c. 7. Brown v. State, 71 App. 312, 158 S. W. 697.

Where the jury found that accused had never before been convicted, and specifically recommended a suspension of his sentence, the trial court cannot sentence him to the penitentiary, but must heed the recommendation of the jury. Martin v. State, 71 App. 322, 158 S. W. 994.

Where the jury in response to the court’s instruction returned a verdict finding accused guilty, as charged, of engaging in the business of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, assessing his punishment at two years, and further found that he had never before been convicted, accused is not entitled to have his sentence suspended because the court is not given a discretion as to the suspension of sentences; that power being vested in the jury. Roberts v. State, 71 App. 77, 158 S. W. 1005.

Where the questions involved in the suspended sentence law are submitted to the jury, who fail or refuse to recommend a suspension of the sentence, the court has no authority to suspend. Potter v. State, 71 App. 249, 150 S. W. 846.

That the court at accused’s request submitted the question of suspending the sentence and that the jury made no recommendation or return on that issue, did not present error. Dawson v. State, 72 App. 65, 161 S. W. 469.

Where the jury found accused’s previous good character, and that he had not been previously convicted of a felony, but did not recommend that the execution of the judgment be suspended, the court could not suspend such execution. King v. State, 72 App. 352, 162 S. W. 890.

An accused, who elected to avail himself of the benefit of the suspended sentence law, is not entitled to a suspension of the sentence merely because the jury found that he had been previously convicted of a felony, and did not recommend that the execution of the judgment be suspended, the court could not suspend such execution. Bowen v. State, 72 App. 404, 162 S. W. 1146.
Under the statute relative to suspending sentence, the question of suspending sentence is for the jury in determining the question of punishment, and where the jury fails or refuses to suspend sentence, it cannot be suspended, though they find that accused has not previously violated any law. Cook v. State, 73 App. 48, 165 S. W. 572.

Since the trial court has no jurisdiction to suspend sentence unless expressly so recommended by the jury, where accused filed a plea to suspend his sentence and pleaded guilty, a verdict finding accused guilty and assessing his punishment at two years in the penitentiary, but expressly reciting that the jury could not agree on the suspension of sentence, constituted a mistrial, and was insufficient to sustain a judgment sentencing accused to two years in the penitentiary without suspension of his sentence. Mills v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 58.

Where the court gave the jury a form of verdict in case they found accused guilty and desired to recommend a suspension of sentence and a form in case they did not desire to do so recommend, the action of the jury in adopting the latter form was a specific finding that they did not recommend suspension of sentence. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 897.

Where a verdict of guilty recited "that defendant has never before been convicted of a felony," but contained no recommendation for suspension of sentence, the court could not suspend sentence. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 115.

The right to object to the failure of the verdict to make any recommendation of suspension of sentence was waived where the accused first combined thereof in an amended motion for a new trial filed on May 16th after rendition of verdict on May 6th. Walker v. (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 1156.

Though, under the statute authorizing the suspension of sentences, evidence as to accused's previous reputation is admissible to assist the jury in determining whether they will suspend the sentence, a finding that his previous reputation was not good does not prevent them from recommending a suspension of sentence, they being authorized to make such recommendation, unless accused has previously been convicted of a felony. Onstott v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 201.

The failure of the verdict to dispose of the question as to recommending a suspension of sentence, it being silent on the subject, was not error available on a motion for a new trial. Comstate v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 314.

Appealability of order for suspended sentence.—Under this article and article 865e a conviction with suspended sentence was not a final appealable judgment. Bierman v. State, 73 App. 284, 164 S. W. 840.

Conviction affecting competency as witness.—Under the provision of this article that where the jury recommends a suspension of sentence, neither the conviction nor the judgment entered thereon shall become final except under article 865e a witness who had pleaded guilty of assault to murder, but whose sentence had been suspended, was not incompetent as a witness as being a convicted criminal. Espinoza v. State, 73 App. 227, 165 S. W. 208. But see Simonds v. State, 175 S. W. 1004.

Art. 865d. Form of judgment; "good behavior" defined.—When sentence is suspended the judgment of the court on that subject shall be that sentence of the judgment of conviction shall be suspended during the good behavior of the defendant. By the term "good behavior" is meant that the defendant shall not be convicted of any felony during the time of such suspension. [Id. sec. 3.]

Art. 865e. Conviction of other felony; pronouncement of sentence.—Upon the final conviction of the defendant of any other felony, pending the suspension of sentence, the court granting such suspension shall cause a capias to issue for the arrest of the defendant, if he is not then in the custody of such court, and upon the execution of a capias, and during a term of the court shall pronounce sentence upon the original judgment of conviction, and shall cumulate the punishment of the first with the punishment of any subsequent conviction or convictions, and in such cases no new trial shall be granted in the first conviction. [Id. sec. 4.]

Pleas of guilty to several felonies.—Where, immediately after accused entered a plea of guilty in a prosecution for forgery, and the court had returned a verdict, she entered another plea of guilty to another similar charge, and imprisoned in the penitentiary was assessed, she, having entered pleas of guilty to two felonies on the same day, was not entitled to a suspension of either sentence under Suspended Sentence Law (Acts 32d Leg. c. 44) § 4. Weatherford v. State, 73 App. 440, 166 S. W. 149.

Art. 865f. Expiration of suspension period; disposition of cause; effect of judgment of conviction.—In any case of suspended sentence, as provided herein, upon the expiration of the time assessed as punishment by the jury, the defendant may make his written and sworn application for a new trial and dismissal of such case, stating therein that since such former trial and conviction, he has not been convicted of any felony, and that there is not now pending against him any felony charge, which application shall be heard by the court during the first term time after same is filed, and, if it shall appear to the court, upon the hearing of such application, that the defendant has not been convicted of any other felony and that there is not then pending against him any other charge of felony, the court shall enter an order reciting the fact, and shall grant the defendant a new trial and shall then dismiss said cause; provided, further, that if the defendant is prevented from physical disability or other good cause from applying to the court to have the judgment of conviction set aside at the time provided for, he may make such application at the first term when such physical disability or other good cause no longer exists. After the setting aside and dismissal of any judgment of conviction as herein provided for, the fact of such conviction shall not be shown or inquired into for any purpose, except in cases where the defendant has been again indicted for a felony and invokes the benefit of this Act. [Id. sec. 5.]

Art. 865g. Pendency of other charge; extension of suspension period.—If at the expiration of the time assessed by the jury as punishment, there be pending against the defendant any other charge of felony, the court shall, upon application of the defendant, (which shall be in writing, and shall state under his oath that he is not guilty of such charge), further suspend the sentence to await the final disposition of such other prosecution. [Id. sec. 6.]

Art. 865h. Release on recognizance.—When sentence is suspended the defendant shall be released upon his recognizance in such sum as may be fixed by the court during such suspension. [Id. sec. 7.]

Art. 865i. Laws repealed.—That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be and the same are hereby repealed. [Id. sec. 8.]

2. Judgment in Cases of Misdemeanor

Art. 866. [844] May be rendered in absence of defendant.—The judgment in cases of misdemeanor may be rendered in the absence of the defendant. [O. C. 691.]

See Mapes v. State, 13 App. 85; Ex parte Lee Quong, 34 App. 511, 31 S. W. 391; Cain v. State, 15 App. 41, and notes under art. 855.

Art. 867. [845] Judgment when the punishment is fine only.—When the punishment assessed against a defendant is a pecuniary fine only, the judgment shall be that the state of Texas recover of the defendant the amount of such fine and all the costs of the prosecution, and that the defendant, if present, be committed to jail until such fine and costs are paid, or if the defendant be not present, that a capias forthwith issue commanding the sheriff to arrest the defendant and commit him to jail, until such fine and costs are paid; also, that execution may issue against the property of such defendant for the amount of such fine and costs.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 893.

See art. 871.

Form and requisites of judgment.—See notes under art. 855, ante.

A judgment on conviction that it is therefore ordered that the state "do have and recover of and from said" defendant "the sum of $10, * * * for which execution may issue, and that he be remanded to the custody of the sheriff until said fine and costs are fully paid as the law provides, and that, should he escape from custody, capias pro fine may issue," was a final judgment, from which an appeal would lie. Heatherly v. State, 14 App. 21; Braden v. State, Id. 22; and Wanz v. State, Id. 24, overruled, so far as they conflict herewith. Terry v. State, 20 App. 408, 17 S. W. 1075.

Where the defendant did not appear on the trial in person, but by attorney, and the judgment was that "execution or commitment issue" for the fine and costs, it was held that it was not a valid final judgment: that the judgment should have been that capias issue for the arrest of the defendant, commanding his detention in jail until the payment of the fine and costs, and that execution issue against his property for the fine and costs, and for want of a final judgment the appeal was dismissed. Heatherly v. State, 14 App. 21.

The judgment must conform to the statute, or the appeal therefrom will be dismissed. If the defendant be present when it is rendered, it must command that he be committed to jail until the payment of the fine and costs. Braden v. State, 14 App. 22.

The requisites of a judgment in a misdemeanor case are the same as those prescribed for felony cases by art. 533, ante, except the tenth and eleventh clauses of that article, which are not essential in misdemeanor cases. Want v. State, 14 App. 21.

A judgment which failed to show that the jury was selected, empaneled and sworn, was invalid. Yates v. State, 37 App. 247, 39 S. W. 923.

JUDGMENT

A verdict reading "We the jury find the defendants guilty as charged and assess the fine at $100," held to assess a joint penalty and be invalid. Cunningham v. State, 26 App. 83, 9 S. W. 62.

Presence of defendant.—The provisions of this and art. 646, ante, reconciled. Cain v. State, 15 App. 41.

Imprisonment for debt.—Fines are not "debts," and imprisonment to enforce their collection is constitutional. Dixon v. State, 2 Tex. 481; Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400; Const., art. 1, sec. 18; Ex parte Robertson, 27 App. 628, 11 S. W. 669, 11 Am. St. Rep. 297; Ex parte Mann, 39 App. 491, 46 S. W. 824, 73 Am. St. Rep. 951.

Duration of imprisonment.—Under this article and art. 688, and arts. 6252-6256, Vernon's Stat. Civ. St. 1914, providing for the hiring out of convicts for not more than one year, one convicted of a misdemeanor and sentenced to jail may be confined in jail for the costs not more than one year in addition to the imprisonment imposed for the offense. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 33, 138 S. W. 1013.

Correction of judgment.—See notes under art. 583, ante.

Art. 868. [846] Judgment when the punishment is other than fine.—When the punishment assessed is anything other than a pecuniary fine, the judgment shall specify it, and order its enforcement by the proper process. It shall also adjudge the costs against the defendant, and order the collection thereof, as in other cases.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1881.

Taxation of costs after conviction or adjournment.—A judgment sentencing one convicted of a misdemeanor to jail for 30 days and until the costs of the prosecution are paid permits the clerk to tax costs after conviction or the adjournment of the court, and the costs so taxed are a part of the costs referred to in the judgment. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 33, 138 S. W. 1013.

Enforcement by proper process.—Persons cannot be legally imprisoned for contempt by the district court, simply on an oral order to an officer to confine them in jail and without the issuance of a writ of commitment. Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 654, 24 S. W. 962; Ex parte Ogden, 63 App. 359, 110 S. W. 345; Ex parte Dena, 63 App. 379, 140 S. W. 316.

Correction of judgment.—See notes under art. 583, ante.

Duration of imprisonment.—See note under art. 867.

CHAPTER FOUR

EXECUTION OF JUDGMENT

1. COLLECTION OF PECUNIARY FINES

Art.

869. How judgment for fine may be satisfied, and defendant discharged.

870. Recognizances, etc., payable in what, when.

871. When judgment is fine, and defendant is present.

872. When defendant is not present, capias shall issue.

873. Capias shall recite what.

874. Capias may issue to any county.

875. Execution may issue for fine and costs.

876. When execution is satisfied, etc.

877. Further enforcement of the judgment.

2. ENFORCING JUDGMENT WHEN THE PUNISHMENT IS IMPRISONMENT

Art.

878. Judgment for fine, etc., may be discharged by imprisonment, when.

879. Defendant shall be imprisoned, and copy of judgment sufficient authority.

880. Capias when punishment is imprisonment.

881. Defendant shall be discharged, when.

882. Further execution of judgments, etc., when term of imprisonment begins.

883
Art. 869  PROCEEDINGS AFTER VERDICT  (Title 9)

3. ENFORCING JUDGMENT IN CAPITAL CASES

Art. 858. Death warrant to be executed, when.
859. Executed bow.
860. Shall take place within the walls of the jail, when.
861. Who shall be present.
862. Reasonable request of convict.
863. No torture shall be inflicted.

1. Collection of Pecuniary Fines

Article 869. [847] How judgment for fine satisfied and defendant discharged.—When the judgment against a defendant is for a pecuniary fine and the costs of prosecution, he shall be discharged from the same—
1. When the amount of such fine and costs have been fully paid.
2. When the same have been remitted by the proper authority.
3. When the defendant has remained in custody the length of time required by law to satisfy the amount of such judgment, as hereinafter provided.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 579.
See arts. 856, 878, 1013, post.

Imprisonment for debt.—See note under art. 867, ante.

Art. 870. [848] Recognizances, etc., payable in lawful money.
—All recognizances, bail bonds and undertakings of any kind, whereby a party becomes bound to pay money to the state, and all fines and forfeitures of a pecuniary character, shall be collected in the lawful money of the United States only. [O. C. 702.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 579.

In general.—Cited. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 128 S. W. 1013.

Art. 871. [849] When judgment is fine, and defendant is present.—When judgment has been rendered against a defendant for a pecuniary fine, if he is present, he shall be imprisoned in jail, until discharged as provided in article 807; and a certified copy of such judgment shall be sufficient to authorize such imprisonment, without further warrant or process. [O. C. 694, 695.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 579.
Cited. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 128 S. W. 1013.

Actual imprisonment required.—This means actual imprisonment within the four walls of the jail, and if the defendant be permitted to go at large, the officer, to whose custody he was committed, is liable to prosecution for an escape, and the defendant may be retaken and recommitted. Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 490; Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076.

A prisoner out of jail under a void agreement with the sheriff is deemed an escaped prisoner. Ex parte Wyatt, 29 App. 398, 16 S. W. 301.

Art. 872. [850] When defendant is not present, capias shall issue.—When a pecuniary fine has been adjudged against a defendant, and he is not present, a capias shall forthwith issue for his arrest; and the sheriff shall execute the same by placing the defendant in jail until he is legally discharged.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 794.
See Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076, citing Terry v. State, 30 App. 408, 17 S. W. 1075.
Cited. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 128 S. W. 1013.

Art. 873. [851] Capias shall recite what.—Where a capias issues, as provided in the preceding article, it shall state the rendition and amount of the judgment and the amount unpaid thereon, and command the sheriff to take the body of the defendant and place him in jail, until the amount due upon such judgment, and the further costs of collecting the same are paid, or until the defendant is otherwise legally discharged. This writ is sufficient authority to justify the commitment of the defendant to jail. [O. C. 700.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 794.
Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Art. 874. [852] Capias may issue to any county in the state, etc.—The capias provided for in this chapter may be issued to any county in the state, and shall be executed and returned as in other cases, except that no bail shall be taken in such cases.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 794.
Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1014.

Art. 875. [853] Execution may issue for fine and costs.—In all cases of pecuniary fine, an execution may issue for the fine and costs, notwithstanding a capias may have issued for the defendant; and a capias may issue for the defendant, notwithstanding an execution has been issued against his property. The execution shall be collected and returned as in civil actions. [O. C. 695.]

See, ante, art. 867; Ex parte Dickerson, 30 App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076.
Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Art. 876. [854] When execution is satisfied, etc.—When the execution has been collected, the defendant shall be at once discharged; and, whenever the fine and costs have been legally discharged in any way, the execution shall forthwith be returned satisfied, and the defendant discharged.

See Ex parte Price, 11 App. 538.

Art. 877. [855] Further enforcement of the judgment.—When a defendant has been committed to jail in default of the fine and costs adjudged against him, the further enforcement of such judgment shall be in accordance with the law of this state relating to county convicts.

Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

For the law relating to county convicts, see Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, title 104, chapters 3 and 4.

Art. 878. [856] Judgment for fine, etc., may be discharged by imprisonment, when.—When a defendant is convicted of a misdemeanor, and his punishment is assessed at a pecuniary fine, if he makes oath in writing that he is unable to pay the fine and costs adjudged against him, he may be hired out to manual labor, or be put to work in the manual labor workhouse, or on the manual labor farm, or public improvements of the county; or, in case there be no such workhouse, farm or improvements, and, in case the county authorities fail to hire out such convict in accordance with the law regulating county convicts, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail for a sufficient length of time to discharge the full amount of fine and costs adjudged against him, rating such punishment at three dollars for each day thereof. [O. C. 694, 848; Amended.]

Construction and operation in general.—See generally, Ex parte Cox, 29 App. 84, 14 S. W. 396; Ex parte Dampier, 24 App. 551, 7 S. W. 339; Ex parte Anderson, 34 App. 14, 28 S. W. 897; Ex parte Hall, 34 App. 611, 31 S. W. 610; Ex parte Bates, 37 App. 548, 40 S. W. 265; Ex parte Jones, 38 App. 142, 41 S. W. 613; Ex parte Dockery, 38 App. 293, 42 S. W. 599. And see Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 525-535.

No person against whom a pecuniary fine has been assessed as punishment for a felony can lawfully be hired out to raise the money to pay the fine and costs. Ward v. White, 86 Tex. 170, 23 S. W. 981.

It is only when there is no workhouse or farm, and no public improvements upon which the convict can be put to work, and when the county authorities have failed to hire him out, that the convict can claim the benefit of the preceding article. Ex parte Bogle, 20 App. 127. For form of oath to be made by county convict, see Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1019; see, also, Ex parte Stubblefield, 1 App. 747. A county convict, who is also confined on an accusation of felony, cannot be discharged from custody under the preceding article, nor can he be hired out. Ex parte Ovins, 11 App. 34. See, also, Childers v. State, 25 App. 658, 8 S. W. 938; Philpps v. State, 25 App. 660, 8 S. W. 929; Ex parte Hunt, 25 App. 361, 13 S. W. 145.

A person legally imprisoned under a judgment, assessing against him a pecuniury fine, is not entitled to the writ of habeas corpus to compel the county judge to hire him out for the purpose of paying his fine. Ex parte Thompson, 92 App. 374, 72 S. W. 876.

The statute does not authorize the hiring out of one convicted of a felony, but this does not require his release. Ex parte Biela, 46 App. 467, 81 S. W. 739.

If he is kept in jail after he makes affidavit that he is unable to pay fine and costs, he is entitled to be discharged when at the rate of three dollars per day he has stayed in jail long enough to discharge the fine and costs. Ex parte Spears, 49 App. 231, 96 S. W. 1011.

Where one is confined in jail after having been convicted of a misdemeanor and fined a sufficient length of time to discharge the fine at three dollars a day, and has not been put to work he is entitled to be discharged, he having made affidavit that he was unable to pay the fine and costs. Ex parte Clayton, 51 App. 588, 103 S. W. 629.

Imposition of both fine and imprisonment.—Where relator was sentenced to both fine and imprisonment, he will not be released on conclusion of the imprisonment, unless his fine is paid. Ex parte Ketton (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 798.

Where accused is sentenced to imprisonment and fined, while the two punishments cannot be imposed at the same time, imprisonment need not necessarily be first imposed, and if the fine is first exacted it will not extinguish the imprisonment punishment, which may be imposed thereafter. Ex parte Stephens, 59 App. 177, 127 S. W. 819.

2. ENFORCING JUDGMENT WHERE THE PUNISHMENT IS IMPRON- MENT

Art. 879. [857] Copy of judgment sufficient authority for imprisonment.—When, by the judgment of the court, a defendant is to be imprisoned in jail, the sheriff shall execute the same by imprisoning the defendant for the length of time required by the judgment; and, for this purpose, a certified copy of such judgment shall be sufficient authority for the sheriff. [O. C. 704.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1018.

See Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400; Ex parte Wyatt, 29 App. 338, 16 S. W. 301.

Ex parte Dockery, 38 App. 293, 42 S. W. 599; Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Sentence to both fine and imprisonment.—Where accused is sentenced to imprisonment and fined, while the two punishments cannot be imposed at the same time, imprisonment need not necessarily be first imposed, and if the fine is first exacted it will not extinguish the imprisonment punishment, which may be imposed thereafter. Ex parte Stephens, 59 App. 177, 127 S. W. 819.

Defendant at large on bail.—When defendant is at large on bail after sentence during appeal in habeas corpus proceedings, he is not entitled to have the time deducted from his sentence. Ex parte Branch, 57 App. 316, 39 S. W. 992.

Art. 880. [858] Capias, when punishment is imprisonment.—When a capias is directed to be issued for the apprehension and commitment of a person convicted of a misdemeanor, the penalty of which, or any part thereof, is imprisonment in jail, the writ shall require the judgment and command the sheriff to place the defendant in jail, to remain the length of time therein fixed; and this writ shall be sufficient to authorize the sheriff to enforce such judgment. [O. C. 705.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1001, 1016, 1017.

See Ex parte Wyatt, 29 App. 338, 16 S. W. 301; Ex parte Dockery, 38 App. 293, 42 S. W. 599; Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Sentence to both fine and imprisonment.—Where accused is sentenced to imprisonment and fined, while the two punishments cannot be imposed at the same time, imprisonment need not necessarily be first imposed, and if the fine is first exacted it will not extinguish the imprisonment punishment, which may be imposed thereafter. Ex parte Stephens, 59 App. 177, 127 S. W. 819.

Art. 881. [859] Defendant shall be discharged, when.—When a defendant has remained in jail the length of time required by the judgment, he shall be discharged; and the sheriff shall then return the copy of the judgment, or the capias under which the defendant was imprisoned, to the proper court, stating how the same has been executed.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1017, 1018.

Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Art. 882. [860] Further execution of judgment, etc; when term of imprisonment begins.—The further execution of the judgment and sentence shall be in accordance with the provisions of the law governing the penitentiaries of the state. The term shall commence from the time of sentence, or, in case of appeal, from the time of affirmance of the sentence by the court of criminal appeals.

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 6172-6231.
Cited, Ex parte Spiller, 65 App. 95, 138 S. W. 1013.

Where no appeal is taken.—This article has been construed to mean that when a party is condemned to the penitentiary for any term, he must be imprisoned in the penitentiary, but, after he has reached and been actually imprisoned in said penitentiary, the term of his imprisonment is to be estimated to begin from the date of the sentence, in a case where no appeal has been taken. Sartain v. State, 10 App. 651, 38 Am. Rep. 649.

Where appeal is taken.—One's sentence begins from the date his case was finally disposed of in the court of criminal appeals, and the mandate issued; for having appealed to the court of criminal appeals he cannot take advantage of his delays in the commencement of his sentence. When one withdraws his appeal, the term of his sentence begins when he withdraws his appeal and the order granting the same is entered. Ex parte Carey (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 241.

Where one convicted of forgery appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeals, and after the affirmance of the conviction filed two successive motions for rehearing, and then asked for stay of mandate in order that he might apply to the United States Supreme Court for writ of error, which application was denied, and the mandate then issued by Court of Criminal Appeals, during all of which time the accused was out on recognizance, the sentence did not begin to run in any event until the mandate was issued by the Court of Criminal Appeals. State ex rel. Looney v. Hamblen (Cr. App.) 109 S. W. 678.

3. Enforcing Judgment in Capital Cases

Art. 883. [861] Death warrant to be executed, when.—The warrant for the execution of the sentence of death may be carried into effect at any time after eleven o'clock, and before sunset, on the day stated in such warrant. [O. C. 708.]

Art. 884. [862] Executed, how.—The sentence of death shall be executed by hanging the convict by the neck until he is dead. [O. C. 709.]

Art. 885. [863] Shall take place within the walls of the jail, when.—Where there is a jail in the county, and it is so constructed that a gallows can be erected therein, the execution of the sentence of death shall take place within the walls of the jail. [O. C. 710.]

See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 6110.

Art. 886. [864] Who shall be present.—Where the sentence of death is executed within the walls of the county jail, the sheriff shall notify any number of physicians or surgeons, not exceeding six, any number of justices of the peace of his county, not exceeding four, and any number of freeholders in the county, not exceeding six, any, or all of whom, may be present, together with such deputies of the sheriff as he may require to be in attendance when the penalty of death is executed. [O. C. 711.]

Art. 887. [865] Reasonable request of convict.—The sheriff shall comply with any reasonable request of the convict; and, where the execution takes place within the walls of the county jail, shall permit such persons to be present (not exceeding five) as he may name. [O. C. 712.]

Art. 888. [866] No torture shall be inflicted.—No torture, or ill-treatment, or unnecessary pain, shall be inflicted upon a prisoner to be executed under the sentence of the law. [O. C. 713.]

Art. 889. [867] Sheriff may order military company to aid.—The sheriff may, when he supposes there will be a necessity, order such number of citizens of his county, or any military or militia company, to aid in preventing the rescue of a prisoner, or to prevent persons not authorized to be present from intruding themselves within the place of execution. [O. C. 715.]

Explanatory.—This provision, in so far as it relates to the militia, may be superseded by the militia act of 1905. See Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, arts. 5831, 5832.
Art. 890. [868] When execution can not take place in jail.—When the execution can not take place in the county jail, the sheriff shall select some other place in the county for that purpose; and such place shall be as private as he can conveniently find; and publicity in the execution shall be avoided as far as practicable.

Art. 891. [869] Body of convict shall be buried, how.—The body of a convict shall be decently buried, at the expense of the county, unless demanded by his relatives or friends, in which case, it shall be given to them, and shall never, unless by consent of the convict himself before execution, be delivered to any person for dissection. [O. C. 716.]

Art. 892. [870] Sheriff shall return the warrant, stating, etc.—The sheriff shall immediately return the warrant, stating in his return, indorsed thereon, or attached thereto—

1. The fact, time, place and mode of execution.
2. If the execution do not take place within the jail, the return shall state that there is no jail, or that it is so constructed that a gallows could not have been erected therein.
3. If the execution take place within the jail, the return shall state the names of the physicians, justices of the peace and freeholders present, and the names of all other persons present, if any, and the authority by which they were present.

4. If the execution does not take place within the jail, the return shall state the names of five freeholders of the county who were present.

5. That the body of the convict was decently buried, or delivered to his relatives or friends, naming them, or to some other person, by consent of the convict, naming such person, and naming two or more witnesses to the fact that the convict consented that his body might be delivered to such person. [O. C. 717.]

See ante, art. 497, and notes, post, art. 961.
Art. 894. [872] Defendant may appeal.—A defendant in any criminal action, upon conviction, has the right of appeal under the rules hereinafter prescribed.

Writ of error in scire facias, see post, art. 961.

Nature of right.—The right of a convicted defendant to appeal exists independent of statute, being given by the constitution; and even if rules are not provided by legislation for its exercise, or if necessary conditions are imposed upon its exercise, yet the right will be sustained. Republic of Texas v. Smith, Dallam, 407; Laturner v. State, 9 Tex. 451. The right of appeal must be exercised in conformity with law at the time of the conviction. Brull v. State, 13 Tex. 79. But see Smyrl v. State, 49 Tex. 471, where an appeal was sustained, although it had not been perfected in conformity with the law in force at the time it was taken.

Appeal will not be from a judgment imposing a fine and costs, where defendant paid the judgment before moving for a new trial. Payne v. State, 12 App. 169.

Decisions reviewable in general.—There is no appeal from an order overruling a motion to reduce bail. Ex parte Wright, 40 App. 136, 49 S. W. 101.

Appeal does not lie from an ex parte proceeding in the trial court on the issue of insanity, after trial and conviction. Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 5 S. W. 522.

The issue being only of identity, under art. 861, subd. 4, ante, appeal does not lie. Washington v. State, 31 App. 84, 19 S. W. 300.

Accused cannot allege error to the sustaining of his own objections to evidence offered by the state. Clark v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 851.

An appeal lies from an order setting aside an order suspending sentence during good behavior. Ex parte Lawson (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 698.

Findings of judgment.—See arts. 68 and 553, ante, and notes.

An appeal can only be from a final judgment of conviction rendered and entered of record, and unless such a judgment appears on record of appeal, the appeal will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Republic of Texas v. Laughlin, Dallag, Republic, Id. 651; Shannon v. State, 42 App. 517; Alexander v. State, 13 Tex. 403; Burrell v. State, 16 Tex. 147; Calvin v. State, 23 Tex. 577; Henry v. State, 24 Tex. 536; State v. Pierce, 26 Tex. 114; Nathan v. State, 25 Tex. 226; Dooley v. State, 26 Tex. 712; Murray v. State, 35 Tex. 472; Fulcher v. State, 40 Tex. 258; State v. Mayfield, 355; State v. State, 4, 41 Tex. 97; Anschinsches v. State, 4 Tex. 558; Young v. State, 1 App. 64; Smith v. State, Id. 488; Lobb of State, 4 App. 169; Pennington v. State, 11 App. 281; Miroles v. State, 13 App. 446; Braden v. State, 14 App. 22; Heatherly v. State, Id. 21. A conviction held in Ashworth v. State, 75, 66 Tex. 169; Hopson v. State, 32 Tex. 383; Nelson v. State, Id. 71; but these cases have been expressly overruled. Fulcher v. State, 38 Tex. 506; Mayfield v. State, 40 Tex. 258; Butler v. State, 1 App. 638; Choate v. State, 2 App. 362; Trimble v. State, 2 App. 359; Butler v. State, 2 App. 639; Roberts v. State, 3 App. 47; Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 5 S. W. 522; Estes v. State, 38 App. 506, 43 S. W. 982; Cox v. State, 24 App. 94, 29 S. W. 275, and cases cited.

The right of appeal exists only when a judgment final of conviction has been rendered and entered against the defendant. Payne v. State, 12 App. 169.

A judgment is final if it definitely puts the case out of court whether rendered upon the merits or not. Terry v. State, 20 App. 468, 17 S. W. 1075, overruling in points of conflict, Heatherly's Cases, 11 App. 21, Braden's Case, Id. 22, and Want's Case, Id. 24.

In view of art. 867, ante, held, that a judgment on conviction that it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the defendant Caskey be fined $50 and costs" is not a final judgment. Even the verdict is not set out in the record. Caskey v. State (Cr. App.) 108 S. W. 666.

An order, amending an original order directing the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus, by directing the return of the writ to the district court of another county than the one specified in the original order, is not appealable, as the order is only an interlocutory one. Ex parte McPharlane, 61 App. 204, 134 S. W. 685.

Under the Suspended Sentence Law (arts. 865c, 865e, ante) a conviction with suspended sentence is not a final appealable judgment. Bieerman v. State, 23 App. 284, 164 S. W. 840.

Contempt proceedings.—An appeal does not lie in cases of contempt. Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 213; Jordan v. State, 14 Tex. 456; Crow v. State, 24 Tex. 12; Casev v. State, 25 Tex. 390; State v. Thurmond, 37 Tex. 349. A fine against a defaulting juror is a proceeding for contempt, and an appeal does not lie in such case. Ex parte Kilgore, 3 App. 247; Carter v. State, 4 App. 165.

Review on habeas corpus.—Holman v. Mayor of Austin, 34 Tex. 698; Ex parte DeClerq, 666, 17 S. W. 1111; Ex parte Kearby, 35 App. 551, 24 S. W. 635; Id., 35 App. 634, 34 S. W. 962; Ex parte Park, 37 App. 690, 40 S. W. 300, 66 Am. St. Rep. 855.

Appeal will not lie from a judgment in proceedings in accordance with art. 525c et seq., fining one for contempt of court in refusing to obey a subpoena. Pegram v. State, 72 App. 176, 161 S. W. 458.

Necessity of motion for new trial.—See arts. 835, 844, and notes.
Defects in proceedings for appeal.—An attempted appeal before final judgment has been entered in the trial court. Smith v. State, 1 App. 516; Downs v. State, 7 App. 485. And see Thompson v. State, 35 App. 505, 34 S. W. 121, 612; Cryer v. State, 26 App. 621, 37 S. W. 175, 35 S. W. 203; Wright v. State, 57 App. 3, 25 S. W. 150, 28 S. W. 811.

Where an appeal has been dismissed for the want of a recognize, or because the recognize is insufficient, or because notice of appeal was not given and entered upon the minutes, a second appeal is not allowable. Ex parte Jones, 7 App. 439; Ex parte M. & P. & Fitch v. State, 32 Tex. 497.

Under this article and articles 882 and 883 where accused was convicted at a term ending September 3, 1910, and the only notice of appeal appears to have been given October 1, 1910, the appeal must be dismissed. Oilfield v. State, 61 App. 555, 155 S. W. 556.

Art. 895. [873] Appeals from district and county courts.—Appeals from judgments rendered by the district or county court in criminal actions shall be heard by the court of criminal appeals. [Acts 22d Leg., S. S.]

See, ante, arts. 68, 85, 87. See 31 App. 647.

Disbarment proceedings.—A proceeding against an attorney or counselor at law, charging him with fraudulent or dishonorable conduct, and having for its object to strike him from the roll of practicing attorneys, is a criminal or quasi criminal case, from which an appeal can only lie to the court of criminal appeals. Following Cummings v. State, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 28 S. W. 708.

Habeas corpus.—Under the constitutional provision giving the Court of Criminal Appeals jurisdiction only in criminal cases, it has no jurisdiction of an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person committed to jail for violating a temporary injunction, in an action brought by the county attorney to enjoin him and other proprietors of theaters and moving picture shows from showing shows therein on Sunday, and charging a fee for admission thereto, though the act sought to be enjoined is a violation of the Penal Code 1911, art. 502, since the act was a civil case, especially in view of Rev. St. 1911, art. 1529 (same article in Vernon's Statutes, 1911), authorizing the Supreme Court, or any justice thereof to issue writs of habeas corpus where any person is restrained in his liberty by virtue of any order, process, or commitment issued by any court or judge on account of the violation of any order, judgment, or decree made in any civil cause. Ex parte Zuccaro, 72 App. 214, 162 S. W. 814.

Conclusiveness of decisions of supreme court.—While the construction of the civil statutes by the Supreme Court is final and will be followed by the Court of Criminal Appeals, that court, in construing the criminal statutes and enforcing the criminal laws, must follow its own judgment, though contrary to the decisions of the Supreme Court. Barnes v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 548, L. R. A. 1915C, 101.

Art. 895a. Appeals from criminal district court of Harris county.

—Appeals and writs of error may be prosecuted from the said criminal district court [Criminal District Court of Harris County (art. 97m, ante)] to the Court of Criminal Appeals, in the same manner and form as from district courts in like cases. [Art 1911, p. 113, ch. 67, § 15.]

Art. 896. Cases for violation of local option law to have preference, when, and shall be advanced.—That in any criminal case wherein the defendant is charged with a violation of the local option law, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in local option territories, and wherein any constitutional question or the validity of such election is involved, all such cases, for the violation of such law, shall be preference cases, and, on motion, shall be advanced and immediately heard in said court. [Act 1907, p. 305.]

Art. 897. [874] From justices of the peace to county court.—Appeals from judgments rendered by justices of the peace and other inferior courts in criminal actions shall be heard by the county court, except in counties where there is a criminal district court, in which counties such appeals shall be heard by such criminal district courts.

Criminal district courts.—Appellate jurisdiction of cases arising under this article, in counties having a criminal district court, appertains to such criminal district court. Autsch v. Galveston, 27 App. 402, 11 S. W. 414.

Constitutionality of act conferring appellate jurisdiction on county court in county having criminal district court.—Kruegel v. State (Cr. App.) 84 S. W. 1068.
Invasion of jurisdiction of court of criminal appeals.—The legislature has no power to confer the charter right to abrogate the right of appeal in criminal cases, or restrict the appellate jurisdiction of the court of criminal appeals. Bautsch v. Galveston, 27 App. 342, 11 S. W. 414; Cornelius v. Dallas, 37 App. 309, 39 S. W. 679.

Jurisdiction of lower court.—If the justice court was without jurisdiction, the county court acquired none by appeal. Nell v. State, 43 Tex. 91; Uecker v. State, 4 App. 234.

Amount of fine imposed in county court as affecting appeal to higher court.—See art. 87, ante, and notes.

Art. 898. [875] Defendant need not be present.—The defendant in a criminal action need not be personally present upon the hearing of his cause in the court of criminal appeals, but he may appear in person in cases where, by law, he is not committed to jail upon appeal. [Acts 22d Leg., S. S.]

See Tooke v. State, 23 App. 16, 3 S. W. 783.

Art. 899. Defendant must be personally present, when; verdict may be received in his absence, when; presumption that he was present, when.

Explanatory.—The revisers of 1911 overlooked the fact that the above provision superseded art. 623 of the revision of 1895 (art. 616 of the revision of 1911). Inasmuch as the provision is not directly related to appellate procedure the text is taken out of this position and transferred to art. 648, and there appended to the superseded provision with an appropriate explanatory note. The decisions relating to the statute will also be found under art. 646.

Art. 900. Defendant in felony cases on bail shall remain on bail until verdict of guilty.

Explanatory.—The revisers of 1911 overlooked the fact that the above provision superseded art. 625, and perhaps art. 636 of the revision of 1895 (arts. 618, 649 of the revision of 1911). Inasmuch as this provision has nothing to do with practice on appeal the text is removed from this place in the statute, and in this compilation is appended to art. 648, ante, with an explanatory note. The decisions relating to the subject of the article will be found under arts. 648 and 649, ante.

Forms.—See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1920.

Art. 901. [876] In felony cases where defendant is convicted and appeals, shall have right to remain on bail, when.—In all cases of felony, where, upon the trial thereof, the defendant has been convicted, and his punishment assessed and confinement in the penitentiary for any period of fifteen years or less, and where an appeal is taken from such conviction, and judgment rendered thereon, the defendant thus convicted shall have the right to remain on bail during the pendency of said appeal, and until the judgment of the trial court is affirmed by the court of criminal appeals, and the mandate thereof filed with the clerk of such trial court, by entering into a recognizance in said court, in such sum as is fixed by the court. [Act 1907, p. 31.]

When the conviction is in a felony case he must be committed to jail until the decision of the court of appeals can be made. Where an offense is punishable in the alternative, with imprisonment in the penitentiary, or by fine, and the defendant is convicted, and his punishment assessed at a fine, his conviction is in a felony case, and he is not entitled to appeal on recognizance. Campbell v. State, 22 App. 262, 2 S. W. 238: overruling Skiles v. State, 9 App. 96; *P. C. arts. 55, 56. In a misdemeanor case the defendant, upon appeal, may enter into recognizance. Post, arts. 918, 919.

There is no law authorizing the release of appellant on bail pending appeal in felony cases, but he must be confined pending such appeal. Ex parte Smith (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 1063.

Before Acts 30th Leg. c. 15, regulating bail in felony cases and prescribing the form of the recognizance, the Court of Criminal Appeals could not take cognizance of a case unless the appellant was in custody as the court would be without jurisdiction; hence where appellant was not in custody, and he had not entered into a sufficient recognizance, which is equivalent to an escape, his appeal will be dismissed. Jordan v. State, 59 App. 298, 128 S. W. 139.

Requisites of recognizance.—See art. 963, and notes.

Forms.—See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 796, 1920.

Art. 902. When defendant appeals and bail is allowed, shall be committed to jail, until he enters into recognizance.—Where the defendant appeals in any case of felony from the judgment of the dis-strict court, and where bail is allowed by the provisions of this act, he shall, if he be in custody, be committed to jail, unless he enters into a recognizance to appear as hereinafter required; and, if he be in custody, his notice of appeal shall have no effect whatever to release him from such custody until he enters into recognizance; and no recognizance shall be taken or allowed, unless the defendant is in custody of the sheriff at the time thereof. [Id., p. 31.]

Requisites of recognizance.—See art. 903, and notes.

Art. 903. Form of such recognizance.—In all appeals from judgments and convictions for felonies where bail is hereby allowed, the following form of recognizances shall be considered sufficient:

"The State of Texas,

vs.

A. B.

No. .........

"This day came into open court A. B., defendant in the above entitled cause, who, together with C. D. and E. F., sureties, acknowledged themselves jointly and severally indebted to the state of Texas in the sum $........, conditioned that the said A. B., who stands charged with the offense of ........... in this court, and who has been convicted of the offense of ............. in this court, shall appear before this court from day to day, and from term to term, of the same, and not depart therefrom, without leave of this court, in order to abide a judgment of the court of criminal appeals of the state of Texas in this case." [Id., p. 31.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 756.

Requisites of bond in general.—A recognizance on appeal in a prosecution for violating the local option law was defective for not binding appellant to abide the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals "in this case." Lindsey v. State, 60 App. 273, 125 S. W. 386.

A recognizance on appeal which fails to show the court in which accused was tried, and before which he obligates himself to appear, is fatally defective, and the appeal must be dismissed. Hughes v. State, 62 App. 288, 136 S. W. 1068.

Where an appeal bond, copied in the record, is not in compliance with this article, the appeal will be dismissed. Black v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1063.

Statement of nature of offense and extent of punishment.—Recognizance on appeal, to be sufficient, must state that the bribe was offered with one or the other intents named in the statute. Hardin v. State, 36 App. 469, 37 S. W. 735.

A recognizance on appeal is fatally defective that fails to state the amount of the punishment or its character. Watson v. State, 62 App. 620, 138 S. W. 611.

Where a recognizance does not state the punishment assessed against accused in compliance with this article, his appeal must be dismissed. White v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 630.

Duration of liability on bond.—In view of art. 913, a bond given to secure the release of a person convicted of felony pending an appeal becomes functus officio upon a reversal and remand of the cause, and the sureties are not liable upon accused's nonappearance on the new trial, even though no bail bond was given prior to the first conviction, in view of the fact that article 903 was enacted 21 years after the Court of Criminal Appeals had so held with reference to appeals in misdemeanor cases, and uses precisely the same language in specifying the form of a recognizance in felony cases as article 919 uses with reference to misdemeanor cases, and also in view of the long and uninterrupted acquiescence in that decision by the bench and bar. Sanders v. State, 70 App. 532, 158 S. W. 291.

Art. 904. Where defendant fails to enter into recognizance during term time, he may give bail in amount fixed by court, to be approved by sheriff.—If, for any cause, the defendant fails to enter into and make the recognizance mentioned in article 903 during the term of court, but gave notice of and took an appeal from such conviction during such term, he shall, notwithstanding such failure, be permitted to give bail and obtain his release from custody by giving, after the expiration of such term of court and in vacation, his bail bond to the sheriff, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, in which the defendant, together with his sureties, shall acknowledge themselves severally indebted to the state of Texas in the sum of money fixed by the court, upon the conditions as are provided for in recognizances in article 903; but before such bail bond shall be accepted and the defendant released from custody by reason thereof, the same must be approved by such sheriff and the court trying said cause, or his successor in office. That when said bond is so given, approved and accepted, the defendant shall be released from custody. [Id., p. 32.]

Cited, Sanders v. State, 70 App. 322, 158 S. W. 291.

Approval of bond.—Under this article an appeal bond, properly approved by the sheriff, but which, instead of being approved by the judge who tried the case, is approved by another judge, signing himself as special judge, is insufficient, and the appeal will be dismissed. Wells v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1163.

Requisites of bond.—See notes under art. 903. Where an appeal bond, copied in the record, is not in compliance with this article and article 903, the appeal will be dismissed. Block v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1865.

Art. 905. Procedure in fixing and forfeiting recognizance and bail bond.—The amount of such recognizance and bail bond shall be fixed by the court in which judgment was rendered, and the sufficiency of the security thereon shall be tested, and the same proceedings had as in cases of forfeitures in other cases of recognizances and bail bonds. [Id., p. 32.]

Art. 906. On receipt of mandate of court of criminal appeals affirming judgment, duty of clerk to issue capias.—When the clerk of any district court from whose judgment an appeal has been taken in felony cases wherein bail has been allowed shall receive the mandate of the court of criminal appeals affirming such judgment, he shall immediately file the same in said court, and forthwith shall issue a capias for the arrest of the defendant, for the execution of the sentence of the court, which shall recite the fact of conviction, setting forth the offense and the judgment and sentence of the court, the appeal from and affirmation of such judgment and the filing of such mandate, and shall command the sheriff to arrest and take into his custody the defendant, and place him in jail and therein keep him until delivered to the proper penitentiary authorities, as directed by said sentence. The sheriff shall forthwith execute such capias by placing the defendant in jail and therein keep him as directed. [Id., p. 32.]

Art. 907. Capias may issue to what county and executed how.—The capias provided for by this law may be issued to any county of this state, and shall be executed and returned as in other felony cases, except that no bail shall be taken in such cases. [Id., p. 32.]

Art. 908. Right of appeal not to be abridged.—The right of appeal, as otherwise provided by law, shall in no wise be abridged by the provisions of this chapter. [Id., p. 33.]

Art. 909. If no jail in county, etc.—If the jail of the county is unsafe, or if there be no jail, the judge of the district court may, either in term time or in vacation, order the prisoner to be committed to the jail, of the nearest county in his district, which is safe.

Art. 910. [878] Appeal in felony cases prosecuted immediately.—An appeal in a felony case may be prosecuted immediately to the term of the court of criminal appeals pending at the time the appeal is taken, or to the first term of such court after such appeal, without regard to the law governing appeals in other cases; and it shall be the duty of the clerk, upon the application of either the state or the defendant, to make out and forward, without delay to the court of criminal appeals, a transcript of the case. [Act 22d Leg., S. S.]

Application for transcript.—If the application be in writing it need not be incorporated in the transcript. A certified copy thereof accompanying the transcript will be sufficient. If it be oral in term time, the better practice is for the transcript to contain it. Ayers v. State, 12 App. 456; Reynolds v. State, 8 App. 299; see, also, Blum v. Wettermark, 58 Tex. 125. Under the original act the defendant only was accorded the right to prosecute the appeal immediately. Meyer v. State, 3 App. 260; Powell v. State, Id. 630.

Term of court to which returnable.—When an appeal is returned to a term of the court of appeals to which it is not returnable under the law, the said court is without jurisdiction to determine it at said term. But if it be a felony case, and has been returned under this article, the court has jurisdiction to determine it. Ayers v. State, 12 App. 456.

Extension of time for filing statement of facts.—Art. 845 is mandatory, and, construed in view of this article and art. 814, does not authorize the trial court to grant extensions of time for filing a statement of facts beyond 90 days from the final judgment, which in criminal cases is the sentence, or from adjournment of the court. Roberts v. State, 92 App. 7, 136 S. W. 489.

Art. 911. [879] When transcript may be filed.—The transcript may be filed in the court of criminal appeals, and the case tried and determined in said court, while the district court in which the conviction was had is yet in session; and, upon an affirmance of the judgment of conviction by the court of criminal appeals, sentence may be pronounced by the district court, at the same term at which the conviction was had, or any term thereafter.

Pendency of case in appellate court.—In view of art. 916, though a motion for a continuance has been overruled and notice is not returned as pending in the Court of Criminal Appeals as long as the term of the lower court was in session, unless the transcript had been taken out during the term and filed in the upper court, in which case the lower court could not take any action affecting the appeal. Bundick v. State, 50 App. 5, 127 S. W. 943.

Art. 912. [880] When defendant escapes, pending an appeal.—In case the defendant, pending an appeal in a felony case, shall make his escape from custody, the jurisdiction of the court of criminal appeals shall no longer attach in the case; and, upon the fact of such escape being made to appear, the court shall, on motion of the attorney general, or attorney representing the state, dismiss the appeal; but the order dismissing the appeal shall be set aside, if it shall be made to appear that the accused had voluntarily returned to the custody of the officer from whom he escaped, within ten days.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1158-1161.

See former rule 77 for court of criminal appeals, 2 App. 645.

Constitutionality.—This article is not in violation of sections 10 and 19 of article 1 of the constitution. Said sections have no application to proceedings had after conviction. Loyd v. State, 15 App. 127; see, also, Brown v. State, 5 App. 126; Young v. State, 3 App. 844; Gresham v. State, 1 App. 485, as to constitutionality of such legislation.

If the defendant, after convicted and pending his appeal, escapes, the court of appeals is thereby ousted of jurisdiction of such appeal, and jurisdiction thereof can be reinvoked only by the voluntary return of the defendant into the custody of the officer from whom he escaped, within ten days. If the defendant be recaptured before the lapse of ten days, his escape, nevertheless, divests the court of appeals of jurisdiction of the appeal. A recapture within ten days, while preventing a voluntary return of the defendant into custody, will not restore jurisdiction of the appeal. Lunsford v. State, 10 App. 118; Ex parte Wood, 19 App. 46; Loyd v. State, Id. 137.

The word "escape," as used in this article, means that the prisoner has "actually and completely withdrawn himself from custody, and has got free and gone at large." Loyd v. State, 19 App. 127.

Where defendant escapes from jail and is pursued and is out of sight three or four days, and is recaptured, it is not such an escape, and is not authorize dismissal of appeal. Johnson v. State, 41 App. 9, 51 S. W. 511, 54 S. W. 658.

Where defendant, convicted of a misdemeanor, did not enter into a recognizance at the term of his conviction, but after the term had expired gave bond to the sheriff, who released him from custody, such release constituted an "escape," requiring a dismissal of the appeal. Roberson v. State, 60 App. 514, 132 S. W. 766.
Art. 912

APPEAL AND WRIT OF ERROR

(Title 10)

Return to custody.—Recapture is not voluntary return, and will not reinstate appeal. Ex parte Wood, 19 App. 46; Loyd v. State, Id., 127; Lunsford v. State, 10 App. 118.

When a defendant escapes after conviction, but before sentence has been pronounced, and is recaptured and sentenced, he may then appeal, and his escape before sentence will not affect his right of appeal. Tate v. State, 21 App. 121, 17 S. W. 461; Walters v. State, 13 App. 8.

An escaped prisoner must deliver himself to the sheriff of county from which he escaped pending appeal within ten days or his appeal will be dismissed. Hammons v. State, 35 App. 18, 28 S. W. 780.

In computing the ten days within which an escaped defendant must surrender in order to preserve his appeal, the day of escape must be excluded. Hammons v. State, 35 App. 17, 29 S. W. 759.

Reading article to jury.—Lucas v. State, 50 App. 219, 95 S. W. 1658.

Former law.—Before the enactment of this article, the practice in such cases was not uniform, and the escape of the defendant did not forfeit his appeal, but only his right to prosecute it while at large. Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 358; Moore v. State, 44 Tex. 555.

Art. 913. [881] Sheriff shall report escape, etc.—When any such escape of a prisoner occurs, the sheriff who had him in custody shall immediately report the fact, under oath, to the district or county attorney of the county in which the conviction was had, who shall forthwith forward such report to the attorney general at the court to which the transcript was sent; and such report shall be sufficient evidence of the fact of such escape to authorize the dismissal of the appeal.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1160.

Art. 914. [882] Appeal may be taken, when.—An appeal may be taken by the defendant at any time during the term of the court at which the conviction is had. [O. C. 725.]

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 982.

Cited, Murff v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 238.

Notice of appeal and recognizance must be entered upon the minutes of the term at which conviction occurred and not afterwards, else appeal will be dismissed. Harkrider v. State, 48 App. 574, 90 S. W. 655; Young v. State, 60 App. 299, 131 S. W. 413.

The proper time to give notice of appeal is when the lower court has overruled the defendant’s motion for new trial. Young v. State, 60 App. 299, 131 S. W. 413.

Where accused was convicted at a term ending September 3, 1910, and the only notice of appeal appears to have been given October 1, 1910, the appeal must be dismissed. Offield v. State, 61 App. 585, 153 S. W. 568.

The court of Criminal Appeals has no jurisdiction of a misdemeanor appeal, where accused did not enter into a recognizance during the term, but attempted to perfect the appeal by executing an appeal bond after the adjournment of court. Hamilton v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 775.

One convicted of a misdemeanor and not in custody can only perfect an appeal under arts. 818, 929, 932, by entering into a recognizance during the term, and the giving of an appeal bond, or of a recognizance subsequent to the term is insufficient. Knowlton v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 674.

Appeal from judgment corrected or entered nunc pro tunc.—Appeal may be taken from a final judgment of conviction entered nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term. Scott v. State, 26 Tex. 115; O’Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 342; Smith v. State, 1 App. 408, Id., 1 App. 516; Madison v. State, 17 App. 473; Mapes v. State, 13 App. 55; Gordon v. State, Id., 196; Nelson v. State, 21 App. 351, 17 S. W. 496. See, also, post, art. 917.

Under this article and art. 855 ante, correction of the judgment at a subsequent term does not authorize an appeal after the term of conviction. Offield v. State, 61 App. 340, 353 S. W. 683.

Effect of motion to set aside judgment at subsequent term.—Notice of appeal to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Criminal Appeals, must be given during the term in which sentence is pronounced; and where notice of appeal is given at a term subsequent to the one in which sentence was pronounced, the appeal must be dismissed, though at such subsequent term accused moved to set aside the sentence, because he had not been served with notice of the fact that he would be sentenced. Jones v. State, 62 App. 556, 137 S. W. 670.
Title 10

APPEAL AND WRIT OF ERROR

Art. 915

Entry of notice or recognition nunc pro tunc.—After an appeal has been taken the court has no power to enter a recognition on the minutes nunc pro tunc. Quarles v. State, 37 App. 352, 39 S. W. 666; Peterson v. State, 32 Tex. 477; Harris v. State, 2 App. 134; Clark v. State, 3 App. 318; Grant v. State, 8 App. 422.

Notice of appeal nunc pro tunc at a subsequent term was without authority of law and did not confer jurisdiction on the appellate court. Such an entry, however, is proper in case of an appeal from a judgment final on a forfeited bail bond. Morse v. State, 39 App. 566, 47 S. W. 615, 50 S. W. 342; Clay v. State, 56 App. 515, 120 S. W. 415.

Correction of entry as to recognition.—The minutes of the county court recording the recognition in a criminal case should not be erased and interlined after adjournment for the term, so as to show by insertion the punishment imposed upon accused. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 917.

Art. 915. [883] Appeal how taken; entry of notice after term.—An appeal is taken by giving notice thereof in open court at the term of court at which conviction is had, and having the same entered of record; provided, that if notice of appeal is given at the term at which the conviction is had, and the same is not entered of record, by making proof of that fact, the judge of the court trying the cause may order same entered of record either in term time or vacation by entering in the minutes of his court an order to that effect, which said entry when so made shall bear date as of date when notice of appeal was actually given in open court. [O. C. 720; Act 1915, p. 159, ch. 104, § 1, amending art. 915, C. P.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 982, 1020.

Necessity and requisites of notice in general.—The appeal will be dismissed if the record does not show that notice of appeal was given. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 90 S. W. 169; Hicklin v. State, 31 Tex. 429; Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 778; York v. City of Dallas (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 223; Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. See ante, art. 68 and notes; Teague v. State, 55 App. 503, 111 S. W. 465; Clay v. State, 56 App. 515, 120 S. W. 415, and cases cited.

Notice of appeal given in open court, and entered of record, is essential to the jurisdiction of the court of appeals, and unless such notice appears on the record, the appeal will be dismissed. Lawrence v. State, 14 Tex. 427; Lawrence v. State, 35 Tex. 65; Young v. State, 69 App. 290, 131 S. W. 413; Solari v. State, 3 App. 489; Fairchild v. State, 23 Tex. 176; Johnson v. State, 8 App. 671; Truss v. State, 38 App. 291, 43 S. W. 52; Thomas v. State, 56 App. 264, 119 S. W. 846. The proper time for defendant to give notice of appeal is when the trial court has overruled his motion for a new trial. Wilson v. State, 12th App. 481. But the notice may be given and entered of record at any time after conviction, during the term of the court at which the judgment of conviction is entered against him. Bozler v. State, 5 App. 255. It may be given and entered at a subsequent term upon the entry of a judgment or sentence nunc pro tunc. O’Connell v. State, 18 Tex. 343; Scott v. State, 25 Tex. 116; Smith v. State, 1 App. 408; S. C. 1 App. 616; Manges v. State, 33 App. 85; Madision v. State, 17 App. 479. There is no prescribed form for the entry of a notice of appeal. But the entry of such notice upon the judge's docket merely will not be sufficient. It must be entered of record upon the minutes of the court. The statute is imperative. Long v. State, 3 App. 321. Where the term of the court at which the conviction was had has adjourned without a notice of appeal, the court of appeals has no jurisdiction. Clark v. State, 3 App. 328.

There are but two exceptions to the rule that an appeal must be taken in a criminal case by giving notice thereof in open court and having the same entered of record, one being that final judgment is not entered until after motion for new trial is overruled. And the other in scire facias, where notice of appeal is given and not entered of record. Roan v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 1069. See Morse v. State, 37 Tex. 566; 47 S. W. 645; 50 S. W. 342.

A request by accused to fix the amount of recognition on appeal is not a notice of appeal. Young v. State, 69 App. 290, 131 S. W. 413.

Time to give notice of appeal is when the lower court has overruled the motion for new trial. Young v. State, 69 App. 290, 131 S. W. 412.

Where accused was convicted at a term ending September 3, 1910, and the only notice of appeal appears to have been given October 1, 1910, the appeal must be dismissed. Osfield v. State, 61 App. 585, 125 S. W. 565.

A misdemeanor appeal will be dismissed, where the record does not contain a notice of appeal. Palmer v. State, 63 App. 614, 141 S. W. 109.

Evidence held sufficient to show that no notice of appeal from a conviction was given.- Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

A notice of appeal referred to in the sentence pronounced, part of the minutes of the court, bearing evidence that notice of appeal was given in open court, confers jurisdiction on the Court of Criminal Appeals. Brandon v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 637.

Prevention of defendant from giving notice of appeal.—Where a person convicted of a crime gives notice of appeal, and the trial court willfully refuses or inadvertently fails to enter such notice, or where he is prevented through force or fear from giving notice of appeal, the Court of Criminal Appeals, upon application made in reasonable time, may issue a writ of mandamus compelling the entry of the notice given or prevented from being given. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Evidence held insufficient to establish that defendant's counsel were prevented by a mob from giving notice of appeal. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

On application for writ of habeas corpus after relator's conviction of murder in the first degree, evidence held insufficient to show that he was prevented from giving notice of appeal by duress. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Entry of notice.—Judgment stated that defendant gave notice of appeal in open court which is here now entered of record; held, sufficient. Conley v. State, 37 App. 510, 40 S. W. 255.

An entry on the judge's docket that notice of appeal was given is not an entry of record. It must be entered on the minutes. Lenox v. State, 55 App. 550, 116 S. W. 816.

A recitation, at the close of a sentence, that as defendant had given notice of appeal, the judgment would be suspended, was insufficient as an entry of notice of appeal. Raines v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 811.

Where the notice of appeal was not entered of record in the minutes of the court, the trial judge had no authority in vacation to amend the record by having the clerk enter up a judgment showing that notice of appeal was given. Rios v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1050.

The notice of appeal must be entered of record in the minutes of the court, in order to confer jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal Appeals upon it; and it is not sufficient that the judge's private docket shows that notice of appeal was given. Rios v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1050.

Withdrawal of notice.—The rules of the Court of Criminal Appeals require that a request to withdraw accused's appeal must be signed in person and sworn to by accused. Jennings v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 1050; Wartelsky v. State, 38 App. 629, 44 S. W. 510; Catron v. State, 63 App. 377, 140 S. W. 227.

Where a request for the withdrawal of an appeal in a criminal case is filed after the appeal has been perfected, and the term of court at which the defendant was tried has adjourned, under the rules of court the request must be signed and acknowledged by the defendant. Gonzales v. State, 61 App. 502, 135 S. W. 351.

Review by certiorari where no notice given.—Under Const. art. 5, § 5, the Court of Criminal Appeals has power only to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and no other writ, in cases where the court has not obtained jurisdiction, and hence where it has no power to review the case by reason of a failure to give notice of appeal, it has no power to review a case under the common-law writ of certiorari. Ex parte Martinez (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 959.

Appeal from justices' and other inferior courts.—See art. 922, and notes. Notice of appeal from justice court must be given, and entry of the same made upon the justice docket. McDougle v. State, 22 App. 174, 22 S. W. 553.

Appeal from justice to county court was dismissed because notice of appeal was not given, but the law having been changed while the case was pending in court of criminal appeals so as to dispense with such notice, the judgment of the county court dismissing the appeal will be reversed, because the law affected a remedy and not a vested right. McKennon v. State, 42 App. 371, 69 S. W. 41, 96 Am. St. Rep. 802.

Art. 916. [884] Effect of appeal.—The effect of an appeal is to suspend and arrest all further proceedings in the case in the court in which the conviction was had, until the judgment of the appellate court is received by the court from which the appeal was taken; provided, that in cases where, after notice of appeal has been given, the record, or any portion thereof, is lost or destroyed, it may be substituted in the lower court, if said court be then in session; and, when so substituted, the transcript may be prepared and sent up as in other cases. In case the court from which the appeal was taken be not then in session, the court of appeals shall postpone the consideration of such appeal until the next term of said court from which said appeal was taken; and the said record shall be substituted at said term as in other cases. [O. C. 727; Act Mar. 30, 1885, p. 72; Act Apr. 1, 1887, p. 94.]

See Morse v. State, 39 App. 556, 47 S. W. 615, 50 S. W. 342.

--Prior to the amendment of this article, the amendment could not be amended or substituted after appeal, as the appeal divested the trial court of all further jurisdiction over the case. Turner v. State, 16 App. 318; Knight v. State, 7 App. 296; Hill v. State, 4 App. 553; Gerard v. State, 30 App. 609.

Effect of appeal in general.—Accused, who on the overruling of his motion for new trial in open court, or without withdrawing his notice of appeal and without leave of court, file an amended motion for new trial. Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 525.

An appeal, as a matter of course, by the district attorney after the case had been appealed could not be considered either by the trial court or the Court of Criminal Appeals, as provided by this article. Henson v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 83.

--Pendency of the appeal and trial court suspends the action of the trial court, which action may be taken no steps with reference to the case until the appellate court has finally disposed of said appeal except where some portion of the record has been lost or destroyed after notice of appeal has been given. After the appeal has been consummated the trial court can take no action whatever in the case. Saudey v. State, 48 App. 563, 90 S. W. 611; Quares v. State, 37 App. 363, 39 S. W. 663; Hinman v. State, 54 App. 434, 113 S. W. 250; Nichols v. State, 55 App. 211, 118 S. W. 1196; Estes v. State, 56 App. 229, 42 S. W. 983; Dunick v. State, 59 App. 76, 47 S. W. 414.

Sentence cannot be pronounced and the convict hurried off to the penitentiary until the appellate tribunals are heard from, Smith v. State, 41 Tex. 352; nor can the court a quo make any order in the case pending appeal. Hill v. State, 4 App. 555, or overrule a motion and after appeal, and enter a new sentence (before the act of 1879). Bozier v. State, 5 App. 220; and, pending appeal, the minutes can not be amended so as to show entry of plea. Knight v. State, 7 App. 206.

When term ends, notice of appeal having been given, jurisdiction of appellate court attaches, and judgment of trial court cannot be entered at succeeding term nunc pro tunc. Estes v. State, 38 App. 556, 47 S. W. 982.

Though a motion for a new trial had been overruled and notice of appeal given, the case could not be considered as pending in the Court of Criminal Appeals as long as the term of the lower court was in session, unless the transcript had been taken out during the term and filed in the upper court, in which case the lower court can not take any action affecting the appeal. An appeal, 374, 41 S. W. 911 providing that the transcript may be filed in the Court of Criminal Appeals and the case tried while the court in which the conviction was had is still in session. Bundick v. State, 59 App. 9, 127 S. W. 543.

The provision of this article suspending the trial court's jurisdiction pending an appeal, except to substitute or supply lost papers, applies only to the proceedings in which a conviction was had, and does not prevent a new indictment for the same offense after dismissal of the first prosecution on appeal, but before receipt of the mandate in the lower court. Ex parte Jones, 69 App. 25, 139 S. W. 632.

The trial court, under this article, is without authority to enter a nunc pro tunc order, so as to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court, and where the notice of appeal was taken out during the term and filed in the upper court, in which case the lower court could not take any action affecting the appeal, and where the court failed to enter the notice in the minutes of the court, although entered in the motion docket, jurisdiction of an appeal is not given by subsequently entering the notice nunc pro tunc. Offield v. State, 61 App. 585, 135 S. W. 556.

An appeal of the Court of Criminal Appeals may be entered immediately upon the entry of notice of appeal, and stays any punishment assessed against the appellant. Ex parte Bradenburg, 63 App. 577, 140 S. W. 780.

The trial court cannot conform the judgment to the verdict after an appeal has been taken. Robison v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 912.

An order changing the venue in a criminal case after a reversal on a former appeal was not invalid because made at a special term, the order for the convening of which was made before the mandate reached the district court, where it appeared from the time elapsing after the issuance of the mandate, from the order changing the venue itself, and from the qualification of the bill of exceptions therein, that the mandate had reached that court before the order changing the venue was made. Mayhew v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 191.

Where the overruling of an amended motion for a new trial appeared only on the motion docket and was not carried into the minutes of the court, the court could not, after the adjournment of the term, and while an appeal was pending, enter nunc pro tunc an order overruling such motion. Suesberry v. State, 72 App. 439, 162 S. W. 419.

Under this article and art. 915, a notice of appeal, given in open court and entered of record, perfects the appeal, and the jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal Appeals attaches. Torres v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 529.

Defendant's recognition, after conviction, did not oust the trial court of jurisdiction to determine his motion for a new trial, as it requires a notice of appeal to attach the jurisdiction of the Court of Criminal Appeals; and, even if defendant lost his appeal, the trial court had jurisdiction over the judgment until the end of the term. Collins v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 729.

Substitution of lost papers.—See ante, art. 482, and notes.

The entry of an order for ten days to file statement of facts is not one for the substitution of a lost or destroyed record, and cannot be made nunc pro tunc. Lewis v. State, 34 App. 126, 29 S. W. 841, 774, 30 S. W. 231.
Defective recognizance cannot be substituted by a good one in the court aforesaid, pending appeal. Youngman v. State, 38 App. 459, 42 S. W. 988, 43 S. W. 519.

After the record in a case has been filed with the court of appeals the trial court can make no further orders in the case except to substitute lost papers. Sheezog v. State, 39 App. 135, 44 S. W. 1199.

No article was not intended to fix the time for the substitution of lost papers, so as to make it absolutely of the essence of right to substitute. The object of the statute is simply to authorize the substitution of lost papers pending the appeal, and that reasonable diligence should be used in the substitution thereof. McHenry v. State, 42 App. 542, 61 S. W. 311.

The trial court may permit the substitution of a lost information, where the trial judge stated in his opinion he had the information when he wrote the charge, and the county clerk thought he had the information when he wrote the judgment, and three persons testified that an information had been prepared and filed, and only one witness testified that he had examined the papers on the day of the trial, and that he could not find the information. James v. State, 62 App. 610, 138 S. W. 406.

Contempt by sheriff.—Where the clerk, after defendant's notice of appeal from a conviction for a misdemeanor, improperly issued a writ of commitment, directing the sheriff to collect the fine and costs from defendant pending his appeal, the sheriff, who put defendant to work on the public roads under such order, but who, on learning that an appeal had been perfected, again placed the defendant in jail, whence he was taken without the sheriff's knowledge, but again returned to jail, and who showed that his placing of the prisoner on the county roads was not willful, willful contempt of court, so as to subject to fine or punishment, Ex parte Braden, 63 App. 577, 140 S. W. 780.

Art. 917. [885] Appeal in felony case after sentence.—Where the defendant in a felony case fails to appeal until after sentence has been pronounced, the appeal shall, nevertheless, be allowed, if demanded, and has the effect of superseding the execution of the sentence and all other proceedings as fully as if taken at the proper time. [O. C. 728.]

See ante, arts. 655 and 656.

Operation in general.—Under this article accused can appeal at any time during the term at which he was convicted. Barr v. State, 62 App. 58, 136 S. W. 454.

Accused being entitled to enter notice of appeal during the term at which he was convicted, it was improper to remove him to the penitentiary, where his motion for new trial had been overruled and the notice of appeal was entered. Ex parte Barr, 62 App. 65, 136 S. W. 456.

Art. 918. [886] When defendant appeals in misdemeanor, must give recognizance.—When the defendant appeals in any case of misdemeanor from the judgment of the district or county court, he shall, if he be in custody, be committed to jail, unless he enter into recognizance to appear as hereinafter required; and, if he be not in custody, his notice of appeal shall have no effect whatever, until he enter into recognizance. [O. C. 722.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 797, 1021.

Necessity of recognizance.—If defendant does not enter into recognizance, he must be held to jail pending his appeal, and the recognizance shall show a sufficient recognizance, or must show affirmatively that the defendant is in jail, otherwise the appeal will be dismissed. Harris v. State, 2 App. 134; Young v. State, 8 App. 81; Evans v. State, Id. 617; Johnson v. State, 26 Tex. 117; White v. State, 11 Tex. 780; Alexander v. State, 12 Tex. 240; Lawrence v. State, 14 Tex. 422; Hicklin v. State, 31 Tex. 492; State v. Watson, 33 Tex. 337; Crow v. State, 41 Tex. 468; Holman v. State, 10 Tex. 555; State v. Paschal, 22 Tex. 554; State v. Fatheree, 23 Tex. 303; Buie v. State, 1 App. 58; Taylor v. State, 1 App. 663; Allison v. State, 23 App. 501, 28 S. W. 1080; Maxey v. State, 41 App. 566, 52 S. W. 823; Vaughan v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 263; Walton v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 516; Green v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 527; Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 23; Childress v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 227; Childress v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 302; Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 59 S. W. 528; Brinson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 776.

When no recognizance is given, judgment must show that appellant has been continuously in jail. To state that he is now in jail is not sufficient. Bruce v. State, 40 App. 378, 50 S. W. 721.

Where no recognizance is given the transcript must show that defendant has been continuously in jail since conviction. Woods v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 50.

On a sheriff's certificate that a party is in jail, in order to give appellate court jurisdiction the certificate must show that he has been continuously in jail since conviction. McHenry v. State, 42 App. 469, 60 S. W. 880.

It is the duty of appellant and his counsel to see that the proper recognizance is entered into and that it is properly entered on the minutes of the court below. Saufly v. State (Cr. App.) 83 S. W. 710.

Motion to dismiss the appeal in a misdemeanor case is well taken: the recognizance not containing the statement, necessary under arts. 613-619, to allow the appellate court to take jurisdiction, of the amount of the punishment inflicted. Morfett v. State, 61 App. 533, 135 S. W. 573.

880
Where, though accused's recognizance was fixed at a certain sum, the record on his appeal does not contain a recognizance, or show affirmatively that accused is in jail, the appeal will be dismissed. Sandifer v. State, 63 App. 361, 139 S. W. 1155.

An instrument in the form of a recognizance, unless taken in open court, is merely a bond, and is unauthorized and of no force to support appeal in a criminal case. Jones v. State, 1 App. 485.

An appeal bond, signed by appellant and two sureties, is not a compliance with the statute, providing that a party appealing to the Court of Criminal Appeals from conviction of a misdemeanor may avoid confinement in jail during the appeal by entering into a recognizance in open court, and the appeal will be dismissed. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 140 S. W. 1165.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a conviction of a misdemeanor, where the appellant does not enter into any recognizance during the term of court, although six days after adjournment he enters into a bond, giving sureties approved by the clerk alone. Saxe v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 1189.

Time for giving recognizance.—See notes under art. 914.

Presentation of bond to sheriff.—An appeal bond, presented to the sheriff, who approved it, is not a compliance with this article and the appeal on motion of the state is dismissed. Terry v. State, 64 App. 497, 147 S. W. 509.

Who may execute.—A recognizance must be entered into by defendant in person, not by his attorney. Chaney v. State, 23 Tex. 23; Ferrill v. State, 29 Tex. 489.

Extrinsic evidence.—Notwithstanding the record fails to show a recognizance, it may be shown by proof de hors the record, that in fact a sufficient recognizance was entered into, and in such case the appeal will be entertained. Craddock v. State, 15 App. 641.

Record on appeal must show entry of recognizance on the final minutes of the court. Affidavit of the judge that recognizance was entered into will not suffice. Maxey v. State, 41 App. 566, 55 S. W. 823.

What constitutes escape.—See notes under art. 912.

Art. 919. [887] Form of recognizance.—In appeal cases of misdemeanor, the following form of recognizance shall be sufficient, and, when complied with, shall confer jurisdiction upon the court of criminal appeals, of such appeals:

"State of Texas,

vs.

A. B.

No. .......

"This day came into open court A. B., defendant in the above entitled cause, who, together with C. D. and E. F., his sureties, acknowledge themselves severally indebted to the state of Texas in the penal sum of .........dollars; conditioned, that the said A. B., who has been convicted in this cause of a misdemeanor, and his punishment assessed at ......., as more fully appears by the judgment of conviction duly entered in this cause, shall appear before this court from day to day, and from term to term of the same, and not depart, without leave of this court, in order to abide the judgment of the court of criminal appeals of the state of Texas in this case."

The amount of such recognizance, shall be fixed by the court in which the judgment was rendered, and the sufficiency of the security thereon shall be tested, and the same proceedings had, in case of forfeiture, as in other cases of recognizance. [Act 22nd Leg., S. S., ch. 16; amended, Act 1907, p. 5.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 797, 1021. See also, notes under arts. 914-916, 918. Cited, Sanders v. State, 76 App. 532, 158 S. W. 291.

A recognizance failing to show in what court conviction was had is fatally defective. Biglow v. State, 36 App. 402, 37 S. W. 330; Bryant v. State (Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 1022; Bird v. State, 61 App. 205, 124 S. W. 687.

The rule governing recognizances entered into for the appearance of the defendant for trial, are also applicable to a recognizance on appeal. Ante, art. 220 et seq.; Bule v. State, 1 App. 95; State v. Stout, 28 Tex. 327; Horton v. State, 30

In this case is given a form of a recognizance in a misdemeanor case appealed to court of criminal appeals. See, also, defective appeal bond from corporation court to county court. Horton v. State, 43 App. 600, 65 S. W. 172.

Failure of a recognizance to appeal to show that appellant has been convicted of any offense is a defect for which the appeal will be dismissed on motion. Haylo v. State, 62 App. 227, 137 S. W. 355; Jones v. State, 8 App. 365; Wells v. State, 8 App. 671; Bradley v. State (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 446; Gunter v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 322; Lockett v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 297; Lockett v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 295.

Defendant was convicted of carrying "on and about" his person a pistol. Recognizance recited carrying "on or about" his person a pistol; held, insufficient. Pollock v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 283; Lowery v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 699; Harris v. State, 58 App. 523, 126 S. W. 880.

A recognizance, given in a misdemeanor prosecution for unlawfully carrying a pistol, was defective, where it merely stated that accused "carried concealed weapon." Palmer v. State, 63 App. 141, 141 S. W. 199; Engman v. State, 61 App. 496, 135 S. W. 565.

A recognizance on appeal is sufficient if it states the statutory definition of the offense, though such recital might not be sufficient in an indictment. Collins v. State, 36 App. 30, 44 S. W. 852.
Recognition on appeal must set out the constituent elements of the particular offense, either as such offense per se or as malicious mischief. Koritz v. State, 37 App. 53, 10 S. W. 757; Kilingsworth v. State, 7 App. 28; Waterman v. State, 8 App. 671.

Recognition for offense under P. C. art. 1349, recited that the defendant stands charged with "receiving and concealing stolen property of the value of ten dollars," etc. It was held to the recognition that it was insufficient because it used the word "stolen" instead of the statutory words "acquired in such manner that the acquisition comes within the meaning of the term 'theft.'" Held, that the word "stolen" was insufficient in the offense, though it would not be in an indictment. Sands v. State, 30 App. 579, 18 S. W. 85.

A recognition on conviction of selling liquor as agent of another must recite the agency. Johnson v. State, 34 App. 106, 29 S. W. 472.

A recognition must recite the offense charged as well as that of which accused was convicted. Sieppard v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 580; Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 697.

A bond reciting a conviction of "violating the Sunday law" is insufficient. Pace v. State (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 700.

A recognition reciting that accused was convicted of "unlawfully carrying a pistol" is insufficient. Blackshear v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 222.

A one standing in bond, reciting in the offense in the alternative and failing to recite that appellant owned taxable property in said school district, is fatally defective. Whitehead v. State, 35 App. 487, 34 S. W. 114.

A recognition on appeal from a conviction for violating the local option law, which did not recite that the defendant was charged with "selling liquor in a prohibited district," is fatally defective. Leach v. State, 35 App. 419, 34 S. W. 121.

A bond reciting a conviction for carrying "brass knuckles" instead of "brass knuckles" is insufficient. Mills v. State, 36 App. 71, 35 S. W. 470.

A recognition reciting that the appellants stand charged with unlawfully selling liquors in a prohibition district states no offense. MeCMeans v. State, 37 App. 130, 38 S. W. 998.

Defendant was indicted for an assault with intent to murder, and convicted of an aggravated assault, the recognition recited that he was indicted and convicted of the aggravated assault; held, insufficient. Morrison v. State, 37 App. 601, 49 S. W. 501.

"For driving cattle across a quarantine line" does not state an offense. Coggin v. State, 35 App. 46, 40 S. W. 984.

Libel is, eo nomine, an offense which is defined by our statute, and a recognition of which recites the offense as "libel," without reciting the constituent elements, is insufficient. Jones v. State, 35 App. 364, 43 S. W. 78, 70 Am. St. Rep. 751.

Appeal will be dismissed if the recognition states the judgment incorrectly. Driegs v. State, 43 App. 466, 66 S. W. 514.

A recognition in a case of selling liquor to a minor must state that the sale was made to the minor "without the written consent of the parent or guardian or some other responsible person." Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 72 S. W. 584.

A recognition that merely recites that appellant stands charged with offense of swindling and has been convicted and fined is insufficient to support an appeal. Cater v. State (Cr. App.) 77 S. W. 13; Holcomb v. State (Cr. App.) 78 S. W. 251; Haw v. State, 47 App. 902, 84 S. W. 592.

The recognition on appeal in a prosecution for violating the local option law should state that accused had been convicted of a misdemeanor, and not that he had been convicted of the offense of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors in a prohibited district; that not being an offense eo nomine. Lindsey v. State, 39 App. 278, 125 S. W. 386.

A recognition on appeal from a conviction, which recites that accused was convicted of carrying a pistol and his punishment assessed at a fine of $100, is insufficient for failing to recite, as required in the form prescribed by law, that he was convicted of a misdemeanor. Roberts v. State, 69 App. 111, 131 S. W. 321.

A recognition on appeal from a conviction of a violation of the pistol law, which recites that accused was convicted "for carrying a pistol," is insufficient for failing to state the offense, since one, to violate the law, must carry a pistol on or about his person, or in some other prohibited manner. Roberts v. State, 69 App. 111, 131 S. W. 321.

Where a recognition on appeal from a judgment convicting defendant of violating the local option law did not recite that defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor, nor show the punishment assessed, it was insufficient to sustain the appeal. Switzer v. State, 61 App. 266, 134 S. W. 705.

A recognition on appeal from a conviction of violating the local option law, which recites that appellant stands charged with unlawfully selling intoxicants in local option territory and has been convicted of such offense, but does not recite, as the statutory form requires, that he was convicted of a misdemeanor, nor the amount of his punishment, is insufficient. Henry v. State, 61 App. 187, 135 S. W. 571.

A recognition on appeal from a conviction for permitting stock to run at large, which recites that accused stands charged with violating the stock law, and that he has been convicted of the offense, is insufficient because it does not recite that accused stands charged and is convicted of a misdemeanor. Black v. State, 62 App. 77, 136 S. W. 478.

A recognition on appeal in a misdemeanor case, which states that appellant was "charged with the offense of horse racing on public road," and was convicted 883 of such offense, does not charge any offense, and the appeal must be dismissed, on motion of the state. Ballard v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 134.

A recognition, stating that appellant has been convicted of the offense of aggravated assault, is insufficient to support an appeal. Hinton v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 617.

A recognition, which merely stated that the offense charged was running a horse race on a public road, did not sufficiently describe the statutory ingredients of the offense. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 917.

A state, which does not state the punishment except that it was not under $100, is not sufficient where the fine fixed by the jury was exactly $100; the statute requiring that the punishment found by the jury must be stated. Wilder v. State (Cr. App.) 132 S. W. 1041.

A recognition reciting that appellant stood charged with the offense of knowingly turning stock on the inclosed lands of another without his consent, but not showing that he had been convicted or the amount of the judgment of conviction as the statute requires, was insufficient. Thornton v. State, 70 App. 45, 128 S. W. 210.

A judgment requiring the appellant to abide the judgment of the Court of Appeals is fatally defective. Ray v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 365; Volney v. State, Id. 658; Schwarzzielke v. State, Id. 365; Manes v. State, 29 Tex. 38; Carroll v. State, 6 App. 106; Blackshear v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 222; Bohannon v. State (Cr. App.) 83 S. W. 565; McAfee v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 570; Starr v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 790; Dun v. State, Id. 287.

An omission of the word “appeal” is fatal. Manes v. State, 29 Tex. 38; Carroll v. State, 6 App. 106.

The recognition must require the defendant “to abide the judgment of the court of appeals.” But it is sufficient if it requires him “to abide the judgment of the appellate court.” Wilson v. State, 7 App. 38; Allen v. State, 1 App. 514.

A recognition conditioned to appear “until his said appeal has been decided by the court of appeals, then to be null and void,” is fatally defective. Taylor v. State, 1 App. 663.

One of the conditions prescribed by the form is that the cognizor “will not depart without leave of his court,” that is, the trial court. Unless the recognition recites that condition it is not in substantial compliance with the prescribed form, and is fatally defective. Howard v. State, 30 App. 680, 18 S. W. 790.

Since the act of 1892, repealing chapter 2 of title 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and creating the court of criminal appeals. It is essential that recognition on appeal to that court shall oblige the cognizor to abide the decision of the “court of criminal appeals.” Recognition to the “court of appeals,” that being no longer in existence, is of no force. Cummings v. State, 31 App. 406, 20 S. W. 706.

With the adoption of the amendments to the judiciary article of the constitution, “the court of appeals” passed out of existence, and was substituted, as to its criminal jurisdiction, by the “court of criminal appeals.” By section 32 of the act creating the court of criminal appeals, “prescribing the form for recognizances on appeals in misdemeanor cases, the form prescribed requires that the cognizor shall obligate himself to abide the judgment of the “court of criminal appeals;” and section 33 of said act expressly inhibits the court of criminal appeals from entertaining jurisdiction of any case unless the recognition shall comply substantially with the prescribed form. Held, that a recognition binding the appellee to “abide the judgment of the court of appeals” is fatally defective. Neubauer v. State, 31 App. 515, 21 S. W. 363.

A recognition to “abide the judgment of the court of criminal appeals” is sufficient though it omits “of the State of Texas.” Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 97.

A recognition failing to recite that defendant is bound to appear before the court in which he was tried and convicted is insufficient. Henry v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 600.

The recognition is not sufficient if it says that the principal is bound in the sum of $300, and each surety is bound in the sum of $300; or each is severally bound in the sum of $200. Haley v. State, 45 App. 102, 74 S. W. 39.

A recognition that binds defendant to appear at “next regular term, and there remain from day to day, and from term to term of said court,” is fatally defective. Proctor v. State (Cr. App.) 76 S. W. 470.

A recognition requiring the defendant to appear before the court from time to time is fatally defective. Samaniego v. State (Cr. App.) 80 S. W. 996.

Time for filing.—See notes under art. 914.
Liability on bond.—In all cases less than felony, when the case is affirmed on appeal, or on defendant’s recognizance are liable for the costs in the appellate court for which the clerk may issue execution. Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 41 S. W. 167, 1991; Tafolla v. State, 72 App. 189, 161 S. W. 1991, 166 S. W. 545.

Where a recognition is fatally defective and the appeal is dismissed on that account, it is insufficient to support a judgment against the sureties for the forfeiture thereof. Hannon v. State, 48 App. 199, 87 S. W. 152.

Art. 920. [888] Appeal shall not be entertained without sufficient recognition.—The court of criminal appeals shall not entertain jurisdiction of any case in which a recognition is required by law, unless such recognition shall comply substantially with the form presented in the preceding article.

See “Appendix,” sec. 35, 31 App. 618. See also, notes under art. 919.

Substantial compliance necessary.—An appeal from a conviction will be dismissed, where the recognizance is insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court. Bacon v. State, 72 App. 296, 162 S. W. 517; Angel v. State (Cr. App.) 80 S. W. 353; Ehler v. State (Cr. App.) 82 S. W. 40; Parvin v. State, 62 App. 126, 126 S. W. 455; Rapard v. State, 71 App. 25, 153 S. W. 295; Towery v. State, 72 App. 297, 162 S. W. 498; Humphries v. State (Cr. App.) 162 S. W. 517; Oswald v. State, 73 App. 144, 164 S. W. 831; Knowlton v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 674.

The preceding article prescribes a form for a recognition on appeal in a misdemeanor case; and to fail to conform to it is an inexorable direction of official duty. Mathena v. State, 15 App. 460. To be valid, the recognizance must comply substantially with the form so presented. But a substantial compliance with the form is all that is required. Freeman v. State, 36 Tex. 554; Taylor v. State, 1 App. 663; Bule v. State, 16 S. 58.

Where appellant was indicted for murder and convicted of aggravated assault, and the recognizance did not comply with the law relating either to a felony or a misdemeanor conviction, an appeal therefrom will be dismissed. Foster v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 553.

Necessity of recognition.—See arts. 902 and 918, and notes.

Requisites of recognition.—See arts. 903 and 919 and notes.

Time for entering into recognition.—See art. 914, and notes.

Art. 920a. Appeals to what courts; trial de novo; appeals how governed.—Appeals from judgments rendered by such corporation courts shall be heard by the county court, except in cases where the county courts have no jurisdiction, in which counties such appeals shall be heard by the district court of such counties, unless in such county there is a criminal district court, in which case the appeal shall be from the corporation courts to the said criminal district court; and, in all such appeals to such county court, district court, or criminal district court, the trial shall be de novo, the same as if the prosecution had been originally commenced in that court. Said appeals shall be governed by the rules of practice and procedure for appeals from justices’ courts to the county court, as far as the same may be applicable. [Act 1899, p. 43, sec. 16.]

See art. 1069, and explanatory note thereunder.

Appeal bond.—See art. 2667, Vernon’s Sowers’ Civ. St. 1914.

An appeal bond that shows the parties, the title of the date of the judgment, and the amount of fine but lacks the file number of the case sufficiently identifies the case appealed from. Thielen v. State, 43 App. 310, 65 S. W. 533.

Art. 921. [889] Appeals from justices’ and other inferior courts.—In appeals from the judgments of justices of the peace and other inferior courts to the county court, the defendant shall, if he be in custody, be committed to jail, unless he give bond with good and sufficient security, to be approved by the court from whose judgment the appeal is taken, in an amount not less than double the amount of fine and costs adjudged against him, payable to the state of Texas; provided, said bond shall not in any case be for a less sum than fifty dollars; said bond shall describe the judgment appealed from with sufficient certainty to identify it, shall recite that in said cause the defendant was convicted on complaint, or information, charging him with a misdemeanor, and has appealed to the county court, and shall be conditioned that the defendant shall well and truly make his personal appearance before the county court of said county, at its next regular term, stating the time and place of holding the same, and there remain from day to day, and term to term, and answer in said cause on trial in said court. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 167, §§ 37, 38; amended, Act 1901, p. 291.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1022, 1023, 1043. See, also, Robinson v. State, 34 App. 131, 29 S. W. 788; Richardson v. State, 3 App. 69; Ward v. State, 33 App. 545, 45 S. W. 985.

Necessity and requisites of bond.—The right of appeal in the cases mentioned in the preceding article is not available to a defendant, unless he files with the court in which the judgment was rendered a valid statutory appeal bond, such as is enforceable against him and his securities. A bond which contains a condition not required by law is not a valid bond, and will not sustain an appeal. Watson v. State, 29 App. 382; Turner v. State, 14 App. 168. It is not required that an appeal bond contain the offense of which the defendant has been convicted. Miller v. State, 21 App. 275, 17 S. W. 429. It is not essential to the validity of an appeal bond that the signature of the defendant should appear at the end of it. If he writes his name in any part of it, for the purpose of giving authenticity to it, the signature is sufficient. Taylor v. State, 36 App. 611; Richardson v. State, 2 App. 69.

See this case for bond that a defendant must give when he appeals from judgment of conviction in justice court to county court. Bunton v. State, 52 App. 618, 108 S. W. 372.

A new appeal bond may be filed in the district or county court in a case appealed from a justice or mayor's court and the form prescribed in the Bunton case, supra, may be used. Moore v. State, 49 App. 43, 99 S. W. 499.

A condition of bond that defendant shall pay all fines and costs in the county court and all costs in the recorder's court, held, more onerous than the statute requires. Cavanaugh v. City of Fort Worth, 26 App. 85, 9 S. W. 273.

Bond conditioned that defendant shall "prosecute her appeal with effect, and shall pay such fine and costs as shall be adjudged against her by the county court, as well as other costs that may be adjudged against her in the court below," held, sufficient. Elkins v. State, 26 App. 250, 9 S. W. 491.

It is not necessary to state the offense of which the principal was convicted. Robinson v. State, 34 App. 131, 29 S. W. 788.

In prosecution for violation of a city ordinance the bond must run to the city and not the state. Buchanan v. City of Whitesboro, 37 App. 121, 28 S. W. 1683, and see Ex parte Dolan, 11 App. 156, and Dautsch v. City of Galveston, 27 App. 418, 11 S. W. 414, for discussion on this subject.

That defendant had no lawyer, and relied on the justice and constable to perfect his appeal is no excuse for failure to file the bond in the justice court. Ward v. State, 33 App. 545, 45 S. W. 985.

If the appeal bond conforms substantially to the requirements of this article, it is sufficient, although it may not comply literally therewith. Cychawalch v. State, 23 App. 446, 5 S. W. 119. An appeal bond which correctly describes the judgment appealed from the number of the case tried, and the amount of the judgment, although it omits the date of the rendition of the judgment, is sufficiently certain to support an appeal. Eichman v. State, 22 App. 137, 2 S. W. 588.

This article, prior to its amendment, provided for appeal bonds from justice courts, which was the same as was provided for appeals in corporation courts, and did not provide any particular form for such appeal bonds. An appeal bond was not fatally defective which lacked the file number of the case. Thielin v. State, 48 App. 319, 65 S. W. 520, 524.

In appeal from corporation court bond must state that defendant has been convicted of a misdemeanor, and must state the court and amount of fine. Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 272.

By the amendment of this article by the Legislature of 1901, the conditions of an appeal bond in justice and corporation courts have been changed, and the bond must be in the terms of the law as amended. Martin v. State, 44 App. 197, 69 S. W. 509.

In case of appeal from the justice to the county court, if the bond does not state the time of holding next term of county court the appeal will be dismissed. Smith v. State, 45 App. 567, 78 S. W. 357.

If the bond in an appeal case from justice to county court must recite that appellant was convicted on an information or complaint. Day v. State, 47 App. 113, 80 S. W. 374.

A bond which gives the style of the cause number and the court and recites that there was a judgment rendered against the defendantconvicting him of unlawfully carrying on and about his person a pistol, a misdemeanor, etc., and that he had given notice of appeal to the county court of B. County is good. McCarty v. State, 50 App. 25, 94 S. W. 399.

An appeal bond which omits the condition that the appellant will prosecute his appeal with effect, etc., is fatally defective. Bunton v. State, 52 App. 618, 108 S. W. 373.

A bond on appeal from the justice court conditioned upon the defendant making "hearing before the county court" is in substantial conformity with the statutory requirement that it be conditioned to "make her personal appearance." Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1161.

The county court acquires no jurisdiction on appeal in a criminal case from a corporation court where the bond obligates the sureties to pay $50, as the statute requires that the bond shall in no case be less than $50. Nydina v. State, 45 App. 422, 76 S. W. 761.

An objection that a bond given on appeal from a conviction in a justice court was invalid because it was not in amount double the fine and costs, which objection was not supported by proof in the record, and was first made in the amended motion for a new trial, will not be considered on appeal from the forfeiture of the bond. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1164.

Approval of bond.—Date of bond as affected by time of approval, see Holt v. State, 20 App. 271; Fehlhorn v. State, 21 App. 484, 2 S. W. 509; Williamson v. State, 32 App. 213, 22 S. W. 686.

An appeal bond must be approved by the court from whose judgment the appeal is prosecuted, in an amount equal at least to double the amount of the fine and costs adjudged against the appellant. The appellate court cannot approve an appeal bond. Miller v. State, 21 App. 275, 17 S. W. 429. The requirement that the justice of the peace shall approve an appeal bond is directory, and the bond is not a nullity because he neglects to indorse his approval upon it. His approval may be indorsed on the bond to the appellate court. Taylor v. State, 16 App. 514; Dyches v. State, 24 Tex. 266; Doughty v. State, 23 Tex. 1; Cundiff v. State, 28 Tex. 641.

Forfeiture.—A bond may be forfeited if the defendant fails to appear, even though her attorney did appear and announce ready for trial. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1164.

Art. 922. When appeal bond provided for in preceding article is filed, appeal is perfected.—In appeals from the judgment of justices of the peace and other inferior courts, when the appeal bond provided for in article 921 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the state of Texas, has been filed with the justice or court trying the same, the appeal in such case shall be held to be thereby perfected; and no appeal shall be dismissed on account of the failure of the defendant to give notice of appeal in open court, nor on account of any defect in the transcript. [Act 1899, p. 233.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1022, 1023, 1043.

Application of article.—This act regulating appeals and authorizing same to be prosecuted without giving notice, does not apply to appeals from county courts. Dennis v. State (Cr. App.) 99 S. W. 1017.

Necessity of notice of appeal.—See art. 915, and notes.

Recital in appeal bond as to giving notice is not a compliance with the statute. Ball v. State, 31 App. 214, 29 S. W. 362.

Before the passage of the above act it was held absolutely necessary for defendant to give notice of appeal. McGill v. State, 35 App. 108, 35 S. W. 656; Truss v. State, 35 App. 291, 43 S. W. 95; McDougall v. State, 23 App. 174, 22 S. W. 553.

Effect of appeal.—Where, after conviction before a justice of the peace, relator appealed to the county court, which, after continuing the case, forfeited relator's appeal bond, and subsequently, on motion of the county attorney, the case was dismissed from the docket, the jurisdiction of the justice having been terminated by the appeal, he had no authority, the case not having been sent back with a writ of procedendo, to enter the writ of execution or capias pro fine on the judgment of conviction. Ex parte Hoard, 63 App. 619, 140 S. W. 449.

Art. 923. When appeal bond or recognizance is defective, appellate court may allow appellant to file new bond.—When an appeal has been or shall be taken from the judgment of any of the courts of this state, by filing a bond or entering into a recognizance within the time prescribed by law in such cases, and it shall be determined by the court to which appeal is taken that such bond or recognizance is defective in form or substance, such appellate court may allow the appellant to amend such bond or recognizance by filing a new bond, on such terms as the court may prescribe. [Act 1905, p. 224.]

Limitation of defense in general.—Though the recognizance must state that appellant was convicted of a misdemeanor, and the amount of punishment assessed against him, a new recognizance can be filed curing the defects, and the case decided on

An appeal from a criminal prosecution will be dismissed where no sufficient recognition or appeal bond is filed. Pope v. State (Cr. App.) 133 S. W. 611; Walker v. State (Cr. App.) 129 S. W. 569; Knowlton v. State (Cr. App.) 108 S. W. 674.

On if pending a motion to dismiss appeal on account of an insufficient recognition a sufficient recognition is filed, the motion will be overruled. Collins v. State, 33 App. 95, 29 S. W. 274.

If a new defect in a recognition is shown to be a mistake of the clerk, and it is shown that the original recognition is in due form the cause will not be dismissed, or if dismissed will be reinstated. Cannady v. State, 57 App. 123, 33 S. W. 610, 614.

Right to file new recognizance.—When a sufficient recognizance has been given it is not error to refuse to allow a new recognizance. Thompson v. State, 55 App. 352, 33 S. W. 871.

Where a recognizance was fatally defective, and a motion to dismiss had been made and sustained for that reason, a review could not be had by tendering a sufficient bond in the Court of Criminal Appeals; the proper practice being to enter into a new sufficient recognizance before the court or judge who tried the case. Howell v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 302.

Curing failure to enter recognizance.—An appellant who did not enter into a recognizance during term time is not entitled to file a new or amended recognizance. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 1162.

Art. 924. [890] Appeal bond shall be given within what time.

—If the defendant is not in custody, a notice of appeal shall have no effect whatever until the required appeal bond has been given and approved; and such appeal bond shall, in all cases, be given within ten days after the judgment of the court refusing a new trial has been rendered, and not afterward.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 192.

See Miller v. State, 21 App. 275, 37 S. W. 429.

Execution of bond.—An appeal bond can be signed in the body instead of at the end, but this practice is not commended. McIvor v. State, 41 App. 257, 55 S. W. 636.

Requisites of bond.—An appeal bond must be in the terms of and not variant from the judgment rendered. An appeal bond from a corporation court must be made payable to the city in which the court is. Sparr v. State, 42 App. 416, 50 S. W. 915.

An appeal bond from justice to county court is defective if it fails to state place of holding the county court. Russell v. State (Cr. App.) 81 S. W. 589.

If the bond is in substantial compliance with the statute it is sufficient without following the statute literally. Holland v. State, 48 App. 203, 88 S. W. 261.

Defective bond and cure thereof.—Where defendant was convicted in justice court and a defective appeal bond to county court was given and the defendant allowed to go free, he could not afterwards within the 10 days again subject himself to jurisdiction of justice court and give another and sufficient bond, so as to perfect his appeal. An imperfect appeal bond from justice to county court cannot be amended. There are two ways by which county court can acquire jurisdiction. One is where defendant remains in custody of sheriff and the record so shows. The other is where he gives a good appeal bond. Guenzel v. State, 47 App. 111, 80 S. W. 371.

Necessity of motion for new trial in justice's court.—It is not necessary to file motion for new trial in justice's court, in order to appeal. Ivey v. State, 48 App. 264, 87 S. W. 343.

Art. 925. [891] Trial in county court shall be de novo.—In all appeals to justices' and other inferior courts to the county court, the trial shall be de novo in the county court, the same as if the prosecution had been originally commenced in that court. [Const., art. 5, § 16.]

See Kirksey v. State, 58 App. 188, 125 S. W. 15.

Effect of judgment of lower court.—On appeal from a conviction in the corporation court, accused is entitled to a trial de novo in the county court, and hence the judgment rendered against him in the corporation court is inadmissible. Marmon v. State (Cr. App.) 106 S. W. 1169.

Jurisdiction of court of criminal appeals as affected by trial de novo.—See arts. 86 and 87, ante, and notes. 888
Art. 926. [892] Original papers, etc., shall be sent up.—In appeals from justices' and other inferior courts, all the original papers in the case, together with the appeal bond, if any, and together with a certified transcript of all the proceedings had in the case before such court, including a bill of the costs, shall, without delay, be delivered to the clerk of the county court of the county in which the conviction was had, who shall file the same and docket the case immediately.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1026.

See Ex parte Ambrose, 32 App. 466, 24 S. W. 291; Smith v. State, 31 App. 315, 20 S. W. 297.

Ordinance.—If the conviction was for perjury in a municipal court on a prosecution for violation of an ordinance, the record on appeal must contain the ordinance, the charge upon which the trial was had, together with an affirmative showing of jurisdiction in the municipal court. Lawrence v. State, 2 App. 479.

Inclusion in transcript.—See art. 926, and note.

Art. 927. [893] Witnesses need not be again summoned, etc.—In the cases mentioned in the preceding article, the witnesses who have already been summoned or attached to appear in the case before the court below, shall appear before the county court without further process; and, in case of their failure to do so, the same proceedings may be had as if they had been originally summoned or attached to appear before the county court.

Art. 928. [894] Rules governing the taking, etc., of appeal bonds.—The rules governing the taking and forfeiture of bail bonds shall govern appeal bonds, and the forfeiture and collection of such appeal bonds shall be in the county court to which such appeal is taken.

When forfeiture may be decreed.—Where a defendant appeals to the county court from a judgment of an inferior court, imposing a fine merely, he may appear either in person or by attorney on the trial de novo, and a forfeiture of his appeal bond cannot be taken when he appears by attorney only, until he has failed to discharge the fine and costs which may have been adjudged against him in the county court. Page v. State, 9 App. 466. But see McNutt v. State, 23 App. 363, 26 S. W. 506, as to effect of failure to appear either in person or by attorney, and holding that it is improper in such case to dismiss for want of prosecution.

Art. 929. [895] Clerk shall prepare transcript in all cases appealed.—It is the duty of the clerk of a court from which an appeal is taken to prepare, as soon as practicable, a transcript in every case in which an appeal has been taken; which transcript shall contain all the proceedings had in the case, and shall conform to the rules governing transcripts in civil cases. [O. C. 729.]

When a case is tried by a special judge, the manner of the selection or appointment of such judge, together with the reasons therefor, and the fact that the oath of office was administered to him, must appear in the transcript. Ante, art. 629. If the record fails to show that the special judge took the oath of office, the judgment will be reversed. Weatherford v. State (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 814.
On appeal, the record must show that the jury was a legal one, but a general record to that effect will be sufficient without naming any one of the jurors, but if the record undertakes to name the members of the jury, and names more or less than the legal number, it will be fatal to the conviction. Marks v. State, 16 App.

The record should clearly show by whom the prosecution was conducted, and should explain and make clear the doubt as to the exact nature of the procedings, where the information was signed by a private prosecutor and the state ap-

6. Statement of facts and proceedings relating thereto.—See art. 844, and notes.
7. Showing as to filing of papers.—The file mark of each paper, together with the clerk's signature thereto, should be shown. Krebs v. State, 3 App. 348; Brown
v. State, Id. 294; Harrison v. State, Id. 558; Clampitt v. State, 3 App. 633; Thompson v. State, 4 App. 44; Dishoungh v. State, Id. 158; Doyle v. State, Id. 253; Hill v.
State, Id. 559; Krautz v. State, Id. 534; Hunt v. State, Id. 53; Richarte v. State, A motion for a new trial cannot be considered as a part of the record, unless it is filed. Harvey v. State, 57 App. 7, 121 S. W. 605.
In preparing the transcript of the record of a criminal case, it is the duty of the clerk to include the complaint as part of the record, though it has no file mark thereon, where accused in no way objected to the consideration of the complaint or information in the court below. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 945.
In preparing transcripts clerks should be careful to not insert any foreign or superfluous matter. Ex parte writings, attached to the transcript as addenda or explanatory notes, are no part of the record, and will be stricken out. Wheeler v.

Clerks should be careful to prepare transcripts in conformity to the statute and the rules of court. The ends of justice are frequently delayed and sometimes actually frustrated by their incurable neglect of this duty. Mitchell v. State, 1 App.
253; Lockwood v. State, id. 749.

In making out a transcript it is the duty of the clerk to copy the matter transscribed verbatim et literatim. He is not authorized to interpolate or omit sentences or words, but must follow the originals strictly. Crockett v. State, 14 App.
229.

A transcript and statement of fact on appeal in a criminal case should be prebared by writing one side of the paper only, and without frequent interlineations and erasures, and transcripts showing such defects will not hereafter be con­ considered. Waters v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 796.

10. Time for preparation and filing.—See notes under art. 931, post.

11. Certification or other authentication of transcript.—A separate certificate of the clerk to each proceeding contained in the transcript is unnecessary and im­

The court on appeal may only look to the authenticated record in considering the case on appeal, or any question raised or presented therein, and it may not look to the oral assertions of accused or his attorney in oral argument. Kearse v.
State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 827.

A paper not certified or verified as part of the transcript in the criminal case cannot be considered on appeal. Cheeseborough v. State, 79 App. 615, 157 S. W. 761.

12. Correction or alteration of record.—Certiorari, or consent of parties litigant, are the only modes by which omissions in transcripts can be supplied. Exxon v.
State, 33 App. 461, 26 S. W. 1088; Chiles v. State, 1 App. 27.

Where transcript has been altered without authority after it has left clerk's hands the appeal will be dismissed. Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 497.

See also, Garner v. State, 36 Tex. 635.

Motion for certiorari to bring up an interlocutory judgment and a recognizance is insufficient where such motion fails to show that the judgment was in fact rendered or the recognizance entered into. Johnson v. State, 26 Tex. 117.

Certiorari will be granted to perfect a transcript defective through carelessness or transcript can only be perfected by certiorari or by agreement of the parties.
Chiles v. State, 1 App. 25. The certiorari is directed to the clerk and not the court below, and he must embody in his return, not omissions, but the proceedings. Hill v. State, 4 App. 559. Where the clerk failed to authenticate a transcript, he was ordered to make out and send up a complete transcript properly authenticated.
Corrao v. App. 1. The record entry of the impaneling of the grand jury which returned the indictment is no part of a transcript, and a certiorari to supply such record will not be awarded. Fuller v. State, 39 App. 339.

Instructions requested on a former trial cannot be brought up by certiorari where the request was not renewed at the later trial. Bracken v. State, 29 App.
362, 16 S. W. 192.

The defect must be one that is capable of being cured. Where notice of appeal was not entered as required by statute certiorari is unavailing. Dell v. State, 31
App. 214, 20 S. W. 363.

As remedy in case of improper refusal of judge and adverse attorneys to settle

The object of certiorari is to perfect a record, not to obtain a rehearing, or recall a mandate for purpose of reinstating the case. Longoria v. State, 40 App.
494, 48 S. W. 514.
In certiorari to perfect record on appeal, application must point out defect to be corrected, and if an order or pleading is to be corrected copy of same must be attached to the application. Nunn v. State, 46 App. 426, 50 S. W. 713.

Where the transcript is so badly written that it is unintelligible certiorari will issue to compel clerk to send up perfect transcript. Seavey v. State, 46 App. 462, 50 S. W. 1139, 52 S. W. 234.

Where, on certiorari, the corrected record showed all the facts essential to confer jurisdiction on appeal, an order of dismissal previously entered will be set aside, and the cause reinstated. Clay v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 430.

Where the transcript on appeal from a judgment forfeiting a bail bond did not contain a copy of the order transferring the proceeding to the court which forfeited the bond, that error may be supplied by certiorari. General Bonding & Casualty Ins. Co. v. State, 73 App. 618, 155 S. W. 615.

Vernon's Civ. St. 1911, art. 1668 (same article in Vernon's Snavely's Civ. St. 1914), authorizing the transcript to be filed after the 90 days allowed on good cause shown where plaintiffs in error from a judgment on a forfeited bail recognizance file their petition December 5, 1915, and resist on October 31st a certificate of service and postpone a motion for rehearing because prematurely brought, the record showing delaying tactics, plaintiffs in error's motion in the rehearing for certiorari to bring up the transcript and time for filing briefs, etc., will be denied; the State having brought up the record of the cause. Cruz v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 225.

Where defendant moved for certiorari to perfect the record so as to include his motion for a new trial, and accompanied his motion with a certified copy of the motion, the court would consider it a part of the record, and pass thereon without having it brought up by certiorari. Bruce v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 201.

14. Contempt of court.—Since all transcripts in civil cases must be filed within 90 days after the date of perfecting the appeal, it is the duty of the clerk to prepare transcripts in criminal cases in which appeal has been taken within not to exceed 90 days from the date of perfecting the appeal, which duty will be enforced by contempt proceedings. Northcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1904.

Where the clerk of a court from which an appeal in a criminal case has been taken is prevented, by the negligence or willful misconduct of accused's attorney in withdrawing or withholding necessary records, from preparing and transmitting the record to the Court of Criminal Appeals within 90 days after taking of the appeal, the attorney will be held guilty of contempt of the Court of Criminal Appeals, and punished accordingly. Northcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1904.

15. Imposition of costs.—A clerk of the county court who filed apparently contradictory affidavits in a case as to the papers filed for record with him which papers were lost after delivery for filing with him will be held to have forfeited the costs of issuing citation and service on him for the purpose of bringing up the papers. Parrish v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 345.

An attorney for appellant who was the cause of an incorrect transcript being certified to the Court of Civil Appeals and negligently permitted the papers in the case to be lost will be taxed with all the costs of the proceeding in an attempt to procure a correct transcript, except that part taxed against the clerk of the district court, who was also negligent in the matter. Parrish v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 345.

Motion for directions as to the preparation of directions and forms of transcripts on appeal, see Rules 112, 133 and 114 for the court of criminal appeals, 142 S. W. xcv; District Court rules, 72a and 76.

17. Review dependent on scope of record.—See arts. 744 and 844, ante, and notes.

A defendant seeking to reverse a judgment must bring up the case so as to present the particular points decided of which he complains, and it must appear that the error complained of was in a matter material to the issue. If the record is silent as to the grounds of complaint, and no error is apparent of record, the judgment will not be disturbed. Drummond v. State, 2 Tex. 156; Chandler v. State, Id. 365; Bailey v. State, Id. 202; McKissick v. State, 2 Tex. 356; Gorman v. State, 22 Tex. 592; Meredith v. State, 40 Tex. 490; Escareno v. State, 18 App. 88. It must appear from the record that the conviction is wrong or unjust, or it will not be set aside. Thompson v. State, 1 App. 56. By the record alone is a cause determinable on appeal. Brown v. State, 11 App. 451; Rainey v. State, 29 App. 473.

A conviction cannot be reversed because of claimed error in the refusal to give special charges, where the charges refused are not contained in the record. Ellis v. State, 58 App. 289, 125 S. W. 575.

In a prosecution for theft of a pay check, an objection that the check was not the subject of theft because it was not properly indorsed, and contained a provision that without such indorsement it was invalid, cannot be considered on appeal where the check does not appear in the record. Fulshear v. State, 59 App. 376, 123 S. W. 134.

Where a reversal was sought because of a variance in the name of the person killed as charged in the indictment and the name as proved, the Court of Criminal Appeals could not consider evidence taken at the examining trial in support of such objection, in lieu of the evidence introduced at the trial, which was not in the record. Johnson v. State, 60 App. 305, 131 S. W. 1085.

Any error in refusing a charge that the jury disregard statements in arguments by the county attorney cannot be reviewed, where there is nothing in the record to show that such statements were made except the statement to that effect in the charge refused. Dulin v. State, 60 App. 376, 131 S. W. 1102.

Where the original indictment does not accompany the transcript, and the copy does not disclose any irregularity, an objection that the indictment was mutilated cannot be considered. Skinner v. State, 64 App. 84, 141 S. W. 590.

Where the record does not show that a charge was given, the appellate court cannot consider grounds in a motion for a new trial complaining of the charge. Doyle v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 630.

Objections in the motion for a new trial to a charge not in the record cannot be considered on appeal. Knight v. State, 64 App. 541, 144 S. W. 967.

An objection that the court erred in compelling the defendant to go to trial without sufficient time to prepare his defense was not considered. The record contained no motion for continuance or postponement, or any fact authorizing the matter to be reviewed. Garza v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 590.

Affidavits, certificates, and letters filed in the reviewing court, but not containing any matter relating to any matter occurring on the trial, cannot be considered on appeal, though they relate to matters of seeming importance occurring subsequent to the trial. Garza v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 590.

Misconduct of a juror in stating a matter of his own knowledge to his fellow juror, or misconduct of the new trial, but which was contested by the state, is not reviewable on appeal from a conviction, where the evidence as to the fact of the juror's statement is not in the record. O'Marrow v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 252.

Where requested charges are not copied in the transcript, the refusal thereof cannot be reviewed on appeal. Cruz v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 564.

Refusal to charge on self-defense in a prosecution for aggravated assault could not be reviewed, in the absence of the evidence. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 1163.

A ground of a motion for a new trial that the court erred in refusing to submit special instructions cannot be considered in the absence of the evidence. Wilder v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1041.

In the absence of the evidence in the record, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider error in failing to charge on the law of simple assault in a prosecution for aggravated assault. Reeves v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 127.

In the absence of the evidence in the record, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider alleged statements of the prosecuting attorney outside of the record. Reeves v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 127.

Where no bill of exceptions is reserved verifying the fact that a juror sat on a former trial of the case, and the record contains no evidence showing such fact, error in overruling the motion for new trial on that ground cannot be reviewed. Reeves v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 127.

When the evidence for a motion for a new trial, based on misconduct of jurors, was not in the record, a denial of such motion could not be reviewed. Brewer v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 622.

Where a knife, said to have been in the possession of the deceased at the time he was killed, is not described by the witness or sent to the appellate court as an exhibit, the court cannot say there was error in refusing to charge on presumption arising from the use of a deadly weapon by the deceased. Reagan v. State, 70 App. 498, 157 S. W. 483.

Alleged errors assigned in motion for a new trial concerning the admission of testimony and the insufficiency thereof to sustain a conviction cannot be reviewed, where the evidence is not in the record. Fitzgerald v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 529.

Refusal of requested charges will not be reviewed where the record does not show when they were requested, and where no bill of exceptions to the refusal is in the record. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1042.

Whether new trial because of misconduct of the jury is not in the record, denial of the motion is not reviewable. Johnson v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1047.

18. Presumptions in aid of record.—See notes under arts. 634, 743, 938. In absence of bill of exceptions or statement of facts, see arts. 744 and 844, and notes.

Where there is no entry in the trial court disposing of a motion for a new trial, it will be presumed on appeal that the motion was abandoned and not acted upon. Laird v. State, 15 Tex. 317.

Regularity of previous proceedings is presumed when not shown by the transcript. Nash v. State, 2 App. 302; Williams v. State, 29 App. 89, 14 S. W. 388, overruling on the point, Steagald's Case, 22 App. 464, 3 S. W. 771.

In the absence of showing in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed that the trial court, in denying a new trial on the ground of a juror's misconduct charged in ex parte affidavits, properly found against the charge. Speer v. State, 57 App. 297, 123 S. W. 415.

The appellate court in reviewing the denial of a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses cannot presume that diligence was exercised, where the record fails to show process for such witnesses. Brown v. State, 62 App. 592, 135 S. W. 604.

It must be presumed on appeal that the evidence justified the overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury, where the evidence taken on the motion is not in the appellate record. Momy v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 592.

In the absence of a showing in the appellate record to the contrary, it must be presumed that the trial court properly admitted an alleged confession in evidence. Ward v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 931.
The judgment stating that, in hearing defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of prejudice of a juror, it heard the evidence therein, it must be presumed that the evidence, not shown by the judgment or record, did not sustain defendant's contention. Potent v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 563.

Where the record does not show that the court did not submit its charge to the attention of both sides after evidence was concluded and before the argument began, as required by law, the court on appeal will presume that the law was complied with. Lopez v. State, 78 App. 624, 106 S. W. 354.

19. Consideration of matters not shown by record.—Court cannot look in record of companion case to ascertain applicability of charge. Thurman v. State, 37 App. 646, 49 S. W. 755.

In a prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, an instrument alleging that the law making such an act a felony in local option territory went into evidence the people of the county had adopted local option, supported by a certified copy of the order of the commissioners' court declaring the result of such election filed in the Court of Appeals by appellant with a motion to dismiss, cannot be considered. Nelson v. State, 61 App. 55, 134 S. W. 218.

The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider ex parte affidavits filed with appellant's brief in which new issues are sought to be made. Sellers v. State, 61 App. 146, 134 S. W. 348.

The court on appeal cannot consider the testimony in another case of one there-in-charged as principal in the same offense, since the court, to do so would be considering evidence which the law prohibits in the trial court. Wisnoski v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 316.

Ex parte affidavits, containing evidence tending to support the defendant's testimony at the trial, but not contained in the record on appeal, cannot be considered, since that would be to reopen the case and convert the Court of Criminal Appeals into a trial court on the merits of the case, and to substitute its finding on the facts, as thus presented, for the verdict. Pyle v. State, 71 App. 94, 154 S. W. 222.

Art. 930. [896] Transcript in felony case to be prepared first.—The clerk shall prepare transcripts in felony cases that have been appealed in preference to cases of misdemeanor, and shall prepare transcripts in all criminal cases appealed in preference to civil cases. [O. C. 729.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1024.

Validity of rules.—Supreme Court rule 116 (142 S. W. xxv), adopted under Const. art. 5, § 25, empowering it to make rules of procedure not inconsistent with law, and of the record in a misdemeanor case must be delivered to the party appealing and his counsel, and, if not applied for before the twenty-fifth day before the commencement of the term of the Court of Criminal Appeals to which the appeal is returnable, the clerk shall transmit it to the clerk of that court, was invalid, because inconsistent with this article and art. 931. McElroy v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 1144.

Power of courts to extend time for filing bills of exceptions.—In view of art. 845, and this article courts are powerless to authorize filing of bills after expiration of the 90-day period. Crowell v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 570.

Time for transmission of transcripts.—Since all transcripts in civil cases must be filed within 90 days after the date of perfecting the appeal, it is the duty of the clerk to prepare and transmit transcripts in criminal cases in which appeals have been taken not to exceed 90 days from the date of perfecting the appeal, which duty will be enforced by contempt proceedings. Northcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1004.

Art. 931. [897] Transcript, how forwarded.—As soon as a transcript is prepared, the clerk shall forward the same by mail or other safe conveyance, charges paid, inclosed in an envelope, securely sealed, directed to the clerk of the court of criminal appeals. [Acts 22d Leg., ch. 16, § 34.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1024.

See Rust v. State, 14 App. 19. See, also, Rules 117, 118, for District Courts (142 S. W. p. xxv.)

See, also, Cummings v. State, 31 App. 406, 29 S. W. 706.

Delivery to defendant or his counsel.—In felony cases transcripts must be forwarded by mail, and may not be delivered to the defendant or his counsel. Lockwood v. State, 1 App. 749.

A transcript which shows to have been delivered to appellant's attorneys and sent by them to the clerk of the Court of Appeals will be stricken out and a new transcript ordered. Pilot v. State, 35 App. 515, 43 S. W. 112, 1024.

The clerk and not the attorneys must forward the transcript by mail to court of criminal appeals, as well in misdemeanor as in felony cases. The rules of the Supreme Court governing court of criminal appeals as to transcripts cannot over-ride the statutory law on same subject. Dyer v. State, 44 App. 78, 68 S. W. 566.

Transmission by mail.—Transcript in felony cases must be sent to appellate court by the clerk through the mail. Pilot v. State, 35 App. 517, 43 S. W. 112, 1024.

Time for preparation and filing.—Transcript on appeal from judgment on forfeited bail bond must be filed within ninety days. Hollenbeck v. State, 40 App. 584, 61 S. W. 372. [804]
Title 10

APPEAL AND WRIT OF ERROR
Art. 934

The record should be promptly transmitted by the clerk to the Court of Criminal Appeals, whenever possible. Terry v. State, 60 App. 974, 156 S. W. 1155.

Unless the transcript is filed within the time required by law on a criminal appeal, the appellate court cannot consider the appeal. Sandifer v. State, 63 App. 561, 159 S. W. 1155.

Under C. C. P. arts. 961, 962, which authorizes review of judgments on bail bonds on writs of error as in civil suits, and under the rule of the Supreme Court for the government of the Courts of Civil Appeals, which prohibits consideration of a case where the transcript is not filed within 90 days from the filing of the petition for writ of error, and no showing is made why the same was not forwarded within that time, a writ of error to review a judgment forfeiting a bail bond will be dismissed, where the transcript was not filed within that time. Ayers v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 171.

Appeals from a final judgment on a forfeited bail bond are regulated by the law governing appeals in civil cases, and where a final judgment on a forfeited bail bond was entered September 19th, at a term of court which adjourned October 14th, an appeal from the judgment must be dismissed, where the record was not filed in the court on appeal until February 17th following. Darnell v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 599.

Although the law requires that the transcript shall immediately be made out and forwarded to this court, this court will consider the case, regardless of the time in which it may be filed, since the law places the duty on the clerks, and defendants cannot be held responsible for their negligence. Gould v. State (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 326.

Transcripts are required to be made up and filed in the Court of Criminal Appeals at once upon adjournment of the trial court. Walker v. State, 70 App. 84, 158 S. W. 206.

Where attorneys of persons convicted of crime prevent the filing of the transcript within the ninety days fixed by law, the appeal will, in the absence of good reason shown, be dismissed. Francis v. State, 70 App. 243, 156 S. W. 1167.

The transcript, even in a criminal appeal, cannot be considered where more than 90 days have elapsed between the adjournment of the trial and the filing of the transcript, making the time allowed for filing transcripts in civil cases. Francis v. State, 70 App. 243, 156 S. W. 1167.

Since, in criminal cases, it is the duty of the clerk, and not the attorney, to file the transcript in the appellate court, the appeal will be considered, though not filed in time, if the delay was not due to the negligence of the attorney; but, where the failure of the clerk to file in time was due to the failure of the attorney to perfect the record in the lower court in the time allowed by law, it will not be considered. Land v. State, 72 App. 109, 164 S. W. 1021.

Certiorari to perfect transcript.—See notes under art. 929, ante.

Art. 932. [898] Clerk to make certified list of certain cases.—

The clerk shall, immediately after the adjournment of the court at which appeals in criminal actions may have been taken, make out a certificate under his seal of office, exhibiting a list of all such causes which have been decided, and in which the defendant has appealed. This certificate shall show the style of the cause upon the docket, the offense of which the defendant stands accused, the day on which judgment was rendered, and the day on which the appeal was taken; which certified list he shall transmit, post paid, to the clerk of the court of criminal appeals. [Id., § 35.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1025; Rule 118 for District Courts (142 S. W. xxvi.)

Failure to make list.—Clerks of the court who fail to make out a list of all criminal cases appealed, in accordance with this article, may be cited to show cause for their failure, and in the absence of excuse will be punished. Francis v. State, 70 App. 243, 156 S. W. 1167.

Since all transcripts in civil cases must be filed within 90 days after the date of perfection of the appeal, it is the duty of the clerk to prepare and transmit transcripts in criminal cases in which appeals have been taken within not to exceed 90 days from the date of perfecting the appeal, which duty will be enforced by contempt proceedings. Norcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1004.

Where the clerk of a court from which an appeal in a criminal case has been taken is prevented, by the negligence or wilful misconduct of accused's attorney in withdrawing or withholding necessary records, from preparing and transmitting the transcript to the Court of Criminal Appeals within 90 days after the taking of the appeal, the attorney will be held guilty of contempt of the Court of Criminal Appeals, and punished accordingly. Norcutt v. State, 70 App. 577, 158 S. W. 1004.

Art. 933. [899] Certificates to be filed.—The clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall file the certificate provided for in the preceding article, and notify the attorney general that the same has been received. [Id., § 36.]

See Rule 118 for District Court (142 S. W. xxvi.)

Art. 934. [900] Notice to clerk as to transcripts.—When it appears, by the certificate provided for in the preceding article, that an appeal has been taken in any case in which the transcript has not been received by the clerk of the court of criminal appeals within the time required by law for filing transcripts in civil actions, the clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall immediately notify the clerk of the proper court by mail that such transcript has not been received. [Id., § 37.]

Art. 935. [901] Same subject.—The clerk receiving notification as provided in the preceding article shall, without delay, prepare and forward another transcript of the case as in the first instance, and shall notify the clerk of the court of criminal appeals, by letter sent by mail, of the fact that such transcript has been forwarded, and the day on which and the manner in which the same was forwarded. [Id., § 38.]

Art. 936. [902] Clerk to file and docket appeals, when.—The clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall receive, file and docket appeals in criminal actions, under such rules as may be prescribed by the court; except in cases of felony, a transcript may be filed, and the case heard and determined at any time during the term to which the appeal is taken. [Id., § 39.]

See Rust v. State, 14 App. 13; Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1600; Rules for Courts of Civil Appeals, 1 to 7b (142 S. W. x).

Art. 937. [903] Appeals, when to be determined.—The court of criminal appeals shall hear and determine appeals in criminal actions at the earliest time it may be done, with due regard to the rights of parties and proper administration of justice. [Id., § 40.]

See Rust v. State, 14 App. 19.

When cases may be heard.—Where a transcript in a misdemeanor case was filed in the appellate court subsequent to the day set apart for the submission of causes from the county from which the appeal was taken, held, that under the provisions of this article and art. 931, the case being returnable to this term, the court had jurisdiction to hear and determine it "at the earliest time consistent with a due regard for the rights of the parties and a proper administration of justice." Cummins v. State, 21 App. 406, 20 S. W. 706.

Advancing case.—The Court of Criminal Appeals will not advance a homicide case for hearing on the ground that accused is a member of the Legislature, and should be free in the event of a probable called session to discharge his duties without the embarrassment of being under a conviction for felony, where it was not certain that there would be a call session, and there were many cases of great public importance which should be advanced in the public interest, and also some cases therefore submitted in which the defendants were in confinement. Gaines v. State, 58 App. 611, 127 S. W. 181.

Art. 938. [904] Judgment on appeal.—The court of criminal appeals may affirm the judgment of the court below, or may reverse and remand for a new trial, or may reverse and dismiss the case, or may reform and correct the judgment, as the law and the nature of the case may require; but, in all cases, the court shall presume that the venue was proven in the court below; that the jury was properly impaneled and sworn; that the defendant was arraigned; that he pleaded to the indictment; that the charge of the court was certified by the judge, and filed by the clerk of the court before it was read to the jury, unless such matters were made an issue in the court below, and it affirmatively appears to the contrary by a bill of exceptions, properly signed and allowed by the judge of the court below, or proven up by by-standers, as is now provided by law, and incorporated in the transcript as required by law. In all criminal cases by it decided, the court of criminal appeals shall deliver a written opinion, setting forth the reason for such decision. [Id., § 41; amended, Act 1897, p. 11.]

10) Scope of review in general. — The Court of Criminal Appeals only considers matters raised by bills of exception or in the motion for new trial, and does not consider "assignments of error." Tilmeyer v. State, 62 App. 272, 136 S. W. 1060.

Material questions presented in the motion to quash the complaint and information will be reviewed. Gentry v. State, 62 App. 497, 137 S. W. 696.

The Court of Criminal Appeals will consider and pass on all questions raised in the trial court, unless expressly waived in the Court of Criminal Appeals; and a question raised in the course below and not presented in the brief on appeal is not thereby waived. Robertson v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 893.

The court on appeal will merely pass on whether the trial court erred in its rulings on the objections raised before it. Irby v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 545.

The state cannot appeal in criminal cases, the only matter which the Court of Criminal Appeals can review is whether error was committed against accused; and, if so, was the error prejudicial. McCue v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 280.

2. Affirmance, reversal, or dismissal in general. — See under the heads of the different offenses, and under other appropriate heads, for errors for which the appeal will be dismissed or the judgment reversed and the cause remanded. See Vernon's Statutes, Cr. St. 1914, Title 31, ch. 10; Title 35, ch. 11; Rules for the Supreme Court, 4 (142 S. W. viii); Rules for Court of Civil Appeals, 63-67 (142 S. W. xi); Willson's Cr. Forms, 1159; Bailey v. State, 11 App. 140; Ayers v. State, 12 App. 450; Craddock v. State, 15 App. 641; Squires v. State, 15 App. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 474; Saine v. State, 14 App. 144; Thompson v. State, 15 App. 39; Lasher v. State, 30 App. 387, 17 S. W. 1064, 28 Am. St. Rep. 922; Bird v. State, 37 App. 408, 35 S. W. 382.

Nothing being presented for revision, the record being without a motion for new trial, statement of facts, or bill of exceptions, there must be an affirmation. Squires v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 568; Wells v. State (Cr. App.) 134 S. W. 702; Watkins v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 568; Bean v. State (Cr. App.) 135 S. W. 1177.

The court will reverse if defendant has not had a fair and impartial trial. Burt v. State, 877 Cr. 341; 40 S. W. 1050, 43 S. 12, B. A. 305, 336. Or when he has been denied any legal right to the prejudice of his case. Prudgen v. State, 31 Tex. 426. Or when the court committed any radical prejudicial error in its charge. Spears v. State, 8 App. 407; Spradling v. State, 30 App. 595, 17 S. W. 111.

The court will reverse if evidence does not show that some principle of law has been violated, misconceived, or disregarded to the prejudice of accused, or there is good reason to apprehend that injustice has been done. Jordan v. State, 19 Tex. 479.
A denial of any legal right, in a felony case, which is calculated to injure the defender in an ordinary way in order to secure a reversal for a new trial. A conviction must be in accordance with law, or it can not be affirmed on appeal, is a general rule to which the exceptions are few. Frigo v. State, 31 Tex. 410; Rich v. State, 1 App. 296; Lunsford v. State, Id. 448, 28 Am. Rep. 414. The trial will be reversed when a defendant is tried in person, by written application duly authenticated by the clerk of the trial court, requests that his appeal be dismissed. But an appeal will not be dismissed upon request of defendant's attorney. Paul v. State, 17 App. 583. Nor will an appeal be dismissed after the judgment which was reversed and the prosecution dismissed, merely because the defendant desires such action. Maddox v. State, 14 App. 447.

Conviction affirmed, no errors being assigned. Phelps v. State (Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 488.

The law on which a prosecution was based being unconstitutional, a conviction will be reversed on appeal, and the prosecution ordered dismissed. McFarlin v. State (Cr. App.) 123 S. W. 133.

Where there is a good count in the information, on reversal of a general verdict of conviction for defects in one count, the cause will be remanded for a new trial, rather than dismissed. Smith v. State, 57 App. 609, 124 S. W. 665.

Where there was a written request for affirmance, purporting to be signed by appellant, although his signature was not certified by any officer, and his counsel also filed a statement that the appellant had decided not to prosecute his case further, the judgment will be affirmed. Ellis v. State, 58 App. 280, 125 S. W. 575.

A criminal case will not be reversed because the state's counsel were inaccurate either in their understanding or statement of the law of the case. Edwards v. State, 58 App. 342, 125 S. W. 894.

While the local option law provides that one may be prosecuted for selling intoxicating liquors in an election where an election has been held under an ordinance and the result has been declared favorable to the law, and that the fact that a contest is invoked will not prevent a conviction during such contest, a conviction pending such contest cannot stand, where the local option election has been held invalidly. The Court of Civil Appeals has decided, on appeal from this decision, that an accused may take advantage of the decision invalidating the election. Henry v. State, 61 App. 187, 125 S. W. 571.

Where an information charging accused with a misdemeanor was based on an affidavit which was made, as a part of the record, the conviction will not be disturbed because a complaint charging accused with the misdemeanor did not become part of the record in the case owing to the lack of a file mark by the clerk. Golden v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 948.

Presumptions in general.—See notes under arts. 743, 744, 844. In aid of record, see notes under art. 929.

Record on appeal showing no action by court below on exceptions to indictment, the presumption obtains that they were waived. Myers v. State, 31 Tex. 173; State v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 526.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the trial judge complied with the provisions of article 880 requiring the defendant, before sentencing, be asked if he has anything to say. Furthermore, to authorize reversal on this ground it must appear by proper bill, that the court refused to query the defendant, and required. Johnson v. State, 14 App. 506; Bohannon v. State, Id. 272. Defects in pleadings will not be supplied by presumption. Masse v. State, 36 App. 65, 16 S. W. 770.

Presumptions in aid and support of the judgment will always be indulged. Brown v. State, 32 App. 119, 22 S. W. 596.

The court, on a trial for violating the local option law, must assume that the election putting the law in force was valid, where there was no contest as provided by Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 447, c. 8; and it cannot consider questions as to the sufficiency of the orders and judgments of the commissioners' court putting local option into effect. Wesley v. State, 57 App. 277, 122 S. W. 550.

Where the affidavit in support of the motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence averred facts with great particularity, so that the state could easily meet it, had the facts been untrue, and there was no attempt by the state to meet it, the court on appeal will presume that the matters are correctly stated in the affidavit. Piper v. State, 57 App. 605, 124 S. W. 661.

Although the record showed that one B. was the county judge of a certain county, the Court of Criminal Appeals would judicially determine that he was authorized to administer oaths, and it would be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that such B., as county judge, took the complaint in the case, though the name of the county was omitted. Cardenas v. State, 53 App. 199, 124 S. W. 952.

Where the trial court testified positively that he gave a charge that was lost, and not copied in the transcript, and one or two witnesses corroborated him, and that he had no recollection of the charge as it was given, a charge, the court on appeal would assume that the charge had been given so that the conviction would not be set aside on the ground that the charge had not been given. Sharp v. State, 61 App. 247, 124 S. W. 332.

Where the record does not show in what manner a conviction is contrary to the law and the evidence, the court may not say there was error. Mosley v. State, 61 App. 294, 125 S. W. 145.
Where a jury is waived, and the case submitted to the court, which finds accused guilty, the court on appeal must presume in all theories of the case, and found as a fact against accused's contentions. Hooper v. State, 62 App. 105, 126 S. W. 790.

In a criminal prosecution, where the indictment was in two counts, and the verdict of conviction was general, it will be presumed that the jury below applied the verdict and judgment to the first count, as to which the evidence was sufficient. Hubbard v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 260.

Where there are several counts in an indictment, some good and others bad, and the accused by a motion or dismissal as to the bad counts a general verdict will be presumed to have been based on the good counts. Warner v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 265.

On review of the court's action in permitting a witness to testify who has been convicted of violating the bankruptcy act and sentenced to 18 months imprisonment in the United States penitentiary, where the record does not show of what offense under the bankruptcy act he was convicted, and the court in approving the bill of exceptions states that the offense was not a felony at the time of his conviction, it will be presumed that the trial court had information upon which his finding was based; there being penitentiary offenses in violation of the bankruptcy act which are not felonies. Williams v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 571.

The Court of Criminal Appeals presumes that the trial judges will act fairly towards all attorneys appearing in their courts, and give all persons accused of crime an impartial trial, until it is made to appear otherwise by record. Perry v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 265.

Where the court defined in its instructions the offense of manslaughter, of which accused was convicted, accused, complaining of the definition, must point out the errors therein, or the court will not review it. Betts v. State, 71 App. 159, 158 S. W. 1969.

Where the statement of facts, showing the testimony heard on motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, was not filed in time, the court on appeal must presume that the trial court was justified in denying a new trial. Due v. State (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 96.

Where an inadmissible statement of deceased's opinion that "he was shot down like John Ross" was deliberately introduced, and there was nothing in the record to disclose what its weight or effect would probably be before the jury, its character being such as could reasonably be hurtful, the appellate court was bound to presume that the state, in offering the testimony, did so intelligently and that it was helpful to the state and detrimental to accused. Sorrell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 239.

Where an election adopting prohibition in a county was not contested within the statutory time, the court must conclusively presume, on a trial for violating the prohibition law, that all the steps taken to enact prohibition in the county were legal. Longmire v. State (Cr. App.) 171 S. W. 1156.

In a prosecution for murder, where accused took a bill of exception in advance to anything and everything that a special prosecuting attorney might say in his closing argument, which was not supported by the record or was of an inflammatory nature, or injurious to accused, it was incumbent upon accused at the close of the argument to point out those portions of the speech to which he objected, and therefore, on appeal, the court would conclude that the only portions of the argument not acceptable to the defendant were those as to which he presented special objections requiring the court to instruct not to consider such portions of the address. Bolden v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 533.

4. Presumption as to proof of venue.—See McDonald v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1061; Johnson v. State, 72 App. 387, 162 S. W. 512.

Under this article as amended, this court, on appeal, will presume the venue to have been, unless the contrary is conclusively shown by the record. McGlasson v. State, 38 App. 331, 43 S. W. 93.

On appeal in a criminal case, the court must presume that the venue was proven below, in the absence of any bill of exceptions. Garrett v. State, 61 App. 514, 135 S. W. 533.

An objection that the evidence failed to show the venue of the theft in the county of the trial could not be reviewed, where there was some evidence to fix the venue in such county, and the bill of exceptions did not contain the evidence of venue; it being insufficient that the bill to the court's refusal to give defendant's peremptory instruction stated that defendant excepted thereto because the state failed to prove venue, or that the court in approving the bill referred to the statement of facts for the evidence. Lane v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 597.

Reasonably preclue the jury may reasonably preclude from the evidence that an offense was committed in the county alleged, this court will not disturb its finding. Pye v. State, 71 App. 94, 164 S. W. 222.

Under this article accused cannot object for the first time on motion for new trial to the state's failure to prove the venue. Thompson v. State, 72 App. 5, 169 S. W. 685.

The question of venue was not contested at the trial, nor until motion for a new trial, and in approving appellant's bill of exceptions overruling the motion on that ground, stated the court was found, circumstantially, in numerous ways throughout the record, more particularly by certain evidence specified as to the place where the killing occurred and the body found, held, that the Court of Criminal Appeals was required to presume that the venue was sufficiently proved. Belcher v. State, 71 App. 646, 161 S. W. 459.

It will be presumed that the venue was proven as alleged, unless the question of venue was made an issue in the trial and the question presented by a bill of exceptions. Rine v. State, 255, 152 S. W. 239.

Where the statement of facts was filed too late to be considered, it will be presumed on appeal that the venue was properly proved. Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 770 S. W. 714.

5. Presumption as to impaneling and swearing of jury.—See ante, art. 602, and notes, as to what must be shown by the record to entitle defendant to complain of error in overruling challenges to jurors for cause.

If the record fails to show that the jury were sworn, or if it shows that any other than the statutory oath was administered to them, the conviction will be set aside. It is sufficient, however, if the record recites that the jury were "duly sworn," or "were lawfully sworn to try said cause." Nels v. State, 2 Tex.
287; Baird v. State, 2 Tex. 467; Smith v. State, 32 Tex. 373; Cotton v. State, Id. 614; Martin v. State, 40 Tex. 19; Bawcom v. State, 41 Tex.
139; Howard v. State, 8 App. 612; Berry v. State, 10 App. 315; Kelly v. State, 13
App. 158; Dreisch v. State, 14 App. 175; McHenry v. State, Id. 203; Curiel v. State, 20 App. 862; McCall v. State, 23 App. 256.

It is not essential that the oath administered to the jury should be set out in the judgment entry. If a wrong oath was administered, the fact may be shown on appeal by a bill of exception. Preston v. State, 8 App. 39. But if the oath be set out in the judgment entry, and as set out it is not the oath prescribed, the judgment will be reversed. Holland v. State, 14 App. 152.

Where the judgment overruling a motion for new trial on the ground of disqualification of jurors recited that the trial court heard the motion and the evidence admitted thereon, the court on appeal must assume, in the absence of the record authenticating the evidence, that the evidence to which the trial court referred justified its decision, and that it was not confined alone to the affidavits attached to the motion and to the state's resistance thereof. Dougierty v. State, 59 App. 464, 128 S. W. 398.

A judgment as shown by the record on appeal recited that the jury was composed of 12 men, whose names were given, but the verdict signed by the foreman as W. 584 ante, was signed by one of those recited as in the panel. This discrepancy, however, was not adverted to or noticed in the motion for a new trial, and was not questioned or raised by bill of exception, for otherwise. Held that, in absence of overt acts committed by the jurors charged with the jury of 12 required by Const. art. 5, § 13, and art. 645, ante; theforeman's name being presumed to be improperly stated in copying the verdict.

It is held that a jury of 12, when proper, is a jury of 12; the blank being left for the name of the twelfth man, who is always foreman. Patton v. State, 65 App. 28, 136 S. W. 42.

5. Presumption as to arraignment and plea.—See Martinez v. State (Cr. App.)
153 S. W. 886.

If record shows plea of not guilty, but is silent as to arraignment, it will be presumed that latter was waived. West v. State, 40 App. 151, 49 S. W. 95.

If the defendant pleaded to the indictment is not sufficiently controlled by the defendant's affidavit to the contrary, unsupported by proof. Gordon v. State,
29 App. 410, 16 S. W. 337.

If the record in a capital case, on appeal, shows that the defendant pleaded "not guilty," but shows no arraignment, it will be presumed that an arraignment was waived. Morris v. State, 30 App. 95, 16 S. W. 757; McGrew v. State, 31 App.
336, 20 S. W. 740.

Arraignment, plea of not guilty, etc., will be presumed, unless it affirmatively

In the absence of some exception in the court below to the failure to enter the plea it will be presumed in the appellate court that a plea was entered in the court below. The failure to plead in the trial court cannot be taken advantage of by bill of exception, or in the motion for new trial or by motion in arrest of judgment.

Where there is no special plea in the record on appeal, the court cannot assume that a plea of former conviction was interposed as would require a submission of the issue to the jury. Lindley v. State, 57 App. 305, 122 S. W. 873.

Where the judgment recited that a plea of not guilty was entered by defendant, and he made no objection that he had not been called on to plead in the trial court until he raised the point on a motion for a new trial after verdict, his failure to plead if he did not so in fact was waived. Davis v. State, 70 App. 563, 158 S.
W. 233.

7. Presumption as to certification and filing of charge.—In absence of bill of exceptions it will be presumed that the charge was signed by the judge and filed

If it is made affirmatively to appear that the charge was not signed by the judge, when such fact is evidenced by proper bill, the case will be reversed. Alberson
v. State, 54 App. 3, 111 S. W. 413.

Where a special charge is not marked "given" or "refused" and the bill of exceptions does not complain of its refusal, the court on appeal will presume that it was refused. Cole v. State, 70 App. 458, 104 S. W. 929.

8. Necessity, requisites, and approval of bill of exceptions.—See arts. 744, 844a-846, ante.

9. Reformation and correction of judgment.—Under this article, the court of appeals, in a proper case, will reform either the judgment or sentence or both, so as to conform to each other and to the verdict. Rivers v. State, 10
App. 177; Hill v. State, Id. 673; McDonald v. State, 14 App. 504; Short v. State, 22 App. 312, 4 S. W. 903; Robinson v. State, 24 App. 4, 5 S. W. 509; Ex parte Hunt, 28 App. 351, 13 S. W. 145; Lockhart v. State, 29 App. 35, 15 S. W. 1012; Ex parte Cobb, 3 App. 380, 14 S. W. 586; Ex parte Moseley, 30 App. 338, 17 S. W. 118; Peters-son v. State, 28 App. 70, 7 S. W. 539; Turner v. State, 44 App. 69, 68 S. W. 512.

Art. 938
APPEAL AND WRIT OF ERROR
(Title 10)
Title 10

APPEAL AND Writ OF ERROR

Art. 988

Where the trial court erroneously sentenced accused, convicted of murder, to a certain term, the judgment will be reformed on appeal to comply with the indeterminable term. (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 700; Pulham v. State, (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 500; Millner v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 859; Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1150; Gutierrez v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 717; Vasquez v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 225; Peralea v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 780; Mondragon v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 790; Azulda v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 298; Cisneros v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 608.

Where sentence and judgment are correct in every way except as to assessing cumulative punishment, court of criminal appeals can reform and affirm the judgment. Bullard v. State, 40 App. 272, 56 S. W. 348.

Where the verdict is based on one count of an indictment, and the judgment and sentence is for an offense set out in another count, there is nothing on which the court can base a reformation. Small v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 798. See, also, O'Bryan v. State, 27 App. 559, 11 S. W. 443; Wombile v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 214. But see Ex parte Strey (Cr. App.) 28 S. W. 811, and Peterson v. State, 25 App. 76, 7 S. W. 530.

Where defendant was charged and convicted of passing forged instrument, but sentenced for forgery, appellate court will reform judgment so as to make it conform to the purpose of the instrument. Burks v. State and affirm. Burks v. State (Cr. App.) 65 S. W. 826.

Where the verdict and judgment show that the punishment was fixed at two years confinement in the penitentiary while the sentence recites that it is five years, the Court of Criminal Appeals can reformat the record to conform to the sentence. See and affirm. Murphy v. State (Cr. App.) 360, 45 S. W. 635.

The Court of Criminal appeals has the power, after the adjournment of the term at which a case has been affirmed and after a motion for rehearing has been overruled, to reform and correct the judgment, by supplying an omission in the judgment of the trial court. The omission being of such a nature as the trial court could correct were the case sent back to the trial court for correction, the appellate court could itself make the correction in the judgment. McCorkdoule v. State, 64 App. 344, 98 S. W. 885.

Where, on a trial for violating the local option law, the jury assessed the punishment of accused at a fine and imprisonment in jail, a judgment which merely divided the amount of fine and costs was incomplete, and the court on appeal, in the judgment of the state, would reform the judgment so as to make it comply with the verdict. Gipson v. State, 58 App. 408, 126 S. W. 297.

Where, in a prosecution for forgery, the jury are instructed to base their verdict on a count of the indictment for uttering a forged instrument, a verdict and sentence adjudging defendant guilty of forgery is erroneous and will be reformed in the appellate court to conform to the count submitted. Chappell v. State, 58 App. 401, 126 S. W. 274.

Defendant was convicted of murder, and the death penalty fixed, and the judgment of the court failed to show the arraignment of defendant and the impaneling of the jury or the submission of the evidence. Held, in view of art. 855, that the appeal from the judgment to the Court of Criminal Appeals was proper. It had all the data necessary to do so, since if, under art. 855, the lower court had power to amend and reform the judgment after the term, there was no reason why the appellate court, having all the data before it, could not also do it. Robinson v. State, 58 App. 550, 126 S. W. 275.

Where a judgment of conviction for assault with intent to murder was rendered when the verdict was guilty of assault with intent to rob, the Court of Criminal Appeals will, on appeal, reform the judgment to conform to the verdict. Hernandez v. State, 60 App. 202, 131 S. W. 1991.

Where the indictment, charge, verdict, and judgment clearly showed that accused was convicted of burglary, but he was sentenced for assault with intent to murder, the sentence will be corrected on appeal to show that it was for burglary. Gradington v. State (Cr. App.) 155 S. W. 210.

Under this article any judgment which is too vague and indefinite may be reformed on appeal, where the indictment, charge of the court, and verdict are all a part of the record. Monroe v. State, 70 App. 245, 157 S. W. 154.

Error of the court, under the Indeterminate Sentence Law (art. 855a, ante), in not assessing the punishment of defendant, found guilty of murder, at confinement for not less than five nor more than ten years, the jury having assessed it at a greater number of years than the minimum term, will be cured on appeal, as required by this article. Davis v. State, 73 App. 49, 163 S. W. 442.

10. Review of discretionary action.—See notes under art. 698, and other specific articles.

The ruling of the trial court refusing a new trial will not be reviewed on appeal, unless it shall appear that such court has not exercised its discretion according to the established rules of law. Shultz v. State, 5 App. 390.

Alleged misconduct of the jury in reaching their verdict by lot being cognizable by the trial court, its conclusion, unless clearly wrong and unsupported by the testimony, will not be interfered with on appeal. Benevides v. State, 57 App. 170, 121 S. W. 1107.

The discretion of the trial court in limiting the cross-examination of witnesses as to matters to be inquired into for the purpose of ascertaining the credibility of the witnesses and relating to matters quite remote from the case in hand is not

The discretion of a trial judge in selecting jury commissioners is not subject to review by an appellate court. Columbo v. State (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 910.

In a criminal prosecution, where accused did not object to the testimony of prosecution witnesses on voir dire examination that she was too insane to testify, the admission of her testimony rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, which will not be reviewed, in an absence of a showing of abuse. Hubbard v. State (Cr. App.) 147 S. W. 299.

11. Law of the case.—Where the trial court follows a decision on a former appeal on the second trial of that identical case, the same question will not be reviewed unless some injury resulted to defendant by following such decision. Lee v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 766.

If a former appeal is decided by this court, and it appears that a portion of a dissenting opinion was inadmissible the law of the case, and that portion was therefore properly excluded on retrial. Manley v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 1096.

Where rulings on evidence and instructions were reviewed by the court on appeal, they will not be reviewed on a subsequent appeal in the same case. Betta v. State, 71 App. 204, 139 S. W. 1969.

Where a confession, held inadmissible on a former appeal, was, upon a subsequent trial for the same offense, again admitted in evidence; the admission is error; the former judgment having settled the law as to the admissibility of the confession. Perret v. State (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 316.

12. What the judgment must contain.—See article 853, ante.

13. What must be shown by the record.—See notes under art. 229 and other articles of this chapter.

Accused cannot complain of invited error resulting from the court giving an instruction at his request. Wynne v. State, 59 App. 126, 127 S. W. 212; Decker v. State, 58 App. 120, 124 S. W. 912.

Where an erroneous charge is given at the instance or invitation of a party, it is not error of which he can complain, and, where a charge as given is the same as requested, it is not error to refuse the requested charge, nor will it be ground for reversal that the charge given is wrong; it being deemed a charge in compliance with the request. Cornell v. State, 61 App. 122, 134 S. W. 221; Ann. Cas. 1913A, 71.

Accused cannot complain because the state was permitted in cross-examining accused's witnesses to his good reputation to ask whether they had heard of certain misconduct by him, where there was no objection to evidence of such misconduct. Butler v. State, 61 App. 153, 134 S. W. 230.

Since the state's counsel in a prosecution for homicide in the cross-examination of a witness was entitled to lay a predicate from a memorandium in his hands, defendant, having brought out the fact that such memorandum was grand jury testimony, could not complain of the use made thereof by the state; the court at defendant's instance having required the state to submit the paper to the jury for inspection. Edwards v. State, 61 App. 307, 132 S. W. 549.

Accused may not complain of testimony elicited by questions propounded by his attorney and given in answer thereto. Sanders v. State, 68 App. 280, 140 S. W. 103.

Any error in a charge because of use of certain language is invited; such language being in a similar charge requested by defendant. Whorton v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1082.

Where accused stated at the time that he had no objection to the whole of a conversation being elicited, and himself elicited a part of the conversation, he cannot complain on appeal that thereafter the witness was permitted to detail the whole conversation which was necessary to enable the jury to understand the matter and determine the weight to be given to the part elicited by defendant. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1054.

Though the court opened the door wide in admitting evidence of the loss of papers as a basis for secondary evidence of their contents, accused could not complain thereof, where the breadth of the inquiry was due to his own insistence that the evidence was insufficient to permit secondary evidence. Bunker v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 108.

15. Harmless error.—The court of criminal appeals is not authorized to reverse unless it is made to appear that error complained of is calculated to injure the rights of appellant. Hofheintz v. State, 45 App. 117, 74 S. W. 311; De Los Santos v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 919.

In prosecutions for misdemeanors, where alleged errors are excepted to, but no special charges are asked covering them, error based thereon will be held harmless on appeal. Stone v. State, 57 App. 321, 123 S. W. 552.

In any case before the district court as an ordinary criminal case, instead of transferring it to the juvenile docket, on the ground that defendant was under 16 years of age, was not reversible where it was not shown that accused was injured thereby; the procedure being the same in either court. Radley v. State, 61 App. 135, 134 S. W. 22.

Where accused has been indicted and convicted of manslaughter, he cannot object that the evidence was such that, if it showed any offense, it was a higher grade of homicide. Campbell v. State (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 904.

In a prosecution for violating the prohibition law, accused cannot complain that the prosecutor lost a written statement made by him prior to the trial, which was introduced in evidence, and so was the statement; for the statement must obviously have been detrimental to accused. Noble v. State, 71 App. 121, 158 S. W. 1133.

Where accused, charged with unlawfully selling liquor, did not in due time request an order on which to require an election on offenses for which he was convicted, the court's action in refusing to require an election on offenses proved. Fears v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 518.

17. — Denial of separate trial.—Black v. State (Cr. App.) 143 S. W. 922.

The overruling of a motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness who would testify only on the issue of guilt of accused of manslaughter was not erroneous, where accused was found guilty of manslaughter only, and was subjected to the lowest penalty. Mitchell v. State (Cr. App.) 176 S. W. 650.

The court on appeal will not reverse a judgment refusing a continuance and the overruling of a motion for new trial based upon the application for a continuance, unless it appears from the evidence adduced at the trial that the proposed absent testimony was relevant, material, and probably true. Stuckey v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 114.

22. — Rulings as to jurors.—It is well settled that unless objection is shown to one or more jurors who try the case, the ruling of the trial court who tried the competency or incompetence of such jurors will not be inquired into on appeal, even though the defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges. Holland v. State, 31 App. 345, 20 S. W. 750; Hudson v. State, 28 App. 323, 13 S. W. 358; Naly v. State, 28 App. 357, 13 S. W. 670; Leeper v. State, 29 App. 64, 14 S. W. 399; Blackwell v. State, 29 App. 193, 15 S. W. 587; Roberts v. State, 30 App. 291, 17 S. W. 385; Coleman v. State, 30 App. 551, 17 S. W. 468; White v. State, 30 App. 652, 18 S. W. 462; Haisco v. State, 13 App. 97; Cock v. State, 8 App. 655; Gardner v. State, 6 App. 147; Ray v. State, 4 App. 450; Bryan v. State, 63 App. 100, 135 S. W. 951; Berg v. State, 61 App. 842, 142 S. W. 184; Ellis v. State, 154 S. W. 1819; Luttrell v. State, 70 App. 185, 157 S. W. 157; Holmes v. State, 79 App. 423, 157 S. W. 457; Reynolds v. State, 71 App. 454, 160 S. W. 362; Havard v. State, 73 App. 578, 166 S. W. 507.

Driving a defendant to a peremptory challenge of an incompetent juror is not cause for reversal, when he fails to exhaust his challenges. The objectionable juror, to constitute reversible error, must be forced upon the defendant, and serve as a juror on the trial. The sole inquiry upon appeal is whether the court erred in the impaneling of the jury, but whether the judge, as tried by a fair and impartial jury. The mere fact that the defendant exhausted his challenges signifies nothing, unless it be shown that thereafter an obnoxious juror was forced upon him, or that in some manner he suffered prejudice. Henning v. State, 24 App. 311; Cates v. State, 197 S. 304; Griffin v. State, 183 S. W. 304; Kendall v. State, Id. 462; Hollis v. State, Id. 620; McKinney v. State, Id. 626; Cock v. State, Id. 659; Rothschild v. State, 7 App. 519; Myers v. State, Id. 640; Sharp v. State, 3 App. 650; Bonano v. State, Id. 265; Tuttle v. State, Id. 771; Burrell v. State, 27 Tex. 758; Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; Lum v. State, 11 App. 483; Loggins v. State, 12 App. 65; Massey v. State, 10 App. 446; Bass v. State, 59 App. 136, 127 S. W. 1028; Duke v. State, 61 App. 441, 134 S. W. 705; Beaurep v. State, 76 App. 625. But if one objectionable juror is forced upon the defendant after he has exhausted his peremptory challenges, he is entitled to have the action of the court revised, not only as to that particular juror, but as to any juror against whom objection was urged which should have been sustained. Holt v. State, 9 App. 574; Loggins v. State, 12 App. 65.

Error in rulings on challenges to jurors does not constitute a reversal of the conviction, unless an objectionable juror was forced upon the defendant and sat in the case; but the inquiry in the appellate court is whether the court's action defeated the constitutional right to a fair and impartial jury. Myers v. State (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1167.

23. — Prejudice from defects in and rulings on indictment, Information, and complaint.—See notes under art. 476, ante.

24. — Refusal to place witnesses under the rule.—See Clary v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 919.

The admission of illegal evidence of an important fact, material and pertinent to the issue, and which is error for other objects legally in evidence, is error for which a conviction will be set aside, however certain it may be that the jury would have found a verdict of guilty upon other sufficient evidence adduced on the trial. McWilliams v. State, 44 Tex. 117; Saddler v. State, 20 App. 135.

But the erroneous admission of evidence, which is neither pertinent nor material to an issue in the case, and which could have no tendency whatever to affect or prejudice the rights of the defendant, is not cause for reversal. Post v. State, 10 App. 579. But see in this connection Tyson v. State, 14 App. 388, and cases there cited: see, also, Saddler v. State, 20 App. 195; Boll v. State, 14 Tex. 129; Mallory v. State, 25 App. 267, 8 S. W. 493.

In felony cases less than capital, and in misdemeanor cases, a conviction will not be set aside on appeal, on account of the admission of illegal evidence against the defendant, unless such evidence was material and relevant, and the legal evidence was insufficient to warrant the conviction, and if the whole record in determining whether the illegal evidence was relevant and material. This rule does not obtain in a capital felony. On the contrary, a capital conviction will be set aside, if illegal evidence has been admitted over the defendant's objection, and he has duly reserved exceptions, and the court will not inquire whether there is sufficient legal evidence to sustain the conviction, or whether the verdict was influenced by the illegal evidence. Hester v. State, 15 App. 567; Preston v. State, 4 App. 200; Bigby v. State, 5 App. 101; Haynie v. State, 2 App. 183; Evans v. State, 13 App. 225; Logan v. State, 17 App. 50; Draper v. State, 22 Tex. 400; Somerville v. State, 6 App. 433; Jones v. State, 7 App. 457.

But the admission of immaterial evidence, even in a capital case, when not objected to in the court below, is not necessarily cause for a reversal of the conviction. It may, however, become cause for reversal, if the evidence was of such importance to it, may have been misled to the prejudice of the defendant, or if the charge gives undue prominence to it. Simms v. State, 8 App. 239.

Admission of inadmissible testimony will not require reversal unless its effect upon the defendant's case was probably injurious. King v. State, 42 App. 128, 57 S. W. 840, 96 Am. St. Rep. 792.

If such evidence was incompetent, its admission was not reversible error, where other evidence to the same effect was received without objection. Love v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 220.

29. — Waiver of privilege by witness.—The error in requiring a witness to answer questions which she refused to answer on the ground of self-incrimination is harmless, where the witness, on afterwards taking the stand, waived her privilege. Bybee v. State (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 638.

Error cannot be predicated on an answer of a witness; it having been unresponsive and excluded on objection. Howard v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 506.

If the punishment is above the minimum, the admission of inadmissible evidence will require a reversal, for its admission might have been prejudicial. King v. State, 43 App. 108, 57 S. W. 840; 96 Am. St. Rep. 792; Roquemore v. State, 58 App. 668, 129 S. W. 1120.

35. — Prejudice from admission of evidence as to flight.—See Damron v. State, 58 App. 265, 125 S. W. 396.

37. — Prejudice from denial of motion to strike evidence.—See Harris v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1074; Pullen v. State, 70 App. 156, 156 S. W. 935.

Where the evidence as a whole clearly established a date material to the prosecution, the fact that counsel for the state was allowed to lead the prosecution so as to have her clearly fix the date was harmless. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

In such case, where there was no showing as to what the witness would have answered, the remark, if on the weight of the evidence, was harmless. Grimes v. State (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 523.

41. — Prejudice from improper cross and re-direct examination.—See Washington v. State, 58 App. 345, 125 S. W. 917; Lacy v. State, 65 App. 185, 140 S. W. 905.

(Title 10)

44.  Prejudice from erroneous Impeachment of witness.—See Holland v. State, 60 App. 117, 131 S. W. 563; Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 635; Holmes v. State (Cr. App.) 159 S. W. 926.

46.  Prejudice from error in instructions.—See notes under art. 743, ante.

47.  Prejudice from misconduct of jurors.—See O'Marow v. State (Cr. App.) 154 S. W. 292; Pullen v. State, 70 App. 158, 159 S. W. 396.

Argument on rehearing, see Gonzales v. State, 35 App. 33, 29 S. W. 1091, 30 S. W. 224.

Where it is determined after the dismissal of an appeal that the term of court in which defendant was convicted was not legally held, and for that reason the conviction was void, the appeal will not be reinstated. Thompson v. State, 59 App. 498, 124 S. W. 629.

Accused may not for the first time on his motion for rehearing, after affirmance of the judgment of conviction, suggest a new view in support of his contention that the court erred in failing to give a requested charge. Harrelson v. State, 60 App. 534, 132 S. W. 783.

Accused in a misdemeanor case may not for the first time raise the question on rehearing that the court erred in not charging on circumstantial evidence. Bradley v. State (Cr. App.) 136 S. W. 446.

On a motion for rehearing, the Court of Criminal Appeals cannot consider affidavits presented to it in the first instance, showing that defendant had a good defense to the prosecution; especially when the witnesses were not called to testify at the trial. Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 175 S. W. 1054.

Art. 939.  [905] Cases remanded, when.—The court of criminal appeals may reverse the judgment in a criminal action, as well upon the law as upon the facts; but, when a cause is reversed for the reason that the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence, the same shall in all cases be remanded for new trial. [Act 22d Leg., ch. 16, § 42.]

Review of sufficiency of evidence.—See notes under art. 786.

Verdict contrary to evidence.—On appeal from a conviction of simple assault on an information charging an aggravated assault, accused cannot urge that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, on the ground that it clearly showed an aggravated assault, if any. Garrett v. State, 61 App. 514, 135 S. W. 532.

Rehearing.—See notes under art. 938.

Art. 940.  [906] Duty of clerk after judgment.—As soon as the judgment of the court of criminal appeals is rendered, the clerk shall make out the proper certificate of the proceedings had and judgment rendered, and transmit the same by mail to the clerk of the proper court, or deliver the mandate to the defendant or his counsel when the decision is favorable to the defendant, if requested to do so, unless he is instructed by the court to withhold the mandate to any particular time. [Id., § 43.]

Art. 941. [907] Mandate to be filed.—When the certificate of the judgment and proceedings in the court of criminal appeals shall be received by the proper clerk, he shall file the same with the original papers of the cause, and note the same upon the docket of the court. [Id., § 44.]

Art. 942. [908] Sentence shall be pronounced in felony case, when.—In cases of felony, where the judgment is affirmed, if the district court be in session when the mandate is received, that court shall proceed to pronounce sentence during the term at which the mandate is received; or, in case sentence can not then be pronounced, it may be pronounced at the next or any subsequent term of such court. [O. C. 747.]

See, ante, arts. 856, 858, 859, and notes.

When term of imprisonment begins.—See art. 852, ante, and notes.

Art. 943. [909] Same subject.—If the mandate be received in vacation, and the judgment in a case of felony has been affirmed, sentence shall be pronounced during the term of the court next succeeding the time at which the same was received; or, in case it can not be pronounced, at any subsequent term of the court. [O. C. 748.]

See arts. 479, 575, 576, 593, 594, 856, 858, 859 and notes.

Art. 944. [910] In cases of misdemeanor, when judgment has been affirmed.—In cases of misdemeanor, where the judgment has been affirmed, no proceedings need be had after filing the mandate, except to forfeit the recognizance of the defendant, or to issue a capias for the defendant, or an execution against his property, to enforce the judgment of the court, whether of fine or imprisonment, or both, in the same manner as if no appeal had been taken. [O. C. 749.]

Art. 945. [911] New trial.—Where the court of criminal appeal awards a new trial to the defendant, the cause shall stand as it would have stood in case the new trial had been granted by the court below. [Acts 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16, § 45.]

Effect as to jurisdiction of lower court.—The Constitution gives the district court exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal cases of the grade of a felony, and C. C. P. 1911, arts. 89, 771, 845, respectively, provide that upon the trial of a felony case, whether the proof develop a felony or misdemeanor, the court shall determine the case as to any offense included in the charge; that, where a prosecution is for an offense consisting of several degrees, the jury may find the defendant guilty of any degree inferior to that charged in the indictment; and that the effect of a new trial is to place the cause in the same position as it was before any trial was had. Held that, where accused was indicted for assault with intent to murder, the reversal on appeal of a conviction of an aggravated assault will not, in view of this article deprive the district court of jurisdiction to hear the case upon retrial, though the county court has original jurisdiction of misdemeanors. Hughes v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 912.

Art. 946. [912] Motion in arrest of judgment.—Where the defendant's motion in arrest of judgment was overruled, and it is decided on appeal that the same ought to have been sustained, the cause shall stand as if the motion had been sustained, unless the court of criminal appeals, in its judgment, directs the cause to be dismissed, and the defendant wholly discharged. [Id., § 46.]

See, ante, arts. 479, 575, 576, 593, 594, 851, 852.

Art. 947. [913] Defendant may be discharged, when.—Where the court of criminal appeals reverses a judgment, and directs the cause to be dismissed, the defendant, if in custody, must be discharged; and the clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall transmit to the officer having custody of defendant an order to that effect; said order shall be transmitted by telegraph or mail, immediately upon the dismissal of the cause. [Id. § 47.]

See notes under arts. 478, 575, 576, 593, 594.

Art. 948. [914] When felony case is reversed, etc.—When a felony case upon appeal is reversed and remanded for a new trial, the defendant shall be released from custody, upon his giving bail as in other cases when he is entitled to bail; and the clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall transmit to the officer having custody of the defendant an order to that effect. [Id. § 48.]

See arts. 903-908, ante.

Necessity of giving new bail.—The insertion of this provision in the Revised Code does not necessitate the giving of new bail in every case. If the accused was on bail before conviction, his original recognizance remains in force. Ex parte Guiffée, 8 App. 469. See Wills v. State, 21 App. 594, 2 S. W. 896.

Art. 949. [915] May make rules; briefs and oral argument.—The court of criminal appeals may make rules of procedure as to the hearing of criminal actions upon appeals; but in every case at least two counsel for the defendant shall be heard, if they desire it, either by brief or by oral or written argument, or both, as such counsel shall deem proper. [Id. § 49.]

See Rules 23-54 for Court of Civil Appeals (142 S. W. xii-xv); Sparks v. State (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 976. See, also, Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 1547, 1614, 2115.

Validity of rules.—The rules of the Supreme Court governing Court of Criminal Appeals as to transcripts cannot override the statutory law on same subject. Dyer v. State, 44 App. 78, 63 S. W. 685.

Supreme Court rules 116 (142 S. W. xxi), adopted under Const. art. 5, § 25, empowering it to make rules of procedure not inconsistent with law, and providing that the transcript of the record in a misdemeanor case must be delivered to the party appealing or his counsel, and, if not applied for before the twentieth day before the commencement of the term of the Court of Criminal Appeals to which the appeal is returnable, the clerk shall transmit it to the clerk of that court, was invalid, because inconsistent with C. C. P. 1911, arts. 930, 931, providing that the clerk shall prepare transcripts in all criminal cases and forward them to the clerk of the Court of Criminal Appeals. McElroy v. State (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 1144.

Briefs and argument.—Scope of argument on rehearing, see Gonzales v. State, 35 App. 33, 29 S. W. 1061, 30 S. W. 224.

Brief unaccompanied by affidavit showing that one copy had been filed in the trial court will be stricken out. Lewis v. State (Cr. App.) 48 S. W. 265.

Art. 950. [916] Appeal in habeas corpus.—When the defendant appeals from the judgment rendered on the hearing of an application under habeas corpus, a transcript of the proceedings in the cause shall be made out and certified to, together with all the testimony offered, and shall be sent up to the court of criminal appeals for revision. This transcript, when the proceedings take place before the court in session, shall be prepared and certified by the clerk thereof; but when had before a judge in vacation, the transcript may be prepared by any person, under direction of the judge, and certified by such judge. [Id. § 50.]

1. Right of appeal in general.—Where a party sues out a habeas corpus, and is remanded and allowed to enter into a recognizance on appeal, the Court of Criminal Appeals has no jurisdiction, and the appeal will be dismissed. Pending an appeal in habeas corpus proceedings, the relator must remain in custody; otherwise, the court will not entertain his appeal. Ex parte Tyer, 61 App. 166, 133 S. W. 1046. That he is in custody must affirmatively appear from the record. Ex parte Snyder, 29 App. 129, 44 S. W. 1108; Ex parte Talbut, 39 App. 12, 44 S. W. 332. See, also, Ex parte Peyton, 2 App. 295; Ex parte Cohn, 2 App. 350; Griffin v. State, 5 App. 457; Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 288; Ex parte Cole, 14 App. 579; Ex parte Wood, 19 App. 46; Ex parte Branch, 36 App. 384, 37 S. W. 421.

Where no writ has been issued an appeal will be dismissed where its only object is to certify a point in issue to this court. Ex parte Jones, 34 App. 344, 30 S. W. 586.

Where the county court remands the party who has sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and fixes an appeal bond, which the relator files, this court will not entertain an appeal, since pending appeal the relator must remain in custody. Ex parte Stephens, 63 App. 374, 140 S. W. 94.

In habeas corpus, where the writ is denied, the Court of Criminal Appeals will not entertain an appeal unless the relator is in custody. Ex parte Eldridge, 72 App. 529, 162 S. W. 1149.

2. Decisions reviewable.—No appeal can be taken from a refusal to issue a writ of habeas corpus. Ex parte Conley (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 335; the respondent having no right of appeal. McFarland v. Johnson, 27 Tex. 105; Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 731; Dicke v. State, 33 Tex. 227; Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 6; Ex parte Barnett (Cr. App.) 167 S. W. 845; Ex parte Muse (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 529.

No appeal lies from the dismissal of the writ, which is tantamount to refusing it in the first instance. Ex parte Strong, 34 App. 309, 30 S. W. 666; Ex parte Thomas, 61 App. 573, 126 S. W. 60. The remedy is to sue out an original application before another judge. Ex parte Blankenship (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 647. See, also, Ex parte Hodges (Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 913.

Refusal to grant the writ is not a final judgment, and will not support appeal. Ex parte Ainsworth, 27 Tex. 731; Ex parte Coopwood, 44 Tex. 467; Yarbrough v. State, 2 Tex. 519; Ex parte Strong, 34 App. 309, 30 S. W. 666.

An order, amending an original order directing the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus, by directing at any return of the writ to the district court of the county in which the one specified in the original order, is not appealable, as the order is only interlocutory one. Ex parte McFarlane, 61 App. 204, 134 S. W. 685.

Where an appeal was taken from an order dismissing a writ of habeas corpus, and the order for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that the matter was a matter of corporate, to dismiss in the trial court was in the nature of a demurrer, and that dismissal pursuant to such motion did not authorize an appeal, such ruling was tantamount to a refusal of the writ in the original instance, and was nonappealable. Ex parte Ryan, 62 App. 19, 136 S. W. 85.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a habeas corpus proceeding remanding the petitioner to the custody of the sheriff, where he is admitted to bail pending the appeal. Ex parte Harvey (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 1174.

4. Consideration as original application.—In such appeals the cause is not remanded, but the court of appeals acts originally. Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 288; Ex parte Foster, 5 App. 625, 32 Am. Rep. 577.

Where petitioner was entitled to a writ of habeas corpus and to a hearing thereon, but the judge of the district court of the county where he was indicted was disqualified, and an appeal was taken from an order of a judge of another county dismissing a writ granted by him and erroneously made returnable for hearing in his own county, the Court of Criminal Appeals would hear the application as an original proceeding. Ex parte Andrus (Cr. App.) 153 S. W. 621.

5. Requisites of transcript.—Transcript must contain copy of the writ under which the relator is held. Sheldon v. Boyce, 20 Tex. 825. It should also, in cases where the relator’s pecuniary circumstances. Miller v. State, 42 Tex. 309; Ex parte Cochran, 20 App. 242; Ex parte Terry, Id. 486; Ex parte Walker, 3 App. 665; McConnell v. State, 13 App. 390; Ruston v. State, 15 App. 324; Ex parte Coldiron, 15 App. 464; Ex parte Catney, 11 App. 332. Agreement in record as to ability. Ex parte O’Connor, 2 App. 600, 3 S. W. 346. As to certificate, tie, seal, etc., see Ex parte Barrier, 17 App. 855; Ex parte Kramer, 19 App. 123.

Where habeas corpus trial is had in vacation the judge must certify to the transcript of the record. Clerk can not do this. See Ex parte Malone, 35 App. 297, 31 S. W. 665, 33 S. W. 360; Ex parte Calvin, 40 App. 84, 48 S. W. 518; Overstreet v. State, 39 App. 465, 48 S. W. 925.

Where the attorneys for relator, applying for habeas corpus after his conviction of murder in the first degree, were furnished a transcript of the proceedings on the trial of the case, which did not include the orders convening the special term of the district court at which defendant was convicted, nor the order appointing jury conducted, and the transcript introduced by the state, the transcript introduced by the state, the two transcripts did not conflict with each other. Ex parte Martines (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 959.

6. Transmission and filing of transcript.—The rules governing the transmission of transcripts in other criminal cases do not govern in habeas corpus appeals. Ex parte Kramer, 19 App. 123. See, also, Ex parte Barrier, 17 App. 855.

7. Statement of facts.—In a habeas corpus case, on appeal, a statement of facts will not be considered unless it be authenticated and filed as in other cases. Ex parte Cole, 14 App. 579; Ex parte Barber, 16 App. 369; Ex parte Dick, 25 App. 73, 28 App. 80, 31 S. W. 641; Ex parte Williams, 22 App. 524, 47 S. W. 365, 1118; Ex parte Calvin, 40 App. 84, 48 S. W. 518. And see, also, Ex parte Overstreet, 39 App. 465, 48 S. W. 929.

The judgment of the trial court upon habeas corpus to admit to bail cannot be reviewed in the absence of a statement of facts. Ex parte Teague (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 620; Ex parte Northern, 63 App. 275, 140 S. W. 35.
Art. 950

APPEAL AND WRIT OF ERROR

Where habeas corpus trial is had before judge in vacation, on appeal therefrom there must be a statement of facts prepared as in other cases. Ex parte Malone, 35 App. 298, 31 S. W. 663, 32 S. W. 360.

An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings to compel its reduction, on the ground that accused was unable to give bail at the amount fixed, cannot be reviewed, where the record contains no evidence or statement of facts showing accused's inability to give bail. Ex parte Nall, 59 App. 140, 127 S. W. 1032.

An agreement of counsel that the facts stated in accused's application for habeas corpus are true did not make the application a part of the record as a statement of facts or evidence, so as to authorize review of questions requiring evidence in the record in order to review them, in the absence of approval of such agreement by the Court. Ex parte Nall, 59 App. 140, 127 S. W. 1032.

Refusal to reduce bail in habeas corpus proceedings to compel its reduction, on the ground that accused was unable to give bail at the amount fixed, cannot be reviewed, where the record contains no evidence or statement of facts showing accused's inability to give bail. Ex parte Nall, 59 App. 140, 127 S. W. 1032.

The petition for writ of habeas corpus is a mere pleading, and not evidence of the averments therein contained; and the appellate court cannot, in the absence of the statements of facts, determine whether petitioner was unlawfully committed for an alleged contempt of a lower court. Ex parte Thomas (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 601.

The court, on appeal from an order in habeas corpus remanding the applicant to the custody of an officer for delivery to an agent of a sister state, must presume that the judgment of the lower court was correct and supported by the evidence, in the absence of any statement of facts or other matters shown by the record. Ex parte Basham (Cr. App.) 145 S. W. 619.

On appeal from a judgment remanding the applicant for a writ of habeas corpus into custody, where there was no statement of facts, it must be held that the judgment of the lower court was correct, and that there was ample evidence to sustain it; the application or petition not being evidence of the facts therein stated. Ex parte Walburn, 70 App. 464, 57 S. W. 154.

8. Effect of appeal.—Where accused, after having been committed for contempt, sued out a writ of habeas corpus, which was dismissed, and accused remanded to the custody of the chief of police, such officer, after notice of appeal, could not work accused on the highways, in satisfaction of his sentence, pending the appeal. Ex parte Ryan, 62 App. 19, 136 S. W. 62.

9. Contempt of appellate court.—Where an appeal is taken from an order dismissing a writ of habeas corpus, the appellate court is alone entitled to determine the question of its jurisdiction to determine such appeal, and until it makes that determination any interference with the subject-matter of the proceeding may be the subject of contempt. Ex parte Ryan, 62 App. 19, 136 S. W. 65.

Where a police officer, having accused in charge under commitment for contempt, worked him on the highways, pending appeal from an order dismissing the writ of habeas corpus, first without notice that an appeal had been taken, and then under the advice of the city's legal adviser that he had authority so to do, and in proceedings for contempt stated that he had no intent to violate any jurisdiction of the appellate court, or place himself in contempt, his contempt was purged. Ex parte Ryan, 62 App. 19, 136 S. W. 65.

10. Bail.—Pending hearing of the writ, the court may bail the relator from day to day only. Pending appeal from judgment, the relator is not entitled to go at large. Ex parte Branch, 35 App. 354, 37 S. W. 421; s. c., 37 App. 318, 39 S. W. 392.

In a habeas corpus proceeding by a prisoner who was temporarily released and subsequently rearrested, he could not be released from custody pending an appeal from a judgment remanding him to custody by entering into a recognizance or appeal bond. Ex parte Richie (Cr. App.) 177 S. W. 88.

Art. 951. [917] Defendant need not be present.—The defendant need not be personally present upon the hearing of an appeal in case of habeas corpus. [Id., § 51.]

See Ex parte Coupland, 26 Tex. 386.

Rule prior to statute.—See Republic v. McCulloch, Dallam, 357.

Art. 952. [918] Habeas corpus, when heard.—Cases of habeas corpus, taken to the court of criminal appeals by appeal, shall be heard at the earliest practicable time. [Id., § 52.]

Cited, Ex parte Lynn, 19 App. 120.

Art. 953. [919] Shall be heard upon the record, etc.—The appeal in a habeas corpus case shall be heard and determined upon the law and the facts arising upon record, and no incidental question which may have arisen on the hearing of the application before the court below shall be revised. The only design of the appeal is to do substantial justice to the party appealing. [O. C. 755, 756.]

See Ex parte Rothschild, 2 App. 560; Ex parte Foster, 5 App. 655, 32 Am. Rep. 577; Parker v. State, 5 App. 575.

Cited, Ex parte Firmin, 60 App. 368, 131 S. W. 1112.
Review in general.—No reversal for admission of improper evidence. Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 106, 5 S. W. 99.

It is reasonably appearing on habeas corpus that the relator was charged by indictment in the demanding state, the validity of the copy of indictment exhibited against him will not be inquired into by the court on appeal. Ex parte Pearce, 32 App. 305, 23 S. W. 18.

On affirming a judgment denying a writ of habeas corpus to one restrained under a capias on a murder charge, the Court of Criminal Appeals properly withholding any opinion excepting that implied by the disposition of the appeal. Ex parte MacFarlane (Cr. App.) 129 S. W. 618.

The Court of Criminal Appeals on habeas corpus for the discharge of one imprisoned for contempt for violating an injunction granted by the district court must assume that the injunction was properly granted. Ex parte Looper, 61 App. 133, 32 S. W. 346, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 32.

Review of facts, and comment on evidence.—On reversal of judgment in habeas corpus proceedings denying bail, the court will not discuss the facts. Sharp v. State, 1 App. 239; Ex parte Day, 3 App. 328; Ex parte Winters (Cr. App.) 32 S. W. 697; Ex parte McKinney, 5 App. 500; Ex parte Moore, 6 App. 103; Ex parte Beaupre (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 547; Ex parte Sparger, 62 App. 133, 137 S. W. 351; Ex parte Lawrence (Cr. App.) 137 S. W. 697.

The appellate court will not review conflicting evidence. Drury v. State, 25 Tex. App. 897; Ex parte Moore, 5 App. 165; Ex parte Beacom, 12 App. 318. And see Ex parte Smith, 23 App. 106, 5 S. W. 99; Ex parte Evers, 29 App. 539, 16 S. W. 342.

Art. 954. [920] Orders in the case.—The court of criminal appeals shall enter such judgment, and make such orders as the law and the nature of the case may require, and may make such orders relative to the costs in the case as may seem right, allowing costs and fixing the amount, or allowing no costs at all. [Acts 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16, § 53.]

Nature of mandate.—The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot reverse a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings and direct the trial court to proceed further in any way, but must itself render the judgment the trial court should have rendered, which is operative directly upon the officer or person having custody of the applicant. Ex parte Firmin, 69 App. 222, 131 S. W. 1116; Ex parte Foster, 5 App. 625, 33 Am. Rep. 577; Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 298; Ex parte Cole, 14 App. 574; Ex parte Firmin, 69 App. 388, 131 S. W. 1113.

Allowance of bail as to one of several applicants.—Ex parte Williams, 18 App. 655; Ex parte Hanson, 27 App. 591, 11 S. W. 641.

Consideration as original application.—See notes under art. 950, ante.

Art. 955. [921] Judgment conclusive.—The judgment of the court of criminal appeals in appeals under habeas corpus shall be final and conclusive; and no further application in the same case can be made for the writ, except in cases specially provided for by law. [Id., § 54.]

Motion to reduce bail.—Though the decision of the appellate court on habeas corpus is final, it will not preclude the district court from later entertaining a motion to reduce bail. Miller v. State, 43 Tex. 579.

Directing proceedings in trial court.—The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot reverse a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings and direct the trial court to proceed further in any way, but must itself render the judgment the trial court should have rendered, which is operative directly upon the officer or person having custody of the applicant. Ex parte Firmin, 69 App. 222, 131 S. W. 1116.

Second appeal after dismissal of first appeal.—See Ex parte Jones, 7 App. 365.

Rehearing.—Even if a proceeding by habeas corpus in the Court of Criminal Appeals to obtain relator's discharge from confinement under an order of the Legislature holding him guilty of contempt were a criminal case, that court would not be debarred from granting a rehearing after deciding there was no contempt and discharging relator; the court being merely a reviewing tribunal, and in no sense trying the case. Per Harper and Prendergast, JJ.; Davidson, P. J., dissenting. Ex parte Wotlers, 64 App. 328, 144 S. W. 521.

Art. 956. [922] Officer failing to obey mandate.—If an officer holding a person in custody fails to obey the mandate of the court of criminal appeals, he is guilty of an offense, and punishable according to the provisions of the penal statutes of this state. [Id., § 55.]

See Pen. Code, art. 1045; State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 627, s. c., Id., 27 Tex. 705.

Art. 957. [923] When appellant is detained by other than officer.—If the appellant in a case of habeas corpus be detained by any person other than an officer, the sheriff shall, upon receiving the mandate of the court of criminal appeals, immediately cause the person so held to be discharged; and the mandate shall be sufficient authority therefor. [Id., § 56.]

Art. 958. [924] Judgment to be certified, etc.—The judgment of the court of criminal appeals shall be certified by the clerk thereof to the officer holding the defendant in custody, or when he is held by any person other than an officer, to the sheriff of the proper county. [Id., § 57.]

Directing proceedings in trial court.—The Court of Criminal Appeals cannot reverse a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings and direct the trial court to proceed further in any way, but must itself render the judgment the trial court should have rendered, which is operative directly upon the officer or person having custody of the applicant. Ex parte Fimrino, 60 App. 222, 131 S. W. 1116.

Art. 959. [925] Who shall take bail bond.—When, by the judgment of the court of criminal appeals upon cases of habeas corpus, the applicant is ordered to give bail, such judgment shall be certified to the officer holding him in custody; and, if such officer be the sheriff, the bail bond may be executed before him, if any other officer, he shall take the person detained before some magistrate, who may receive a bail bond, and shall file the same in the proper court of the proper county; and such bond shall have the same force and effect as a recognizance, and may be forfeited and enforced in the same manner. [Id., § 58.]

Art. 960. [926] Appeal from judgment on recognizance.—An appeal may be taken by the defendant from every final judgment rendered upon a recognizance, bail bond or bond taken for the prevention or suppression of offenses, where such judgment is for twenty dollars or more, exclusive of costs, but not otherwise; and the proceedings in such case shall be regulated by the same rules which are prescribed in other civil suits. [O. C. 738a.]

Notice of appeal.—Notice by sureties on a bail bond of appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals from a judgment forfeiting the bond confer no jurisdiction on the Court of Criminal Appeals. Ayers v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 171.

Time for filing transcript.—See notes under art. 931.

Dismissal.—An appeal from a judgment forfeiting a bail bond will be dismissed, on motion signed and sworn to by appellants personally. James v. State (Cr. App.) 128 S. W. 612.

Art. 961. [927] Defendant entitled also to writ of error.—The state or the defendant may also have any such judgment as is mentioned in the preceding article, and which may have been rendered in the district or county court, revised upon writ of error, as in other civil suits. [O. C. 738b.]

Right of review.—As in other criminal cases, the state cannot be awarded a new trial, nor is the state entitled to an appeal or writ of error, notwithstanding art. 960 and this article. Perry v. State, 14 App. 166; Robertson v. State, Id. 211; State v. Arrington, 13 App. 611; Hart v. State, Id. 555; State v. Ward, 9 App. 462. But a defendant in such proceeding may have a new trial, or may prosecute an appeal or writ of error, as in civil cases. Bailey v. State, 26 App. 341, 9 S. W. 758.

Art. 962. [928] Same rules govern as in civil cases.—In the cases provided for in the two preceding articles, the proceedings shall be regulated by the same rules that govern the other civil actions where an appeal is taken or a writ of error issued out. [O. C. 738a.]

See, ante, art. 497.

Cited, Barrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558.

Filing transcript.—Under arts. 961, 962, which authorizes review of judgments on bail bonds or writs of error as in civil suits, and under the rule of the Supreme Court for the government of the Courts of Civil Appeals, which prohibits consideration of a case where the transcript is not filed within 90 days from the filing of the petition for writ of error, and no showing is made why the same was not forwarded within that time, a writ of error to review a judgment forfeiting a bail bond will be dismissed, where the transcript was not filed within that time. Ayers v. State (Cr. App.) 146 S. W. 171.

Where an appeal from a judgment against the sureties on a bail bond was perfected by giving of notice of appeal and a bond, as provided by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1387 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 2084); but the transcript was not filed in the appellate court within 90 days after perfecting of the appeal as required by article 1015 (Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1608), the court could on a certificate of affirmance filed by the state affirm the judgment. Savage v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 594.

Brief and statement of facts.—Appeal from judgment on forfeited bail bond will be dismissed where no brief, as required by rule 102 of district and county courts (142 S. W. xiv) and rule 29 of civil courts of appeals (142 S. W. xii), has been filed in court below nor in court of criminal appeals. Frost v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 679; Heiman v. State, 70 App. 489, 155 S. W. 276; Thetford v. State (Cr. App.) 169 S. W. 1153.

Construction of bond.—A bail bond bound the defendant to appear at “the next term of court on the 11th day of September, 1911,” and the 11th of September fell during the same term of court in which the bond was issued. Held, under this article and art. 321, subd. 5, that, as the bond fixed a definite time for the appearance at a time when the court was legally in session, the specific time fixed will control, and render the bond certain and sufficient in spite of the inconsistent matter therein. Barrett v. State (Cr. App.) 151 S. W. 558.

Defect in appeal bond.—On appeal from the forfeiture of a bail bond, the same rules govern as govern in civil matters, and, where the appeal is dismissed for a defect in the appeal bond, the appellants may still prosecute their appeal by filing a proper bond. Anderson v. State (Cr. App.) 166 S. W. 1164.
Art. 963. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES, ETC. (Title 11)

TITLE 11

OF PROCEEDINGS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, MAYORS AND RECORDERS

2. Of the arrest of the defendant. 4. The judgment and execution.

CHAPTER ONE

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Art. 963. Mayors shall exercise criminal jurisdiction.
964. Mayors or recorders governed by same rules as justices of the peace.
965. Mayors and justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction.
966. In towns and villages embracing territory in two counties, procedure on appeals from; and examining trials before mayors or recorders.
967. Warrant issued by mayor, directed to whom.
968. Warrant issued by mayor, etc., may be executed, where.
968a. Right of trial before jury.
968c. Complaint, how commenced and concluded; prosecution conducted by city attorney or deputy; county attorney may also represent state, but no fees; process.
968d. Council to prescribe rules for collecting fees and costs, practice, etc.; rules in meantime.
968e. Fines and costs paid into city treasury, etc.

Art. 968f. Jury and witness fees, and enforcing attendance of witnesses according to code of criminal procedure.
968g. Judge may punish for contempt as county judge; may take recognizances, admit to bail, etc., under rules in county court.
968h. Process, how served; defendant entitled to notice of complaint, if demanded.
968i. Proceedings when a peace bond, etc., given before mayor, etc., has been forfeited.
968j. Fees of recorder, etc., how prescribed; paid out of city treasury; fines and costs collected and disposed of, how; commitments on court to be always open.
969. Justices, etc., shall keep a criminal docket, which shall show, etc.
970. Justices, etc., shall file transcript of docket with clerk of district court, etc.

—The mayor, or the officer, by law, exercising the duties usually incumbent upon the mayors of incorporated towns and cities, and recorders thereof, shall exercise, within the corporate limits of their respective towns or cities, the same criminal jurisdiction which belongs to justices of the peace within their jurisdiction, under the provisions of this Code. [O. C. 813.]

Repeal of article.—This article seems to be entirely superseded by the Corporation Court Act (arts. 109a—109g, 929a, 985b—986b, 1177a, of this Code). But the continued existence of this article, together with articles 108, 964 and 965, is recognized by certain allusions in the opinion in State ex rel. Bergeron v. Travis County Court (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 365, as well as by its incorporation in the revision of 1911. See, also, arts. 968 and 918, Rev. St. 1911. It seems evident, however, that in cities, towns, and villages in which a corporation court has been organized the former provisions relating to mayors and recorders have no application. The substance of this article and art. 108 is carried into the new act (art. 109b, ante). Art. 964 is displaced by section 6 of the new act (art. 968b, post). Art. 965 contains provisions not covered by the Corporation Court act, and would seem to be operative in localities possessing a Corporation Court. Art. 109, ante, in so far as it relates to mayors and recorders in cities having corporation courts is superseded by section 6 of the Corporation Court Act (art. 968b, post). Arts. 1175—1177, relating to fees in mayors' and recorders' courts are likewise superseded by section 13 of the Corporation Court Act (art. 968j, post). Arts. 1180 and 1181 are made applicable to the corporation court by section 12 of the Corporation Court Act (art. 968f, post). Art. 966 may have operative effect as to the corporation court. Art. 967 is not applicable to the corporation court in view of section 14 (art. 968h, post). Arts. 968—970, as far as applicable to mayors and recorders, have no direct counterpart in the corporation court act, unless the general provision adopting the practice of the county court (art. 96b, post) excludes their application to the corporation court.

Constitutionality.—In Blessing v. City of Galveston (1875) 42 Tex. 641, it was held, that under the constitution, the legislature had power to create municipal judicial tribunals to enforce the police powers delegated to the municipal body. In 1877, the Supreme Court, in Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 413, held that the jurisdiction of the various courts named in the constitution was fixed by that document, and to alter that jurisdiction with no power to alter creation of a special tribunal, the powers conferred on which would intermarch on the constitutional authority of one of the regularly created courts. The Towles decision was followed in 1884 by the decision in Gilson v. Templeton, 63 Tex. 555. In Ex parte Glennoch (1895) 39 S. W. 62, the Court of Appeals held that a special statute creating a court with exclusive jurisdiction over violations of the Sunday laws in the City of Fort Worth was unconstitutional in so far as it excluded the jurisdiction of justices of the peace over the same subject. In Leach v. State (1896) 51 Tex. St. 471, the Court of Appeals held that the legislature is without power to create a municipal court with jurisdiction concurrent with the constitutional state courts over violations of state laws. The decision in the Leach case, supra, was overruled by the Supreme Court in Harris County v. Steinmetz, 66 Tex. 669, and it was held that, under the power conferred by Const. art. 5, § 1, "to establish such other courts as it (the legislature) may deem necessary," and to "prescribe the jurisdiction and organization thereof;" the legislature was authorized to confer on a city recorder's court jurisdiction to try offenses against the general penal laws of the state. In the following year the Court of Criminal Appeals, in Ex parte Page, 38 App. 573, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 212, and Ex parte Coombs (1898) 38 App. 648, 44 S. W. 854, adhered to its decision in the Leach case, supra, and held that the legislature was without constitutional authority to create a corporation court with jurisdiction exclusive of or concurrent with the regular state courts to try violations of the penal laws. But in 1900 the Court of Criminal Appeals overruled its decisions in the Leach and Coombs cases, and in Ex parte Wilburger, 41 App. 541, 55 S. W. 965, held that the act of the 26th Legislature creating the corporation court, was not violative of Const. art. 5, § 1, in that it infringed the jurisdiction of the state courts, or of Const. art. 5, § 18, limiting the number of justices in each county, and that such act was not invalid as a local jurisdiction on the same subject created by Crim. arts. 266, 273, 274, 275, 276, 585, 586, 587, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, and 598, and § 114 of Acts 1901, 4th Extra. Sess., controlling the office of justices of the peace. In re Wilburger, 41 App. 541, 55 S. W. 965, ex parte Hunt, 41 App. 541, 55 S. W. 965, ex parte Hart, 41 App. 581, 56 S. W. 341, ex parte Aiamus, 56 App. 465, 120 S. W. 883, 18 Ann. Cas. 45, ex parte Hubbard, 63 App. 515, 140 S. W. 451, the Court of Criminal Appeals followed its decision in the Wilburger case, and in State ex rel. Bergevin v. Travis County Court (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 265, it held that articles 963, 964, and 965, of the C. of C. P. of 1911, were valid enactments.

There seems no good reason why the Corporation Court Act should not be incorporated into the criminal statutes, the jurisdiction of the court being entirely criminal, and the act creating it being a penal provision, as with, articles 198, 199, 965-965, 1175-1177, 1185, 1191. In view of the situation the act is inserted in this compilation as arts. 100a-106g, 929n, 965b-965j, 1177a. See, also, Ex parte Whitlow, 59 Tex. 273; Davis v. State, 2 App. 425; Ex parte Bohnon, 14 App. 609; Ex parte Wills, 27 App. 324, 11 S. W. 414; McLain v. State, 31 App. 555, 21 S. W. 365; Corey v. State, 28 App. 449, 13 S. W. 775; Ex parte Knox (Cr. Ex officio jurisdiction.—Mayors and recorders had no ex officio jurisdiction under the Constitution of 1869. Holmes v. State, 44 Tex. 631; Bigby v. Tyler, 44 Tex. 363.

Art. 964. [930] Mayors or recorders governed by same rules as justices of the peace.—The proceedings before mayors or recorders shall be governed by the same rules which are prescribed for justices of the peace; and every provision of this Code with respect to a justice shall be construed to extend to mayors and recorders within the limits of their jurisdiction. [O. C. 814.]

Art. 965. [931] Mayors and justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction given to mayors and recorders of incorporated towns and cities shall not prevent justices of the peace from exercising the criminal jurisdiction conferred upon them; but in all cases where there is an incorporated town or city within the bounds of a county, the justice and the mayor or recorder shall have concurrent jurisdiction within the limits of such town or city. And no person shall be punished twice for the same act or omission, although such act or omission may be an offense against the penal laws of the state, as well as against the ordinances of such city or town; provided, that no ordinance of a city or town shall be valid which provides for a less penalty for any act, omission or offense.
than is prescribed by the statute, where such act or omission is an offense against the state. [Act 1879, Extra Session, ch. 19.]

1. Constitutionality and repeal.—See notes under art. 965, ante.

2. Prior law.—Before the enactment of this article a conviction under a city ordinance did not bar a prosecution by the state. Hamilton v. State, 3 App. 643; Bingham v. State, 2 App. 21.

A Sunday ordinance held not unconstitutional but to protect the inhabitants of the city in the enjoyment of the religious privileges secured by the Bill of Rights. Gabel v. City of Houston, 29 Tex. 375.

An incorporated town of less than 1000 inhabitants can enact the State Sunday law into its ordinances, and in any event the mayor of such town would have jurisdiction under article 601 [525] of the Revised Statutes of 1895 to hear and determine all violations. Ex parte Ahram, 34 App. 616. Ex parte Wills, 18 W. 818, distinguishing Grace's case, 9 App. 281, and Flood's case, 19 App. 584.

When the charter of a municipality authorizes it to make laws consistent with the constitution and state laws, it may make it an offense to be drunk within the corporate limits. Ex parte Oliver, 3 App. 315.

Municipal corporations, like all other corporations, derive their powers from legislative grant, and can do no act for which authority is not expressly given, or may not be reasonably inferred. Flood v. State, 19 App. 584; Craddock v. State, 18 App. 567.

The effect of article 7452 of Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, is to confer upon city councils the power to enact ordinances declaring what hours on Sunday drinking houses, etc., shall be closed, but it can not be construed to empower city councils to enact ordinances regulating the hours on Sundays when goods, etc., may be sold. Flood v. State, 19 App. 584, overruling upon this point Craddock v. State, 18 App. 567. See, also, Bohmy v. State, 21 App. 597, 2 S. W. 886. For decisions as to ordinances with respect to disorderly houses, see Ex parte Wilson, 14 App. 592; Hambly v. State, 16 App. 444; Davis v. State, 2 App. 425.

An ordinance requiring the marshal and policeman to shoot all dogs not muzzled found on the street is void. Lynn v. State, 32 App. 153, 25 S. W. 778.

The Legislature may pass an act granting to cities the power to regulate peddling within their jurisdictions. Ex parte Henson, 49 App. 177, 90 S. W. 574.

4. Concurrent and conflicting power of state and municipality.—Where the charter of a city authorizes it "to locate and regulate variety theaters," and "to prevent the sale, * * * of any intoxicating liquor," therein, an ordinance is valid, declaring such sale unlawful, to be a penalty offense for one committed with a variety theater to sell intoxicating liquors, though such offense is not defined in the Penal Code. Ayers v. City of Dallas, 32 App. 608, 25 S. W. 631.

It is not a valid objection that the ordinance makes that act an offense which is not defined in the Penal Code of the state. In preservation of the life, health, good order, and public morals, many acts not unlawful in themselves, or not defined or punished by the Penal Code, may be prohibited by the ordinances. Ayres v. City of Dallas, 32 App. 608, 25 S. W. 631.

The power of the state to license peddlers does not exclude the right of cities under the authority of statute to regulate them and to prohibit their use of certain streets and the public square. Ex parte Henson, 49 App. 177, 90 S. W. 574.

A city council has no authority, and cannot be authorized by the legislature, to pass an ordinance punishing an act which is made an offense and punished by statute. Ballard v. City of Dallas (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 884; Crowley v. Same (Cr. App.) 44 S. W. 886; Ex parte Faige, 38 App. 570, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 212; Coombs v. State, 38 App. 648, 44 S. W. 584. Ex parte Wickson (Cr. App.) 47 S. W. 643.

An affray, though an offense, by statute, against the state, may by ordinance be made an offense against a city, so as to authorize prosecution under the ordinance. Ex parte Freeland, 38 App. 321, 42 S. W. 285.

The power conferred by act of 1871 on the corporate authorities of Waco to license houses of prostitution operates to exempt holders of licenses granted under it from punishment under the provisions of Pen. Code 1856, making the keeping such houses a misdemeanor. Davis v. State, 2 App. 425.

Section 56 of the charter of the city of Ft. Worth (Sp. Laws 1859, p. 78), which provides that the common council of said city shall have power "to close drinking houses and all places or establishments where intoxicating liquors are sold on Sunday," does not vest in the city exclusive power by ordinance to regulate, control, and prohibit the traffic in liquor on Sunday within the corporate limits of the city, so as to supersede, within the city limits, the operation of the Ex parte Ginnocchio, 36 App. 544, 13 S. W. 32.

Dallas City Charter (Sp. Laws 1907, c. 71) granted it authority to regulate billiard and pool halls within its limits, and save the city all the power to enact police regulations in respect thereto which the Legislature itself possessed. Ex parte Brewer (Cr. App.) 155 S. 1068; Ex parte Pichius (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1074.

The city of Dallas is not exempted from the general laws regarding house draining (arts. 996-998), because Davis v. Holland (Civ. App.) 168 S. W. 11.

Where traffic on Sunday is prohibited by a law of the state, an ordinance of a city allowing such traffic between certain hours is void. Bohm v. State, 21 App. 597, 5 S. W. 886.

A city ordinance requiring railroad companies to ring bells while their engines are in motion within the city limits is not invalid because a statute (Vernon's Statutes 1914, art. 6564) only requires such signals to be given just before and while crossing highways. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Calvert, 11 Civ. App. 297, 32 S. W. 246.

Under Const. art. 1, § 28, declaring that the legislature only shall have power to suspend the laws of the state, and Vernon's Statutes 1914, art. 6564, requiring locomotives to whistle at crossings, Dallas city ordinance prohibiting the blowing of a steam whistle in the city limits is unconstitutional, and the city in a suit against a railroad for injuries caused by being struck by a train at a crossing in the city of Dallas, it was error to refuse to charge that it was the duty of defendant to sound the whistle at the crossing. Curtis v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 26 Civ. App. 304, 63 S. W. 149.

Beaumont City Charter, § 33 (Sp. Laws 1899, p. 159), provides that the city may, by ordinance, exercise such powers as may be necessary under the state law to suppress gambling houses, lotteries, and pool selling. § 24 provides that nothing contained in the act shall be construed to suspend any of the penal laws of the state, and that the council may pass any ordinance, within the limitations of the act, not in conflict with such penal laws. Acts 25th Leg. (Sp. Sess.) p. 51, subd. 11, provides for a state tax levy upon selling pools on horse races; and Beaumont City Charter, § 71, authorizes the city council to levy a similar city tax. Held, that the city had no power to prohibit pool selling on horse races, since such prohibition would be in conflict with the penal laws of the state. Ex parte Powell, 43 App. 591, 66 S. W. 298.

A municipal ordinance prohibiting pool selling on horse races, and providing for a punishment against any saloon keeper permitting pool selling on his premises, is void, being in conflict with a state law licensing the selling of pools on horse races. Ex parte Ogden, 43 App. 531, 66 S. W. 1100.

Ordinances authorizing the opening of saloons and sales of liquor in a city on Sunday, except certain hours, being violative of the state law, are void. Pay v. State, 33 App. 283, 71 S. W. 692; ex parte Arroyo v. State (Cr. App.) 67 S. W. 500.

Beaumont City Charter (Acts 29th Leg., Sp. Laws 1906, p. 435, c. 49, § 104), conferring on the city council the right to prescribe by ordinance in what part of the city saloons shall not be conducted, but providing that the city may not prohibit the business in the whole city, and an ordinance in pursuance thereof, specifying territory in which saloons shall not be allowed, and providing that the ordinance shall not affect liquor licenses from the federal, state, county, or municipal authorities then in force within the city limits, are not in conflict with the Bankin-McGregor act (Acts 30th Leg., Laws 1907, p. 260, c. 138, § 10), a general state law providing that one desiring a retail liquor dealer's license may petition therefor, stating the place where the business is to be conducted, and, if the place be in any block more bona fide residences than business houses, the petition shall be accompanied with the written consent of the majority of bona fide householders in the block, etc. Andrews v. City of Beaumont, 51 Civ. App. 625, 118 S. W. 614.

Where there is a conflict between the statute and an ordinance, the latter must yield, if either must be held invalid. Mantel v. State, 55 App. 456, 117 S. W. 555, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518; Sue Lung v. State (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 657.

The city of Dallas may adopt ordinances to protect the public health, provided they conform to the state law. Id.

Houston City Charter of 1903 (Sp. Acts 1903, c. 20) § 12, authorizing the city to prohibit and punish keepers and inmates of bawdyhouses, and to segregate and regulate the city to establish and keep the peace, deliver women, and suspend the laws punishing prostitution, and the keeping of houses of prostitution therein, and the council may not license the crime. McDonald v. Demor (Cr. App.) 122 S. W. 823.

Under Const. 1876, art. 1, § 28, providing that no power of suspending laws shall be exercised except by the Legislature, Houston City Charter of 1903 (Sp. Acts 917.)
Art. 965  PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES, ETC.  (Title 11

1908, c. 20) § 12, cannot authorize the city to set apart a portion of the city where lewd women may ply their vocation with immunity. Id.

A municipal ordinance making it unlawful for any person to rent any house to any law-abiding woman outside of prescribed limits implies making it lawful to rent houses to such persons within the prescribed limits, and is invalid as suspending the laws of the state punishing prostitution and the keeping of houses of prostitution. Id.

The Dallas ordinance prohibiting bawdyhouses except in a defined district is not void as conflicting with the Penal Code prohibition against keeping such houses; no penalty being prescribed nor license given. Hatch v. City of Dallas (Civ. App.) 133 S. W. 914.

Dallas city ordinance regulating, colonizing, and segregating keepers and inmates of bawdyhouses is in violation of Pen. Code, art. 590, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 132, providing that any person who shall keep a disorderly house, shall be punished by fine, imprisonment, etc., and invalid, Const. art. 1, § 28, providing that no power to suspend laws shall be exercised except by the Legislature, so that the city could not suspend the article 590 within the specified district. Brown Cracker & Candy Co. v. City of Dallas, 104 Tex. 290, 137 S. W. 342, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 504.

A town ordinance forbidding pool halls to be open after 9 o'clock p. m. held in direct conflict with the state law. Ex parte Farley (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 530.

Ordinance of city of Ft. Worth, making it unlawful for white person and negro to have sexual intercourse, each constituting a separate offense, held not invalid, as conflicting with Pen. Code, art. 490, defining adultery, or article 494, defining fornication. Strauss v. State (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 663.

Where a state law provides as a penalty for the obstruction of the streets of a town not to exceed $50, a town ordinance punishing the obstruction of its streets by fine not in excess of $25 conflicts with the state law, and is void. Ex parte Cross, 44 App. 756, 71 S. W. 289.

An municipal ordinance punishing any person engaging in the bungo business by a penalty of not less than $101 nor more than $500, when construed as prohibiting gambling, is invalid, because in conflict with the Penal Code, punishing gambling, and prescribing a punishment of not less than $10 nor more than $25 for a violation thereof. S. v. State, 46 App. 866, 81 S. W. 729.

Wherever the penalty in a municipal ordinance exceeds or is less than the penalty prescribed by the state law for the same offense, the ordinance is invalid. Ex parte Maloney, 44 App. 103 S. W. 390.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 419, empowers cities and towns to cause all able-bodied male inhabitants above 18 to work on the roads and to enforce the provision by ordinances. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4730a, amends the article by limiting the ages of persons liable to such work to from 21 to 45. Held, that the Legislature delegated full power to the cities and towns, and they might impose such penalties to enforce the labor of citizens as they saw fit, without reference to the state law as to working the roads, subject to limitation of punishment as fixed by their local courts, and hence an ordinance providing for a fine not exceeding $25 was not invalid because imposing a penalty in excess of Pen. Code 1895, art. 491, providing a fine not to exceed $10 in such cases. Ex parte Drake, 55 App. 225, 116 S. W. 49.

Dallas City Charter (Sp. Laws 1897, p. 549, c. 73) art. 2, § 15, and C. C. P. 1895, art. 965, prohibit ordinances fixing a less penalty for an offense than is fixed by statute for a like offense. The state pure food law makes violations of some of its provisions punishable by imprisonment, and others by a maximum fine of $5. City of Dallas covers the state law ordinance covers a penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $200 for violation of its provisions. Held, that the ordinance is invalid. Mantel v. State, 55 App. 456, 117 S. W. 825, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518; Sue Lung v. Same (Cr. App.) 117 S. W. 857.

A town ordinance prescribing a less punishment for an offense similar to one under the state law than that fixed by the state law is void. Ex parte Farley (Cr. App.) 144 S. W. 530.

Under C. C. P. art. 965, an ordinance denouncing an offense denounced by the general law must prescribe the same penalty, and is admissible in evidence in a prosecution of such violation. Neuvan v. State, 72 App. 410, 163 S. W. 58.

10. Matters of procedure.—Art. 975, post, providing that offenses against the state shall be prosecuted in the name of the state does not preclude a municipal corporation from prosecuting in its own name an offense against its penal ordinances; article 956 providing that defendant shall not be discharged for any informality, etc. Ex parte Boulard, 11 App. 159.

A city charter which purported to give exclusive jurisdiction to the city court of all violations of the Sunday law within the city limits between 12 p. m. Saturday and 9 a. m. Sunday and 4 p. m. Sunday and 12 p. m. Sunday, held void as attempting to destroy the jurisdiction of courts created by the Texas penal code, 30 App. 584, 18 S. W. 891.

Under San Antonio city charter, which provides (section 103) that the city council shall have power to pass and repeal ordinances, rules, and police regulations, the city council had no authority to pass an ordinance empowering police officers to make and issue a warrant, as the latter is deemed suspicious, as art. 261, only authorizes such arrest of "persons found in suspicious places, and under circumstances which reasonably show that such persons have been guilty of some felony or breach of the peace, or threaten, or are about to commit some offense against the laws." Joske v. Irvine (Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 278.

Chap. 1)  PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES, ETC.  Art. 968b

An act granting a municipal corporation authority to make an offense against the state also an offense against the city, with power to prosecute therefor in the city court, as contrary to ordinance, violates Const. art. 5, § 12, requiring all prosecutions of offenses against the state to be in the name of the state, and to conclude against its peace and dignity. Ex parte Faggg, 33 App. 573, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 212.

Art. 966. In towns and villages embracing territory in two counties, procedure on appeal from; and examining trials before mayors or recorders.—In towns and villages that may be incorporated on territory in two counties, in the trial of the offense before the mayor or recorder for a violation of the laws of the state or the ordinances of the corporation, an appeal shall be to the county court of the county in which the offense may have been committed; and, in cases which said mayor or recorder have not final jurisdiction, but when sitting as an examining court, parties brought before them, on such examining court, charged with an offense against the laws of the state, shall be bound over by them to the county court of the county in which said offense is alleged to have been committed, or the district court, as the case may be. [Act 1897, p. 193.]

Constitutionality and repeal.—See notes under art. 963.

Art. 967. [932] Warrant issued by mayor, directed to whom.—Warrants issued by a mayor or recorder are directed to the marshal or other proper officer of the town or city where the criminal proceeding is had; but, in case there be no such officer, the process issued by a mayor or recorder shall be directed to any peace officer within the city, town or county, and shall be executed by such officer.

See ante, articles 259, et seq.
Constitutionality and repeal.—See notes under art. 963.

Art. 968. [933] Warrant issued by mayor, etc., may be executed, where.—When the party for whose arrest a warrant is issued by a mayor or recorder is not to be found within the limits of the incorporation, the same may be executed anywhere within the limits of the county in which such incorporation is included, by the marshal or other proper officer of such town or city, or by any peace officer of such county, and may be executed in any county in the state under the same rules governing warrants of arrest issued by a justice of the peace.

See ante, arts. 265, et seq.
Constitutionality and repeal.—See notes under art. 963.

Art. 968a. [406] [362] Right of trial before jury.—Every person brought before the mayor or recorder, to be tried for an offense for which the penalty may be fine or imprisonment, or both, shall be entitled, if he shall demand it, to be tried by a jury of six legal voters of the city, who shall be summoned, impaneled and qualified as jurors in justices' courts under the laws of the state. [Act 1875, 2 S. S., p. 113, sec. 19.]

See Burns v. La Grange, 17 Tex. 415; Smith v. San Antonio, 17 Tex. 648.

Explanatory.—The above article was not included in the C. C. P. of 1811, and is carried into this compilation from the civil statutes to make a complete exposition in the criminal statutes of the provisions relating to mayors' and recorders' courts.

Art. 968b. Rules of pleading, practice and procedure.—All rules of pleading, practice and procedure now established for the county court shall apply in said corporation court in each such city, town or village, in so far as the same are applicable, except that the proceedings in said court shall be commenced by complaint in the manner and under the regulations, as now provided by law, in cases prosecuted before justices of the peace, and except that the recorder need not charge the jury except upon charges requested in writing by the defendant or his attorney; which such charges he shall have power to give or refuse under the same rules and regulations now applicable to the granting or refusing of such charges by the county judge in criminal cases. Complaints before such court hereby created and established may be sworn to before the recorder, clerk of said court, the city secretary, the city attorney or his deputy, each and all of which officers, for that purpose, shall have power to administer oaths; or it may be sworn to before any other officer authorized by law to administer oaths; provided, that, in all cities, towns and villages in this state not operating under special charters, the rules of pleading, practice and procedure now established for justices courts shall apply to said corporation courts in such cities, towns and villages in so far as the same are applicable. [Act 1899, p. 42, sec. 6.]
Art. 968b  PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES, ETC.  (Title 11)

Explanatory.—In Blessing v. City of Galveston (1875) 42 Tex. 641, it was held that under the constitution, the legislature had power to create municipal judicial tribunals to enforce the police powers delegated to the municipal body. In 1877, the Supreme Court, in Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 415, held that the jurisdiction of the various courts named in the constitution was fixed by that document, and the legislature had no power to alter that jurisdiction by the creation of a special tribunal, the powers conferred on which would intrench on the constitutional authority of the courts. The Towles decision was followed in criminal cases, the City of Galveston v. Ginnochio (1881) 30 App. 584, 18 S. W. 82, the Court of Appeals held that a special statute creating a court with exclusive jurisdiction over violations of the Sunday Laws in the City of Galveston was unconstitutional in so far as it created a jurisdiction of justices of the peace over the same subject. In Leach v. State (1896) 38 App. 248, 36 S. W. 471, the Court of Criminal Appeals held that the legislature is without power to create a municipal court with jurisdiction concurrent with the county courts over violations of state laws. The decision in the Leach case, supra, was overruled by the Supreme Court in Harris County v. Stewart (1900) 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650, and it was held that, under the power conferred by Const. art. 5, § 1, to "establish such other courts as it (the legislature) may deem necessary" and to "prescribe the jurisdiction and organization thereof," the legislature was authorized to confer on a city recorder's court jurisdiction to try offenses against the general penal laws of the state. In the following year (1901) the Court of Criminal Appeals in Ex parte Fugg, 35 App. 573, 33 S. W. 120, and Ex parte Coombs, 38 App. 648, 44 S. W. 834, adhered to its decision in the Leach case, supra, and held that the legislature was without constitutional authority to create a corporation court with jurisdiction exclusive of or concurrent with the regular state courts to try violations of the penal laws. But in 1905 the Court of Criminal Appeals overruled its decision in the Leach and Combs cases, and in Ex parte Wilbarger, 41 App. 614, 56 S. W. 968, held that the act of the 20th Legislature creating the Corporation Court, was not violative of Const. art. 5, § 1, in that it infringed the jurisdiction of the state courts, or of Const. art. 5, § 18, limiting the number of justices in each county, and that such act was not invalid, as conferring both state and municipal jurisdiction on the same court. In Ex parte Hase, 41 App. 583, 56 S. W. 341; Ex parte Tedman, 47 App. 467; 33 S. W. 122; Ex parte Abrams, 56 App. 465, 120 S. W. 883; 18 Ann. Cas. 45; Ex parte Hubbard, 63 App. 516, 140 S. W. 451, the Court of Criminal Appeals followed its decision in the Wilbarger case, and in State ex rel. Bergeron v. Travis County Court (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 994 and 965 of the Court in 1911, were valid enactments. There seems no good reason why the Corporation Court Act should not be incorporated into the Criminal Statutes, the jurisdiction of the court being entirely criminal, and the act creating it being a qualification of, or co-ordinate provision with, articles 108, 983-985, C. C. P. In view of the situation the act is inserted in this compilation as arts. 109a-109g, 920a, 963b-968j, 1177a.

City attorney.—Authority to administer oaths.—The authority of a city attorney to administer oaths is limited to swearing affiants to complaints in corporation courts. Johnson v. State, 47 App. 550, 85 S. W. 274.

Where a city was operating under the general act applying to cities of its class, and its city court was not operating under the corporation court act (Acts 26th Leg., adjourned session, 1897, authorizing city attorneys to take affidavits in their names), the city attorney could not take the affidavit and swear the complainant in a prosecution for violating the local option law. Kirksey v. State, 58 App. 188, 125 S. W. 15.

Art. 968c.  Complaint, how commenced and concluded; prosecution conducted by city attorney or deputy; county attorney may also represent state; but no fees; process.—In all prosecutions in said court, whether under an ordinance or under the provisions of the Penal Code, the complaint shall commence in the name of the state of Texas, and shall conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the state;" and, where the offense is covered by an ordinance, the complaint may also conclude, as "contrary to the said ordinance;" and all prosecutions in such court shall be conducted by the city attorney or such city, town or village, or his deputy; but the county attorney may also represent the state of Texas; but no fees.
attorney of the county in which said city, town or village is situated may, if he so desires, also represent the state of Texas in such prosecutions, but, in all such cases, the said county attorney shall not be entitled to receive any fees or other compensation whatever for said services, and in no case shall the said county attorney have the power to dismiss any prosecution pending in said court, unless for reasons filed and approved by the recorder of said court. [Id. sec. 8.]

See note under art. 968b.

County attorney.—The county attorney has the exclusive right to appear in person or by deputy, and represent the state in all cases pending in a corporation court to which the state is a party, but he is entitled to no fees for so doing. Howth v. Green, 40 Civ. App. 552, 90 S. W. 212, 213.

— Constitutionality of provision of this article as to compensation of county attorney.—See Ex parte Wilburger, 41 App. 514, 55 S. W. 968, 971.

City attorney—Compensation.—Under a resolution of a city council, a city attorney held entitled to a pro rata share in commissions due city attorney on judgments collected by the city in suits brought by him, but not decided when he went out of office. City of Houston v. Stewart, 49 Civ. App. 499, 90 S. W. 49.

Under a resolution of a city council, a city attorney held entitled to commissions on taxes paid the city after he went out of office on judgments obtained by him. Id.

Under a resolution of a city council, giving city attorney a commission on sums collected by him by suit to enforce collection of taxes, the city held liable for arbitrarily releasing a portion of the judgment, or purchasing any of the property in satisfaction thereof. Id.

A city held to have had authority to give certain compensation for the collection of taxes by the city attorney. Id.

— Representing state.—Under charter requiring city attorney to represent the state in the recorder's court on request, in prosecutions for violations of Penal Code, held, that city attorney was entitled to such fees as would be payable to district or county attorney. Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.

When acting as justice of the peace, held, that city recorder could appoint city attorney to represent the state in prosecutions only when district or county attorney failed to attend. Id.

A city attorney is not entitled to fees for prosecuting criminals in the recorder's court in a county that has a county attorney. Harris County v. Stewart, 17 Civ. App. 1, 43 S. W. 52.

— Increase of salary during term of office.—See notes under art. 706f, Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914.

Art. 968d. Council to prescribe rules for collecting fees and costs, practice, etc.; rules in meantime.—The council or board of aldermen of each such city, town or village shall, from time to time, by ordinance, prescribe such rules, not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter nor other laws of this state, as in the discretion of the council or board of aldermen may be proper to enforce, by execution against the property of the defendant, or imprisonment of the defendant, the collection of all costs and fines imposed by such court as herein created and established, and shall also have power to adopt such rules and regulations concerning the practice and procedure in such court as said council or board of aldermen may deem proper, not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter nor other law of this state; and, until the passage of such ordinance, all rules and regulations of such city, town or village now in force concerning the municipal courts therein, and the enforcement of collection of fines and costs imposed by such court, shall be applicable to the court hereby created and established. [Id. sec. 9.]

See note under art. 968b.

Art. 968e. Fines and costs paid into city treasury, etc.—All costs and fines imposed by the said court in any city, town or village, in any prosecution therein, shall be paid into the city treasury of said city, town or village, for the use and benefit of the city, town or village. [Id. sec. 10.]

Constitutionality.—See Ex parte Wilburger, 41 App. 514, 55 S. W. 968, 971.

Art. 968f. Jury and witness fees, and enforcing attendance of witnesses according to Code of Criminal Procedure.—The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure now in force regulating the amount and collection of jury and witness fees, and for enforcing the attendance of witnesses in criminal cases tried before a justice of the peace, shall, so far as applicable, govern and be applicable to the trial of cases before the corporation court herein created and established. [Id. sec. 12.]

Art. 968g. Judge may punish for contempt as county judge; may take recognizances, admit to bail, etc., under rules in county court.—The judge of said corporation court shall have the power to punish for contempt to the same extent and under the same circumstances as the county judge may punish for contempt of the county court. He shall have power to take recognizances, admit to bail, and forfeit recognizances and bail bonds under such rules and regulations as now govern the taking and forfeiture of the same in the county court. [Id. sec. 13.]

May punish for contempt.—Under this article and art. 968b, construed with art. 1770, Vernon's Sess'ns' Civ. St. 1914, giving a county court power to punish, as stated, one guilty of contempt, a corporation court established under this act had the same power to punish for contempt as a county court. Ex parte Hubbard, 63 App. 516, 140 S. W. 451.

Art. 968h. Process, how served; defendant entitled to notice of complaint, if demanded.—All process issuing out of said corporation court shall be served by the chief of police or any policeman or marshal of the city, town or village within which it is situated, under the same rules and regulations as are now provided by law for the service by sheriffs and constables of process issuing out of the county court, so far as the same are applicable. But each defendant shall be entitled to at least one day's notice of any complaint against him, if such time be demanded. [Id. sec. 14.]

See note under art. 968b.

Art. 968i. [552] [481] Proceedings when a peace bond, etc., given before mayor, etc., has been forfeited.—Whenever any person has been required by the mayor or recorder to give a peace bond, or a bond for good behavior, or any similar bond under this title, and has complied with such orders, and been guilty of a violation or infraction of such bond, and the same is proved or established to the satisfaction of that officer in any trial or complaint, such party so offending may be fined in the sum of two hundred dollars and imprisoned for two months; and the city in its corporate name may sue in any court having jurisdiction for the recovery of the penalty of such bond. [Act 1875, p. 256, § 133. R. S. 1879, 481.]

See note under art. 968b.

Art. 968j. Fees of recorder, etc., how prescribed; paid out of city treasury; fines and costs collected and disposed of, how; committals; city liable to officers of appellate court, when; court to be always open.—Unless provided by special charter, the council or board of aldermen of each city, town or village shall, by ordinance, prescribe the compensation and fees which shall be paid to the recorder, city attorney, city secretary and other officers of said court, which compensation and fees shall be paid out of the treasury of the said city, town or village. In all such cases, the fines imposed on appeal, together with the costs imposed in the corporation court, and the court to which the appeal is taken, shall be collected of the defendant and his bondsmen, and such fine and the costs of the corporation court shall, when collected, be paid into the treasury of the city, town or village. When the defendant in such cases is committed to custody, he shall be committed to the custody of the chief of police or city marshal of such city, town or village, to be held by him in accordance with the ordinance of such city, town or village, providing for the custody of prisoners convicted before such corporation court; and said city, town or village shall be liable to the officers of the court to which the appeal is taken for the costs due them when such defendant has fully discharged such fine and costs. Such corporation court shall hold no terms, and shall be at all times open for the transaction of business. [Act 1899, p. 43, sec. 15.]

See note under art. 968b.

Art. 969. [934] Justices, etc., shall keep a criminal docket, which shall show, etc.—Each justice of the peace, mayor and recorder shall keep a docket in which he shall enter the proceedings in all examinations and trials for criminal offenses had before him, which docket shall show—
1. The style of the action.
2. The nature of the offense charged.
3. The date of the issuance of the warrant and the return made thereon.
4. The time when the examination or trial was had, and, if the same was a trial, whether it was by a jury, or by himself.
5. The verdict of the jury, if any.
6. The judgment of the court.
7. Motion for new trial, if any, and the action of the court thereon.
8. Notice of appeal, if any.
9. The time when, and the manner in which the judgment was enforced. [O. C. 817; Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 156, § 5.]
See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1043, 1044.
See, also, post, art. 992. See, also, notes under art. 963, ante.

Art. 970. [935] Justices, etc., shall file transcript of docket with clerk of district court, etc.—At each term of the district court, each justice of the peace, mayor and recorder in each county shall, on the first day of the term of said court for their county, file with the clerk of said court a certified transcript of the docket kept by such justice, mayor or recorder, as required by the preceding article, of all criminal cases examined or tried before him since the last term of such district court; and the clerk of such court shall immediately deliver such transcript to the foreman of the grand jury.
See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1044.

CHAPTER TWO OF THE ARREST OF THE DEFENDANT

Art. 971. Warrant may issue without complaint, when.—Whenever a criminal offense which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to try shall be committed within the view of such justice, he may issue his warrant for the arrest of the offender. [O. C. 819.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1029.

Arrest in other than summary proceedings.—See articles 260, 265 and 267, ante.
Cited: Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.

Art. 972. When complaint is made, shall be reduced to writing, etc.—Upon complaint being made before any justice of the peace, or any other officer authorized by law to administer oaths, that an offense has been committed in the county which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction finally to try, the justice or other officer shall reduce the same to writing, and cause the same to be signed and sworn to by the complainant; and it shall be duly attested by such justice or other officer before whom it was made; and when made before such justice, or when returned to him made before any other officer, the same shall be filed by him. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 165, § 29]

Complaint in other than summary proceedings.—See notes under arts. 34 and 269 et seq., ante.

Necessity of complaint.—Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650.

Prosecution by complaint alone.—Prosecutions for a felony must be upon indictment found by the grand jury, prosecutions for misdemeanors upon an information founded upon a complaint when brought in the county court, but under this article in prosecutions in justice court, only a complaint was required, and hence a complaint sworn to before the county attorney, without any information filed was sufficient therein. Ex parte Nitsche (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1101.

Jurat.—An information must be supported by a valid complaint. The jurat to the complaint must be signed by the officer officially. Scott v. State, 9 App. 434; Robertson v. State, 25 App. 529, 8 S. W. 699; Neiman v. State, 29 App. 500, 16 S. W. 263.

Art. 973. [938] What the complaint must state.—Such complaint shall state—
1. The name of the accused, if known, and, if unknown, shall describe him as accurately as practicable.
2. The offense with which he is charged shall be stated in plain and intelligible words.
3. It must appear that the offense was committed in the county in which the complaint is made.
4. It must show, from the date of the offense stated therein, that the offense is not barred by limitation. [Id.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1020.

Complaint in other than summary proceedings.—See notes under arts. 34 and 269 et seq., ante.

Requisites of complaint.—Cited, Harris County v. Stewart, 91 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650; Mistrot v. State, 72 App. 468, 163 S. W. 833.

Neither the constitutional beginning nor conclusion is essential to a complaint. Ex parte Jackson, 50 App. 324, 95 S. W. 1047.

It is unnecessary to name the person swearing to a criminal complaint in the body of the complaint, and hence the complaint was not defective because the name in the body of the complaint and that signed thereto was not the same. Dunn v. State, 71 App. 89, 158 S. W. 309.

The complaint does not fail to charge an offense because using "wilful" where the statute uses "knowingly"; the words being synonymous and "wilful" being of more extensive meaning (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7468-7481, 7835, 7836; vol. 5, pp. 3937, 3939). Ex parte Cowden (Cr. App.) 168 S. W. 539.

Art. 974. [939] Warrants shall issue, when.—Whenever the requirements of the preceding article have been complied with, the justice of the peace shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused and deliver the same to the proper officer to be executed. [Id., O. C. 821.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1031.

Art. 975. [940] Requisites of warrant of arrest.—Said warrant shall be deemed sufficient if it contain the following requisites:
1. It shall issue in the name of "The State of Texas."
2. It shall be directed to the proper sheriff, constable, or marshal, or some other person specially named therein.
3. It shall command that the body of the accused be taken, and brought before the authority issuing the warrant, at a time and place therein named.
4. It must state the name of the person whose arrest is ordered, if it be known; and, if not known, he must be described as in the complaint.
5. It must state that the person is accused of some offense against the laws of the state, naming the offense.
6. It must be signed by the justice, and his office named in the body of the warrant, or in connection with his signature. [Id., O. C. 821.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1029, 1031.

Warrant in other than summary proceedings.—See ante, arts. 265, 266 and notes. Cited, Sullivan v. State (Cr. App.) 148 S. W. 1091.

Art. 976. [941] Justices may summon witnesses to disclose crime.—When a justice of the peace has good cause to believe that an offense has been, or is about to be, committed against the laws of this state, he may summon and examine any witness or witnesses in relation thereto; and, if it shall appear from the statement of any witness or witnesses that an offense has been committed, the justice shall reduce said statements to writing, and cause the same to be sworn to by the witness or witnesses making the same; and, thereupon such justice shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender, the same as if complaint had been made out, and filed against each offender. [Id., § 31.]

Power and duty of Justice.—Where a justice of the peace knows of his own knowledge, or under circumstances of a particular case has cause to believe, that an offense has been or is about to be committed against the laws of the State, he has no authority to directly require the offender's arrest, but is authorized to summon witnesses, and he can become a witness himself. Under such circumstances it is the duty of the justice of the peace to institute proceedings against the offender, and cause witnesses to come before him, and if it develops that the suspected person is probably guilty it is his duty to have him arrested and tried. If he fails to do this, the failure is a dereliction of duty, and if in consideration of his failure he accepts a bribe he is guilty of an offense without regard to the actual guilt of the person who has been arrested and tried. Morawietz v. State, 46 App. 436, 80 S. W. 998.

Inspection of testimony.—Where the proceedings are authorized by law, whether at an inquest, or to discover the murderer, the testimony of the witnesses taken down is a public document, and a defendant has the right on proper motion to inspect and use it if he deems it necessary. Jenkins v. State, 45 App. 173, 75 S. W. 312.

The right of inspection as authorized under this article and art. 977, post, does not extend to confessions of an accused made before the grand jury, and in possession of state's counsel. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Error, if any, in refusing to compel the state's counsel to deliver to accused such confessions for inspection, it not appearing that either she or her counsel were ignorant of their nature, was cured where they were in fact turned over to counsel for their examination. Goode v. State, 57 App. 220, 123 S. W. 597.

Allegation of indictment.—The indictment should not allege the tribunal before which the perjury (in this case) was committed as a "court of inquiry" but as follows: "Said justice having good cause to believe that an offense against the laws of the State had been committed in Fisher county, to constitute cotton, etc., and having jurisdiction to examine into the same caused said W. F. Moritz to come before him as a witness," etc. The court might in common parlance be termed a court of inquiry to disclose crime, but the statute does not so term it, and it is always best to follow the terms of the statute. Morris v. State, 47 App. 439, 83 S. W. 1127.

Territorial jurisdiction.—Cited, Barnes v. State (Cr. App.) 152 S. W. 1043.

One justice of the peace cannot go into another justice's precinct where there is a resident qualified justice of the peace and institute or hold a court of inquiry under this article. But he can go as a magistrate to hold an examining trial. Brown v. State, 56 App. 572, 118 S. W. 142, 143.

Art. 977. [942] Witnesses may be fined, etc., for refusing to make statements, etc.—Witnesses summoned under the preceding article who shall refuse to appear and make a statement of facts, under oath, shall be guilty of a contempt of court, and may be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, and may be attached and imprisoned until they make such statement. [Id., § 32.]

Confession as public record.—See notes under article 976, ante.

Art. 978. [943] How warrant is executed.—Any peace officer into whose hands a warrant may come shall execute the same by arresting the person accused, and bringing him forthwith before the proper magistrate, or by taking bail for his appearance before such magistrate, as the case may be. [O. C. 822.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1035.

Confession as public record.—See notes under article 976, ante.

Execution of warrant in general.—See articles 250 and 318, ante.
Art. 979. [944] Any person may be authorized to execute warrant.—A justice of the peace may, when he deems it necessary, authorize any person other than a peace officer to execute a warrant of arrest by naming such person specially in the warrant; and, in such case, such person shall have the same powers, and shall be subject to the same rules that are conferred upon and govern peace officers in like cases. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 166, § 33.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 558, 1031.

Execution of warrant in general.—See article 278, ante.

Officer entitled to carry pistol.—When one has been duly appointed and is acting under this article he has the rights and privileges of a peace officer and is entitled to carry his pistol. Jenkins v. State, 47 App. 321, 42 S. W. 1058.

Extent and termination of authority.—O'Neal v. State, 32 App. 42, 22 S. W. 25.

Art. 980. [945] Where an offense has been committed in another county, etc.—Whenever complaint is made before any justice of the peace that a felony has been committed in any other than a county in which the complaint is made, it shall be the duty of such justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of the accused, directed as in other cases, commanding that the accused be arrested and taken before the county judge, or any magistrate of the county where such felony is alleged to have been committed, forthwith, for examination as in other cases. [Id., § 39.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 558, 1034.

Complaint in general.—See article 281, ante.

Warrant to whom directed.—A warrant issued by a justice must be directed to an officer of his own county. Toliver v. State, 32 App. 444, 24 S. W. 256.

CHAPTER THREE OF THE TRIAL AND ITS INCIDENTS

Art. 981. Justice shall try cause without delay.
982. Defendant may waive trial by jury.
983. Jury shall be summoned if defendant does not waive same.
984. Juror may be fined, etc.
985. Complaint, etc., shall be read to defendant.
986. Defendant shall not be discharged by reason of informality, etc.
987. Challenge of jurors.
988. Other jurors summoned, when.
989. Oath to be administered to jury.
990. Defendant shall plead, etc.
991. The only special plea.
992. Pleadings are oral.
993. Proceedings upon plea of guilty.
994. When defendant refuses to plead, etc.
995. Witnesses examined, by whom.
996. Defendant may appear by counsel; argument of counsel.

Art. 988. Jury to be kept together till they agree.
999. If the jury fail to agree, shall be discharged.
1000. When court adjourns the defendant shall enter into bail.
1001. When the jury have agreed upon a verdict.
1002. Justice shall enter verdict.
1003. Defendant placed in jail, when.
1004. New trial may be granted defendant.
1005. Application must be made in one day.
1006. When new trial is granted, another trial without delay.
1007. Only one new trial shall be granted.
1008. State not entitled to new trial.
1009. Notice of appeal [Superseded].
1010. Effect of appeal.
1011. Judgments, etc., shall be in open court.

Art. 981. [946] Justice shall try cause without delay.—When the defendant is brought before the justice, he shall proceed to try the cause without delay, unless good ground be shown for a postponement thereof, in which case, he may postpone the trial to any time not longer than five days, and may, if he deem proper, require the defendant to give bail for his appearance; and if, when required, he fails to give bail, he shall be kept in custody until the final determination of the cause. [O. C. 823.]

See article 109, ante.

Art. 982. [947] Defendant may waive trial by jury.—The defendant, in case of misdemeanor of which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to finally try and determine, may waive a trial by jury; and, in such case, the justice shall proceed to hear and determine the case without a jury.

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1039, 1041.

Art. 983. [948] Jury shall be summoned, if defendant does not waive same.—If the defendant does not waive a trial by jury, the justice shall issue a writ commanding the proper officer to summon forthwith a jury of six men, qualified to serve as jurors in the county; and said jurors, when so summoned, shall remain in attendance as jurors in all cases that may come up for hearing until discharged by the court. [O. C. 826; Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 167, § 3.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1037.

Art. 984. [949] Juror may be fined, etc.—Any person summoned as juror who fails to attend may be fined by the justice as for contempt not exceeding twenty dollars. [O. C. 826.]

Art. 985. [950] Complaint, etc., shall be read to defendant.—If the warrant has been issued upon a complaint made to the justice, the complaint and warrant shall be read to the defendant. If issued by the justice without previous complaint, he shall state to the defendant the accusation against him. [O. C. 824.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1039, 1040.

Information not necessary.—See Ex parte Nitsche (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1101.

Art. 986. [951] Defendant shall not be discharged by reason of informality.—A defendant shall not be discharged by reason of any informality in the complaint or warrant; and the proceeding before the justice shall be conducted without reference to technical rules. [O. C. 825.]

Art. 987. [952] Challenge of jurors.—In all trials by a jury, before a justice of the peace, the state and each of the defendants in the case shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges, and also to any number of challenges for cause, which cause shall be judged of by the justice. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 160, § 12.]

Art. 988. [953] Other jurors shall be summoned, when.—If, from challenges or any other cause, a sufficient number of jurors are not in attendance, the justice shall order the proper officer to summon a sufficient number of qualified persons to form the jury. [Id., § 12.]

Art. 989. [954] Oath to be administered to jury.—The following oath or affirmation shall be administered by the justice of the peace to the jury in each case: "You, and each of you, do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you will well and truly try the cause about to be submitted to you, and a true verdict render therein, according to the law and the evidence, so help you God." [O. C. 834.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 958, 1038.

Oath as affecting perjury.—On a trial for perjury wherein it was insisted that the offense had not been committed, because the jury had not been sworn in the case on trial before the justice of the peace, on which trial it was alleged the accused had committed the perjury charged, held the correct rule is, that if the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, and the oath is required by law, irregularities in the proceedings will not prevent perjury. Smith v. State, 31 App. 815, 20 S. W. 707.

Art. 990. [955] Defendant shall plead, etc.—After impaneling the jury, the defendant shall be required to plead; and he may plead "guilty" or "not guilty," or the special plea named in the succeeding article. [O. C. 829.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1036.

Plea by constable.—A constable cannot in the absence of the defendant in a misdemeanor case make a plea of guilty for him. Ex parte Jones, 46 App. 433, 80 S. W. 996.
Art. 991. [956] The only special plea.—The only special plea allowed is that of former acquittal or conviction for the same offense. [O. C. 830.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1036; ante, art. 572.

Art. 992. [957] Pleadings are oral.—All pleading in the justices' courts, in criminal actions, is oral; but the justice shall note upon his docket the nature of the plea offered. [O. C. 831.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1036.
Duty to keep docket, see ante, art. 969.

Art. 993. [958] Proceedings upon plea of guilty.—If the defendant plead "guilty," proof shall be heard as to the offense; and the punishment shall be assessed by the jury, or by the justice, when a jury has been waived by the defendant. [O. C. 832.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1036, 1041; ante, art. 568.

Art. 994. [959] When defendant refuses to plead, etc.—If the defendant refuses to plead, the justice shall enter the plea of "not guilty," and the cause proceed accordingly. [O. C. 833.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 993, 1036.

Art. 995. [960] Witnesses examined by whom.—If the state be represented by counsel, he may examine the witness, and argue the cause; if the state is not represented, the witnesses shall be examined by the justice. [O. C. 835.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 993.

Art. 996. [961] Defendant may appear by counsel; argument of counsel.—The defendant has a right to appear by counsel, as in all other cases; but not more than one attorney shall conduct either the prosecution or defense; and the counsel for the state may open and conclude the argument. [O. C. 836.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 993.

Art. 997. [962] Rules of evidence.—The rules of evidence which govern the trials of criminal actions in the district and county court shall apply also to such actions in justices' courts. [O. C. 837.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 993.
See, ante, art. 783 et seq., and notes.

Art. 998. [963] Jury shall be kept together till they agree.—When the cause is submitted to the jury, they shall retire in charge of some officer, and be kept together until they agree to a verdict, or are discharged. [O. C. 838.]

Art. 999. [964] If the jury fail to agree, shall be discharged.—If a jury fail to agree upon a verdict after being kept together a reasonable time, they shall be discharged; and, if there be time left on the same day, another jury shall be impaneled to try the cause; or the justice may adjourn for not more than two days, and again impanel a jury for the trial of such cause. [O. C. 839.]

Art. 1000. [965] When court adjourns, the defendant shall enter into bail.—In case of an adjournment, the justice shall require the defendant to enter into bail for his appearance; and, upon the failure to give bail, the defendant may be held in custody. [O. C. 840.]

Art. 1001. [966] When the jury have agreed upon a verdict.—When the jury have agreed upon a verdict, they shall bring the same into court; and the justice shall see that it is in proper form. [O. C. 842.]

Art. 1002. [967] Justice shall enter verdict.—The justice shall enter the verdict upon his docket, and render the proper judgment thereon. [O. C. 843.]

Art. 1003. [968] Defendant may be placed in jail, when.—Whenever, by the provisions of this title, the peace officer is au-
Art. 1004. [969] New trial may be granted defendant.—A justice may, for good cause shown, grant the defendant a new trial, whenever such justice shall consider that justice has not been done the defendant in the trial of such case. [Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 176, § 17.]

Art. 1005. [970] Application must be made in one day.—An application for a new trial must be made within one day after the rendition of judgment, and not afterward; and the execution of the judgment shall not be stayed until a new trial has been granted.

Time for granting new trial.—When a justice grants a new trial more than ten days after judgment, a judgment on second trial is void. Odle v. Davis (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 721.

Art. 1006. [971] When new trial is granted, another trial without delay.—When a new trial has been granted, the justice shall proceed, as soon as practicable, to try the case again.

Art. 1007. [972] Only one new trial shall be granted.—Not more than one new trial shall be granted the defendant in the same case.

Art. 1008. [973] State not entitled to new trial.—The state shall, in no case, be entitled to a new trial.

See article 836, ante.

Art. 1009. [974] Notice of appeal. [Superseded by Act 1899, p. 233; art. 922, ante.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1022, 1043.

See notes under arts. 915, 921 and 922, ante.

Art. 1010. [975] Effect of appeal.—When a defendant gives notice of an appeal and files the appeal bond required by law with the justice, all further proceeding in the case in the justice’s court shall cease.

See article 916 and notes.

Explanatory.—The provision of the above article as to notice of appeal is superseded by Act 1899, p. 233 (art. 922, ante).

Jurisdiction of county court.—If the justice’s court has no jurisdiction of the case, an appeal confers none upon the county court. Billingsly v. State, 3 App. 686.

Art. 1011. [976] Judgments, etc., shall be in open court.—All judgments and final orders of a justice of the peace in a criminal action shall be rendered in open court, and entered upon his docket.

[Act Aug. 17, 1876, p. 162, § 17.]

Public trial.—See articles 4 and 23, ante.

Entry of judgment.—Judgment not entered until 9 days after its announcement is not void under this article. Ex parte Quong Lee, 34 App. 511, 31 S. W. 391.

CHAPTER FOUR

THE JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION

Art. 1012. The judgment.

1013. Capias for defendant, when.

1014. Execution shall issue.

Art. 1015. Defendant may be discharged from jail, how.

1016. Peace officer bound to execute process.

Article 1012. [977] The judgment.—The judgment, in case of conviction in a criminal action before a justice of the peace, shall be that the state of Texas recover of the defendant the fine assessed and costs, and that the defendant remain in custody of the sheriff
Art. 1012  PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES, ETC.  (Title 11)

until the fine and costs are paid; and, further, that execution issue to collect the same.  [O. C. 845.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1039-1042.

Requisites.—A judgment of justice court, which shows that guilt of defendant is ascertained, the amount of his fine determined and it is adjudged that he be committed to the county jail until the fine and costs were paid in full is essentially a final judgment in a justice court.  Funderburk v. State (Cr. App.) 64 S. W. 1866.

File marks.—It is no objection to the admissibility in evidence of the file papers and judgment of a justice court that the justice's file mark did not show of what precinct he was justice.  Smith v. State, 31 App. 315, 20 S. W. 707.

Art. 1013.  [978]  Capias for defendant, when.—If the defendant be not in custody when judgment is rendered, or, if he escapes from custody thereafter, a capias shall issue for his arrest and confinement in jail, until the fine and costs are paid, or he is legally discharged.

See ante, art. 867 and notes.

Warrant to be executed in another county is void.—Toliver v. State, 32 App. 444, 24 S. W. 286.

Art. 1014.  [979]  Execution shall issue.—In every case of conviction before a justice, and from which conviction no appeal is taken, there shall be issued an execution for the collection of the fine and costs, which shall be enforced and returned in the manner prescribed by law in civil actions before justices.  [O. C. 849.]

Art. 1015.  [980]  Defendant may be discharged from jail, how.—If a defendant be placed in jail on account of failure to pay the fine and costs, he can be discharged on habeas corpus by showing—

1. That he is too poor to pay the fine and costs.
2. That he has not been afforded an opportunity by the commissioners' court of the county of discharging the fine and costs adjudged against him, as provided in the law relating to county convicts; and, further,
3. That he has remained in jail a sufficient length of time to satisfy the fine and costs, at the rate of three dollars for each day.

But the defendant shall, in no case under this article, be discharged until he has been imprisoned at least ten days; and a justice of the peace may discharge the defendant upon his showing the same cause, by written application presented to such justice; and, upon such application being granted, the justice shall note the same on his docket.

See ante, art. 878, and notes.

Art. 1016.  [981]  Peace officer bound to execute process.—Every peace officer is bound to execute all process directed to him from a justice of the peace.  [O. C. 850.]

See ante, arts. 43, 44, 47; Pen. Code, arts. 325, 327.

TITLE 12
MISCELLANEOUS PROCEEDINGS

CHAPTER ONE
OF INQUIRIES AS TO THE INSANITY OF THE DEFENDANT AFTER CONVICTION

ART. 1017. Insanity after conviction.—If it be made known to the court at any time after conviction, or if the court has good reason to believe that a defendant is insane, a jury shall be impaneled to try the issue. [O. C. 781.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929, 979, 978, 979.

Construction of chapter.—This chapter relates to insanity “after” conviction. Guagando v. State, 41 Tex. 628.

Insanity before conviction.—See Pen. Code, art. 39.

Refusal of inquiry.—Under this and the following article, it was not reversible error to refuse an inquiry on affidavit made one month after the trial stating that accused “is” insane, where an issue as to his sanity was tried in the main case. Springer v. State, 63 App. 266, 149 S. W. 99.

Insanity as preventing sentence.—See ante, art. 861, subd. 2.

ART. 1018. Information as to insanity of defendant.—Information to the court as to the insanity of a defendant may be given by the written affidavit of any respectable person, setting forth that there is good reason to believe that the defendant has become insane. [O. C. 782.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929, 979.

Cited, Guagando v. State, 41 Tex. 628.

Refusal of inquiry.—Under this and the preceding article, it was not reversible error to refuse an inquiry on affidavit made one month after the trial stating that accused “is” insane, where an issue as to his sanity was tried in the main case. Springer v. State, 63 App. 266, 149 S. W. 99.

ART. 1019. Court shall impanel jury.—For the purpose of trying the question of insanity, the court shall impanel a jury as in the case of a criminal action. [O. C. 783.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929, 979.

See ante, art. 861, subd. 2.

ART. 1020. Defendant’s counsel may open, etc.—The counsel for the defendant has the right to open and conclude the argument upon the trial of an issue as to insanity. [O. C. 786.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929.

Trial on issue of insanity before conviction.—Shirley v. State, 37 App. 475, 36 S. W. 857.
Art. 1021. [986] Court shall appoint counsel, when.—If the defendant has no counsel, the court shall appoint counsel to conduct the trial for him. [O. C. 787.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929, 973.

Art. 1022. [987] No special formality required on trial.—No special formality is necessary in conducting the proceedings authorized by this chapter. The court shall see that the inquiry is conducted in such a manner as to lead to a satisfactory conclusion. [O. C. 784.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929.

Art. 1023. [988] When defendant is found insane.—When, upon the trial of an issue of insanity, the defendant is found to be insane, all further proceedings in the case against him shall be suspended until he becomes sane. [O. C. 788, 789.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929, 989.
Judgment.—If after conviction defendant is tried upon the issue of sanity voluntarily, an appeal cannot be taken from the judgment based upon the verdict. If defendant is found to be sane the judgment of guilty will be enforced. If insane he will be adjudged a lunatic and confined as the law requires. Holland v. State, 52 App. 160, 105 S. W. 813.
Restraint pending trial.—Under art. 39, providing that no person becoming insane after committing an offense shall be tried while insane, and this and the next two articles providing one found to have become insane after indictment and before trial may be restrained in an insane asylum, as authorized by Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, art. 126, until he becomes sane, and he must be returned for trial to the custody of the court having jurisdiction, and he may not be released on bail in the meantime, though the offense charged is bailable. Wilson v. State (Cr. App.) 149 S. W. 117.

Art. 1024. [989] Court shall commit insane defendant, etc.—When a defendant is found to be insane, the court shall make an order, and have the same entered upon the minutes, committing the defendant to the custody of the sheriff, to be kept subject to the further order of the county judge of the county. [O. C. 793.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929, 989.
Restraint pending trial.—See notes under art. 1023, ante.

Art. 1025. [990] Shall be confined in lunatic asylum until, etc.—When a defendant has been committed, as provided in the preceding article, the proceedings shall forthwith be certified to the county judge, who shall take the necessary steps, at once, to have the defendant confined in the lunatic asylum, as provided in the case of other lunatics, until he becomes sane.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929.
Restraint pending trial.—See note under art. 1023, ante.

Art. 1026. [991] When the defendant becomes sane.—Should the defendant become sane, he shall be brought before the court in which he was convicted; and a jury shall again be impaneled to try the issue of his sanity; and, should he be found to be sane, the conviction shall be enforced against him in the same manner as if the proceedings had never been suspended.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929.

Art. 1027. [992] Affidavit of the sanity of the defendant.—The fact that the defendant has become sane may be made known to the court in which the conviction was had by the official certificate, in writing, of the superintendente of the lunatic asylum, where he is confined, or, if not confined in the lunatic asylum, by the affidavit, in writing, of any credible person.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 929.

Art. 1028. [993] Proceedings upon affidavit.—When a certificate, or affidavit, such as is provided for in the preceding article, is presented to the judge or court, either in vacation or in term time, such judge or court shall issue a writ, directed to the officer having the custody of such defendant, commanding such officer to bring the defendant before the court immediately, if the court be then in session; and, if the court be not then in session, to bring the defendant before the court at its next regular term for the county in which the conviction was had; which writ shall be served and returned as in the case of the writ of habeas corpus, and under like penalties for disobedience.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929.

Art. 1029. [994] When defendant is again insane.—Should the defendant again be found to be insane, he shall be remanded to the custody of the superintendent of the lunatic asylum, or other proper officer.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929.

Art. 1030. [995] Conviction shall be enforced, when.—When, upon the trial of an issue of insanity, it is found that the defendant is sane, the judgment of conviction shall be enforced as if no such inquiry had been made. [O. C. 791.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 929, 979.

Appealability of judgment.—The effect of this article is to make the judgment of the trial court, adjudging the defendant to be sane conclusive and not appealable. Darnell v. State, 24 App. 6, 6 S. W. 522.

CHAPTER TWO DISPOSITION OF STOLEN PROPERTY

Art. 1031. Subject to order of proper court.—When any property alleged to have been stolen comes into the custody of an officer, he must hold it subject to the order of the proper court or magistrate. [O. C. 794.]

Duty of officer.—It is the duty of an officer after taking charge of property, which has been stolen, to hold it subject to the order of the magistrate at the examining trial, or of the court trying the accused on the charge of the theft. Murray v. Lyons (Civ. App.) 95 S. W. 611, 622.

Search warrants.—See ante, arts. 365, 383.

Art. 1032. Restored on trial for theft to proper owner.—Upon the trial of any criminal action for theft, or for any other illegal acquisition of property, which is, by law, a penal offense, the court before whom the trial takes place shall order the property to be restored to the person appearing by the proof to be the owner of the same. [O. C. 795.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1116.

Art. 1033. Schedule of, to be filed by officer.—When an officer seizes property alleged to have been stolen, it is his duty to immediately file a schedule of the same, and its value, with the magistrate or court having jurisdiction of the case, certifying that the property has been seized by him, and the reason therefor. [O. C. 796.]

Search warrant.—See ante, art. 381.

Art. 1034. May be restored to owner, etc., when.—Upon examination of a criminal accusation before a magistrate, if it is proved to the satisfaction of such magistrate that any person is the true owner of property alleged to have been stolen, and which is in possession of a peace officer, he may, by written order, direct the property to be restored to such owner. [O. C. 797.]

Art. 1035. [1000] When delivered, bond may be required.—If the magistrate has any doubt as to the ownership of the property, he may require of the person claiming to be the owner a bond, with security, for the redelivery of the same, in case the property should thereafter be shown not to belong to such claimant; or he may, in his discretion, direct the property to be retained by the sheriff, until further orders respecting the possession thereof. [O. C. 798.]

Art. 1036. [1001] Requisites of the bond, etc.—The bond provided for in the preceding article shall be made payable to the county judge of the county in which the property is in custody, and shall be in a sum equal to the value of the property, with good and sufficient security, to be approved by such county judge. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of such county, and, in case of a breach thereof, may be sued upon in such county before any court having jurisdiction of the amount thereof, by any claimant of the property, or by the county treasurer of such county.

Art. 1037. [1002] Property shall be sold, when and how.—If the property be not claimed within six months from the conviction of the person accused of illegally acquiring it, the same shall be, by the sheriff, sold for cash, after advertising for ten days as under execution; and the proceeds of such sale, after deducting therefrom all expenses of keeping such property and costs of sale, shall be paid into the treasury of the county where the defendant was convicted. [O. C. 800.]

Art. 1038. [1003] Money, how disposed of.—If the property stolen consists of money, the same shall be paid into the county treasury if not claimed by the proper owner within six months. [O. C. 802.]

Art. 1039. [1004] Owner may recover proceeds of property sold, or money, etc.—The real owner of the property or money disposed of, as provided in the two preceding articles, shall have twelve months within which to present his claim to the commissioners' court of the county for the money paid to the county treasurer of such county; and, if his claim be denied by such court, he may sue the county treasurer in any court of such county having jurisdiction of the amount, and, upon sufficient proof, recover judgment therefor against such county. [O. C. 803.]

Art. 1040. [1005] When the property is a written instrument.—If the property be a written instrument, the same shall be deposited with the clerk of the county court of the county where the proceedings are had, subject to the claim of any person who may establish his right thereto. [O. C. 804.]

Art. 1041. [1006] Proceedings to recover written instrument.—The claimant of any such written instrument shall file his claim thereto in writing and under oath before the county judge; and, if such judge be satisfied that such claimant is the real owner of the written instrument, the same shall be delivered to him. The county judge may, in his discretion, require a bond of such claimant, as in other cases of property claimed under the provisions of this chapter, and may also require the written instrument to be recorded in the minutes of his court, before delivering it to the claimant. [O. C. 804.]

Art. 1042. [1007] Claimant shall pay charges on property.—The claimant of property, before he shall be entitled to have the same delivered to him, shall pay all reasonable charges for the safe keeping of the same while in the custody of the law; which charges shall be verified by the affidavit of the officer claiming the same, and determined by the magistrate of a court having jurisdiction thereof; and, in case said charges are not paid, the property shall be sold, as under execution; and the proceeds of sale, after the payment of such charges and costs of sale, paid to the owner of such property.

Art. 1043. [1008] Charges of officer where property is sold.—When property is sold, and the proceeds of sale are ready to be paid into the county treasury, the amount of expenses for keeping the same and the costs of sale shall be determined by the county judge; and the account thereof shall be in writing and verified by the officer claiming the same, with the approval of the county judge thereto for the amount allowed; and the same shall be filed in the office of the county treasurer at the time of paying into his hands the balance of the proceeds of such sale.

Art. 1044. [1009] Provisions of this chapter apply to what cases.—All of the provisions of this chapter relating to stolen property apply as well to property acquired in any manner which makes the acquisition a penal offense. [O. C. 805.]

CHAPTER THREE

REPORTS OF OFFICERS CHARGED BY LAW WITH THE COLLECTION OF MONEY

Art. 1046. What the report shall state. 1050. Money collected shall be paid to county treasurer.
Art. 1048. What officers shall make report.

Article 1045. [1010] Reports of moneys collected shall be made, etc.—All officers charged by law with collecting money in the name, or for the use, of the state, shall report in writing under oath to the respective district courts of their several counties, on the first day of each term, the amounts of money that may have come to their hands since the last term of their respective courts aforesaid. [Act May 1, 1874, p. 182, § 2.]
See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1130, 1131.
See Pen. Code, art. 399; McLennan County v. Boggess, 104 Tex. 311, 137 S. W. 346.

Art. 1046. [1011] What the report shall state.—The report required by the preceding article shall state—
1. The amount collected.
2. When and from whom collected.
4. The disposition that has been made of the money.
5. If no money has been collected, the report shall state that fact. [Id.]
See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1130, 1131, 1132.
See McLennan County v. Boggess, 104 Tex. 311, 137 S. W. 346.

Art. 1047. [1012] Report of moneys collected for county.—A report, such as is required by the two preceding articles, shall also be made of all money collected for the county, which report shall be made to each regular term of the commissioners' court for each county. [Id., § 3.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 195.

See Pen. Code, art. 396; McLennan County v. Boggess, 104 Tex. 311, 137 S. W. 348.

Art. 1048. [1013] What officers shall make report.—The following officers are the officers charged by law with the collection of money, within the meaning of the three preceding articles, and who are required to make reports therein mentioned, viz.:

District and county attorneys, clerks of the district and county courts, sheriffs, constables, justices of the peace, mayors, recorders and marshals of incorporated cities and towns. [Id. § 1.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 195, 1130, 1131.

Art. 1049. [1014] Report to embrace all moneys except taxes. —The moneys required to be reported embrace all moneys collected for the state or county other than taxes, but taxes are not included. [Id. § 2.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1130, 1131.

Art. 1050. [1015] Money collected shall be paid to county treasurer.—Money collected by an officer upon recognizances, bail bonds and other obligations recovered upon in the name of the state, under the provisions of this Code, and all fines, forfeitures, judgments and jury fees, collected under any of the provisions of this Code, shall be forthwith paid over by the officers collecting the same to the county treasurer of the proper county, after first deducting therefrom the legal fees and commissions for collecting the same. [O. C. 806.]

CHAPTER FOUR

OF REMITTING FINES AND FORFEITURES, AND OF REPRIEVES, COMMUTATIONS OF PUNISHMENT, AND PARDONS

Art. 1051. Governor may remit fines, etc. Art. 1057g. Commissioners may authorize release on parole, when.
1052. May remit forfeitures.
1053. Shall file reasons for his action in office of secretary of state.
1054. May pardon treason, when.
1055. May commute penalty of death, etc.
1056. May delay execution of death penalty.
1057. Governor's acts shall be under the great seal of the state, etc.
1057a. Convicts paroled, when.
1057b. Paroled prisoners to remain under control of board of prison commissioners; retaking; warrants.
1057c. Meetings of commissioners; prisoner may apply for parole or discharge, when.
1057d. Record of prisoner; transfer to other place of confinement; copy.
1057e. Report by wardens as to prisoners entitled to parole.
1057f. Action of prison commissioners on reports of wardens.

Article 1051. [1016] Governor may remit fines, etc.—In all criminal actions, except treason and impeachment, the governor shall have power, after conviction, to remit fines, grant reprieves, commutations of punishment and pardons.  [O. C., 809; Const., art. 4, § 11.]

1. Remission of forfeiture.
2. Remission of costs.
3. Remission of penalty.
4. Pardon.
5. Suspension of sentence.

1. Remission of forfeiture.—The governor may remit a forfeiture at any time before final judgment and a general remission includes the commissions of the prosecuting attorney.  State v. Dyches, 28 Tex. 535.

2. Remission of costs.—Costs cannot be remitted without consent of the parties to whom the same are due.  Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400.  See, also, Ex parte Mann, 29 App. 491, 48 S. W. 828, 73 Am. St. Rep. 961.

3. Remission of penalty.—The court has no authority to remit a penalty.  Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400.

4. Pardon.—There can be a pardon only after conviction.  Cameron v. State, 32 App. 189, 22 S. W. 682, 40 Am. St. Rep. 763.

   Governor has no power to pardon person committed for contempt, since a proceeding for contempt is not a “criminal case,” within constitution.  Taylor v. Goodrich, 25 Civ. App. 109, 48 S. W. 515.

   A pardon reciting that it is granted because the convict’s testimony is needed in a criminal case is not invalid.  Locklin v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 305.

   A pardon restoring the convict to rights of citizenship may be granted after the expiration of his term of service.  Locklin v. State (Cr. App.) 75 S. W. 305.

   The validity of a pardon restoring a convict to rights of citizenship is not affected by a recital of the grant of a previous pardon.  Id.

   A “pardon” is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed, and that power, under our Constitution, may be exercised by the President of the United States and the Governors of the several states.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.

5. Suspension of sentence.—See art. 865b, and notes.  And see Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 178.

   Filing in court of appeals.—A pardon obtained after affirmation of judgment on appeal and before mandate issues may be filed in the court of appeals, and on application the judgment will be made to conform to it.  Chambers v. State, 20 Tex. 197; Smith v. State, 26 App. 49, 9 S. W. 274.

   The power to grant absolute pardons carries with it the power to grant conditional pardons and to make the pardon contingent upon any conditions, so long as they are not illegal, that the pardoning power desires to impose.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.

7. Revocation.—The power to grant pardons does not carry with it the right to revoke them, and an unconditional pardon, once accepted and acted upon, is irrevocable unless it was procured by fraud.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.  See, also, Rosson v. State, 23 App. 287, 4 S. W. 897; Ex parte Rosson, 24 App. 226, 5 S. W. 666.

   A pardon once granted will not be revoked merely upon allegations that it was secured by fraud, but the fraud must be judicially ascertained.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.

   A conditional pardon is as absolute an act upon the conditions named as an unconditional pardon, and when granted cannot be revoked by the pardoning power except for a violation of the conditions; and hence the Governor cannot revoke a conditional pardon because after-discovered evidence leads him to believe that clemency was ill-advised.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.

8. Operation and effect.—A pardon held not to operate as a release of the payment of costs adjudged against a misdemeanor.  Ex parte Mann, 29 App. 491, 46 S. W. 828, 73 Am. St. Rep. 561.

   A pardon of one who had been convicted in two cases held to be only in one of them, so that he was incompetent as a witness.  Miller v. State, 46 App. 59, 79 S. W. 567, 3 Ann. Cas. 645.

   A pardon of one convicted of burglary, which grants to the convict a full pardon and restores him to full citizenship to take effect at the expiration of the term of imprisonment, is a full pardon taking effect on the termination of the sentence.  Ex parte Rice, 72 App. 587, 162 S. W. 891.

9. Affecting competency as witness.—See art. 785, subd. 3, and notes.

   The word “conviction,” in Const. art. 4, § 11, which provides that in all criminal cases, except treason and impeachment, the Governor shall have power after “conviction” to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc., means simply the determination of guilt by the jury, and does not embrace the sentences pronounced by the judge on the specific facts which are finally determined, and a court has no inherent authority by postponement of sentence to relieve a person legally convicted of crime of the punishment fixed by law, and Acts 52d. Leg. c. 44, C. C. P. art. 855, which confers on the district courts the power to relieve from the effect of conviction in certain crimes, is not constitutional as within that power. Snodgrass v. State (Cr. App.) 150 S. W. 162.

Art. 1052. [1017] May remit forfeitures.—The governor shall have power to remit forfeitures of recognizances and bail bonds. [Id.]

See notes under art. 1051.

Art. 1053. [1018] Shall file reasons for his action.—In all cases in which the governor remits fines or forfeitures, or grants reprieves, commutation of punishment or pardons, he shall file in the office of the secretary of state his reasons therefor. [Id.]

Art. 1054. [1019] May pardon treason, when.—With the advice and consent of the senate, the governor may grant pardons in cases of treason; and, to this end, he may respite a sentence therefore until the close of the succeeding session of the legislature. [Const., art. 4, § 11.]

Art. 1055. [1020] May commute penalty of death, etc.—The governor shall have the authority to commute the punishment in every case of capital felony, except treason, by changing the penalty of death into that of imprisonment for life, or for a term of years, either with or without hard labor, which may be done by his warrant to the proper officer, commanding him not to execute the penalty of death, and directing him to convey the prisoner to the penitentiary, stating therein the time for which, and the manner in which, the prisoner is to be confined; which warrant shall be sufficient authority to the sheriff to deliver, and to the proper officers of the penitentiary to receive and imprison such prisoner. [O. C. 811.]

Art. 1056. [1021] May delay execution of death penalty.—The governor may also reprieve and delay the execution of the penalty of death to any day fixed by him in the warrant to the sheriff, and such warrant shall be executed and returned to the proper court by the sheriff in the same manner as if it had been issued from such court. [O. C. 812.]

Art. 1057. [1022] Governor's acts shall be under great seal of the state, etc.—All remissions of fines and forfeitures, and all reprieves, commutations of punishment and pardons, shall be signed by the governor, and certified by the secretary of state, under the great seal of state, and shall be forthwith obeyed by any officer to whom the same may be presented.

Art. 1057a. Convicts paroled, when.—Meritorious prisoners who are now or may hereafter be in prison under a sentence to penal servitude may be allowed to go upon parole, outside of the building and jurisdiction of the penitentiary authorities subject to the provisions of this act, and to such regulations and conditions as may be made by the board of prison commissioners, with the approval of the governor of this state, and such parole shall be made only by the governor, or with his approval. [Article 6089, Rev. St. 1911; Act 1911, p. 64, sec. 1; Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 2, amending Act 1913, p. 262, sec. 2.]

See amendment to constitution, adopted November 5, 1912 (art. 17, § 58), Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, vol. 1, p. ixix.

Explanatory.—This article amends Acts 1913, p. 262, sec. 2, which superseded art. 6089, Rev. St. 1911, and, it would seem, Acts 1911, p. 64, sec. 1, which reads as follows: "The board of prison commissioners shall have power to make, establish and amend rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the governor, under which meritorious prisoners, who are now or hereafter may be imprisoned under a sentence to penal servitude, and who may have served the minimum term fixed by statute, for commission of offenses of which they were convicted, may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and jurisdiction of the penitentiary authorities, subject to the exceptions hereinafter contained."
Art. 1057d. Record of prisoner; transfer to other place of confinement; copy.—The wardens or sergeants or guards of such prisoners, or who have in custody convicts subject to parole under this act, shall cause to be kept at such prison or place of confinement at which such convicts are confined an accurate record of each prisoner therein confined upon sentence, as aforesaid, which record shall include a biographical sketch covering such items as may indicate the cause of the criminal character or conduct of the prisoner, and also a record of the demeanor, education and labor of the prisoner while confined thereat, and whenever such prisoner is transferred from one prison or place of confinement to another, a copy of such record or an abstract of the substance thereof, together with certified copy of the sentence of such prisoner shall be transmitted with such prisoner to the prison or place of confinement to which he shall be transferred and delivered to the prison officer in charge thereof and retained by him as a part of the record of such prisoner. [Act 1911, p. 64, sec. 4; Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 4, amending Act 1913, p. 262.]

Explanatory.—This article and articles 1057c and 1057d would seem to supersede art. 6091, Rev. St. 1911, which was substantially re-enacted by Acts 1913, p. 262, sec. 3. Section 3 in Acts 1913, p. 262, reads as follows: "No convict confined in the Texas penitentiaries shall be considered eligible for parole, and no application for parole shall be considered by the prison commissioners until such prisoner is recommended as worthy of such consideration by a chaplain of the penitentiaries, and, before consideration by the prison commissioners, notice of such recommendation shall be published in a newspaper in the county from which such prisoner was sentenced, and, if none be there published, then in the county whose county site is nearest thereto, provided the expense of such publication shall not exceed one dollar; and in no case shall any prisoner be paroled, unless there is in the judgment of the prison commissioners reasonable ground to believe that he will, if released, live and remain at liberty, without violating the law, and that his release is not incompatible with the welfare of society; and such judgment shall be based upon the record and character of the prisoner established in prison, and his general reputation for honesty and peace prior to conviction. And no petition or other form of application for the release of any prisoner shall be entertained by the said commission, and no attorney or outside persons of any kind shall be allowed to appear before the prison commissioners as applicants for the parole of a prisoner. But these requirements shall not prevent the said prison commissioners from making such inquiries as they may deem desirable in regard to the previous history or environment of such prisoner, and in regard to his probable surroundings if paroled; but such inquiries shall be instituted by the prison commissioners, superintendent, and assistant superintendent, board of pardons, and all such information thus received shall be considered and treated as confidential."

Art. 1057e. Report by wardens as to prisoners entitled to parole.
—It shall be the duty of the wardens of such prisoners to make or cause to be made to the board of prison commissioners a written report based upon the record of such prisoner as to whether or not such prisoner shall be paroled or pardoned, and such report shall be made with reference to each prisoner in charge of such warden, and shall give the reasons for such recommendations as are made, and if no recommendations are made the report shall state such, reports to be made semi-annually. [Act 1911, p. 64; Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 5, amending Act 1913, p. 262.]
See note under art. 1057d.

Art. 1057f. Action of prison commissioners on reports of wardens.—It shall be the duty of the board of prison commissioners to receive and preserve said reports and recommendations, provided for in this act, and to consider the same and to approve or disapprove the same within three months after the same are received and to transmit a report of such recommendations for parole or pardon as they approve to the governor of this state without delay. [Act 1911, p. 64; Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 6, amending Act 1913, p. 262.]
See note under art. 1057d.

Art. 1057g. Commissioners may authorize release on parole, when.—If it shall appear to said board of prison commissioners, from a report by the warden or sergeant of such prison, or upon an application by a convict for release on parole as hereinafter provided, that there is reasonable probability that such applicant will live and remain at liberty without violating the law, then said board of prison commissioners may authorize the release of such applicant upon parole, and such applicant shall thereupon be allowed to go upon parole outside of said prison walls and enclosure, upon the terms and conditions as said board shall prescribe, but to remain while so on parole in the legal custody and under the control of the said board of prison commissioners until the expiration of the maximum term specified in his sentence as hereinafter provided, or until his absolute discharge as hereinafter provided. [Act 1911, p. 64, sec. 5.]

Art. 1057h. Warrant for retaking of prisoner.—If such board of prison commissioners, or any two members thereof, shall have reasonable cause to believe that a prisoner so on parole has violated his parole and has lapsed or is probably about to lapse into criminal ways or company, then such board, or any two members thereof, may issue their warrant for the retaking of such prisoner, at any time prior to the maximum period for which such prisoner might have been confined within the prison walls upon his sentence, which time shall be specified in such warrant. [Id. sec. 6.]

Art. 1057i. Warrant, how executed; fees.—Any officer of said prison, or any officer authorized to serve criminal process within this state, to whom such warrant shall be delivered, is authorized and required to execute said warrant by taking said prisoner and returning him to said prison within the time specified in said warrant. Such officer, other than an officer of the prison, shall be entitled to receive the same fees therefor as upon the execution of a warrant of arrest at the place where said prisoner shall be retaken, and as for transporting a convict from the place of arrest to the prison, in case such officer also transports said prisoner to the prison. Such fees of the officer in executing said warrant shall be paid by the prison commissioners out of the funds of the prison. [Id. sec. 7.]

Art. 1057j. Board to be notified of warrant; prisoner declared delinquent, when; imprisonment.—At the next meeting of the board of prison commissioners held at such prison after the issuing of the warrant for the retaking of any paroled prisoner said board shall be notified thereof. If said prisoner shall have been returned to said prison he shall be given an opportunity to appear before said board and the said board may after such opportunity has been given, or in case said prisoner has not been returned, declare said prisoner to be delinquent, and he shall, whenever arrested by virtue of such warrant, be thereafter imprisoned in said prison for a period equal to the unexpired maximum term of sentence of such prisoner at the time of such delinquency is declared, unless sooner released on parole or absolutely discharged by the board of prison commissioners. [Id. sec. 8.]

Explanatory.—A part of the subject-matter of this article was carried into section 4 of Acts 1913, p. 362, and on the amendment of that act by Acts 1913, S. B., p. 4, it was omitted. Section 4 of Acts 1913, p. 362, reads as follows: “Any prisoner violating the conditions of his parole, as prescribed by rules issued by said commissioners, when by a formal order entered in the proceedings of same, he is declared delinquent, shall thereafter be treated as an escaped prisoner, owing service to the state, and shall be liable when arrested to serve out the unexpired period, and the time from the date of his declared delinquency to the date of his arrest shall not be counted as any part or portion of time served. Any prisoner at large on parole committing a fresh crime, and, upon conviction thereof, being sentenced anew to the penitentiary, shall be subject to serve a second sentence after the first sentence is served or annulled, to commence from the date of termination of his liability upon the first or former sentence.” The effect of the omission from the amendatory act of the subject-matter in question may present a matter for judicial construction.

Art. 1057k. Absolute discharge, when.—If it shall appear to the said board of prison commissioners that there is a reasonable probability that any prisoner so on parole will live and remain at liberty without violating the law, and that his absolute discharge from imprisonment is not incompatible with the welfare of society, then said board of prison commissioners shall issue to such prisoner an absolute discharge from imprisonment upon such sentence and which shall be effective therefor. [Id. sec. 9.]

Art. 1057l. Power of pardon or commutation not impaired.—Nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair the power of the governor of this state to grant pardon or commutation in any case. [Id. sec. 10.]

Art. 1057m. Commissioners to appoint agent or inspector; duties.—Said board of prison commissioners shall appoint an agent or inspector whose duty it shall be to aid and secure proper employment for all prisoners who have so conducted themselves as to be entitled to get out from such prison on parole, and to keep in the said board informed of the conduct of such prisoner when out on parole, and to make a report as to each prisoner in such matters on the first day of each month for the preceding month. [Id. sec. 11.]

Art. 1057n. Parole of prisoners serving under indeterminate sentence; continuance of supervision.—Whenever any prisoner... serving an indeterminate sentence, as provided in section 1 [art. 865a] of this Act shall have served for twelve months, on parole, in a manner acceptable to the board of prison commissioners, the said board shall certify such fact to the governor, with the recommendation that the said prisoner be pardoned and finally discharged from the sentence under which he is serving. But it shall be the duty of the prison commission to continue its supervision and care over such paroled prisoner until such time as the governor shall pardon and finally discharge from custody the said prisoner; provided, that in no case shall any prisoner be held for a longer term than the maximum provided by the sentence for the crime of which the said prisoner was convicted. [Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 7, amending Act 1913, p. 262, sec. 5.]

Art. 1057a. Restoration of citizenship.—When a convict who has been paroled shall have complied with the rules and conditions governing his parole until the end of the term to which he was sentenced, and without a revocation of his parole, he shall, upon a written or printed discharge from the superintendent and prison commissioners, setting forth these facts, be recommended by the board to the governor for restoration of his citizenship by the governor of the state of Texas. [Art. 6095, Rev. St. 1911; Act 1911, p. 64, sec. 15; Act 1913, S. S., p. 4, sec. 8, amending Act 1913, p. 262, sec. 6.]

Art. 1057p. Application of Art. 6217, Rev. Civ. St., to prisoners not paroled under this act.—If a prisoner, sentenced to the penitentiary, shall not be paroled under the provisions of this Act, or if he shall only be sentenced to serve the minimum term of imprisonment fixed by law, then article 6217 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas shall apply to his sentence, and he shall be entitled to such commutation or reduction of time as in said article provided under the conditions therein named. [Id. sec. 9.]

Art. 1057q. Laws repealed.—No provision of this law shall in any manner be held to in anywise repeal, limit or affect in any manner the provisions of chapter seven (7) of the Acts of the thirty-third legislature [arts. 865b–865i], providing for suspension of sentence in certain cases, and the provisions of said chapter 7 of the Acts of the thirty-third legislature shall apply to the trial of all cases under the conditions therein stipulated, and not specifically exempted from the operation thereof by the terms of said law. [Id. sec. 10.]

Art. 1057r. Governor shall appoint.—The governor is hereby authorized to appoint two qualified voters of the state of Texas, and who shall perform such duties as may be directed by him consistent with the constitution, as he may deem necessary in disposing of all applications for pardon. The said two voters shall be known as the board of pardon advisers, and shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated a salary of two thousand dollars each per annum on monthly vouchers approved by the governor. [Act 1897, p. 49, ch. 50; amended Act 1905, p. 68.]

Art. 1057s. Shall keep record.—Said board shall be required to keep a record, in which will be entered every case sent it by the governor, giving the docket number of the convict, his name, when and where convicted, his sentence, his offense, when received from the governor, the action taken by said board, and the date of said action. [Id. sec. 2.]

Art. 1057t. Shall examine applications for pardons, etc.—Said board shall be given a room in the capitol, properly furnished with necessary furniture and file cases, and provided with such stationery, letter books and other appliances which may be necessary for the speedy and proper transaction and dispatch of the business for which it is organized. In addition to the thorough examination of each application which the governor may refer to said board, and reporting its recommendation thereon to him, it shall perform any other work in connection with said business the governor may direct; and said board shall spend such time each year as may be necessary in personally looking into the condition of such convicts as it may desire, or as may be designated by either the governor, the superintendent of penitentiaries, or either of his assistants, or by the prison physician, or either of the commissioners, giving special attention to the cases of those of long service, who may be thus designated, and who have no means or facilities for getting a proper petition before the governor, to the end that the board may have before it such data as will enable it to judge the condition of each.
All cases shall be taken up, considered and acted upon by said board in the regular order of reference by the governor, except when it appears to said board there is extraordinary emergency in any case.
[Id. sec. 3.]
TITLE 13
OF INQUESTS

CHAPTER ONE
INQUESTS UPON DEAD BODIES

Article 1058. [1023] Held, by whom and in what cases.—Any justice of the peace shall be authorized, and it shall be his duty, to hold inquests within his county, in the following cases; provided, that all inquests shall be held by the justice of the peace without a jury:

1. When a person dies in prison.
2. When any person is killed, or from any cause dies an unnatural death, except under sentence of the law, or in the absence of one or more good witnesses.
3. When the body of any human being is found, and the circumstances of his death are unknown.
4. When the circumstances of the death of any person are such as to lead to suspicion that he came to his death by unlawful means.

[O. C. 851; amended by Act March 17, 1887, p. 31.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1150, 1152, 1153.

Construction of article.—This and the articles following it do not seem to apply where as a defensive matter such examination and autopsy are sought, nor do they seem to apply where in aid either of the State or defendant such evidence is sought in any case actually pending on a legal charge. They seem to relate to preliminary investigations in aid of prosecutions, with a view of ferreting out crime, Gray v. State, 55 App. 96, 114 S. W. 645, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

Coroner.—There is no such officer as "coroner" now, and an indictment for perjury committed on an inquest must not allege that the oath was administered by the coroner. Stewart v. State, 6 App. 384. The verdict of a coroner's jury is competent evidence, not as proof positive of what it contains, but simply as the opinion of the jury; but its exclusion when offered by the defendant is not material, unless it is apparent that the finding was affected by such exclusion. Ballew v. State, 36 Tex. 98.

Article 1059. [1024] Body may be disinterred.—When a body upon which an inquest ought to have been held has been interred, the justice of the peace may cause it to be disinterred for the purpose of holding such inquest. [O. C. 852.]

Article 1060. [1024a] Physician may be called in.—Whenever an inquest is held to ascertain the cause of death, the justice of the peace is hereby authorized, if he deems it necessary, to call in the county physician, or, if there be no county physician, or, if it be impracticable to secure his services, then some regular practicing physician, to make an autopsy in order to determine whether the death was occasioned by violence; and, if so, the nature and character of the violence used; and the county in which such inquest and autopsy is held shall pay to the physician making such autopsy a fee of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars, the excess over ten dollars to be determined by the county commissioners' court after ascertaining the amount and nature of the work performed in making such autopsy. [Acts of 1893, p. 155.]

Charge on county.—Before the enactment of this article, the services of a medical expert at an inquest were held a proper charge upon the county in Rutherford v. Harris County, 3 Wilson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 114. But, contra, see Fears v. Nacogdoches County, 71 Tex. 237, 9 S. W. 265.

Art. 1061. [1024] Chemical analysis provided for in certain cases.—If, upon such inquest, it becomes necessary to determine whether the death has been produced by poison, it is hereby made the duty of the justice of the peace, upon request of the physician performing such autopsy, to call in to his aid, if necessary, some medical expert or chemist qualified to make an analysis of the stomach and its contents, together with such other portions of the body as may be necessary to be analyzed and tested, for the purpose of determining the presence of poison in such body; and the county commissioners' court of the county shall pay to such medical expert or chemist, as a reasonable fee for his services, a sum of money not to exceed fifty dollars.

Art. 1062. [1025] Upon what information justice may act.—The justice of the peace shall act in such cases upon verbal or written information given him by any credible person, or upon facts within his own knowledge. [O. C. 853.]

Art. 1063. [1026] Duty of sheriff, etc.—It is the duty of the sheriff, and of every keeper of any prison, to inform the justice of the peace of the death of any person confined therein. [O. C. 854.]

Repeal of laws.—The following articles of the Old Code of Criminal Procedure were repealed by the act of March 17, 1887, p. 31, viz.:

Art. 992. The justice of the peace may summon a jury of inquest himself, or may direct an order to any peace officer for that purpose.

Art. 993. A jury of inquest shall consist of six men, citizens of the proper county, freeholders, householders, and qualified electors.

Art. 994. A person summoned as a juror in such cases who refuses to obey the summons may be fined by the justice of the peace not exceeding ten dollars.

Art. 995. The justice of the peace shall, as soon as a jury is summoned, proceed with them to the place where the dead body may be, for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the death.

Art. 996. The following oath shall be, by the justice of the peace, administered to the juror: "You swear that you will diligently inquire into the cause, manner, time, and circumstances of the death of the person whose body lies before you, and that you will thereupon make presentment of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God."

Art. 1064. [1027] Justice shall issue subpœnas.—The justice of the peace shall have power to issue subpœnas to enforce the attendance of witnesses upon an inquest; and, in case of disobedience or failure to attend, may issue attachments for such witnesses. [O. C. 860.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1120, 1121.

Art. 1065. [1028] Testimony of witnesses to be reduced to writing, etc.—Witnesses shall be sworn and examined by the justice, and the testimony of each witness shall be reduced to writing by the justice, or under his direction, and subscribed by the witness. [O. C. 861.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1122.

Use of testimony for impeachment purposes.—Statements made by a witness, at an inquest, but not contained in his written testimony is not admissible to impeach him. Moffatt v. State, 35 App. 257, 33 S. W. 344.

On a trial for murder an unsigned writing claimed by the state to be evidence of one of defendant's witnesses at an inquest on deceased's body and which a witness for the state said he took down at the time was not admissible to show what defendant's witness testified at said inquest in order to impeach him or for any other purpose under this article. Price v. State (Cr. App.) 43 S. W. 98.

Failure to reduce to writing.—Evidence given at an inquest can be reproduced on another trial whether it has been reduced to writing or not. The statute requires that it shall be reduced to writing; but if this is not done, the statute does not go farther and say that it shall not be used on another trial. Stanley v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 319.

The fact that the evidence given at an inquest, on which an indictment for perjury is based, was not reduced to writing, as required by this article, affords no ground of objection to witnesses testifying as to what the evidence was. Stanley v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 319.

Testimony before examining court.—See ante, art. 834.

Certification of testimony.—See article 1078, post.

Art. 1066. [1029] Inquest may be held in private.—Should the justice deem proper, the inquest may be held in private; but in all cases where a person has been arrested, charged with having caused the death of the deceased, such person and his counsel shall have the right to be present at the inquest, and to examine witnesses and introduce evidence. [O. C. 862.]

Compulsory attendance of accused.—The justice may compel accused to attend the inquest, though he protests against it. Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 264, 26 S. W. 196.

Art. 1067. [1030] Proceedings shall not be interfered with.—If any other persons than the justice, and the accused and his counsel, and counsel for the state, are present at the inquest, they shall not interfere with the proceedings; and no question shall be asked a witness, except by the justice, the accused or his counsel, and the counsel for the state; and the justice of the peace may fine any person violating this article for contempt of court, not exceeding twenty dollars, and may cause such person to be placed in custody of a peace officer, and removed from the presence of the inquest. [O. C. 862.]

Repeal of laws.—The following article was repealed by the act of March 17, 1887, p. 31, viz.: Art. 1001. After having examined into the cause, time, manner, and place of the death of the deceased, the jury shall form their verdict, setting forth distinctly the facts relating thereto, which they find to be true, which verdict shall not be valid unless signed by the justice of the peace and each of the jurors.

Persons entitled to examine witness.—It is intimated that at an inquest, a person other than those mentioned in this article may ask questions of a witness, if he is authorized by the justice of the peace to do so. Stanley v. State (Cr. App.) 74 S. W. 320.

Art. 1068. [1031] Justice shall keep a minute book, wherein he shall set forth, etc.—The justice of the peace shall keep a book in which he shall make a minute of all the proceedings relating to every inquest held by him. Such minute shall set forth—

1. The nature of the information given the justice of the peace, and by whom given, unless he acts upon facts within his own knowledge.
2. The time and place; when and where, the inquest is held.
3. The name of the deceased, if known; or, if not known, as accurate a description of him as can be given.
4. The finding by the justice at the inquest.
5. If any arrest is made of a suspected person before inquest held, the name of the person and the fact of his arrest, as well as everything material which relates thereto, shall be noted. [O. C. 864; amended by Act March 17, 1887, p. 32.]

Art. 1069. [1032] Where the killing was the act of any person. —When the justice has knowledge that the killing was the act of any person, or when an affidavit is made that there is reason to believe that such person has killed the deceased, a warrant may be issued for the arrest of the accused before inquest held; and the accused and his counsel shall have the right to be present when the same is held, and to examine the witnesses and introduce evidence before the jury.
Art. 1070. [1033] Peace officer shall execute warrant of arrest.—Any peace officer to whose hands the justice’s warrant of arrest shall come is bound to execute the same without delay, and he shall detain the person arrested until his discharge is ordered by the justice or other proper authority.

Art. 1071. [1034] Warrant shall be sufficient, if, etc.—A warrant of arrest in such cases shall be sufficient if it issues in the name of “The State of Texas,” recites the name of the accused, or describes him, when his name is unknown, sets forth the offense charged in plain language, and is signed officially by the justice.

Warrant in general.—See ante, arts. 265, 266, 976.

Art. 1072. [1035] If the justice find that a person killed the deceased.—If it be found by the justice of the peace, upon evidence adduced at the inquest, that a person already arrested did in fact kill the deceased, or was an accomplice or accessory to the death, the justice may, according to the facts of the case, commit him to jail or require him to execute a bail bond with security for his appearance before the proper court to answer for the offense. [Amended by Act March 17, 1887, p. 32.]

Art. 1073. [1036] Bail bond shall be sufficient, if, etc.—A bail bond taken before a justice shall be sufficient if it recites the offense of which the party is accused, be payable to the state of Texas, be dated and signed by the principal and his surety; and such bond may be forfeited, and judgment recovered thereon, and the same collected as in the case of any other bail bond.

Art. 1074. [1037] Warrant of arrest, when.—When, by the evidence adduced before a justice of the peace holding an inquest, it is found that any person not in custody killed the deceased, or was an accomplice or accessory to the death, the justice shall forthwith issue his warrant of arrest to the sheriff or other peace officer, commanding him to arrest the person accused, and bring him before such justice, or before some other magistrate named in the writ. [O. C. 872; amended by Act March 17, 1887, p. 32.]

Art. 1075. [1038] Requisites of warrant.—The warrant mentioned in the preceding article shall be sufficient if it run in the name of the state of Texas, give the name of the accused, or describe him, when his name is unknown, recite the offense with which he is charged in plain language, and be dated and signed officially by the justice. [O. C. 873.]

Art. 1076. [1039] Peace officer shall execute warrant.—The peace officer into whose hands such warrant may come shall forthwith execute the same by arresting the defendant and taking him before the magistrate named in the warrant; and the magistrate shall proceed to examine the accusation; and the same proceedings shall be had thereon as in other cases where persons accused of offenses are brought before him. [O. C. 874.]

Execution of warrant in general.—See ante, arts. 292, et seq.

Art. 1077. [1040] Accused may be arrested, etc., pending inquest.—Nothing contained in this title shall prevent proceedings from being had for the arrest and examination of an accused person before a magistrate, pending the holding of an inquest. But, when a person accused of an offense has been already arrested under a warrant from the justice, he shall not be taken from the hands of the peace officer by a warrant from any other magistrate. [O. C. 877.]

Examining court.—The justice may hold an examining court while holding his inquest. Ex parte Meyers, 33 App. 294, 26 S. W. 196.
Art. 1078. [1041] Justice shall certify proceedings to district court.—When an inquest has been held, the justice before whom the same was held shall certify to the proceedings, and shall inclose in an envelope the testimony taken, the finding of the justice, the bail bonds, if any, and all other papers connected with the inquest, and shall seal up such envelope and deliver it, properly indorsed, to the clerk of the district court without delay, who shall safely keep the same in his office subject to the order of the court. [O. C. 870; amended by Act March 17, 1887, p. 32.]

Art. 1079. [1042] Shall preserve all evidence.—It shall also be the duty of the justice to carefully preserve all evidence whatsoever that may come to his knowledge and possession which might, in his opinion, tend to show the real cause of the death, or the person, if any one, who caused such death, and shall deliver all such evidence to the clerk of the district court, who shall keep the same safely, subject to the order of the court.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1122.

Art. 1080. [1043] Witnesses may be required to give bail.—The justice may, should he deem it proper, require bail of witnesses examined before the inquest to appear and testify before the next grand jury, or before an examining or other proper court, as in other cases.

CHAPTER TWO FIRE INQUESTS

Art.
1081. Investigation shall be had upon complaint, etc.
1082. Proceedings in such case.
1083. Verdict of jury.
1084. Witness shall be bound over, when.

Art.
1085. Warrant shall issue for person charged, when.
1086. Testimony of witnesses shall be reduced to writing, etc.
1087. Compensation of officers, etc.

Article 1081. [1044] Investigation shall be had upon complaint, etc.—Whenever complaint in writing, under oath, is made by any credible person before any justice of the peace that there is ground to believe that any building has been unlawfully set on fire, or attempted to be set on fire, such justice of the peace shall, without delay, cause the truth of such complaint to be investigated. [Act June 2, 1873, p. 171, § 1.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1123.

Explanatory.—This chapter may be superseded by Act 1910, S. S., p. 125, ch. 8, §§ 6-8, as amended by Act 1912, p. 195, §§ 8-31 (Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, arts. 4881-4884), providing for investigations by the state fire marshal.

Art. 1082. [1045] Proceedings in such case.—The proceedings in such case shall be governed by the same rules as are provided in the preceding chapter of this title concerning inquests upon dead bodies, and the officer conducting such investigation shall have the same powers as are conferred upon justices of the peace in the preceding chapter. [Id., § 2.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1124.

See note under art. 1081.

Art. 1083. [1046] Verdict of jury.—The jury, after inspecting the place where the fire was, or was attempted, and after hearing the testimony, shall deliver to the justice of the peace holding such inquest their verdict in writing, signed by them, in which they shall find and certify how and in what manner such fire happened, or was attempted, and all the circumstances attending the same, and who were guilty thereof, either as principal or accessory, and in what manner. But if such jury be unable to ascertain the origin and circumstances of such fire they shall find, and certify accordingly.
[Id., § 3.]
See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1124.

Explanatory.—This article contemplates the summoning of a jury in spite of the fact that art. 1082, ante, refers to the preceding chapter relating to inquests on dead bodies, for the procedure in fire inquests. The chapter referred to however has dispensed with a jury. See, also, note under art. 1081.

Art. 1084. [1047] Witnesses shall be bound over, when.—If the jury find that any building has been unlawfully set on fire, or has been attempted so to be, the justice of the peace holding such inquest shall bind over the witnesses to appear and testify before the next grand jury of the county in which such offense was committed.
[Id., § 4.]
See note under art. 1081.

Art. 1085. [1048] Warrant shall issue for person charged, when.—If the person charged with the offense, if there be any person so charged, be not in custody, the justice of the peace shall issue a warrant for his arrest; and, when arrested, such person shall be dealt with as in other like cases. [Id., § 4.]
See note under art. 1081.

Art. 1086. [1049] Testimony of witnesses shall be reduced to writing, etc.—In all investigations had under this chapter, the testimony of all witnesses examined before the jury shall be reduced to writing by the justice of the peace, or under his direction, and signed by the witnesses; and such testimony, together with the verdict of the jury and all bail bonds taken in the case, shall be certified to and returned by the justice of the peace to the next district or criminal court of his county. [Id., § 6.] See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1124.
See note under art. 1081.

Art. 1087. [1050] Compensation of officers, etc.—The compensation of the officers and jury making the investigation provided for in this chapter shall be the same as that allowed for holding an inquest upon a dead body, so far as applicable, and shall be paid in the same manner. [Id., § 5.] See note under art. 1081.
Fees.—See, post, arts. 1156, 1158.

Article 1088. [1051] Fugitive from justice delivered up, when.

—A person charged in any other state or territory of the United States with treason, felony or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in this state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state or territory from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state or territory having jurisdiction of the crime. [O. C. 878.]

1. What law governs.
2. Who are fugitives from justice.
3. Requisition.
5. Priority of prosecutions.
6. Executive warrant.
8. "Charge" as including "conviction."

1. What law governs.—The extradition of fugitives from the justice of a state is provided for by Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, providing that, where a person charged in any state with crime shall flee from justice and be found in another state, he shall on demand of the executive of the state from which he fled be delivered up to be removed to that state, and by federal statutes enacted in furtherance of the provision, and a state statute in aid thereof need not be complied with; and where a fugitive was arrested by an officer on information furnished him from the sister state, and on hearing the Governor issued his warrant, the fugitive could not complain that he was not arrested. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. S. 130 S. W. 174.

The laws of a state cannot control the definition of a fugitive from justice within Rev. St. U. S. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1991, p. 3597), providing for the extradition of a person after indictment found or affidavit made charging him with having committed treason, felony or other crime, which include not only offenses punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, but misdemeanors as well. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. S. 130 S. W. 174.

The states having delegated their authority over matters of extradition to the federal government, the decisions of the federal courts are conclusive on the state courts with reference to such subject. Ex parte Lewis (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 1098.

2. Who are fugitives from justice.—A person who commits a crime in one state and departs therefrom and is found in another is a "fugitive from justice." Ex parte McDaniel (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 1018.

3. Requisition.—Where the requisition shows (1) that an affidavit (on indictment found) has been lodged in the demanding State and (2) that a demand was made by the Governor of that State stating that the affidavit (or indictment) is authentic, it contains every essential requirement of law. Ex parte Denning (Cr. App.) 100 S. W. 492.

A requisition made upon the governor for the arrest of one claimed as a "fugitive from justice," is sufficient authority for the issuance of an order by the governor for an arrest, and a prisoner arrested under such circumstances could only obtain relief on habeas corpus by showing that the presumption on which the governor acted was unfounded in fact. Hibler v. State, 43 Tex. 197.

As to certificate to the requisition of the demanding governor, see Ex parte Stanley, 1 App. 372, 9 S. W. 645, 8 Am. St. Rep. 449. It is only required under the federal statutes for extradition that the accused is a fugitive from justice from the state in which the indictment is lodged against him, and that the requisition is in due form. Ex parte Denning, 50 App. 625, 100 S. W. 401.

Where the record in extradition proceedings contained an affidavit by the county attorney, sworn to before a magistrate the papers were not fatally defective because the original affidavit by complainant was sworn to before a notary public, and required by Rev. St. U. S. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1913, § 10126). Ex parte Faithinger, 72 App. 632, 163 S. W. 441.

A statement of the Governor of a demanding state in his requisition for the return of a prisoner that he is a fugitive from justice and a similar statement in the proceeding of the Governor of the state he has a prima facie case that such is the fact. Ex parte Faithinger, 72 App. 632, 163 S. W. 441.

It is not necessary for the Governor of a state, in granting a requisition for the return of a fugitive from justice, to definitely describe the offense in the requisition. Ex parte Faithinger, 72 App. 632, 163 S. W. 441.

Where the Governor of a demanding state in extradition proceedings recited in his warrant that it appeared, from the annexed application for requisition and other papers, which the Governor certified to be authentic and duly authenticated in accordance with the laws of the state, etc., that accused was charged with the crime of selling and disposing of mortgaged property, committed in T. county, Okl., and the papers so attached included a complaint which charged the elements of such offense created by Rev. Laws Okl. 1910, § 756, it was not necessary that the offense of the requisition with the definiteness and particularity required in an indictment or information. Ex parte Faithinger, 72 App. 632, 163 S. W. 441.

4. Conflicting requisitions.—Under Const. U. S, art. 4, § 2, providing that a person shall not be tried in any state for an offense committed in another state, shall on demand of the executive of the state from which he fled be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime and this article a fugitive brought into Texas by requisition from another state may, while in Texas, be removed to a third state on demand to a return for a crime committed therein. Ex parte Innes (Cr. App.) 173 S. W. 291.

5. Priority of prosecutions.—A fugitive from justice charged with crime committed in this state will not be delivered to the demanding state until the final disposition of the case against him in this state. Hobbs v. State, 32 App. 312, 22 Tex. St. Rep. 782.

6. Executive warrant.—A warrant issued by the governor of this state for the arrest of a fugitive from justice of another state, should show on its face, by recital at least, that it was issued upon a requisition from such other state, accompanied by an indictment found, or affidavit made, charging the alleged fugitive with having committed a crime. Ex parte Thornton, 9 Tex. 628. See, also, Hbier v. State, 43 Tex. 197.

It is not essential to the sufficiency of an extradition warrant that it shall set out in full or be accompanied by the indictment or affidavit upon which it is based. The rule is that if "the papers upon which the warrant of extradition is issued are withheld by the executive, the warrant itself can be looked to for the evidence that the essential conditions of its issuance have been complied with, and it is sufficient if it recites what the law requires." Recital in the warrant of extradition that the demand of the governor of the demanding state for the fugitives "was accompanied by a copy of said affidavit duly certified as authentic" is equivalent to a recital in the warrant that the said copy is typical of the authentic by the governor.

If the demand for the extradition of the fugitive states facts which show that he is a fugitive from the demanding state to this state, it is sufficient, without stating directly that he fled from the demanding state, and had taken refuge in this state.

A warrant of extradition need not show that the crime charged against the fugitive in the indictment or affidavit is an offense against the laws of the demanding state.

The state was permitted to read in evidence a copy of an affidavit made in California, charging the relation with the offense of obtaining money under false pretenses. Held, that the said copy being no part of the respondent's return, nor attached thereto, nor accompanying the warrant, nor authenticated as evidence, nor sworn, nor claimed to be evidence upon which the warrant was based, its admission in evidence was error, but not such error as will operate to discharge the relator. Ex parte Stanley, 25 App. 372, 8 S. W. 645, 8 Am. St. Rep. 782.

The warrant of arrest issued by the Governor in an extradition proceeding must name the offense with which the accused is charged in the State to which it is sought to take him. Ex parte Thomas, 58 App. 37, 108 S. W. 664, 126 Am. St. Rep. 780.

7. Kidnapping.—A person accused of crime committed in this state is amenable in the courts of this state, notwithstanding he was kidnapped in another state or territory, and brought thence against his will and without lawful authority. Brookin v. State, 26 App. 121, 9 S. W. 735.

A fugitive from the justice of a sister state was illegally brought into Texas by citizens of Mexico. The officers of Texas were not parties to the illegal conduct, but they arrested the fugitive on their attention being called to his presence in the state. Subsequently the Governor of Texas honored a requisition of the Governor of the sister state. Held, that the fugitive was not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Wilson (C. A. App.) 110 S. W. 644, 83 Tex. 743.

8. "Charge" as including "conviction."—Where a person was legally charged under the laws of a sister state with an offense, and was legally convicted thereof...
Art. 1088  FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE

under an information filed by the prosecuting officer of the sister state and such person subsequently fled to the state of Texas, the Governor of Texas properly issued his extradition warrant on a proper demand therefor: the word “charged,” within Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and the federal statutes relating to extradition applying to persons convicted as well as to persons merely sought for the purpose of trial. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

9. Prosecution by information.—Under Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, providing that "a person charged in any state" may be extradited, and Rev. St. U. S. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1913, § 10126), providing that whenever the executive of any state demands any person as a fugitive from justice, and produces a copy of an indictment found or affidavit made before a magistrate, the person demanded shall be surrendered, a person charged by an information alone and who has not been convicted cannot be extradited. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

10. Sentence as affecting right to extradition.—Where a defendant, after conviction in a sister state, fled from the justice of that state, the mere fact that in the judgment of conviction there was imposed a pecuniary fine and sentence to jail did not show that he was not guilty of a felony within Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and the federal statutes relating to extradition, there being nothing to show that under the law of the sister state accused might not have been imprisoned in the penitentiary. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

11. Questions determined.—Where a person is arrested for extradition as a fugitive from justice, the question of his guilt or innocence will not be tried. Ex parte Hancock (Cr. App.) 170 S. W. 146.

12. Presumptions.—In the absence of a showing to the contrary, the court will presume that the Governor in issuing his warrant for the arrest of a fugitive from the justice of a sister state acted only on a proper and legal requisition by the Governor of the sister state; and recitals in the warrant for the arrest of the fugitive that the demand was accompanied by a copy of the indictment and judgment duly certified as authentic by the Governor of the sister state were conclusive on habeas corpus when not disputed, and the mere fact that an instrument signed by the Governor of the sister state was insufficient as a demand was not sufficient to contradict the recitals in the absence of a showing that such instrument was the only paper presented by the Governor of the sister state to the Governor of Texas. Ex parte Bergman, 60 App. 8, 130 S. W. 174.

13. Escape after arrest.—See art. 1190, and note.

14. Bail.—See art. 1059, post, and notes under art. 6, ante.

15. Habeas corpus.—See notes under article 160, ante, and article 177, ante. Cited, Ex parte Lipsitz, 59 App. 179, 128 S. W. 817.

In habeas corpus a person arrested pursuant to a requisition from the Governor of another state, his own testimony that he was not guilty of the offense charged was properly excluded. Ex parte Brown (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 366.

Art. 1089.  [1052] Judicial and peace officers shall aid in the arrest of.—It is declared to be the duty of all judicial and peace officers of the state to give aid in the arrest and detention of a fugitive from any other state or territory, that he may be held subject to a requisition by the governor of the state or territory from which he may have escaped. [O. C. 879.]

Art. 1090.  [1053] Magistrate shall issue warrant for arrest of fugitive, when.—Whenever a complaint, on oath, is made to a magistrate that any person, within his jurisdiction, is a fugitive from justice from another state or territory, it is his duty to issue a warrant of arrest for the apprehension of the person accused. [O. C. 882.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1125.

Complaint.—The affidavit or complaint upon which a requisition from the Governor of another state was based recited that the complainant, being duly sworn, stated that accused, being the bailee of certain watches therein described, feloniously converted them to his own use with intent to steal them, and that the complainant had just and reasonable ground to believe, and did believe, that accused committed such offense. Held, that the affidavit when considered as a whole, was not made on information and belief, and was sufficient. Ex parte Brown (Cr. App.) 178 S. W. 366.

Executive warrant.—See notes under article 1088, ante.

Art. 1091.  [1054] Complaint shall be sufficient, if it recites, etc.—The complaint shall be sufficient if it recites—

1. The name of the person accused.
2. The state or territory from which he has fled.
3. The offense committed by the accused.
4. That he has fled to this state from the state or territory where the offense was committed.

952
5. That the act alleged to have been committed by the accused is a violation of the penal law of the state or territory from which he fled. [O. C. 883.]

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1125.

Art. 1092. [1055] Warrant of arrest from magistrate.—The warrant of a magistrate to arrest a fugitive from justice shall direct a peace officer to apprehend the person accused, and bring him before such magistrate.

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1126.
   Warrants in general.—See arts. 265 and 266, ante.

Art. 1093. [1056] Shall require bail or commit accused, when.—When the person accused is brought before the magistrate, he shall hear proof, and, if satisfied that the defendant is charged in another state or territory with the offense named in the complaint, he shall require of him bail, with good and sufficient security, in such amount as such magistrate may deem reasonable, to appear before such magistrate at a specified time; and, in default of such bail, he may commit the defendant to jail, to await a requisition from the governor of the state or territory from which he fled. [O. C. 885.]

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1127, 1128.
   Bail.—When a fugitive from justice is arrested on a requisition and warrant he is not entitled to bail. Ex parte Erwin, 7 App. 288.

Art. 1094. [1057] Certified transcript of indictment, evidence.—A properly certified transcript of an indictment against the accused shall be evidence to show that he is charged with the crime alleged. [O. C. 886.]

Art. 1095. [1058] Person arrested shall not be committed, or, etc.—A person arrested under the provisions of this title shall not be committed or held to bail for a longer time than ninety days. [O. C. 887.]

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1127.
   See Ex parte Lipshitz, 59 App. 179, 127 S. W. 817.

Art. 1096. [1059] Magistrate shall notify secretary of state, etc.—The magistrate by whose authority a fugitive from justice has been held to bail or committed shall immediately notify the secretary of state of the fact, stating in such notice the name of such fugitive, the state or territory from which he is a fugitive, the crime with which he is charged, and the date when he was committed or held to bail. Such notice may be forwarded, either through the mail or by telegraph. [O. C. 888.]

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1129.

Art. 1097. [1060] Shall also notify district or county attorney, who shall notify, etc.—The magistrate shall also immediately notify the district or county attorney of his county of the facts of the case, who shall forthwith give notice of such facts to the executive authority of the state or territory from which the accused is charged to have fled.

   See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1129.
   See Ex parte Lipshitz, 59 App. 179, 127 S. W. 817.

Art. 1098. [1061] Secretary of state shall communicate information, etc.—The secretary of state, upon receiving information as provided in article 1096, shall forthwith communicate such information by telegraph, when practicable, or, if not practicable, by mail, to the executive authority of the proper state or territory.

Art. 1099. [1062] Accused shall be discharged, when.—If the accused is not arrested under a warrant from the governor of this state before the expiration of ninety days from the day of his commitment or the date of the bail bond, he shall be discharged. [O. C. 889.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1127.
See Ex parte Lipshitz, 59 App. 173, 127 S. W. 817.

Art. 1100. [1063] Shall not be arrested a second time, except, etc.—A person who shall have once been arrested under the provisions of the preceding article, or by habeas corpus, shall not be again arrested upon a charge of the same offense, except by a warrant from the governor of this state. [O. C. 890.]

See Ex parte Lipshitz, 59 App. 173, 127 S. W. 817.

Escape.—When a fugitive from another state has been extradited and escapes and returns to this state, another warrant for his arrest may be issued without waiting for another requisition. Ex parte Hobbs, 32 App. 312, 22 S. W. 1055, 46 Am. St. Rep. 722.

Art. 1101. [1064] Governor of this state can demand fugitive from justice, how.—Whenever the governor of this state may think proper to demand a person who has committed an offense in this state and has fled to another state or territory, he may commission any suitable person to take such requisition; and the accused person, if brought back to the state, shall be delivered up to the sheriff of the county in which it is alleged he has committed the offense. [O. C. 881.]

Prosecution for different offense.—A person extradited upon a requisition of the governor of this state from another state of the United States, may be tried for a different offense from that for which he was extradited. Ham v. State, 13 App. 495; Kelley v. State, 13 App. 158; Underwood v. State, 33 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618. But where a defendant was extradited from Mexico for theft, it was held that he could not be tried for embezzlement. Blandford v. State, 10 App. 627.

Waiver of objections to jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction over the person is a matter subject to the objection or waiver only of the person over whom it is sought to be exercised; and, if such person submits, without objection to the jurisdiction and trial, his action amounts to waiver. Cordway v. State, 26 App. 405, 9 S. W. 670.

Objection that defendant could not be tried for another than the offense for which he was extradited comes too late when first mooted on motion for new trial. Underwood v. State, 33 App. 193, 41 S. W. 618.

Trial of person forcibly removed from another state.—A person accused of crime in this state may be tried for it in this state, though he was kidnapped in the other state, and brought back against his will, and without lawful authority. Brookin v. State, 26 App. 121, 9 S. W. 725.

Art. 1102. [1065] Reasonable pay to person commissioned, etc.—The person commissioned by the governor to bear a requisition for a fugitive from justice to another state or territory shall be paid out of the state treasury a reasonable compensation for his services, to be paid upon the certificate of the governor, specifying the services rendered and the amount allowed therefor. [O. C. 881.]

Art. 1103. [1066] Governor may offer a reward, when.—The governor may, whenever he deems it proper, offer a reward for the apprehension of any person accused of a felony in this state, and who is evading an arrest.

Art. 1104. [1067] Shall be published, how.—When the governor offers a reward, he shall cause the same to be published in such manner as, in his judgment, will be most likely to effect the arrest of the accused.

Art. 1105. [1068] Reward shall be paid by state.—The person who may become entitled to such reward shall be paid the same out of the state treasury upon the certificate of the governor, stating the amount thereof, and that such person is entitled to receive the same, and the facts which so entitle such person to receive it.

Art. 1105a. List of fugitives to be sent to adjutant general.—It shall be the duty of each sheriff in this state, upon the close of any regular term of the district court in his county, or within thirty days thereafter, to make out and forward by mail to the adjutant general of this state a certified list of all persons who, after indictment for a felony, have fled from said county. Such lists shall contain the full name of each of such fugitives, with a description giving his age, height, weight, color and occupation, the complexion of skin and the color of eyes and hair, and any peculiarities in person, speech, manner or gait that may serve to identify such fugitive, so far as the sheriff may be able to give them, and shall state the offense with which such person is charged. The adjutant general shall prescribe, have printed and forward to the sheriffs of the several counties the necessary blanks upon which are to be made the lists herein required. [Act 1887, p. 44, sec. 1; Amend. 1895, Sen. Jour. No. 97, p. 484.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was omitted from the revision of 1911. As it is directly pertinent to the subject of fugitives from justice, it is inserted in this compilation for convenience of reference.
OF COSTS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Chapter 1
TAXATION OF COSTS

Article 1106. [1069] Certain officers shall keep fee books.—
Each clerk of a court, county judge, sheriff, justice of the peace, constable, mayor, recorder and marshal, in this state, shall keep a fee book, and shall enter therein all fees charged for service rendered in any criminal action or proceeding; which book shall be subject to the inspection of any person interested in such costs. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 203, § 22.]

Article 1107. [1070] Fee book shall show what.—The fee book shall show the number and style of the action or proceeding in which the costs are charged; and each item of costs shall be stated separately; and it shall further name the officer or person to whom such costs are due.

Article 1108. [1071] No costs not provided for by law.—No item of costs in a criminal action or proceeding shall be taxed that is not expressly provided for by law.
See Boon v. State, 12 App. 100.
Extortion.—See P. C.,arts. 363, 365.

Article 1109. [1072] Costs payable in lawful currency.—All costs in criminal actions or proceedings shall be due and payable in the lawful currency of the United States. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 284, § 1.]

Article 1110. [1073] No costs payable until, etc.—No costs shall be payable by any person whatsoever until there be produced, or ready to be produced, unto the person owing or chargeable with the same, a bill or account, in writing, containing the particulars of such costs, signed by the officer to whom such costs are due, or by whom the same are charged. [Id., p. 293, § 23.]

Article 1111. [1074] Bill of costs shall accompany case, when.—Whenever a criminal action or proceeding is taken by appeal from one court to another, or whenever the same is in any other way transferred from one court to another, it shall be accompanied by a full and complete bill or account of all costs that have accrued in such action or proceeding; which bill or account shall be certified to, and signed by the proper officer of the court from which the same is forwarded.

Art. 1112. [1075] Costs shall not be taxed after defendant has paid.—No further costs shall be taxed against a defendant or collected from him in a criminal case, after he has paid the amount of costs taxed against him at the time of such payment, unless otherwise adjudged by the court upon a proper motion filed for that purpose.

Art. 1113. [1076] Costs may be retaxed, when and how.—Whenever costs have been erroneously taxed against a defendant, he may have the error corrected, and the costs properly taxed, upon filing a motion, in writing, for that purpose, in the court in which the case is then pending, or was last pending. Such motion may be made at any time within one year after the final disposition of the case in which the costs were taxed, and not afterward; and notice of such motion shall be given to the party or parties to be affected thereby, as in the case of a similar motion in a civil action; and the court hearing the same shall render such judgment therein as the facts and the law may require.

Service of motion to retax.—To retax witness fees, except as to matters appearing of record, notice of motion must be served on the witness. Stewart v. State, 38 App. 627, 44 S. W. 605.

Art. 1114. [1077] Fee book evidence, etc.—The items of costs taxed in an officer's fee book shall be prima facie evidence of the correctness of such items, and the same shall be considered correct until shown by satisfactory evidence to be otherwise.

1. FEES AND COMPENSATION IN GENERAL

Article 1115. [1078] Fees paid to attorney general.—The attorney general shall receive from the state the following fees:

1. In each case of felony appealed to the court of criminal appeals, where the appeal is dismissed or where the judgment of the court below is affirmed, the sum of twenty dollars.

2. In the case of habeas corpus heard before the court of criminal appeals when the applicant is charged with a felony, the sum of twenty dollars. [Act 22d Leg., S. S., ch. 16, § 59.]

See art. 1164, post.

Several defendants.—Although there may be several defendants in one indictment, yet the judgment is against each one separately, and on appeal each defendant's case is treated as a separate one, and fee for attorney-general allowed in each case. Hogg v. State, 40 App. 110, 48 S. W. 580.

Article 1116. [1079] Fees to clerk of court of criminal appeals.—The clerk of the court of criminal appeals, in every case of felony brought before such court by appeal, shall receive from the state the sum of ten dollars. [Id., § 60.]

See art. 1165, post.

Article 1117. [1080] Fees to be audited.—The fees allowed the attorney general and the clerk of the court of criminal appeals by the two preceding sections shall be audited and paid out of the state treasury upon the certificate of the court of criminal appeals, or of any one of the judges thereof, that the same is correct. [Id., § 61.]

Article 1117a [1119 and 1137, Rev. C. C. P. 1911]. [1092] Fees in examining courts, etc.—County judges, justices of the peace, sheriffs, constables, district and county attorneys and district clerks shall be allowed the following fees:

In all cases where county judges and justices of the peace shall sit as examining courts in felony cases, they shall be entitled to the same fees allowed by law for similar services in misdemeanor cases to justices of the peace, and ten cents for each one hundred words for writing down testimony, to be paid by the state, not to exceed three dollars for all his services in any one case.

Sheriffs and constables serving process and attending any examining court in the examination of any felony case, shall be entitled to such fees as are fixed by law for similar services in misdemeanor cases, to be paid by the state, not to exceed four dollars in any one case.

District and county attorneys, for attending and prosecuting any felony case before an examining court, shall be entitled to a fee of five dollars to be paid by the state for each case prosecuted by him before such court; provided, such fee shall not be paid, except in cases where the testimony of the material witnesses to the transaction shall be reduced to writing, subscribed and sworn to by said witness.

The fees mentioned in this article shall become due and payable only after the indictment of the defendant for the offense of which he was charged in the examining court, and upon an itemized account sworn to by the officers claiming such fees, approved by the judge of the district court.

Only one fee shall be allowed for an examining trial, though more than one defendant is joined in the complaint; and when defendants are proceeded against separately, who could have been proceeded against jointly, but one fee shall be allowed in all cases that could have been so joined; and the account of the officer and the approval of the judge must show that the provisions of this article are complied with. [Act Mar. 3, 1883, p. 22; Act 1903, ch. 142; Act 1907, S. S., p. 466, amending art. 1092, Rev. C. C. P. 1895.]

Explanatory.—The above provision, amendatory of art. 1092, Rev. C. C. P. 1895, was divided by the revision commissioners of 1911, part of it being inserted as art. 1119, and the other part as art. 1137. No reason appears for this separation. Art. 1138 Rev. C. C. P. 1891, a seemingly spurious creation of the revision commissioners, has made art. 1139, Rev. C. C. P. 1911, applicable to counties casting 3,000 votes or more, while art. 1137 was cast into the lot of counties casting less than 3,000 votes. An examination of the act of 1897, and a comparison of its provisions with the other legislation on the subject of this chapter of the statutes seems to result in the conclusion that the act of 1897, in dividing the counties into two classes, was intended to have but a limited scope, and was not designed to array all the legislation on the subject of fees into two divisions, as is done by the unfortunate insertion of art. 1126 in the Rev. C. C. P. of 1911. The sensible disposition of the matter would seem to be to limit the operation of the act of 1897 to the ordinary fees of the officers named. Much of the legislation is obviously incapable of classification to one or the other of the county groups, and is clearly applicable to all the counties. While the act of 1897 left the then existing provisions to apply to counties casting less than 3,000 votes, some of the subsequent amendments of these old provisions seem to have been made without legislative realization of the effect of the act of 1897, and some of such amendments introduce new features, which are seemingly intended to apply to all the counties. The compilers of this statute, in order to make the provisions capable of being understood, have renumbered and rearranged the articles of the statute and placed them under appropriate headings.

The decisions in such cases as Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 158 S. W. 626; Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 159 S. W. 505; Robertson v. State, 70 App. 307, 159 S. W. 713; and Williams v. State, 71 App. 6, 159 S. W. 732, seem to warrant this course.

Art. 1117b [1120, Rev. C. C. P. 1911]. Fees allowed district attorneys of districts composed of two or more counties; assistant district attorney; salary; removal.—In addition to the five hundred dollars now allowed them by law, district attorneys in all judicial districts of this State composed of two counties or more shall receive from the State as compensation for their services the sum of fifteen dollars for each day they attend the session of the District Court in their respective districts, in the necessary discharge of their official duty, and fifteen dollars per day for each day they represent the State at examining trials, inquest proceedings and habeas corpus proceedings in vacation; said fifteen dollars per day to be paid to the district attorneys, upon the sworn account of the district attorney, approved by the district judge, who shall certify that the attendance of the said district attorney for the number of days mentioned in his account was necessary, after which said account shall be recorded in the minutes of the District Court; provided, that the maximum number of days for such attendance and service for which the said commission is allowed shall not exceed one hundred and thirty-three days in any one year; and, provided further, that all fees in misdemeanor cases, and commissions and fees heretofore allowed district attorneys under the provisions of article 1118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and in Chapter 5 of the General Laws passed at the Special Session of the Twenty-fifth Legislature, in districts composed of two or more counties, shall, when, collected, be paid to the clerk of the District Court, who shall pay the same over to the State Treasurer; provided, the provisions of this bill shall not apply to district attorneys whose last preceding annual report of himself or his predecessor shows that he or his predecessor making such report received in fees, under the criminal laws, over two thousand four hundred and ninety-five dollars. Provided, further, that in districts composed of two or more counties, and in which said district there is a county containing a city of thirty-five thousand population or over, according to the last Federal census, the district attorney in such district shall, with the approval of the County Commissioners Court of such county, be authorized to appoint one assistant district attorney, who shall receive a salary of not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per month, such salary to be paid by such county, payable monthly; and, provided further, that such assistant district attorney, when so appointed, shall take the oath of office, and be authorized to represent the State in such county, and such authority to be exercised under the direction of the district attorney, and such assistant district attorney shall be subject to removal at the will of the district attorney. Such assistant district attorney shall be authorized to perform any duty devolving upon him for defendant by one refuses only. C. 952d.] See note under art. 1117a, ante. Confinement in jail.—Under this and the following article and Vernon's Nales' Civ. St. 1914, art. 1844, providing for the hiring out of a convict committed to jail 960 in default of payment of fine and costs, one indicted for murder and convicted of aggravated assault and battery and punished by confinement in jail for 30 days may be confined in jail for the costs previously paid by the state. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

Art. 1117g [1136, Rev. C. C. P. 1911]. [1091] Costs paid by state, a charge against defendant, except.—The costs and fees paid by the state under this title shall be a charge against the defendants in cases where they are convicted, except in cases of capital punishment or of sentence to the penitentiary for life, and, when collected, shall be paid into the treasury of the state. [O. C. 956.]

See note under art. 1117a, ante; art. 61, ante.

Capital conviction.—No judgment for costs should be entered where there is a capital conviction though costs may be adjudged against a convict in a capital case without vitiating the judgment for conviction. Lanham v. State, 7 App. 126; Jackson v. State, 25 App. 314, 7 S. W. 872.

Confinement in jail.—Under this and the preceding article and Vernon's Slayes' Civ. St. 1914, art. 6244, providing for the hiring out of a convict committed to jail in default of payment of fine and costs, one indicted for murder and convicted of aggravated assault and battery and punished by confinement in jail for 30 days may be confined in jail for the costs previously paid by the state. Ex parte Spiller, 63 App. 93, 138 S. W. 1013.

2. Compensation of Clerk of District Court, District Attorney, County Attorney, Sheriff and Constables in Counties in Which 3,000 or More Votes are Cast

Art. 1117h. Fees and compensation in felony cases.—That hereafter, in all the counties in this State, where there shall have been cast at the next preceding presidential election 3000 votes or over, the clerks of the district courts, district attorneys, county attorneys, sheriffs and constables shall receive from the State the following fees and compensation in felony cases, and no more: [Act 1897, S. S., p. 5, ch. 5, § 1.]

Explanatory.—The above section of the act of 1897 was omitted from the revision of 1911. In view of the decisions in Berry v. State (Cr. App.) 156 S. W. 626; Stevens v. State, 70 App. 565, 159 S. W. 305, and other cases, it is included in this compilation to aid in clearing up the complicated situation presented in the revision. See notes under arts. 1117a—1117e, ante.

Maximum compensation.—See art. 110, Pen. Code.

Art. 1118. [1081] Fees to district and county attorneys.—The district or county attorneys shall receive the following fees:

For all convictions in cases of felonious homicide, when the defendant does not appeal, or dies, or escapes after appeal and before final judgment of the court of criminal appeals, or, when upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of forty dollars.

For all convictions of felony when the defendant does not appeal, or dies, or escapes after appealing and before final judgment of the court of criminal appeals, or, when upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of twenty-four dollars; provided, that in all convictions of felony where the verdict and judgment is confinement in the state institution for the training of juveniles, the fees of the district or county attorney shall be twelve dollars.

For representing the state in each case of habeas corpus, where the defendant is charged with felony, the sum of sixteen dollars.

For every conviction obtained under the provisions of the antitrust law, the state shall pay to the county or district attorney in such prosecution the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars; and, if both the county and district attorney shall serve together in such prosecution, such fee shall be divided between them as follows: One hundred dollars to the county attorney, and one hundred and fifty dollars to the district attorney. [Act 1897, 1st S. S., p. 5, § 3.]

Arts. 1119-1121.—See arts. 1117a-1117c, ante, and notes thereunder.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1133, 1133a.

Art. 1122. [1083] Fees to sheriff or constable.—The sheriffs and constables in this state shall receive the following fees:
1. For executing each warrant of arrest or capias, for making arrest without warrant, when so authorized by law, the sum of one dollar, and in all cases, five cents per mile for each mile actually and necessarily traveled in going to the place of arrest; and, for conveying the prisoner or prisoners to jail, he shall receive the mileage provided in subdivision five of this act.
2. For summoning or attaching each witness, fifty cents.
3. For summoning a jury in each case, where a jury is actually sworn in, two dollars.
4. For executing death warrant, fifty dollars.
5. For removing or conveying prisoners, for each mile going and coming, including guards, and all other necessary expenses when traveling by railroad, ten cents. When traveling otherwise than by railroad, fourteen cents; provided, that where more than one prisoner is so conveyed or removed at the same time, in addition to the foregoing, he shall only be allowed eight cents per mile for each additional prisoner; provided, that when an officer goes beyond the limits of this state after a fugitive on requisition of the governor, he shall receive such compensation only as the governor shall allow for such services.
6. For each mile the officer may be compelled to travel in executing criminal process, summoning or attaching witnesses, five cents; provided, that in no case shall he be allowed to duplicate his mileage when two or more witnesses are named in the same or different writs in any case, and he shall serve process on them in the same neighborhood or vicinity during the same trip, he shall not charge mileage for serving such witness to or from the county seat, but shall charge only one mileage, and for such additional only as are actually and necessarily traveled in summoning and attaching each additional. When process is sent by mail to any officer away from the county seat, or returned by mail by such officer, he shall only be allowed to charge mileage for the miles actually traveled by him in executing such process; and the return of the officer shall show the character of the services, and miles actually traveled in accordance with this subdivision; and his account shall show the facts.
7. To officers for service of criminal process, not otherwise provided for, the sum of five cents a mile going and returning shall be allowed; provided, if two or more persons are mentioned in the same or different writs, the rule prescribed in subdivision 6 shall apply.
8. For conveying witnesses attached by him to any court, or in habeas corpus proceedings out of his county, or when directed by the judge from any other county to the court where the case is pending, one dollar and fifty cents per day, for each day actually and necessarily consumed in going to, and returning from, such courts, and his actual and necessary expenses by the nearest practical route, or nearest practical public conveyance, the amount to be stated by him in an account which shall show the place where the witness was attached, the distance to the nearest railroad station, and miles actually traveled to each court; if horses or vehicles are used, from whom hired and price paid, and length of time consumed, and amount paid out for feeding horses, and to whom; if meals and lodging were provided, from whom and when, and price paid; provided, that officers shall not be entitled to receive exceeding fifty cents per meal, and thirty-five cents per night for lodging for any witness; and, provided, further, that no item or items for expenses shall be allowed, unless the officer present with his account to the officer whose duty it is to approve the same a receipt in writing for each item of said account, except as to such items as are furnished by the officer himself. And when meals and lodging are furnished by the officer in person conveying the witnesses, he shall be allowed to receive not exceeding twenty-five cents per meal, and twenty-five cents per night for lodging. All of the said receipts shall be filed with the clerk of the court approving such accounts. Said accounts shall also show, before said officer shall be entitled to compensation for expenses of attached witnesses, that, before starting with said witnesses to the foreign court, he carried each of them before the magistrate nearest the place of serving the attachment, giving his name and residence, and that said witness made oath in writing before said magistrate, certified copies of which shall be attached to the account, that they were unable to give bond for their appearance at court, or refused to give bond after having been advised by said officer of their right to do so. And the officer shall also present to the court the affidavit of the witness to the same effect, or shall show that the witness refused to make the affidavit; and, should it appear to the court that the witness was willing and able to give bond, the sheriff shall not be entitled to any compensation for conveying such witness. And all accounts for fees in criminal cases by sheriffs shall be sworn to by the officer, before any officer authorized to administer oaths, and shall state that said account is true, just and correct in every particular, and be presented to the judge, who shall, during such term of court, carefully examine such account, and, if found to be correct, in whole or in part, shall so certify, and allow the same for such amount as he may find to be correct. And, if allowed by him, in whole or in part, he shall so certify; and such account, with the affidavit of the sheriff, and certificate of the judge, shall be recorded by the clerk of the district court in a book kept by him for that purpose, which shall constitute a part of the proceedings or minutes of the court. And the clerk shall certify to the original account, and shall show that the same has been recorded; and said account shall then become due; and the same shall constitute a voucher on which the comptroller is authorized to issue a warrant, if such account, when presented to the comptroller, shall be accompanied by a certified copy under the hand and seal of the district clerk, of the returns made on the process for which such officer is claiming fees, corresponding to the amount so claimed in his account. The minutes of the court above provided for, or a certified copy thereof, may be used in evidence against the officer making the affidavit for perjury in case said affidavit shall be wilfully false. When the officer receiving the writ for the attachment of such witness shall take a bond for the appearance of such witness, he shall be entitled to receive from the state one dollar for each bond so taken; but he shall be responsible to the court issuing said writ, that said bond is in proper form, and has been executed by the witness, with one or more good and solvent sureties; and said bond shall, in no case, be less than one hundred dollars; provided, the comptroller may require from such officer a certified copy of all such process before auditing any account; provided, that when no inquest or examining trial has been held, at which sufficient evidence was taken upon which to find an indictment, which fact shall be certified by the grand jury, or, when the grand jury shall state to the district judge that an indictment cannot be procured, except upon the testimony of non-resident witnesses, the district judge may have attachments issued to other counties for witnesses not to exceed the number for which the sheriff may receive pay as provided for by law, to testify before the grand juries; provided, however, that the judge shall not approve the accounts of any sheriff for more than one witness to any one fact, nor more than three witnesses to any one case pending before the grand jury, in which case the sheriff shall receive the same compensation as he does for conveying attached witnesses before the court. Subdivision 8 of this article shall apply to the officers affected thereby in all counties in Texas.

9. For attending a prisoner on habeas corpus, for each day, one dollar and sixty cents, together with mileage as provided in subdivision 5, when removing such prisoner out of the county under an order issued by a district or appellate judge. [Act 1897, S. S., ch. 5, § 4; Act 1901, ch. 119; Act 1901, 1st S. S., p. 21.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1134.

Amount of fees.—Under Acts 27th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 11, allowing a sheriff 5 cents a mile in going after a prisoner and 10 cents a mile in returning, a sheriff would be entitled to $4.20 for bringing a prisoner 42 miles in returning him to the place of trial. Buxan v. State, 59 App. 213, 123 S. W. 388.

Perjury in affidavit.—See art. 305, Pen. Code, and notes.

Art. 1123. Fees are due at close of each term of district court.—All fees accruing under this act shall be due and payable at the close of each term of the district court after approval, except as provided for in subdivisions 8 and 9 of the preceding article, which shall be paid when approved by the judge under whose writ was issued; provided, that in all cases when the defendant shall be finally convicted of a misdemeanor, the sheriff or constable shall be required to pay back to the state treasurer a sum of money equal to the amount he may have received from the state in such cases; and the said sheriff or constable and their bondsmen shall be responsible to the state for such sums. [Act 1897, 1st S. S., p. 5, § 5.]

Art. 1124. No costs shall be paid by state when.—In cases where the defendant is indicted for a felony, and is convicted of an offense less than a felony, no cost shall be paid by the state to any officer. [Id., p. 5, § 6.]

See, also, arts. 110, 111, Pen. Code, and art. 1137b, post.

Art. 1127a. Other counties controlled by previously existing laws.—That in those counties where there shall have been cast at the next preceding presidential election less than 3000 votes the clerk of the district courts, district attorneys, county attorneys, sheriffs and constables shall receive from the state the fees and compensation in felony cases allowed under now existing laws, and are not intended to be affected by the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 [arts. 1117a, 1118, 1122-1124, 1127] of this act. [Act 1897, S. S., p. 8, ch. 5, § 7.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was carried into the revision of 1911 as art. 1128, and was made to read as follows: "In those counties where there shall have been cast the next preceding presidential election less than three thousand votes, the clerks of the district courts, district attorneys, county attorneys, sheriffs and constables shall receive from the state the fees and compensation in felony cases allowed as follows, and are not intended to be affected by the foregoing provisions of this chapter." In view of what is said in the notes to arts. 1117a-1117c, ante, the provision is inserted in this compilation, as art. 1127a, in the words of its original enactment.

Art. 1128. See art. 1117a, ante, and note thereunder.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1135.

3. Fees and Compensation of Clerk of District Court, District Attorney, County Attorney, Sheriff and Constables in Counties Casting Less than 3,000 Votes

Art. 1129. Fees of district clerk in felony cases in certain counties.—The clerk of the district court shall receive, for each felony case tried in such court by jury, whether the defendant be convicted or acquitted, the sum of ten dollars; for each transcript on appeal or change of venue, ten cents for each one hundred words; for each felony case finally disposed of without trial, or dismissed, or nolle prosequi entered, ten dollars; for recording each account of sheriffs, as provided for in article 1132, the sum of fifty cents. [Act 1889, ch. 45.]

In habeas corpus proceedings in felony cases, the clerks of the district courts shall be paid by the state, upon the certificate of the judge, the following fees, not to exceed ten dollars in any one case: For taking down the evidence, ten cents for every one hundred words; for entering the judgment of the court, one dollar; for making out transcript in case of appeal, ten cents for every one hundred words.] [Act Mar. 3, 1883, p. 22; Act 1903, p. 231.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1135.

Explanatory.—The second paragraph of this article was derived from Act 1903, p. 230, amending art. 1909, Rev. C. C. P. 1895. Art. 1909, Rev. C. C. P. was again amended by Act 1907, S. S. p. 466, ch. 14, and the provision as to fees in habeas corpus proceedings was omitted. The result is that this provision had been repealed at the time it was carried into the revision. See Berry v. State (Cr. App.), 156 S. W. 626; Stevens v. State, 70 App. 665, 159 S. W. 505; Robertson v. State, 70 App. 307, 159 S. W. 713; Williams v. State, 71 App. 6, 169 S. W. 732.
The subsisting part of this article is confined in its operation to counties casting less than 3,000 votes at the last presidential election, by Act 1897, S. S. ch. 6, §§ 1, 7 (arts. 1117b, 1127a, ante.)

Recording fees.—See art. 111, Pen. Code.

Swearing witness to his account.—See art. 1137b, post.
Penalty for failure to charge up and report fees.—See art. 113, Pen. Code.

Art. 1130. Same; sheriff and constable.—To the sheriff or constable, shall be allowed the following fees in all cases when the charge is a felony; and all fees accruing under this article shall be due and payable at the close of each term of the district court, after approval as herein provided, except as provided for in subdivisions 8 and 9, which shall be paid when approved by the judge under whose order the writ was issued; provided, that in all cases when the defendant shall be finally convicted of a misdemeanor, the sheriff shall be required to pay back to the treasurer of the state a sum of money equal to the amount he may have received from the state in such case; and said sheriff and his bondsmen shall be responsible to the state for such sum:
1. For executing each warrant of arrest or capias, or for making arrest without warrant, when authorized by law, the sum of one dollar; and five cents for each mile actually and necessarily traveled in going to place of arrest, and for conveying the prisoner or prisoners to jail, mileage, as provided for in subdivision 5, shall be allowed.
2. For summoning or attaching each witness, fifty cents.
3. For summoning jury in each case where jury is actually sworn in, two dollars.
4. For executing death warrant, fifty dollars.
5. For removing a prisoner, for each mile going and coming, including guards and all other expenses when traveling by railroad, ten cents; when traveling otherwise than by railroad, fifteen cents; provided, that when more than one prisoner is removed at the same time, in addition to the foregoing, he shall only be allowed ten cents a mile for each additional prisoner; provided, further, that when an officer goes beyond the limits of the state after a fugitive, on requisition of the governor, he shall receive such compensation as the governor shall allow for such services.
6. For each mile the officer may be compelled to travel in executing criminal process, summoning or attaching witnesses, five cents; provided, that in no case shall he be allowed to duplicate his mileage when two or more witnesses are named in the same or different writs in any case, and he shall serve process on them in the same vicinity or neighborhood, during the same trip, he shall not charge mileage for serving such witness to and from the county seat, but shall only charge one mileage, and for such additional miles only as are actually and necessarily traveled in summoning or attaching each additional witness. When process is sent by mail to any officer away from the county seat, or returned by mail by such officer, he shall only be allowed to charge mileage for the miles actually traveled by him in executing such process, and the return of the officer shall show the character of the service and miles actually traveled in accordance with this subdivision; and his accounts shall show the facts.
7. To officers for service of criminal process not otherwise provided for, the sum of five cents a mile going and returning shall be allowed; provided, if two or more persons are mentioned in the same or different writs, the rule prescribed in subdivision 6 shall apply.
8. For conveying a witness attached by him to any court or grand jury, or in a habeas corpus proceeding out of his county, or when directed by the judge from any other county, to the court where the case is pending, one dollar per day for each day actually and necessarily consumed in going and returning from such court, and his actual necessary expenses, by the nearest practicable route or nearest practicable public conveyance, the amount to be stated by him in an account which shall show the place at which the witness was attached, the distance to nearest railroad station, and miles actually traveled to reach the court; if horses or vehicles were used, from whom hired, and price paid, and length of time consumed, and amount paid out for feeding horses, and to whom; if meals and lodgings were provided, from whom and when and price paid; provided, that officers shall not be entitled to receive exceeding fifty cents per meal and thirty-five cents per night for lodging for any witness. Said account shall also show, before said officer shall be entitled to compensation for expenses of attached witnesses, that, before starting with said witnesses to the foreign court, he carried each of them before the magistrate nearest the place of serving the attachment, giving his name and residence, and that said witness made oath in writing before such magistrate, certified copies of which shall be attached to the account, that they were unable to give bond for their appearance at court, or refused to give bond after having been advised by said officer of their right to do so. And the officer shall also present to the court the affidavit of the witness to the same effect, or shall show that the witness refused to make the affidavit; and, should it appear to the court that the witness was able and willing to give bond, the sheriff shall not be entitled to any compensation for conveying such witness; and said accounts shall be sworn to by the officer, before any officer authorized to administer oaths, and shall state that said account is true, just, and correct in every particular, and present same to the judge, who shall, during such term of court, carefully examine such account, and, if found to be correct, in whole or in part, shall so certify, and allow the same for such an amount as he may find to be correct; and, if by him allowed, in whole or in part, he shall so certify; and such account, with the affidavit of the sheriff and certificate of the judge, shall be recorded by the clerk of the district court in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, which shall constitute a part of the proceedings or minutes of the court; and the clerk shall certify to the original account, and shall show that the same has been so recorded; and said account shall then become due, and the same shall constitute a voucher, on which the comptroller is authorized to issue a warrant; and such minutes of the court, or a certified copy thereof, may be used in evidence against the officer making the affidavit, for perjury, in case said affidavit shall be wilfully false. When the officer receiving a writ for the attachment of such witness shall take a bond for the appearance of any such witness, he shall be entitled to receive from the state one dollar for each bond so taken; but he shall be responsible to the court issuing said writ that said bond is in proper form and has been executed by the witness with one or more good or solvent securities; and said bond shall, in no case, be less than one hundred dollars; provided, the comptroller may require from such officer a certified copy of all such process before auditing any account.

9. For attending a prisoner on habeas corpus, for each day, two dollars, together with mileage as hereinbefore provided in subdivision 5, when removing such prisoner out of the county under an order issued by a district or appellate judge. [Act 1891, ch. 93; Act 1895, ch. 93.]

See arts. 1117h and 1127a, ante, limiting the above article to counties casting less than 3,000 votes. See also, art. 110, Pen. Code.

Art. 1131. Same; district and county attorneys.—The district or county attorney shall be allowed the following fees:

1. For all convictions in case of felonious homicide, when the defendant does not appeal, or dies, or escapes after appeal, and before final judgment of the court of criminal appeals, or when, upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of fifty dollars.

2. For all other convictions of felony, when the defendant does not appeal, or dies, or escapes after appealing, and before final judgment of the court of criminal appeals, or when, upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, the sum of thirty dollars; provided, that in all convictions of felony whereby the verdict and judgment, the defendant is confined in the state institution for the training of juveniles, the fee of the district or county attorney shall be fifteen dollars.

3. For representing the state in each case of habeas corpus, where the defendant is charged with a felony, the sum of twenty dollars. [Act 1889, S. S., ch. 16, § 62; amended 1895, p. 148.]

4. Accounts of Officers

Art. 1132. [1087] Officer shall make out cost bill, and what it shall show.—Before the close of each term of the district court, the
ART. 1132  COSTS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS

District or county attorney, sheriff and clerk of said court shall each make out a bill or account of the costs claimed to be due them by the state, respectively, in the felony cases tried at that term; the bill or account shall show—

1. The style and number of cases in which the costs are claimed to have accrued.
2. The offense charged against the defendant.
3. The term of the court at which the case was disposed of.
4. The disposition of the case, and that the case was finally disposed of, and no appeal taken.
5. The name and number of defendants; and, if more than one, whether they were tried jointly or separately.
6. Where each defendant was arrested or witness served, stating the county in which the service was made, giving distance and direction from county seat of county in which the process is served; and mileage shall be charged for distance by the most direct and practicable route from the court whence such process issued to the place of service.
7. In allowing mileage, the judge shall ascertain whether the process was served on one or more of the parties named therein on the same tour, and shall allow mileage, only for the number of miles actually traveled, and then only for the journey made at the time the service was perfected.
8. The court shall inquire whether there have been several prosecutions for an offense or transactions that is but one offense in law; and, if there is more than one prosecution for the same transaction, or a portion thereof, that could have been combined in one indictment against the same defendant, the judge shall allow fees to sheriffs, clerks and district and county attorneys in but one prosecution.
9. Where the defendants in a case have served on the trial, the judge shall not allow the charges for service of process and mileage to be duplicated in each case as tried; but only such additional fees shall be allowed as are caused by the severance. [Act of 1879, Ex. Ses., ch. 46.]

Accounting for fees collected. — See arts. 115-115b, Pen. Code.

Review of accounts. — The State Comptroller has no power to review accounts of prosecuting attorneys, sheriffs, and clerks in felony cases approved by the district judge under this and the following article; the judge's approval being a judicial and not a ministerial act. Rochelle v. Lane, 105 Tex. 350, 148 S. W. 553.

Art. 1133. [1088] Duty of judge to examine bill, etc. — It shall be the duty of the district judge, when any such bill is presented to him, to examine the same carefully, and to inquire into the correctness thereof, and approve the same, in whole or in part, or to disapprove the entire bill, as the facts and law may require; and such bill, with the action of the judge thereon, shall be entered on the minutes of said court; and immediately on the rising of said court, it shall be the duty of the clerk thereof to make a certified copy from the minutes of said court of said bill, and the action of the judge thereon, and transmit the same by mail, in registered letter, to the comptroller of public accounts.

All fees due district clerks for recording all sheriff's accounts shall be paid at the end of said term; and all fees due district clerks for making transcripts on change of venue and on appeal shall be paid as soon as the service is performed; and the clerk's bill for such fees shall not be required to show that the case has been finally disposed of.

Bills for fees for such transcripts shall be approved by the district judge, and, when approved, shall be recorded as part of the minutes of the last preceding term of the court.
In all cases where the defendant charged with a felony is convicted of a misdemeanor, all fees received by the district clerk shall be refunded by him to the state. [Id.; amended, Act 1903, p. 112.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1136, 1138.

Review of accounts.—The State Comptroller has no power to review accounts of prosecuting attorneys, sheriffs, and clerks in felony cases approved by the district judge under this and the preceding article: the judge's approval being a judicial and not a ministerial act. Rochelle v. Lane, 168 Tex. 396, 148 S. W. 558.

-It shall be the duty of the comptroller, upon the receipt of such claim, and said certified copy of the minutes of said court, to closely and carefully examine the same, and, if correct, to draw his warrant on the state treasurer for the amount due, and in favor of the officer entitled to the same; provided, that if the appropriation for paying such accounts is exhausted, the comptroller shall file the same away, if correct, and issue a certificate in the name of the officer entitled to the same, stating therein the amount of the claim and character of the services performed. And all such claims or accounts not transmitted to or placed on file in the office of the comptroller of public accounts, within twelve months from the date of the final disposition of the case in which the services were rendered, shall be forever barred; provided, further, that the owners of the claims or accounts that have been barred by the provisions of this article, requiring the same to be transmitted to or placed on file in the office of the comptroller of public accounts, in six months from the date of the final disposition of the case in which the services were rendered, shall have six months from and after the time this act shall take effect to present said claims; and all claims or accounts so presented shall be taken and considered by the comptroller as claims presented within the time allowed by law. [Id.; amended by Act April 11, 1883, p. 75.]

Arts. 1135–1137. See arts. 1117a, 1117f, 1117g, ante, and notes thereunder.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1137, 1138.

Art. 1137a. Duty of district judge to examine accounts of sheriff.—It shall be the duty of the district judge to inspect the accounts in felony cases of the sheriffs in his district and to see that no charge is made against the State for serving subpœnas and for the mileage traveled in serving same in any case unless the provisions of Section 1 of this Act [art. 526a, ante] have been complied with, and if upon examination of the account it shall appear to the district judge that subpœnas have been served by the sheriff, or any of his deputies in cases where the proper applications have not been made and granted as provided for in said Section 1 of this Act, then it shall be the duty of said judge to deduct from said sheriff's account the charges made for serving such subpœnas and the mileage charged for serving same. [Act 1913, p. 320, ch. 150, § 3.]

See art. 322a, Pen. Code, and arts. 526a and 1189a, C. C. P.

5. FEES OF WITNESSES

Art. 1137b. Fees of witnesses; proviso.—All witnesses residing in the county of the prosecution, when summoned under the provisions of this Act to appear and give evidence in any felony case, shall be entitled to one dollar per day for each day they may have been necessarily absent from their homes or business in attendance upon court, said fees to be paid by the State, and the Comptroller of Public Accounts is hereby authorized to draw a warrant against the State Treasury for same when the accounts are properly presented to him, approved by the presiding district judge, and when after inspection by him he finds said accounts to be correct; provided, that no witnesses fees shall be paid to peace officers, nor to any witness in habeas corpus cases, or summoned on a motion for change of venue; and provided, further, that no fees shall be approved by the court in any case where the charge includes a misdemeanor case until the case is finally disposed of, and in case of a conviction for misdemeanor no fees shall be paid by the State; and provided, further, that witnesses attending court in more than one case at the same time shall receive fees in only one case; and provided, further, that in no event the State shall pay per diem in any one case more than five dollars to any witness in any one case at any one term of the court; and provided, further, that the fee to be collected by the district clerk for swearing each witness to his account for his attendance in a case shall be ten cents. [Act 1913, 1st S. S., p. 20, ch. 13, § 1, amending Act 1913, ch. 150, § 4.]

Art. 1138. [1093] Fees of subpoenaed or attached witness in felony cases out of the county of his residence.—1. Any witness who may have been recognized, subpoenaed or attached, and given bond for his appearance before any court, or before any grand jury, out of the county of his residence, to give testimony in a felony case, and who shall appear in compliance with the obligations of such recognizance or bond, shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses, not exceeding three cents per mile going to and returning from the court or grand jury, by the nearest practicable conveyance, and one dollar per day for each day he may necessarily be absent from home as a witness in such case.

Witnesses shall receive from the state, for attendance upon district courts and grand juries in counties other than that of their residence, in obedience to subpoenas issued under the provisions of this act, their actual traveling expenses, not exceeding three cents per mile, going to and returning from the court or grand jury, by the nearest practicable conveyance, and one dollar per day for each day they may necessarily be absent from home as a witness, to be paid as now provided by law; and the foreman of the grand jury, or clerk of the district court, shall issue to such witness certificates therefor, after deducting therefrom the amounts advanced by the officers serving said subpoenas, as shown by the returns on said subpoenas; which certificates shall be approved by the district judge, and recorded by the clerk in a well-bound book kept for that purpose; provided, that when an indictment can be found from the evidence taken before an inquest or examining trial, no subpoena or attachment shall issue for a witness who resides out of the county in which the prosecution is pending to appear before a grand jury; and provided, further, that when the grand jury shall certify to the district judge that sufficient evidence cannot be secured upon which to find an indictment, except upon the testimony of non-resident witnesses, the district judge may have subpoenas issued as provided for in this law to other counties for witnesses to testify before the grand jury, not to exceed one witness to any one fact, nor more than three witnesses to any one case pending before the grand jury.

2. Witness fees shall be allowed to such state witnesses only as the district or county attorney shall state in writing are material for the state, and to witness for defendant, after he has made affidavit that the testimony of the witness is material to his defense, stating the facts which are expected to be proved by the witness; which certificate and affidavit must be made at the time of procuring the attachment for, or taking the recognizance of, the witness; provided, that the judge to whom an application for attachment is made may, in his discretion, grant or refuse such application, when presented in term time. No attachment shall be issued in a felony case.
until the state's attorney shall have first made the statement in writing, or the defendant shall have made the affidavit which will authorize the payment of the witness to be attached.

3. Before the close of each term of the district court, the witness shall make affidavit in writing, stating the number of miles he will have traveled going to and returning from the court, by the nearest practicable conveyance, and the number of days he will have been necessarily absent going to and returning from the place of trial, which affidavit shall be filed with papers of the case; provided, no witness shall receive pay for his services as a witness in more than one case at any one term of the court; provided, further, that fees shall not be allowed to more than two witnesses to the same fact, unless the judge of the court before whom the cause is tried shall, after such case shall have been disposed of, certify that such witnesses, claiming fees as herein provided, were necessary in the cause; nor shall any witness, recognized or attached for the purpose of proving the general character of the defendant, be entitled to the benefits hereof.

4. It shall be the duty of the district or criminal judge, when any such bill is presented to him, to examine the same carefully, and to inquire into the correctness thereof and to approve the same, in whole or in part, or to disapprove the entire bill, as the facts and law may require; and said bill, with the action of the judge thereon, shall be entered on the minutes of said court; and, immediately on the rising of said court, it shall be the duty of the clerk thereof to make a certified copy from the minutes of said court of said bill, and the action of the judge thereon, and transmit the same by mail, in registered letter, to the comptroller of public accounts; for which service the clerk shall be entitled to a fee of twenty-five cents, to be paid by the witness.

5. It shall be the duty of the comptroller, upon the receipt of such claim and said certified copy of the minutes of said court, to carefully examine the same, and, if correct, to draw his warrant on the state treasurer for the amount due, and in favor of the witness entitled to the same; provided, if the appropriation for paying such accounts is exhausted, the comptroller shall file the same away, if correct, and issue a certificate in the name of the witness entitled to the same, stating therein the amount of the claim; and all such claims or accounts not transmitted to, or placed on file in, the office of the comptroller of public accounts within twelve months from the date of the final disposition of the case in which the witness was attached or recognized to testify, shall be forever barred; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this bill are hereby repealed. [Act 1897, S. S. ch. 19; Act 1903, p. 230; Act 1905, p. 375.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1138.
See art. 114, Pen. Code.

Conclusiveness of action by judge.—The action of the judge in allowing or disallowing the account of a witness for his fees is conclusive and is not subject to review or control by mandamus or otherwise. Murray v. Gillespie, 88 Tex. 255, 72 S. W. 161.

971
OF COSTS PAID BY COUNTIES

Art. 1139. County shall be liable for what costs.—Each county shall be liable for all the expenses incurred on account of the safe keeping of prisoners confined in their respective jails, or kept under guard, except prisoners brought from another county for safe keeping, or from another county on habeas corpus or change of venue; in which cases, the county from which the prisoner is brought shall be liable for the expense of his safe keeping. [O. C. 957.]

Cases dismissed.—Counties are not liable for costs due clerks in cases of misdemeanors, or of felonies dismissed. Colorado County v. Beethe, 44 Tex. 447.

Compensation of expert.—When a justice of the peace, for the purposes of an inquest, employs an expert to make a post mortem examination of the dead body, etc., the county is liable for reasonable compensation for such service. And where it is necessary for the purposes of an inquest to disinter a dead body, the county is liable for the expenses of disinterring, and also for re-interring. Rutherford v. Harris County, 3 Wilson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 114.

Art. 1140. Shall be responsible for food and lodging of jurors.—Each county shall be liable for the expenses of food and lodging for jurors impaneled in a case of felony; but, in such cases, no scrip shall be issued or money paid to the jurors whose expenses are so paid. [O. C. 958.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1139, 1146.

Art. 1141. Juror may pay his own expenses and draw scrip.—A juror may pay his own expenses and draw his scrip; but the county is responsible in the first place for all the expenses incurred by the sheriff in providing suitable food and lodging for the jury, not to exceed, however, one dollar and twenty-five cents a day. [O. C. 959.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1139.

Art. 1142. Allowance to sheriff for prisoners.—For the safe keeping, support and maintenance of prisoners confined in jail or under guard, the Sheriff shall be allowed the following charges:

1. For each prisoner for each day such amount as may be fixed by the commissioners court, provided, the same shall be reasonably sufficient as compensation for such service, and in no event shall it be less than forty cents per day for each prisoner, nor more than fifty cents for each prisoner per day.

2. For necessary medical bill and reasonable extra compensation for attention to a prisoner during sickness, such an amount as the commissioners court of the county where the prisoner is confined may determine to be just and proper.
3. The reasonable funeral expenses in case of death. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 290, § 11; Act 1911, p. 107, ch. 64, § 1; amending art. 1097, C. C. P. 1895.]

Construction of former law.—Where there are more than four prisoners the sheriff is entitled to only 30 cents a day for each of them. Hammond v. Lamar County, 18 Civ. App. 188, 44 S. W. 179.

Art. 1143. [1098] Allowance for guards.—The sheriff shall be allowed for each guard necessarily employed in the safe keeping of prisoners one dollar and fifty cents for each day; and there shall not be any allowance made for the board of such guard, nor shall any allowance be made for jailer or turnkey, except in counties having forty thousand population or more. In such counties of forty thousand population or more, the commissioners' court may allow each jail guard, jailer and turnkey two dollars and fifty cents per day. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 290; Act 1909, p. 98; Act 1915, 1st S. S., p. 40, ch. 20, § 1, amending art. 1143, C. C. P.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1142.

Approval of employment of guard.—The power of a sheriff to employ guards is expressly limited and defined by article 7127, Vernon's Statutes' Civ. St. 1914, and he can only make such employment with the approval of the commissioners' court, or in cases of emergency, with the approval of the county judge, except in the single instance where there is no jail in the county. A county can not be sued upon a claim until such claim has first been presented to the commissioners' court for allowance, and such court has neglected, refused to audit and allow the same or any part thereof. McDade v. Waller County, 3 App. C. C., sec. 139. See, also, 3 App. C. C. §§ 109, 111.

Art. 1144. [1099] Sheriff shall pay what expenses, to be reimbursed by county.—It is the duty of the sheriff to pay the expenses of jurors impaneled in cases of felony (except when they are paid by the juror himself), the expense of employing and maintaining a guard, and to support and take care of all prisoners, for all of which, he shall be reimbursed by the proper county according to the rates fixed in the two preceding articles. [O. C. 961.]

Art. 1145. [1100] Sheriff shall present account to district judge.—At each term of the district court of his county, the sheriff may present to the district judge presiding his accounts for all expenses incurred by him for food and lodging of jurors, in cases of trials for felony during the term at which his account is presented. Such account shall state the number and style of the case or cases in which the jurors were impaneled, and specify by name each juror's expenses paid by such sheriff, and the number of days the same were paid, and shall be verified by the affidavit of such sheriff. [O. C. 962.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1139.

Art. 1146. [1101] Judge shall examine account, etc.—The account provided for in the preceding article shall be carefully examined by the district judge; and he shall approve the same, or so much thereof as he finds to be correct. He shall write his approval on said account, specifying the amount for which the same is approved, and shall date and sign the same officially, and cause the same to be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county liable therefor. [O. C. 983.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1140.

Art. 1147. [1102] Judge shall give sheriff draft upon county treasurer.—The district judge shall give to the sheriff a draft upon the county treasurer of the proper county for the amount of each account allowed by him; and the same, when presented to the county treasurer, shall be paid out of any moneys in his hands, not otherwise legally appropriated, in the same manner as jury certificates are paid. [O. C. 964.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1141.
Art. 1148. [1103] Account for keeping prisoners.—At each regular term of the commissioners' court, the sheriff shall present his account to such court for the expenses incurred by him since the last account presented for the safe keeping, support and maintenance of prisoners, including guards employed, if any. Such account shall state the name of each prisoner, and each item of expense incurred on account of such prisoner, and the date of each item, the name of each guard employed, the length of time employed, and the purpose of such employment, and shall be verified by the affidavit of the sheriff.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1142.

Art. 1149. [1104] Commissioners' court shall examine account, and order draft, etc.—The commissioners' court shall examine the account named in the preceding article, and allow the same, or so much thereof as may be reasonable and in accordance with law, and shall order a draft to be issued to the sheriff for the amount so allowed, upon the treasurer of the county; and such account shall be filed and safely kept in the office of the clerk of such court.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1143.

Ordering draft drawn as ministerial act.—The ordering by the commissioner's court of a draft to be drawn as required by this article is purely a ministerial act and one for the refusal of the performance of which mandamus will lie against said commissioner's court. Denman v. Coffee, 42 Civ. App. 78, 91 S. W. 862.

Draft as receivable for taxes.—See art. 1103, post.

Conclusiveness of action on account.—The action of the commissioners' court upon a sheriff's account for board and guards of prisoners is conclusive, in the absence of a showing that such court had abused its discretion, or that the allowance was not sufficient for the support of the prisoners. Fayette County v. Faires, 44 Tex. 614.

Art. 1150. [1105] Expenses, etc., of prisoner from another county.—If the expenses incurred are for the safe keeping, support and maintenance of a prisoner from another county, the sheriff shall make out a separate account therefor, such as is provided for in article 1108, and submit the same to the county judge of his county, who shall carefully examine the same, and write thereon his approval therefor for such amount as he finds to be correct, stating the amount so approved by him, and shall date and sign such approval officially and return the same to the sheriff.

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1144-1146.

Art. 1151. [1106] Same subject.—The account mentioned in the preceding article shall then be presented to the commissioners' court of the county liable for the same, at a regular term of such court; and such court shall, if the charges therein be in accordance with law, order a draft to issue upon the treasurer of such county in favor of the sheriff to whom the same is due for the amount allowed.

Art. 1152. [1107] Same in case of change of venue.—In all causes where indictments have been presented against persons in one county charging them with any offense against the Penal Code, and such causes have been removed by change of venue to another county, and tried therein, the county from which such cause is removed shall be liable for all expenses incurred for pay of jurors in trying such causes. [Act March 18, 1881, p. 52.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1146.

Art. 1153. [1108] Same subject.—It shall be the duty of the county commissioners of each county in the state, at each regular meeting, to ascertain whether, since the last regular meeting, any person has been tried for crime upon a change of venue from any other county; and, if they shall find such to be the case, it shall be their duty to make out an account against such county from which such cause was removed, showing the number of days the jury in such case was employed therein, and setting forth the amount paid for such jury service; such account shall then be certified to as correct by the county judge of such county, under his hand and seal, and be, by him, forwarded to the county judge of the county court of the county from which the said cause was removed; which account shall be paid in the same manner as accounts for the safe keeping of prisoners in article 1151 of this Code. [Id.]

Art. 1154. [1109] Fees of county judge.—There shall be paid to the county judge by the county, the sum of three dollars for each criminal action tried and finally disposed of before him. [Acts of 1879, Ex. Ses., ch. 44.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1147.

Art. 1155. [1110] How collected.—The county judge shall present to the commissioners' court of his county, at a regular term thereof, an account, in writing, specifying each criminal action in which he claims the fee allowed by the preceding article; which account shall be certified to be correct by such judge, and the same shall be filed with the clerk of the county court. The commis-ioners' court shall approve such account for such amount as they may find to be correct, and order a draft to be issued upon the county treasurer in favor of such judge for the amount so approved. [Id.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1147.

Art. 1155a. Fees and salary of judge of county court of Bexar county for criminal cases.—The judge of the County Court of Bexar County for Criminal Cases shall collect the same fees provided by law for county judges in similar cases, all of which shall be paid by him monthly into the County Treasury, and he shall receive a salary of three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars annually, to be paid monthly out of the County Treasury by the Commissioners Court. The county judge of Bexar County shall receive, in addition to the other fees allowed by law, a salary for the ex-officio duties of his office of not less than twenty-five hundred ($2,500.00) dollars per annum. [Act 1915, p. 80, ch. 39, § 12.]

Art. 1156. [1111] Fee of justice for holding an inquest.—A justice of the peace shall be entitled, for business connected with an inquest on a dead body, including certifying and returning the proceeding to the proper court, the sum of five dollars, to be paid by the county; provided, that when an inquest is held over the dead body of a state penitentiary convict, the state shall pay the inquest fees allowed by law of all officers, upon the approval of the account therefor by the county commissioners' court of the county in which the inquest may be held and the superintendent of penitentiaries; and provided, further, that no inquest shall be held on the dead body of a state penitentiary convict if said convict died from disease and was attended by a regular physician, and a certificate by said physician showing said facts be filed in the office of the county judge of the county in which said convict died and in the office of the superintendent of penitentiaries. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 291, § 12; amended by Act March 31, 1883, p. 39.]
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1148, 1149.

Art. 1157. [1112] Commissioners' court shall act upon account.
—The officer or officers claiming pay for services mentioned in the preceding article shall present to the commissioners' court of the county, at a regular term of such court, an account therefor, verified by the affidavit of such claimant; and, if such account be found correct, the court shall order a draft to issue upon the county treasurer in favor of such claimant for the amount due him; and such account shall be filed and safely kept in the office of the clerk of the county court.
See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1149.
Art. 1158. [1113] Pay of petit jurors.—Each juror who serves in the trial of any criminal case in any court of criminal jurisdiction, or who has been sworn as a juror for the term or week, shall receive two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) for each day and for each fraction of a day he may serve or attend as such juror; provided, that this provision shall not extend to mayors’ and recorders’ courts, taking cognizance of offenses against municipal ordinances; provided, further, that the jurors in justice courts, who serve in the trial of criminal cases in such courts, shall receive fifty cents in each case they may sit as jurors; provided, that no juror in such court shall receive more than one dollar ($1.00) for each day or fraction of a day he may serve as such juror. [Act Feb. 21, 1879; Act Mar. 15, 1881, p. 32; Act 1911, p. 109, ch. 66, § 1, amending art. 1113, C. C. P. 1895.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1146, 1151.

Art. 1159. [1114] If not sworn, not entitled to pay.—A person who has been summoned and who attends as a juror, but who has not been sworn as such in a case, or for the term or week, shall not receive pay as a juror.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1152.

Art. 1160. [1115] Pay of grand jurors.—Grand jurors shall each receive two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) per day for each day and for each fraction of a day that they may serve as such. [Act Feb. 16, 1883, p. 11; Act 1911, p. 109, ch. 66, § 1, amending art. 1115, C. C. P. 1895.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1146, 1161.

Art. 1161. [1116] Pay of bailiffs.—Bailiffs, for the grand jury shall receive such pay for their services as may be determined by the district court of the county where the service is rendered; and the order of the court in relation thereto shall be entered upon the minutes, stating the name of the bailiff, the service rendered by him, and the amount of pay allowed therefor; provided, the pay shall not exceed two dollars and fifty cents per day for riding bailiffs during the time they ride, and not exceed one dollar and fifty cents per day for other bailiffs; and provided, further, that the deputy sheriff shall not receive pay as bailiff.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1154, 1155.

Art. 1162. [1117] Certificates for pay of jurors and bailiffs.—The amount due jurors and bailiffs shall be paid by the county treasurer, upon the certificate of the clerk of the court in which such service was rendered, or of the justice of the peace, mayor or recorder in which such service was rendered; which certificate shall state the service, when rendered, by whom rendered, and the amount due therefor.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1150-1153, 1155.

Art. 1163. [1118] Drafts and certificates receivable for county taxes.—Drafts drawn and certificates issued under the provisions of this chapter shall, without further action or acceptance by any authority, except registration by the county treasurer, be receivable at par for all county taxes. The same may be transferred by delivery; and no ordinance, rule or regulation made by the commissioners’ court or other officer or officers of a county shall defeat the right of a holder of any such draft or certificate to pay county taxes thereby. [O. C. 968.]

Art. 1163a. Costs to be paid officers.—Whenever a convict, who has been committed to jail in default of payment of fine and costs adjudged against him, has satisfied such fine and costs in full by labor in the workhouse, on the county farm, on the public roads of the county, or upon any public works of the county, said county in which said conviction was had shall be liable to each officer and witness having costs in the case against said convict for only one-half of such costs; and the county judge of said county shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of each officer and witness for one-half of all such legal costs as may have been taxed up against said convict, not to include commissions; and the same shall be paid out of the road and bridge fund of the county, or out of any other county funds not otherwise appropriated. [Act 1876, p. 229, sec. 8. Amend. 1895, p. 179, ch. 115, § 1; Rev. St. 1911, art. 6247.]

Explanatory.—The above provision was not carried into the revision of 1911. It is included in this compilation on account of its pertinence to the subject of costs in criminal cases.

Former law.—A county was liable under article 2800, Rev. St. 1879, before its amendment in 1895, embodied in this article, for such costs only as were legally adjudged against the convict. Harris County v. Stewart, 51 Tex. 133, 41 S. W. 650. This article, which was article 2742, Rev. St. 1895, is an amendment to article 2800, Rev. St. 1879, and was enacted in 1895. County attorneys are entitled to commissions earned prior to the amendment of 1895, but not afterwards. Fears v. Ellis County, 20 Civ. App. 159, 48 S. W. 139.

1. IN THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS

Article 1164. [1119] Fees of attorney general in misdemeanor cases.—The attorney general shall, in every conviction of offenses against the penal laws in cases of misdemeanors, when the judgment of the court below is affirmed by the court of criminal appeals, or the appeal is dismissed by said court, receive the sum of ten dollars. [Act 22d Leg., ch. 16, § 63.]

See Willson's Cr. Forms, 1186.

See art. 1116, ante.

Joint defendants.—The fee is taxable for each defendant, though they were convicted jointly. Hogg v. State, 40 App. 109, 48 S. W. 589.

2 Code Cr. Proc. Tex.—62 977
Liability on recognizance for fee and costs of collection.—Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024; Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091.

Fee is taxable as costs.—See Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024.

Art. 1165. [1120] Clerk allowed fees not to exceed $2,500 per annum.—The clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall, in every case where the judgment is affirmed, receive the sum of ten dollars; provided, the entire sum such clerk shall receive as compensation for his services shall not exceed two thousand and five hundred dollars per annum; and any sum over and above that shall be paid by him to the treasury of the state, under such rules as may be prescribed by the comptroller, to be approved by the judges of the criminal court of appeals. [Id., § 64.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1156.
See art. 1116, ante; Bonn v. State, 12 App. 100.

Several defendants.—The clerk is entitled to $10 for each defendant whose sentence is affirmed though one judgment included fines against several defendants, since, in effect, it is a separate judgment against each. Hogg v. State, 49 App. 109, 48 S. W. 559.

Liability on recognizance for fee and cost of collection.—See Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024; Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091.

Art. 1166. [1121] Shall be taxed against defendant.—The fees named in the preceding sections shall be taxed against the defendant and collected as in other cases.

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1156.

Liability on recognizance for fees and costs of collection.—Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024; Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091.

Fee taxable as costs.—See Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024.

Art. 1167. [1122] Costs when taxed against defendants.—In every state case of a less grade than felony, in which an appeal is taken to the court of criminal appeals, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed against the defendant, all fees due the clerk of said court in such case shall be adjudged against the defendant, for which execution shall issue as in other cases of appeal to the court of criminal appeals. Should such case be reversed by the court of criminal appeals, and a new trial be had in the court below, and the defendant convicted, then the costs aforesaid in favor of the clerk of the court of criminal appeals shall be taxed by the court below against the defendant; and a certified copy of said bill of costs by the clerk of the court of criminal appeals filed in the court below shall be sufficient to require said costs to be taxed and collected as other costs against the defendant in the court below. [Id., § 21.]

See Willson’s Cr. Forms, 1156.

Liability on recognizance.—Benson v. State, 39 App. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091; Arbuthnot v. State, 38 App. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024.

Effect of death pending appeal.—See Kelly v. State (Cr. App.) 66 S. W. 774.

Reversal.—Where case is reversed and new information is filed, all costs prior to filing second information are excluded. Mayo v. State (Cr. App.) 55 S. W. 323.

Dismissal for defective recognizance.—Roberts v. State (Cr. App.) 68 S. W. 389.

2. IN THE DISTRICT AND COUNTY COURTS

Art. 1168. [1123] Fees of district and county attorneys.—District and county attorneys shall be allowed the following fees, to be taxed against the defendant:

For every conviction under the laws against gaming when no appeal is taken, or when, on appeal, the judgment is affirmed, fifteen dollars.
For every other conviction in cases of misdemeanor, where no appeal is taken, or where, on appeal, the judgment is affirmed, ten dollars. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 284, § 7.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1156.

Fees in different courts in same case.—See Huizar v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 329.

Art. 1169. Fee of county attorney in local option cases.—In all prosecutions for violation of the local option laws of this state, the county attorney shall receive a fee of twenty dollars in each case in which a plea of not guilty is entered, and final conviction had; and, in all cases where plea of guilty is entered by defendant, the county attorney shall receive a fee of ten dollars in each case. all such fees to be taxed as costs and paid by the defendant. [Act 1903, p. 110.]

Art. 1170. [1124] In case of joint defendants.—Where there are several defendants in a case, and they are tried together, but one fee shall be allowed and taxed in the case for the district or county attorney; but, where the defendants sever and are tried separately, a fee shall be allowed and taxed for each trial.

Art. 1171. [1125] Attorney appointed entitled to the fee.—When an attorney is appointed by the court to represent the state in the absence of the district or county attorney, the attorney so appointed shall be entitled to the fee allowed by law to the district or county attorney.

Art. 1172 [1126] Fees of district and county clerks.—The following fees shall be allowed the clerks of the district and county courts:
1. For issuing each capias or other original writ, seventy-five cents.
2. For entering each appearance, fifteen cents.
3. For docketing cause, to be charged but once, twenty-five cents.
4. For swearing and impaneling a jury, and receiving and recording the verdict, fifty cents.
5. For swearing each witness, ten cents.
6. For issuing each subpoena, twenty-five cents.
7. For each additional name inserted therein, fifteen cents.
8. For issuing each attachment, fifty cents.
9. For entering each order not otherwise provided for, fifty cents.
10. For filing each paper, ten cents.
11. For entering judgment, fifty cents.
12. For entering each continuance, twenty-five cents.
13. For entering each motion or rule, ten cents.
14. For entering each recognizance, fifty cents.
15. For entering each indictment or information, ten cents.
16. For each commitment, one dollar.
17. For each transcript on appeal, for each one hundred words, ten cents. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 289, § 10.]

Art. 1173. [1127] Fees of sheriff and other peace officers.—The following fees shall be allowed the sheriff, or other peace officer performing the same services, in misdemeanor cases, to be taxed against the defendant on conviction:
1. For executing each warrant of arrest or capias, or making arrest without warrant, one dollar.
2. For summoning each witness, fifty cents.
3. For serving any writ not otherwise provided for, one dollar.
4. For taking and approving each bond and returning the same to the court house, when necessary, one dollar.
5. For each commitment or release, one dollar.
6. Jury fee in each case actually tried by jury, fifty cents.
7. For attending a prisoner on habeas corpus, when such prisoner, upon a hearing, has been remanded to custody or held to bail, for each day's attendance, two dollars.

8. For conveying a witness attached by him to any court out of his county, his actual necessary expenses by the nearest practicable public conveyance, the amount to be stated by said officer, under oath, and approved by the judge of the court from which the attachment issued.

9. For conveying a prisoner after conviction to the county jail, for each mile, going and coming, by the nearest practicable route, by private conveyance, ten cents a mile, or by railway, seven and one-half cents a mile.

10. For conveying a prisoner arrested on a warrant or capias issued from another county to the court or jail of the county from which the process was issued, for each mile traveled, going and coming, by the nearest practicable route, twelve and a half cents.

11. For each mile he may be compelled to travel in executing criminal process and summoning or attaching witnesses, five cents. For traveling in the service of process not otherwise provided for, the sum of five cents for each mile going and returning. If two or more persons are mentioned in the same writ, or two or more writs in the same case, he shall charge for the distance actually and necessarily traveled in the execution of the same. [Id., § 11; amend. 1895, p. 182.]

Failure to take bond from accused.—Where accused when arrested was entitled to give bond, and offered to give adequate bond, but was refused opportunity to do so, he should not be taxed with the expenses of the sheriff in going after him and returning him to the county of trial. Buzan v. State, 59 App. 213, 128 S. W. 388.

Art. 1174. Fees of sheriff and other officers in lunacy cases.—In judicial proceedings in cases of lunacy, in each case, the sheriff and county clerk shall be allowed the same fees as are now allowed said officers for similar services in misdemeanor criminal cases; the county attorney shall be allowed a fee of five dollars; provided, that such fees shall be allowed only when a conviction is obtained, said costs to be paid out of the estate of the defendant, if he shall have an estate sufficient therefor; otherwise said costs shall be paid out of the county treasury; and the jurors in such cases shall be allowed fifty cents each, to be paid out of the county treasury. Justices of the peace who may take complaints, issue warrants and subpoenas in such lunacy cases, shall receive the same fees as are now allowed them by law for taking complaints, issuing warrants and subpoenas in criminal misdemeanor cases. Constables shall receive, for executing warrants and serving subpoenas in lunacy cases, the same fees as are now allowed them by law for similar services in criminal misdemeanor cases; such fees to be paid, upon conviction, out of the estate of the defendant, if he shall have an estate sufficient therefor; otherwise the same shall be paid by the county, upon an account approved by the county judge. [Act 1903, p. 110.]

Taxation of costs in dismissed cases improper.—See McArthur v. State, 41 App. 635, 57 S. W. 847.

3. In Justices', Mayors' and Recorders' Courts

Art. 1175. [1128] Fees of justices, mayors and recorders.—Justices of the peace, mayors and recorders shall receive the following fees in criminal actions tried before them, to be collected of the defendant in case of his conviction:
1. For each warrant, seventy-five cents.
2. For each bond taken, fifty cents.
3. For each subpoena for one witness, twenty-five cents.
4. For each additional name inserted therein, ten cents.
5. For docketing each case, ten cents.
6. For each continuance, twenty cents.
7. For swearing each witness in court, ten cents.
8. For administering any other oath or affirmation without a certificate, ten cents.
9. For administering an oath or affirmation with a certificate thereof, twenty-five cents.
10. Jury fee where a case is tried by jury, fifty cents.
11. For each order in a case, twenty-five cents.
12. For each final judgment, fifty cents.
13. For each application for a new trial with the final judgment thereon, fifty cents.
14. For each commitment, one dollar.
15. For each execution, one dollar.
16. For making out and certifying the entries on his docket, and filing the same with the original papers of the cause, in each case of appeal, one dollar and fifty cents.
17. For taxing costs, including copy thereof, ten cents.
18. For taking down the testimony of witnesses, swearing them, taking the voluntary statement of the accused, certifying and returning the same to the proper court in examination for offenses, for each one hundred words, twenty cents. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 289, § 12.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1137, 1158.

Explanatory.—Laws 1897, S. S. ch. 5, § 25, provides as follows: "Justices of the peace shall receive for the following services the following fees: For filing each paper, 5 cents; each continuance, 10 cents." From a consideration of this act as a whole it would seem that an amendment of the above article was not intended, and that the design of the new act was to supplement the civil statutes. See Vernon's Statutes' Civ. St. 1914, art. 3867.

Costs on appeal.—The $1.50 for transcript and twenty-five cents for approving appeal bond are part of fine and costs in a case appealed from justice to county court. Shields v. State (Cr. App.) 57 S. W. 670.

Art. 1176. [1129] Fees of constables and other peace officers.—Constables, marshals or other peace officers who execute process, and perform services for justices, mayors and recorders, in criminal actions, shall receive the same fees allowed to sheriffs for the same services.

Unlawful arrest.—See Ex parte Sykes, 46 App. 51, 79 S. W. 538.

Art. 1177. [1130] Fees of state's attorney.—The attorney who represents the state in a criminal action in a justice's, mayor's or recorder's court shall receive, for each conviction where no appeal is taken, or where, upon appeal, the judgment is affirmed, ten dollars, unless otherwise provided by the ordinance of any incorporated city or town.

Fees in different courts in same case.—See Huizar v. State (Cr. App.) 63 S. W. 329.

Art. 1177a. Costs to be collected as provided by ordinances, but not greater than in justices' courts.—There shall be taxed against, and collected of, each defendant, in case of his conviction before such court, [corporation court] such costs as may be provided for by ordinance of the said city, town or village; but in no case shall the council or board of aldermen of any such city, town or village, prescribe the collection of greater costs than are prescribed by law to be collected of defendants convicted before justices of the peace. [Act 1899, p. 42, § 11.]

See arts. 9830-9831, 9833, ante.

Art. 1178. Fees of county attorneys representing state in corporation courts.—That county attorneys who, in cities of over thirty thousand and under forty thousand population, according to last United States census, represent the state in misdemeanor cases in the corporation courts thereof, shall receive for such services the same fees as are now provided for by law for similar services in justice courts; and in no case shall there be charged more than one fee, as provided by law. [Act 1907, p. 177.]

Validity of article.—When a statute can be sustained as a local or special law, the court will not inquire whether such a statute, treated as a general law, is constitutional, upholding this article. Cravens v. State, 57 App. 135, 122 S. W. 29, 136

Art. 1179. [1131] In case of several defendants, and where defendant pleads guilty.—Where several defendants are prosecuted jointly, and do not sever on trial, but one attorney’s fee shall be allowed; and where a defendant pleads guilty to a charge before a justice, mayor or recorder, the fee allowed the attorney representing the state shall be five dollars.

Art. 1180. [1132] No fee allowed attorney, etc.—No fee shall be allowed a district or county attorney in any case where he is not present and representing the state, upon the trial thereof, unless he has taken some action therein for the state, or is present and ready to represent the state at each regular term of the court in which such criminal action is pending; provided, however, that when pleas of guilty are entertained and accepted in any justice court, at any other time than the regular term thereof, the county attorney shall receive the sum of five dollars; and in no case shall the county attorney, in consideration of a plea of guilty, remit any part of his lawful fee.
[Amended, Act 1903, p. 219.]

Art. 1181. Fees of justice of the peace sitting as examining court in misdemeanor case.—That in all cases where justices of the peace shall sit as an examining court in misdemeanor cases, they shall be entitled to the same fees allowed by law for similar services in the trial of misdemeanor cases, to justices of the peace, to be paid by the defendant in case of final conviction; provided, he shall never receive more than three dollars in any one case. [Act 1907, p. 215.]

Costs at examining trial.—Defendant, on conviction, may not be taxed as part of the costs, with the justice’s court costs for holding the examining trial. Wade
v. State, 48 App. 512, 90 S. W. 503.

Art. 1182. Fees of sheriff and other officers in such examining court.—Sheriffs and constables serving process and attending any examining court in the examination of any misdemeanor case, shall be entitled to such fees as are allowed by law for similar services in the trial of misdemeanor cases, to be paid by the defendant in case of final conviction; provided, he shall never receive more than three dollars in any one case. [Id., p. 215.]

4. JURY AND TRIAL FEES

Art. 1183. [1133] In district and county courts.—In each criminal action tried by a jury in the district or county court, when the defendant is convicted, there shall be taxed in the bill of costs against him a jury fee of five dollars.

See Wilson’s Cr. Forms, 1156.

Art. 1184. [1134] Trial fee in county courts.—In each case of conviction in a criminal action tried in the county court, whether tried by a jury or by the judge, there shall be taxed in the bill of costs against the defendant, or against all defendants where several are tried jointly, a trial fee of five dollars, the same to be collected and paid into the county treasury in the same manner as is provided in the case of a jury fee.

Art. 1185. [1135] Jury fees in justices’, mayors’ and recorders’ courts.—In each criminal action tried by a jury in a justice’s, may-
Art. 1186. [1136] Where there are several defendants.—Where there are several defendants tried jointly, only one jury fee shall be taxed against them; but, where they sever and are tried separately, a jury fee shall be taxed in each trial.

Art. 1187. [1137] Jury fees collected as other costs, etc.—Jury fees shall be collected as other costs in a case, and the officer collecting the same shall forthwith pay the amount collected to the county treasurer of the county where the conviction was had.

5. Witness Fees

Art. 1188. [1138] Fees of witnesses in criminal cases.—Witnesses in criminal cases shall be allowed one dollar and fifty cents a day for each day they are in attendance upon the court, and six cents for each mile they may travel in going to or returning from the place of trial. [O. C. 454.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1156.

Mileage.—A witness is entitled to mileage for only one trip going from and returning home from one term of court, and per diem only for the days he actually attends court, including time consumed in going from and returning home. McArthur v. State, 41 App. 635, 57 S. W. 859.

Art. 1189. [1139] Shall be taxed against defendant, upon, etc.—Upon conviction, in all cases, the costs accruing from the attendance of witnesses shall be taxed against the defendant, upon the affidavit in writing of such witness, or of some credible person, stating the number of days that such witness has attended upon the court in the case, and the number of miles he has traveled in going to and returning from the place of trial; which affidavit shall be filed among the papers in the case. [O. C. 457.]

See Wilson's Cr. Forms, 1156, 1157.

Necessity of affidavit.—To entitle a witness to recover his fees as part of the costs in the case, he must have been subpoenaed or attached in the case, and must prove up his attendance by an affidavit in writing. It is not sufficient that the clerk swore the witness verbally. Stewart v. State, 38 App. 627, 44 S. W. 505.

Art. 1190. [1140] No fees allowed, unless, etc.—No fees shall be allowed to a person as witness fees, unless such person has been subpoenaed, attached or recognized as a witness in the case.

Art. 1191. [1141] Clerk, etc., shall keep book in which shall be entered, etc.—Each clerk of the district and county court, and each justice of the peace, mayor and recorder, shall keep a book, in which shall be entered the number and style of each criminal action in their respective courts, and the name of each witness subpoenaed, attached or recognized to testify therein, showing whether on the part of the state or the defendant.

Art. 1192. [1142] Witness liable for costs, when.—In all criminal cases where a witness has been subpoenaed and fails to attend, he shall be liable for the costs of an attachment, unless good cause be shown to the court or magistrate why he failed to obey the subpoena. [O. C. 979.]
ART. 1193. COMMISSIONS ON MONEY COLLECTED

ART. 1193. COMMISSIONS ON MONEY COLLECTED

Art. 1193. Commissions allowed district and county attorneys.—The district or county attorney shall be entitled to ten per cent on all fines, forfeitures or moneys collected for the state or county, upon judgments recovered by him; and the clerk of the court in which such judgments are rendered shall be entitled to five per cent of the amount of said judgments, to be paid out of the amount when collected. [Act of 1870, ch. 126, p. 133.]

ART. 1194. COMMISSIONS ALLOWED SHERIFF OR OTHER OFFICER.

ART. 1194. COMMISSIONS ALLOWED SHERIFF OR OTHER OFFICER.

Art. 1194. Commissions allowed sheriff or other officer.—The sheriff or other officer who collects money for the state or county, under any of the provisions of this Code, except jury fees, shall be entitled to retain five per cent thereof when collected. [Act Aug. 23, 1876, p. 287, § 7; Act 21st Leg., April 2, 1889, ch. 85, p. 95, §§ 12, 14.]

Remission of forfeiture or fine.—A general remission of a forfeiture or fine, by the governor, includes the commissions of the district or county attorney. State v. Dyches, 28 Tex. 535.

Justices of the peace.—This article does not authorize more than one commission for fines collected in justices' courts, and a justice retaining 5 per cent. of the fines collected cannot pay the constable 5 per cent., but he must pay the district or county attorney 10 per cent. as required by article 1193, and pay $5 per cent. to the county. McLennan County v. Boggess (Civ. App.) 139 S. W. 1054,
TITLE 17

DELIQUENT CHILDREN

STATE JUVENILE TRAINING SCHOOL

Art. 1195. Male persons under the age of seventeen accused of felony to be prosecuted as juvenile delinquents; committed to State Industrial School for Boys upon indeterminate sentence; time of detention; proof of age; proviso.—When an indictment is returned by the grand jury of any county charging any male juvenile under the age of seventeen years with a felony, the parent, guardian, attorney or next friend of said juvenile, or said juvenile himself, may file a sworn statement in court, setting forth the age of such juvenile, at any time before announcement of ready for trial is made in the case. When such statement is filed, the judge of said court shall hear evidence on the question of the age of the defendant; and, if he be satisfied from the evidence that said juvenile is less than seventeen years of age, said judge shall dismiss such prosecution and proceed to try the juvenile as a delinquent, under the provisions of this Act. If said juvenile be found to be delinquent, and sentence be not suspended, as provided in the laws of this State in cases of felony on first offense the defendant shall be committed to the State Industrial School for Boys upon an indeterminate sentence; provided, that such defendant shall not be detained in said school after he has reached the age of twenty-one years. Such defendant shall be conveyed to the said school by the probation officer, sheriff or any peace officer designated by the court; provided, that such conviction and detention in said school shall not deprive defendant of any of his rights of citizenship when he shall become of legal age; and provided, further, that the age of the defendant shall not be admitted by the attorney representing the State, but shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court by full and sufficient evidence that the defendant is less than seventeen years of age, before the judgment of commitment to said institution shall be entered. The officer conveying any defendant to said school shall be paid by the county in which conviction is rendered the actual traveling expenses of said officer and defendant: provided, further, that nothing in this Act shall be held to affect, modify or vitiate any judgment heretofore entered confining any defendant to the State Institution for the Training of Juveniles: but the unexpired portion of any such judgment shall be fulfilled by the confinement of any such defendant in the State Industrial School for Boys. [Act 1895, ch. 68; Act 1909, p. 100; Act 1913, p. 214, ch. 112. § 1, amending art. 1195, C. C. P. 1911.]
Art. 1195  DELINQUENT CHILDREN  (Title 17)

14. Place of confinement.

1. Explanatory.—Acts 1913, S. S. ch. 26, amending art. 5221 of the Rev. St. of 1911, changes the name of the institution mentioned above to “The State Juvenile Training School.” It seems to have been the intention of the legislature to change the name of the institution from “State Institution for the Training of Juvenile” to “State Industrial School for Boys,” but that intention was never carried out. See, in this connection, Ex parte Barite (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1651.

2. Validity of statute.—The statute authorizing the quashing of indictments against boys under 17 and girls under 15 years of age, and of the institution of proceedings against them in the county court, as delinquent children, is not in violation of the state or federal Constitution; there being no attempt to give the district and county court concurrent jurisdiction of felonies and misdemeanors. Nor is it a contravention of Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1, 5, declaring that no person shall be punished for any act or omission, unless it shall be a criminal offense, for the proceeding is not criminal in its nature, but an exercise by the state of power of parents patriae. Ex parte Barite (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1651.

3. Former laws.—Section 12 of the act creating the house of reformatory and correction C. C. P. 1895, art. 1145 was constitutional. Washington v. State, 28 App. 411, 13 S. W. 606.

The statute, providing for the incarceration of criminals under 16 years of age in a reformatory, instead of the penitentiary, is not unconstitutional. Johns v. State, 63 App. 416, 140 S. W. 1400.

4. Repeal of civil statute.—Act April 2, 1889 (Acts 21st Leg. c. 85), incorporated in Code Cr. Proc. 1895, as articles 1145 and 1146, provided, that when a male person under 16 years of age was convicted of felony, and his imprisonment was assessed at 5 years, he should be committed to the reformatory. Act April 5, 1907 (Acts 30th Leg., 4th sess) and prescribes the procedure for trial of a delinquent child. Act April 5, 1907, was copied in the Code Cr. Proc. 1911 as articles 1197 to 1206; the earlier act being incorporated as articles 1195 and 1196. The revisers also included the same act in Rev. St. 1911, as articles 2191 to 2201, inclusive. Both compilations were adopted by the Legislature. Arts 23d Leg. c. 112, amended Code Cr. Proc., arts. 1195 to 1207, and at the special session of the Legislature (Acts 23d Leg. [Sp. Sess.] c. 6), Rev. St. 1911, arts. 5221-5224, relating to the same general subject, were amended and re-enacted. Act 1907, §§ 9, 10, appearing in Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, as articles 2190-2201, were not changed. Code Cr. Proc. art. 1195, as amended, provides that, when a male juvenile under 17 years of age is indicted for a felony, he may set up that fact, and the court shall have the power to dismiss the indictment as a delinquent. And try the juvenile under the sections of the Penal Code. Art. 5229, contains similar provisions, while article 2199 provides that the county or district court may order a delinquent child, charged with crime, to be prosecuted under the criminal laws of the state as other criminals, but that no child under 16 years of age shall be so prosecuted without the order being first entered.

 Held that, as replies by implication are not favored, arts. 2190, 2200, were not repealed, and the district court had jurisdiction to try a juvenile offender. McCullen v. State (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 611.

5. Female delinquents.—Under the amending act of April 2, 1889, a female convict can not be confined in the house of reformatory. Ex parte Creeel, 29 App. 429, 16 S. W. 256. See article 1291, post. And see Ex parte Matthews, 35 App. 617, 44 S. W. 153.

6. Indeterminate sentence.—That relator was sentenced to the State Juvenile Training for a period of not less than two nor more than ten years does not render the judgment void, notwithstanding the later law provided for an indeterminate sentence of not more than five years. Ex parte Barite (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1651.
7. Trial of issue as to age.—Where accused at the commission of the offense was over 16 years old, his imprisonment would be in the penitentiary; and there was no issue of his age, then the issue of his imprisonment in the reformatory, in their discretion. Munger v. State, 57 App. 384, 122 S. W. 574.

The issue of the age of an offender must be disposed of at the trial, and where the officer making an arrest was informed that accused was not within the act, a judgment finding him guilty of misdemeanor theft and assessing his punishment at a fine and imprisonment is not void. Ex parte Winfield (Cr. App.) 163 S. W. 92.

8. Necessity of transfer of cause.—The district court was not bound under act of 1913 to receive or transfer upon a showing that defendant was under sixteen, but could order the case tried before it. Ragsdale v. State, 61 App. 145, 134 S. W. 234.

9. Necessity of finding as to age.—Code Cr. Proc. 1913, art. 1145, did not require a finding as to accused's age if it was conceded to be sufficiently old to be criminally responsible, and his punishment exceeded five years. Perry v. State, 61 App. 2, 133 S. W. 655.

11. Age at time of trial as controlling.—Under this article before its amendment in 1913, one who was over 16 years of age when brought to trial could not claim the right to be tried as a juvenile because he was under 16 years when the offense was committed. Arrendell v. State, 60 App. 326, 131 S. W. 1066.

12. Capital punishment cannot be inflicted on an offender under sixteen years old, and in all such cases accused is entitled to bail. Ex parte Walker, 28 App. 246, 13 S. W. 561; Walker v. State, 25 App. 503, 13 S. W. 560; Wilcox v. State, 32 App. 254, 22 S. W. 1109.

13. Continuance.—It was not reversible error to refuse a continuance for absent witness as to accused's age, where the jury had an opportunity to observe him, and there was no suggestion of mental irresponsibility, and his punishment was fixed at seven years. Perry v. State, 61 App. 2, 133 S. W. 655.

Under this article, before its amendment in 1913, one over sixteen years old at time of commission of offense, would not be entitled to confinement in the state institution for the training of juveniles, but must be confined in the penitentiary. Munger v. State, 57 App. 384, 122 S. W. 874.

Under this article before its amendments in 1913 the court was not required to instruct, in a prosecution of two defendants under 16 years of age, that the verdict should fix the place of confinement, but properly instructed that, if the verdict of conviction imposed a sentence of confinement for 5 years or less, the judgment of the court would be for confinement in the state institution for the training of juveniles, but would be for confinement in the penitentiary if the verdict was for more than 5 years confinement. Ragsdale v. State, 61 App. 145, 134 S. W. 234; Ex parte Flanagan, 34 App. 77, 34 S. W. 385.

15. Jury.—Where a boy under 15 years of age was charged with theft, it was proper for the court to have a jury summoned to pass on the guilt or innocence of the child, after which the court would fix the punishment. Windham v. State (Cr. App.) 165 S. W. 613.

Where the jury returned a verdict sentencing accused to confinement in the House of Correction and Reformatory, and judgment was entered upon the verdict, it was improper for the court to change the judgment so as to assess the punishment at three years at the State Institution for the Training of Juveniles, even though that institution had supplanted the Reformatory, which had been abolished. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

A child under 16 (now 15) may be confined either in the penitentiary or at the State Institution for the Training of Juveniles. Zimmer v. State, 64 App. 114, 141 S. W. 781.

Where, in a prosecution for theft, the case had been transferred to the juvenile court, it was proper to refuse a request to charge that, if the jury found defendant guilty, they should assess his punishment at confinement in the county jail for any length of time not exceeding two years, and by fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment without fine. Windham v. State (Cr. App.) 160 S. W. 613.

Art. 1196. [1146] Duty of officers in case of escapes from institution; cost incurred.—If any person confined in the State Industrial School for Boys, after judgment of conviction for a delinquency, shall escape therefrom, it shall be the duty of any sheriff or peace officer to apprehend and detain him, and report the same to the Superintendent of said school, and they shall be returned by said sheriff or other peace officer to said school, and the cost of said return shall be paid by the State on warrant of the Comptroller, based upon the sworn itemized account of such officer, approved by the Superintendent of said school; said costs to be paid out of any fund appropriated by the Legislature, from time to time, for the apprehension and return of escaped convicts. [Act 1909, p. 101; Act 1913, p. 214, ch. 112, § 2, amending art. 1196, C. C. P. 1911.]

See notes under art. 1195.

DELINQUENT CHILD, TO REGULATE THE CONTROL AND TREATMENT OF SAME

Art. 1197. “Delinquent child” defined; disposition of child under Act not to have evidentiary effect.—The words “delinquent child” shall include any male child under seventeen years of age, or any female child under eighteen years of age, who violates any laws of this State, or any city ordinance; or who is incorrigible; or who knowingly associates with thieves, vicious or immoral persons: or who knowingly visits a house of ill repute; or who knowingly patronizes or visits any place where any gambling device is or shall be operated; or who patronizes any saloon or place where any intoxicating liquors are sold; or who habitually wanders about the streets in the night time without being on any business or occupation; or who habitually wanders about any railroad yards or tracks; or who habitually jumps on or off of any moving train, or enters any car or engine without lawful authority; or who is guilty of immoral conduct in any public place. Any child committing any of the acts herein mentioned shall be deemed a “delinquent child,” and shall be proceeded against as such in the manner hereinafter provided. A disposition of any child under this Act or any evidence given in such case, shall not in any civil, criminal or other cause or proceeding whatever in any court be lawful or proper evidence against such child for any purpose whatever except in subsequent cases against the same child under this Act. [Act 1907, p. 137; Act 1913, p. 215, ch. 112, § 3, amending art. 1197, C. C. P. 1911.]

Repeal of civil statute.—See notes under art. 1195, ante.

Change in name of institution as authorizing discharge.—Relator, who was found to be a delinquent child, was ordered carried to the “State Institution for the Training of Juveniles.” Acts 33d Leg. (1st Called Sess.) c. 6, § 6 (Vernon’sSayles’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 5228), by which the name was changed to the “State Juvenile Training School,” declared that all inmates sentenced to the first institution should serve out their unexpired term. Held, that the change in the name did not warrant relator’s discharge. Ex parte Bartee (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1061.

Necessity of indictment.—Under Acts 33d Leg. c. 112, and 1st Called Sess. c. 6, § 6 (Vernon’s Sayles’ Civ. St. 1914, art. 5228), a child can be proceeded against as a delinquent without the filing of an indictment against him. Ex parte Bartee (Cr. App.) 174 S. W. 1061.

Art. 1198. Jurisdiction of district and county courts; jury trial; entry of findings; name of court.—The county and district courts of the several counties of this State shall have jurisdiction in all cases coming within the terms and provisions of this law. In all trials under this Act, any person interested therein may demand a jury. The findings of the court shall be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, known as the “juvenile record”; and the court, when disposing of cases under this law, may for convenience be called the “juvenile court.” [Act 1907, p. 138; Act 1913, p. 215, ch. 112, § 4, amending art. 1198, C. C. P. 1911.]

Repeal of civil statute.—See notes under article 1195, ante.

Art. 1199. Sworn complaint or information; requisites.—All proceedings under this Act shall be begun by sworn complaint and information filed by the county attorney as in other cases under the laws of this State. In any such complaint any information filed under this Act, the act or acts claimed to have been committed by the child proceeded against shall, in a general way be stated therein as constituting such child a “delinquent child.” [Act 1907, p. 138; Act 1913, p. 215, ch. 112, § 5, amending art. 1199, C. C. P. 1911.]

Art. 1200. Proceedings on complaint; notice to parent or guardian; contempt proceedings against parent or guardian; confinement of child; security for appearance.—Upon filing of complaint under this Act, warrant or capias may issue as in other cases, but no incarceration of the child proceeded against therein shall be made or had unless, in the opinion of the judge of the court, or in the absence of the judge, then in the opinion of the sheriff or officer executing the writ, it shall be necessary to insure the attendance of such child in court at such time as shall be required. In order to avoid such incarceration, it shall be the duty of the sheriff or other officer executing the process to serve notice of the proceedings upon the parent or parents of the child, if living and known, or upon the child’s legal guardian, or upon any person with whom the child at the time may be living, and the sheriff or officer executing the process may accept the verbal or written promise of such person so notified, or of any other proper person, to be responsible for the presence of such child at the hearing of such case, or at any other time to which the same may be adjourned or continued by the court.

In case such child shall fail to appear at such time or times as the court may require, the person or persons responsible for its appearance as herein provided for, unless in the opinion of the court there shall be reasonable cause for such child to fail to appear as herein provided for, may be proceeded against as in cases in contempt of court and punished accordingly; and where any such child shall have so failed to appear, any warrant, capias or alias capias issued in such case may be executed as in other cases; provided, however, that no child within the provisions of this Act shall be incarcerated in any compartment or a jail or lock-up in which persons over eighteen years of age are being kept or detained; and further provided, that it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of all counties with a population of over one hundred thousand to provide a suitable place for the detention of children coming under this Act, except and apart from any jail or lock-up in which older persons are incarcerated. Any such child shall also have the right to give bond or other security for its appearance at such trial of such case and the court may appoint counsel to appear and defend on behalf of such child. [Act 1907, p. 138; Act 1913, p. 215, ch. 112, § 6, amending art. 1200, C. C. P. 1911.]

Incarceration pending delinquency proceedings.—This section has reference to confinement of the child during proceedings brought under the terms of the act, and not to confinement of persons under 16 years of age in jail to await trial in due season when such detention is necessary to secure their safety until trial. Ex parte Thomas, 56 App. 66, 118 S. W. 1694.

Art. 1201. Courts always open for disposition of cases; proceedings not to be had in justice or police courts except to transfer causes to juvenile courts.—The county and district courts of the various counties of this State shall at all times be deemed in session for the purpose of disposing of cases under this Act, and when any male child under seventeen years of age, or female child under eighteen years of age, is arrested on any charge, with or without warrant, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or any police court, shall be taken directly before the county or district court, or, if the child should be taken before a justice of the peace or a police court upon a complaint sworn out in such court or for any other reason, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or city judge to transfer the case to said county or district court, and in any such case the court may hear and proceed to dispose of the case in the same manner as if such child had been brought before the court upon information originally filed as herein provided. [Act 1907, p. 139; Act 1913, p. 216, ch. 112, § 7, amending art. 1201, C. C. P. 1911.]

Art. 1202. Probation officers; appointment; duties and powers; compensation; oath; number.—The county courts of the several counties in this State shall have authority to appoint any number of discreet persons of good moral character to serve as probation officers during the pleasure of the court, said probation officers to receive no compensation from the county treasury except as herein provided. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court, if practicable, to notify the said probation officer or officers when any child is to be brought before the court; it shall be the duty of such probation officer to make investigation of such case; to be present in court to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard; to furnish to such court such information and assistance as the court or judge may require, and to take charge of any child before and after the trial, as may be directed by the court. The number of probation officers to receive compensation from the county, named and designated by the county court, shall be as follows:

In counties having a population of less than thirty-five thousand, one probation officer may be appointed by the county judge when in his opinion the services of such officer are needed; and in counties of thirty-five to one hundred thousand one probation officer may be appointed by the county judge. The county judge shall select such probation officer from a list of three furnished by a nominating committee composed of three members, as follows: The County Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the superintendents, or if there be no superintendents, then the principals of the two largest independent school districts in such county. Such probation officer shall receive a salary not to exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and expenses may be allowed such probation officer by the county in a sum not to exceed two hundred dollars per annum.

In counties having a population of more than one hundred thousand, the county judge shall appoint not fewer than two probation officers from lists furnished him by the nominating committee, as provided above. The chief probation officer shall receive a salary not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars and necessary expenses not to exceed two hundred dollars per year. Other probation officers shall receive salaries not to exceed nine hundred dollars per year and all necessary expenses not to exceed two hundred dollars.

In the appointment of all probation officers under the provisions of this Act, the county judge may upon the nomination of the committee of three hereinafter provided for, select for such office any school attendance officer or officers of the county or of school districts in the county that may be provided for any compulsory school attendance law now in force in this State, or that may hereafter be passed, and the salary and expenses of such joint probation and attendance officer or officers shall be paid jointly by the county and school authorities upon any basis of division they may agree upon.

Probation officers receiving a salary or other compensation from the county, provided for by this Act, are hereby vested with all the power and authority of police or sheriffs to make arrests and perform any other duties ordinarily required by policemen and sheriffs which may be incident to their office or necessary or convenient to the performance of their duties; provided, that other probation officers may be vested with like power and authority upon a written certificate from the county judge that they are persons of discretion and good character and that it is the desire of the court to vest them with all the power and authority conferred by law upon probation officers receiving compensation from the county.

Salaries or compensation of paid probation officers permitted by this Act shall be fixed by the county judge, not to exceed sums herein mentioned, and any bills for expenses not exceeding the sums herein provided for, shall be certified to by the county judge as being necessary in and about the performance of the duties of probation officer or officers. It shall be the duty of the commissioner's court of the county to provide the necessary funds for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the probation officers provided for under this Act. The appointment of probation officers as herein designated shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court. Probation officers shall take an oath, such as may be required of other county officers, to perform their duties, and file it in the office of the clerk of the county court.

Nothing herein contained, however, shall be held to limit or abridge the power of the county judge to appoint any number of persons as probation officers. And upon a vote of the county commissioners' court the county judge may appoint as many additional salaried probation officers as the court may direct. As a basis for the reckoning of the population of any county affected by this Section, the last Federal census shall be used. [Act 1907, p. 139; Act 1913, p. 216, ch. 112, § 8, amending art. 1202, C. C. P. 1911.]

Art. 1203. Commitment of delinquent to care of proper person, or institution or of probation officer; age limit; order of court; detention homes and parental schools; special tax; election.—In any case of "delinquent child" coming under the provisions of this law, the court may continue the hearing from time to time and may commit the child to the care of the probation officer or to the care or custody of any other proper person, and may allow said child to remain in its own home, subject to visitation of the probation officer or other person designated by the court, or under any other conditions that may seem proper and be imposed by the court; or the court may cause the child to be placed in the home of a suitable family, under such conditions as may be imposed by the court, or it may authorize the child to be boarded out in some suitable family, in case provision is made, by voluntary contribution or otherwise, for the payment of the board of such child until suitable provision may be made in a home without such payment; or the court may commit it to any institution in the county that may care for children that is willing to receive it, or which may be provided for by the State or county, suitable for the care of such children, willing to receive it, or of any State institution which may now or hereafter be established for boys or girls, willing to receive such child, or to any other institution in the State of Texas for the care of such children willing to receive it. In no case shall a child proceeded against under the provisions of this law be committed beyond the age of twenty-one. The order of the court committing such child to the care and custody of any person hereinbefore set out shall prescribe the length of time and the conditions of such commitment; and such order shall be at all times subject to change by further orders of the court with reference to said child; and the court shall have the power to change the custody of such child or to entirely discharge it from custody whenever, in the judgment of the court, it is to the best interest of the child to do so. Authority is hereby granted to all counties in this State to establish detention homes and parental schools for dependent delinquent juveniles, and it shall be lawful for the commissioners' court to appropriate from the general fund of the county such sum or sums as may be necessary to establish, equip and maintain such detention homes and parental schools as may be necessary to care for the dependent and delinquent children of the county. In like manner any county in which no such detention home or parental school exists may appropriate such funds as may be necessary to pay for the board and for the proper care and training of its dependent and delinquent juveniles in the detention home or parental school of any county that may agree to receive them and at such rates of board and tuition as shall be agreed upon by the commissioners’ courts of the counties concerned; provided, when, in the opinion of the commissioners’ court, it is desirable to levy a special tax for establishing and maintaining such detention home or parental school, or for paying the board and tuition of dependent and delinquent children as herein provided the said court may bring the question of levying such special tax to a vote of the qualified voters of the county at a special election held for that purpose, and the said court must submit the said question to the voters when requested to do so by a petition signed by ten per cent of the qualified voters of the county. All elections held under the provisions of this section shall be governed in all respects not herein specified to the contrary by the laws of this State governing elections for the levy of special school taxes. [Act 1907, p. 139; Act 1913, p. 218, ch. 112, § 9, amending art. 1203, C. C. P. 1911.]

Nature of proceeding.—Proceedings for commitment under this article are "criminal" in their nature, so that the court of Criminal Appeals had jurisdiction of an application by the alleged delinquent for habeas corpus. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 213.

Discretion of court.—This article leaves the disposition of the child to the discretion of the court. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 213.

Release on habeas corpus.—Where the court ordered a child committed for two years as a delinquent, and subsequently made an order releasing the child, it was entitled to release on habeas corpus; the second order being valid if the first was valid, and the detention being unauthorized if the first order was invalid. Ex parte McDowell (Cr. App.) 172 S. W. 213.

Art. 1204. Report to juvenile court by persons having custody of delinquent; responsibility of custodian.—The court or the judge thereof may, at any time, require any institution, association or person, to whose care any such child is committed, to make a complete report of the care, condition and progress of such child. And such court may also require of any institution or association receiving or desiring to receive children under the provisions of this law, such reports, information and statements as the court shall deem proper for its action; and the court shall in no case commit a child or children to any association or institution whose standing, conduct or care of the children or ability to care for children is not satisfactory to the court. [Act 1907, p. 140; Act 1913, p. 219, ch. 112, § 10, amending art. 1204, C. C. P. 1911.]

Art. 1205. [Repealed by Act 1913, ch. 112, § 13.]

Art. 1206. Commitment of incorrigible boys to State Industrial School for Boys; petition by parent or guardian; expenses; discharge on nonpayment; conveyance to institution.—Any parent or guardian of any incorrigible boy, under the age of seventeen years, may present a petition to the judge of the juvenile court of the county of his residence, setting forth under oath the age and habits of any such boy and praying that said boy be committed to the State Industrial School for Boys. The court shall set the case down for hearing and shall take testimony, and if, in his judgment, the child should be committed, said judge may enter an order committing said child to said institution; provided, that the parent or guardian shall pay all necessary expenses of carrying said child to said institution.
and in addition shall pay at least one quarter in advance, the amount necessary for the maintenance of said child at said institution, as estimated by the Superintendent of said institution. Said parent or guardian shall also deposit with the Superintendent of said institution an amount sufficient to pay the fare of said child from said institution to its home; and, in event said parent or guardian shall fail or refuse to make any subsequent quarterly payment for maintenance, in advance, said commitment shall terminate; and the Superintendent of said school shall discharge such boy and return him to his home.

The expense of conveying all boys committed to said school shall be paid by the county from which said commitment is made; and it shall be the duty of the sheriff, probation or any peace officer, as the court may direct, to convey all boys committed to said institution to the said State Industrial School for Boys; provided, that the court may send the boy to the school without escort, if he deem it prudent. [Act 1909, p. 102; Act 1913, p. 219, ch. 112, § 11, amending art. 1206, C. C. P. 1911.]

Art. 1207. Construction of Act; expenses how paid.—This Act shall be liberally construed, to the end that its purposes may be carried out; that is, that the interests of the child and its restoration to society shall at all times be the object in view of proceeding against it; provided, that no costs or expenses incurred in the enforcement of this Act shall be paid by the State. [Act 1907, p. 140; Act 1913, p. 219, ch. 112, § 12, superseding art. 1207, C. C. P. 1911.]

Girls' Training School

Art. 1207a. Dependent or delinquent girls may be committed by juvenile court, etc.; mentally deficient or diseased girls; examination.—Whenever any girl between the ages of seven and eighteen years shall be brought before any juvenile court upon petition of any person in this state or the humane society or any institution of a similar purpose or character, charged with being a dependent or delinquent child as these terms are defined in the statutes of this state, the court may, if in the opinion of the judge, the girls' training school is the proper place for her, commit such girl to said girls' training school during her minority; provided, that no girl shall be committed to the girls' training school who is feeble-minded, epileptic or insane, and that any girl committed to said girls' training school who is afflicted with a venereal, tubercular or other communicable disease, shall be assigned to a distinct and separate building of the institution and shall not be allowed to associate with the other wards until cured of said disease or diseases.

No girl shall be admitted to the institution until she has been examined by the training school physician, and such physician issuing a certificate showing her exact state or condition in reference to said qualifications hereinabove enumerated. [Act 1913, p. 289, sec. 5.]

Explanatory.—Sections 1–4, 7, 8, 10, 11, of this act, relate to the establishment of the girls' training school, and are inserted in Vernon's Sayles' Civ. St. 1914, as articles 5234a–5234h.

Art. 1207b. Duties of court; transcript; conveyance to school, etc.—It shall be the duty of the court committing any girl to the girls' training school, in addition to the commitment, to annex a carefully prepared transcript of the trial to aid the officials of the institution in better understanding and classifying the girl. The court shall also designate some reputable woman to convey the girl to the institution. The cost of conveying any girl committed to this institution shall be paid by the county from which she is committed, provided that no compensation shall be allowed beyond the actual and necessary expenses of the party conveying and the girl conveyed. [Id. sec. 6.]

Delinquent School Children

Art. 1207c. Incorrigible pupils to be proceeded against in juvenile court; parole of child; bond to secure good behavior; report by school officers and teachers; violation of parole; commitment to training school.—Any child within the compulsory school attendance ages who shall be insubordinate, disorderly, vicious or immoral in conduct, or who persistently violates the reasonable rules and regulations of the school which he attends, or who otherwise persistently misbehaves therein so as to render himself an incorrigible, shall be reported to the person exercising the duties of attendance officer of said school, who shall proceed against such child in the juvenile court as herein provided [art. 1513g, Penal Code]. If such child is found guilty upon a charge or charges made against him in said court, the judge of said court shall have the power to parole said child, after requiring the parent or other person standing in parental relation, to execute a bond in the sum of not less than ten dollars, conditioned that said child shall attend school regularly and comply with all the rules and regulations of said school. If the Superintendent or principal of any school shall report to the school attendance officer acting for said school that said child has violated the conditions of his parole, said attendance officer shall proceed against such child before the judge of the juvenile court, as in the first case herein mentioned, and if said child shall be found guilty of violating the conditions of said parole, the bond provided for herein shall forthwith be declared forfeited, and shall be collected in the same manner as other forfeited bonds under the general laws of this State, and the proceeds of same paid into the available school fund of the common school district or the independent school district, as the case may be; and the judge of said court shall have the power in his discretion, after a fair and impartial hearing given to said child, to parole said child again, requiring such bond as he may deem prudent, and require said child to again enter school. If said child shall violate the conditions of the second parole and shall be convicted of same, he shall be committed to a suitable training school as may be agreed upon by the parent of the child and the judge of the juvenile court in which the child is convicted. [Act 1915, p. 97, ch. 49, § 9.]

Art. 1207d. Repeal and partial invalidity.—All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed, and in case it is declared by the courts that any section or provision of this Act is unconstitutional, such decision shall not impair other sections or provisions of this Act. [Id., § 10.]
Sec. 3. It is provided, however, that the annotations under the several articles of the Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure shall not be construed to be any part of either of said Codes.

Sec. 4. Nothing in this act shall be construed or held to repeal, or in anywise affect, the validity of any law or act passed by this legislature in its regular session.

THE STATE OF TEXAS,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, C. C. McDonald, Secretary of State of the State of Texas, do hereby certify that the foregoing Act entitled: "An Act to adopt and establish the 'Penal Code' and 'Code of Criminal Procedure' for the State of Texas" was presented to the Governor for his approval on March the 11th, 1911, and approved on March the 31st, 1911, and filed in the Department of State on March the 31st, 1911, and became a law ninety days after adjournment.

I further certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing with the original copy now on file in this department and the same is true and correct.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF I have hereunto signed my name officially and caused to be impressed hereon the seal of State at my office in the City of Austin, Texas, this the 2nd day of December, A. D. 1911.

C. C. McDonald,
Secretary of State.
